I Leave these pages for my thoughts. As music fills my head, I am lulled into a conscious slumber. My eyes blink heavy blinks, as if filling with the lyrics streaming through my mind. I Leave these pages for the ink that rests upon them. The smell of familiar but unknown chemicals leach into the air. My room needs to be fumigated before I surely suffocate. Many say the pen is mightier than the sword, but what if the wells of ink sloshing within its mechanisms causes fatality. I Leave these pages for the tomb stone etched on paper. A burial of these thoughts, these pages. I Leave these pages for you to breathe in.
