Monthly Environmental Regulatory Update

This report contains a monthly update of environmental regulatory activity that is of interest to the Department of Energy. It is provided to DOE operations and contractor staff to assist and support environmental management programs by tracking regulatory developments. Any proposed regulation that raises significant issues for any DOE operation should be reported to the Office of Environmental Guidance (EH-23) as soon as possible so that the Department can make its concerns known to the appropriate regulatory agency. Items of particular interest to EH-23 are indicated by a shading of the RU#.

Any questions or comments about any aspects of the Update Table should be directed to Lois Thompson, Air, Water, and Radiation Protection Division, Office of Environmental Guidance, U.S. Department of Energy (EH-23), (FTS) 896-9581, (Commercial) 202-586-9581.

ABSTRACT

The Environmental Regulatory Update Table provides information on regulatory initiatives of interest to DOF operations and contractor staff with environmental management responsibilities. The table is updated each month with information from the Federal Register and other sources, including direct contact with regulatory agencies. Each table entry provides a chronological record of the rulemaking process for that initiative with an abstract and a projection of further action.

Regulatory Highlights - December, 1990

1. Hazard Ranking System Revision - Final Rule

Under Section 105(c)(1) of CERCLA and as required by SARA, EPA issues a final rule (NPRM 12-23-88) at 40 CFR part 300 revising the Hazard Ranking System (HRS), the principal mechanism for placing sites on the National Priorities List (NPL). The National Oil and Hazardous Substances Pollution Contingency Plan (NCP) establishes guidelines for responding to releases or potential releases of hazardous substances, pollutants, or contaminants. As appendix A of the NCP, the revised HRS changes the way EPA will evaluate potential threats to human health and the environment at sites and should improve the accuracy of assessing relative potential risk. However, several measures have been taken to retain the HRS's original purpose as a screening tool. In issuing the rule, EPA keeps the basic framework of the original HRS in that scored factors are grouped into one of three factor categories (i.e., waste characteristics, likelihood of release, and targets) for each exposure pathway. Nevertheless, substantial revisions and additions have been made to each category affecting multiple pathways. Under the waste characteristics category, the toxicity factor is revised to include carcinogenic and chronic non-carcinogenic toxicity, in addition to acute health effects. Also under this category, the hazardous waste quantity factor has been changed to incorporate a tiered approach utilizing four levels of data depending on the availability and completeness of the data. The waste quantity could be based on: (a) hazardous constituent quantity, (b) the total quantity of hazardous wastes in the source, (c) the volume of the source, or (d) the area of the source. In determining hazardous constituent quantity, the final rule clarifies that only the constituents in a RCRA wastestream that are CERCLA hazardous substances should be evaluated. However, for the remaining three levels of data, the entire RCRA wastestream is considered as is any other wastestream. The final rule also adds mobility factors to the waste characteristics category of the ground water and air migration pathways. Within the likelihood of release category, the final rule caps the score of a potential to release at a value less than a score for an observed release. In the targets factor category of the HRS, the final rule has made several revisions. First, the revised HRS adds factors for evaluating the nearest individual or well/intake (formerly the maximally exposed individual) in order to improve assessment of potential risks to human health. Secondly, the final rule establishes that population factor values are not to be capped in the HRS. Thus, a site with a large population but a low waste characteristics value can receive scores similar to a site with a smaller population but a high waste characteristics value. Thirdly, populations actually exposed to documented contamination will now receive higher weightings than populations only potentially exposed. To achieve the latter, the final rule adds health-based benchmarks (i.e., maximum contamination standards) based on ARARs for evaluating population factors. Benchmarks will also be used to evaluate nearest individual factors. Ecological-based benchmarks will be used in the surface migration pathway to evaluate sensitive environments. In the original HRS, the sensitive environment list covered only wetlands and endangered species habitats. The final rule expands the list to include, among other areas, fisheries, terrestrial breeding areas, and state designated natural areas. Also, the HRS evaluation of wetlands, revised in the final rule, is now based on size and level of contamination. One of the major changes the final rule makes to the HRS is the addition of a new onsite exposure pathway, the soil exposure pathway. This pathway is being added to assess the potential threats posed by direct exposure to wastes and contaminated surface materials at a site. The direct contact and fire/explosion pathways, though not used in the original HRS for determining NPL site placement, have been dropped from the revised HRS. The other three pathways have been retained. The final rule revises the surface water pathway by adding a ground water to surface water component and a human food chain threat factor. The air migration pathway has been amended to consider potential as well as actual releases to air. In the final rule EPA also issues specific instructions for HRS evaluation of sites with radionuclides either as the only hazardous substances or in combination with other hazardous substances. Unlike other hazardous substances, the hazardous waste quantity for radionuclides can only be based on hazardous constituent quantity (Tier A) or hazardous wastestream quantity (Tier B). For sites with only radionuclides, the final rule establishes that hazardous waste quantity is to be calculated based on the activity content of the radionuclides or radionuclide wastestreams associated with each source. For sites containing both radionuclides and other hazardous substances, the waste quantity is determined separately for the two types for each source, and then the values are summed in obtaining the waste quantity value. Finally, under certain prerequisites, EPA will now evaluate a site based on current conditions, thus allowing response actions such as removals to be considered. The rule will become effective on March 14, 1991.

2. Amendments to Standards of Performance for New Stationary Sources; Reporting Requirements - Final Rule

Under the CAA, EPA issues a final rule (NPRM 9-29-87) revising the reporting requirements for certain facilities subject to Standards of Performance for New Stationary Sources at 40 CFR part 60. This action, calling for revisions to several subparts, is being taken in order to be consistent with current EPA reporting frequency policy. Section 60.7(c) of Subpart A, General Provisions, is amended so that owners/operators of certain affected facilities required to install and operate a continuous monitoring system (CMS) or monitoring device must submit an excess emissions and monitoring systems performance (MSP) report to EPA on a semiannual basis instead of quarterly. The semiannual reporting applies except in cases where: (1) more frequent reporting is required by an applicable subpart, (2) the CMS data are to be used directly for determining compliance therefore requiring quarterly reporting, or (3) EPA determines that more frequent reporting is necessary. This revision also reduces the excess emission and MSP reporting requirements to semiannually for some other affected facilities. The final rule establishes that affected facilities may submit a simplified summary excess emissions and MSP report form in place of the regular report if the total duration of excess emissions is <1% of the total operating time for the reporting period and if the total duration of CMS downtime is <5% of the total operating time for the reporting period. If either of these conditions is not met, sources are required to submit both the summary report form and the excess emissions/MSP report for that period. This final rule further revises Section 60.7 to require a report of the process operating time during the reporting period in order to determine the percentage of total operating time that a source was not in compliance. Section 60.1, Applicability Provisions, of Subpart A has been revised by adding a paragraph to clarify that sources which began construction or modification before a revised standard became applicable (usually the publication date of the proposed revised standard) will not be subject to the revised NSPS. The rule also amends Subpart D, Standards of Performance for Fossil-Fuel-Fired Steam Generators for which Construction is Commenced After August 17, 1971, so that the current requirement of quarterly submission of an excess emissions and MSP report remains in effect. Finally, EPA revises standards of performance for surface coatings under certain subparts to require quarterly reporting when the monthly compliance tests show emissions above the standard and semiannual reporting if no exceedances or monitoring deficiencies occur. For surface coating performance standards, the final rule also requires semiannual reporting of monitored parameter data. The rule became effective on 12-13-90. (12-13-90, 55 FR 51378, RU# 120-101)

3. Material Control and Accounting Requirements for Uranium Enrichment Facilities Producing Special Nuclear Material of Low Strategic Significance - Proposed Rule

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) proposes performance-based material control and accounting requirements at 10 CFR part 74 applicable to uranium enrichment facility licensees who produce significant quantities of special nuclear material (SNM) of low strategic significance. The proposed rule would also apply to applicants who build or operate enrichment facilities. NRC is taking this action because license applications for constructing/operating new enrichment facilities may be submitted to the Commission in the near future, and part or all of DOE's enrichment facilities may eventually fall under the jurisdiction of NRC regulations. NRC proposes to require that enrichment facilities have a material control and accounting system in place that would, among other measures, detect and protect against any production of uranium enriched to 10% or more in the isotope U-235. The proposed rule would also require a measured basis accounting of all uranium and U-235 on site, whether natural, depleted, or enriched. To improve loss detection capability, the proposed rule calls for a two-month interval for performing dynamic physical inventories of the enrichment process area. Finally, NRC proposes to revise 10 CFR part 74.11 to require uranium enrichment facilities to notify NRC within 1 hour of discovering any production of uranium enriched to 10% or more in U-235 or any unauthorized production of uranium of low strategic significance. However, since it is expected that the regulatory limit for the enrichment level may be exceeded during the first 24 hours of operation of centrifuge enrichment facilities, NRC proposes to consider this period as part of the start-up process and not an unauthorized activity to allow such facilities time to correct problems. NRC seeks comments on the proposed rule by March 4, 1991.

4. Definition of the Term "High-Level Radioactive Waste" - Petition for rulemaking

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission is petitioned by the States of Washington and Oregon to revise the definition of the term "high-level radioactive waste" in 10 CFR 60.2 in order to establish a procedure and a standard which NRC can use for making an evaluation as to whether reprocessing waste, in particular certain waste stored at DOE's Hanford site, is high-level radioactive waste (HLW) and subsequently under NRC's licensing authority. These states base their petition, in part, on Section 202 of the 1974 Energy Reorganization Act which defines NRC authority over retrievable surface storage facilities and other facilities whose sole purpose is long-term storage of HLW generated by DOE which are not used for, or are part of, research and development activities. The petitioners contend that if the low fraction wastes from pretreatment of tank wastes at Hanford are HLW, they are subject to the NRC's licensing authority under the Energy Reorganization Act. According to the petitioning states, the legal grounds for differentiating HLW from incidental waste (i.e., the lesser radioactive portion remaining after treatment) should be derived from a concentration criterion established in the Nuclear Waste Policy Act, not on the source of the waste as in present NRC regulations. The petitioners claim that determining the source of incidental waste is impossible because of mixing of wastes in defense tanks and other factors including inaccurate records. Therefore, the petitioners are requesting a revised definition of HLW to include a provision that if, before disposal, defense reprocessing tank wastes are treated to remove the largest technically achievable amount of radioactivity on a tank-by-tank basis, the treated residual fraction will be considered incidental waste and not HLW. In conjunction with this revision, the states request the addition of a new Appendix A to part 60 establishing a procedure for evaluating the tank wastes and the largest technically achievable treatment. Comments are sought on this petition for rulemaking by March 18, 1991.
