Summary

One key feature of the House government-sponsored enterprise (GSE) reform bill (H.R. 1461) is the requirement that Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac give part of their profits to create new affordable housing funds. Based on the GSE’s average profits from 2000 to 2003, the amount would be about $390 million annually during the first two years and $580 million in subsequent years. The requirement would expire after five years.

The fund would help lower-income homeowners and renters and give priority to the victims of natural disasters such as Hurricanes Katrina and Rita. Funds from Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac would go to affordable housing organizations, which would then work directly with the beneficiaries. Nonprofits would face controversial restrictions on election and political activities. The bill also would modify existing GSE housing goals to concentrate on lower-income families. It would set the housing goal targets in the law, replacing the existing targets set by regulation.

The bill does not specify the legal, tax, or accounting details of the new funds or their relationship with the GSEs. For a comparison of all aspects of the House and Senate bills, see CRS Report RL32795, Government-Sponsored Enterprises (GSEs): Regulatory Reform Legislation, by Mark Jickling.

This report will be updated as legislative events warrant.

Background on Housing GSE Mission

Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac purchase mortgages from lenders and package them into mortgage-backed securities that they either hold in their portfolio or sell to investors. Congress chartered Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac as stockholder-owned, government-sponsored enterprises (GSEs) with the mission of supporting home ownership by enhancing mortgage market liquidity and providing assistance to lower-income families and underserved areas.1 In exchange, the GSEs receive several advantages, such as the right to borrow $2.25 billion each from the U.S. Treasury, exemption from state and local taxes, and exemption from the requirement to register securities offerings with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight (OFHEO) regulates the GSEs for safety and soundness, whereas the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) monitors adherence to their mission goals. H.R. 1461 would combine OFHEO and HUD’s regulatory division into a new, independent regulatory agency called the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA).

The Federal Housing Enterprise Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992 (GSE Act)\(^2\) gives HUD the authority to set specific goals for serving low-income families and underserved markets. The 2005 to 2008 goals establish a minimum percentage of mortgages in three income and geographic categories of homes for the GSEs to purchase based on the origination of similar mortgages. A fourth goal is a minimum dollar volume of purchases.\(^3\) H.R. 1461 would repeal the 2005-2008 goals and replace them with three new sets: (1) housing goals, which are similar to the repealed goals but set in law instead of regulation; (2) a duty to serve underserved markets; (3) and an affordable housing fund.\(^4\) The new goals target slightly lower-income families than the current goals and raise the percentage goals.

Housing Goals. The new housing goals would require the GSEs to purchase on a percentage basis at least as many mortgages for very low- and extremely low-income families as are generated by the primary market.\(^5\) The GSEs could request a reduction in the percentage. The affordable housing funds cannot be used to meet the housing goals.

Duty to Serve Underserved Markets. The duty to serve underserved markets sets no specific guidelines, goals, or targets, but the new FHFA is required to evaluate the GSEs annually and report to Congress. The GSEs would be required to lead the industry in creating new mortgage products for manufactured housing and in preserving affordable housing developed under various HUD rental programs.

Affordable Housing Fund. The new affordable housing fund provisions require each of the GSEs to contribute 3.5% of profits in the first two years and 5% in the next three years. After five years, the fund expires. Based on the GSEs’ average profits from 2000 to 2003, the affordable housing funds could receive $390 million annually during the first two years and $580 million annually during the next three years. The House bill does not indicate how the funds will be managed.

The fund would have five general goals: (1) to increase home ownership by families at or below 50% of area median income; (2) to increase mortgage funds in designated low-income areas; (3) to increase the supply of rental and owner-occupied housing for families at or below 50% of area median income; (4) to increase investment in public infrastructure in connection with related affordable housing goals; and (5) to leverage funding from other sources.6

H.R. 1461 would earmark the affordable housing fund. Twenty-five percent (initially about $98 million) would go to the Federal Home Loan Banks’ REFCORP.7 At least 10% (initially about $39 million) would go toward home ownership activities. No more than 12.5% (initially about $48 million) would toward public infrastructure associated with financed affordable housing projects. The bill sets no minimum for rental housing support.

The bill would include major additional provisions:

- Any profit from affordable housing fund activities would reduce the allocation in the following year.
- The FHFA director would issue regulations to prevent Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac from making the return on the funds for nongrants (which could reduce their liability to provide funding in future years) the primary consideration in awarding funds.
- Funds could not be used by the GSEs or recipients for administrative or outreach purposes, except as allowed by the FHFA.

Other restrictions would apply to home ownership. First, only first-time home buyer families with incomes at or below 50% of the area median income would be eligible.8 Second, the price of the home purchased could not exceed 95% of the area median for comparable dwellings. Third, the homeowners could resell the house only to low-income families, and resale profits would be subject to recapture for 10 years under certain conditions.9 Any recaptured profits would be divided equally between the entity that sold the home to the family and HUD, not the GSE that provided the funds used to purchase the home.

There would be no restrictions on the funding mechanism: grants, market rate loans, interest rate buy-downs, downpayment assistance, closing cost aid, and equity investments

7 CRS Report RS20197, Community Reinvestment Act: Regulation and Legislation, by William Jackson, explains REFCORP.
8 First-time home buyers are home buyers who have not owned a home in the past three years. Exceptions to this criteria exist for certain groups that have owned a home more recently.
9 H.R. 1461, Section 128, refers to section 215(b)(3) of the Cranston Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 12745[b][2]). The 10-year time limit and other resale provisions are in 42 U.S.C. 12745(b)(3).
are allowed, but the funding would go to for-profit and nonprofit developers of affordable housing. Funding could go only to an organization, agency, or other entity with experience in similar affordable housing activities. An organization with experience running affordable rental housing might not be eligible to build owner-occupied units. Funding cannot go directly to a family.

Restrictions on Sponsors. The primary business activity of those directly funded would have to be the provision of affordable housing. The funds could not be used for political activities, advocacy, lobbying (directly or indirectly), counseling services, travel expenses, preparing or providing advice on tax returns, administrative costs, or outreach. If the entity is a nonprofit, it would have further restrictions on political and election activities:

- The nonprofit could not have engaged in federal election activities or lobbying for a period starting 12 months before submitting an application for funding.
- The nonprofit could not be affiliated with any organization, agency, or entity that does not comply with these electioneering and lobbying limitations. Affiliation is defined in terms of overlapping boards of directors, executives, staffs, shared resources, and funding.
- If the recipient is a national nonprofit, the funds could not be distributed to another nonprofit.
- The funds could not replace or free up other funding.

The restrictions on election-related activities would prevent many groups, such as the Association of Community Organizations for Reform Now (ACORN), and the National Council of La Raza, from receiving funding as they are currently constituted. More than 100 nonprofits — including three local chapters of Habitat for Humanity, the League of Women Voters, United Way of America, labor organizations, and religious groups — have sent House members a letter objecting to what they term the “gag” provision.

The restriction preventing national nonprofits from redistributing funding would prevent the GSEs from using a related organization, such as the Fannie Mae Foundation, as an intermediary in distributing affordable housing funds. It also would prevent Habitat for Humanity from passing affordable housing funds on to local affiliates. (In FY2004 Habitat gave local affiliates nearly $64 million.) The bill would not, however, prevent funds from going directly to local affiliates, as already occurs in a similar program run by the Federal Home Loan banks.

Advisory Affordable Housing Board. The funds would be monitored by an advisory Affordable Housing Board that would be appointed by, and report to, the FHFA director. The board would be charged with determining extremely low- and very low-income housing needs. It would advise the director on establishing selection criteria and changes to the program. It would review the quarterly reports from the enterprises and inform the director if the funding activities comply with the regulations setting funding priorities. The board would be considered a federal advisory board, meaning that meetings must be publicly announced and open. Committee records, including minutes, would be available for public inspection and subject to the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA).

The board would include the director of the FHFA, the Secretaries of HUD and Agriculture, two persons from for-profit affordable housing companies, and two persons from nonprofit affordable housing organizations. The first three members could designate others to be on the board in their places. The director could appoint up to four other persons to the board.

The GSEs would have some enforcement and compliance responsibilities. If Fannie or Freddie were to determine that a recipient had misused affordable housing funds, the recipient would have to repay the funds and would be permanently barred from program participation. There would be no lesser penalty. This debarment authority is not shared with FHFA.

Priorities. The director would issue regulations with specific criteria for selecting projects. The bill would establish a series of priorities. During the first two years, the top priority would go to the areas and persons affected by Hurricanes Katrina and Rita. The next levels of priority would be (1) other presidential disaster areas, (2) the greatest impact, (3) geographic diversity, and (4) the ability to obligate the funds and undertake the activities quickly. “Greatest impact” and “geographic diversity” are not defined in the bill. For rental projects, additional priorities would be (1) affordability for families with incomes below 30% of area median income and (2) the duration that rental projects would remain affordable to extremely low-income families. In rental housing projects, only families with incomes at or below 50% of the area median income could benefit from the funds. This criteria differs from the housing goals, which would count units that would be affordable to families of the target income regardless of actual tenant incomes. Historically, housing goals have used the latter approach because it is difficult for the GSEs to determine the income of rental tenants.

In addition, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac would be prohibited from making affordable housing fund assistance preferential or conditional on obtaining financing or underwriting from the enterprise.

Policy Analysis. H.R. 1461 raises a number of policy issues. First is the question of incentives and unintended consequences. Connecting the size of the affordable housing fund to GSE profits may result in unintended incentives. The connection between profits and fund size will give for-profit and nonprofit affordable housing developers a stake in the GSEs’ profitability. The GSEs have two major profit centers: packaging individual mortgages into mortgage-backed securities and holding large portfolios that consist mainly of mortgage-backed securities. Both profit centers present risks that would be regulated by FHFA (or OFHEO under current law). Large portfolios are more profitable for the companies but mainly benefit the GSEs, their stockholders, and senior management whose compensation is tied in part to corporate profitability rather than supporting the mortgage market. Large portfolios also represent systemic risk to the financial system as a whole.\footnote{CRS Report RS22307, Limiting Fannie Mae’s and Freddie Mac’s Portfolio Size, by Eric Weiss, summarizes some of the concerns that many analysts have about the size of the GSEs’ portfolios.} Nevertheless, because increasing the size of the portfolios would increase profits and thus the affordable housing funds, recipients and potential recipients would have reasons to support portfolio growth, which may or may not be what Congress intends.

A related issue is the potential for the GSEs to use their affordable housing funds in ways that further their corporate goals. The director would be mandated to issue regulations to prevent the GSEs from making the return of funds the primary consideration in awarding funds, which would reduce their future contributions. The bill would prohibit them from tying the funds to other transactions with the enterprise, but nonpecuniary and nonfinancial returns to the GSEs are not addressed.

H.R. 1461 does not address the question of the legal, accounting, and tax relationships between the GSEs and their affordable housing funds. Are the funds separate, independent legal entities? At what time of the year must the GSEs make their contributions to the funds? Who controls the money in the funds before it is released to the recipients? What type of investments would be allowed for the $400 million to $600 million or more added each year? Who is responsible if the funds incur losses? What are the tax liabilities of the funds? If a fund makes a loan, what happens if the borrower defaults? Profits are returned to the fund and reduce the funding required the following year, but what about losses? Are recaptured profits of first-time homeowners returned to the GSEs, and if so, does this reduce the amount that they must contribute? H.R. 1461 states that the GSEs do not need to hold risk-based capital against the affordable housing funds, but what about minimum capital requirements?

In addition to the persons named in H.R. 1461, up to four others can be named to the Affordable Housing Board. Could these be from the GSEs? The Fannie Mae Foundation (but not the Freddie Mac Foundation) promotes affordable housing for extremely low- and very low-income families. Could someone from the Fannie Mae Foundation be appointed to the board? The board is charged with overseeing the distribution of funds. Is there a conflict of interest if an organization with an employee or officer on the board applies for funding? Is there a conflict of interest if a fund applicant has an existing business relationship with the GSE?
