Summary

For more than 150 years, messengers known as pages have served the United States Congress. Currently, approximately 100 young men and women from across the nation serve as pages at any given time. Pages must be high school juniors and at least 16 years of age. Several incumbent and former Members of Congress as well as other prominent Americans have been congressional pages.

Senator Daniel Webster appointed the first Senate page in 1829. The first House pages began their service in 1842. The first women were appointed as pages in 1971.

Pages must be appointed and sponsored by a Member of Congress for one or two semesters of a school year, or a summer session. They are appointed on a rotating basis pursuant to criteria set by the House and Senate leadership, which determines the Members eligible to sponsor a page. Academic standing is among the most important criteria used in the final selection of pages. Prospective pages are advised to contact their Senators or Representative to request consideration for a page appointment. This fact sheet is one of a series on the legislative process. Duties

Pages serve principally as messengers. They carry documents between the House and Senate, Members’ offices, committees, and the Library of Congress. They also prepare the House and Senate chambers for each day’s business by distributing the Congressional Record and other documents related to the day’s agenda, assist in the cloakrooms and chambers, and when Congress is in session, sit near the dais where they may be summoned by Members for assistance.
House Pages

In the 108th Congress, there are 72 House pages, 48 of whom were selected by Republicans and 24 by Democrats. The House page program is administered by the office of the clerk and supervised by the House Page Board, chaired by Representative John Shimkus (R-IL). Members of the Page Board include Representatives Heather Wilson (R-NM) and Dale Kildee (D-MI), as well as the clerk and the sergeant at arms of the House.

House pages are paid at the annual rate of $16,636. Automatic, monthly deductions are taken from their salaries for federal and state taxes, Social Security, and a residence hall fee of $400, which includes five breakfasts and seven dinners per week. The pages are required to live in the supervised House Page Dormitory near the Capitol. They are responsible for the cost of their uniforms — navy jackets, dark grey slacks or skirts, long sleeve white shirt, and black shoes — and transportation to and from Washington, D.C.

During the school year, they are educated in the House Page School located in the Thomas Jefferson Building of the Library of Congress. The page school, which is accredited by the Middle States Association of Colleges and Schools, offers a junior-year high-school curriculum, college preparatory courses, and extracurricular and weekend activities. Classes are usually held five days a week, commencing at 6:45 a.m., prior to the convening of the House.

Any questions regarding the operation of the House page program should be directed to Mrs. Grace Crews, Office of the Clerk, H-154, U.S. Capitol, Washington, D.C. 20515. The telephone number at the clerk’s office is (202) 225-7000.

Senate Pages

In the 108th Congress, there are 30 Senate pages, 18 of whom were selected by the Republicans and 12 by the Democrats. The Senate sergeant at arms supervises the Senate page program.

Senate pages are paid at the annual rate of $16,940. Automatic deductions are made from their salaries for federal and state taxes, Social Security, and the $450 residence hall fee, which includes breakfast and dinner Monday through Friday. Pages must pay their transportation costs to Washington, D.C., and must also purchase uniforms consisting of navy blue suits, white shirts, dark socks, and black shoes.

The Senate provides its pages supervised housing in the Daniel Webster Page Residence near the Hart Senate Office Building.
