''(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS AND THE SECRETARY.—The Director of the Center shall each fiscal year prepare and submit to the appropriate committees of Congress and the Secretary a report—

''(1) describing and evaluating the progress made in such fiscal year in minority health research conducted or supported by the Institutes;

''(2) summarizing and analyzing expenditures made in such fiscal year for activities with respect to minority health research conducted or supported by the National Institutes of Health; and

''(3) containing such recommendations as the Director considers appropriate.

''(c) PROJECTS FOR COOPERATION AMONG PUBLIC AND PRIVATE HEALTH ENTITIES.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Director of the Center shall establish projects to promote cooperation among Federal agencies, State, local, and regional public health agencies, and private entities, in minority health research.

''SEC. 499H. GENERAL PROVISIONS REGARDING THE CENTER.

''(a) ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT FOR CENTER.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the National Institutes of Health, shall provide administrative support and support services to the Director of the Center and shall ensure that such support takes maximum advantage of existing administrative structures at the agencies of the National Institutes of Health.

''(b) REQUIRED EXPERTISE.—The Director of the Center, in consultation with the Advisory Council and the Center for Scientific Review, shall ensure that scientists with appropriate expertise in research on minority health are incorporated into the review, oversight, and management processes of all research projects in the National Institutes of Health minority health research program and other activities under such program.

''(c) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Director of the Center, in consultation with the directors of the national research institutes and centers, shall ensure that appropriate technical assistance is available to applicants for all research projects and other activities supported by the National Institutes of Health minority health research program.

''(d) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—

''(1) EVALUATION.—Not later than 5 years after the date of the enactment of this part, the Secretary shall conduct an evaluation to—

''(A) determine the effect of this section on the planning and coordination of the minority health research programs at the institutes, centers and divisions of the National Institutes of Health;

''(B) evaluate the extent to which this part has eliminated the duplication of administrative resources among such Institutes, centers and divisions; and

''(C) provide recommendations concerning future alterations with respect to this part.

''(2) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date on which the evaluation is commenced under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, and the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, a report concerning the results of such evaluation.''.

TITLE II—MEDICAL EDUCATION

SEC. 201. GRANTS FOR HEALTH CARE EDUCATION CURRICULA DEVELOPMENT.

Part F of title VII of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 295j et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 791 the following:

''SEC. 791A. GRANTS FOR HEALTH PROFESSIONS EDUCATION CURRICULA DEVELOPMENT.

''(a) GRANTS FOR GRADUATE EDUCATION CURRICULA DEVELOPMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator for the Health Resources and Services Administration and in collaboration with the Administrator for Health Care Policy and Research and the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Minority Health, may make awards of grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements to public and nonprofit private entities for the purpose of carrying out research projects and demonstration projects to develop curricula to reduce disparity in health care outcomes, including curricula and faculty development for cultural competency in graduate and undergraduate health professions education.

''(2) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to receive a grant, contract or cooperative agreements under paragraph (1), an entity shall—

''(A) be a school of medicine, school of osteopathic medicine, school of dentistry, school of public health, school of nursing, school of pharmacy, school of allied health, or other recognized health profession school; and

''(B) prepare and submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

''(3) USE OF FUNDS.—An entity shall use amounts received under a grant under paragraph (1) to carry out research projects and demonstration projects to develop curricula to reduce disparity in health care outcomes, including curricula for cultural competency in graduate medical education. Such curricula shall focus on the need to remove bias from health care at a personal level as well as at a systematic level.

''(4) NUMBER OF GRANTS AND GRANT TERM.—The Secretary shall award not to exceed 20 grants, contracts or cooperative agreements (or combination thereof) under paragraph (1) in each of the first and second fiscal years for which funds are available under subsection (f). The term of each such grant, contract or cooperative agreement shall be 3 years.

''(b) GRANTS FOR CONTINUING HEALTH PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION CURRICULA DEVELOPMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Health Resources and Services Administration and the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research and in collaboration with the Office of Minority Health, shall award grants, contracts or cooperative agreements to eligible entities for the establishment of demonstration projects to develop curricula to reduce disparity in health care and health outcomes, including curricula for cultural competency, in continuing medical education.

''(2) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible to receive a grant, contract, or cooperative agreement under paragraph (1) an entity shall—

''(A) be a school of medicine, school of osteopathic medicine, school of dentistry, school of public health, school of nursing, school of pharmacy, school of allied health, or other recognized health profession school; and

''(B) prepare and submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

''(3) USE OF FUNDS.—An entity shall use amounts received under a grant, contract, or cooperative agreement under paragraph (1) to develop and evaluate the effect and impact of curricula for continuing medical education courses or programs to provide education concerning issues relating to disparity in health care and health outcomes, including cultural competency of health professionals. Such curricula shall focus on the need to remove bias from health care at a personal level as well as at a systemic level.

''(4) NUMBER OF GRANTS AND GRANT TERM.—The Secretary shall award not to exceed 20 grants, contracts, or cooperative under paragraph (1) in each of the first and second fiscal years for which funds are available under subsection (f). The term of each such grant shall be 3 years.

''(c) DISTRIBUTION OF PROJECTS.—The Secretary shall ensure that, to the extent practicable, projects under subsections (a) and (b) are carried out in each of the principal geographic regions of the United States and address issues associated with different minority groups and health professions.

''(d) MONITORING.—An entity that receives a grant, contract or cooperative agreement under subsection (a) or (b) shall ensure that procedures are in place to monitor activities undertaken using grant, contract or cooperative agreement funds. Such entity shall annually prepare and submit to the Secretary a report concerning the effectiveness of curricula developed under the grant contract or cooperative agreement.

''(e) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than January 1, 2002, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the appropriate committees of Congress, a report concerning the effectiveness of programs funded under this section and a plan to encourage the implementation and utilization of curricula to reduce disparity in health care and health outcomes. A final report shall be submitted by the Secretary not later than January 1, 2004.

''(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $3,500,000 for fiscal year 2000, $7,000,000 for fiscal year 2001, $7,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, and $3,500,000 for fiscal year 2003.''.

SEC. 202. NATIONAL CONFERENCE ON CONTINUING HEALTH PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION AND DISPARITY IN HEALTH OUTCOMES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall convene a national conference on continuing health professions education as a method for reducing disparity in health care and health outcomes, including continuing medical education on cultural competency. The conference shall include sessions to address measurements of outcomes to assess the effectiveness of curricula in reducing disparity.

(b) PARTICIPANTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall invite minority health advocacy groups, health education entities described in section 741(b)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 201), and other interested parties to attend the conference under subsection (a).

(c) ISSUES.—The national conference convened under subsection (a) shall address issues relating to the role of continuing medical education in the effort to reduce disparity in health care and health outcomes, including the role of continuing medical education in improving the cultural competency of health professionals and health professions faculty. The conference shall focus on methods to achieve reductions in the disparities in health care and health outcomes through continuing medical education courses or programs and on strategies for measuring the effectiveness of curricula to reduce disparities.

(d) PUBLICATION OF FINDINGS.—Not later than 6 months after the convening of the national conference under subsection (a), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall publish in the Federal Register a summary of the proceedings and the findings of the conference.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

SEC. 203. ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish an advisory committee to provide advice to the Secretary on matters related to the development, implementation, and evaluation of graduate and continuing education curricula for health care professionals to decrease the disparity in health care and health outcomes, including curricula on cultural competency as a method of eliminating health disparity.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—Not later than 3 months after the date on which amounts are appropriated to carry out this section, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall appoint the members of the advisory committee. Such members shall be appointed from among individuals who—

(1) unless otherwise specified, are not officers or employees of the Federal Government;

(2) are experienced in issues relating to health disparity; and

(3) meet such other requirements as the Secretary determines appropriate; and shall include a representative of the Office of Minority Health under section 1707 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300u-6) and such other representatives of offices and agencies of the Public Health Service as the Secretary determines to be appropriate. The Secretary shall ensure that members of minority communities are well represented on the advisory committee. Such representatives shall include 1 or more individuals who serve on the advisory committee under section 1707(c) of such Act.

(c) COLLABORATION.—The advisory committee shall carry out its duties under this section in collaboration with the Office of Minority Health of the Department of Health and Human Services, and other offices, centers, and institutes of the Department of Health and Human Services, and other Federal agencies.

(d) TERMINATION.—The advisory committee shall terminate on the date that is 4 years after the date on which the first member of the committee is appointed.

(e) EXISTING COMMITTEE.—The Secretary may designate an existing advisory committee operating under the authority of the Office of Minority Health of the Department of Health and Human Services to serve as the advisory committee under this section.

SEC. 204. CULTURAL COMPETENCY CLEARINGHOUSE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Director of the Office of Minority Health of the Department of Health and Human Services shall establish within the Resource Center of the Office of Minority Health, or through the awarding of a contract provide for the establishment of, an information clearinghouse for curricula to reduce racial and ethnic disparity in health care and health outcomes. The clearinghouse shall facilitate and enhance, through the effective dissemination of information, knowledge and understanding of practices that lead to decreases in the disparity of health across minority and ethnic groups, including curricula for continuing medical education to develop cultural competency in health care professionals.

(b) AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION.—Information contained in the clearinghouse shall be made available to minority health advocacy groups, health education entities described in section 791A(b)(2)(A) of the Public Health Service Act (as added by section 201), health maintenance organizations, and other interested parties.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

TITLE III—MINORITY HEALTH RESEARCH BY THE AGENCY FOR HEALTH CARE POLICY AND RESEARCH.

SEC. 301. MINORITY HEALTH RESEARCH BY THE AGENCY FOR HEALTH CARE POLICY AND RESEARCH.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part A of title IX of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 299 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 906. RESEARCH ON MINORITY HEALTH DISPARITIES.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research shall—

''(1) conduct and support research to identify how to improve the quality and outcomes of health care services for minority populations and the causes of health disparities for minority populations, including barriers to health care access;

''(2) conduct and support research and support demonstration projects to identify, test, and evaluate strategies for eliminating the disparities described in paragraph (1) and promoting effective interventions;

''(3) develop measures for the assessment and improvement of the quality and appropriateness of health care services provided to minority populations; and

''(4) in carrying out 902(c), provide support to increase the number of minority health care researchers and the health services research capacity of institutions that train minority health care researchers.

''(b) RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Administrator shall conduct and support research to—

''(A) identify the clinical, cultural, socioeconomic, and organizational factors that contribute to health disparities for minority populations (including examination of patterns of clinical decisionmaking and of the availability of support services);

''(B) identify and evaluate clinical and organizational strategies to improve the quality, outcomes, and access to care for minority populations;

''(C) support demonstrations to test such strategies; and

''(D) widely disseminate strategies for which there is scientific evidence of effectiveness.

''(2) USE OF CERTAIN STRATEGIES.—In carrying out this section the Administrator shall implement research strategies and mechanisms that will enhance the involvement of minority health services researchers, institutions that train minority researchers, and members of minority populations for whom the Agency is attempting to improve the quality and outcomes of care, including—

''(A) centers of excellence that can demonstrate, either individually or through consortia, a combination of multi-disciplinary expertise in outcomes or quality improvement research and a demonstrated capacity to engage minority populations in the planning, conduct and translation of research, with linkages to relevant sites of care;

''(B) provider-based research networks, including health plans, facilities, or delivery system sites of care (especially primary care), that make extensive use of minority health care providers or serve minority patient populations and have the capacity to evaluate and promote quality improvement; and

''(C) other innovative mechanisms or strategies that will facilitate the translation of past research investments into clinical practices that can reasonably be expected to benefit these populations.

''(c) QUALITY MEASUREMENT DEVELOPMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—To ensure that minority populations benefit from the progress made in the ability of individuals to measure the quality of health care delivery, the Administrator of the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research shall support the development of quality of health care measures that assess the experience of minority populations with health care systems, such as measures that assess the access of minority populations to health care, the cultural competence of the care provided, the quality of the care provided, the outcomes of care, or other aspects of health care practice that the Administrator determines to be important.

''(2) REPORT.—Not later than 24 months after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary, acting through the Administrator, shall prepare and submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report describing the state-of-the-art of quality measurement for minority populations which will identify critical unmet needs, the current activities of the Department to address those needs, and a description of related activities in the private sector.''.

(b) FUNDING.—Section 926 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 299c-5) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(f) MINORITY HEALTH DISPARITIES RESEARCH.—For the purpose of carrying out the activities under section 906, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2000 through 2004.''.

TITLE IV—DATA COLLECTION RELATING TO RACE OR ETHNICITY

SEC. 401. STUDY AND REPORT BY NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

(a) STUDY.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into a contract with the National Academy of Sciences for the conduct of a comprehensive study of the Department of Health and Human Services' data collection systems and practices, and any data collection or reporting systems required under any of the programs or activities of the Department, relating to the collection of data on race or ethnicity, including other Federal data collection systems (such as the Social Security Administration) with which the Department interacts to collect relevant data on race and ethnicity.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the National Academy of Sciences shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate and the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, a report that—

(1) identifies the data needed to support efforts to evaluate the effects of race and ethnicity on access to and quality of health care and other services and on disparity in health and other social outcomes, the data needed to define appropriate quality of care measures to assess the equivalence of health care outcomes in health care payer systems, and the data needed to enforce existing protections for equal access to health care;

(2) examines the effectiveness of the systems and practices of the Department of Health and Human Services described in subsection (a), including demonstration projects of the Department, and the effectiveness of selected systems and practices of other Federal and State agencies and the private sector, in collecting and analyzing such data;

(3) contains recommendations for ensuring that the Department of Health and Human Services, in administering its entire array of programs and activities, collects, or causes to be collected, accurate and complete information relating to race and ethnicity as may be necessary to monitor access to and quality of health care and to ensure the capability to monitor and enforce civil rights laws; and

(4) includes projections about the costs associated with the implementation of the recommendations described in paragraph (3), and the possible effects of the costs on program operations.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2000 to carry out this section.

TITLE V—PUBLIC AWARENESS

SEC. 501. PUBLIC AWARENESS.

(a) PUBLIC AWARENESS CAMPAIGN.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Surgeon General and the Director of the Office for Civil Rights, shall conduct a national media campaign for the purpose of informing the public about racial and ethnic disparities in health care and health outcomes.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2000.

STATEMENT OF LOUIS W. SULLIVAN, M.D., PRESIDENT, MOREHOUSE SCHOOL OF MEDICINE ON THE HEALTH CARE FAIRNESS ACT OF 1999, NOVEMBER 5, 1999

Thank you for the opportunity to speak in strong support of the Health Care Fairness Act of 1999, which would elevate the NIH's Office of Research on Minority Health to a National Center for Research on Minority Health and Health Disparities. Senator Kennedy and his colleagues are to be commended for their initiative.

For too many years, this country has witnessed one disturbing report after another detailing the growing disparities in health status between our minority and majority populations. Unfortunately, while these reports continue, not enough has been done to change this shocking and unacceptable dynamic.

Infant mortality is nearly twice the rate for minorities as it is for non-minorities.

African-Americans, Hispanics, and Native Americans disproportionately suffer a variety of health care disparities including cancer, diabetes, heart disease and stroke.

The HIV virus and AIDS cases result in disproportionate suffering in minority populations. While minorities in the United States represent about 28% of the population, minorities account for 54% of all AIDS cases.

The above mentioned are only a few of the health care challenges faced by minorities and disadvantaged populations.

If we as a nation are to solve these complex problems, we must take an aggressive approach on all fronts. At the core of improving the health status for all Americans is a strong biomedical research effort to understand the factors which contribute to health problems.

During the time I was HHS Secretary, I was very pleased to work with the Congress, particularly Congressman Louis Stokes (D–OH) to establish the existing Office for Research on Minority Health at NIH. Notwithstanding the success of this office in highlighting and addressing health disparities, and in supporting research focused on improving minority health, the magnitude of the problem of health status disparities warrants an even more aggressive effort.

At the beginning of this year, we were very pleased to begin working with Congressman Jesse Jackson, Jr. (D–IL), Charlie Norwood (R–GA), J.C. Watts (R–OK), and Congresswoman Donna Christensen (D–VI) to introduce H.R. 2391, the National Center for Domestic Health Disparities Act of 1999. The bipartisan Jackson bill, and the legislation that is being introduced today, would elevate the existing NIH Office of Research on Minority Health to a National Center for Research on Minority Health and Health Disparities, and provide the National Center with four new major mechanisms, which the existing office does not have. They are:

(1) The Director of the Center will participate with other Institute and Center Directors to determine research policy and initiatives at NIH.

(2) The Center will serve as the catalyst for forward-thinking, strategic planning for the entire NIH, in order to bring all of NIH's considerable resources to bear, to close the health status gap.

(3) The bill empowers the Center Director to make peer-reviewed grants in areas of promising research which are not being addressed by the existing centers and institutes at NIH.

(4) There will be a new program of support for research excellence at those academic health centers which have demonstrated a historic commitment to studying and addressing diseases which disproportionately affect minority Americans. As a result of this legislation, minority investigations and institutions like Morehouse School of Medicine, of which I am President, Meharry Medical College, and others will have access to the types of resources necessary to build and enhance research infrastructure, and seek to compete on a level playing field with other prominent institutions.

I am grateful that both of the comprehensive bills which are being introduced today in the Senate and the House embody these four principles, and I am particularly pleased that both bills enjoy strong bipartisan support.

Today, I am urging members of Congress in both chambers, and from both sides of the aisle to support and cosponsor these important bills. We need to act as quickly as possible to reverse the persistent health status gap, which affects some 28% of our citizens.

ASSOCIATION OF MINORITY HEALTH PROFESSIONS SCHOOLS,
Washington, DC, November 3, 1999.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: Thank you for introducing the Health Care Fairness Act of 1999. This important legislation would, among other things, elevate the existing Office of Research on Minority Health at the National Institutes of Health (NIH) to a National Center for Research on Minority Health.

The National Center would be better able to respond to the health status disparity crisis facing minority Americans and medically underserved populations through the establishment of the following provisions:

The Director of the new Center would actively participate with Institute and Center Directors in planning major NIH initiatives. This includes discussing how NIH's considerable resources can be used to effectively address health status disparities.

The Center Director would be able to make peer-reviewed grants in areas of promising research not currently being addressed by the NIH institutes and centers.

The Center would establish a Centers of Excellence program to support those academic health centers which have a historic commitment to studying diseases which disproportionately affect minority and disadvantaged populations.

On behalf of the Association of Minority Health Professions Schools, I extend our enthusiastic support for this important legislation. Please advise me as to how we can work with you and other members of the Senate to pass this important legislation.

Thank you again for your leadership in this area.

Sincerely,

RONNY B. LANCASTER,
President.

NATIONAL MEDICAL ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, November 4, 1999.

Hon. EDWARD KENNEDY,
Ranking Minority, Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: The National Medical Association (NMA) is pleased to support the ''Health Care Fairness Act of 1999.'' While the nation has experienced tremendous advances in biomedical research, the benefits of these advances have not fully transferred to the African American and other minority communities, which are unduly plagued with disproportionate rates of death and disease. As the changing demographics of the United States yield growing racial and ethnic minority populations, it is absolutely essential that the nation become more proactive in addressing the critical health and biomedical research needs of communities of color.

Critical provisions of the ''Health Care Fairness Act of 1999'' include:

The establishment of the Center for Research on Minority Health and Health Disparities at the National Institutes of Health (NIH);

The provision of funds for peer-reviewed minority health-focused research grants, at the Institutes and Centers of the NIH;

The requirement to establish a comprehensive plan and budget for the conduct and support of all minority research activities of the NIH agencies; and

The establishment of a grant program to support the development of culturally competent curricula in health care education.

The NMA supports the ''Health Care Fairness Act of 1999'' and believes that this legislation will create important opportunities for the nation to make concrete advances in it's effort to close the health disparity gap.

Sincerely,

WALTER W. SHERVINGTON,
President.

ASSOCIATION OF BLACK CARDIOLOGISTS, INC.,
Atlanta, GA, November 4, 1999.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR HONORABLE SENATOR KENNEDY: The Association of Black Cardiologists, Inc. (ABC) would like to offer its full support of The Health Care Fairness Act of 1999. Its premise and objectives serve to meet the creativity and foresight needed to eliminate the disparity in health care and the mortality rate among African Americans versus White Americans. We wholeheartedly endorse the efforts of this bill to improve minority health, minority health research, data collection relating to race or ethnicity, and the promotion of medical education.

A robust economy and years of government pressure have helped move minority groups closer to the mainstream, but when it comes to health, studies show a stubborn, daunting and in some respects continuous disparity between Black and White Americans. For decades, Blacks have suffered higher death rates from nearly all-major causes including asthma, diabetes, cancer, major infectious diseases and cardiovascular diseases. The ABC recognizes that cardiovascular diseases, the leading cause of deaths in the United States, affect every family. CVD is the major cause of death for the African American population. Contrary to popular belief, the number one killer in the African American community is not violence, cancer, or AIDS. Blacks are more likely to die from cardiovascular disease than from any other disease. We can reduce the cost of health care, improve patient adherence to prescribed drug regimens, and improve the cultural competence of medical professionals with the passing of this bill.

The ABC mission states: ''We believe that good health is the cornerstone of progress for our people. We are firm in our resolve to make exemplary health care accessible and affordable to all in need, dedicated to lowering the high rate of cardiovascular diseases in minority populations and committed to advocacy and diversity. We are guided by high ethics in all our transactions and strive for excellence in our training and skills.''

Our mission throughout our organization is to assure that 'African American Children know their Grandparents'. Typically, African American men, with a life expectancy of less than 65 years, die without the joy of nurturing and guiding their grandchildren as only grandparents can.

What we know from our past efforts to address this issue is that it takes a focus effort to increase awareness, to educate, and to eliminate the disparities in health care. We are pleased that this bill will take this direction. Little progress will be made without a strong partnership among medical, public health and community organizations, and government. Please let us know what else we can do to aid in this effort. We applaud your commitment and stand ready to work actively with you to accomplish these objectives.

Sincerely,

B. WAINE KONG,
Chief Executive Officer.

Senator EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
Russell Senate Building,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: I am writing to register my strong and enthusiastic support for the Comprehensive Minority Health Bill, that is currently under consideration by the United States Senate. Considerable research has documented the great disparities in minority health status and health outcomes nationally. Racial and ethnic minorities are known to suffer disproportionately high mortality and morbidity rates, impaired access to health care, and lower quality health care services. This bill includes a host of provisions that would contribute importantly to the correction of this imbalance. The Bill's proposals; to establish a NIH ''Center for Health Disparities Research;'' to provide grants to support programs of excellence in biomedical research education for underrepresented minorities; to direct AHCPR to study the causes of health disparities; to expand DHHS collection/reporting of race/ethnicity data; to improve the quality/outcomes of health care services to minority populations; and to develop graduate/continuing medical education curricula devoted to the reduction of disparity in health care and health outcomes, all represent strong actions intended to address the continuing health imbalance for racial/ethnic minorities.

I write as an academic researcher and educator, and as the national director of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation's Scholarships in Health Policy Research Program, an initiative that supports fellowships for talented young social scientists who are interested in conducting research on critical health and health policy issues facing the United States, including racial/ethnic disparities in health status and health outcomes. I write also as a citizen who is concerned with the needless loss of human potential and quality of life resulting from the continuing health disparities in our society. I call upon you and your colleagues in the U.S. Senate to support this Bill in all of its elements.

Respectfully submitted,

Senator KENNEDY,

Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: I have read with interest your proposed changes and budget recommendations for the Office of Minority Health ''Improving Minority Health Through NIH. As a scholar who does work and collaborations in the field of minority health, and the Chair of a Sociology and Anthropology Department with 62 young scholars in our Graduate Programs, many of whom care about these issues, we are collectively pleased to see this bill brought forward.

Support for intervention and prevention research (of significance) in our community is too long over overdue. I have held grants from the National Cancer Institute and the National Science Foundation and I know first hand about the obstacles of under funding and a focus that is primarily on advocacy and community based ''feel good'' projects rather than solid research. Research that could possibly bring about some parity in health and health care for people of color in our society. We in our Medical Sociology Program and colleagues who work in the many disciplines connected to health and qualify of life issues applaud you and bring our support by way of many letters like this one. Thank you.

By Mr. DODD:

S. 1881. A bill to amend chapter 84 of title 5, United States Code, to make certain temporary Federal service creditable for retirement purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

THE FERS BUYBACK ACT OF 1999

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, today I am introducing the FERS Buyback Act of 1999, legislation that offers retirement security to many federal employees. Companion legislation has already been introduced in the House. Specifically, this legislation would help employees throughout the country hired as temporary workers in the 1980s that continued to work for the federal government into the 1990s.

Hundreds of current and former term employees in federal service find themselves ineligible to receive retirement benefits because of their inability to receive credit for post-1988 service as temporary federal workers.

This legislation would close a loophole in the federal pension system that has adversely impacted many federal workers through no fault of their own. It would change current law to allow individuals who have become eligible for the Federal Employee Retirement System (FERS) the option to receive credit for their past service as temporary employees and pay into the retirement fund for the prior years they worked as temporary employees. Because the legislation would merely allow qualified workers to buy into the retirement system, the government would not incur costs that it would not have incurred had the law treated them as permanent employees.

During the 1980s, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) hired thousands of employees under temporary status in response to the savings and loan crisis. Despite their temporary designation, many served in excess of five years with the federal government because of the FDIC's annual renewal of their one-year contracts. Unfortunately, these loyal employees did not enjoy the retirement benefits accorded their colleagues serving the same length of service under permanent status. To their credit, the FDIC did try to rectify the problem several years ago by granting many of their former temporary employees term appointments. Such appointments are for more than one year and allowed employees to be eligible for FERS.

The original FERS Act allowed for employees to make payments or buy back certain years of service prior to 1989 for which deductions were not taken. Therefore, the bill unintentionally denied many federal employees credit for time served after January 1, 1989.

I invite you to join me in correcting this inequity and ask that you cosponsor this fair and straightforward legislation.

By Mrs. HUTCHISON (for herself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 1882. A bill to expand child support enforcement through means other than programs financed at Federal expense; to the Committee on Finance.

CHILD SUPPORT ENFORCEMENT OPTIONS ACT OF 1999

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce, along with my colleague, Senator STEVENS, the Child Support Enforcement Options Act of 1999. This bill will give parents the tools and options they need to made sure their children have the resources they need to get a good start in life.

This bill will provide local public agencies and private attorneys access to certain child support enforcement procedures and information not currently available to them. To obtain this access, however, a local public agency or private attorney would first have to obtain a certificate of registration from the Secretary of the Federal Department of Health and Human Services and agree to certain federal requirements and procedures in using the enforcement tools.

Mr. President, in recent years Congress created a number of new information gathering and child support enforcement tools to enable some child support enforcement agencies to better enforce support awards. Unfortunately, these new tools are not available to hundreds of governmental and a growing number of private collection entities which many parents must use or choose to use. These so-called ''non IV–D'' entities have limited or no access to some new and effective federal collection tools. This legislation will extend these tools to so-called ''non IV–D'' entities that are properly approved and monitored by the Department of Health and Human Services.

Specifically, the bill will allow non-IV–D government agencies and private collection firms to be able to submit cases for the interception of Federal and State tax refunds for the collection of unpaid child support, in accordance with Federal and State statutory guidelines; to seek passport sanctions against delinquent parents; to report unpaid child support to credit bureaus; and to obtain current location and asset information on parents who owe child support. In addition, the bill provides that unemployment compensation benefits would be subject to income withholding for child support obligations in all child support cases, not just those enforced by a IV–D agency, as current law allows.

Mr. President, my bill will cost the Federal Government minimal or no additional funds. Nor will it impose any significant obligation on state or local child support agencies, since all government agencies would be allowed under the bill to charge necessary fees to non-IV–D agencies with which they share this information.

What this bill will do is take a significant step toward collecting on the estimated $57 billion in overdue child support owed in this country. Many states and local child support agencies are simply overwhelmed and unable to effectively and timely enforce the tens of millions of child support awards in this country. Far from undermining their role in this process, the Child Support Enforcement Options Act will help them accomplish the mutual goal of making sure that child support is collected and delivered to where it is needed the most—to the children to whom it is owed.

Particularly for families on welfare or other public assistance, child support is often critical to make ends meet. It helps put food on the table, clothes in the closet, and gas in the car. When a non-custodial parent reneges on his or her obligation to provide that support, it is incumbent upon the government to help enforce that award, through whatever means are available to the struggling custodial parent. In my opinion, any other consideration is secondary, and I am hopeful and confident that my colleagues in the Senate will agree and will work to pass this important legislation.

By Mr. BINGAMAN:

S. 1883. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to eliminate an inequity on the applicability of early retirement eligibility requirements to military reserve technicians; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

THE DUAL STATUS NATIONAL GUARD TECHNICIANS RETIREMENT EQUITY ACT

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a bill that seeks to remove an inequity in retirement pay benefits for critical personnel in our National Guard and Reserve units who are Dual Status Technicians. They are called ''Dual Status'', Mr. President, because they serve both as military and civilian personnel. There are about 40,000 Dual Status Technicians covered by retirement requirements and restrictions contained in Title 32 of the United States Code. These men and women are the backbone of the National Guard and Reserve structure. They are the mechanics, pilots, engineers, equipment operators, supply and support technicians who keep things running so that the Guard is able to respond to natural disasters and national emergencies, as well as serve on active duty in accordance with the ''total force concept'' that integrates active and reserve forces in the military. These hardworking men and women are often the first called to duty in an emergency.

As essential as Dual Status Technicians are, they suffer from the worst of two employment worlds. These technicians are by statute both military and civilian employees. Guard technicians must maintain their military job and grade in order to keep their technician status and remain a federal employee. In the event of separation from military service, however, they are denied the retirement benefits of those who serve in the same grade in the active military. Frequently, Dual Status Technicians who are separated from the military must wait years to qualify for their Federal Service retirement benefits.

The bill I am introducing in the Senate today is a companion bill already introduced on the House side by Representative ABERCROMBIE. It seeks to eliminate retirement inequities—a problem we just addressed head on in the Armed Services Committee when we included a provision in this year's Defense Authorization Bill the eliminate retirement inequities between active duty personnel who retired before or after 1986. We voted this year to effectively eliminate the ''Redux'' retirement benefit program because of the lower benefits it offered to personnel who retired after 1986. The action I am proposing in this legislation is somewhat similar.

This bill will permit Dual Status Technicians to retire at any age with 25 years of service or at 50 with 20 years of service. Those benefits are similar to benefits provided to Federal police and fire employees. They're similar to federal employees who retire from the Congress.

I am pleased to see, Mr. President, that this year's Defense Authorization bill took a step to provide equitable benefits to Dual Status Technicians, but in doing so, it crated an inequity within the Technician community itself. A provision in the bill provides for early retirement after 25 years at any age, or at age 50 with 20 years of service—but only for those employed as Dual Status Technicians after 1996. Those same benefits are withheld from those employed before 1996. In other words, Mr. President, we created a situation similar to the one the Senate dealt with regarding the ''Redux'' retirement program in the Defense Authorization bill. The bill I offer today would remove that inequity in the same way the Senate voted to remove the inequity for active duty personnel who retired under the ''Redux'' program.

Mr. President, the cost of equity is not high. An initial estimate by the Congressional Budget Office estimates that this bill could cost about $54 million over a five year period. That number will vary, of course, depending on the number of Technicians who would choose to take advantage of the change in the law when this bill is enacted. Of course, we're not only paying for equity here, Mr. President. We're paying appropriate, equitable compensation to the men and women who have devoted their careers to service for the nation both at home and abroad—our National Guard and Reserve who serve us all so well.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill and urge my fellow Members to support this effort through cosponsorship.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 71—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT MIAMI, FLORIDA, AND NOT A COMPETING FOREIGN CITY, SHOULD SERVE AS THE PERMANENT LOCATION FOR THE SECRETARIAT OF THE FREE TRADE AREA OF THE AMERICAS (FTAA) BEGINNING IN 2005

Mr. GRAHAM (for himself and Mr. MACK) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. CON. RES. 71

Whereas deliberations on establishing a ''Free Trade Area of the Americas'' (FTAA) will help facilitate greater cooperation and understanding on trade barrier reduction throughout the Americas;

Whereas the trade ministers of 34 countries of the Western Hemisphere agreed in 1998 to create a permanent Secretariat in order to support negotiations on establishing the FTAA;

Whereas the FTAA Secretariat will employ persons to provide logistical, administrative, archival, translation, publication, and distribution support for the negotiations;

Whereas the FTAA Secretariat will be funded by a combination of local resources and institutional resources from a tripartite committee consisting of the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), the Organization of American States (OAS), and the United Nations Economic Commission on Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC);

Whereas the temporary site of the FTAA Secretariat will be located in Miami, Florida, from 1999 until February 28, 2001, at which point the Secretariat will rotate to Panama City, Panama, until February 28, 2003, and then rotate to Mexico City, Mexico, until February 28, 2005;

Whereas by 2005 the FTAA Secretariat will have international institution status providing jobs and tremendous economic benefits to its host city;

Whereas a permanent site for the FTAA Secretariat after 2005 will likely be selected from among the 3 temporary host cities;

Whereas the city of Miami, Miami-Dade County, and the State of Florida have long served as the gateway for trade with the Caribbean and Latin America;

Whereas trade between the city of Miami, Florida, and the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean totaled $36,793,000,000 in 1998;

Whereas the Miami-Dade area and the State of Florida possess the necessary infrastructure, local resources, and culture necessary for the FTAA Secretariat's permanent site;

Whereas the United States possesses the world's largest economy and is the leading proponent of trade liberalization throughout the world; and

Whereas the city of Miami, Florida, the State of Florida, and the United States are uniquely situated among other competing locations to host the ''Brussels of the Western Hemisphere: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should direct the United States representative to the ''Free Trade Area of the Americas'' (FTAA) negotiations to use all available means in order to secure Miami, Florida, as the permanent site of the FTAA Secretariat after February 28, 2005.

SENATE RESOLUTION 223—CONDEMNING THE VIOLENCE IN CHECHYNA

Mr. HELMS (for himself, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. WELLSTONE, and Mr. LUGAR) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 223

Whereas, since September 1999, the Russian Federation has conducted a military operation against Chechnya that has resulted in the deaths of thousands of innocent civilians and the displacement of more than 200,000 people;

Whereas the Russian armed forces is launching repeated bombing attacks on the capital city of Grozny;

Whereas the recent conflict in Chechnya represents a continuation of the use of military force by Russia in 1994–1996, which caused the deaths of approximately 100,000 citizens of Russia;

Whereas neither the use of force in 1994–1996, nor the current use of force in Chechnya enhances the prospects for a peaceful resolution of the status of Chechnya;

Whereas the United States condemns terrorism in all forms, including the bombing attacks of apartment buildings in Moscow and Volgodonsk in the summer of 1999;

Whereas the appropriate manner to combat terrorist attacks is not through the use of indiscriminate force against civilians;

Whereas on November 4, 1999, Elena Bonner, Chairman of the Andrei Sakharov Foundation, testified before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate that ''carpet bombing and shelling of cities, villages, and refugee convoys attempting to escape the war zone constitute a grave violation of the Geneva Convention Relative to the Protection of Civilian Persons in Time of War and the Additional Protocols and demonstrate the Russian government's complete disregard for these extremely important international agreements'';

Whereas the United States believes that the recent targeting of ethnic minorities by local Russian officials, including blanket detentions and expulsions, calls into question the commitment of the Government of Russia to pluralism in the process of democratic reform in that country;

Whereas the Government of Russia has limited media access to and coverage of the conflict in Chechnya to preserve Russian popular support for the military operation;

Whereas the Government of Russia has openly violated its commitments under the Flank Document to the Treaty on Conventional Armed Forces in Europe with its deployments of military equipment in and around Chechnya; and

Whereas the conduct of the Russian armed forces in Chechnya threatens to destabilize the southern part of the Russian Federation as well as the region of the Caucasus as a whole : Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) condemns the use of indiscriminate force by the Russian armed forces against civilians in Chechnya;

(2) urges the Russian Federation—

(A) to assist those persons who have been displaced from Chechnya as a result of the conflict; and

(B) to allow representatives of the international community access to the internally displaced persons for humanitarian relief; and

(3) calls upon Russian President Boris Yeltsin and Prime Minister Vladimir Putin to devote every effort, including the use of third-party mediation, to the peaceful resolution of the conflict in Chechnya.

SENATE RESOLUTION 224—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE TO DESIGNATE NOVEMBER 11, 1999, AS A SPECIAL DAY FOR RECOGNIZING THE MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES AND THE CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES OF THE UNITED STATES WHO PARTICIPATED IN THE RECENT CONFLICT IN KOSOVO AND THE BALKANS

Mr. CLELAND submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 224

Whereas approximately 39,000 members of the Armed Forces and civilian employees of the United States were deployed at the peak of the 1999 conflict in Kosovo;

Whereas approximately 700 United States aircraft were deployed and committed to combat missions during that conflict;

Whereas approximately 37,000 combat sorties were flown by aircraft of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) during that conflict;

Whereas approximately 25,000 combat sorties were flown by United States aircraft during that conflict;

Whereas more than 5,000 weapons strike missions were completed during that conflict;

Whereas that conflict was the largest combat operation in the history of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization;

Whereas the United States and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization achieved all the military objectives of that conflict;

Whereas there were no United States or North Atlantic Treaty Organization combat fatalities during that conflict; and

Whereas that conflict was the most precise air assault in history: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the Sense of the Senate—

(1) to designate November 11, 1999, as a special day for recognizing and welcoming home the members of the Armed Forces (including active component and reserve component personnel), and the civilian personnel of the United States, who participated in the recently-completed operations in Kosovo and the Balkans, including combat operations and humanitarian assistance operations;

(2) to designate November 11, 1999, as a special day for remembering the members of the Armed Forces deployed in Kosovo and throughout the world, and the families of such members;

(3) to make the designations under paragraphs (1) and (2) on November 11, 1999, in light of the traditional celebration and recognition of the veterans of the United States on November 11 each year;

(4) to acknowledge that the members of the Armed Forces who served in Kosovo and the Balkans responded to the call to arms during a time of change in world history;

(5) to recognize that we live in times of international unrest and that the conflict in Kosovo was a dangerous military operation, as all combat operations are; and

(6) to acknowledge that the United States owes a debt of gratitude to the members of the Armed Forces who served in the conflict in Kosovo, to their families, and to all the members of the Armed Forces who place themselves in harm's way each and every day.

SENATE RESOLUTION 225—TO DESIGNATE NOVEMBER 23, 2000, THANKSGIVING DAY, AS A DAY TO ''GIVE THANKS, GIVE LIFE'' AND TO DISCUSS ORGAN AND TISSUE DONATION WITH OTHER FAMILY MEMBERS

Mr. DURBIN (for himself, Mr. FRIST, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. DORGAN, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. MACK, Mr. DODD, and Mr. THURMOND) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas traditionally, Thanksgiving is a time for families to take time out of their busy lives to come together and to give thanks for the many blessings in their lives;

Whereas approximately 21,000 men, women, and children in the United States are given the gift of life each year through transplantation surgery, made possible by the generosity of organ and tissue donations;

Whereas more than 66,000 Americans are awaiting their chance to prolong their lives by finding a matching donor;

Whereas nearly 5,000 of these patients each year (or 13 patients each day) die while waiting for a donated heart, liver, kidney, or other organ;

Whereas nationwide there are up to 15,000 potential donors annually, but families' consent to donation is received for less than 6,000;

Whereas the need for organ donations greatly exceeds the supply available;

Whereas designation as an organ donor on a driver's license or voter's registration is a valuable step, but does not ensure donation when an occasion arises;

Whereas the demand for transplantation will likely increase in the coming years due to the growing safety of transplantation surgery due to improvements in technology and drug developments, prolonged life expectancy, and increased prevalence of diseases that may lead to organ damage and failure, including hypertension, alcoholism, and hepatitis C infection;

Whereas the need for a more diverse donor pool, including a variety of racial and ethnic minorities, will continue to grow in the coming years;

Whereas the final decision on whether a potential donor can share the gift of life usually is made by surviving family members regardless of the patient's initial intent;

Whereas many Americans have indicated a willingness to donate their organs and tissues but have not discussed this critical matter with the family members who are most likely to make the decision, if the occasion arises, as to whether that person will be an organ and tissue donor;

Whereas some family members may be reluctant to give consent to donate their deceased loved one's organs and tissues at a very difficult and emotional time if that person has not clearly expressed a desire or willingness to do so;

Whereas the vast majority of Americans are likely to spend part of Thanksgiving Day with some of those family members who would be approached to make such a decision; and

Whereas it is fitting for families to spend a portion of that day discussing how they might give life to others on a day devoted to giving thanks for their own blessings: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate designates November 23, 2000, Thanksgiving Day, as a day to ''Give Thanks, Give Life'' and to discuss organ and tissue donation with other family members so that informed decisions can be made if the occasion to donate arises.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleagues, Senator FRIST, Senator DEWINE, Senator KENNEDY, Senator LEVIN and others in submitting a resolution that would designate November 23, 2000, Thanksgiving Day, as a day for families to discuss organ and tissue donation with other family members. The resolution uses the theme Give Thanks, Give Life to encourage these discussions so that informed decisions can be made if the occasion to donate arises.

Traditionally, Thanksgiving is a time for families to take time out of their busy lives to come together and give thanks for the many blessings in their lives. This presents the perfect opportunity for family members to discuss their intentions on the issue of organ and tissue donation. Although designation as an organ donor on a driver's license or voter's registration is a valuable first step in the donation process, it does not ensure donation will take place since the final decision on whether a potential donor will share the gift of life is always made by surviving family members regardless of their loved one's initial intent.

There are approximately 21,000 men, women, and children in the United States who receive the gift of life each year through transplantation surgery made possible by the generosity of organ and tissue donations. This is only a small proportion of the more than 66,000 Americans who are on the waiting list, hoping for their chance to prolong their lives by finding a matching donor. Tragically, nearly 5,000 of these patients each year (or 13 patients each day) die while waiting for a donated heart, liver, kidney, or other organ.

In order to narrow the gap between the supply and the increasing demand for donated organs, there must be an effort to encourage willing donors to make their desire to donate clear to the only people able to make the decision, if the occasion should arise—their immediate family members. Although there are up to 15,000 potential donors annually, families' consent to donation is received for less than 6,000 donors. As the demand for transplantation increases due to prolonged life expectancy; increased prevalence of diseases that lead to organ damage and failure including hypertension, alcoholism, and hepatitis C infection, this shortfall will become even more pronounced. Additionally, the need for a more diverse donor pool, including a variety of racial and ethnic minorities, will also continue to grow with the predicted population trends.

Many Americans will spend part of the Thanksgiving Day with some of those family members who would be most likely approached to make the important decision of whether or not to donate. Therefore, this would be a good time for families to spend a portion of that day discussing how they might give life to others on a day devoted to giving thanks for their own blessings. Open family discussions on this topic on a day of relaxation and family togetherness will increase awareness of the intentions of those willing to make the courageous and selfless decision to be organ donors, leading to more lifesaving transplants in the future. Designation of November 23, 2000, Thanksgiving Day, as a day for families to Give Thanks, Give Life is an important next step to promoting the dialogue between willing donors and their families, so that family members will know their loved ones' wishes long before the issue arises.

We have received the support of many national organ and tissue donation organizations for this resolution including: the American Heart Association, American Kidney Fund, American Liver Foundation, American Lung Association, American Society of Transplant Surgeons, Association of Organ Procurement Organizations, Coalition on Donation, Eye Bank Association of America, National Kidney Foundation, National Minority Organ and Tissue Transplant Education Program (MOTTEP), Transplant Recipients International Organization (TRIO), United Network for Organ Sharing (UNOS), and the Wendy Marks Foundation for Organ Donor Awareness. The efforts of these groups and others have been critical in increasing donor awareness and education of the public on this extremely important cause.

Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to join me in supporting this worthwhile resolution designating Thanksgiving day of 2000 as a day for families to discuss organ and tissue donation with other family members, a day to ''Give Thanks, Give Life.''

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED ON NOVEMBER 5, 1999

NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMINISTRATION AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1999

FRIST AMENDMENT NO. 2542

Mr. DOMENICI (for Mr. FRIST) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 1654) to authorize appropriations for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for fiscal year 2000, 2001, and 2002, and for other purposes; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''National Aeronautics and Space Administration Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 2000, 2001, and 20002''.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS—

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The National Aeronautics and Space Administration should continue to pursue actions and reforms directed at reducing institutional costs, including management restructuring, facility consolidation, procurement reform, personnel base downsizing, and convergence with other defense and commercial sector systems, while sustaining safety standards for personnel and hardware.

(2) The National Aeronautics and Space Administration should sustain its proud history as the leader of the United States in basic aeronautics and space research.

(3) The United States is on the verge of creating and using new technologies in microsatellites, information processing, and space launches that could radically alter the manner in which the Federal Government approaches its space mission.

(4) The Federal Government should invest in the types of research and innovative technology in which United States commercial providers do not invest, whole avoiding competition with the activities in which United States commercial providers do invest.

(5) International cooperation in space exploration and science activities serves the interest of the United States.

(6) In participating in the National Aeronautical Test Alliance, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Department of Defense should cooperate more effectively in leveraging the mutual capabilities of these agencies to conduct joint aeronautics and space missions that not only improve United States aeronautics and space capabilities, but also reduce the cost of conducting those missions.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) ADMINISTRATOR.—The term ''Administrator'' means the Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

(2) COMMERCIAL PROVIDER.—The term ''Commercial provider'' means any person providing space transportation services or other space-related activities, the primary control of which is held by persons other than a Federal, State, local, or foreign government.

(3) CRITICAL PATH.—The term ''critical path'' means the sequence of events of a schedule of events under which a delay in any event causes a delay in the overall schedule.

(4) GRANT AGREEMENT.—The term ''grant agreement'' has the meaning given that term in section 6302(2) of title 31, United States Code.

(5) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term ''institution of higher education'' has the meaning given such term in section 1201(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1141(a)).

(6) MAJOR REORGANIZATION.—With respect to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the term ''major reorganization'' means any reorganization of the Administration that involves the reassignment of more than 25 percent of the employees of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

(7) STATE.—The term ''State'' means each of the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and any other commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States.

TITLE I—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SUBTITLE A—AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 101. INTERNATIONAL SPACE STATION.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for the International Space Station—

(1) $2,282,700,000 for fiscal year 2000;

(2) $2,328,000,000 for fiscal year 2001; and

(3) $2,091,000,000 for fiscal year 2002.

SEC. 102. LAUNCH VEHICLE AND PAYLOAD OPERATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to National Aeronautics and Space Administration for Launch Vehicle and Payload Operations—

(1) for fiscal year 2000—

(A) $2,547,400,000 for space shuttle operations;

(B) $463,800,000 for space shuttle safety and performance upgrades; and

(C) $169,100,000 for payload and utilization operations.

(2) for fiscal year 2001—

(A) $2,623,822,000 for space shuttle operations;

(B) $481,964,000 for space shuttle safety and performance upgrades; and

(C) $174,173,000 for payload and utilization operations.

(3) for fiscal year 2002—

(A) $2,702,537,000 for space shuttle operations;

(B) $505,523,000 for space shuttle safety/performance upgrades; and

(C) $179,398,000 for payload and utilization operations.

SEC. 103. SCIENCE, AERONAUTICS, AND TECHNOLOGY.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for Science, Aeronautics, and Technology—

(1) for fiscal year 2000—

(A) $2,196,600,000 for Space Science;

(B) $256,200,000 for life and microgravity sciences and applications, of which $2,000,000 shall be for research and early detection system for breast and ovarian cancer and other women's health issues, and $2,000,000 shall be made available for immediate clinical trials of islet transplantation in patients with Type I diabetes utilizing immunoisolation technologies derived from NASA space flights;

(C) $1,459,100,000 for Earth Science;

(D) $1,156,500,000 for aeronautics and space transportation technology, of which—

(i) $770,000,000 shall be used for aeronautical research and technology, of which at least $60,000,000 shall be used for the Aviation Safety program, and of which $25,000,000 shall be used to augment research and technology relating to reduction in aircraft noise consistent with a noise reduction goal of 10dB by 2007, and of which $50,000,000 shall be used for ultra-efficient engine technology;

(ii) $254,000,000 shall be used for advanced space transportation technology, of which $111,600,000 shall be used only for the X–33 advanced technology demonstration vehicle program; and

(iii) $132,500,000 shall be used for commercial technology,of which some funds may be used for the expansion of the NASA business incubation program which is designed to foster partnerships between educational institutions and small high-technology businesses with preference given to those programs associated with community colleges;

(E) $406,300,000 for mission communications services;

(F) $130,000,000 for academic programs, of which $46,000,000 shall be used for minority university research and education (at institutions such as Hispanic-serving institutions and tribally-controlled community colleges), of which $28,000,000 shall be used for historically black colleges and universities; and

(G) $150,000,000 for future planning (space launch).

(2) for fiscal year 2001—

(A) $2,262,498,000 for Space Science;

(B) $263,886,000 for life and microgravity sciences and applications, and appropriate funding shall be made available for continuing clinical trials of islet transplantation in patients with Type I diabetes utilizing immunoisolation technologies derived from NASA space flights;

(C) $1,502,873,000 for Earth Science;

(D) $1,036,695,000 for aeronautics and space transportation technology, of which $820,000,000 shall be used for aeronautical research and technology, of which—

(i) at least $60,000,000 shall be used for the Aviation Safety program;

(ii) $25,000,000 shall be used to augment research and technology relating to reduction in aircraft noise consistent with a noise reduction goal of 10dB by 2007;

(iii) $75,000,000 shall be used to augment research and technology for engine and airframe efficiency and emissions reduction; and

(iv) $50,000,000 shall be used for ultra-efficient engine technology;

(E) $418,489,000 for mission communications services;

(F) $133,900,000 for academic programs; and

(G) $150,000,000 for future planning (space launch).

(3) for fiscal year 2002—

(A) $2,330,373,000 for Space Science;

(B) $271,803,000 for life and microgravity sciences and applications, and appropriate funding shall be made available for continuing clinical trials of islet transplantation in patients with Type I diabetes utilizing immunoisolation technologies derived from NASA space flights;

(C) $1,547,959,000 for Earth Science;

(D) $1,067,796,000 for aeronautics and space transportation technology, of which $880,000,000 shall be used for aeronautical research and technology, of which—

(i) at least $60,000,000 shall be used for the Aviation Safety program;

(ii) $25,000,000 shall be used to augment research and technology relating to reduction in aircraft noise consistent with a noise reduction goal of 10dB by 2007;

(iii) $75,000,000 shall be used to augment research and technology for engine and airframe efficiency and emissions reduction; and

(iv) $50,000,000 shall be used for ultra-efficient engine technology;

(E) $431,044,000 for mission communications services;

(F) $137,917,000 for academic programs; and

(G) $280,000,000 for future planning (space launch).

SEC. 104. MISSION SUPPORT.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for mission support—

(1) for fiscal year 2000—

(A) $43,000,000 for safety, mission assurance, engineering, and advanced concepts;

(B) $89,700,000 for space communication services;

(C) $181,000,000 for construction of facilities, including land acquisition; and

(D) $2,181,200,000 for research and program management, including personnel and related costs, travel, and research operations support.

(2) $2,569,747,000 for fiscal year 2001.

(3) $2,646,839,000 for fiscal year 2002.

SEC. 105. INSPECTOR GENERAL.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for Inspector General—

(1) $20,800,000 for fiscal year 2000;

(2) $21,424,000 for fiscal year 2001; and

(3) $22,066,720 for fiscal year 2002.

SEC. 106. EXPERIMENTAL PROGRAM TO STIMULATE COMPETITIVE RESEARCH.

Of the amounts authorized to be appropriated for academic programs under section 103(1)(F), 103(2)(F), and 103(3)(F), respectively, the Administrator shall use, for the program known as the Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research—

(1) $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2000;

(2) $15,000,000 for fiscal year 2001; and

(3) $20,000,000 for fiscal year 2002.

Subtitle B—Limitations and Special Authority

SEC. 111. USE OF FUNDS FOR CONSTRUCTION.

(a) AUTHORIZED USES.—Funds made available by appropriations under section 101, paragraphs (1)(A), (1)(B), (2)(A), (2)(B), (3)(A), and (3)(B) of section 102, section 103, and paragraphs (1)(A), (1)(B), (2)(A), and (2)(B) of section 104 and funds made available by appropriations for research operations support pursuant to section 104 may, at any location in support of the purposes for which such funds are appropriated, be used for—

(1) the construction of new facilities; and

(2) additions to, repair of, rehabilitation of, or modification of existing facilities (in existence on the date on which such funds are made available by appropriation).

(b) LIMITATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Until the date specified in paragraph (2), no funds may be expended pursuant to subsection (a) for a project, with respect to which the estimated cost to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, including collateral equipment, exceeds $1,000,000.

(2) DATE.—The date specified in this paragraphs is the date that is 30 days after the Administrator notifies the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives of the nature, location, and estimated cost to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration of the project referred to in paragraph (1).

(c) TITLE TO FACILITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If funds are used pursuant to subsection (a) for grants for the purchase or construction of additional research facilities to institutions of higher education, or to nonprofit organizations whose primary purpose is the conduct of scientific research, title to these facilities shall be vested in the United States.

(2) EXCEPTION.—If the Administrator determines that the national program of aeronautical and space activities will best be served by vesting title to a facility referred to in paragraph (1) in an institution or organization referred to in that paragraph, the title to that facility shall vest in that institution or organization.

(3) CONDITION.—Each grant referred to in paragraph (1) shall be made under such conditions as the Administrator determines to be necessary to ensure that the United States will receive benefits from the grant that are adequate to justify the making of the grant.

SEC. 112. AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATED AMOUNTS.

To the extent provided in appropriations Acts, appropriations authorized under subtitle A may remain available without fiscal year limitation.

SEC. 113. REPROGRAMMING FOR CONSTRUCTION OF FACILITIES.

(a) USE OF CONSTRUCTION FUNDS.—Subject to subsection (b), in addition to the amounts authorized for construction of facilities under section 101(4) or section 103(3), the Administrator may, for that purpose, from funds otherwise available to the Administrator—

(1) use an additional amount equal to 10 percent of the amount specified; or

(2) to meet unusual cost variations, use an additional amount equal to 25 percent of that amount, after the termination of a 30-day period beginning on the date on which the Administrator submits a report on the circumstances of such action by the Administrator to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives.

(b) LIMITATION.—The aggregate amount authorized to be appropriated for construction of facilities under section 101(4) and section 103(3) shall not be increased as a result of any action taken by the Administrator under paragraph (1) or (2).

SEC. 114. CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) LIMITATION ON USE OF FUNDS.—Except as provided in subsection (b), notwithstanding any other provision of law, no amount made available by appropriations for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration in excess of the amount authorized for that program under this title may be used for any program with respect to which—

(A) the annual budget request submitted by the President under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, included a request for funding; and

(B) for the fiscal year of the request referred to in subparagraph (A), Congress denied or did not provide funding.

(2) PROHIBITION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no amount made available by appropriations to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration may be used for any program that is not authorized under this Act, except for projects for construction of facilities.

(b) EXCEPTION.—Funds may be used for a program of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration upon the expiration of the 30-day period beginning on the date on which the Administrator provides a notice to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives that contains—

(1) a full and complete statement of the action proposed to be taken by the Administrator with respect to be taken by the Administrator with respect to that program; and

(2) the facts and circumstances that the Administrator relied on to support the proposed action referred to in paragraph (1).

(c) INFORMATION.—The Administrator shall keep the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives fully and currently informed with respect to all activities and responsibilities of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration within the jurisdiction of those committees.

SEC. 115. USE OF FUNDS FOR SCIENTIFIC CONSULTATIONS OR EXTRAORDINARY EXPENSES.

Not more than $35,000 of the amounts made available by appropriations pursuant to section 103 may be used by the Administrator for scientific consultations or extraordinary expenses.

TITLE II—INTERNATIONAL SPACE STATION.

SEC. 201. INTERNATIONAL SPACE STATION CONTINGENCY PLAN.

(a) TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO RUSSIA.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no funds or inkind payments shall be transferred to any entity of the Russian Government or any Russian contractor to perform work on the International Space Station which the Russian Government pledged, at any time, to provide at its expense. The subsection shall not apply to the purchase or modification of—

(1) the Russian Service Module, United States owned Functional Cargo Block, Russian space launch vehicles and launch services; or

(2) until the assembly of the United States lab module, command and control capability.

(b) CONTINGENCY PLAN FOR RUSSIAN ELEMENTS IN CRITICAL PATH.—The Administrator shall develop and deliver to Congress, within 60 days of enactment, a contingency plan for the removal or replacement of each Russian Government element of the International Space Station that lies in the Station's critical path, as well as Russian space launch services. Such plan shall include—

(1) decision points for removing or replacing those elements and launch services, to the maximum extent feasible, necessary for completion of the International Space Station;

(2) the estimated cost of implementing each such decision; and

(3) the cost, to the extent determinable, of removing or replacing a Russian Government critical path element or launch service after its decision point has passed, if—

(A) the decision at that point was not to remove or replace the Russian Government element or launch service; and

(B) the National Aeronautics and Space Administration later determines that the Russian Government will be unable to provide the critical path element or launch service in a manner to allow completion of the International Space Station.

(c) BIMONTHLY REPORTING ON RUSSIAN STATUS.—On or before December 1, 1999, and until substantial completion (as defined in section 202(b)(3) of this Act) of the assembly of the International Space Station, the Administrator shall report to Congress on the first day of every other month whether or not the Russians have performed work expected of them and necessary to complete the International Space Station. Such report shall also include a statement of the Administrator's judgment concerning Russia's ability to perform work anticipated and required to complete the International Space Station before the next report under this subsection.

(d) DECISION ON RUSSIAN CRITICAL PATH ITEMS.—The President shall notify Congress within 90 days of enactment of this Act of the decision on whether or not to proceed with permanent replacement of the Russian Service Module, other Russian elements in the critical path of the International Space Station, or Russian launch services. Such notification shall include the reasons and justifications for the decision and the costs associated with the decision. Such decision shall include a judgment of when the assembly of the International Space Station will be completed. If the President decides to proceed with a permanent replacement for the Russian Service Module or any other Russian element in the critical path or Russian launch service, the President shall notify Congress of the reasons and the justification for the decision to proceed with the permanent replacement, and the costs associated with the decision.

SEC. 202. COST LIMITATION FOR THE INTERNATIONAL SPACE STATION

(a) LIMITATION OF COSTS.—Except as provided in subsection (c), the total amount appropriated for—

(1) costs of the International Space Station through completion of assembly may not exceed $21,900,000,000; and

(2) space shuttle launch costs in connection with the assembly of the International Space Station through completion of assembly may not exceed $17,700,000,000 (determined at the rate of $380,000,000 per space shuttle flight).

(b) COSTS TO WHICH LIMITATION APPLIES.—

(1) DEVELOPMENT COSTS.—The limitation imposed by subsection (a)(1) does not apply to funding for operations, research, and crew return activities subsequent to substantial completion of the International Space Station.

(2) LAUNCH COSTS.—The limitation imposed by subsection (a)(2) does not apply to space shuttle launch costs in connection with operations, research, and crew return activities subsequent to substantial completion of the International Space Station.

(3) SUBSTANTIAL COMPLETION.—For purposes of this subsection, the International Space Station is considered to be substantially completed when the development costs comprise 5 percent or less of the total International Space Station costs for the fiscal year.

(c) AUTOMATIC INCREASE OF LIMITATION AMOUNT.—The amounts set forth in subsection (a) shall each be increased to reflect any increase in costs attributable to—

(1) economic inflation;

(2) compliance with changes in Federal, State, or local laws enacted after the date of enactment of this Act;

(3) the lack of performance or the termination of participation of any of the International countries participating in the International Space Station; and

(4) new technologies to improve safety, reliability, maintainability, availability, or utilization of the International Space Station, or to reduce costs after completion of assembly, including increases in costs for on-orbit assembly sequence problems, increased ground testing, verification and integration activities, contingency responses to on-orbit failures, and design improvements to reduce the risk of on-orbit failures.

(d) NOTICE OF CHANGES.—The Administrator shall provide with each annual budget request a written notice and analysis of any changes under subsection (c) to the amounts set forth in subsection (a) to the Senate Committees on Appropriations and on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and to the House of Representatives Committees on Appropriations and on Science. The written notice shall include—

(1) an explanation of the basis for the change, including the costs associated with the change and the expected benefit to the program to be derived from the change; and

(2) an analysis of the impact on the assembly schedule and annual funding estimates of not receiving the requested increases.

(e) REPORTING AND REVIEW.—

(1) IDENTIFICATION OF COSTS.—

(A) SPACE SHUTTLE.—As part of the over-all space shuttle program budget request for each fiscal year, the Administrator shall identify separately the amounts of the requested funding that are to be used for completion of the assembly of the International Space Station.

(B) INTERNATIONAL SPACE STATION.—As part of the overall International Space Station budget request for each fiscal year, the Administrator shall identify the amount to be used for development of the International Space Station.

(2) ACCOUNTING FOR COST LIMITATIONS.—As part of the annual budget request to the Congress, the Administrator shall account for the cost limitations imposed by subsection (a).

(3) VERIFICATION OF ACCOUNTING.—The Administrator shall arrange for a verification, by the General Accounting Office, of the accounting submitted to the Congress within 60 days after the date on which the budget request is transmitted to the Congress.

(4) INSPECTOR GENERAL.—Within 60 days after the Administrator provides a notice and analysis to the Congress under subsection (d), the Inspector General of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall review the notice and analysis was provided.

SEC. 203. LIABILITY CROSS-WAIVERS FOR INTERNATIONAL SPACE STATION-RELATED ACTIVITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator, on behalf of the United States, its departments, agencies, and related entities, may reciprocally waive claims with cooperating parties, and the related entities of such cooperating parties under which each party to each such waiver agrees to be responsible, and agrees to ensure that its own related entities are responsible, for damage or loss to its property or to property for which it is responsible, or for losses resulting from any injury or death sustained by its own employees or agents, as a result of activities connected to the International Space Station Program.

(1) CLAIMS.—A reciprocal waiver under subsection (a) may not preclude a claim by any natural person (including, but not limited to, a natural person who is an employee of the United States, the cooperating party, or the cooperating party's subcontractors) or that natural person's estate, survivors, or subrogees for injury or death, except with respect to a subrogee that is a party to the waiver or has otherwise agreed to be bound by the terms of the waiver.

(2) LIABILITY FOR NEGLIGENCE.—A reciprocal waiver under subsection (a) may not absolve any party of liability to any natural person (including, but not limited to, a natural person who is an employee of the United States, the cooperating party, or the cooperating party's subcontractors) or such natural person's estate, survivors, or subrogees for negligence, except with respect to a subrogee that is a party to the waiver or has otherwise agreed to be bound by the terms of the waiver.

(3) INDEMNIFICATION FOR DAMAGES.—A reciprocal waiver under subsection (a) may not be used as the basis of a claim by the Administration or the cooperating party for indemnification against the other for damages paid to a natural person, or that natural person's estate, survivors, or subogrees, for injury or death sustained by that natural person as a result of activities connected to the International Space Station Program.

(c) SAFETY OVERSIGHT AND REVIEW REQUIRED.—In the exercise of the authority provided in subsection (a), and consistent with relevant agreements with cooperating parties in the International Space Station Program, the Administrator shall establish overall safety requirements and plans and shall conduct overall integrated system safety reviews for International Space Station elements and payloads, and may undertake any and all authorized steps (including, but not limited to, removal from launch manifest) to ensure, to the maximum extent possible, that such elements and payloads pose no safety risks for the International Space Station.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) COOPERATING PARTY.—The term ''cooperating party'' means any person who enters into an agreement or contract with the Administration for the performance or support of scientific, aeronautical, or space activities in furtherance of the International Space Station Program.

(2) RELATED ENTITY.—The term ''related entity'' includes contractors or subcontractors at any tier, suppliers, grantees, and investigators or detailees.

(3) COMMON TERMS.—Any term used in this section that is defined in the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 2451 et seq.) has the same meaning in this section as when it is used in that Act.

(e) EFFECT ON PREVIOUS WAIVERS.—Subsection (a) applies to any waiver of claims entered into by the Administrator without regard to whether it was entered into before, on, or after the date of enactment of this Act.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ACT OF 1958 AMENDMENTS.

(a) DECLARATION OF POLICY AND PURPOSE.—Section 102 of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 2451) is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (f);

(2) by redesignating subsections (g) and (h) as subsection (f) and (g), respectively; and

(3) in subsection (g), as redesignated by paragraph (1) of this subsection, by striking ''(f) and (g)'' and inserting ''and (f)''.

(b) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Section 206(a) of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 2476(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''January'' and inserting ''May''; and

(2) by striking ''calendar'' and inserting ''fiscal''.

(c) DISCLOSURE OF TECHNICAL DATA.—Section 303 of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 2454) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(c) The Administrator may delay for a period not to exceed 5 years after development, the unrestricted public disclosure of technical data that would have been a trade secret or commercial or financial information that is privileged or confidential under the meaning of section 552(b)(4) of title 5, United States Code, if the information had been obtained from a non-Federal party, in any case in which the technical data is generated in the performance of experimental, developmental, or research activities or programs conducted by, or funded in whole or in part by, the Administration. The technical data referred to in the preceding sentence shall not be subject to the disclosure requirements of section 552 of title 5, United States Code.''.

SEC. 302. USE OF EXISTING FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which the Administrator considers the purchase, lease, or expansion of a facility to meet requirements of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Administrator, taking into account the applicable requirements of Federal law relating to the use or disposal of excess or surplus property, including the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, shall—

(1) consider whether there is available to the Administrator for use for meeting those requirements—

(A) any military installation that is closed or being closed;

(B) any facility at an installation referred to in subparagraph (A); or

(C) any other facility that the Administrator determines to be—

(i) owned or leased by the United States for the use of another agency of the Federal Government; and

(ii) considered by the head of the agency involved—

(I) to be excess to the needs of that agency; or

(II) to be underutilized by that agency; and

(2) in the case of an underutilized facility available in part for use to meet those requirements, consider locating an activity of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for which a facility is required at that underutilized facility in such manner as to share the use of the facility with 1 or more agencies of the Federal Government.

(b) ADDITION OR EXPANSION.—To the maximum extent feasible and cost-effective (and not inconsistent with the purposes of the Defense Base Closure and Realignment Act of 1990 (104 Stat. 1808 et seq.) and the amendments made by that Act), the Administrator shall meet the requirements of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration for additional or expanded facilities by using facilities that—

(1) the Administrator considers, pursuant to subsection (a), to be available to the Administrator for use to meet those requirements; and

(2) meet the management needs of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

(c) UNDERUTILIZED INFRASTRUCTURE.—The United States space launch industry has identified underutilized infrastructure at the Stennis Space Center for potential use in launch vehicle development activities. The proposed use of this infrastructure is compatible with the Center's propulsion test programs and consistent with other efforts to optimize taxpayer investments while fostering United States competitiveness and commercial use of space. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is encouraged to pursue an appropriate method for making the underutilized Stennis Space Center infrastructure available under suitable terms and conditions, if so requested by industry, and to notify the United States Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the United States House of Representatives Committee on Science if existing Administration authority is insufficient for this purpose.

SEC. 303. AUTHORITY TO REDUCE OR SUSPEND CONTRACT PAYMENTS BASED ON SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE OF FRAUD.

Section 2307(i)(8) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by striking ''and (4)'' and inserting ''(4), and (6)''.

SEC. 304. NOTICE.

(a) NOTICE OF REPROGRAMMING.—If any funds appropriated pursuant to the amendments made by this Act are subject to a reprogramming action that requires notice to be provided to the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and the House of Representatives, notice of that action shall concurrently be provided to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives.

(b) NOTICE OF REORGANIZATION.—Not later than 30 days before any major reorganization involving the reassignment of more than 25 percent of the employees of any program, project, or activity of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Administrator shall provide notice to the Committees on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and Appropriations of the Senate and the Committees on Science and Appropriations of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 305. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON THE YEAR 2000 PROBLEM.

With the year 2000 rapidly approaching, it is the sense of Congress that the Administrator should—

(1) give high priority to correcting all 2-digit date-related problems in the computer systems of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration to ensure that those systems continue to operate effectively in the year 2000 and in subsequent years;

(2) as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, assess the extent of the risk to the operations of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration posed by the problems referred to in paragraph (1), and plan and budget for achieving compliance for all of the mission-critical systems of the system by the year 2000; and

(3) develop contingency plans for those systems that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is unable to correct by the year 2000.

SEC. 306. UNITARY WIND TUNNEL PLAN ACT OF 1949 AMENDMENTS.

The Unitary Wind Tunnel Plan Act of 1949 (50 U.S.C. 511 et seq.) is amended—

(1) in section 101 by striking ''transsonic and supersonic'' and inserting ''transsonic, supersonic, and hypersonic''; and

(2) in section 103—

(A) in subsection (a)—

(i) by striking ''laboratories'' and inserting ''laboratories and centers''; and

(ii) by striking ''supersonic'' and inserting ''transsonic, supersonic, and hypersonic''; and

(B) in subsection (c), by striking ''laboratory'' and inserting ''facility''.

SEC. 307. ENHANCEMENT OF SCIENCE AND MATHEMATICS PROGRAMS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) EDUCATIONALLY USEFUL FEDERAL EQUIPMENT.—The term ''educationally useful Federal equipment'' means computers and related peripheral tools and research equipment that is appropriate for use in schools.

(2) SCHOOL.—The term ''school'' means a public or private educational institution that serves any of the grades of kindergarten through grade 12.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—It is the sense of Congress that the Administrator should, to the greatest extent practicable and in a manner consistent with applicable Federal law (including Executive Order No. 12999), donate educationally useful Federal equipment to schools in order to enhance the science and mathematics programs of those schools.

(2) REPORTS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, the Administrator shall prepare and submit to Congress a report describing any donations of educationally useful Federal equipment to schools made during the period covered by the report.

SEC. 308. AUTHORITY TO VEST TITLE.

Title III of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (72 Stat. 432 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''AUTHORITY TO VEST TITLE TO TANGIBLE PERSONAL PROPERTY FOR RESEARCH OR TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT

''SEC. 313. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator may vest title in tangible property (as that term is defined by the Administrator) in any participant that enters into a cooperative agreement with the Administrator if—

''(1) the primary purpose of the participant is to conduct scientific research or technology development;

''(2) the property is acquired with amounts provided under a cooperative agreement between the participant and the Administrator to conduct scientific research or technology development;

''(3) the Administrator determines that vesting the title of the property in the participant furthers the objectives of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration; and

''(4) the vesting of the title in the participant is made—

''(A) on the condition that the United States Government will not incur any further obligation; and

''(B) subject to any other condition that the Administrator considers to be appropriate.''.

SEC. 309. NASA MID-RANGE PROCUREMENT TEST PROGRAM.

Section 5062 of the Federal Acquisition Streamlining Act of 1994 (42 U.S.C. 2473 nt) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by inserting after the first sentence the following: ''In addition to providing any other notice of any acquisition under the test conducted under this section, the Administrator shall publish a notice of that acquisition in, or make such a notice available through, the automated version of the Commerce Business Daily published by the Secretary of Commerce.'';

(2) in subsection (b), by striking ''an estimated annual total obligation of funds of $500,000 or less'' and inserting ''a basic value (as that term is defined by the Administrator)—

''(1) of $2,000,000 or less; or

''(2) if options to purchase are involved, of $10,000,000 or less.'';

(3) in subsection (c), by striking ''$100,000,000'' and inserting ''$500,000,000''; and

(4) in subsection (f), by striking ''4 years'' and inserting ''6 years''.

SEC. 310. SPACE ADVERTISING.

(a) DEFINITION.—Section 70102 of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (8) through (16) as paragraphs (9) through (17), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (7) the following:

''(8) 'obtrusive space advertising' means advertising in outer space that is capable of being recognized by a human being on the surface of the Earth without the aid of a telescope or other technological device.''.

(b) PROHIBITION.—Chapter 701 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 70109 the following new section:

''§ 70109a. Space advertising

''(a) LICENSING.—Notwithstanding the provisions of this chapter or any other provision of law, the Secretary may not, for the launch of a payload containing any material to be used for the purposes of obtrusive space advertising—

''(1) issue or transfer a license under this chapter; or

''(2) waive the license requirements of this chapter.

''(b) LAUNCHING.—No holder of a license under this chapter may launch a payload containing any material to be used for purposes of obtrusive space advertising on or after the date of enactment of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000.

''(c) COMMERCIAL SPACE ADVERTISING.—Nothing in this section shall apply to non-obtrusive commercial space advertising, including advertising on—

''(1) commercial space transportation vehicles;

''(2) space infrastructure, payloads;

''(3) space launch facilities; and

''(4) launch support facilities.''.

(c) NEGOTIATION WITH FOREIGN LAUNCHING NATIONS.—

(1) The President is requested to negotiate with foreign launching nations for the purpose of reaching 1 or more agreements that prohibit the use of outer space for obtrusive space advertising purposes.

(2) It is the sense of Congress that the President should take such action as is appropriate and feasible to enforce the terms of any agreement to prohibit the use of outer space for obtrusive space advertising purposes.

(3) As used in this subsection, the term ''foreign launching nation'' means a nation—

(A) that launches, or procures the launching of, a payload into outer space; or

(B) from the territory or facility of which a payload is launched into outer space.

(d) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 701 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 70109 the following:

''70109a. Space advertising.''.

SEC. 311. AUTHORITY TO LICENSE NASA-DEVELOPED SOFTWARE

Section 305 of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 2457) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

''(m) AUTHORITY TO LICENSE NASA-DEVELOPED SOFTWARE.—Notwithstanding section 105 of title 17, United States Code, the Administrator may assert copyright in computer software authored by a United States Government employee when such software is created while participating with a non-Federal party under an agreement entered into under section 203(c)(5) and (c)(6) of this Act. The Administrator may grant, to the non-Federal participating party, for royalties or other consideration, licenses or assignments on computer software copyrighted pursuant to this subsection and may retain and share such royalties or other consideration consistent with section 14 of the Stevenson-Wydler Technology Innovation Act of 1980 (15 U.S.C. 3710c).''.

SEC. 312. CARBON CYCLE REMOTE SENSING TECHNOLOGY.

(a) CARBON CYCLE REMOTE SENSING TECHNOLOGY PROGRAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, shall develop a carbon cycle remote sensing technology program—

(A) to provide, on a near-continual basis, a real-time and comprehensive view of vegetation conditions; and

(B) to assess and model agricultural carbon sequestration.

(2) USE OF CENTERS.—The Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration shall use regional earth science application centers to conduct research under this section.

(3) RESEARCHED AREAS.—The area that shall be subjects of research conducted under this section include—

(A) the mapping of carbon-sequestering land use and land cover;

(B) the monitoring of changes in land cover and management;

(C) new systems for the remote sensing of soil carbon; and

(D) regional-scale carbon sequestration estimation.

(b) REGIONAL EARTH SCIENCE APPLICATION CENTER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, may, at the sole discretion of the Administrator based on maximizing the use of public funds, carry out this section through the Regional Earth Science Application Center located at the University of Kansas (referred to in this section as the ''Center''), if the Center enters into a partnership with a landgrant college or university.

(2) DUTIES OF CENTER.—The Center shall serve as a research facility and clearinghouse for satellite data, software, research, and related information with respect to remote sensing research conducted under this section.

(3) USE OF CENTER.—The Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, may use the Center for carrying out remote sensing research relating to agricultural best practices.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $5,000,000 for fiscal years 2000 through 2002.

SEC. 313. INDEMNIFICATION AND INSURANCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

PAUL KIRK ON ''WHAT WE CAN DO FOR DEMOCRACY''

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Paul Kirk, who is well known to many of us as a distinguished past chairman of the Democratic Party, recently wrote an eloquent and insightful article on the state of politics in America today. Entitled ''What We Can Do For Democracy,'' Mr. Kirk's article discusses the growing political apathy of Americans, and challenges citizens to take a more active role in government. This issue goes to the heart of our democracy, and I believe that all of us who are concerned about it will be interested in Mr. Kirk's ideas. I ask that his article may be printed in the RECORD.

[From the Boston Globe, Nov. 3, 1999]

''WHAT WE CAN DO FOR DEMOCRACY''

(By Paul G. Kirk, Jr.)

Alarms have sounded; no one has panicked; the response has been universal. Much time and an estimated $200 billion have been spent on readiness and remediation plans to avert a Y2K computer calamity. But how well are we responding to a Y2K alarm of greater consequence—the distressed health of America's democracy?

John Kennedy once admonished: ''Democracy is never a final achievement . . . it is a call to an untiring effort.'' In this twilight of ''America's Century'' and before the dawn of a new millennium, now seems a logical time to take stock of our effort.

A few weeks ago the Kennedy Library observed its 20th anniversary by inviting more than 75 distinguished business leaders, college presidents, public officials, nonprofit executives, and journalists to begin the assessment. They found the following symptoms:

An all-time high level of cynicism, disaffection, and citizen disconnect from politics coincides with an all-time high level of powerful interest money being spent on political campaigns.

Money is now the all-consuming obsession of candidates and parties, the deterrent to political competition, the barrier to equal representation, the controlling factor in nominations and elections, and the corrupting influence of public policy decisions.

62 percent of Americans eligible to vote in the 1998 midterm election chose not to, while less than a majority voted in the 1996 presidential election.

Those of us who know less, care less, participate less, and vote less than other eligible voters are the 18- to 24-year-olds.

Personal consumption and borrowing are at an all-time high while our savings rate is at an all-time low.

Record market growth and new prosperity will likely result in the largest transfer of individual fortune and economic capital to the next generation in our history.

Concurrently, the abrogation of any obligation to transfer to the next generation some appreciation of civic capital and public responsibility is more palpable than ever in our history.

Writing of an earlier democracy, historian Edward Gibbon put our symptoms in perspective: ''When the Athenians finally wanted not to give to society but for society to give to them, when the freedom they wished for most was freedom from responsibility, then Athens ceased to be free.''

Let's face it. We, too, have become so obsessed with self-gratification and gain that we view our rights and freedoms as entitlements and ignore the civic duties and responsibilities that ensure them.

George Santayana warned: ''Those who fail to remember the past are condemned to repeat it.'' To avert a repeat of an Athenian calamity, Americans' attitudes must change.

When the Kennedy Library conference asked what we must do to strengthen citizenship and service for the future, the attendees responded:

The present ''access for sale'' culture must be replaced with comprehensive campaign finance reform that provides some public financing and free TV time to candidates who agree to reasonable spending limits. Only this can renew citizens' trust that our votes matter and our voices will be heard equally.

Civic literacy education must be ingrained from grade school through college with extra-curricular citizenship activities that include possible school credit for community service.

An attitude of welcome inclusion and continuing citizenship education must be available to all ''new'' Americans.

Each measure is critical, but who will assure their adoption? John W. Gardner counseled that the ''plain truth is that government (and other powerful institutions) will not become worthy of trust until citizens take positive action to hold them to account.'' You and I can ignore the alarm, thus contributing to the calamity, or we can take positive action to rescue our democracy.

Citizens must launch a campaign to renew our national character and the spirit of citizenship and participation. One by one, our individual response can inspire a collective national chorus reminding others that our freedom and democracy are directly dependent on our own patriotism, active citizenship, unselfish service, respect for pluralism, and intolerance of the present condition.

Mark my words. If you and I commit ''an untiring effort'' to this national civic campaign, communities, organizations, educators, religious and business leaders, the media and opinion shapers, political candidates and parties, and, yes, the President of the United States whom we elect one year from now will follow.

Think about it. It's called ''consent of the governed.'' It's our democracy, and it's a noble campaign you'll be proud to win.●

U.N. ARREARS PACKAGE

● Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I have come to the floor today to call on Congress and the President to make sure the UN reform package is signed into law before we recess. As Chairman of the International Operations Subcommittee, I have worked hard to help forge a solid bipartisan United Nations reform package.

Our message in crafting this legislation is simple and straightforward. The U.S. can help make the United Nations a more effective, more efficient and financially sounder organization, but only if the U.N. and other member states, in return, are willing to finally become accountable to the American taxpayers.

The reforms proposed by the United States are critical to ensure the United Nations is effective and relevant. Ambassador Holbrooke has been pushing other member states to accept the reforms in this package in return for the payment of arrears. He has succeeded beyond all reasonable expectations, by gaining our seat back on the budget oversight committee—the ACABQ. But he needs this bill signed into law in order to convince the UN that reform will bring certain rewards.

But passing this UN package is not just about a series of reforms for the future. It impacts directly on the ability of the US mission to achieve our goals at the United Nations right now. The US does not owe most of these arrears to the UN. It owes them to our allies, like Britain and France, for reimbursement for peacekeeping expenses. And our arrears are being used as a convenient excuse to dismiss US concerns on matters of policy. Depriving the US government the ability to use these funds as leverage is irresponsible; after all, our diplomats need ''carrots'' as well as reasonable ''sticks'' to achieve our foreign policy goals.

Unfortunately, the Clinton Administration and my colleagues in the House of Representatives are jeopardizing the payment of our arrears over a policy that I call ''Mexico City lite.'' While I support the proposal to prohibit US government grant recipients from lobbying foreign governments to change their abortion laws, I do not believe it should be linked to the payment of our UN arrears. If these unrelated issues continue to be tied, then there is a good chance neither proposal will be enacted.

I am hopeful that my colleagues in the House and the Administration will see the wisdom of adopting measures that will enhance America's ability to exert leadership in the international arena with the revitalization of the UN. The State Department Authorization bill should be allowed to pass or fail on its own merit—not on the merits of the Mexico City lite policy. This agreement is in America's best interest, and the best interest of the entire international community.●

MAYOR JOE SERNA

● Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, a great American died this past weekend: Mayor Joe Serna Jr. of Sacramento, California. Mayor Serna was much beloved by his constituents, family, and friends. We will all miss him terribly.

Joe Serna and I became friends while working closely together on gun control, education, and other issues of mutual concern. He was a man of great vision, courage, energy, warmth, and humor.

He was also a living embodiment of the American Dream: a first-generation American who helped to reshape the capital of our Nation's largest state.

Joe Serna Jr. was born in 1939, the son of Mexican immigrants. As the oldest of four children, Joe grew up in a bunkhouse and worked with his family in the beet fields around Lodi.

Joe never forgot his roots. After attending Sacramento City College and graduating from California State University, Sacramento, he served in the Peace Corps and went to work for the United Farm Workers, where Cesar Chavez became his mentor and role model.

In 1969, Joe managed the successful campaign of Manuel Ferrales for the Sacramento City Council. After serving on the city's redevelopment agency in the 1970s, Joe was elected to the Council himself in 1981. He was elected mayor in 1992 and re-elected in 1996, winning both races by wide margins. Throughout his terms in office, he continued to work as a professor of government and ethnic studies at his alma mater, Cal State Sacramento.

Mayor Serna virtually rebuilt the city of Sacramento. He forged public-private partnerships to redevelop the downtown, revitalize the neighborhoods, and reform the public school system. He presided over an urban renaissance that transformed Sacramento into a dynamic modern metropolis.

Joe Serna died as he lived: with great strength and dignity. Last month, as he publicly discussed his impending death from cancer, he said, ''I was supposed to live and die as a farmworker, not as a mayor and a college professor. I have everything to be thankful for. I have the people to thank for allowing me to be their mayor. I have society to thank for the opportunity it has given me.''

Mr. President, it is we who are thankful today for having had such a man serve the people of California.●

CIVIL RIGHTS LEADER DAISY BATES

● Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise today before the Senate to praise one of the true heroes of the civil rights movement, Daisy Bates. In her death yesterday at age 84, America has lost one of the most courageous advocates for justice and equality between races.

Daisy Bates' life was one of conviction and resolve. Her character was a model of grace and dignity.

Mrs. Bates was born in 1914, the small town of Huttig, Arkansas in the southern part of the state. Her life was touched by the violence of racial hatred at a young age, when her mother was killed while resisting the advances of three white men. Her father left soon thereafter, and Daisy was raised by friends of her family.

Daisy moved to Little rock and married L.C. Bates, a former newspaperman, in 1942. For eighteen years, the two published the Arkansas State Press, the largest black newspaper in the state. The Arkansas State Press was an influential voice in the state of Arkansas which played a key role in the civil rights movement. Daisy and L.C. used the State Press to focus attention on issues of inequity in the criminal justice system, police brutality and segregation.

In 1952, Daisy was elected president of the state chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. It was from this position that she was thrust into the national spotlight, as a leader during the crisis of Central High School in 1957, when black students attempting to enter the school were blocked by rioters and the National Guard.

Throughout the crisis, the Little Rock Nine would gather in her tiny home before and after school to strategize about their survival. It was her home from which the Little Rock Nine were picked up from every morning by federal troops to take them to Central High, to face the rioters and the hatred. It was her home that was attacked by the segregationists.

Even after the Little Rock Nine finally received federal protection to attend Central High, Daisy Bates continued to face violence and harassment. Threats were made against her life. Bombs made of dynamite were thrown at her house. KKK crosses were burned on her lawn. On two separate occasions, her house was set on fire and all the glass in the front of the house was broken out.

It's hard to imagine how difficult it must have been for Daisy Bates to continue pursuing her convictions under such circumstances, but her perseverance is true testament to the strength of her character. Despite the violence, harassment and intimidation, Daisy Bates would not be deterred. She spent several more decades actively advancing the cause of civil rights, and helped the town of Mitchellville, Arkansas to elect its first black mayor and city council.

I am saddened that Mrs. Bates will not be on hand next week when the Little Rock Nine is presented the Congressional Medal of Honor. That honor is truly one that belongs to her, the woman who shepherded those brave young men and women through those extremely difficult days forty years ago. My prayers go out to the family and the many friends of Daisy Bates. I know that God is throwing open the gates of heaven today for Daisy, a woman who helped so many others enter doors that were once barred to them.●

THE DEPARTURE OF A.M. ROSENTHAL FROM THE NEW YORK TIMES

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, Please read these remarks! A.M. Rosenthal has just this past Friday concluded fifty-five years as a reporter, editor, and columnist for The New York Times. There has been none such ever. Nor like to be again. Save, of course, that this moment marks a fresh start for the legendary, and although he would demur, beloved Abe.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that A.M. Rosenthal's last column and an editorial from Friday's Times be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

[From The New York Times, Nov. 5, 1999]

ON MY MIND

(By A.M. Rosenthal)

On Jan. 6, 1987, when The New York Times printed my first column, the headline I had written was: ''Please Read This Column!'' It was not just one journalist's message of the day, but every writer's prayer—come know me.

Sometimes I wanted to use it again. But I was smitten by seizures of modesty and decided twice might be a bit showy. Now I have the personal and journalistic excuse to set it down one more time.

This is the last column I will write for The Times and my last working day on the paper. I have no intention of stopping writing, journalistically or otherwise. And I am buoyed by the knowledge that I will be starting over.

Still, who could work his entire journalistic career—so far—for one paper and not leave with sadnesses, particularly when the paper is The Times? Our beloved, proud New York Times—ours, not mine or theirs, or yours, but ours, created by the talents and endeavor of its staff, the faithfulness of the publishing family and, as much as anything else, by the ethics and standards of its readers and their hunger for ever more information, of a range without limit.

Arrive in a foreign capital for the first time, call a government minister and give just your name. Ensues iciness. But add ''of The New York Times,'' and you expect to be invited right over and usually are; nice.

''Our proud New York Times''—sounds arrogant and is a little, why not? But the pride is individual as well as institutional. For members of the staff, news and business, the pride is in being important to the world's best paper—you hear?—and being able to stretch its creative reach. And there is pride knowing that even if we are not always honest enough with ourselves to achieve fairness, that is what we promise the readers, and the standard to which they must hold us.

I used to tell new reporters: The Times is far more flexible in writing styles than you might think, so don't button up your vest and go all stiff on us. But when it comes to the foundation—fairness—don't fool around with it, or we will come down on you.

Journalists often have to hurt people, just by reporting the facts. But they do not have to cause unnecessary cruelty, to run their rings across anybody's face for the pleasure of it—and that goes for critics, too.

When you finish a story, I would say, read it, substitute your name for the subject's. If you say, well, it would make me miserable, make my wife cry, but it has no innuendo, no unattributed pejorative remarks, no slap in the face for joy of slapping, it is news, not gutter gossip, and as a reporter I know the writer was fair, then give it to the copy desk. If not, try again—we don't want to be your cop.

Sometimes I have a nightmare that on a certain Wednesday—why Wednesday I don't know—The Times disappeared forever. I wake trembling; I know this paper could never be recreated. I will never tremble for the loss of any publication that has no enforced ethic of fairness.

Starting fresh—the idea frightened me. Then I realized I was not going alone. I would take my brain and decades of newspapering with me. And I understood many of us had done that on the paper—moving from one career to another.

First I was a stringer from City College, my most important career move. It got me inside a real paper and paid real money. Twelve dollars a week, at a time when City's free tuition was more than I could afford.

My second career was as a reporter in New York, with a police press pass, which cops were forever telling me to shove in my ear.

I got a two-week assignment at the brand-new United Nations, and stayed eight years, until I got what I lusted for—a foreign post.

I served The Times in Communist Poland, for the first time encountering the suffocating intellectual blanket that is Communism's great weapon. In due time I was thrown out.

But mostly it was Asia. The four years in India excited me then and forever. Rosenthal, King of the Khyber Pass!

After nine years as a foreign correspondent, somebody decided I was too happy in Tokyo and nagged me into going home to be an editor. At first I did not like it, but I came to enjoy editing—once I became the top editor. Rosenthal, King of the Hill!

When I stepped down from that job, I started all over again as a times Op-Ed columnist, paid to express my own opinions. If I had done that as a reporter or editor dealing with the news, I would have broken readers' trust that the news would be written and played straight.

Straight does not mean dull. It means straight. If you don't know what that means, you don't belong on this paper. Clear?

As a columnist, I discovered that there were passions in me I had not been aware of, lying under the smatterings of knowledge about everything that I had to collect as executive editor—including hockey and debentures, for heaven's sake.

Mostly the passions had to do with human rights, violations of—like African women having their genitals mutilated to keep them virgin, and Chinese and Tibetan political prisoners screaming their throats raw.

I wrote with anger at drug legitimizers and rationalizers, helping make criminals and destroying young minds, all the while with nauseating sanctimony.

As a correspondent, it was the Arab states, not Israel, that I wanted to cover. But they did not welcome resident Jewish correspondents. As a columnist, I felt fear for the whittling away of Israeli strength by the Israelis, and still do.

I wrote about the persecution of Christians in china. When people, in astonishment, asked why, I replied, in astonishment, because it is happening, because the world, including American and European Christians and Jews, pays almost no attention, and that plain disgusts me.

The lassitude about Chinese Communist brutalities is part of the most nasty American reality of this past half-century. Never before have the U.S. government, business and public been willing, eager really, to praise and enrich tyranny, to crawl before it, to endanger our martial technology—and all for the hope (vain) of trade profit.

America is going through plump times. But economic strength is making us weaker in head and soul. We accept back without penalty a president who demeaned himself and us. We rain money on a Politburo that must rule by terror lest it lose its collective head.

I cannot promise to change all that. But I can say that I will keep trying and that I thank God for (a) making me an American citizen, (b) giving me that college-boy job on The Times, and (c) handing me the opportunity to make other columnists kick themselves when they see what I am writing, in this fresh start of my life.

[From The New York Times, Nov. 5, 1999]

A.M. ROSENTHAL OF THE NEW YORK TIMES

The departure of a valued colleague from The New York Times is not, as a rule, occasion for editorial comment. But the appearance today of A. M. Rosenthal's last column on the Op-Ed page requires an exception. Mr. Rosenthal's life and that of this newspaper have been braided together over a remarkable span—from World War II to the turning of the millennium. His talent and passionate ambition carried him on a personal journey from City College correspondent to executive editor, and his equally passionate devotion to quality journalism made him one of the principal architects of the modern New York Times.

Abe Rosenthal began his career at The Times as a 21-year-old cub reporter scratching for space in the metropolitan report, and he ended it as an Op-Ed page columnist noted for his commitment to political and religious freedom. In between he served as a correspondent at the United Nations and was based in three foreign countries, winning a Pulitzer Prize in 1960 for his reporting from Poland. He came home in 1963 to be metropolitan editor. In that role and in higher positions, he became a tireless advocate of opening the paper to the kind of vigorous writing and deep reporting that characterized his work. As managing editor and executive editor, Abe Rosenthal was in charge of The Times's news operations for a total of 17 years.

Of his many contributions as an editor, two immediately come to mind. One was his role in the publication of the Pentagon Papers, the official documents tracing a quarter-century of missteps that entangled America in the Vietnam War. Though hardly alone among Times editors, Mr. Rosenthal was instrumental in mustering the arguments that led to the decision by our then publisher, Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, to publish the archive. That fateful decision helped illustrate the futile duplicity of American policy in Vietnam, strengthened the press's First Amendment guarantees and reinforced

The Times's reputation as a guardian of the public interest.

The second achievement, more institutional in nature, was Mr. Rosenthal's central role in transforming The Times from a two-section to a four-section newspaper with the introduction of a separate business section and new themed sections like SportsMonday, Weekend and Science Times. Though a journalist of the old school, Abe Rosenthal grasped that such features were necessary to broaden the paper's universe of readers. He insisted only that the writing, editing and article selection measure up to The Times's traditional standards.

By his own admission, Abe Rosenthal could be ferocious in his pursuit and enforcement of those standards. Sometimes, indeed, debate about his management style competed for attention with his journalistic achievements. But the scale of this man's editorial accomplishments has come more fully into focus since he left the newsroom in 1986. It is now clear that he seeded the place with talent and helped ensure that future generations of Times writers and editors would hew to the principles of quality journalism

Born in Canada, Mr. Rosenthal developed a deep love for New York City and a fierce affection for the democratic values and civil liberties of his adopted country. For the last 13 years, his lifelong interest in foreign affairs and his compassion for victims of political, ethnic or religious oppression in Tibet, China, Iran, Africa and Eastern Europe formed the spine of his Op-Ed columns. His strong, individualistic views and his bedrock journalistic convictions have informed his work as reporter, editor and columnist. His voice will continue to be a force on the issues that engage him. And his commitment to journalism as an essential element in a democratic society will abide as part of the living heritage of the newspaper he loved and served for more than 55 years.●

THE MARTEL FAMILY

● Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of the Martel family of Bozeman, Montana.

In 1951, Emil Martel and his family fled communist Russia and eventually settled in Bozeman. In 1960, Emil and his son, Bill, formed Martel Construction and constituted its entire workforce. In the past forty years, however, Martel Construction has grown to employ 200 people and now contracts in six states. Today, Martel Construction maintains its familiar character and is still run as a family business. Martel Construction was recently awarded the United States Small Business Administration's 1999 Entrepreneurial Success Award as well as the 1999 Montana Family Business of the Year award by the College of Business at Montana State University-Bozeman.

Martel Construction and the Martel family represent a modern American success story. I applaud them not only for what they have accomplished for themselves but also for what they have given back to their community. Their hard work serves as inspiration for other small businesses in my state of Montana; their success is proof that the American Dream lives on.●

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—H.R. 3196

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of H.R. 3196, the foreign operations appropriations bill. I further ask consent that a substitute amendment, which is at the desk, be agreed to, the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statement relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD. I further ask consent that the Senate insist on its amendment and request a conference with the House.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

10TH ANNIVERSARY OF HISTORIC EVENTS IN CENTRAL AND EASTERN EUROPE

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 380, S. Con. Res. 68.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 68) expressing the sense of Congress on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of historic events in Central and Eastern Europe, particularly the Velvet Revolution in Czechoslovakia, and reaffirming the bonds of friendship and cooperation between the United States and the Czech and Slovak Republics.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I rise to congratulate my colleagues for having supported S. Con. Res. 68, a sense-of-the-Senate resolution, which I cosponsored with Senator HELMS, commemorating the tenth anniversary of the so-called Velvet Revolution, whereby the people of Czechoslovakia overthrew the communist dictatorship that had oppressed them for four decades.

Since then, Czechoslovakia decided to effect a ''Velvet Divorce.'' Today both successor states, the Czech Republic and the Slovak Republic, are in the process of integrating into the West. The Czech Republic is already a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and Slovakia is emerging as a strong candidate for the next round of enlargement. Both countries are busily preparing to qualify for membership in the European Union.

Both countries have growing pains associated with the difficult transitions from dictatorship to democracy, and from a command economy to the free market. Both have ongoing challenges to guarantee equal rights for minorities. But the overall picture for the Czech Republic and for the Slovak Republic is bright.

I am delighted that the Senate has recognized the accomplishments of the Czechs and the Slovaks and has wished them continued success in the future as partners of the United States.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to this resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 68) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 68

Whereas on September 3, 1918, the United States Government recognized the Czecho-Slovak National Council as the official Government of Czechoslovakia;

Whereas on October 28, 1918, the peoples of Bohemia, Moravia, and part of Silesia, comprising the present Czech Republic, and peoples of Slovakia, comprising the present Slovak Republic, proclaimed their independence in a common state of the Czechoslovak Republic;

Whereas on November 17, 1939, the Czech institutions of higher learning were closed by the Nazis, many students were taken to concentration camps, and nine representatives of the student movement were executed;

Whereas between 1938 and 1945, the Nazis annexed part of Bohemia, set up a fascist ''protectorate'' in the rest of Bohemia and in Moravia, and installed a puppet fascist government in Slovakia;

Whereas the Communists seized power from the democratically elected government of Czechoslovakia in March 1948;

Whereas troops from Warsaw Pact countries invaded Czechoslovakia in August 1968, ousted the reformist government of Alexander Dubcek, and restored a hard-line communist regime;

Whereas on November 17, 1989, the brutal break up of a student demonstration commemorating the 50th anniversary of the execution of Czech student leaders and the closure of universities by the Nazis triggered the explosion of mass discontent that launched the Velvet Revolution, which was characterized by reliance on nonviolence and open public discourse;

Whereas the peoples of Czechoslovakia overthrew 40-years of totalitarian communist rule in order to rebuild a democratic society;

Whereas since November 17, 1989, the people of the Czech and Slovak Republics have established a vibrant, pluralistic, democratic political system based upon freedom of speech, a free press, free and fair open elections, the rule of law, and other democratic principles and practices as they were recognized by President Wilson and President Thomas G. Masaryk;

Whereas the Czech Republic joined the North Atlantic Treaty Organization on March 12, 1999, the admission of which was approved by the Senate of the United States on April 30, 1998;

Whereas the Czech and Slovak Republics are in the process of preparing for admission to the European Union;

Whereas the people of the United States and the Czech and Slovak Republics have maintained a special relationship based on shared democratic values, common interests, and bonds of friendship and mutual respect; and

Whereas the American people have an affinity with the peoples of the Czech and Slovak Republics and regard the Czech and Slovak Republics as trusted and important partners: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(1) recognizes the 10th anniversary of the historic events in Central and Eastern Europe that brought about the collapse of the communist regimes and the fall of the Iron Curtain, and commemorates with the Czech and Slovak Republics the 10th anniversary of the Velvet Revolution in Czechoslovakia, which underscores the significance and value of reclaimed freedom and the dignity of individual citizens;

(2) commends the peoples of the present Czech and Slovak Republics for their achievements in building new states and pluralistic democratic societies nearly 60 years of totalitarian fascist and communist rule;

(3) supports the peoples of the Czech and Slovak Republics in their determination to join trans-Atlantic institutions through memberships in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the European Union;

(4) reaffirms the bonds of friendship and close cooperation that have existed between the United States and the Czech and Slovak Republics; and

(5) extends the warmest congratulations and best wishes to the Czech Republic and Slovak Republic and their people for a peaceful, prosperous, and successful future.

IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY ACT EXTENSION

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to Calendar No. 350, H.R. 3061.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3061) to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to extend for an additional 2 years the period for admission of an alien as a nonimmigrant under section 101(a)(15)(S) of such Act, and to authorize appropriations for the refugee assistance program under chapter 2 of title IV of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statement relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 3061) was read the third time and passed.

EQUALITY FOR ISRAEL AT THE UNITED NATIONS ACT OF 1999

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of calendar No. 376, S. 923.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 923) to promote full equality at the United Nations for Israel.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 923) was read the third time and passed, as follows:

S. 923

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Equality for Israel at the United Nations Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. EFFORT TO PROMOTE FULL EQUALITY AT THE UNITED NATIONS FOR ISRAEL.

(a) CONGRESSIONAL STATEMENT.—It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the United States should help promote an end to the inequity experienced by Israel in the United Nations whereby Israel is the only longstanding member of the organization to be denied acceptance into any of the United Nations region blocs, which serve as the basis for participation in important activities of the United Nations, including rotating membership on the United Nations Security Council; and

(2) the United States Ambassador to the United Nations should take all steps necessary to ensure Israel's acceptance in the Western Europe and Others Group (WEOG) regional bloc, whose membership includes the non-European countries of Canada, Australia, and the United States.

(b) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and on a quarterly basis thereafter, the Secretary of State shall submit to the appropriate congressional committees a report which includes the following information (in classified or unclassified form as appropriate):

(1) actions taken by representatives of the United States, including the United States Ambassador to the United Nations, to encourage the nations of the Western Europe and Others Group (WEOG) to accept Israel into their regional bloc;

(2) efforts undertaken by the Secretary General of the United Nations to secure Israel's full and equal participation in that body;

(3) specific responses solicited and received by the Secretary of State from each of the nations of Western Europe and Others Group (WEOG) on their position concerning Israel's acceptance into their organization; and

(4) other measures being undertaken, and which will be undertaken, to ensure and promote Israel's full and equal participation in the United Nations.

TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS TO THE WATER RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1999

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of calendar No. 316, H.R. 2724.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2724) to make technical corrections to the Water Resources Development Act of 1999.

(c) APPLICABILITY.—The program referred to in subsection (a) is the program for which funds appropriated in title I of Public Law 106–69 under the heading ''FEDERAL RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION'' are available for obligation upon the enactment of legislation authorizing the program.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering legislation reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works to make technical corrections to the Water Resources Development Act of 1999.

In July, 1999, the conference report on the Water Resources Development Act was enacted. The press of the conference business to reach final agreement prior to the August recess led to inaccurate cite references and omissions that need to be corrected.

This legislation and the accompanying amendment simply address technical modifications that have been brought to our attention by the Corps of Engineers. There are no new project authorizations, policy changes, or funding issues contained in this legislation.

As the Committee, by practice, has reauthorized the civil works mission of the Corps of Engineers every two years, the 1999 authorization bill is a produce initiated by the Committee in 1998. it is expected that, again next year, the Committee will examine the civil works mission of the Corps with all of the associated policy issues.

I respectfully request that my colleagues support this legislation and the amendment so that WRDA 1999 can be fully implemented.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to.

The amendment (No. 2773) was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the committee amendment, as amended, be agreed to, the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill (H.R. 2724), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

ARCTIC TUNDRA HABITAT EMERGENCY CONSERVATION ACT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of calendar No. 322, H.R. 2454.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2454) to assure the long-term conservation of mid-continent light geese and the biological diversity of the ecosystem upon which many North American migratory birds depend, by directing the Secretary of the Interior to implement rules to reduce the overabundant population of mid-continent light geese.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, with amendments; as follows:

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken as shown in boldface brackets and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italic.)

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—ARCTIC TUNDRA HABITAT EMERGENCY CONSERVATION

[SECTION 1.] SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This [Act] title may be cited as the ''Arctic Tundra Habitat Emergency Conservation Act''.

[SEC. 2.] SEC. 102. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The winter index population of mid-continent light geese was 800,000 birds in 1969, while the total population of such geese is more than 5,200,000 birds today.

(2) The population of mid-continent light geese is expanding by over 5 percent each year, and in the absence of new wildlife management actions it could grow to more than 6,800,000 breeding light geese in 3 years.

(3) The primary reasons for this unprecedented population growth are—

(A) the expansion of agricultural areas and the resulting abundance of cereal grain crops in the United States;

(B) the establishment of sanctuaries along the United States flyways of migrating light geese; and

(C) a decline in light geese harvest rates.

(4) As a direct result of this population explosion, the Hudson Bay Lowlands Salt-Marsh ecosystem in Canada is being systematically destroyed. This ecosystem contains approximately 135,000 acres of essential habitat for migrating light geese and many other avian species. Biologists have testified that one-third of this habitat has been destroyed, one-third is on the brink of devastation, and the remaining one-third is overgrazed.

(5) The destruction of the Arctic tundra is having a severe negative impact on many avian species that breed or migrate through this habitat, including the following:

(A) Canada Goose.
(B) American Wigeon.
(C) Dowitcher.
(D) Hudsonian Godwit.
(E) Stilt Sandpiper.
(F) Northern Shoveler.
(G) Red-Breasted Merganser.
(H) Oldsquaw.
(I) Parasitic Jaeger.
(J) Whimbrel.
(K) Yellow Rail.

(6) It is essential that the current population of mid-continent light geese be reduced by 50 percent by the year 2005 to ensure that the fragile Arctic tundra is not irreversibly damaged.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this [Act] title are the following:

(1) To reduce the population of mid-continent light geese.

(2) To assure the long-term conservation of mid-continent light geese and the biological diversity of the ecosystem upon which many North American migratory birds depend.

[SEC. 3.] SEC. 103. FORCE AND EFFECT OF RULES TO CONTROL OVERABUNDANT MID-CONTINENT LIGHT GEESE POPULATIONS.

(a) FORCE AND EFFECT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The rules published by the Service on February 16, 1999, relating to use of additional hunting methods to increase the harvest of mid-continent light geese (64 Fed. Reg. 7507–7517) and the establishment of a conservation order for the reduction of mid-continent light goose populations (64 Fed. Reg. 7517–7528), shall have the force and effect of law.

(2) PUBLIC NOTICE.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Service, shall take such action as is necessary to appropriately notify the public of the force and effect of the rules referred to in paragraph (1).

(b) APPLICATION.—Subsection (a) shall apply only during the period that—

(1) begins on the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(2) ends on the latest of—

(A) the effective date of rules issued by the Service after such date of enactment to control overabundant mid-continent light geese populations;

(B) the date of the publication of a final environmental impact statement for such rules under section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332(2)(C)); and

(C) May 15, 2001.

(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This section shall not be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary or the Service to issue rules, under another law, to regulate the taking of mid-continent light geese.

[SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.]

SEC. 104. COMPREHENSIVE MANAGEMENT PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Not later than the end of the period described in section 103(b), the Secretary shall prepare, and as appropriate implement, a comprehensive, long-term plan for the management of mid-continent light geese and the conservation of their habitat.

(b) REQUIRED ELEMENTS.—The plan shall apply principles of adaptive resource management and shall include—

(1) a description of methods for monitoring the levels of populations and the levels of harvest of mid-continent light geese, and recommendations concerning long-term harvest levels;

(2) recommendations concerning other means for the management of mid-continent light goose populations, taking into account the reasons for the population growth specified in section 102(a)(3);

(3) an assessment of, and recommendations relating to, conservation of the breeding habitat of mid-continent light geese;

(4) an assessment of, and recommendations relating to, conservation of native species of wildlife adversely affected by the overabundance of mid-continent light geese, including the species specified in section 102(a)(5); and

(5) an identification of methods for promoting collaboration with the government of Canada, States, and other interested persons.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $1,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2000 through 2002.

SEC. 105. DEFINITIONS.

In this [Act] title:

(1) MID-CONTINENT LIGHT GEESE.—The term ''mid-continent light geese'' means Lesser snow geese (Anser caerulescens caerulescens) and Ross' geese (Anser rossii) that primarily migrate between Canada and the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Wisconsin, and Wyoming.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(3) SERVICE.—The term ''Service'' means the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

TITLE II—NEOTROPICAL MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Act''.

SEC. 202. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) of the nearly 800 bird species known to occur in the United States, approximately 500 migrate among countries, and the large majority of those species, the neotropical migrants, winter in Latin America and the Caribbean;

(2) neotropical migratory bird species provide invaluable environmental, economic, recreational, and aesthetic benefits to the United States, as well as to the Western Hemisphere;

(3)(A) many neotropical migratory bird populations, once considered common, are in decline, and some have declined to the point that their long-term survival in the wild is in jeopardy; and

(B) the primary reason for the decline in the populations of those species is habitat loss and degradation (including pollution and contamination) across the species' range; and

(4)(A) because neotropical migratory birds range across numerous international borders each year, their conservation requires the commitment and effort of all countries along their migration routes; and

(B) although numerous initiatives exist to conserve migratory birds and their habitat, those initiatives can be significantly strengthened and enhanced by increased coordination.

SEC. 203. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this title are—

(1) to perpetuate healthy populations of neotropical migratory birds;

(2) to assist in the conservation of neotropical migratory birds by supporting conservation initiatives in the United States, Latin America, and the Caribbean; and

(3) to provide financial resources and to foster international cooperation for those initiatives.

SEC. 204. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) ACCOUNT.—The term ''Account'' means the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Account established by section 209(a).

(2) CONSERVATION.—The term ''conservation'' means the use of methods and procedures necessary to bring a species of neotropical migratory bird to the point at which there are sufficient populations in the wild to ensure the long-term viability of the species, including—

(A) protection and management of neotropical migratory bird populations;

(B) maintenance, management, protection, and restoration of neotropical migratory bird habitat;

(C) research and monitoring;

(D) law enforcement; and

(E) community outreach and education.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 205. FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a program to provide financial assistance for projects to promote the conservation of neotropical migratory birds.

(b) PROJECT APPLICANTS.—A project proposal may be submitted by—

(1) an individual, corporation, partnership, trust, association, or other private entity;

(2) an officer, employee, agent, department, or instrumentality of the Federal Government, of any State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State, or of any foreign government;

(3) a State, municipality, or political subdivision of a State;

(4) any other entity subject to the jurisdiction of the United States or of any foreign country; and

(5) an international organization (as defined in section 1 of the International Organizations Immunities Act (22 U.S.C. 288)).

(c) PROJECT PROPOSALS.—To be considered for financial assistance for a project under this title, an applicant shall submit a project proposal that—

(1) includes—

(A) the name of the individual responsible for the project;

(B) a succinct statement of the purposes of the project;

(C) a description of the qualifications of individuals conducting the project; and

(D) an estimate of the funds and time necessary to complete the project, including sources and amounts of matching funds;

(2) demonstrates that the project will enhance the conservation of neotropical migratory bird species in Latin America, the Caribbean, or the United States;

(3) includes mechanisms to ensure adequate local public participation in project development and implementation;

(4) contains assurances that the project will be implemented in consultation with relevant wildlife management authorities and other appropriate government officials with jurisdiction over the resources addressed by the project;

(5) demonstrates sensitivity to local historic and cultural resources and complies with applicable laws;

(6) describes how the project will promote sustainable, effective, long-term programs to conserve neotropical migratory birds; and

(7) provides any other information that the Secretary considers to be necessary for evaluating the proposal.

(d) PROJECT REPORTING.—Each recipient of assistance for a project under this title shall submit to the Secretary such periodic reports as the Secretary considers to be necessary. Each report shall include all information required by the Secretary for evaluating the progress and outcome of the project.

(e) COST SHARING.—

(1) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of the cost of each project shall be not greater than 33 percent.

(2) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—

(A) SOURCE.—The non-Federal share required to be paid for a project shall not be derived from any Federal grant program.

(B) FORM OF PAYMENT.—

(i) PROJECTS IN THE UNITED STATES.—The non-Federal share required to be paid for a project carried out in the United States shall be paid in cash.

(ii) PROJECTS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—The non-Federal share required to be paid for a project carried out in a foreign country may be paid in cash or in kind.

SEC. 206. DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY.

In carrying out this title, the Secretary shall—

(1) develop guidelines for the solicitation of proposals for projects eligible for financial assistance under section 205;

(2) encourage submission of proposals for projects eligible for financial assistance under section 205, particularly proposals from relevant wildlife management authorities;

(3) select proposals for financial assistance that satisfy the requirements of section 205, giving preference to proposals that address conservation needs not adequately addressed by existing efforts and that are supported by relevant wildlife management authorities; and

(4) generally implement this title in accordance with its purposes.

SEC. 207. COOPERATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out this title, the Secretary shall—

(1) support and coordinate existing efforts to conserve neotropical migratory bird species, through—

(A) facilitating meetings among persons involved in such efforts;

(B) promoting the exchange of information among such persons;

(C) developing and entering into agreements with other Federal agencies, foreign, State, and local governmental agencies, and nongovernmental organizations; and

(D) conducting such other activities as the Secretary considers to be appropriate; and

(2) coordinate activities and projects under this title with existing efforts in order to enhance conservation of neotropical migratory bird species.

(b) ADVISORY GROUP.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To assist in carrying out this title, the Secretary may convene an advisory group consisting of individuals representing public and private organizations actively involved in the conservation of neotropical migratory birds.

(2) PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—

(A) MEETINGS.—The advisory group shall—

(i) ensure that each meeting of the advisory group is open to the public; and

(ii) provide, at each meeting, an opportunity for interested persons to present oral or written statements concerning items on the agenda.

(B) NOTICE.—The Secretary shall provide to the public timely notice of each meeting of the advisory group.

(C) MINUTES.—Minutes of each meeting of the advisory group shall be kept by the Secretary and shall be made available to the public.

(3) EXEMPTION FROM FEDERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ACT.—The Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) shall not apply to the advisory group.

SEC. 208. REPORT TO CONGRESS.

Not later than October 1, 2002, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the results and effectiveness of the program carried out under this title, including recommendations concerning how this title might be improved and whether the program should be continued.

SEC. 209. NEOTROPICAL MIGRATORY BIRD CONSERVATION ACCOUNT.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Multinational Species Conservation Fund of the Treasury a separate account to be known as the ''Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Account'', which shall consist of amounts deposited into the Account by the Secretary of the Treasury under subsection (b).

(b) DEPOSITS INTO THE ACCOUNT.—The Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit into the Account—

(1) all amounts received by the Secretary in the form of donations under subsection (d); and

(2) other amounts appropriated to the Account.

(c) USE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the Secretary may use amounts in the Account, without further Act of appropriation, to carry out this title.

(2) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Of amounts in the Account available for each fiscal year, the Secretary may expend not more than 6 percent to pay the administrative expenses necessary to carry out this title.

(d) ACCEPTANCE AND USE OF DONATIONS.—The Secretary may accept and use donations to carry out this title. Amounts received by the Secretary in the form of donations shall be transferred to the Secretary of the Treasury for deposit into the Account.

SEC. 210. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated to the Account to carry out this title $8,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2000 through 2003, to remain available until expended, of which not less than 50 percent of the amounts made available for each fiscal year shall be expended for projects carried out outside the United States.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be agreed to.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2774

(Purpose: To assure the long-term conservation of mid-continent light geese)

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, Senator ABRAHAM has an amendment at the desk, and I ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], for Mr. ABRAHAM, proposes an amendment numbered 2774.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike Title II.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on two pieces of legislation designed to protect the habitat of this continent's migratory birds. Both H.R. 2454, known as the ''Snow Goose'' bill, and S. 148, the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Act are intended to protect bird habitat, and by extension, the species which frequent these lands.

At the Senate markup last month, Senator CHAFEE combined these two bills in the hopes of passing them as a complete package this year. Unfortunately, it has become obvious that this strategy will not work because some Members of the House, lacking a better vehicle, intend to use the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Act as a tool for debating the merits of property rights legislation. Apparently, they do not care that in doing so they jeopardize the passage of both bills.

I want very much for the Congress to pass the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Act and am disappointed that the House has failed to even bring this issue to the floor. It is an important bill that will help ensure that the migratory species which Americans enjoy will receive additional protection in their winter habitats.

But the Snow Goose is equally important and it is imperative that the Congress Act on this legislation as soon as possible. I fear the refusal of the House to act on S. 148 jeopardizes the chances of the Snow Goose legislation this year. For that reason, I have offered an amendment to H.R. 2454 to strip the language pertaining to the neotropicals from the text of the Snow Goose bill.

As part of my agreeing to do this, I have been assured by both the Chairman of the House Resources Committee and the Chairman of the Subcommittee on Fisheries Conservation, Wildlife and Oceans that they will do everything they can to assure that the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Act is considered by the full House early next year. I am encouraged by their support and wish to thank them for their willingness to try to move this legislation.

Therefore, I believe that removing the text of the Neotropical Migratory Bird Conservation Act is only a short-term setback. I am confident that once the full House has the opportunity to consider this legislation that a good bill will emerge from that respected body. I urge my colleagues to pass H.R. 2454, as amended.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to, the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 2774) was agreed to.

The bill (H.R. 2454), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

BOUNDARY CLARIFICATION ON MAPS RELATING TO COASTAL BARRIER RESOURCES SYSTEM

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 301, S. 1398.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1398) to clarify certain boundaries on maps relating to the Coastal Barrier Resources System.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. REPLACEMENT OF COASTAL BARRIER RESOURCES SYSTEM MAPS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The 7 maps described in subsection (b) are replaced by 14 maps entitled ''Dare County, North Carolina, Coastal Barrier Resources System, Cape Hatteras Unit NC–03P'' or ''Dare County, North Carolina, Coastal Barrier Resources System, Cape Hatteras Unit NC–03P, Hatteras Island Unit L03'' and dated July 1, 1999.

(b) DESCRIPTION OF MAPS.—The maps described in this subsection are the 7 maps that—

(1) relate to the portions of Cape Hatteras Unit NC–03P and Hatteras Island Unit L03 that are located in Dare County, North Carolina; and

(2) are included in a set of maps entitled ''Coastal Barrier Resources System'', dated October 24, 1990, and referred to in section 4(a) of the Coastal Barrier Resources Act (16 U.S.C. 3503(a)).

(c) AVAILABILITY.—The Secretary of the Interior shall keep the maps referred to in subsection (a) on file and available for inspection in accordance with section 4(b) of the Coastal Barrier Resources Act (16 U.S.C. 3503(b)).

AMENDMENT NO. 2775

(Purpose: To make a technical correction)

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, Senator SMITH of New Hampshire has an amendment at the desk, and I ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], for Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, proposes an amendment numbered 2775.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, line 25, strike ''July 1, 1999'' and insert ''October 18, 1999''.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 2775) was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee substitute, as amended, be agreed to, the bill, as amended, be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1398), as amended, was read the third time and passed, as follows:

S. 1398

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REPLACEMENT OF COASTAL BARRIER RESOURCES SYSTEM MAPS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The 7 maps described in subsection (b) are replaced by 14 maps entitled ''Dare County, North Carolina, Coastal Barrier Resources System, Cape Hatteras Unit NC–03P'' or ''Dare County, North Carolina, Coastal Barrier Resources System, Cape Hatteras Unit NC–03P, Hatteras Island Unit L03'' and dated October 18, 1999.

(b) DESCRIPTION OF MAPS.—The maps described in this subsection are the 7 maps that—

(1) relate to the portions of Cape Hatteras Unit NC–03P and Hatteras Island Unit L03 that are located in Dare County, North Carolina; and

(2) are included in a set of maps entitled ''Coastal Barrier Resources System'', dated October 24, 1990, and referred to in section 4(a) of the Coastal Barrier Resources Act (16 U.S.C. 3503(a)).

(c) AVAILABILITY.—The Secretary of the Interior shall keep the maps referred to in subsection (a) on file and available for inspection in accordance with section 4(b) of the Coastal Barrier Resources Act (16 U.S.C. 3503(b)).

COST OF LIVING ADJUSTMENT FOR ADMINISTRATIVE LAW JUDGES

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 339, H.R. 915.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 915) to authorize a cost of living adjustment in the pay of administrative law judges.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 915) was read the third time and passed.

HONORING CIVIL DEFENSE AND EMERGENCY MANAGEMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of H.R. 348, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 348) to authorize the construction of a monument to honor those who have served the Nation's civil defense and emergency management programs.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 348) was read the third time and passed.

THE DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES ASSISTANCE AND BILL OF RIGHTS ACT OF 1999

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now provide to the consideration of Calendar No. 387, S. 1809.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1809) to improve service systems for individuals with developmental disabilities, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1999''.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of this Act is as follows:

TITLE I—PROGRAMS FOR INDIVIDUALS WITH DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES

Subtitle A—General Provisions

SEC. 101. FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) disability is a natural part of the human experience that does not diminish the right of individuals with developmental disabilities to live independently, to exert control and choice over their own lives, and to fully participate in and contribute to their communities through full integration and inclusion in the economic, political, social, cultural, and educational mainstream of United States society;

(2) in 1999, there are between 3,200,000 and 4,500,000 individuals with developmental disabilities in the United States, and recent studies indicate that individuals with developmental disabilities comprise between 1.2 and 1.65 percent of the United States population;

(3) individuals whose disabilities occur during their developmental period frequently have severe disabilities that are likely to continue indefinitely;

(4) individuals with developmental disabilities often encounter discrimination in the provision of critical services, such as services in the areas of emphasis (as defined in section 102);

(5) individuals with developmental disabilities are at greater risk than the general population of abuse, neglect, financial and sexual exploitation, and the violation of their legal and human rights;

(6) a substantial portion of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families do not have access to appropriate support and services, including access to assistive technology, from generic and specialized service systems, and remain unserved or underserved;

(7) individuals with developmental disabilities often require lifelong community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance, that are most effective when provided in a coordinated manner;

(8) there is a need to ensure that services, supports, and other assistance are provided in a culturally competent manner, that ensures that individuals from racial and ethnic minority backgrounds are fully included in all activities provided under this title;

(9) family members, friends, and members of the community can play an important role in enhancing the lives of individuals with developmental disabilities, especially when the family members, friends, and community members are provided with the necessary community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance;

(10) current research indicates that 88 percent of individuals with developmental disabilities live with their families or in their own households;

(11) many service delivery systems and communities are not prepared to meet the impending needs of the 479,862 adults with developmental disabilities who are living at home with parents who are 60 years old or older and who serve as the primary caregivers of the adults;

(12) in almost every State, individuals with developmental disabilities are waiting for appropriate services in their communities, in the areas of emphasis;

(13) the public needs to be made more aware of the capabilities and competencies of individuals with developmental disabilities, particularly in cases in which the individuals are provided with necessary services, supports, and other assistance;

(14) as increasing numbers of individuals with developmental disabilities are living, learning, working, and participating in all aspects of community life, there is an increasing need for a well trained workforce that is able to provide the services, supports, and other forms of direct assistance required to enable the individuals to carry out those activities;

(15) there needs to be greater effort to recruit individuals from minority backgrounds into professions serving individuals with developmental disabilities and their families;

(16) the goals of the Nation properly include a goal of providing individuals with developmental disabilities with the information, skills, opportunities, and support to—

(A) make informed choices and decisions about their lives;

(B) live in homes and communities in which such individuals can exercise their full rights and responsibilities as citizens;

(C) pursue meaningful and productive lives;

(D) contribute to their families, communities, and States, and the Nation;

(E) have interdependent friendships and relationships with other persons;

(F) live free of abuse, neglect, financial and sexual exploitation, and violations of their legal and human rights; and

(G) achieve full integration and inclusion in society, in an individualized manner, consistent with the unique strengths, resources, priorities, concerns, abilities, and capabilities of each individual; and

(17) as the Nation, States, and communities maintain and expand community living options for individuals with developmental disabilities, there is a need to evaluate the access to those options by individuals with developmental disabilities and the effects of those options on individuals with developmental disabilities.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to assure that individuals with developmental disabilities and their families participate in the design of and have access to needed community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance that promote self-determination, independence, productivity, and integration and inclusion in all facets of community life, through culturally competent programs authorized under this title, including specifically—

(1) State Councils on Developmental Disabilities in each State to engage in advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities that—

(A) are consistent with the purpose described in this subsection and the policy described in subsection (c); and

(B) contribute to a coordinated, consumer- and family-centered, consumer- and family-directed, comprehensive system that includes needed community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance that promote self-determination for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families;

(2) protection and advocacy systems in each State to protect the legal and human rights of individuals with developmental disabilities;

(3) University Centers for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities Education, Research, and Service—

(A) to provide interdisciplinary pre-service preparation and continuing education of students and fellows, which may include the preparation and continuing education of leadership, direct service, clinical, or other personnel to strengthen and increase the capacity of States and communities to achieve the purpose of this title;

(B) to provide community services—

(i) that provide training and technical assistance for individuals with developmental disabilities, their families, professionals, paraprofessionals, policymakers, students, and other members of the community; and

(ii) that may provide services, supports, and assistance for the persons described in clause (i) through demonstration and model activities;

(C) to conduct research, which may include basic or applied research, evaluation, and the analysis of public policy in areas that affect or could affect, either positively or negatively, individuals with developmental disabilities and their families; and

(D) to disseminate information related to activities undertaken to address the purpose of this title, especially dissemination of information that demonstrates that the network authorized under this subtitle is a national and international resource that includes specific substantive areas of expertise that may be accessed and applied in diverse settings and circumstances; and

(4) funding for—

(A) national initiatives to collect necessary data on issues that are directly or indirectly relevant to the lives of individuals with developmental disabilities;

(B) technical assistance to entities who engage in or intend to engage in activities consistent with the purpose described in this subsection or the policy described in subsection (c); and

(C) other nationally significant activities.

(c) POLICY.—It is the policy of the United States that all programs, projects, and activities receiving assistance under this title shall be carried out in a manner consistent with the principles that—

(1) individuals with developmental disabilities, including those with the most severe developmental disabilities, are capable of self-determination, independence, productivity, and integration and inclusion in all facets of community life, but often require the provision of community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance;

(2) individuals with developmental disabilities and their families have competencies, capabilities, and personal goals that should be recognized, supported, and encouraged, and any assistance to such individuals should be provided in an individualized manner, consistent with the unique strengths, resources, priorities, concerns, abilities, and capabilities of such individuals;

(3) individuals with developmental disabilities and their families are the primary decisionmakers regarding the services and supports such individuals and their families receive, including regarding choosing where the individuals live from available options, and play decisionmaking roles in policies and programs that affect the lives of such individuals and their families;

(4) services, supports, and other assistance should be provided in a manner that demonstrates respect for individual dignity, personal preferences, and cultural differences;

(5) specific efforts must be made to ensure that individuals with developmental disabilities from racial and ethnic minority backgrounds and their families enjoy increased and meaningful opportunities to access and use community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance available to other individuals with developmental disabilities and their families;

(6) recruitment efforts in disciplines related to developmental disabilities relating to pre-service training, community training, practice, administration, and policymaking must focus on bringing larger numbers of racial and ethnic minorities into the disciplines in order to provide appropriate skills, knowledge, role models, and sufficient personnel to address the growing needs of an increasingly diverse population;

(7) with education and support, communities can be accessible to and responsive to the needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families and are enriched by full and active participation in community activities, and contributions, by individuals with developmental disabilities and their families;

(8) individuals with developmental disabilities have access to opportunities and the necessary support to be included in community life, have interdependent relationships, live in homes and communities, and make contributions to their families, communities, and States, and the Nation;

(9) efforts undertaken to maintain or expand community-based living options for individuals with disabilities should be monitored in order to determine and report to appropriate individuals and entities the extent of access by individuals with developmental disabilities to those options and the extent of compliance by entities providing those options with quality assurance standards;

(10) families of children with developmental disabilities need to have access to and use of safe and appropriate child care and before-school and after-school programs, in the most integrated settings, in order to enrich the participation of the children in community life;

(11) individuals with developmental disabilities need to have access to and use of public transportation, in order to be independent and directly contribute to and participate in all facets of community life; and

(12) individuals with developmental disabilities need to have access to and use of recreational, leisure, and social opportunities in the most integrated settings, in order to enrich their participation in community life.

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) AMERICAN INDIAN CONSORTIUM.—The term ''American Indian Consortium'' means any confederation of 2 or more recognized American Indian tribes, created through the official action of each participating tribe, that has a combined total resident population of 150,000 enrolled tribal members and a contiguous territory of Indian lands in 2 or more States.

(2) AREAS OF EMPHASIS.—The term ''areas of emphasis'' means the areas related to quality assurance activities, education activities and early intervention activities, child care-related activities, health-related activities, employment-related activities, housing-related activities, transportation-related activities, recreation-related activities, and other services available or offered to individuals in a community, including formal and informal community supports, that affect their quality of life.

(19) PERSONAL ASSISTANCE SERVICES.—The term ''personal assistance services'' means a range of services, provided by 1 or more individuals, designed to assist an individual with a disability to perform daily activities, including activities on or off a job that such individual would typically perform if such individual did not have a disability. Such services shall be designed to increase such individual's control in life and ability to perform everyday activities, including activities on or off a job.

(20) PREVENTION ACTIVITIES.—The term ''prevention activities'' means activities that address the causes of developmental disabilities and the exacerbation of functional limitation, such as activities that—

(A) eliminate or reduce the factors that cause or predispose individuals to developmental disabilities or that increase the prevalence of developmental disabilities;

(B) increase the early identification of problems to eliminate circumstances that create or increase functional limitations; and

(C) mitigate against the effects of developmental disabilities throughout the lifespan of an individual.

(21) PRODUCTIVITY.—The term ''productivity'' means—

(A) engagement in income-producing work that is measured by increased income, improved employment status, or job advancement; or

(B) engagement in work that contributes to a household or community.

(22) PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY SYSTEM.—The term ''protection and advocacy system'' means a protection and advocacy system established in accordance with section 143.

(23) QUALITY ASSURANCE ACTIVITIES.—The term ''quality assurance activities'' means advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities that result in improved consumer- and family-centered quality assurance and that result in systems of quality assurance and consumer protection that—

(A) include monitoring of services, supports, and assistance provided to an individual with developmental disabilities that ensures that the individual—

(i) will not experience abuse, neglect, sexual or financial exploitation, or violation of legal or human rights; and

(ii) will not be subject to the inappropriate use of restraints or seclusion;

(B) include training in leadership, self-advocacy, and self-determination for individuals with developmental disabilities, their families, and their guardians to ensure that those individuals—

(i) will not experience abuse, neglect, sexual or financial exploitation, or violation of legal or human rights; and

(ii) will not be subject to the inappropriate use of restraints or seclusion; or

(C) include activities related to interagency coordination and systems integration that result in improved and enhanced services, supports, and other assistance that contribute to and protect the self-determination, independence, productivity, and integration and inclusion in all facets of community life, of individuals with developmental disabilities.

(24) RECREATION-RELATED ACTIVITIES.—The term ''recreation-related activities'' means advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities that result in individuals with developmental disabilities having access to and use of recreational, leisure, and social activities, in their communities.

(25) REHABILITATION TECHNOLOGY.—The term ''rehabilitation technology'' means the systematic application of technologies, engineering methodologies, or scientific principles to meet the needs of, and address the barriers confronted by, individuals with developmental disabilities in areas that include education, rehabilitation, employment, transportation, independent living, and recreation. Such term includes rehabilitation engineering, and the provision of assistive technology devices and assistive technology services.

(26) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(27) SELF-DETERMINATION ACTIVITIES.—The term ''self-determination activities'' means activities that result in individuals with developmental disabilities, with appropriate assistance, having—

(A) the ability and opportunity to communicate and make personal decisions;

(B) the ability and opportunity to communicate choices and exercise control over the type and intensity of services, supports, and other assistance the individuals receive;

(C) the authority to control resources to obtain needed services, supports, and other assistance;

(D) opportunities to participate in, and contribute to, their communities; and

(E) support, including financial support, to advocate for themselves and others, to develop leadership skills, through training in self-advocacy, to participate in coalitions, to educate policymakers, and to play a role in the development of public policies that affect individuals with developmental disabilities.

(28) STATE.—The term ''State'', except as otherwise provided, includes, in addition to each of the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

(29) STATE COUNCIL ON DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES.—The term ''State Council on Developmental Disabilities'' means a Council established under section 125.

(30) SUPPORTED EMPLOYMENT SERVICES.—The term ''supported employment services'' means services that enable individuals with developmental disabilities to perform competitive work in integrated work settings, in the case of individuals with developmental disabilities—

(A)(i) for whom competitive employment has not traditionally occurred; or

(ii) for whom competitive employment has been interrupted or intermittent as a result of significant disabilities; and

(B) who, because of the nature and severity of their disabilities, need intensive supported employment services or extended services in order to perform such work.

(31) TRANSPORTATION-RELATED ACTIVITIES.—The term ''transportation-related activities'' means advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities that result in individuals with developmental disabilities having access to and use of transportation.

(32) UNSERVED AND UNDERSERVED.—The term ''unserved and underserved'' includes populations such as individuals from racial and ethnic minority backgrounds, disadvantaged individuals, individuals with limited English proficiency, individuals from underserved geographic areas (rural or urban), and specific groups of individuals within the population of individuals with developmental disabilities, including individuals who require assistive technology in order to participate in and contribute to community life.

SEC. 103. RECORDS AND AUDITS.

(a) RECORDS.—Each recipient of assistance under this title shall keep such records as the Secretary shall prescribe, including—

(1) records that fully disclose—

(A) the amount and disposition by such recipient of the assistance;

(B) the total cost of the project or undertaking in connection with which such assistance is given or used; and

(C) the amount of that portion of the cost of the project or undertaking that is supplied by other sources; and

(2) such other records as will facilitate an effective audit.

(b) ACCESS.—The Secretary and the Comptroller General of the United States, or any of their duly authorized representatives, shall have access for the purpose of audit and examination to any books, documents, papers, and records of the recipients of assistance under this title that are pertinent to such assistance.

SEC. 104. RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SECRETARY.

(a) PROGRAM ACCOUNTABILITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to monitor entities that received funds under this Act to carry out activities under subtitles B, C, and D and determine the extent to which the entities have been responsive to the purpose of this title and have taken actions consistent with the policy described in section 101(c), the Secretary shall develop and implement an accountability process as described in this subsection, with respect to activities conducted after October 1, 2000.

(2) AREAS OF EMPHASIS.—The Secretary shall develop a process for identifying and reporting (pursuant to section 105) on progress achieved through advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities, undertaken by the entities described in paragraph (1), that resulted in individuals with developmental disabilities and their families participating in the design of and having access to needed community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance that promote self-determination, independence, productivity, and integration and inclusion in all facets of community life. Specifically, the Secretary shall develop a process for identifying and reporting on progress achieved, through advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities, by the entities in the areas of emphasis.

(3) INDICATORS OF PROGRESS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In identifying progress made by the entities described in paragraph (1) in the areas of emphasis, the Secretary, in consultation with the Commissioner of the Administration on Developmental Disabilities and the entities, shall develop indicators for each area of emphasis.

(B) PROPOSED INDICATORS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall develop and publish in the Federal Register for public comment proposed indicators of progress for monitoring how entities described in paragraph (1) have addressed the areas of emphasis described in paragraph (2) in a manner that is responsive to the purpose of this title and consistent with the policy described in section 101(c).

(C) FINAL INDICATORS.—Not later than October 1, 2000, the Secretary shall revise the proposed indicators of progress, to the extent necessary based on public comment, and publish final indicators of progress in the Federal Register.

(D) SPECIFIC MEASURES.—At a minimum, the indicators of progress shall be used to describe and measure—

(i) the satisfaction of individuals with developmental disabilities with the advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities provided under subtitles B, C, and D;

(ii) the extent to which the advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities provided through subtitles B, C, and D result in improvements in—

(I) the ability of individuals with developmental disabilities to make choices and exert control over the type, intensity, and timing of services, supports, and assistance that the individuals have used;

(II) the ability of individuals with developmental disabilities to participate in the full range of community life with persons of the individuals' choice; and

(III) the ability of individuals with developmental disabilities to access services, supports, and assistance in a manner that ensures that such an individual is free from abuse, neglect, sexual and financial exploitation, violation of legal and human rights, and the inappropriate use of restraints and seclusion; and

(iii) the extent to which the entities described in paragraph (1) collaborate with each other to achieve the purpose of this title and the policy described in section 101(c).

(4) TIME LINE FOR COMPLIANCE WITH INDICATORS OF PROGRESS.—The Secretary shall require entities described in paragraph (1) to meet the indicators of progress described in paragraph (3). For fiscal year 2001 and each year thereafter, the Secretary shall apply the indicators in monitoring entities described in paragraph (1), with respect to activities conducted after October 1, 2000.

(b) TIME LINE FOR REGULATIONS.—Except as otherwise expressly provided in this title, the Secretary, not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, shall promulgate such regulations as may be required for the implementation of this title.

(c) INTERAGENCY COMMITTEE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall maintain the interagency committee authorized in section 108 of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act (42 U.S.C. 6007) as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act, except as otherwise provided in this subsection.

(2) COMPOSITION.—The interagency committee shall be composed of representatives of—

(A) the Administration on Developmental Disabilities, the Administration on Children, Youth, and Families, the Administration on Aging, and the Health Resources and Services Administration, of the Department of Health and Human Services; and

(B) such other Federal departments and agencies as the Secretary of Health and Human Services considers to be appropriate.

(3) DUTIES.—Such interagency committee shall meet regularly to coordinate and plan activities conducted by Federal departments and agencies for individuals with developmental disabilities.

(4) MEETINGS.—Each meeting of the interagency committee (except for any meetings of any subcommittees of the committee) shall be open to the public. Notice of each meeting, and a statement of the agenda for the meeting, shall be published in the Federal Register not later than 14 days before the date on which the meeting is to occur.

SEC. 105. REPORTS OF THE SECRETARY.

At least once every 2 years, the Secretary, using information submitted in the reports and information required under subtitles B, C, D, and E, shall prepare and submit to the President, Congress, and the National Council on Disability, a report that describes the goals and outcomes of programs supported under subtitles B, C, D, and E. In preparing the report, the Secretary shall provide—

(1) meaningful examples of how the councils, protection and advocacy systems, centers, and entities funded under subtitles B, C, D, and E, respectively—

(A) have undertaken coordinated activities with each other;

(B) have enhanced the ability of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families to participate in the design of and have access to needed community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance that promote self-determination, independence, productivity, and integration and inclusion in all facets of community life;

(C) have brought about advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities (including policy reform), and other actions on behalf of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families, including individuals who are traditionally unserved or underserved, particularly individuals who are members of ethnic and racial minority groups and individuals from underserved geographic areas; and

(D) have brought about advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities that affect individuals with disabilities other than individuals with developmental disabilities;

(2) information on the extent to which programs authorized under this title have addressed—

(A) protecting individuals with developmental disabilities from abuse, neglect, sexual and financial exploitation, and violations of legal and human rights, so that those individuals are at no greater risk of harm than other persons in the general population; and

(B) reports of deaths of and serious injuries to individuals with developmental disabilities; and

(3) a summary of any incidents of noncompliance of the programs authorized under this title with the provisions of this title, and corrections made or actions taken to obtain compliance.

SEC. 106. STATE CONTROL OF OPERATIONS.

Except as otherwise specifically provided, nothing in this title shall be construed as conferring on any Federal officer or employee the right to exercise any supervision or control over the administration, personnel, maintenance, or operation of any programs, services, and supports for individuals with developmental disabilities with respect to which any funds have been or may be expended under this title.

SEC. 107. EMPLOYMENT OF INDIVIDUALS WITH DISABILITIES.

As a condition of providing assistance under this title, the Secretary shall require that each recipient of such assistance take affirmative action to employ and advance in employment qualified individuals with disabilities on the same terms and conditions required with respect to the employment of such individuals under the provisions of title V of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 791 et seq.) and the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq.), that govern employment.

SEC. 108. CONSTRUCTION.

Nothing in this title shall be construed to preclude an entity funded under this title from engaging in advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities for individuals with developmental disabilities that may also have a positive impact on individuals with other disabilities.

SEC. 109. RIGHTS OF INDIVIDUALS WITH DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Congress makes the following findings respecting the rights of individuals with developmental disabilities:

(1) Individuals with developmental disabilities have a right to appropriate treatment, services, and habilitation for such disabilities, consistent with section 101(c).

(2) The treatment, services, and habitation for an individual with developmental disabilities should be designed to maximize the potential of the individual and should be provided in the setting that is least restrictive of the individual's personal liberty.

(3) The Federal Government and the States both have an obligation to ensure that public funds are provided only to institutional programs, residential programs, and other community programs, including educational programs in which individuals with developmental disabilities participate, that—

(A) provide treatment, services, and habilitation that are appropriate to the needs of such individuals; and

(B) meet minimum standards relating to—

(i) provision of care that is free of abuse, neglect, sexual and financial exploitation, and violations of legal and human rights and that subjects individuals with developmental disabilities to no greater risk of harm than others in the general population;

(ii) provision to such individuals of appropriate and sufficient medical and dental services;

(iii) prohibition of the use of physical restraint and seclusion for such an individual unless absolutely necessary to ensure the immediate physical safety of the individual or others, and prohibition of the use of such restraint and seclusion as a punishment or as a substitute for a habilitation program;

(iv) prohibition of the excessive use of chemical restraints on such individuals and the use of such restraints as punishment or as a substitute for a habilitation program or in quantities that interfere with services, treatment, or habilitation for such individuals; and

(v) provision for close relatives or guardians of such individuals to visit the individuals without prior notice.

(4) All programs for individuals with developmental disabilities should meet standards—

(A) that are designed to assure the most favorable possible outcome for those served; and

(B)(i) in the case of residential programs serving individuals in need of comprehensive health-related, habilitative, assistive technology or rehabilitative services, that are at least equivalent to those standards applicable to intermediate care facilities for the mentally retarded, promulgated in regulations of the Secretary on June 3, 1988, as appropriate, taking into account the size of the institutions and the service delivery arrangements of the facilities of the programs;

(ii) in the case of other residential programs for individuals with developmental disabilities, that assure that—

(I) care is appropriate to the needs of the individuals being served by such programs;

(II) the individuals admitted to facilities of such programs are individuals whose needs can be met through services provided by such facilities; and

(III) the facilities of such programs provide for the humane care of the residents of the facilities, are sanitary, and protect their rights; and

(iii) in the case of nonresidential programs, that assure that the care provided by such programs is appropriate to the individuals served by the programs.

(b) CLARIFICATION.—The rights of individuals with developmental disabilities described in findings made in this section shall be considered to be in addition to any constitutional or other rights otherwise afforded to all individuals.

Subtitle B—Federal Assistance to State Councils on Developmental Disabilities

SEC. 121. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this subtitle is to provide for allotments to support State Councils on Developmental Disabilities (referred to individually in this subtitle as a ''Council'') in each State to—

(1) engage in advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities that are consistent with the purpose described in section 101(b) and the policy described in section 101(c); and

(2) contribute to a coordinated, consumer- and family-centered, consumer- and family-directed, comprehensive system of community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance that enable individuals with developmental disabilities to exercise self-determination, be independent, be productive, and be integrated and included in all facets of community life.

SEC. 122. STATE ALLOTMENTS.

(a) ALLOTMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) AUTHORITY.—For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall, in accordance with regulations and this paragraph, allot the sums appropriated for such year under section 129 among the States on the basis of—

(i) the population;

(ii) the extent of need for services for individuals with developmental disabilities; and

(iii) the financial need, of the respective States.

(B) USE OF FUNDS.—Sums allotted to the States under this section shall be used to pay for the Federal share of the cost of carrying out projects in accordance with State plans approved under section 124 for the provision under such plans of services for individuals with developmental disabilities.

(2) ADJUSTMENTS.—The Secretary may make adjustments in the amounts of State allotments based on clauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of paragraph (1)(A) not more often than annually. The Secretary shall notify each State of any adjustment made under this paragraph and the percentage of the total sums appropriated under section 129 that the adjusted allotment represents not later than 6 months before the beginning of the fiscal year in which such adjustment is to take effect.

(3) MINIMUM ALLOTMENT FOR APPROPRIATIONS LESS THAN OR EQUAL TO $70,000,000.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (4), for any fiscal year the allotment under this section—

(i) to each of American Samoa, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands, or the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands may not be less than $210,000; and

(ii) to any State not described in clause (i) may not be less than $400,000.

(B) REDUCTION OF ALLOTMENT.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), if the aggregate of the amounts to be allotted to the States pursuant to subparagraph (A) for any fiscal year exceeds the total amount appropriated under section 129 for such fiscal year, the amount to be allotted to each State for such fiscal year shall be proportionately reduced.

(4) MINIMUM ALLOTMENT FOR APPROPRIATIONS IN EXCESS OF $70,000,000.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which the total amount appropriated under section 129 for a fiscal year is more than $70,000,000, the allotment under this section for such fiscal year—

(i) to each of American Samoa, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands, or the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands may not be less than $220,000; and

(ii) to any State not described in clause (i) may not be less than $450,000.

(B) REDUCTION OF ALLOTMENT.—The requirements of paragraph (3)(B) shall apply with respect to amounts to be allotted to States under subparagraph (A), in the same manner and to the same extent as such requirements apply with respect to amounts to be allotted to States under paragraph (3)(A).

(5) STATE SUPPORTS, SERVICES, AND OTHER ACTIVITIES.—In determining, for purposes of paragraph (1)(A)(ii), the extent of need in any State for services for individuals with developmental disabilities, the Secretary shall take into account the scope and extent of the services, supports, and assistance described, pursuant to section 124(c)(3)(A), in the State plan of the State.

(6) INCREASE IN ALLOTMENTS.—In any year in which the total amount appropriated under section 129 for a fiscal year exceeds the total amount appropriated under such section (or a corresponding provision) for the preceding fiscal year by a percentage greater than the most recent percentage change in the Consumer Price Index published by the Secretary of Labor under section 100(c)(1) of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720(c)(1)) (if the percentage change indicates an increase), the Secretary shall increase each of the minimum allotments described in paragraphs (3) and (4). The Secretary shall increase each minimum allotment by an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount of such minimum allotment (including any increases in such minimum allotment under this paragraph (or a corresponding provision) for prior fiscal years) as the amount that is equal to the difference between—

(A) the total amount appropriated under section 129 for the fiscal year for which the increase in the minimum allotment is being made; minus

(B) the total amount appropriated under section 129 (or a corresponding provision) for the immediately preceding fiscal year, bears to the total amount appropriated under section 129 (or a corresponding provision) for such preceding fiscal year.

(b) UNOBLIGATED FUNDS.—Any amount paid to a State for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such State for the next fiscal year for the purposes for which such amount was paid.

(c) OBLIGATION OF FUNDS.—For the purposes of this subtitle, State Interagency Agreements are considered valid obligations for the purpose of obligating Federal funds allotted to the State under this subtitle.

(d) COOPERATIVE EFFORTS BETWEEN STATES.—If a State plan approved in accordance with section 124 provides for cooperative or joint effort between or among States or agencies, public or private, in more than 1 State, portions of funds allotted to 1 or more States described in this subsection may be combined in accordance with the agreements between the States or agencies involved.

(e) REALLOTMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary determines that an amount of an allotment to a State for a period (of a fiscal year or longer) will not be required by the State during the period for the purpose for which the allotment was made, the Secretary may reallot the amount.

(2) TIMING.—The Secretary may make such a reallotment from time to time, on such date as the Secretary may fix, but not earlier than 30 days after the Secretary has published notice of the intention of the Secretary to make the reallotment in the Federal Register.

(3) AMOUNTS.—The Secretary shall reallot the amount to other States with respect to which the Secretary has not made that determination. The Secretary shall reallot the amount in proportion to the original allotments of the other States for such fiscal year, but shall reduce such proportionate amount for any of the other States to the extent the proportionate amount exceeds the sum that the Secretary estimates the State needs and will be able to use during such period.

(4) REALLOTMENT OF REDUCTIONS.—The Secretary shall similarly reallot the total of the reductions among the States whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced.

(5) TREATMENT.—Any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection for a fiscal year shall be deemed to be a part of the allotment of the State under subsection (a) for such fiscal year.

SEC. 123. PAYMENTS TO THE STATES FOR PLANNING, ADMINISTRATION, AND SERVICES.

(a) STATE PLAN EXPENDITURES.—From each State's allotments for a fiscal year under section 122, the Secretary shall pay to the State the Federal share of the cost, other than the cost for construction, incurred during such year for activities carried out under the State plan approved under section 124. The Secretary shall make such payments from time to time in advance on the basis of estimates by the Secretary of the sums the State will expend for the cost under the State plan. The Secretary shall make such adjustments as may be necessary to the payments on account of previously made underpayments or overpayments under this section.

(b) DESIGNATED STATE AGENCY EXPENDITURES.—The Secretary may make payments to a State for the portion described in section 124(c)(5)(B)(vi) in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments as the Secretary may determine.

SEC. 124. STATE PLAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any State desiring to receive assistance under this subtitle shall submit to the Secretary, and obtain approval of, a 5-year strategic State plan under this section.

(b) PLANNING CYCLE.—The plan described in subsection (a) shall be updated as appropriate during the 5-year period.

(c) STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS.—In order to be approved by the Secretary under this section, a State plan shall meet each of the following requirements:

(1) STATE COUNCIL.—The plan shall provide for the establishment and maintenance of a Council in accordance with section 125 and describe the membership of such Council.

(2) DESIGNATED STATE AGENCY.—The plan shall identify the agency or office within the State designated to support the Council in accordance with this section and section 125(d) (referred to in this subtitle as a ''designated State agency'').

(3) COMPREHENSIVE REVIEW AND ANALYSIS.—The plan shall describe the results of a comprehensive review and analysis of the extent to which services, supports, and other assistance are available to individuals with developmental disabilities and their families, and the extent of unmet needs for services, supports, and other assistance for those individuals and their families, in the State. The results of the comprehensive review and analysis shall include—

(A) a description of the services, supports, and other assistance being provided to individuals with developmental disabilities and their families under other federally assisted State programs, plans, and policies under which the State operates and in which individuals with developmental disabilities are or may be eligible to participate, including particularly programs relating to the areas of emphasis, including—

(i) medical assistance, maternal and child health care, services for children with special health care needs, children's mental health services, comprehensive health and mental health services, and institutional care options;

(ii) job training, job placement, worksite accommodation, and vocational rehabilitation, and other work assistance programs; and

(iii) social, child welfare, aging, independent living, and rehabilitation and assistive technology services, and such other services as the Secretary may specify;

(B) a description of the extent to which agencies operating such other federally assisted State programs, including activities authorized under section 101 or 102 of the Assistive Technology Act of 1998 (29 U.S.C. 3011, 3012), pursue interagency initiatives to improve and enhance community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance for individuals with developmental disabilities;

(C) an analysis of the extent to which community services and opportunities related to the areas of emphasis directly benefit individuals with developmental disabilities, especially with regard to their ability to access and use services provided in their communities, to participate in opportunities, activities, and events offered in their communities, and to contribute to community life, identifying particularly—

(i) the degree of support for individuals with developmental disabilities that are attributable to either physical impairment, mental impairment, or a combination of physical and mental impairments;

(ii) criteria for eligibility for services, including specialized services and special adaptation of generic services provided by agencies within the State, that may exclude individuals with developmental disabilities from receiving services described in this clause;

(iii) the barriers that impede full participation of members of unserved and underserved groups of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families;

(iv) the availability of assistive technology, assistive technology services, or rehabilitation technology, or information about assistive technology, assistive technology services, or rehabilitation technology to individuals with developmental disabilities;

(v) the numbers of individuals with developmental disabilities on waiting lists for services described in this subparagraph;

(vi) a description of the adequacy of current resources and projected availability of future resources to fund services described in this subparagraph;

(vii) a description of the adequacy of health care and other services, supports, and assistance that individuals with developmental disabilities who are in facilities receive (based in part on each independent review (pursuant to section 1902(a)(30)(C) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(30)(C))) of an Intermediate Care Facility (Mental Retardation) within the State, which the State shall provide to the Council not later than 30 days after the availability of the review); and

(viii) to the extent that information is available, a description of the adequacy of health care and other services, supports, and assistance that individuals with developmental disabilities who are served through home and community-based waivers (authorized under section 1915(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396n(c))) receive;

(D) a description of how entities funded under subtitles C and D, through interagency agreements or other mechanisms, collaborated with the entity funded under this subtitle in the State, each other, and other entities to contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle; and

(E) the rationale for the goals related to advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change to be undertaken by the Council to contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle.

(4) PLAN GOALS.—The plan shall focus on Council efforts to bring about the purpose of this subtitle, by—

(A) specifying 5-year goals, as developed through data driven strategic planning, for advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change related to the areas of emphasis, to be undertaken by the Council, that—

(i) are derived from the unmet needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families identified under paragraph (3); and

(ii) include a goal, for each year of the grant, to—

(I) establish or strengthen a program for the direct funding of a State self-advocacy organization led by individuals with developmental disabilities;

(II) support opportunities for individuals with developmental disabilities who are considered leaders to provide leadership training to individuals with developmental disabilities who may become leaders; and

(III) support and expand participation of individuals with developmental disabilities in cross-disability and culturally diverse leadership coalitions; and

(B) for each year of the grant, describing—

(i) the goals to be achieved through the grant, which, beginning in fiscal year 2001, shall be consistent with applicable indicators of progress described in section 104(a)(3);

(ii) the strategies to be used in achieving each goal; and

(iii) the method to be used to determine if each goal has been achieved.

(5) ASSURANCES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The plan shall contain or be supported by assurances and information described in subparagraphs (B) through (N) that are satisfactory to the Secretary.

(B) USE OF FUNDS.—With respect to the funds paid to the State under section 122, the plan shall provide assurances that—

(i) not less than 70 percent of such funds will be expended for activities related to the goals described in paragraph (4);

(ii) such funds will contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle in various political subdivisions of the State;

(iii) such funds will be used to supplement, and not supplant, the non-Federal funds that would otherwise be made available for the purposes for which the funds paid under section 122 are provided;

(iv) such funds will be used to complement and augment rather than duplicate or replace services for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families who are eligible for Federal assistance under other State programs;

(v) part of such funds will be made available by the State to public or private entities;

(vi) at the request of any State, a portion of such funds provided to such State under this subtitle for any fiscal year shall be available to pay up to ½ (or the entire amount if the Council is the designated State agency) of the expenditures found to be necessary by the Secretary for the proper and efficient exercise of the functions of the designated State agency, except that not more than 5 percent of such funds provided to such State for any fiscal year, or $50,000, whichever is less, shall be made available for total expenditures for such purpose by the designated State agency; and

(vii) not more than 20 percent of such funds will be allocated to the designated State agency for service demonstrations by such agency that—

(I) contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle; and

(II) are explicitly authorized by the Council.

(C) STATE FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION.—The plan shall provide assurances that there will be reasonable State financial participation in the cost of carrying out the plan.

(D) CONFLICT OF INTEREST.—The plan shall provide an assurance that no member of such Council will cast a vote on any matter that would provide direct financial benefit to the member or otherwise give the appearance of a conflict of interest.

(E) URBAN AND RURAL POVERTY AREAS.—The plan shall provide assurances that special financial and technical assistance will be given to organizations that provide community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance to individuals with developmental disabilities who live in areas designated as urban or rural poverty areas.

(F) PROGRAM ACCESSIBILITY STANDARDS.—The plan shall provide assurances that programs, projects, and activities funded under the plan, and the buildings in which such programs, projects, and activities are operated, will meet standards prescribed by the Secretary in regulations and all applicable Federal and State accessibility standards, including accessibility requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq.), section 508 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794d), and the Fair Housing Act (42 U.S.C. 3601 et seq.).

(G) INDIVIDUALIZED SERVICES.—The plan shall provide assurances that any direct services provided to individuals with developmental disabilities and funded under the plan will be provided in an individualized manner, consistent with the unique strengths, resources, priorities, concerns, abilities, and capabilities of such individual.

(H) HUMAN RIGHTS.—The plan shall provide assurances that the human rights of the individuals with developmental disabilities (especially individuals without familial protection) who are receiving services under programs assisted under this subtitle will be protected consistent with section 109 (relating to rights of individuals with developmental disabilities).

(I) MINORITY PARTICIPATION.—The plan shall provide assurances that the State has taken affirmative steps to assure that participation in programs funded under this subtitle is geographically representative of the State, and reflects the diversity of the State with respect to race and ethnicity.

(J) EMPLOYEE PROTECTIONS.—The plan shall provide assurances that fair and equitable arrangements (as determined by the Secretary after consultation with the Secretary of Labor) will be provided to protect the interests of employees affected by actions taken under the plan to provide community living activities, including arrangements designed to preserve employee rights and benefits and provide training and retraining of such employees where necessary, and arrangements under which maximum efforts will be made to guarantee the employment of such employees.

(K) STAFF ASSIGNMENTS.—The plan shall provide assurances that the staff and other personnel of the Council, while working for the Council, will be responsible solely for assisting the Council in carrying out the duties of the Council under this subtitle and will not be assigned duties by the designated State agency, or any other agency, office, or entity of the State.

(L) NONINTERFERENCE.—The plan shall provide assurances that the designated State agency, and any other agency, office, or entity of the State, will not interfere with the advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities, budget, personnel, State plan development, or plan implementation of the Council, except that the designated State agency shall have the authority necessary to carry out the responsibilities described in section 125(d)(3).

(M) STATE QUALITY ASSURANCE.—The plan shall provide assurances that the Council will participate in the planning, design or redesign, and monitoring of State quality assurance systems that affect individuals with developmental disabilities.

(N) OTHER ASSURANCES.—The plan shall contain such additional information and assurances as the Secretary may find necessary to carry out the provisions (including the purpose) of this subtitle.

(d) PUBLIC INPUT AND REVIEW, SUBMISSION, AND APPROVAL.—

(1) PUBLIC INPUT AND REVIEW.—The plan shall be based on public input. The Council shall make the plan available for public review and comment, after providing appropriate and sufficient notice in accessible formats of the opportunity for such review and comment. The Council shall revise the plan to take into account and respond to significant comments.

(2) CONSULTATION WITH THE DESIGNATED STATE AGENCY.—Before the plan is submitted to the Secretary, the Council shall consult with the designated State agency to ensure that the State plan is consistent with State law and to obtain appropriate State plan assurances.

(3) PLAN APPROVAL.—The Secretary shall approve any State plan and, as appropriate, amendments of such plan that comply with the provisions of subsections (a), (b), and (c) and this subsection. The Secretary may take final action to disapprove a State plan after providing reasonable notice and an opportunity for a hearing to the State.

SEC. 125. STATE COUNCILS ON DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES AND DESIGNATED STATE AGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each State that receives assistance under this subtitle shall establish and maintain a Council to undertake advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities (consistent with subsections (b) and (c) of section 101) that contribute to a coordinated, consumer- and family-centered, consumer- and family-directed, comprehensive system of community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance that contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle. The Council shall have the authority to fulfill the responsibilities described in subsection (c).

(b) COUNCIL MEMBERSHIP.—

(1) COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The members of the Council of a State shall be appointed by the Governor of the State from among the residents of that State.

(B) RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Governor shall select members of the Council, at the discretion of the Governor, after soliciting recommendations from organizations representing a broad range of individuals with developmental disabilities and individuals interested in individuals with developmental disabilities, including the non-State agency members of the Council. The Council may, at the initiative of the Council, or on the request of the Governor, coordinate Council and public input to the Governor regarding all recommendations.

(C) REPRESENTATION.—The membership of the Council shall be geographically representative of the State and reflect the diversity of the State with respect to race and ethnicity.

(2) MEMBERSHIP ROTATION.—The Governor shall make appropriate provisions to rotate the membership of the Council. Such provisions shall allow members to continue to serve on the Council until such members' successors are appointed. The Council shall notify the Governor regarding membership requirements of the Council, and shall notify the Governor when vacancies on the Council remain unfilled for a significant period of time.

(3) REPRESENTATION OF INDIVIDUALS WITH DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES.—Not less than 60 percent of the membership of each Council shall consist of individuals who are—

(A)(i) individuals with developmental disabilities;

(ii) parents or guardians of children with developmental disabilities; or

(iii) immediate relatives or guardians of adults with mentally impairing developmental disabilities who cannot advocate for themselves; and

(B) not employees of a State agency that receives funds or provides services under this subtitle, and who are not managing employees (as defined in section 1126(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320a–5(b)) of any other entity that receives funds or provides services under this subtitle.

(4) REPRESENTATION OF AGENCIES AND ORGANIZATIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Each Council shall include—

(i) representatives of relevant State entities, including—

(I) State entities that administer funds provided under Federal laws related to individuals with disabilities, including the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 701 et seq.), the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.), the Older Americans Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 3001 et seq.), and titles V and XIX of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 701 et seq. and 1396 et seq.);

(II) Centers in the State; and

(III) the State protection and advocacy system; and

(ii) representatives, at all times, of local and nongovernmental agencies, and private nonprofit groups concerned with services for individuals with developmental disabilities in the State in which such agencies and groups are located.

(B) AUTHORITY AND LIMITATIONS.—The representatives described in subparagraph (A) shall—

(i) have sufficient authority to engage in policy planning and implementation on behalf of the department, agency, or program such representatives represent; and

(ii) recuse themselves from any discussion of grants or contracts for which such representatives' departments, agencies, or programs are grantees, contractors, or applicants and comply with the conflict of interest assurance requirement under section 124(c)(5)(D).

(5) COMPOSITION OF MEMBERSHIP WITH DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES.—Of the members of the Council described in paragraph (3)—

(A) ⅓ shall be individuals with developmental disabilities described in paragraph (3)(A)(i);

(B) ⅓ shall be parents or guardians of children with developmental disabilities described in paragraph (3)(A)(ii), or immediate relatives or guardians of adults with developmental disabilities described in paragraph (3)(A)(iii); and

(C) ⅓ shall be a combination of individuals described in paragraph (3)(A).

(6) INSTITUTIONALIZED INDIVIDUALS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Of the members of the Council described in paragraph (5), at least 1 shall be an immediate relative or guardian of an individual with a developmental disability who resides or previously resided in an institution or shall be an individual with a developmental disability who resides or previously resided in an institution.

(B) LIMITATION.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to a State if such an individual does not reside in that State.

(c) COUNCIL RESPONSIBILITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—A Council, through Council members, staff, consultants, contractors, or subgrantees, shall have the responsibilities described in paragraphs (2) through (10).

(2) ADVOCACY, CAPACITY BUILDING, AND SYSTEMIC CHANGE ACTIVITIES.—The Council shall serve as an advocate for individuals with developmental disabilities and conduct or support programs, projects, and activities that carry out the purpose of this subtitle.

(3) EXAMINATION OF GOALS.—At the end of each grant year, each Council shall—

(A) determine the extent to which each goal of the Council was achieved for that year;

(B) determine to the extent that each goal was not achieved, the factors that impeded the achievement;

(C) determine needs that require amendment of the 5-year strategic State plan required under section 124;

(D) separately determine the information on the self-advocacy goal described in section 124(c)(4)(A)(ii); and

(E) determine customer satisfaction with Council supported or conducted activities.

(4) STATE PLAN DEVELOPMENT.—The Council shall develop the State plan and submit the State plan to the Secretary after consultation with the designated State agency under the State plan. Such consultation shall be solely for the purposes of obtaining State assurances and ensuring consistency of the plan with State law.

(5) STATE PLAN IMPLEMENTATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Council shall implement the State plan by conducting and supporting advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities such as those described in subparagraphs (B) through (L).

(B) OUTREACH.—The Council may support and conduct outreach activities to identify individuals with developmental disabilities and their families who otherwise might not come to the attention of the Council and assist and enable the individuals and families to obtain services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance, including access to special adaptation of generic community services or specialized services.

(C) TRAINING.—The Council may support and conduct training for persons who are individuals with developmental disabilities, their families, and personnel (including professionals, paraprofessionals, students, volunteers, and other community members) to enable such persons to obtain access to, or to provide, community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance, including special adaptation of generic community services or specialized services for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. To the extent that the Council supports or conducts training activities under this subparagraph, such activities shall contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle.

(D) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Council may support and conduct technical assistance activities to assist public and private entities to contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle.

(E) SUPPORTING AND EDUCATING COMMUNITIES.—The Council may support and conduct activities to assist neighborhoods and communities to respond positively to individuals with developmental disabilities and their families—

(i) by encouraging local networks to provide informal and formal supports;

(ii) through education; and

(iii) by enabling neighborhoods and communities to offer such individuals and their families access to and use of services, resources, and opportunities.

(F) INTERAGENCY COLLABORATION AND COORDINATION.—The Council may support and conduct activities to promote interagency collaboration and coordination to better serve, support, assist, or advocate for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families.

(G) COORDINATION WITH RELATED COUNCILS, COMMITTEES, AND PROGRAMS.—The Council may support and conduct activities to enhance coordination of services with—

(i) other councils, entities, or committees, authorized by Federal or State law, concerning individuals with disabilities (such as the State interagency coordinating council established under subtitle C of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1431 et seq.), the State Rehabilitation Council and the Statewide Independent Living Council established under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 701 et seq.), the State mental health planning council established under subtitle B of title XIX of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x–1 et seq.), and the activities authorized under section 101 or 102 of the Assistive Technology Act of 1998 (29 U.S.C. 3011, 3012), and entities carrying out other similar councils, entities, or committees);

(ii) parent training and information centers under part D of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.) and other entities carrying out federally funded projects that assist parents of children with disabilities; and

(iii) other groups interested in advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities to benefit individuals with disabilities.

(H) BARRIER ELIMINATION, SYSTEMS DESIGN AND REDESIGN.—The Council may support and conduct activities to eliminate barriers to assess and use of community services by individuals with developmental disabilities, enhance systems design and redesign, and enhance citizen participation to address issues identified in the State plan.

(I) COALITION DEVELOPMENT AND CITIZEN PARTICIPATION.—The Council may support and conduct activities to educate the public about the capabilities, preferences, and needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families and to develop and support coalitions that support the policy agenda of the Council, including training in self-advocacy, education of policymakers, and citizen leadership skills.

(J) INFORMING POLICYMAKERS.—The Council may support and conduct activities to provide information to policymakers by supporting and conducting studies and analyses, gathering information, and developing and disseminating model policies and procedures, information, approaches, strategies, findings, conclusions, and recommendations. The Council may provide the information directly to Federal, State, and local policymakers, including Congress, the Federal executive branch, the Governors, State legislatures, and State agencies, in order to increase the ability of such policymakers to offer opportunities and to enhance or adapt generic services to meet the needs of, or provide specialized services to, individuals with developmental disabilities and their families.

(K) DEMONSTRATION OF NEW APPROACHES TO SERVICES AND SUPPORTS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The Council may support and conduct, on a time-limited basis, activities to demonstrate new approaches to serving individuals with developmental disabilities that are a part of an overall strategy for systemic change. The strategy may involve the education of policymakers and the public about how to deliver effectively, to individuals with developmental disabilities and their families, services, supports, and assistance that contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle.

(ii) SOURCES OF FUNDING.—The Council may carry out this subparagraph by supporting and conducting demonstration activities through sources of funding other than funding provided under this subtitle, and by assisting entities conducting demonstration activities to develop strategies for securing funding from other sources.

(L) OTHER ACTIVITIES.—The Council may support and conduct other advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities to promote the development of a coordinated, consumer- and family-centered, consumer- and family-directed, comprehensive system of community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance that contribute to the achievement of the purpose of this subtitle.

(6) REVIEW OF DESIGNATED STATE AGENCY.—The Council shall periodically review the designated State agency and activities carried out under this subtitle by the designated State agency and make any recommendations for change to the Governor.

(7) REPORTS.—Beginning in fiscal year 2001, the Council shall annually prepare and transmit to the Secretary a report. Each report shall be in a form prescribed by the Secretary by regulation under section 104(b). Each report shall contain information about the progress made by the Council in achieving the goals of the Council (as specified in section 124(c)(4)), including—

(A) a description of the extent to which the goals were achieved;

(B) a description of the strategies that contributed to achieving the goals;

(C) to the extent to which the goals were not achieved, a description of factors that impeded the achievement;

(D) separate information on the self-advocacy goal described in section 124(c)(4)(A)(ii);

(E)(i) as appropriate, an update on the results of the comprehensive review and analysis described in section 124(c)(3); and

(ii) information on consumer satisfaction with Council supported or conducted activities;

(F)(i) a description of the adequacy of health care and other services, supports, and assistance that individuals with developmental disabilities in Intermediate Care Facilities (Mental Retardation) receive; and

(ii) a description of the adequacy of health care and other services, supports, and assistance that individuals with developmental disabilities served through home and community-based waivers (authorized under section 1915(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396n(c)) receive;

(G) an accounting of the manner in which funds paid to the State under this subtitle for a fiscal year were expended;

(H) a description of—

(i) resources made available to carry out activities to assist individuals with developmental disabilities that are directly attributable to Council actions; and

(ii) resources made available for such activities that are undertaken by the Council in collaboration with other entities; and

(I) a description of the method by which the Council will widely disseminate the annual report to affected constituencies and the general public and will assure that the report is available in accessible formats.

(8) BUDGET.—Each Council shall prepare, approve, and implement a budget using amounts paid to the State under this subtitle to fund and implement all programs, projects, and activities carried out under this subtitle, including—

(A)(i) conducting such hearings and forums as the Council may determine to be necessary to carry out the duties of the Council; and

(ii) as determined in Council policy—

(I) reimbursing members of the Council for reasonable and necessary expenses (including expenses for child care and personal assistance services) for attending Council meetings and performing Council duties;

(II) paying a stipend to a member of the Council, if such member is not employed or must forfeit wages from other employment, to attend Council meetings and perform other Council duties;

(III) supporting Council member and staff travel to authorized training and technical assistance activities including in-service training and leadership development activities; and

(IV) carrying out appropriate subcontracting activities;

(B) hiring and maintaining such numbers and types of staff (qualified by training and experience) and obtaining the services of such professional, consulting, technical, and clerical staff (qualified by training and experience), consistent with State law, as the Council determines to be necessary to carry out the functions of the Council under this subtitle, except that such State shall not apply hiring freezes, reductions in force, prohibitions on travel, or other policies to the staff of the Council, to the extent that such policies would impact the staff or functions funded with Federal funds, or would prevent the Council from carrying out the functions of the Council under this subtitle; and

(C) directing the expenditure of funds for grants, contracts, interagency agreements that are binding contracts, and other activities authorized by the State plan approved under section 124.

(9) STAFF HIRING AND SUPERVISION.—The Council shall, consistent with State law, recruit and hire a Director of the Council, should the position of Director become vacant, and supervise and annually evaluate the Director. The Director shall hire, supervise, and annually evaluate the staff of the Council. Council recruitment, hiring, and dismissal of staff shall be conducted in a manner consistent with Federal and State nondiscrimination laws. Dismissal of personnel shall be conducted in a manner consistent with State law and personnel policies.

(10) STAFF ASSIGNMENTS.—The staff of the Council, while working for the Council, shall be responsible solely for assisting the Council in carrying out the duties of the Council under this subtitle and shall not be assigned duties by the designated State agency or any other agency or entity of the State.

(11) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize a Council to direct, control, or exercise any policymaking authority or administrative authority over any program assisted under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) or the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.).

(d) DESIGNATED STATE AGENCY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each State that receives assistance under this subtitle shall designate a State agency that shall, on behalf of the State, provide support to the Council. After the date of enactment of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act Amendments of 1994 (Public Law 103–230), any designation of a State agency under this paragraph shall be made in accordance with the requirements of this subsection.

(2) DESIGNATION.—

(A) TYPE OF AGENCY.—Except as provided in this subsection, the designated State agency shall be—

(i) the Council if such Council may be the designated State agency under the laws of the State;

(ii) a State agency that does not provide or pay for services for individuals with developmental disabilities; or

(iii) a State office, including the immediate office of the Governor of the State or a State planning office.

(B) CONDITIONS FOR CONTINUATION OF STATE SERVICE AGENCY DESIGNATION.—

(i) DESIGNATION BEFORE ENACTMENT.—If a State agency that provides or pays for services for individuals with developmental disabilities was a designated State agency for purposes of part B of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act on the date of enactment of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act Amendments of 1994, and the Governor of the State (or the legislature, where appropriate and in accordance with State law) determines prior to June 30, 1994, not to change the designation of such agency, such agency may continue to be a designated State agency for purposes of this subtitle.

(ii) CRITERIA FOR CONTINUED DESIGNATION.—The determination, at the discretion of the Governor (or the legislature, as the case may be), shall be made after—

(I) the Governor has considered the comments and recommendations of the general public and a majority of the non-State agency members of the Council with respect to the designation of such State agency; and

(II) the Governor (or the legislature, as the case may be) has made an independent assessment that the designation of such agency will not interfere with the budget, personnel, priorities, or other action of the Council, and the ability of the Council to serve as an independent advocate for individuals with developmental disabilities.

(C) REVIEW OF DESIGNATION.—The Council may request a review of and change in the designation of the designated State agency by the Governor (or the legislature, as the case may be). The Council shall provide documentation concerning the reason the Council desires a change to be made and make a recommendation to the Governor (or the legislature, as the case may be) regarding a preferred designated State agency.

(D) APPEAL OF DESIGNATION.—After the review is completed under subparagraph (C), a majority of the non-State agency members of the Council may appeal to the Secretary for a review of and change in the designation of the designated State agency if the ability of the Council to serve as an independent advocate is not assured because of the actions or inactions of the designated State agency.

(3) RESPONSIBILITIES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The designated State agency shall, on behalf of the State, have the responsibilities described in subparagraphs (B) through (G).

(B) SUPPORT SERVICES.—The designated State agency shall provide required assurances and support services as requested by and negotiated with the Council.

(C) FISCAL RESPONSIBILITIES.—The designated State agency shall—

(i) receive, account for, and disburse funds under this subtitle based on the State plan required in section 124; and

(ii) provide for such fiscal control and fund accounting procedures as may be necessary to assure the proper disbursement of, and accounting for, funds paid to the State under this subtitle.

(D) RECORDS, ACCESS, AND FINANCIAL REPORTS.—The designated State agency shall keep and provide access to such records as the Secretary and the Council may determine to be necessary. The designated State agency, if other than the Council, shall provide timely financial reports at the request of the Council regarding the status of expenditures, obligations, and liquidation by the agency or the Council, and the use of the Federal and non-Federal shares described in section 126, by the agency or the Council.

(E) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The designated State agency, if other than the Council, shall provide the required non-Federal share described in section 126(c).

(F) ASSURANCES.—The designated State agency shall assist the Council in obtaining the appropriate State plan assurances and in ensuring that the plan is consistent with State law.

(G) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—On the request of the Council, the designated State agency shall enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Council delineating the roles and responsibilities of the designated State agency.

(4) USE OF FUNDS FOR DESIGNATED STATE AGENCY RESPONSIBILITIES.—

(A) CONDITION FOR FEDERAL FUNDING.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide amounts to a State under section 124(c)(5)(B)(vi) for a fiscal year only if the State expends an amount from State sources for carrying out the responsibilities of the designated State agency under paragraph (3) for the fiscal year that is not less than the total amount the State expended from such sources for carrying out similar responsibilities for the previous fiscal year.

(ii) EXCEPTION.—Clause (i) shall not apply in a year in which the Council is the designated State agency.

(B) SUPPORT SERVICES PROVIDED BY OTHER AGENCIES.—With the agreement of the designated State agency, the Council may use or contract with agencies other than the designated State agency to perform the functions of the designated State agency.

SEC. 126. FEDERAL AND NON-FEDERAL SHARE.

(a) AGGREGATE COST.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), the Federal share of the cost of all projects in a State supported by an allotment to the State under this subtitle may not be more than 75 percent of the aggregate necessary cost of such projects, as determined by the Secretary.

(2) URBAN OR RURAL POVERTY AREAS.—In the case of projects whose activities or products target individuals with developmental disabilities who live in urban or rural poverty areas, as determined by the Secretary, the Federal share of the cost of all such projects may not be more than 90 percent of the aggregate necessary cost of such projects, as determined by the Secretary.

(3) STATE PLAN ACTIVITIES.—In the case of projects undertaken by the Council or Council staff to implement State plan activities, the Federal share of the cost of all such projects may be not more than 100 percent of the aggregate necessary cost of such activities.

(b) NONDUPLICATION.—In determining the amount of any State's Federal share of the cost of such projects incurred by such State under a State plan approved under section 124, the Secretary shall not consider—

(1) any portion of such cost that is financed by Federal funds provided under any provision of law other than section 122; and

(2) the amount of any non-Federal funds required to be expended as a condition of receipt of the Federal funds described in paragraph (1).

(c) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—

(1) IN-KIND CONTRIBUTIONS.—The non-Federal share of the cost of any project supported by an allotment under this subtitle may be provided in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services.

(2) CONTRIBUTIONS OF POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS AND PUBLIC OR PRIVATE ENTITIES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Contributions to projects by a political subdivision of a State or by a public or private entity under an agreement with the State shall, subject to such limitations and conditions as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe under section 104(b), be considered to be contributions by such State, in the case of a project supported under this subtitle.

(B) STATE CONTRIBUTIONS.—State contributions, including contributions by the designated State agency to provide support services to the Council pursuant to section 125(d)(4), may be counted as part of such State's non-Federal share of the cost of projects supported under this subtitle.

(3) VARIATIONS OF THE NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share required of each recipient of a grant from a Council under this subtitle may vary.

SEC. 127. WITHHOLDING OF PAYMENTS FOR PLANNING, ADMINISTRATION, AND SERVICES.

Whenever the Secretary, after providing reasonable notice and an opportunity for a hearing to the Council and the designated State agency, finds that—

(1) the Council or agency has failed to comply substantially with any of the provisions required by section 124 to be included in the State plan, particularly provisions required by paragraphs (4)(A) and (5)(B)(vii) of section 124(c), or with any of the provisions required by section 125(b)(3); or

(2) the Council or agency has failed to comply substantially with any regulations of the Secretary that are applicable to this subtitle, the Secretary shall notify such Council and agency that the Secretary will not make further payments to the State under section 122 (or, in the discretion of the Secretary, that further payments to the State under section 122 for activities for which there is such failure), until the Secretary is satisfied that there will no longer be such failure. Until the Secretary is so satisfied, the Secretary shall make no further payments to the State under section 122, or shall limit further payments under section 122 to such State to activities for which there is no such failure.

SEC. 128. APPEALS BY STATES.

(a) APPEAL.—If any State is dissatisfied with the Secretary's action under section 124(d)(3) or 127, such State may appeal to the United States court of appeals for the circuit in which such State is located, by filing a petition with such court not later than 60 days after such action.

(b) FILING.—The clerk of the court shall transmit promptly a copy of the petition to the Secretary, or any officer designated by the Secretary for that purpose. The Secretary shall file promptly with the court the record of the proceedings on which the Secretary based the action, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code.

(c) JURISDICTION.—Upon the filing of the petition, the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm the action of the Secretary or to set the action aside, in whole or in part, temporarily or permanently. Until the filing of the record, the Secretary may modify or set aside the order of the Secretary relating to the action.

(d) FINDINGS AND REMAND.—The findings of the Secretary about the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, but the court, for good cause shown, may remand the case involved to the Secretary for further proceedings to take further evidence. On remand, the Secretary may make new or modified findings of fact and may modify the previous action of the Secretary, and shall file with the court the record of the further proceedings. Such new or modified findings of fact shall likewise be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence.

(e) FINALITY.—The judgment of the court affirming or setting aside, in whole or in part, any action of the Secretary shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28, United States Code.

(f) EFFECT.—The commencement of proceedings under this section shall not, unless so specifically ordered by a court, operate as a stay of the Secretary's action.

SEC. 129. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) FUNDING FOR STATE ALLOTMENTS.—Except as described in subsection (b), there are authorized to be appropriated for allotments under section 122 $76,000,000 for fiscal year 2000 and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2006.

(b) RESERVATION FOR TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—

(1) LOWER APPROPRIATION YEARS.—For any fiscal year for which the amount appropriated under subsection (a) is less than $76,000,000, the Secretary shall reserve funds in accordance with section 163(c) to provide technical assistance to entities funded under this subtitle.

(2) HIGHER APPROPRIATION YEARS.—For any fiscal year for which the amount appropriated under subsection (a) is not less than $76,000,000, the Secretary shall reserve not less than $300,000 and not more than 1 percent of the amount appropriated under subsection (a) to provide technical assistance to entities funded under this subtitle.

Subtitle C—Protection and Advocacy of Individual Rights

SEC. 141. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this subtitle is to provide for allotments to support a protection and advocacy system (referred to in this subtitle as a ''system'') in each State to protect the legal and human rights of individuals with developmental disabilities in accordance with this subtitle.

SEC. 142. ALLOTMENTS AND PAYMENTS.

(a) ALLOTMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To assist States in meeting the requirements of section 143(a), the Secretary shall allot to the States the amounts appropriated under section 145 and not reserved under paragraph (6). Allotments and reallotments of such sums shall be made on the same basis as the allotments and reallotments are made under subsections (a)(1)(A) and (e) of section 122, except as provided in paragraph (2).

(2) MINIMUM ALLOTMENTS.—In any case in which—

(A) the total amount appropriated under section 145 for a fiscal year is not less than $20,000,000, the allotment under paragraph (1) for such fiscal year—

(i) to each of American Samoa, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands may not be less than $107,000; and

(ii) to any State not described in clause (i) may not be less than $200,000; or

(B) the total amount appropriated under section 145 for a fiscal year is less than $20,000,000, the allotment under paragraph (1) for such fiscal year—

(i) to each of American Samoa, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands may not be less than $80,000; and

(ii) to any State not described in clause (i) may not be less than $150,000.

(3) REDUCTION OF ALLOTMENT.—Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2), if the aggregate of the amounts to be allotted to the States pursuant to such paragraphs for any fiscal year exceeds the total amount appropriated for such allotments under section 145 for such fiscal year, the amount to be allotted to each State for such fiscal year shall be proportionately reduced.

(4) INCREASE IN ALLOTMENTS.—In any year in which the total amount appropriated under section 145 for a fiscal year exceeds the total amount appropriated under such section (or a corresponding provision) for the preceding fiscal year by a percentage greater than the most recent percentage change in the Consumer Price Index published by the Secretary of Labor under section 100(c)(1) of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720(c)(1)) (if the percentage change indicates an increase), the Secretary shall increase each of the minimum allotments described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (2). The Secretary shall increase each minimum allotment by an amount that bears the same ratio to the amount of such minimum allotment (including any increases in such minimum allotment under this paragraph (or a corresponding provision) for prior fiscal years) as the amount that is equal to the difference between—

(A) the total amount appropriated under section 145 for the fiscal year for which the increase in the minimum allotment is being made; minus

(B) the total amount appropriated under section 145 (or a corresponding provision) for the immediately preceding fiscal year, bears to the total amount appropriated under section 145 (or a corresponding provision) for such preceding fiscal year.

(5) MONITORING THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE SYSTEM.—In a State in which the system is housed in a State agency, the State may use not more than 5 percent of any allotment under this subsection for the costs of monitoring the administration of the system required under section 143(a).

(6) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND AMERICAN INDIAN CONSORTIUM.—In any case in which the total amount appropriated under section 145 for a fiscal year is more than $24,500,000, the Secretary shall—

(A) use not more than 2 percent of the amount appropriated to provide technical assistance to eligible systems with respect to activities carried out under this subtitle (consistent with requests by such systems for such assistance for the year); and

(B) provide a grant in accordance with section 143(b), and in an amount described in paragraph (2)(A)(i), to an American Indian consortium to provide protection and advocacy services.

(b) PAYMENT TO SYSTEMS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall pay directly to any system in a State that complies with the provisions of this subtitle the amount of the allotment made for the State under this section, unless the system specifies otherwise.

(c) UNOBLIGATED FUNDS.—Any amount paid to a system under this subtitle for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such system for the next fiscal year, for the purposes for which such amount was paid.

SEC. 143. SYSTEM REQUIRED.

(a) SYSTEM REQUIRED.—In order for a State to receive an allotment under subtitle B or this subtitle—

(1) the State shall have in effect a system to protect and advocate the rights of individuals with developmental disabilities;

(2) such system shall—

(A) have the authority to—

(i) pursue legal, administrative, and other appropriate remedies or approaches to ensure the protection of, and advocacy for, the rights of such individuals within the State who are or who may be eligible for treatment, services, or habilitation, or who are being considered for a change in living arrangements, with particular attention to members of ethnic and racial minority groups; and

(ii) provide information on and referral to programs and services addressing the needs of individuals with developmental disabilities;

(B) have the authority to investigate incidents of abuse and neglect of individuals with developmental disabilities if the incidents are reported to the system or if there is probable cause to believe that the incidents occurred;

(C) on an annual basis, develop, submit to the Secretary, and take action with regard to goals (each of which is related to 1 or more areas of emphasis) and priorities, developed through data driven strategic planning, for the system's activities;

(D) on an annual basis, provide to the public, including individuals with developmental disabilities attributable to either physical impairment, mental impairment, or a combination of physical and mental impairment, and their representatives, and as appropriate, non-State agency representatives of the State Councils on Developmental Disabilities, and Centers, in the State, an opportunity to comment on—

(i) the goals and priorities established by the system and the rationale for the establishment of such goals; and

(ii) the activities of the system, including the coordination of services with the entities carrying out advocacy programs under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 701 et seq.), the Older Americans Act of 1965 (42 U.S.C. 3001 et seq.), and the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 10801 et seq.), and with entities carrying out other related programs, including the parent training and information centers funded under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1400 et seq.), and activities authorized under section 101 or 102 of the Assistive Technology Act of 1998 (29 U.S.C. 3011, 3012);

(E) establish a grievance procedure for clients or prospective clients of the system to ensure that individuals with developmental disabilities have full access to services of the system;

(F) not be administered by the State Council on Developmental Disabilities;

(G) be independent of any agency that provides treatment, services, or habilitation to individuals with developmental disabilities;

(H) have access at reasonable times to any individual with a developmental disability in a location in which services, supports, and other assistance are provided to such an individual, in order to carry out the purpose of this subtitle;

(I) have access to all records of—

(i) any individual with a developmental disability who is a client of the system if such individual, or the legal guardian, conservator, or other legal representative of such individual, has authorized the system to have such access;

(ii) any individual with a developmental disability, in a situation in which—

(I) the individual, by reason of such individual's mental or physical condition, is unable to authorize the system to have such access;

(II) the individual does not have a legal guardian, conservator, or other legal representative, or the legal guardian of the individual is the State; and

(III) a complaint has been received by the system about the individual with regard to the status or treatment of the individual or, as a result of monitoring or other activities, there is probable cause to believe that such individual has been subject to abuse or neglect; and

(iii) any individual with a developmental disability, in a situation in which—

(I) the individual has a legal guardian, conservator, or other legal representative;

(II) a complaint has been received by the system about the individual with regard to the status or treatment of the individual or, as a result of monitoring or other activities, there is probable cause to believe that such individual has been subject to abuse or neglect;

(III) such representative has been contacted by such system, upon receipt of the name and address of such representative;

(IV) such system has offered assistance to such representative to resolve the situation; and

(V) such representative has failed or refused to act on behalf of the individual;

(J)(i) have access to the records of individuals described in subparagraphs (B) and (I), and other records that are relevant to conducting an investigation, under the circumstances described in those subparagraphs, not later than 3 business days after the system makes a written request for the records involved; and

(ii) have immediate access, not later than 24 hours after the system makes such a request, to the records without consent from another party, in a situation in which services, supports, and other assistance are provided to an individual with a developmental disability—

(I) if the system determines there is probable cause to believe that the health or safety of the individual is in serious and immediate jeopardy; or

(II) in any case of death of an individual with a developmental disability;

(K) hire and maintain sufficient numbers and types of staff (qualified by training and experience) to carry out such system's functions, except that the State involved shall not apply hiring freezes, reductions in force, prohibitions on travel, or other policies to the staff of the system, to the extent that such policies would impact the staff or functions of the system funded with Federal funds or would prevent the system from carrying out the functions of the system under this subtitle;

(L) have the authority to educate policymakers; and

(M) provide assurances to the Secretary that funds allotted to the State under section 142 will be used to supplement, and not supplant, the non-Federal funds that would otherwise be made available for the purposes for which the allotted funds are provided;

(3) to the extent that information is available, the State shall provide to the system—

(A) a copy of each independent review, pursuant to section 1902(a)(30)(C) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(30)(C)), of an Intermediate Care Facility (Mental Retardation) within the State, not later than 30 days after the availability of such a review; and

(B) information about the adequacy of health care and other services, supports, and assistance that individuals with developmental disabilities who are served through home and community-based waivers (authorized under section 1915(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396n(c))) receive; and

(4) the agency implementing the system shall not be redesignated unless—

(A) there is good cause for the redesignation;

(B) the State has given the agency notice of the intention to make such redesignation, including notice regarding the good cause for such redesignation, and given the agency an opportunity to respond to the assertion that good cause has been shown;

(C) the State has given timely notice and an opportunity for public comment in an accessible format to individuals with developmental disabilities or their representatives; and

(D) the system has an opportunity to appeal the redesignation to the Secretary, on the basis that the redesignation was not for good cause.

(b) AMERICAN INDIAN CONSORTIUM.—Upon application to the Secretary, an American Indian consortium established to provide protection and advocacy services under this subtitle, shall receive funding pursuant to section 142(a)(6) to provide the services. Such consortium shall be considered to be a system for purposes of this subtitle and shall coordinate the services with other systems serving the same geographic area. The tribal council that designates the consortium shall carry out the responsibilities and exercise the authorities specified for a State in this subtitle, with regard to the consortium.

(c) RECORD.—In this section, the term ''record'' includes—

(1) a report prepared or received by any staff at any location at which services, supports, or other assistance is provided to individuals with developmental disabilities;

(2) a report prepared by an agency or staff person charged with investigating reports of incidents of abuse or neglect, injury, or death occurring at such location, that describes such incidents and the steps taken to investigate such incidents; and

(3) a discharge planning record.

SEC. 144. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) GOVERNING BOARD.—In a State in which the system described in section 143 is organized as a private nonprofit entity with a multimember governing board, or a public system with a multimember governing board, such governing board shall be selected according to the policies and procedures of the system, except that—

(1)(A) the governing board shall be composed of members who broadly represent or are knowledgeable about the needs of the individuals served by the system;

(B) a majority of the members of the board shall be—

(i) individuals with disabilities, including individuals with developmental disabilities, who are eligible for services, or have received or are receiving services through the system; or

(ii) parents, family members, guardians, advocates, or authorized representatives of individuals referred to in clause (i); and

(C) the board may include a representative of the State Council on Developmental Disabilities, the Centers in the State, and the self-advocacy organization described in section 124(c)(4)(A)(ii)(I);

(2) not more than ⅓ of the members of the governing board may be appointed by the chief executive officer of the State involved, in the case of any State in which such officer has the authority to appoint members of the board;

(3) the membership of the governing board shall be subject to term limits set by the system to ensure rotating membership;

(4) any vacancy in the board shall be filled not later than 60 days after the date on which the vacancy occurs; and

(5) in a State in which the system is organized as a public system without a multimember governing or advisory board, the system shall establish an advisory council—

(A) that shall advise the system on policies and priorities to be carried out in protecting and advocating the rights of individuals with developmental disabilities; and

(B) on which a majority of the members shall be—

(i) individuals with developmental disabilities who are eligible for services, or have received or are receiving services, through the system; or

(ii) parents, family members, guardians, advocates, or authorized representatives of individuals referred to in clause (i).

(b) LEGAL ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in this title shall preclude a system from bringing a suit on behalf of individuals with developmental disabilities against a State, or an agency or instrumentality of a State.

(2) USE OF AMOUNTS FROM JUDGMENT.—An amount received pursuant to a suit described in paragraph (1) through a court judgment may only be used by the system to further the purpose of this subtitle and shall not be used to augment payments to legal contractors or to award personal bonuses.

(3) LIMITATION.—The system shall use assistance provided under this subtitle in a manner consistent with section 5 of the Assisted Suicide Funding Restriction Act of 1997 (42 U.S.C. 14404).

(c) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—For purposes of any periodic audit, report, or evaluation required under this subtitle, the Secretary shall not require an entity carrying out a program to disclose the identity of, or any other personally identifiable information related to, any individual requesting assistance under such program.

(d) PUBLIC NOTICE OF FEDERAL ONSITE REVIEW.—The Secretary shall provide advance public notice of any Federal programmatic or administrative onsite review of a system conducted under this subtitle and solicit public comment on the system through such notice. The Secretary shall prepare an onsite visit report containing the results of such review, which shall be distributed to the Governor of the State and to other interested public and private parties. The comments received in response to the public comment solicitation notice shall be included in the onsite visit report.

(e) REPORTS.—Beginning in fiscal year 2001, each system established in a State pursuant to this subtitle shall annually prepare and transmit to the Secretary a report that describes the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of the system during the preceding fiscal year, including a description of the system's goals, the extent to which the goals were achieved, barriers to their achievement, the process used to obtain public input, the nature of such input, and how such input was used.

SEC. 145. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

For allotments under section 142, there are authorized to be appropriated $32,000,000 for fiscal year 2000 and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2006.

Subtitle D—National Network of University Centers for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities Education, Research, and Service

SEC. 151. GRANT AUTHORITY.

(a) NATIONAL NETWORK.—From appropriations authorized under section 156(a)(1), the Secretary shall make 5-year grants to entities in each State designated as University Centers for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities Education, Research, and Service to carry out activities described in section 153(a).

(b) NATIONAL TRAINING INITIATIVES.—From appropriations authorized under section 156(a)(1) and reserved under section 156(a)(2), the Secretary shall make grants to Centers to carry out activities described in section 153(b).

(c) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—From appropriations authorized under section 156(a)(1) and reserved under section 156(a)(3) (or from funds reserved under section 163, as appropriate), the Secretary shall enter into 1 or more cooperative agreements or contracts for the purpose of providing technical assistance described in section 153(c).

SEC. 152. GRANT AWARDS.

(a) EXISTING CENTERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In awarding and distributing grant funds under section 151(a) for a fiscal year, the Secretary, subject to the availability of appropriations and the condition specified in subsection (d), shall award and distribute grant funds in equal amounts of $500,000 (adjusted in accordance with subsection (b)), to each Center that existed during the preceding fiscal year and that meets the requirements of this subtitle, prior to making grants under subsection (c) or (d).

(2) REDUCTION OF AWARD.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), if the aggregate of the funds to be awarded to the Centers pursuant to paragraph (1) for any fiscal year exceeds the total amount appropriated under section 156 for such fiscal year, the amount to be awarded to each Center for such fiscal year shall be proportionately reduced.

(b) ADJUSTMENTS.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, for any fiscal year following a year in which each Center described in subsection (a) received a grant award of not less than $500,000 under subsection (a) (adjusted in accordance with this subsection), the Secretary shall adjust the awards to take into account the most recent percentage change in the Consumer Price Index published by the Secretary of Labor under section 100(c)(1) of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720(c)(1)) (if the percentage change indicates an increase), prior to making grants under subsection (c) or (d).

(c) NATIONAL TRAINING INITIATIVES ON CRITICAL AND EMERGING NEEDS.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, for any fiscal year in which each Center described in subsection (a) receives a grant award of not less than $500,000, under subsection (a) (adjusted in accordance with subsection (b)), after making the grant awards, the Secretary shall make grants under section 151(b) to Centers to pay for the Federal share of the cost of training initiatives related to the unmet needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families, as described in section 153(b).

(d) ADDITIONAL GRANTS.—For any fiscal year in which each Center described in subsection (a) receives a grant award of not less than $500,000 under subsection (a) (adjusted in accordance with subsection (b)), after making the grant awards, the Secretary may make grants under section 151(a) for activities described in section 153(a) to additional Centers, or additional grants to Centers, for States or populations that are unserved or underserved by Centers due to such factors as—

(1) population;

(2) a high concentration of rural or urban areas; or

(3) a high concentration of unserved or underserved populations.

SEC. 153. PURPOSE AND SCOPE OF ACTIVITIES.

(a) NATIONAL NETWORK OF UNIVERSITY CENTERS FOR EXCELLENCE IN DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES EDUCATION, RESEARCH, AND SERVICE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to provide leadership in, advise Federal, State, and community policymakers about, and promote opportunities for individuals with developmental disabilities to exercise self-determination, be independent, be productive, and be integrated and included in all facets of community life, the Secretary shall award grants to eligible entities designated as Centers in each State to pay for the Federal share of the cost of the administration and operation of the Centers. The Centers shall be interdisciplinary education, research, and public service units of universities (as defined by the Secretary) or public or not-for-profit entities associated with universities that engage in core functions, described in paragraph (2), addressing, directly or indirectly, 1 or more of the areas of emphasis.

(2) CORE FUNCTIONS.—The core functions referred to in paragraph (1) shall include the following:

(A) Provision of interdisciplinary pre-service preparation and continuing education of students and fellows, which may include the preparation and continuing education of leadership, direct service, clinical, or other personnel to strengthen and increase the capacity of States and communities to achieve the purpose of this title.

(B) Provision of community services—

(i) that provide training or technical assistance for individuals with developmental disabilities, their families, professionals, paraprofessionals, policymakers, students, and other members of the community; and

(ii) that may provide services, supports, and assistance for the persons described in clause (i) through demonstration and model activities.

(C) Conduct of research, which may include basic or applied research, evaluation, and the analysis of public policy in areas that affect or could affect, either positively or negatively, individuals with developmental disabilities and their families.

(D) Dissemination of information related to activities undertaken to address the purpose of this title, especially dissemination of information that demonstrates that the network authorized under this subtitle is a national and international resource that includes specific substantive areas of expertise that may be accessed and applied in diverse settings and circumstances.

(b) NATIONAL TRAINING INITIATIVES ON CRITICAL AND EMERGING NEEDS.—

(1) SUPPLEMENTAL GRANTS.—After consultation with relevant, informed sources, including individuals with developmental disabilities and their families, the Secretary shall award, under section 151(b), supplemental grants to Centers to pay for the Federal share of the cost of training initiatives related to the unmet needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. The Secretary shall make the grants on a competitive basis, and for periods of not more than 5 years.

(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF CONSULTATION PROCESS BY THE SECRETARY.—Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish a consultation process that, on an ongoing basis, allows the Secretary to identify and address, through supplemental grants authorized under paragraph (1), training initiatives related to the unmet needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families.

(c) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—In order to strengthen and support the national network of Centers, the Secretary may enter into 1 or more cooperative agreements or contracts to—

(1) assist in national and international dissemination of specific information from multiple Centers and, in appropriate cases, other entities whose work affects the lives of individuals with developmental disabilities;

(2) compile, analyze, and disseminate state-of-the-art training, research, and demonstration results policies, and practices from multiple Centers and, in appropriate cases, other entities whose work affects the lives of persons with developmental disabilities;

(3) convene experts from multiple Centers to discuss and make recommendations with regard to national emerging needs of individuals with developmental disabilities;

(4)(A) develop portals that link users with every Center's website; and

(B) facilitate electronic information sharing using state-of-the-art Internet technologies such as real-time online discussions, multipoint video conferencing, and web-based audio/video broadcasts, on emerging topics that impact individuals with disabilities and their families;

(5) serve as a research-based resource for Federal and State policymakers on information concerning and issues impacting individuals with developmental disabilities and entities that assist or serve those individuals; or to promote the viability and use of the resources and expertise of the Centers nationally and internationally.

(6) undertake any other functions that the Secretary determines to be appropriate;

SEC. 154. APPLICATIONS.

(a) APPLICATIONS FOR CORE CENTER GRANTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under section 151(a) for a Center, an entity shall submit to the Secretary, and obtain approval of, an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information, as the Secretary may require.

(2) APPLICATION CONTENTS.—Each application described in paragraph (1) shall describe a 5-year plan, including a projected goal related to 1 or more areas of emphasis for each of the core functions described in section 153(a).

(3) ASSURANCES.—The application shall be approved by the Secretary only if the application contains or is supported by reasonable assurances that the entity designated as the Center will—

(A) meet regulatory standards as established by the Secretary for Centers;

(B) address the projected goals, and carry out goal-related activities, based on data driven strategic planning and in a manner consistent with the objectives of this subtitle, that—

(i) are developed in collaboration with the consumer advisory committee established pursuant to subparagraph (E);

(ii) are consistent with, and to the extent feasible complement and further, the Council goals contained in the State plan submitted under section 124 and the system goals established under section 143; and

(iii) will be reviewed and revised annually as necessary to address emerging trends and needs;

(C) use the funds made available through the grant to supplement, and not supplant, the funds that would otherwise be made available for activities described in section 153(a);

(D) protect, consistent with the policy specified in section 101(c) (relating to rights of individuals with developmental disabilities), the legal and human rights of all individuals with developmental disabilities (especially those individuals under State guardianship) who are involved in activities carried out under programs assisted under this subtitle;

(E) establish a consumer advisory committee—

(i) of which a majority of the members shall be individuals with developmental disabilities and family members of such individuals;

(ii) that is comprised of—

(I) individuals with developmental disabilities and related disabilities;

(II) family members of individuals with developmental disabilities;

(III) a representative of the State protection and advocacy system;

(IV) a representative of the State Council on Developmental Disabilities;

(V) a representative of a self-advocacy organization described in section 124(c)(4)(A)(ii)(I); and

(VI) representatives of organizations that may include parent training and information centers assisted under section 682 or 683 of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1482, 1483), entities carrying out activities authorized under section 101 or 102 of the Assistive Technology Act of 1998 (29 U.S.C. 3011, 3012), relevant State agencies, and other community groups concerned with the welfare of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families;

(iii) that reflects the racial and ethnic diversity of the State; and

(iv) that shall—

(I) consult with the Director of the Center regarding the development of the 5-year plan, and shall participate in an annual review of, and comment on, the progress of the Center in meeting the projected goals contained in the plan, and shall make recommendations to the Director of the Center regarding any proposed revisions of the plan that might be necessary; and

(II) meet as often as necessary to carry out the role of the committee, but at a minimum twice during each grant year;

(F) to the extent possible, utilize the infrastructure and resources obtained through funds made available under the grant to leverage additional public and private funds to successfully achieve the projected goals developed in the 5-year plan;

(G)(i) have a director with appropriate academic credentials, demonstrated leadership, expertise regarding developmental disabilities, significant experience in managing grants and contracts, and the ability to leverage public and private funds; and

(ii) allocate adequate staff time to carry out activities related to each of the core functions described in section 153(a); and

(H) educate, and disseminate information related to the purpose of this title to, the legislature of the State in which the Center is located, and to Members of Congress from such State.

(b) SUPPLEMENTAL GRANT APPLICATIONS PERTAINING TO NATIONAL TRAINING INITIATIVES IN CRITICAL AND EMERGING NEEDS.—To be eligible to receive a supplemental grant under section 151(b), a Center may submit a supplemental application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require, pursuant to the terms and conditions set by the Secretary consistent with section 153(b).

(c) PEER REVIEW.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall require that all applications submitted under this subtitle be subject to technical and qualitative review by peer review groups established under paragraph (2). The Secretary may approve an application under this subtitle only if such application has been recommended by a peer review group that has conducted the peer review required under this paragraph. In conducting the review, the group may conduct onsite visits or inspections of related activities as necessary.

(2) ESTABLISHMENT OF PEER REVIEW GROUPS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Commissioner of the Administration on Developmental Disabilities, may, notwithstanding—

(i) the provisions of title 5, United States Code, concerning appointments to the competitive service; and

(ii) the provisions of chapter 51, and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, concerning classification and General Schedule pay rates; establish such peer review groups and appoint and set the rates of pay of members of such groups.

(B) COMPOSITION.—Each peer review group shall include such individuals with disabilities and parents, guardians, or advocates of or for individuals with developmental disabilities, as are necessary to carry out this subsection.

(3) WAIVERS OF APPROVAL.—The Secretary may waive the provisions of paragraph (1) with respect to review and approval of an application if the Secretary determines that exceptional circumstances warrant such a waiver.

(d) FEDERAL SHARE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Federal share of the cost of administration or operation of a Center, or the cost of carrying out a training initiative, supported by a grant made under this subtitle may not be more than 75 percent of the necessary cost of such project, as determined by the Secretary.

(2) URBAN OR RURAL POVERTY AREAS.—In the case of a project whose activities or products target individuals with developmental disabilities who live in an urban or rural poverty area, as determined by the Secretary, the Federal share of the cost of the project may not be more than 90 percent of the necessary costs of the project, as determined by the Secretary.

(3) GRANT EXPENDITURES.—For the purpose of determining the Federal share with respect to the project, expenditures on that project by a political subdivision of a State or by a public or private entity shall, subject to such limitations and conditions as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe under section 104(b), be considered to be expenditures made by a Center under this subtitle.

(e) ANNUAL REPORT.—Each Center shall annually prepare and transmit to the Secretary a report containing—

(1) information on progress made in achieving the projected goals of the Center for the previous year, including—

(A) the extent to which the goals were achieved;

(B) a description of the strategies that contributed to achieving the goals;

(C) to the extent to which the goals were not achieved, a description of factors that impeded the achievement; and

(D) an accounting of the manner in which funds paid to the Center under this subtitle for a fiscal year were expended;

(2) information on proposed revisions to the goals; and

(3) a description of successful efforts to leverage funds, other than funds made available under this subtitle, to pursue goals consistent with this subtitle.

SEC. 155. DEFINITION.

In this subtitle, the term ''State'' means each of the several States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, and Guam.

SEC. 156. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) AUTHORIZATION AND RESERVATIONS.—

(1) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subtitle (other than section 153(c)(4)) $30,000,000 for fiscal year 2000 and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2006.

(2) RESERVATION FOR TRAINING INITIATIVES.—From any amount appropriated for a fiscal year under paragraph (1) and remaining after each Center described in section 152(a) has received a grant award of not less than $500,000, as described in section 152, the Secretary shall reserve funds for the training initiatives authorized under section 153(b).

(3) RESERVATION FOR TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—

(A) YEARS BEFORE APPROPRIATION TRIGGER.—For any covered year, the Secretary shall reserve funds in accordance with section 163(c) to fund technical assistance activities under section 153(c) (other than section 153(c)(4)).

(B) YEARS AFTER APPROPRIATION TRIGGER.—For any fiscal year that is not a covered year, the Secretary shall reserve not less than $300,000 and not more than 2 percent of the amount appropriated under paragraph (1) to fund technical assistance activities under section 153(c) (other than section 153(c)(4)).

(C) COVERED YEAR.—In this paragraph, the term ''covered year'' means a fiscal year prior to the first fiscal year for which the amount appropriated under paragraph (1) is not less than $20,000,000.

(b) LIMITATION.—The Secretary may not use, for peer review or other activities directly related to peer review conducted under this subtitle—

(1) for fiscal year 2000, more than $300,000 of the funds made available under subsection (a); and

(2) for any succeeding fiscal year, more than the amount of funds used for the peer review and related activities in fiscal year 2000, adjusted to take into account the most recent percentage change in the Consumer Price Index published by the Secretary of Labor under section 100(c)(1) of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 720(c)(1)) (if the percentage change indicates an increase).

Subtitle E—Projects of National Significance

SEC. 161. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this subtitle is to provide grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements for projects of national significance that—

(1) create opportunities for individuals with developmental disabilities to directly and fully contribute to, and participate in, all facets of community life; and

(2) support the development of national and State policies that reinforce and promote, with the support of families, guardians, advocates, and communities, of individuals with developmental disabilities, the self-determination, independence, productivity, and integration and inclusion in all facets of community life of such individuals through—

(A) family support activities;

(B) data collection and analysis;

(C) technical assistance to entities funded under subtitles B and D, subject to the limitations described in sections 129(b), 156(a)(3), and 163(c); and

(D) other projects of sufficient size and scope that hold promise to expand or improve opportunities for such individuals, including—

(i) projects that provide technical assistance for the development of information and referral systems;

(ii) projects that provide technical assistance to self-advocacy organizations of individuals with developmental disabilities;

(iii) projects that provide education for policymakers;

(iv) Federal interagency initiatives;

(v) projects that enhance the participation of racial and ethnic minorities in public and private sector initiatives in developmental disabilities;

(vi) projects that provide aid to transition youth with developmental disabilities from school to adult life, especially in finding employment and postsecondary education opportunities and in upgrading and changing any assistive technology devices that may be needed as a youth matures;

(vii) initiatives that address the development of community quality assurance systems and the training related to the development, implementation, and evaluation of such systems, including training of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families;

(viii) initiatives that address the needs of aging individuals with developmental disabilities and aging caregivers of adults with developmental disabilities in the community;

(ix) initiatives that create greater access to and use of generic services systems, community organizations, and associations, and initiatives that assist in community economic development;

(x) initiatives that create access to increased living options;

(xi) initiatives that address the challenging behaviors of individuals with developmental disabilities, including initiatives that promote positive alternatives to the use of restraints and seclusion; and

(xii) initiatives that address other areas of emerging need.

SEC. 162. GRANT AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall award grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements to public or private nonprofit entities for projects of national significance relating to individuals with developmental disabilities to carry out activities described in section 161(2).

(b) FEDERAL INTERAGENCY INITIATIVES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—

(A) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may—

(i) enter into agreements with Federal agencies to jointly carry out activities described in section 161(2) or to jointly carry out activities of common interest related to the objectives of such section; and

(ii) transfer to such agencies for such purposes funds appropriated under this subtitle, and receive and use funds from such agencies for such purposes.

(B) RELATION TO PROGRAM PURPOSES.—Funds transferred or received pursuant to this paragraph shall be used only in accordance with statutes authorizing the appropriation of such funds. Such funds shall be made available through grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements only to recipients eligible to receive such funds under such statutes.

(C) PROCEDURES AND CRITERIA.—If the Secretary enters into an agreement under this subsection for the administration of a jointly funded project—

(i) the agreement shall specify which agency's procedures shall be used to award grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements and to administer such awards;

(ii) the participating agencies may develop a single set of criteria for the jointly funded project, and may require applicants to submit a single application for joint review by such agencies; and

(iii) unless the heads of the participating agencies develop joint eligibility requirements, an applicant for an award for the project shall meet the eligibility requirements of each program involved.

(2) LIMITATION.—The Secretary may not construe the provisions of this subsection to take precedence over a limitation on joint funding contained in an applicable statute.

SEC. 163. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out the projects specified in this section $16,000,000 for fiscal year 2000, and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2006.

(b) USE OF FUNDS.—

(1) GRANTS, CONTRACTS, AND AGREEMENTS.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amount appropriated under subsection (a) for each fiscal year shall be used to award grants, or enter into contracts, cooperative agreements, or other agreements, under section 162.

(2) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Not more than 1 percent of the amount appropriated under subsection (a) for each fiscal year may be used to provide for the administrative costs (other than compensation of Federal employees) of the Administration on Developmental Disabilities for administering this subtitle and subtitles B, C, and D, including monitoring the performance of and providing technical assistance to, entities that receive funds under this title.

(c) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE FOR COUNCILS AND CENTERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For each covered year, the Secretary shall expend, to provide technical assistance for entities funded under subtitle B or D, an amount from funds appropriated under subsection (a) that is not less than the amount the Secretary expended on technical assistance for entities funded under that subtitle (or a corresponding provision) in the previous fiscal year.

(2) COVERED YEAR.—In this subsection, the term ''covered year'' means—

(A) in the case of an expenditure for entities funded under subtitle B, a fiscal year for which the amount appropriated under section 129(a) is less than $76,000,000; and

(B) in the case of an expenditure for entities funded under subtitle D, a fiscal year prior to the first fiscal year for which the amount appropriated under section 156(a)(1) is not less than $20,000,000.

(3) REFERENCES.—References in this subsection to subtitle D shall not be considered to include section 153(c)(4).

(d) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE ON ELECTRONIC INFORMATION SHARING.—In addition to any funds reserved under subsection (c), the Secretary shall reserve $100,000 from the amount appropriated under subsection (a) for each fiscal year to carry out section 153(c)(4).

(e) LIMITATION.—For any fiscal year for which the amount appropriated under subsection (a) is not less than $10,000,000, not more than 50 percent of such amount shall be used for activities carried out under section 161(2)(A).

TITLE II—FAMILY SUPPORT

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''Families of Children With Disabilities Support Act of 1999''.

SEC. 202. FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND POLICY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) It is in the best interest of our Nation to preserve, strengthen, and maintain the family.

(2) Families of children with disabilities provide support, care, and training to their children that can save States millions of dollars. Without the efforts of family caregivers, many persons with disabilities would receive care through State-supported out-of-home placements.

(3) Most families of children with disabilities, especially families in unserved and underserved populations, do not have access to family-centered and family-directed services to support such families in their efforts to care for such children at home.

(4) Medical advances and improved health care have increased the life span of many people with disabilities, and the combination of the longer life spans and the aging of family caregivers places a continually increasing demand on the finite service delivery systems of the States.

(5) In 1996, 49 States provided family support initiatives in response to the needs of families of children with disabilities. Such initiatives included the provision of cash subsidies, respite care, and other forms of support. There is a need in each State, however, to strengthen, expand, and coordinate the activities of a system of family support services for families of children with disabilities that is easily accessible, avoids duplication, uses resources efficiently, and prevents gaps in services to families in all areas of the State.

(6) The goals of the Nation properly include the goal of providing to families of children with disabilities the family support services necessary—

(A) to support the family;

(B) to enable families of children with disabilities to nurture and enjoy their children at home;

(C) to enable families of children with disabilities to make informed choices and decisions regarding the nature of supports, resources, services, and other assistance made available to such families; and

(D) to support family caregivers of adults with disabilities.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this title are—

(1) to promote and strengthen the implementation of comprehensive State systems of family support services, for families with children with disabilities, that are family-centered and family-directed, and that provide families with the greatest possible decisionmaking authority and control regarding the nature and use of services and support;

(2) to promote leadership by families in planning, policy development, implementation, and evaluation of family support services for families of children with disabilities;

(3) to promote and develop interagency coordination and collaboration between agencies responsible for providing the services; and

(4) to increase the availability of, funding for, access to, and provision of family support services for families of children with disabilities.

(c) POLICY.—It is the policy of the United States that all programs, projects, and activities funded under this title shall be family-centered and family-directed, and shall be provided in a manner consistent with the goal of providing families of children with disabilities with the support the families need to raise their children at home.

SEC. 203. DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULE.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this title:

(1) CHILD WITH A DISABILITY.—The term ''child with a disability'' means an individual who—

(A) has a significant physical or mental impairment, as defined pursuant to State policy to the extent that such policy is established without regard to type of disability; or

(B) is an infant or a young child from birth through age 8 and has a substantial developmental delay or specific congenital or acquired condition that presents a high probability of resulting in a disability if services are not provided to the infant or child.

(2) FAMILY.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), for purposes of the application of this title in a State, the term ''family'' has the meaning given the term by the State.

(B) EXCLUSION OF EMPLOYEES.—The term does not include an employee who, acting in a paid employment capacity, provides services to a child with a disability in an out-of-home setting such as a hospital, nursing home, personal care home, board and care home, group home, or other facility.

(3) FAMILY SUPPORT FOR FAMILIES OF CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES.—The term ''family support for families of children with disabilities'' means supports, resources, services, and other assistance provided to families of children with disabilities pursuant to State policy that are designed to—

(A) support families in the efforts of such families to raise their children with disabilities in the home;

(B) strengthen the role of the family as primary caregiver for such children;

(C) prevent involuntary out-of-the-home placement of such children and maintain family unity; and

(D) reunite families with children with disabilities who have been placed out of the home, whenever possible.

(4) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(5) STATE.—The term ''State'' means each of the 50 States of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the United States Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, and the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands.

(6) SYSTEMS CHANGE ACTIVITIES.—The term ''systems change activities'' means efforts that result in laws, regulations, policies, practices, or organizational structures—

(A) that are family-centered and family-directed;

(B) that facilitate and increase access to, provision of, and funding for, family support services for families of children with disabilities; and

(C) that otherwise accomplish the purposes of this title.

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—References in this title to a child with a disability shall be considered to include references to an individual who is not younger than age 18 who—

(1) has a significant impairment described in subsection (a)(1)(A); and

(2) is residing with and receiving assistance from a family member.

SEC. 204. GRANTS TO STATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall make grants to States on a competitive basis, in accordance with the provisions of this title, to support systems change activities designed to assist

States to develop and implement, or expand and enhance, a statewide system of family support services for families of children with disabilities that accomplishes the purposes of this title.

(b) AWARD PERIOD AND GRANT LIMITATION.—No grant shall be awarded under this section for a period of more than 3 years. No State shall be eligible for more than 1 grant under this section.

(c) AMOUNT OF GRANTS.—

(1) GRANTS TO STATES.—

(A) FEDERAL MATCHING SHARE.—From amounts appropriated under section 212(a), the Secretary shall pay to each State that has an application approved under section 205, for each year of the grant period, an amount that is—

(i) equal to not more than 75 percent of the cost of the systems change activities to be carried out by the State; and

(ii) not less than $100,000 and not more than $500,000.

(B) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the cost of the systems change activities may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services.

(2) CALCULATION OF AMOUNTS.—The Secretary shall calculate a grant amount described in paragraph (1) on the basis of—

(A) the amounts available for making grants under this section; and

(B) the child population of the State concerned.

(d) PRIORITY FOR PREVIOUSLY PARTICIPATING STATES.—For the second and third fiscal years for which amounts are appropriated to carry out this section, the Secretary, in providing payments under this section, shall give priority to States that received payments under this section during the preceding fiscal year.

(e) PRIORITIES FOR DISTRIBUTION.—To the extent practicable, the Secretary shall award grants to States under this section in a manner that—

(1) is geographically equitable;

(3) distributes the grants among States that attempt to meet the needs of unserved and underserved populations, such as individuals from racial and ethnic minority backgrounds, disadvantaged individuals, individuals with limited English proficiency, and individuals from underserved geographic areas (rural or urban).

SEC. 205. APPLICATION.

To be eligible to receive a grant under this title, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information and assurances as the Secretary may require, including information about the designation of a lead entity, a description of available State resources, and assurances that systems change activities will be family-centered and family-directed.

SEC. 206. DESIGNATION OF THE LEAD ENTITY.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The Chief Executive Officer of a State that desires to receive a grant under section 204, shall designate the office or entity (referred to in this title as the ''lead entity'') responsible for—

(1) submitting the application described in section 205 on behalf of the State;

(2) administering and supervising the use of the amounts made available under the grant;

(3) coordinating efforts related to and supervising the preparation of the application;

(4) coordinating the planning, development, implementation (or expansion and enhancement), and evaluation of a statewide system of family support services for families of children with disabilities among public agencies and between public agencies and private agencies, including coordinating efforts related to entering into interagency agreements;

(5) coordinating efforts related to the participation by families of children with disabilities in activities carried out under a grant made under this title; and

(6) submitting the report described in section 208 on behalf of the State.

(b) QUALIFICATIONS.—In designating the lead entity, the Chief Executive Officer may designate—

(1) an office of the Chief Executive Officer;

(2) a commission appointed by the Chief Executive Officer;

(3) a public agency;

(4) a council established under Federal or State law; or

(5) another appropriate office, agency, or entity.

SEC. 207. AUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A State that receives a grant under section 204 shall use the funds made available through the grant to carry out systems change activities that accomplish the purposes of this title.

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—In carrying out activities authorized under this title, a State shall ensure that such activities address the needs of families of children with disabilities from unserved or underserved populations.

SEC. 208. REPORTING.

A State that receives a grant under this title shall prepare and submit to the Secretary, at the end of the grant period, a report containing the results of State efforts to develop and implement, or expand and enhance, a statewide system of family support services for families of children with disabilities.

SEC. 209. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall enter into contracts or cooperative agreements with appropriate public or private agencies and organizations, including institutions of higher education, with documented experience, expertise, and capacity, for the purpose of providing technical assistance and information with respect to the development and implementation, or expansion and enhancement, of a statewide system of family support services for families of children with disabilities.

(b) PURPOSE.—An agency or organization that provides technical assistance and information under this section in a State that receives a grant under this title shall provide the technical assistance and information to the lead entity of the State, family members of children with disabilities, organizations, service providers, and policymakers involved with children with disabilities and their families. Such an agency or organization may also provide technical assistance and information to a State that does not receive a grant under this title.

(c) REPORTS TO THE SECRETARY.—An entity providing technical assistance and information under this section shall prepare and submit to the Secretary periodic reports regarding Federal policies and procedures identified within the States that facilitate or impede the delivery of family support services to families of children with disabilities. The report shall include recommendations to the Secretary regarding the delivery of services, coordination with other programs, and integration of the policies described in section 202 in Federal law, other than this title.

SEC. 210. EVALUATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct a national evaluation of the program of grants to States authorized by this title.

(b) PURPOSE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall conduct the evaluation under subsection (a) to assess the status and effects of State efforts to develop and implement, or expand and enhance, statewide systems of family support services for families of children with disabilities in a manner consistent with the provisions of this title. In particular, the Secretary shall assess the impact of such efforts on families of children with disabilities, and recommend amendments to this title that are necessary to assist States to accomplish fully the purposes of this title.

(2) INFORMATION SYSTEMS.—The Secretary shall work with the States to develop an information system designed to compile and report, from information provided by the States, qualitative and quantitative descriptions of the impact of the program of grants to States authorized by this title on—

(A) families of children with disabilities, including families from unserved and underserved populations;

(B) access to and funding for family support services for families of children with disabilities;

(C) interagency coordination and collaboration between agencies responsible for providing the services; and

(D) the involvement of families of children with disabilities at all levels of the statewide systems.

(c) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 2½ years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report concerning the results of the evaluation conducted under this section.

SEC. 211. PROJECTS OF NATIONAL SIGNIFICANCE.

(a) STUDY BY THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall review Federal programs to determine the extent to which such programs facilitate or impede access to, provision of, and funding for family support services for families of children with disabilities, consistent with the policies described in section 202.

(b) PROJECTS OF NATIONAL SIGNIFICANCE.—The Secretary shall make grants or enter into contracts for projects of national significance to support the development of national and State policies and practices related to the development and implementation, or expansion and enhancement, of family-centered and family-directed systems of family support services for families of children with disabilities.

SEC. 212. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this title such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2000 through 2006.

(b) RESERVATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall reserve for each fiscal year 10 percent, or $400,000 (whichever is greater), of the amount appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) to carry out—

(A) section 209 (relating to the provision of technical assistance and information to States); and

(B) section 210 (relating to the conduct of evaluations).

(2) SPECIAL RULE.—For each year that the amount appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) is $10,000,000 or greater, the Secretary may reserve 5 percent of such amount to carry out section 211.

TITLE III—PROGRAM FOR DIRECT SUPPORT WORKERS WHO ASSIST INDIVIDUALS WITH DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES

SEC. 301. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) direct support workers, especially young adults, have played essential roles in providing the support needed by individuals with developmental disabilities and expanding community options for those individuals;

(2) 4 factors have contributed to a decrease in the available pool of direct support workers, specifically—

(A) the small population of individuals who are age 18 through 25, an age group that has been attracted to direct support work in the past;

(B) the rapid expansion of the service sector, which attracts individuals who previously would have elected to pursue employment as direct support workers;

(C) the failure of wages in the human services sector to keep pace with wages in other service sectors; and

(D) the lack of quality training and career advancement opportunities available to direct support workers; and

(3) individuals with developmental disabilities benefit from assistance from direct support workers who are well trained, and benefit from receiving services from professionals who have spent time as direct support workers.

SEC. 302. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITY.—The term ''developmental disability'' has the meaning given the term in section 102.

(2) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term ''institution of higher education'' has the meaning given the term in section 1201 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1141).

(3) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

SEC. 303. REACHING UP SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM.

(a) PROGRAM AUTHORIZATION.—The Secretary may award grants to eligible entities, on a competitive basis, to enable the entities to carry out scholarship programs by providing vouchers for postsecondary education to direct support workers who assist individuals with developmental disabilities residing in diverse settings. The Secretary shall award the grants to pay for the Federal share of the cost of providing the vouchers.

(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITY.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an entity shall be—

(1) an institution of higher education;

(2) a State agency; or

(3) a consortium of such institutions or agencies.

(c) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an eligible entity shall submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require, including a description of—

(1) the basis for awarding the vouchers;

(2) the number of individuals to receive the vouchers; and

(3) the amount of funds that will be made available by the eligible entity to pay for the non-Federal share of the cost of providing the vouchers.

(d) SELECTION CRITERIA.—In awarding a grant under this section for a scholarship program, the Secretary shall give priority to an entity submitting an application that—

(1) specifies that individuals who receive vouchers through the program will be individuals—

(A) who are direct support workers who assist individuals with developmental disabilities residing in diverse settings, while pursuing postsecondary education; and

(B) each of whom verifies, prior to receiving the voucher, that the worker has completed 250 hours as a direct support worker in the past 90 days;

(2) states that the vouchers that will be provided through the program will be in amounts of not more than $2,000 per year;

(3) provides an assurance that the eligible entity (or another specified entity that is not a voucher recipient) will contribute the non-Federal share of the cost of providing the vouchers; and

(4) meets such other conditions as the Secretary may specify.

(e) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of the cost of providing the vouchers shall be not more than 80 percent.

SEC. 304. STAFF DEVELOPMENT CURRICULUM AUTHORIZATION.

(a) FUNDING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall award funding, on a competitive basis, through a grant, cooperative agreement, or contract, to a public or private entity or a combination of such entities, for the development, evaluation, and dissemination of a staff development curriculum, and related guidelines, for computer-assisted, competency-based, multimedia, interactive instruction, relating to service as a direct support worker.

(2) PARTICIPANTS.—The curriculum shall be developed for individuals who—

(A) seek to become direct support workers who assist individuals with developmental disabilities or are such direct support workers; and

(B) seek to upgrade their skills and competencies related to being a direct support worker.

(b) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.—To be eligible to receive an award under this section, an entity shall submit to the Secretary an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require, including—

(1) a comprehensive analysis of the content of direct support roles;

(2) information identifying an advisory group that—

(A) is comprised of individuals with experience and expertise with regard to the support provided by direct support workers, and effective ways to provide the support, for individuals with developmental disabilities in diverse settings; and

(B) will advise the entity throughout the development, evaluation, and dissemination of the staff development curriculum and guidelines;

(3) information describing how the entity will—

(A) develop, field test, and validate a staff development curriculum that—

(i) relates to the appropriate reading level for direct service workers who assist individuals with disabilities;

(ii) allows for multiple levels of instruction;

(iii) provides instruction appropriate for direct support workers who work in diverse settings; and

(iv) is consistent with subsections (b) and (c) of section 101 and section 109;

(B) develop, field test, and validate guidelines for the organizations that use the curriculum that provide for—

(i) providing necessary technical and instructional support to trainers and mentors for the participants;

(ii) ensuring easy access to and use of such curriculum by workers that choose to participate in using, and agencies that choose to use, the curriculum;

(iii) evaluating the proficiency of the participants with respect to the content of the curriculum;

(iv) providing necessary support to the participants to assure that the participants have access to, and proficiency in using, a computer in order to participate in the development, testing, and validation process;

(v) providing necessary technical and instructional support to trainers and mentors for the participants in conjunction with the development, testing, and validation process;

(vi) addressing the satisfaction of participants, individuals with developmental disabilities and their families, providers of services for such individuals and families, and other relevant entities with the curriculum; and

(vii) developing methods to maintain a record of the instruction completed, and the content mastered, by each participant under the curriculum; and

(C) nationally disseminate the curriculum and guidelines, including dissemination through—

(i) parent training and information centers funded under part D of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1451 et seq.);

(ii) community-based organizations of and for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families;

(iii) entities funded under title I;

(iv) centers for independent living;

(v) State educational agencies and local educational agencies;

(vi) entities operating appropriate medical facilities;

(vii) postsecondary education entities; and

(viii) other appropriate entities; and

(4) such other information as the Secretary may require.

SEC. 305. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) SCHOLARSHIPS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out section 303 $800,000 for fiscal year 2000 and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2006.

(b) STAFF DEVELOPMENT CURRICULUM.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out section 304 $800,000 for fiscal year 2000 and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2001 and 2002.

''(A) PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY SYSTEMS UNDER THE DEVELOPMENTAL DISABILITIES ASSISTANCE AND BILL OF RIGHTS ACT OF 1999.—Subtitle C of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1999.''.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, and my colleagues Senators KENNEDY, HARKIN, FRIST, COLLINS, WELLSTONE, REED, DODD, MURRAY, and ENZI, I am pleased that we are considering S. 1809, the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1999. This legislation, commonly referred to as the DD Act, represents the reauthorization of a piece of legislation with a rich legacy, and a long history of bipartisan Congressional support. It was initially enacted as Title I of the Mental Retardation Facilities and Community Mental Health Centers Construction Act of 1963 as part of the legacy of President Kennedy, and was last reauthorized in 1996 under the sponsorship of Senator FRIST. It has always focused on the needs of our most vulnerable citizens, currently an estimated four million Americans with developmental disabilities, including individuals with mental retardation and other lifelong, severe disabilities. I am pleased to say that S. 1809 was reported out, unanimously, by the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions on November 3, 1999.

I would like to take a moment to review the history of this legislation, and the programs in each State that it authorizes. The earliest version of this legislation focused on the interdisciplinary training of professionals to work with individuals with developmental disabilities by authorizing funding for University Affiliated Facilities charged with expanding the carde of professionals able to address the needs of individuals with developmental disabilities. Later, the name of the programs was changed to University Affiliated Programs (UAPs), and their mission was expanded to include community services and information dissemination pertaining to individuals with developmental disabilities. In 1996, after 33 years of planned expansion by Congress, the DD Act provided funding for at least one UAP in each State. The present reauthorization recognizes the development of these programs, adds research as a core function, and renames UAPs as Centers for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities Education, Research, and Service.

In the 1970 reauthorization of the DD Act, Congress recognized the need for and value of strengthening State efforts to coordinate and integrate services for individuals with developmental disabilities. As a result, Congress established and authorized funding for State Developmental Disabilities Councils (DD Councils) in each State. The purpose of the Councils was, and continues to be, to advise governors and State agencies regarding the use of available and potential resources to meet the needs of individuals with developmental disabilities. Every State has a DD Council. The Councils undertake advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities directed at improving access to and quality of community services, supports, and other forms of assistance for individuals with disabilities and their families.

In 1975, Congress created and authorized funding for Protection and Advocacy Systems (P&As) in each State to ensure the safety and well being of individuals with developmental disabilities. The mission of these systems has evolved over the years, initially addressing the protection of individuals with developmental disabilities who lived in institutions, to the present responsibilities related to the protection of individuals with developmental disabilities from abuse, neglect, and exploitation, and from the violation of their legal and human rights, both in institutions and other community settings.

The 1975 reauthorization of the DD Act also established funding for Projects of National Significance. Through this new authority Congress authorizes funding for initiatives to address areas of national importance. Over the years, projects related to individuals with developmental disabilities and their treatment in the criminal justice system, their experiences with home ownership, in employment, their use of assistive technology, and their involvement in self-advocacy have been supported through Projects of National Significance.

The legislation before us today, S. 1809, the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1999 builds on the past successes of these programs. Additionally, this bill reflects today's changing society and seeks to provide a foundation for the services and supports that individuals with developmental disabilities, their families, and communities need as we enter the next century. Let me take a moment to highlight the major provisions of this legislation.

S. 1809 continues a tradition of support for DD programs in each State including DD Councils, Protection and Advocacy Systems, and University Centers for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities Education, Research, and Service. The purpose of the DD programs in each State is to engage in advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities related to improving the quality of life for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. This legislation seeks to ensure that individuals with developmental disabilities are able to fully participate in and contribute to their communities through fall integration and inclusion in the economic, political, social, cultural, and educational mainstream of our Nation. It also assists DD Act programs to improve the range and quality of supports and services for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families regardless of where they choose to live.

This legislation recognizes that individuals with developmental disabilities often have multiple, evolving, life long needs that require services and supports from agencies and organizations that offer specialized and generic forms of assistance in their communities. The nature of the needs of these individuals and the capacity of States and communities to respond to them have changed. In the past 5 years, new strategies for reaching, engaging, and assisting individuals with developmental disabilities have gained visibility and credibility. These state of the art strategies are reinforced by and reflected in this bill.

This bill also recognizes that individuals with developmental disabilities often are at greater risk of abuse, neglect, financial and sexual exploitation, and the violation of their legal and human rights, than the general population. Based upon this recognition, the bill supports the extra effort and attention needed, in both individual and systemic situations, to ensure that individuals with developmental disabilities are at no greater risk of harm than others in the general population.

In the past, the Councils, P&A Systems, and Centers have been authorized to provide advocacy, capacity building, and systemic change activities to make access to and navigation through various service systems easier for individuals with developmental disabilities. Over time there has been pressure for these three programs to provide assistance beyond the limit of their resources and beyond their authorized missions. The bill clearly and concisely specifies the roles and responsibilities of Councils, P&A Systems, and Centers so that there is a common understanding of what the programs are intended to contribute toward a State's efforts to respond to the needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families.

S. 1809 gives States' Councils, P&A Systems, and Centers increased flexibility. Each program in a State, working with stakeholders, is to develop goals for how to assure that individuals with developmental disabilities and their families participate in the design of and have access to needed community services, individualized supports, and other forms of assistance that promote self-determination, independence, productivity, integration, and inclusion in all facets of community life. Goals may be set in any of the following areas of emphasis: quality assurance, education and early intervention, child care, health, employment, housing, transportation, recreation, or other community services.

Consistent with Congressional emphasis on strengthening accountability for all Federal programs, this legislation requires each program to determine, before undertaking a goal, how that goal will be measured. The Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) is to develop indicators of progress to evaluate how the three programs in each State have engaged in activities to promote and achieve the purposes of the Act. In particular, the Secretary is to monitor how the three programs funded in each State coordinate their efforts, and how that coordination affects the quality of supports and services for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families in that State. In doing so Congress recognizes that the programs funded under the DD Act do not have day to day responsibility for the outcomes of the programs directly serving people with developmental disabilities in their States. Therefore, Congressional intent is that the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services develop measures regarding the quality of program activities funded under Title I of this bill, to provide accountability in the areas of advocacy, capacity building, and systems changes as they relate to the areas of emphasis defined in Section 102(2), and that these measures are consistent with the purposes and policies articulated in Section 101.

In recent years, a clearer picture has emerged of what individuals with developmental disabilities are able to accomplish, with the appropriate support, when they have access to the same choices and opportunities available to others. There has been increasing recognition of and support for self-advocacy organizations established by and for individuals with developmental disabilities, particularly individuals with cognitive disabilities. This bill reflects and promotes such efforts by authorizing DD Councils to support the establishment and strengthening of at least one statewide self-advocacy organization for individuals with developmental disabilities in each State. It also authorizes national technical assistance for self advocacy organizations.

In addition to S. 1809 renaming the University Affiliated Programs as University Centers for Excellence in Developmental Disabilities Education, Research, and Service, this legislation expands Centers' responsibilities to include the conduct of research, authorizes National Training Initiatives on Critical and Emerging Needs, and links the Centers to create a National Network. In doing so Congress recognizes that Centers have a long history of providing state of the art community education and training in a variety of areas related to improving the capacity of communities to meet the needs of individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. It is the intention of Congress that Centers will continue to provide this training. It is also Congress' intention to recognize and utilize the capacity of all Centers to meet critical and emerging training needs in accordance with Sections 152(c) and 153(b). It also anticipates that Congress will authorize Centers to meet other emerging and critical training and research needs related to individuals with developmental disabilities through other legislation.

By administering the three programs specifically authorized under the DD Act and by funding Projects of National Significance to accomplish similar or complementary efforts, the Administration on Developmental Disabilities (ADD) in HHS plays a critical role in supporting and fostering new ways to assist individuals with developmental disabilities and their families, and in promoting system integration to expand and improve community services for individuals with disabilities. The bill provides ADD with the ability to foster similar efforts across the Executive Branch. It authorizes ADD to pursue and join with other Executive Branch entities in activities that will improve choices, opportunities, and services for individuals with developmental disabilities and to fully utilize the potential of the entities authorized under title I to achieve these goals. Since this bill adds new responsibilities for tracking accountability and collaboration which may trigger the need for additional resources, Section 163(b)(2) authorizes funds for administrative purposes. The intent is that these funds supplement, but not supplant existing administrative funds provided to ADD.

I would like to thank Senator HARKIN, and Senators FRIST and WELLSTONE for drafting provisions in Title II and Title III, respectively. Title II of this legislation addresses the critical need for family support for families of individuals with severe disabilities. The bill authorizes grants (one, 3-year grant per State, on a competitive basis) to assist States to provide services to families who choose to keep their children with disabilities at home. It gives support to States' efforts to assist families. Family support services are cost effective in reducing the costs associated with life-long disability, and in preventing the expense of out-of-home placement. Such services allow individuals with disabilities to stay at home with their families.

Title II gives flexibility and authority to States in the design of statewide systems of family support services for families of children with disabilities. Family support activities supported through this bill should be family-centered and family-directed. This means families of children with disabilities have control over decisions relating to the supports that will meet the priorities of their family, and participate in the planning, development, implementation, and evaluation of the statewide system of family support.

When applying for a grant, States are expected to demonstrate the nature and extent of the involvement of families of children with disabilities and individuals with disabilities in the development of the application and in the development, implementation, and evaluation of the statewide system of family support for families of children with disabilities.

The bill requires States to designate a lead entity that will coordinate activities funded under the grant. The lead agency should have the capacity to promote a statewide system of family support services that is family-centered and family-directed; to promote and implement systems change activities; and to maximize access to public and private funds for family support services for families of children with disabilities. The application should also designate the involvement of other State or local agencies, including local councils, in both the preparation of the application and the continuing role of each agency in the statewide system of family support for families of children with disabilities.

This legislation also gives States maximum flexibility in selecting activities they will implement in providing family support services for families of children with disabilities, including populations who are unserved or underserved. Activities may include training and technical assistance; the development or strengthening of family-centered and family-directed approaches to services, including service coordination services, service planning services, and respite care services; and assistance to families of children with disabilities in accessing natural and community supports and in obtaining benefits and services. A State may also conduct needs assessments; evaluations of data related to the statewide system of family support for families of children with disabilities; or pilot demonstration projects to demonstrate new approaches to the provision of family support services for families of children with disabilities.

Title III recognizes and responds to a national need to increase the number of, and improve the training for, direct support workers who assist individuals with developmental disabilities where they live, work, go to school, and engage in other aspects of community life, consistent and in coordination with title I of this legislation. Title III acknowledges that direct support workers play essential roles in providing the support that individuals with developmental disabilities need, and in expanding community options for these individuals.

Section 303 of title III authorizes the Reaching Up Scholarships Program to encourage continuing education for individuals who provide direct support to individuals with developmental disabilities. This scholarship program authorizes vouchers of up to $2,000 to an eligible direct support worker. Recipients of these vouchers will be direct support workers who assist individuals with developmental disabilities in a wide range of settings. This grant program will be administered through institutions of higher education, State agencies, or consortia of such institutions or agencies. It will enable direct support workers to access training related to providing state of the art supports and services to individuals with developmental disabilities and their families.

Title III, section 304 of this legislation provides funding for the development, evaluation, and dissemination of a staff development curriculum, and related guidelines for computer-assisted, competency-based, multi-media, interactive instruction to provide staff development for individuals in direct service roles with people with developmental disabilities and their families. Title III also recognizes the potential contribution of individuals with developmental disabilities who themselves may choose to become direct service providers. This state of the art curriculum will allow direct service workers, including those with limited levels of literacy, access to and participation in, state of the art training that reflects the principles articulated in title I, particularly the principles of self-determination, independence, productivity, integration, and inclusion of individuals with developmental disabilities in all aspects of community life. The curriculum will also address the use of positive supports and interventions as alternatives to the use of aversive treatment, particularly the inappropriate use of restraint and seclusion with individuals with developmental disabilities across the age span and in a variety of settings. The curriculum will be fully field-tested, evaluated, and nationally disseminated.

Throughout the country, the DD Act programs have a long history of achievement. In Vermont, the DD Act programs make on-going contributions to major initiatives affecting individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. They play significant roles in many of Vermont's accomplishments, including: the inclusion of children with severe disabilities into local schools and classrooms; early intervention and family leadership initiatives that are national models; and innovative programs in the areas of employment, and community living options for individuals with developmental disabilities. Based upon the letters our office has received from across the country, it is clear that these DD programs make substantial, positive differences in all States.

S. 1809 is bi-partisan, balanced, and responsive legislation that reflects months of discussion and collaboration among individuals and organizations representing a full range of opinion. I would like to recognize the contributions of the numerous disability and advocacy groups that provided public input, especially the Developmental Disabilities Task Force of the Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities and their co-chairs, who have worked with staff over nine months to develop this legislation.

I would like to thank Senate staff including Connie Garner from Senator KENNEDY's staff, Katie Corrigan and Tom Hlavacek from Senator HARKIN's staff, Dave Larson from Senator FRIST's staff, Cheryl Chambers from Senator WELLSTONE's staff, and Liz King from the Senate Legislative Counsel. I would also like to thank staff from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services including Sue Swenson, Reggie Wells, and Elsbeth Wyatt from the Administration on Developmental Disabilities, and Barbara Clark and Amy Lockhart from the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Legislation. And finally, I would like to thank my own HELP Committee staff particularly Pat Morrissey, Lu Zeph, Leah Menzies, Heidi Scheuermann, and Mark Powden who worked long and hard on this legislation.

S. 1809 continues a long tradition of Congressional support for individuals with developmental disabilities, their families, and their communities and ensures that this support will continue to meet their needs into the next century. I ask my colleagues to join me today in voting to pass this bill out of the Senate.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I support the passage of Senate Bill 1809, the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1999.

As the chief sponsor of the Americans with Disabilities Act and the former chair of the Senate Subcommittee on Disability Policy, I take a particular interest in the Developmental Disabilities Act, which has been a cornerstone of our national policy for people with disabilities. In fact, the Supreme Court cited the Developmental Disabilities Act in the recent Olmstead decision as evidence of Congress' intent that people with disabilities should have the choice to receive services in the community.

The entities funded under the Act—the Developmental Disabilities Councils, University Affiliated Programs, and the Protection and Advocacy systems—have enabled us to move away from a service system that denied people with disabilities the choice to receive services where families and individuals want them—in their own homes, communities, and neighborhoods.

This year's reauthorization is very important for several reasons. First, we must continue our progress toward ensuring that people with developmental disabilities achieve their maximum potential through increased self-determination, independence, productivity, and integration in all facets of life.

Second, we must ensure that people with developmental disabilities are free from abuse and neglect in all aspects of the service delivery system. This bill will help protect people with disabilities from abuse and neglect no matter where they live—inside an institution or in the community.

And finally, we must do more to strengthen and support families as they provide care and support to family members with a disability. Family caregivers are the true heroes of our long-term care system. In Title II of this bill, Congress lends support to State efforts to give individuals with disabilities the choice to stay at home, with their families.

I thank Senator JEFFORDS for acknowledging my strong interest and contributions to this important title. This Family Support grant program gives flexibility and authority to the States in designing statewide systems of family support services for families of children with disabilities. It is our intention that all activities conducted under the Family Support program should be family-centered and family-directed. This means that services and programs should facilitate the full participation and control by families of children with disabilities in decisions relating to the supports that will meet the priorities of the family; and in the planning, development, implementation, and evaluation of the statewide system of family support.

We have given States the flexibility of defining what Family Support services will be provided. Family Support services should lead to the integration and inclusion of children with disabilities and their families in the use and participation of the same community resources that are used by and available to other individuals and families.

Family Support services may include help with service coordination; the provision of goods and services such as specialized evaluations and diagnostic services, adaptive equipment, respite care, personal assistance services, homemaker and chore services, behavioral supports, assistive technology services and devices, permanency and future planning, home and vehicle modifications and repairs, equipment and consumable supplies, transportation, specialized nutrition and clothing, counseling and mental health services, family education and training services, communication services, crisis intervention, daycare and child care for a child with a disability, supports and services for integrated and inclusive community activities, parent or family member support groups, peer support, sitter service or companion service, education aids; and financial assistance, which may include cash subsidies, allowances, voucher or reimbursement systems, low-interest loans, or lines of credit.

A statewide system of Family Support Services means a system that is family-centered and family-directed, and that assists and enables families to receive rights and procedural safeguards and to gain access to social, medical, legal, educational, and other supports and services; and that include follow along services that ensure that the changing needs of the child and family are met; the coordination and monitoring of services provided to the family; the provision of information to children with disabilities and their families about the availability of services, and assistance to such children and their families in obtaining appropriate services; and the facilitation and organization of existing social networks and natural sources of support, and community resources and services.

Such a statewide system should also be culturally competent, community-centered, and comprehensive so that it addresses the needs of all families of children with disabilities, including unserved and underserved populations; and addresses such needs without regard to the age, type of disability, race, ethnicity, or gender of such children or the major life activity for which such children need the assistance.

When applying for a grant, States should demonstrate the nature and extent of the involvement of families of children with disabilities and individuals with disabilities in the development of the application, including the involvement of unserved and underserved populations; and in strategies for actively involving families of children with disabilities and individuals with disabilities in the development, implementation, and evaluation of the statewide system of family support for families of children with disabilities. In the application, States should also describe the unmet needs for family support for families of children with disabilities in the State.

When applying for a grant, States should designate a lead entity that will coordinate activities funded under the grant with activities of other relevant State and local agencies. The lead agency should have the capacity to promote a statewide system of family support for families of children with disabilities throughout the State that is family-centered and family-directed; to promote and implement systems change activities; and to maximize access to public and private funds for family support services for families of children with disabilities. The application should also designate the involvement of other State or local agencies, including local councils, in the preparation of the application and the continuing role of each agency in the statewide system of family support for families of children with disabilities.

We have given States maximum flexibility in selecting activities they will implement in providing family support services for families of children with disabilities. The State may support training and technical assistance activities for family members, service providers, community members, professionals, students, and others to increase family participation, choice, and control in the provision of family support services for families of children with disabilities; to develop or strengthen family-centered and family-directed approaches to services, including service coordination services, service planning services, and respite care services; and to assist families of children with disabilities in accessing natural and community supports and in obtaining benefits and services.

A State may conduct needs assessments, evaluations of data related to the statewide system of family support for families of children with disabilities, or pilot demonstration projects to demonstrate new approaches to the provision of family support services for families of children with disabilities. A State may also support activities to identify and coordinate Federal and State policies, resources, and services, relating to the provision of family support services for families of children with disabilities, including interagency activities and agreements.

In addition, a State may conduct outreach activities to locate families who are eligible for family support services for families of children with disabilities; to solicit input from such families; and to identify groups who are unserved and underserved. Such activities may involve the creation or maintenance of, support of, or provision of, assistance to statewide and community parent organizations, and organizations that provide family support to families of children with disabilities; the dissemination of relevant information; and other education activities.

In closing, I remind my colleagues that the toughest barriers faced by people with disabilities are not architectural, they are attitudinal. They are not in the environment, they are in our hearts and in our minds. When people with disabilities are integrated throughout our communities, we are given the opportunity to change our attitudes from ones based on stereotypes, fear, and ignorance, to ones based on admiration, acceptance, and affection.

In this way, the Developmental Disabilities Act benefits all of us. Not only are people with disabilities assisted in taking their rightful place in the mainstream of American society. Not only are families that include a child with a disability given access to the supports, resources, and services needed to maintain family unity. But in the process, we all gain from the opportunity to experience people with developmental disabilities as friends, as neighbors, as co-workers, as classmates.

I especially thank Senator JEFFORDS and Senator KENNEDY for their leadership on this issue, and I am glad to join so many of my colleagues from the HELP Committee as a co-sponsor of this legislation.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee substitute be agreed to, the bill be considered read the third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1809), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

RECOGNIZING AMERICA'S NONGOVERNMENTAL ORGANIZATIONS AND PRIVATE VOLUNTEER ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the immediate consideration of calendar No. 379, S. Con. Res. 30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) recognizing the sacrifice and dedication of members of America's nongovernmental organizations (NGOs) and private volunteer organizations (PVOs) throughout their history and specifically in answer to their courageous response to recent disasters in Central America and Kosovo.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to this resolution be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) was agreed to, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 30

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress—

(1) recognizes and commends the sacrifice, dedication, and commitment of those serving with, and those who have served with, American nongovernmental organizations (NGO's) and private volunteer organizations (PVO's) that provide humanitarian relief to millions of the world's poor and displaced;

(2) urges all Americans to join in commemorating and honoring those serving in, and those who have served in, America's NGO and PVO community for their sacrifice, dedication and commitment; and

(3) calls upon the people of the United States to appreciate and reflect upon the commitment and dedication of relief workers, that they often serve in harm's way with threats to their own health and safety, and their organizations who have responded to recent tragedies in Central America and Kosovo with great care, skill, and speed, and to make appropriate steps to recognize and encourage awareness of the contributions that these relief workers and their organizations have made in helping ease human suffering.

EXPRESSING CONCERN OVER FREEDOM OF PRESS AND ELECTORAL INSTITUTIONS IN PERU

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the immediate consideration of calendar No. 378, S. Res. 209.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 209) expressing concern over interference with freedom of the press and independence of judicial and electoral institutions in Peru.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to, the preamble be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to the resolution appear at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 209) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 209

Whereas the independence of Peru's legislative and judicial branches has been brought into question by the May 29, 1997, dismissal of 3 Constitutional Tribunal magistrates;

Whereas Peru's National Council of Magistrates and the National Election Board have been manipulated by President Alberto Fujimori and his allies so he can seek a third term in office;

Whereas the Department of State's Country Report on Human Rights Practices for 1998, dated February 26, 1999, concludes, with respect to Peru, that ''government intelligence agents allegedly orchestrated a campaign of spurious attacks by the tabloid press against a handful of publishers and investigative journalists in the strongly pro-opposition daily La Republica and the other print outlets and electronic media'';

Whereas the Department of State's Country Report on Human Rights Practices for 1997, dated January 30, 1998, states that Channel 2 television station reporters in Peru ''revealed torture by Army Intelligence Service Officers'' and ''the systematic wiretapping of journalists, government officials, and opposition politicians'';

Whereas on July 13, 1997, Peruvian immigration authorities revoked the Peruvian citizenship of Baruch Ivcher, the Israeli-born owner of the Channel 2 television station; and

Whereas Baruch Ivcher subsequently lost control of Channel 2 under an interpretation of a law that provides that a foreigner may not own a media organization, causing the Department of State's Report on Human Rights Practices for 1998 to report that ''threats and harassment continued against Baruch Ivcher and some of his former journalists and administrative staff . . . Resolved,

SECTION 1. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON ANTI-DEMOCRATIC MEASURES BY THE GOVERNMENT OF PERU.

It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the erosion of the independence of judicial and electoral branches of the Government of Peru and the blatant intimidation of journalists in Peru are matters of serious concern to the United States;

(2) efforts by any person or political movement in Peru to undermine that country's constitutional order for personal or political gain are inconsistent with the standard of representative democracy in the Western Hemisphere;

(3) the Government of the United States supports the effort of the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights to report on the pattern of threats to democracy, freedom of the press, and judicial independence by the Government of Peru; and

(4) systematic abuse of the rule of law and threats to democracy in Peru could undermine the confidence of foreign investors in, as well as the creditworthiness of, Peru.

SEC. 2. TRANSMITTAL OF RESOLUTION.

The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the Secretary of State with the request that the Secretary further transmit such copy to the Secretary General of the Organization of American States, the President of the Inter-American Development Bank, and the President of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

UNITED STATES POLICY TOWARD NATO AND THE EUROPEAN UNION

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of calendar No. 377, S. Res. 208.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 208) expressing the sense of the Senate regarding United States policy toward the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and European Union, in light of the Alliance's April 1999 Washington Summit and the European Union's June 1999 Cologne Summit.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

AMENDMENT NO. 2776

(Purpose: To make technical amendments)

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. GRASSLEY], for Mr. LEVIN, proposes an amendment numbered 2776.

The amendment is as follows:

In section 1(b), strike paragraph (1) and insert the following:

(1) on matters of trans-Atlantic concern, the European Union should make clear that it would undertake an autonomous mission through the European Security and Defense Identity only after the North Atlantic Treaty Organization had declined to undertake that mission;

In section 1(b)(5), strike ''must'' and insert ''should''.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wish to explain my amendment to S. Res. 208 expressing the sense of the Senate on United States policy toward NATO and the European Union and my own personal view regarding the desirability of our European Allies conducting operations in their own backyard.

My amendment makes three important changes to the language of the resolution as reported out by the Foreign Relations Committee.

First of all, the amendment substitutes ''the'' for ''its'' before ''European Security and Defense Identity'' to make the point that the European Security and Defense Identity, or ESDI, is being developed within, not outside, the NATO Alliance. This simple fact is enshrined in a number of North Atlantic Council communiques and declarations, starting with the Declaration of Heads of State and Government issued at the Council meeting in Brussels on June 11, 1994. This is important because the development of the ESDI within the Alliance means that, as the 1994 Brussels Declaration stated, ''NATO will remain the essential forum for consultation among its members and the venue for agreement on policies bearing on security and defense commitments of Allies under the Washington Treaty.''

Next, my amendment deletes the references to NATO being ''offered the opportunity to undertake the mission'' and then that NATO ''referred it to the European Union for action.'' The first point here is that on one has to offer a mission to NATO; the North Atlantic Council is in permanent session so that it can continuously review events that could impact on stability in the Euro-Atlantic area and can react to them, if necessary. Consequently, it doesn't have to be offered an opportunity to undertake a mission; it has that responsibility and the means to effect it on a continuing basis. The next point is that NATO doesn't refer a mission to the European Union; the EU will undoubtedly have been following such an event on its own and won't need a referral from NATO to do so. And the final and perhaps most important point is that this change removes the connotation that somehow the European Union is subservient to NATO.

The last change is to simply substitute ''should'' for ''must'' in the subparagraph relating to the implementation of the European Union's Common Foreign and Security Policy. This will avoid the connotation that the United States is dictating to an organization of sovereign states.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to express my own personal view concerning the desirability of our European Allies conducting operations in their own backyard. I have long been a supporter of the ESDI and I am a supporter of the U.S.-sponsored Defense Capabilities Initiative that was recently adopted by NATO. NATO's Operation Allied Force demonstrated a capabilities gap between the United States and our NATO Allies. I welcome the stated determination of our European Allies to develop the capability to act on their own. I welcome the fact that they are providing more than 80 percent of the forces participating in the NATO-led Kosovo Force. I would welcome it if our European Allies would handle the next crisis that develops in Europe. I would be happy if the United States' contribution was limited, for instance, to providing such things as command and control, communications, and intelligence support and I would be even more pleased if the United States didn't have to provide any support and our European Allies were capable of handling a crisis on their own.

I have characterized the United States as being a junior partner and the European Allies being the senior partner in the KFOR peacekeeping mission. I know that there are many people, including some within the Administration who don't like that characterization, but I see nothing wrong with it.

Mr. President, the United States Congress for years has urged Europe to play a greater role in its own defense and to bear more of the collective security burden in NATO. I, for one, can take yes for an answer.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to, the resolution and preamble be agreed to en bloc, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, that any statements relating thereto be placed in the RECORD as if read in the appropriate place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 2776) was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

[The resolution was not available for printing. It will appear in a future edition of the RECORD.]

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1999

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, November 9. I further ask consent that on Tuesday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed to have expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then resume debate on S. 625, the bankruptcy reform bill, under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess from the hours of 12:30 p.m. to 2:15 p.m. tomorrow for the weekly policy conferences to meet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, for the information of all Senators, the Senate will resume consideration of the bankruptcy bill at 9:30 on Tuesday. There will be 1 hour of debate on the pending minimum wage and business cost amendments, with votes scheduled to occur at 10:30 a.m. Further amendments are expected to be offered and debated and therefore votes are expected throughout tomorrow's session of the Senate. Senators can also anticipate votes regarding the appropriations process prior to the Veterans Day recess.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GRASSLEY. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order following the remarks of the Senator from Oregon, Mr. WYDEN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 20 minutes in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE SPICE ACT

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, the newspapers of the Nation this weekend were filled with stories about the politics of prescription drug coverage for the Nation's elderly. One poll after another said that the question of covering prescription drugs for seniors was one of the top three concerns of millions of Americans—not just seniors, but people of all ages. And then, in addition to all the polls and surveys that were published this weekend, some of our most distinguished political journalists were out across the country interviewing people in America asking them what they thought about Congress' handling of the prescription drug issue. And one interview after another essentially has seniors and families responding that they could not figure out why the Congress in Washington, DC, could not tackle this issue in a bipartisan way.

I remember one of the interviewees in particular, in effect, saying, ''What are they so busy fussing about in Washington, DC, that they can't find the time to deal with an issue so important to millions of older people?'' I think that person who got interviewed pretty much summed it up.

I have been coming up to the floor of the Senate over the last 2 or 3 weeks in an effort to try to bring folks' attention, both in the Senate and in our country, that there is bipartisan legislation to cover the question of prescription drugs for older people, and to talk about why it is so important. As part of that effort, as you can see in the poster next to me, I have been urging that seniors send in copies of their prescription drug bills—actually send in copies of their prescription drug bills to those of us in the Senate in Washington, DC. I have been getting a great many of these bills. I have been coming to the floor on a number of occasions and actually reading from these bills because I think it helps to drive home what we saw in the newspapers all across the country this weekend, and that is that we have to come up with a bipartisan plan to meet these needs of vulnerable elderly people.

So tonight I am going to read from some of the letters that I am receiving from older people at home in Oregon. Four letters in particular struck me as particularly compelling in recent days. I have heard from folks in North Bend, Redmond, Roseburg, and Milwaukie in the metropolitan area of our State. All of them essentially make the same kind of case, and that is that so many seniors are walking on an economic tightrope. They are balancing food costs against the fuel costs and the fuel costs against their medical bills. With so many being unable to afford their prescriptions, they are writing and saying they can't afford to wait for another election, the 2000 election, to resolve this issue. They have been reading these articles with Members of Congress saying that it is too complicated to tackle now. It is too difficult to get a consensus. I just don't think that is the case.

There is a bipartisan bill now before the U.S. Senate. It is one that was drafted by the distinguished senior Senator from Maine, OLYMPIA SNOWE, and myself. We got 54 votes for it on the floor of the Senate. A majority of Members of the Senate voted in a specific way to fund the prescription drug benefit for the Nation's older people. So it is just not right to say that there is no consensus, there is no way to bring Senators of both political parties together on this issue. It is just factually wrong. Fifty-four Members of the Senate have said that they would vote for a specific approach to funding a drug benefit for the Nation's older people, and it was a bipartisan vote. It wasn't done in the dead of night. It was part of the budget debate. A majority in the Senate is now on record.

It is a plan that I think unleashes the forces of the marketplace. It is built on the model from which Members of Congress get their health care, the Federal Employees Health Benefits Plan. It is called the SPICE Program, the Senior Prescription Insurance Coverage Equity Act. It gives seniors the kind of bargaining power that some of these big purchasers such as the health maintenance organizations have.

Right now, seniors with prescriptions get hit by sort of a double whammy.

First, Medicare doesn't cover prescriptions. It hasn't since the program began in 1965.

Second, when a senior citizen walks into a drugstore, walks into their neighborhood pharmacy, in effect that senior has to pay a premium for their prescription drugs because the big buyers actually get discounts.

You have these health care plans. You have health maintenance organizations. You have the big buyers going out and negotiating discounts. Then senior citizens walk into the pharmacy in their community in effect having to pay a premium and in effect subsidizing the big buyers in town who get these discounts.

I am often asked whether our country can afford to cover prescription drugs for the Nation's older people. My response is that America can't afford not to cover these prescription drugs because so many of these drugs at this time are essentially ones that help keep older people well. They help keep them healthy—lower blood pressure, deal with cholesterol problems—and keep seniors from getting sick and landing in the hospital where they need very expensive services from what is called the Part A program of Medicare, the hospital institutional part.

I have cited on several occasions on the floor of the Senate anticoagulant drugs because I think they best illustrate how serious the problem is and why it needs a bipartisan solution along the lines of the Snowe-Wyden bill. It makes some sense. These anticoagulant drugs might cost in the vicinity of $1,000 a year to cover the needs of an older person. But if with anticoagulant medicine we can prevent this debilitating injury, that could save in the vicinity of $100,000. That would be expenses incurred when an older person suffers a stroke.

Think of that: $1,000 for an anticoagulant medicine, and as a result of a senior being able to afford that, very often that person can stay healthy and keep from being struck by debilitating stroke and incurring $100,000 in expenses that would come about as a result of that illness.

I hope seniors will continue to write to me and to other Members of the Senate, as this poster says. We hope they will send us copies of their prescription drug bills and actually send copies of how they are affected to each of us here in the Senate in Washington, DC.

I want to take just a minute or two now to read from some of the letters I have received in the last few days.

One of the first is a letter I received from an older couple in North Bend. The spouse is 73. Her husband is 77. They report that they have about $18,000 a year in Social Security income and spend about $2,000 of it on their prescription drugs. They have a Blue Cross plan. It doesn't cover any of their prescriptions—none of them.

I think this is really sort of typical of what I have been hearing from senior citizens across our State.

Here is a copy of what these bills look like for folks who are thinking about sending them to us. This one comes from North Bend, OR. It comes from the Safeway pharmacy there in North Bend. An older couple points out in a letter to me that they simply are not going to be able to afford what they are told is going to be the next increase. They are told that next month their bills are going to go up again on top of what I have cited they are having to pay for over-the-counter medications as well. Compared to some of their friends, they are not what they call ''pill takers.'' With an income of $18,000 a year, think of having to spend about $2,000 of it on prescription drugs, and that doesn't even count for what they spend on over-the-counter medications. Their bills are going up again next month.

These are the kinds of people to whom I think the Senate ought to be listening.

Another letter I received in the last few days comes from an older couple in Redmond. They sent me this bill for the month of October. Just for the month of October, colleagues who maybe listening in—$282 a month just for the month of October from an older couple in Redmond. They went to the Rite-Aid Pharmacy in a mall in Redmond. They are faced now with the prospect of having to spend $282 a month all year round on their prescriptions, and, suffice it to say, they too are asking why it is that the Congress, and the Senate specifically, isn't being responsive. Here is a third bill I received in the last few days. This is from an older woman who is spending close to $300 a month on her prescription drugs at the Wal-Mart in Roseburg.

This is again the kind of real-life case to which I think the Senate ought to be paying attention. They are just sending us now copies of their bills. These are not drugs that are uncommon. Glucophage, for example, for a lot of seniors is an essential medicine because it helps them with their diabetes. When senior citizens can't afford to pay for a prescription for glucophage, they are going to suffer some very serious health problems as a result.

I cited examples at the end of last week.

There are seniors at home in Oregon who have prescriptions their doctor wrote out for drugs such as that, and they simply could not afford to have them filled. They were hanging on to the prescription hoping that sometime down the road they would get the funds to be able to afford their prescriptions.

That is the kind of case we are hearing about from the Nation's older people.

I hope folks who are listening in tonight will see, as this poster says, that we hope to hear from more of them. We would like for them, as this poster says, to send copies of their prescription drug bills directly to us in the Senate in Washington, DC.

I intend to keep coming to the floor of this body and going through some of these cases in the hopes that this can pique the conscience of the Senate for bipartisan action.

Finally, tonight I have one other bill that struck me as so poignant and really summing it up. It comes from an older man who sends his wife's mother's bill because she is 91 and she is spending about $400 per month on prescription medicines. The letter says this is outrageous for a 91-year-old person, a person who is on a fixed income, to have to pay. She is 91 years old. The list goes on for pages.

I am going to wrap up tonight by saying it would be one thing if you couldn't bring Senators together around an important issue and simply not find any consensus whatsoever.

That is not the case with respect to the Snowe-Wyden legislation. The senior Senator from Maine and I have teamed up on a bill that is modeled after the kind of health care Members of the United States Senate receive.

Mr. President, 54 Members of the Senate, as part of the budget debate, said they would vote for a way to pay for the plan. We are seeing these polls and interviews along the lines of what I cited. Newspapers were filled this weekend with folks saying, why can't the Senate act? That is the question: Why can't the Senate act when there is a bipartisan bill?

The SPICE legislation, the Senior Prescription Insurance Coverage Equity Act, is legislation I believe can move forward because it is bipartisan. Certainly, our colleagues have other ideas about how to proceed. Senator SNOWE and I are anxious to hear from them with respect to their approach.

What is important is that the Senate stop ducking this issue. The Senate ought to say we are now going to recognize how serious these concerns of the Nation's older people are and not just put them off and say it is too complicated to deal with now and we will talk about it in 2001, but with a year to go until election, we ought to roll up our sleeves and come up with a bipartisan plan to address these needs.

Until that time, I hope seniors will continue to send copies of their prescription drug bills to each Senator. I am particularly anxious to have them. Send them to our offices in Washington, DC. I will keep coming to the floor of this body, reading from letters from folks, including this 91-year-old who cannot afford next month's increase in prescription drugs, folks who cannot pay for their diabetes medicine and are likely to get much sicker as a result. I intend to keep coming to the floor of this body, reading from those letters, and doing everything I can to try to bring the Senate together around bipartisan legislation to meet the needs of our elderly.

The approach behind the Snowe-Wyden legislation does not involve price controls. We have a lot of Senators legitimately concerned about that. It is not a one-size-fits-all Federal regime. It is a model based on something we all know well. That is the Federal Employees Health Benefits Plan. In fact, the SPICE Program that Senator SNOWE and I have drafted is a senior citizens version of the Federal Employees Health Benefits Plan. We are convinced it can work for the Nation's older people.

I hope we will not pass up this opportunity to address these heartfelt concerns that seniors are passing on. I hope we will not say this issue is too complicated for the Senate to act. We may be leaving in a few days, but there will be an opportunity in the days ahead to bring Senators of both political parties together and fashion legislation that is responsive to the country's older people. I am convinced older people cannot afford to wait another year, wait another year for politicking and debates to go forward. Certainly, based on the kinds of bills, as the bill I read from, including the 91-year-old senior spending $400 a month, she cannot afford to wait, at 91, for another year of electioneering. I believe when there is a bipartisan bill before the Senate, she shouldn't have to wait.

I will continue to read from these letters. I hope folks will send copies of their prescription drug bills. We need to act on this matter. We saw again this weekend how important it is to the American people. I will be coming back to this floor again and again and again until we get bipartisan action on this urgent matter for millions of the Nation's older people.

I yield the floor.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate stands in adjournment until 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, November 9, 1999.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 8:16 p.m., adjourned until Tuesday, November 9, 1999, at 9:30 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 8, 1999:

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD

CAROL JONES CARMODY, OF LOUISIANA, TO BE A MEMBER OF THE NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD FOR A TERM EXPIRING DECEMBER 31, 2004, VICE ROBERT TALCOTT FRANCIS II.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

DONALD W. HORTON, OF MARYLAND, TO BE UNITED STATES MARSHAL FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA FOR THE TERM OF FOUR YEARS, VICE HERBERT M. RUTHERFORD III, TERM EXPIRED.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

POST OFFICE NAMING IN BALTIMORE, MARYLAND

HON. ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce this bill to designate five United States Postal Service buildings after five individuals who made significant contributions to Baltimore and the State of Maryland.

I believe that persons who have made meaningful contributions to society should be recognized and honored. The naming of a postal building in one's honor is truly a salute to their accomplishments and public service. These individuals are Samuel Lacy, Judge Robert Bernard Watts, Judge Harry Augustus Cole, Frederick Dewberry, Jr., and Flossie McClain Desmond.

I will give a brief biographical description of the individuals and the locations of the post office being named.

The ''Samuel H. Lacy, Sr. Post Office Building'' will be located at 919 West 34th Street, Baltimore, Maryland.

Samuel H. Lacy was a renowned sports writer and editor for the Baltimore Afro-American Newspaper since 1944. He spent 60 years in journalism, working with radio, television, and the print media.

The ''Judge Robert Bernard Watts, Sr. Post Office Building'' will be located at 3500 Dolfield Avenue, Baltimore, Maryland.

Judge Robert Bernard Watts, Sr. was the first African-American to be appointed full time to the Bench of the Municipal Court of Baltimore City. Judge Watts, who was born in West Baltimore, graduated with honors from Morgan State College in 1943 and then served in the Army until 1945. He earned a law degree from the University of Maryland in 1949. Judge Watts was at the center of the Civil Rights Movement and worked closely with the NAACP. His dedication to civil rights led him to a long working relationship with the late Justice Thurgood Marshall. Judge Watts was instrumental in desegregating numerous theaters, restaurants, department stores, hotels and the Gwynn Oak Amusement Park. Watts was the first judge in Maryland to open hundreds of adoption records reuniting numerous families.

The ''Judge Harry Augustus Cole Post Office Building'' will be located at 900 E. Fayette Street, Baltimore, Maryland.

Judge Harry Augustus Cole was the first African American Assistant Attorney General in Baltimore City, the first African American to be elected to the State Senate of Maryland, the first Chairman of the Maryland Advisory Committee to the United States Civil Rights Commission, and the first African American to be named to Maryland's highest court, the Maryland Court of Appeals. Educated in the Baltimore City Public School System, Judge Cole graduated from Morgan State University in 1943. While at Morgan, he was the President of the Student Council, and Founder and first Editor-in-Chief of the Spokesman College Newspaper. A World War II veteran, Judge Cole graduated from the University of Maryland School of Law and practiced criminal and civil rights law.

The ''Frederick L. Dewberry, Jr. Post Office Building'' will be located at 1001 Frederick Road, in Baltimore, Maryland.

Frederick L. Dewberry, Jr. was born and raised in Baltimore City. He is a graduate of Loyola College and received a law degree from the University of Baltimore. A World War II veteran, Mr. Dewberry held the post of Chairman of the Baltimore County Council from 1964 to 1966. From 1979 to 1984, Frederick Dewberry was the Deputy Secretary of the Maryland Department of Transportation.

The ''Dr. Flossie McClain Desmond Post Office Building'' will be located at 1908 North Ellamont Street, in Baltimore, Maryland.

Dr. Flossie McClain Desmond earned a bachelor's degree in English from Fisk University, received a Master's degree from Columbia University and pursued post graduate studies at Ohio State University and Catholic University of America. She served in teaching and administrative positions at Allen University, Benedict College, Knoxville College, Morgan State University, and Coppin State College. Dr. Desmond spent 31 years working at Coppin State College, where she served in numerous roles. Upon her retirement, the honor of ''Dean Emeritus'' was bestowed upon her. In 1993, Coppin's first residence hall was named after her and is called, ''The Flossie M. Desmond Center For Living and Learning.'' A talented musician, Dr. Desmond composed the Alma Mater for Allen University and the song is still in use today.

Muhammad Ali, the greatest boxer of all time once said that ''service to others is the rent you pay for your room here on earth.'' Samuel Lacy, Judge Robert Bernard Watts, Judge Harry Augustus Cole, Frederick Dewberry, Jr., and Flossie McClain Desmond have paid their rent. I am honored to submit this legislation saluting five people from my district who spent their lives giving service to others.

I urge my colleagues to support this worthwhile measure.

CELEBRATING THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF IMMANUEL UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to recognize a truly remarkable church. The Immanuel United Methodist Church building may have moved around Eastpointe several times since its founding as the Roseville German Methodist Church in 1849, but its congregation has stood its ground in the community for all of its 150 years.

The church conducted its services in German until 1923, helping establish an identity for the German immigrants that settled in the area. As the population changed, so did the church which has evolved to meet the needs of the community. The church can credit its longevity to the teaching ''Do unto others as you would have done unto you''. Immanuel United Methodist Church has never focused on itself, but through its good works has established itself as an anchor to the Eastpointe community.

The original structure stood on what is now the grounds of the Eastpointe Police Station, where the original cemetery still sits. The structure built in 1874 was well known for the lighted revolving cross that could be seen for miles atop the church steeple. It became known as ''The Church of the Revolving Cross''.

When the state chose to widen Gratiot Avenue in 1933, the church moved to its present site and added an educational unit in 1956. Today, the church's 450 members are quite proud of the well-known stained glass window picturing Christ as ''The Good Shepherd''. The church is in fact a good shepherd to our community. The congregation provides an emergency food pantry, furnishes weekly meals to a local warming shelter, and supplies salary support for a mission in Africa.

Since the days when the area was known as ''bush territory'' wild and unsettled, the church has been a part of our community, and we all look forward to many, many more years of service and dedication. Please join me in wishing all the best to the Immanuel United Methodist Church on its 150th anniversary.

TRIBUTE TO ANGELO STATE UNIVERSITY

HON. CHARLES W. STENHOLM

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize an outstanding educational institution in the 17th District of Texas. Angelo State University in San Angelo, Texas, provides top rate education to students from across Texas, the United States and the world. The University will be completing construction of its Rao Alumni and Visitors Center in 2001.

Last Friday, during homecoming festivities, a time capsule was dedicated and buried by the Alumni Association. This time capsule serves as a symbol of the University's commitment to the future. Included in the capsule was a flag flown over the Capitol as our dedication to future generations.

The capsule will be opened during the homecoming celebration in 2025.

I would like to submit for the RECORD a copy of a resolution that I offered the University on this very special occasion.

It is my hope that this nation and my home state of Texas will continue to honor universities like Angelo State University that have dedicated themselves to providing the best possible education to its students.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, Angelo State University will complete construction of its Rao Alumni and Visitors Center in 2001; and

Whereas, This center will serve as a link to the future and the past of Angelo State University, welcoming both new students and its alumni; and

Whereas, Angelo State University has made an ongoing commitment to the future by providing a top rate education to students from across Texas, the United States and the world; and

Whereas, The dedication of this time capsule by the Alumni Association serves as a symbol of Angelo State's commitment to the future; and

Whereas, We included in this capsule a flag flown over our nation's capitol on October 4, 1999, as symbol of our dedication to those future generations who will open it during the 2025 Angelo State University homecoming celebration, be it

Resolved, That I, Charles W. Stenholm, as Congressman for the 17th District of Texas, do officially recognize and extend my best wishes on the dedication of this capsule by the Angelo State University Alumni Association and that an official copy of this resolution be presented to the University and Alumni Association as an expression of my high regards for their efforts.

CHARLES W. STENHOLM,
Member of Congress.

COOPERATION BETWEEN THE GAMBIA AND NASA

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to highlight for my colleagues the continued cooperation between The Gambia and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA). The Gambia's President, Dr. Yahya Jammeh, recently completed his first visit to the United States as head-of-State, and I had the opportunity to meet with him personally to discuss issues of mutual interest.

The Banjul Airport has been among four select locations in the world designated as augmented emergency landing sites and recovery locations for the United States Space Shuttle. NASA space shuttles, launched eastward in a ballistic trajectory over the Atlantic Ocean, fly directly over Banjul, thus making it an ideal location for emergency landings if needed. Banjul International Airport (BIA) boasts an ultra-modern $10 million passenger terminal, a new nine-floor Air Traffic Control Tower, newly installed security systems, and upgraded airfield lighting and navigation systems. In addition, The Gambia's Civil Aviation Authority (GCAA) works closely with the United Space Alliance, which is responsible for operating the Transoceanic Abort Landing (TAL) sites for every NASA space shuttle mission.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend NASA and President Jammeh for their cooperation, and I strongly encourage them to continue to work together in the future.

A TRIBUTE TO ROY QUICK OF QUICK TAX & ACCOUNTING SERVICE ON SELECTION TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE ADVISORY COUNCIL

HON. JAMES M. TALENT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate a resident of Missouri's 2nd District and a friend—Mr. Roy M. Quick, Jr. on his selection to serve as a member of the Internal Revenue Service Advisory Council (IRSAC). Roy, who is a small business owner back home in St. Louis, runs Quick Tax and Accounting Service with his wife Edith.

The primary role of the IRSAC is to advise the Commissioner of the IRS on the public's perceptions of IRS activities and current and future tax administration programs and initiatives. As a Member of Congress who attends many town hall meetings, women in chamber and business roundtable events back home, I can tell you that this is definitely an area where the IRS has plenty of room for improvement. The group suggests operational improvements and offers constructive observations about current or proposed policies, programs and procedures. In essence, the men and women who sit on this Council could be called the inner voice of the IRS.

While I am proud to announce the selection of Roy Quick to the IRSAC, I am especially pleased by the fact that seven of the new IRSAC members are small business owners. For too long, small business owners have not had a seat at the table when talking about the complex regulatory and tax issues that leave them in a quagmire of compliance paperwork. I am hopeful that with seven of the fourteen slots on the IRSAC now being held by small business owners that these men and women will offer guidance and a real life perspective to the decision-making process that affects more than 12 million small business owners across the nation.

Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the House Committee on Small business, I ask all of you to join me in offering not only our congratulations but our appreciation to these men and women—the small business owners like Roy Quick—who every day are working to keep America's engine—small business—running and on course to a better tomorrow.

A TRIBUTE TO SENIORS HELPING PEOPLE

HON. RANDY "DUKE" CUNNINGHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Al Graff and Dick Wheelock for their humanitarian contributions to our local community. The article below from the June 17, 1999, Coast News highlights their tremendous accomplishments in providing health care to the uninsured in San Diego County. Mr. Graff and Dr. Wheelock deserve our sincere congratulations for their efforts. They should be proud of their work, and I am proud to have such fine individuals as constituents.

[From the Coast News, June 17, 1999]

RETIRED FRIENDS TENDING TO THE PEOPLE'S NEEDS

By Jack Broward

EDEN GARDENS—There is no more appropriate term in describing Al Graff, 80, and his partner Dick Wheelock, 73, than synergism: working together as a team, they exceed what could otherwise be achieved individually.

Yet, judged individually, Graff stood at the very pinnacle of his engineering profession as an executive with General Atomics before retirement in 1983 as director of International Operations.

Dr. G. Richard Wheelock, founding Medical Director in 1955 of the Del Mar Medical Clinic, was for the seaside community of Del Mar, only the area's second medical doctor to practice there at that time. It was not long before Wheelock's medical colleague retired, leaving him as the only physician in town.

Like all areas of North San Diego County's coastal region, the climate, lifestyles and informality attracted tens of thousands of new residents. In time, new doctors, joined the clinic as patient load increased.

In retrospect, Wheelock thinks now that he might have never retired without the retirement party that his wife threw for him without advance notice!

For as many years as he can remember, Rancho Santa Fe resident Al Griff has been an advocate for social justice, a calling he refers to as ''the needs of the people''

The Berkeley graduate forged over the years, a dedication to social justice that eventually manifested itself in his ordination as a deacon at Solna Beach's St. James Catholic church. His new role in life began the day after his retirement in 1983.

The plot thickens with Wheelock's retirement from practice in Del Mar after 44 years as ''the village doctor.''

Graff's good health, agile mind and aggressive spirit were the elements key to the ultimate establishment of a medical clinic here in Eden Gardens.

His lengthy friendship with Wheelock included participation in community efforts to aid the poor and needy residents of Tijuana, ''We were returning from Tijuana one Saturday afternoon after delivering medical supplied donations from area hospitals in the region,'' recalls Graff, ''Dick asked me what I thought about opening a small clinic adjoining St. Leo's Mission.''

Through arrangements made by St. James Pastor, the Reverend John Howard (St. Leo's Mission is a subsidiary of St. James), it was agreed that a clinic was needed. The Mission, located on some four acres of property, is a focal point of community life in Eden Gardens. Social as well as religious events draw parishioners to the facility for wide ranging activities throughout the week.

''We situated the clinic in a single room in the back of the church, using the kitchen facilities as a patient waiting room.'' Dick Wheelock recalls, telling how, in 1992, the clinic's presence was a ''word-of-mouth'' operation.

Sunday Mass announcements included (and still do) a run-down about clinic hours, special education awareness programs, vaccinations for babies, a yearly mammogram program for women over 40 years of age as well as numerous other special programs offered by the clinic. In a short time, the clinic patient load outgrew its single-room operation. The addition of two more small rooms plus an indoor patient waiting room that also serves as the filing-administration section was eventually provided.

Thursday evenings from 6–9 p.m. and Saturday mornings from 9 until noon are the current scheduled hours of operation. But I noticed in visits for this story, that the medical staff, comprised of Wheelock and an all-volunteer team of area physicians, medical students from UCSD, nurses, technicians and administrative personnel remained at the clinic as long as patients were waiting to be seen.

''From the beginning, we realized the need for dispensing dignity and integrity along with medical treatments,'' notes Graff, explaining that the $5 per-patient ''donation'' may only be a token exchange for services and payment. ''But, this helps preserve the patient's dignity. Those unable to pay are treated with equal respect and medical care. All examinations, medications and related services are free. But the $5 fee creates a fund used for the purchase of logistical needs not donated by outside sources,'' Graff explains, noting that the clinic's overall operations are supported by grants that he applies for and receives from a variety of institutions and non-profit organizations.

With diabetes within Hispanic communities a major concern for the medics, the clinic conducts weekly diabetic health education programs for Eden Garden families. There is an estimated population of 12,500 residents in the area, according to Graff. Ninety-five percent of those who come to the clinic are from working poor families, the majority of whom are without health coverage, he said, emphasizing that ''Everyone who comes through that door is accepted.'' Patients on MediCare are referred to medical facilities elsewhere, it was noted. On a Saturday morning during one of my visits to the clinic, a multitude of patients, mothers with their infant children, husbands and wives, school-age youngsters, all were waiting in a patio shaded by trees. Patient loads currently are running at about 60 patients on each of the twice per-week days of operation.

One of the most redeeming qualities associated with the clinic is first, that an efficient, highly professional medical facility is maintained in close proximity to community residents. Next, that those patients seen by the clinic relieves the burden that otherwise would necessarily be cared for by public health agencies, explained Victor Tostada, another of the staff volunteers who serves as administrative director.

In an annual report issued last February, it is emphasized that ''All patients, especially infants and children, are accepted regardless of race, color, origin or creed.''

In its mission statement accompanying the report, it is also noted that the clinic presents ''no competition with medical, dental or hospital professions, but a relief of a burden of caring for the working poor.''

States Deacon Graff, ''We estimate about $600,000 yearly in services and medicines as well as specialized requirements (provided at no cost by other medical institutions) are provided for our patients free from any impact on local, state or federal government resources. Because St. Leo's Mission is the sponsoring agency, our patients accept our services as they do in all other church-sponsored benefits.''

Among the clinic volunteers on duty during my visits was Dr. Marsha Blount, a resident family practice physician at Sharp's. Rounding out a full year of service, the North Carolina native and graduate of Duke University and Jefferson Medical School in Philadelphia, commented to me, ''You learn to think on your feet here. It is hands-on experience that would otherwise be hard to gain.''

Another resident physician at Sharp's, Jill Panitch, agreed with her colleague and told how second and third-year resident physicians volunteer one year of service to the clinic.

Michael Tilton, an undergraduate medical student at UCSD has been volunteering his services for the past 18 months. And fifty-year, now-retired nurse Martha Moyer, a Del Mar resident, explained between treating patients that the clinic tries to serve the working poor from Del Mar to Encinitas. She recalls in 1992 reading about the clinic that was intended to open at St. Leo's in Eden Garden. ''That's how I wound up as a volunteer.''

It is reflection of my limited abilities to not include in this story all of the names of clinic volunteers. The redeeming quality about their service, though, is that they serve—at no cost—because they are needed. Fulfillment, professional and personal, is their reward.

Already on the drawing board at the clinic is a 600 square-foot dental facility to be constructed by volunteer labor and funds supplied by the parish of St. James and St. Leo's Mission as well as from the Del Mar and Sunrise Rotary Club members. Three dental chairs, x-ray equipment and ancillary requirements are identified in the construction plans, according to Graff. His programs, current as well as those on the horizon, are extensive and infinite in measures of contributions to be made to community life in Eden Gardens. He manages dedication, consistent with his and Wheelock's accomplishments of the past.

I waited until now to introduce more fully Dr. Wheelock, a type-cast-physician who may've posed a half-century ago for one of artist Norman Rockwell's cover paintings for Saturday Evening Post. He reflects in his conversation and mannerisms a sense of genuine modesty, characteristic of remote regions of Arizona and the southwest where he was born and raised.

Recalling his closing years as head of the old Del Mar Clinic, Wheelock told of young doctors at the clinic approaching him on the subject of expanding the facility that he founded, keeping pace with the population growth and adding to a facility that was dedicated to serving the medical needs of families in the community. I felt the pressures but I just didn't feel comfortable with the prospects of expanding. So I retired.

But not for long. Today, after six years of building-back growth in his and Al Graff's new clinic, there has likely been restored in the career of Dick Wheelock, a sense of picking up where he left off so many years ago, during the infancy of his Del Mar Clinic. Says his partner. ''Dick Wheelock is deeply devoted to his profession and those who look to him for relief from pain. He has great empathy for his fellow human being.''

Which makes this story all the more remarkable is that two individuals in totally different professions would become friends in later life, then partners in an endeavor whose function is enriched with feelings of warmth, compassion and love for those less fortunate than themselves.

ENTERPRISE ZONE/EMPOWERMENT COMMITTEES PROGRAM

HON. DONNA MC CHRISTENSEN

OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a bill to authorize the Virgin Islands and the others U.S. Insular Areas to participate in the Enterprise Zone/Empowerment Communities Program.

The U.S. Virgin Islands has been an unincorporated territory of the United States for 82 years. In 2017 we will celebrate the centennial of this relationship. It is important to the People of the Virgin Islands that we begin the second one-hundred years on a sound economic footing, and as a self-sustaining, contributing member of the American Family. This bill can be the vehicle to this economic empowerment and sustainable growth and development.

Although the Virgin Islands enjoys generous business tax benefits currently, the loss of Section 936 and the coming of NAFTA create significant challenges as we strive to establish our place in the national and world economy. An empowerment zone would encourage an ongoing community planning process and provide for a local-federal partnership that is the best framework for us to move forward.

What this bill seeks to do is to develop a process for us to come together as a community and a part of the United States to address a myriad of issues that have plagued us, from land use planning, to housing, to education, to drugs and crime, and business and the economy, so that by the time we celebrate the 100 year anniversary of being a part of the American family we will do so with the pride and dignity that befits us and the ancestors on whose shoulders we move forward.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this bill and of its enactment into law.

TRIBUTE TO WALTER PAYTON

SPEECH OF

HON. ROGER F. WICKER

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, November 3, 1999

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life of fellow Mississippian Walter Payton who died earlier this week at the age of 45. Walter Payton was born in Columbia, Mississippi, on July 25, 1954. Following his outstanding career at Jackson State University, he was drafted by the Chicago Bears where he would spend the next 13 years rewriting the NFL record books.

Walter Payton's on-field accomplishments, his engaging personality and his off-the-field contributions to community and civic affairs have earned him a lasting place in the hearts of millions of Americans.

He proved that a strong work ethic and a commitment to excellence could propel an undersized athlete from a small college in Mississippi to the top of the professional football world. He was praised for bringing positive attention to the abilities of players who come from small colleges. Among his admirers is Jerry Rice, another Mississippian from a small school who became an NFL superstar. ''He paved the way for so many small schools and players, including myself, because he opened a lot of eyes,'' Rice said.

Mississippians are proud of this Hall of Fame running back for his success in running over, around and through opposing defenses. We are equally proud of his commitment to family, church, and community.

Many people will recall his work to ensure that thousands of children received toys and clothing for Christmas. Among his activities were efforts to help over 9000 churches, schools, and social service agencies raise money to support their missions, and establishing scholarships so that children, who had been wards of the state, might see their dreams of college become a reality. He also created job training and placement programs for the unemployed and worked with the Illinois Department of Children and Family Services to find families for orphaned children. And while Walter is no longer with us, the Walter Payton Foundation will continue his great humanitarian legacy for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, Walter Payton was a role model in his public life as a professional athlete in his private life as husband, father, and community leader. We will miss him.

MARGRET HOFMANN REMINDS US OF THE MEANING OF KRISTALLNACHT ON THE ANNIVERSARY OF NOVEMBER 9, 1938

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the Holocaust must be remembered and it must be studied to prevent the real danger of repeating the experience of that horrendous nightmare. As recent conflicts in the Great Lakes Region of Africa, Kosova, East–Timor as well as many other places remind us only too well that, although we are now enjoying an era of general prosperity and relative tranquility, many peoples around the world have not yet learned to live with one another in peace. In fact in the last decade, the practice of ethnic cleansing in Bosnia, Kosova and other areas of the former Yugoslavia has only served to remind us how little progress we have made in the past half century.

In this context, Mr. Speaker, it is important that we take note of a tragic anniversary on November 9th—the first physical violence against Germany's Jews by Hitler's Nazi regime. That tragic occasion has been given the name ''Kristallnacht''—Crystal Night—because of the number of broken and smashed windows that accompanied the racist violence. Years of dehumanizing anti-Semitic propaganda in Germany, which was intensified after Hitler and the Nazi party came to power in 1933, prepared the way for Kristallnacht. The aggressive racist and anti-Semitic policies of the Third Reich saw their first expression in violence on November 9, 1938. Kristallnacht serves as a chilling reminder to what happens when an inflamed mob mentality overtakes a nation.

Mr. Speaker, Margret Hofmann was an eyewitness to the tragedy of Kristallnacht. She has devoted years of her life to researching and studying the circumstances surrounding Kristallnacht and its consequences. I want to commend her for her work and insert some excerpts from her studies that make a valuable contribution to our understanding of how Kristallnacht was a first step in setting in motion the nightmare of the Holocaust.

In 1933, the German–Jewish poet Heinrich Heine said, ''Where books are burnt, Man will soon burn human beings.'' That is the point of beginning of Margret Hofmann as she considers the background and meaning of Kristallnacht.

Books were burnt in Germany on May 10, 1933, people soon followed. In between the burning of the books and the burning of the people, the Nazi government in Germany instigated the notorious Kristallnacht, the ''Night of Broken Glass.'' This was the event which set the stage for Hitler and other Nazi leaders to attempt to ''eliminate'' the Jews from Germany and eventually the whole world. It was the kind of event that proved ideal for Nazi purposes.

On October 27, 1938, Germany expelled 15,000 non-German Jews. Although many had lived in Germany for decades and even raised families there, they were put on trains and sent to Poland. This was done by the German government without notifying the Polish government or without taking any steps to deal with the number of people. Enraged by this action, Herschel Grynszpan, whose parents had been summarily expelled from Germany, went to the German Embassy in France and shot a German diplomat, Ernst vom Rath.

The occasion was tailor-made for the Nazi propaganda machine. The funeral of vom Rath in his hometown of Dusseldorf was grandiose. The Nazi government used the murder of vom Rath to give a false impression that German citizens spontaneously rose against the Jews. The night of the funeral, November 9, 1938, the Nazi government instructed the local police throughout Germany to ''allow'' the German people to rise up and ''strike back'' at the Jews. ''The people'' were Nazi ''Brown Shirts'' and German soldiers. The police were told to make sure non-Jews were not attacked and only Jewish buildings were destroyed. All over Germany synagogues and temples were burned, Jewish homes were ransacked, and a number of Jews were killed. By 1938 the Nazi propaganda machine had complete control of the press, and this pogrom was portrayed as a spontaneous uprising against the Jews.

From that point on, the Nazi regime with increasing violence stripped Jews of their rights. They were forced out of the schools and universities, they were prohibited from practicing law, medicine, and other professions. Many were evicted from their homes and their belongings were confiscated. Before long Jews were required to wear a yellow star of David on their clothes so others could recognize they were Jewish. Many streets were declared off-limits to Jews.

After years of anti-Semitic propaganda, many Germans succumbed to racism, prejudice, intolerance, and discrimination. This racial hatred, which was given its defining violent moment in Kristallnacht, led directly to the ''Final Solution,'' the fanatic Nazi drive to annihilate the Jewish race. For each piece of history, we must find a defining moment. For Nazi Germany, it was Kristallnacht.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 900, GRAMM-LEACH-BLILEY ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 4, 1999

Mr. STARK. Madam Speaker, the glaring absence of any financial privacy provisions for affiliated entities in the financial modernization bill before us today is a sorry mistake. It is wrong and inappropriate for Congress to, on the one hand, enact legislation that explicitly allows mergers between banks, insurers and securities firms—but which on the other hand denies consumers any say in how their personal financial information can be used and disclosed.

I thought we learned this lesson 21 years ago, when Congress enacted the Right to Financial Privacy Act. That 1978 law, which I authored, put in place standards governing access and sharing of financial information for federal agencies. It stemmed from a Supreme Court decision that ruled the fourth amendment does not apply to banking records. As a former California banker, I had been a party in that 1974 suit, California Bankers Association v. Schultz.

And here we are today, throwing open the door for financial institutions to create huge new holding companies—without giving consumers any ability to say how their sensitive personal financial information can be shared. In effect, we are creating a financial privacy vacuum.

This runs counter to what we are trying to achieve in the area of medical confidentiality, where we are aiming to put the strongest possible safeguards in place at the Federal level, while preserving what is best about State privacy laws. In the next week or so, HHS will issue proposed regulations for medical privacy, which on balance are expected to be strong. If we can give consumers rights over their medical data, why can't we also give them a measure of control over how their financial data is used, marketed, and sold?

Defenders of the conference agreement say that the bill limits sharing of personal financial data with non-affiliated, third-party entities. Nonsense. All that companies that don't formally affiliate have to do to escape the bill's consumers opt-out provision is enter into a joint agreement. Then, presto, they are free to manipulate personal financial data in any way they like.

Nobody likes getting annoying calls from pesky telemarketers at dinnertime. Well, once this bill passes, the telemarketing business will go through the roof. Mergers between banks, securities firms and insurers will produce data amalgamation like we've never seen before. Before long, your health insurer will be able to get information on how money you make and what investment strategies you favor—making underwriting that much easier. Your bank will be able to easily look up how many checks you've written to your psychiatrist—and use that information to help decide whether you're an acceptable loan risk.

This is the dawning of a new Orwellian Age of Information.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this ill-conceived legislation.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3196, FOREIGN OPERATIONS, EXPORT FINANCING, AND RELATED PROGRAMS APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. MAX SANDLIN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, the Foreign Operations Appropriations bill for FY 2000 represents a product of bi-partisan negotiations. Finally, the Republican leadership has agreed to sit down with Democrats and work and an appropriations bill that doesn't face a veto threat. It funds the U.S. brokered Wye River Agreement, an important part of achieving a real and lasting peace in the Middle East and affirmation of our commitment to Israel, a critical ally.

A vote for this bill is a vote for a strong leadership role for the United States. I urge passage of this bill because foreign operations bolster our military and national security. This legislation declares support for our armed services and for the men and women who risk their lives to protect our freedom.

A TRIBUTE TO MILTON S. HOFFMAN

HON. NITA M. LOWEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my great admiration for Milton S. Hoffman, senior editor of the Editorial Board of The Journal News in Westchester County, NY. Mr. Hoffman's outstanding accomplishments in the field of journalism and his significant contributions to the government and civic life of the county have merited him still another award—the press gallery in the chambers of the Westchester County Board of Legislators will be dedicated in his honor later this month.

A man of high principle, integrity and skill, Mr. Hoffman began his lifelong newspaper career as an elementary school student in West Harrison, NY. In 1955, he started a 17-year stint covering Westchester County government for a precursor of The Journal News. He provided consistently thorough and thoughtful coverage of issues before the then-governing body, the County Board of Supervisors. His insightful writing also led to the replacement in 1969 of the Board of Supervisors with a more representative and efficient County Board of Legislators.

Mr. Hoffman continued his tireless advocacy for progressive social policies as the state government and politics reporter, editorial page editor, columnist and now senior editor. His philosophy throughout a distinguished 45-year career has been ''not to tear things down, but to build them up.''

How fitting that the press gallery be named for a journalist who has trained, over four and a half decades, thousands of young reporters in the principles of fairness and accuracy. Indeed, Westchester County today has a better governing structure thanks to Milt Hoffman's vision and leadership. And all of us in the County are richer because of his unfailing dedication and commitment to making this a better place to live and work.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 900, GRAMM-LEACH-BLILEY ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. RON PAUL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 4, 1999

Mr. PAUL. Madam Speaker, today we are considering a bill aimed at modernizing the financial services industry through deregulation. It is a worthy goal which I support. However, this bill falls short of that goal. The negative aspects of this bill outweigh the benefits. Many have already argued for the need to update our financial laws. I would just add that I agree on the need for reform but oppose this approach.

With the economy more fragile than is popularly recognized, we should move cautiously as we initiate reforms. Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan (in a 1997 speech in Frankfurt, Germany and other times), Kurt Richebacher, Frank Veneroso and others, have questioned the statistical accuracy of the economy's vaunted productivity gains.

Federal Reserve Governor Edward Gramlich today joined many others who are concerned about the strength of the economy when he warned that the low U.S. savings rate was a cause for concern. Coupled with the likely decline in foreign investment in the United States, he said that the economy will require some potentially ''painful'' adjustments—some combination of higher exports, higher interest rates, lower investment, and/or lower dollar values.

Such a scenario would put added pressure on the financial bubble. The growth in money and credit has outpaced both savings and economic growth. These inflationary pressures have been concentrated in asset prices, not consumer price inflation—keeping monetary policy too easy. This increase in asset prices has fueled domestic borrowing and spending.

Government policy and the increase in securitization are largely responsible for this bubble. In addition to loose monetary policies by the Federal Reserve, government-sponsored enterprises Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have contributed to the problem. The fourfold increases in their balance sheets from 1997 to 1998 boosted new home borrowings to more than $1.5 trillion in 1998, two-thirds of which were refinances which put an extra $15,000 in the pockets of consumers on average—and reduce risk for individual institutions while increasing risk for the system as a whole.

The rapidity and severity of changes in economic conditions can affect prospects for individual institutions more greatly than that of the overall economy. The Long Term Capital Management hedge fund is a prime example. New companies start and others fail every day. What is troubling with the hedge fund bailout was the governmental response and the increase in moral hazard.

This increased indication of the government's eagerness to bail out highly-leveraged, risky and largely unregulated financial institutions bodes ill for the post S. 900 future as far as limiting taxpayer liability is concerned. LTCM isn't even registered in the United States but the Cayman Islands!

Government regulations present the greatest threat to privacy and consumers' loss of control over their own personal information. In the private sector, individuals protect their financial privacy as an integral part of the market process by providing information they regard as private only to entities they trust will maintain a degree of privacy of which they approve. Individuals avoid privacy violators by ''opting out'' and doing business only with such privacy-respecting companies.

The better alternative is to repeal privacy busting government regulations. The same approach applies to Glass-Steagall and S. 900. Why not just repeal the offending regulation? In the banking committee, I offered an amendment to do just that. My main reasons for voting against this bill are the expansion of the taxpayer liability and the introduction of even more regulations. The entire multi-hundred page S. 900 that reregulates rather than deregulates the financial sector could be replaced with a simple one-page bill.

TRIBUTE TO THE GRANDMOTHERS OF PLAZA DE MAYO

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the service and commitment of some outstanding women—the Grandmothers of Plaza de Mayo. After 20 years, this non-profit organization has located 64 disappeared children of Argentina, and helped reunite the victims with their families, allowing them to recover their identity and their history. I want to commend the Grandmothers of Plaza de Mayo on their efforts and their dedication in reuniting children who disappeared during the military dictatorship that ruled Argentina from 1976 to 1983 with their legitimate families.

Mr. Speaker, in 1976, the armed forces of Argentina began a process of systematically violating some of the most fundamental human rights. This despotism resulted in the disappearance of over 30,000 persons, including hundreds of children. The Grandmothers of Plaza de Mayo have used many different tactics to search for these children who disappeared during the brutal tyranny of the military regime. Their primary purpose is to preserve the identity, roots and history of these children, which are the fundamental basis for human dignity.

Fortunately, advances in science and technology have made it possible for these families to be reunited. Blood tests prove, with 99.95 percent accuracy, that a child comes from a particular family. This is a difficult process, for which the professionals and volunteers involved must be commended.

The Grandmothers of Plaza de Mayo have committed themselves to this praiseworthy endeavor. I am grateful for all they have accomplished, and I urge my colleagues to join me in commending them for their outstanding efforts and devotion to the cause of bringing justice to the families who suffered under Argentina's brutal military regime.

MEDICARE, MEDICAID, AND SCHIP BALANCED BUDGET REFINEMENT ACT OF 1999

SPEECH OF

HON. ROGER F. WICKER

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Speaker, the Balanced Budget Act included provisions to safeguard the long term solvency of the Medicare system, but for a number of reasons the mandated reductions exceeded estimates and provided a lower level of reimbursement than Congress directed. The Medicare Balanced Budget Refinement Act corrects this problem and restores vital funding to the Medicare program to allow health care providers to meet the needs of their communities.

This important legislation will ease the financial crisis which has threatened the quality of health care service for millions of Americans. I am pleased we have been able to work in a bipartisan fashion to bring relief to the small rural community hospitals which provides the foundation for rural America.

I am hopeful that in addition to the supporting this legislation, the Health Care Financing Administration will make the needed administrative changes to ensure that small rural hospitals will receive adequate Medicare reimbursement. I look forward to working with HCFA and member of both political parties to restore balance to the Medicare system.

THE ARTISTS' CONTRIBUTION TO AMERICAN HERITAGE ACT

HON. AMO HOUGHTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleague from Maryland, Mr. CARDIN, together with a bipartisan group of our colleagues, in introducing the ''Artists' Contribution to American Heritage Act of 1999.'' The bill would alleviate an unfairness in the tax law as it applies to charitable donations of property by the taxpayer/creator and significantly enhance the ability of museums and public libraries to acquire important original works by artists, writers and composers, and ensure the preservation of these works for future generations.

Since 1969, the law has provided that the creator of the artistic property is only allowed a charitable deduction equal to the cost of the materials that went into the property. For example, an established artist who donates a painting to the local museum is allowed a deduction for the cost of the canvas, brushes and paint, etc., used to produce the painting. Of course, these amounts are de minimis. There is no real tax incentive to contribute such works of art for the public to enjoy. In fact, the tax law works in the other direction. It makes more financial sense to the creator to sell his or her work. If a collector or art buff buys a painting that appreciates over time, because the artist becomes well-established or was a known and collected artist when the painting was purchased, the collector is allowed a deduction for fair market value when the painting is contributed to the local museum. This is the fairness issue.

There has not always been such disparate tax treatment. Before 1969, the artists/taxpayers received the same treatment—the deduction was based on fair market value. The law was changed, primarily because of the perception that some taxpayers were taking advantage of the law through less than accurate valuations of their charitable gifts.

After the change in 1969, gifts of donor generated art work (paintings, manuscripts, compositions, artistic and historically significant correspondence and papers) to qualifying charitable organizations and governmental entities dropped significantly. Creators were more likely to sell their works than to contribute them. Tom Downey, a former colleague of ours, introduced similar legislation in 1985. In his floor statement he noted that Igor Stravinsky had planned to donate his papers to the Music Division of the Library of Congress the month the 1969 tax change was signed into law. Instead, the papers were sold to a private foundation in Switzerland. Now, 14 years later the situation has not improved. It is time to change our law to encourage rather than discourage such contributions.

There have been significant changes in the valuation process since 1969. All taxpayers making charitable contributions of art work (other than donor generated art work) are required to: (a) provide and/or retain relevant information as to the value of the gift, (b) provide appraisals by qualified appraisers or, in some cases, (c) subject them to review by the IRS's Art Advisory Panel, depending on the dollar amount of the contribution. These changes would apply to creator-donated property under our proposal.

In addition to the valuation safeguards already in the law, our proposal would add additional protections to prevent abuse. These include the following: (a) limiting the value of the deduction to the amount of income the creator received from similar property, (b) providing that the deduction can only be claimed in the year of contribution, i.e., the carryover rules do not apply, (c) limiting the deduction to property created at least 18 months before the contribution, (d) limiting the deduction to gifts related to the purpose of the institution which receives it, and (e) excluding contributions of property (letters, memos, etc.) created by taxpayers in their role as employees or officers of an organization.

The benefit to the nation when artists are encouraged to contribute their work during their lifetime cannot be overemphasized. It allows the public, historians, scholars and others to learn from the artist his/hers aesthetic aims for the work; how it was intended to be displayed, performed, or interpreted; and what influences affected the artist.

Our proposal represents an important step in providing some tax incentive, with needed safeguards, for the creators and moves toward putting them on the same footing as collectors who contribute similar property. Most importantly, it could make the difference in a decision by the creator/donator to contribute some of their created art works to a museum or public library, rather than sell them in the marketplace. That way important works are preserved in the public domain and we all benefit. We urge our colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this legislation.

A TRIBUTE TO JIM COX FOR 30 YEARS AS CITY MANAGER OF VICTORVILLE, CALIFORNIA

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like today to recognize the remarkable career of Jim Cox, who came to Victorville, California in 1967 as an administrative assistant, became city manager in 1969 and guided the city in that position for 30 years until his recent retirement.

Jim Cox began his public service—and his time in California—when he joined the Navy at 17 and moved to San Diego to be a medic. He first joined city government as an intern in La Mesa, California, while attending San Diego State College. After serving as assistant city manager of Indio for two years, he went to work in the Mojave Desert hub of Victorville—population 11,290.

He quickly took on increasing responsibility, going from administrative assistant in charge of finance and personnel, to Director of Planning, Assistant City Manager, and finally City Manager in December 1969.

The city budget that year was $750,000. His final budget, submitted this year, was for $72 million, for a city with a population of 63,478.

As one of the longest-serving managers in California, Jim Cox provided a stabilizing influence not only for his rapidly growing city, but also for the entire Victor Valley, whose population has grown ten-fold in the past 30 years. He was instrumental in helping the region weather the closure of George Air Force Base in 1988, and its economic revival over the past 10 years.

Adding to his extensive public service credentials, Cox is a California Redevelopment Association director and on the Revenue and Taxation Committee for the League of California Cities. He is chairman for the Victor Valley Transit Board of Directors and served on the County Formation Review Committee.

He is an instructor with a lifetime teaching credential at California State University, San Bernardino and at Victor Valley Community College. His community activities include the Victorville Chamber of Commerce Board of Directors and Rotary International.

Mr. Speaker, Jim Cox has been justifiably credited with helping Victorville and the Victor Valley grow from a desert hamlet to a vital, successful city in one of the fastest-growing areas of California. Please join me in congratulating him on his years of public service, and wishing him well in his future endeavors.

REPUBLICANS BLOCK DEMOCRATS FROM OFFERING MAJOR IMPROVEMENTS TO MEDICARE

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, last Friday, the House passed an okay Medicare improvements bill.

But it could have been much better; it could have helped seniors get a better price for pharmaceuticals; it could have helped low-income women fight cancer; it could have provided more help to providers hurt by excessive cuts in the 1997 Balanced Budget Act. But Republicans blocked any amendments to the bill—they did not want to be embrassed by having to vote against helping seniors with the high costs of drugs.

Following is a letter which 119 Democrats (many more would have signed if we had had more time) sent to the Speaker, outlining our request for amendments to H.R. 3075.

Mr. Speaker, the majority should be ashamed for a legislative gag rule that prevented us from improving this legislation.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, November 4, 1999.

Hon. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives, The Capital, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: We are writing to ask that you not bring the Medicare Balanced Budget Act legislation (HR 3075 as amended in negotiations with Commerce Committee Republicans) to the floor under suspension of the rules, but instead provide a rule permitting Democratic amendments and a motion to recommit. Because Democrats were not included in the negotiations between the Ways and Means and Commerce Committee Republican members, it is particularly important that we be offered the opportunity for floor amendments.

While the Republican bills that have been introduced provide a great deal of needed relief, we believe that (1) some additional relief to providers, (2) some beneficiary improvements (in particular help with the high cost of pharmaceuticals), and (3) some alternative policies are desperately needed.

The amendments we propose would provide an additional $2.4 billion in paid-for relief, with some going to beneficiaries in lower pharmaceutical prices and other program improvements. Our amendments would also eliminate several policies in the Republican bill which the Administration has identified as unworkable or which would hurt Medicare beneficiaries.

As fiscally responsible Democrats, we are concerned that the Republican bill is not paid for, and we urge you to find a way to pay for it, rather than further spending Social Security surpluses. For example, because it is not currently paid for, the Ways and Means bill (HR 3075) shortens the solvency of the Medicare Part A Trust Fund by at least a year, and increases Part B premiums for seniors.

Therefore, to avoid this problem, we pay for the additional relief offered by our amendments. Thus we do not hurt Medicare's solvency. The $2.4 billion in relief over five years is paid for by $2.4 billion in Medicare savings from the President's budget proposal of last January. These savings come from Medicare anti-fraud, waste, and abuse proposals.

PROVIDING NEEDED ADDITIONAL RELIEF

The $2.4 billion provides important, much needed additional relief to —beneficiaries to meet the cost of fighting cancer and the high costs of pharmaceutical insurance[1]

—teaching hospitals,

—safety net hospitals, which have the lowest overall operating margins,

—rural hospitals, which have the lowest Medicare margins,

—skilled nursing homes,

—home health agencies which are serving the sickest patients,

—a more rational rehabilitation cap program that will help our most severely disabled stroke patients and amputees, —help for hospice agencies facing skyrocketing pharmaceutical costs for end-of-life painkillers, and —the Medicaid and Children's Health Insurance Program, to help the providers serving the low income and to help Puerto Rico and the Possessions with more adequate payment rates.

This additional relief will further ensure that Medicare beneficiaries are buffered from the cuts in the 1997 BBA and will allow Medicare beneficiaries to continue to receive high quality care.

The attached memo describes these amendments in more detail.

HELP SENIORS WITH THE HIGH COST OF PHARMACEUTICALS

We believe we need to help all Medicare beneficiaries with a prescription drug insurance benefit, but that is a larger issue that cannot be addressed in this limited BBA corrections legislation. We hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will make this a priority issue for the Second Session of this Congress.

In the meantime, we do believe that this bill gives us the one opportunity this year to help seniors with the exorbitant cost of prescription drugs. We propose an amendment which was offered in the Ways and Means Committee by Rep. Karen Thurman (and supported by all the Democratic members of the Committee) that makes the Allen-Turner-Waxman-Berry pharmaceutical discount bill (HR 664) germane to Medicare. Basically, the amendment says that if a drug manufacturer wants to sell pharmaceuticals to a hospital participating in Medicare, it must also make available to pharmacies for sale to seniors drugs at the best available price for which they offer that drug. By some estimates, this type of program could lower drug costs to seniors by as much as 40%.

If we can't pass a major Medicare drug reform bill this fall, we can at least give seniors a chance for the discounts available to large buyers.

PREVENTING BAD POLICIES

If the Majority bill includes certain provisions, we ask that the rule governing debate permits us to strike those anti-beneficiary and anti-consumer provisions:

Specifically, we are concerned that the Administration has warned that the hospital out-patient department (HOPD) provisions of the Ways and Means bill are so complicated that they will delay the start of HOPD Prospective Payment (PPS) by at least a year. Such a delay in the PPS will cost beneficiaries about $1.4 billion, with patients' share of total HOPD payments running about 50%. We would move to strike the House HOPD provisions in favor of the Senate's more administrable proposals, but keep the amount of relief to hospitals and patients at the House level.

Second, if the Majority bill includes the 'Commerce Republicans' provision giving ''deemed status'' to HMOs, we would strike that provision. An overwhelming number of House members have just voted in favor of higher quality in managed care plans. Therefore, we find it incredible that the majority may be proposing an amendment to the BBA which would weaken our ability to ensure quality by turning over approval of these plans to participate in Medicare to private groups which are often dominated by the very industry they are supposed to be regulating. If such 'deemed status' language is included, we will seek to strike it in order to protect beneficiaries.

Third, as mentioned above, we propose to strike the unworkable $1500 limit on rehabilitation caps for two years while the Secretary develops a rational therapy payment plan. This is the same approach as taken by the Senate Finance Committee.

In conclusion, our beneficiaries and providers need the improvements made by the Democratic amendment. We urge you to make it in order. Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Neil Abercrombie, Gary Ackerman, Tom Allen, Robert Andrews, Tammy Baldwin, Tom Barrett, Jim Barcia, Xavier Becerra, Shelly Berkley, Howard Berman, Marion Berry, Bob Borski, Rick Boucher, Corrine Brown, Sherrod Brown, Lois Capps, Michael Capuano, John Conyers, Ben Cardin, Julia Carson, Bob Clement, Bill Coyne, Elijah Cummings, Danny Davis, Jim Davis.

[1] We assume that the bill the Majority brings to the floor will include an expansion of Medicare's coverage of immuno-suppressive drugs, so that transplant patients do not suffer organ rejection. If this provision is not included, we ask permission to include it and pay for it with additional anti-fraud and abuse provisions.

Issue Area:

In addition to HR 3075, a $2.4 billion paid-for package [dollars expressed as additions to costs in HR 3075]

Hospitals:

Freeze indirect medical education cut for 1 year more than HR 3075 ($0.2); Freeze disproportionate share hospital cuts for 1 year more than HR 3075 ($0); Carve out DSH payments from payments to M+C plans. Moves about $1 billion per year to the nation's safety net hospitals; is not in HR 3075 ($0).

Rural hospitals:

Tanner Amendment to protect rural and cancer hospitals against outpatient department PPS cuts (HR 3075 phases in cuts to these hospitals, still leaving huge payment reductions) ($0.2).

$1500 therapy caps:

Strike HR 3075 limits by suspending caps for 2 years while a new, more rational system is developed (net $0).

Community health centers & rural CHCs:

Establish a PPS system which protects CHCs against State Medicaid cuts ($0.2).

Nursing homes:

Raise HR 3075's payment to high acuity cases from 10% to 30% ($0.1); Raise HR 3075's nursing home inflation adjustment from 0.8% in FY01 to 1% ($0.1) and authorize extra payments for hi cost of living in Hawaii and Alaska.

Physicians:

Study of why payment rates in certain States and Puerto Rico are low.

Home health:

Provide $250 million ''outlier'' pool for home health agencies that treat tough cases ($0.3) HR 1917, by Rep. Jim McGovern and 102 cosponsors.

Hospice:

Eliminate 1% cut in FY 01 and 02 ($0.2).

Medicaid:

Help for Medicaid DSH formula errors in NM, DC, MN, and WY ($0.2) Permanent fix for CA Medicaid DSH problem $0; Help families not lose Medicaid coverage as a result of delinking of welfare and Medicaid eligibility ($0.2).

CHIPs:

Increase CHIPs amount for Possessions and provide technical fix to CHIPs formula ($0.1).

Beneficiary improvements:

Immuno-suppressive drugs, cover without a time limit ($0.3); Allow States to require M+C plans to cover certain benefits (like MA used to do with Rx ($0); Allow people abandoned by M+C plans to buy a medi-gap policy which covers Rx ($0); Coverage of cancer treatment for low-income women ($0.3) HR 1070, by Rep Eshoo and Lazio and 271 cosponsors.

Pay-fors:

3 Medicare items from President's budget: mental health partial hospitalization reform, Medicare Secondary Payer data match, and pay for outpatient drugs at 83% of average wholesale price. ($2.4).

CONGRATULATING JOSEPH MOFFETT ON HIS BEING SELECTED TO COMPETE IN THE NATIONAL BIRDING COMPETITION

HON. RICHARD E. NEAL

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Joseph Moffett for being selected to the ABA/Leica Tropicbirds Team of 1999. Joseph, along with three other youths, has been chosen to compete in The Florida Space Coast Flyway Festival birdathon. This is a national birding competition which will be held on November 13, 1999.

Joseph, who is fifteen years old, lives in Mendon, Massachusetts and is a member of the ABA and the Massachusetts Audubon Society. Joe is also a member of many other birding clubs including; the Brookline Bird Club, the Forbush Bird Club, and the Stony Brook Bird Club. Joe works at the Stony Brook Audubon Sanctuary as a volunteer naturalist and a councilor in training. Joe also takes part in the Christmas Bird Count and Massachusetts Audubon Birdathon fund-raiser. Joe keeps lists of the birds he sees on various birding outings and submits them to the Bird Observer, a birding journal.

In addition to Joe's birding skills, he is also a proponent of environmental protection. Joe has started a rainforest club in his school and has raised money to save acreage of a rainforest. Most of the birding events that Joe participates in are also fund-raisers, which raise money for the protection of new bird species that are found during the events and for the protection of birds in general.

Mr. Speaker, it is my great pleasure to congratulate Joseph Moffett on his accomplishments and commend him for being a model citizen and a great influence to his community.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 900, GRAMM-LEACH-BLILEY ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 4, 1999

Ms. LEE. Madam Speaker, I rise to express my concern as well as that of my constituents regarding the Senate version, the Gramm version, of the Financial Services Modernization Act.

The initial report by the media that the conference report met the expectations of consumer advocates raised hopes that the Senate would meet the House's commitment to two major aspects of this critically important bill: the Community Reinvestment Act provisions and the necessary protection of the privacy of consumer, customer information, and records. I continue to want to vote for a Financial Services Modernization bill.

I want to address the importance of the Community Reinvestment Act which is also known as CRA. This act was passed almost 30 years ago to say that banks should also lend to low-income customers and neighborhoods in their areas of operation. In the 23 years of bank practices to meet CRA provisions, an impressive $1 trillion has been generated as loans to low-income customers; the clear majority of banks recognize the value of CRA as a powerful tool to build community trust and respect for the otherwise cold marble and steel of stone-hearted bankers.

Let me share a success story of CRA in my community, affecting my constituents in Oakland and adjoining cities. The success story is about an old, crumbling, and once-beloved vegetable and meat market known as Swan's Marketplace.

In the last two decades, as residents and businesses flowed out of downtown, Swan's found it more and more difficult to survive. It finally had to close. Stories were written about its demise. It took years, but the city government and the people of Oakland and community agencies knowledgeable about CRA, our community heroes, the very same people that Senator GRAMM so recklessly labels as ''extortionists,'' pulled together, in a magnificent civil effort to create a wonderful center combining almost every aspect of community development into one square city block. The heroes and sheroes who put this together say: ''We have a market, affordable housing, services to special populations and community revitalization. On top of that, we've included use of the arts for economic development and restored and preserved a city historic landmark.''

I hardly have to add that the housing is a wonderful plus in an area with severe housing shortages, and that jobs have been created, and that an essential community success has added to the revitalization of a declining downtown not only during the day but also at night.

Swan's was complex from a banking perspective. ''There's nothing commonplace about it'' said a representative from a large local bank that provided a $7.8 million construction loan. CRA had encouraged banks to look at financing difficult projects that benefit communities. Before CRA, banks may have dismissed the project as too difficult, but CRA has provided the needed motivation which has prompted banks to successfully invest in communities.

The story of CRA's important role in the reformation of Swan's Marketplace is not a rare occurrence. Community after community have called on members of the Banking Committee and the Commerce Committee to protect, and to include the CRA provisions in any banking modernization bill. I have worked since I joined Congress over a year ago, to include the basic elements of CRA in H.R. 10.

The House-passed version of the Financial Modernization bill, to my mind, had fairly weak CRA provisions by excluding securities and insurance functions. But the Gramm version weakens these protections even further by requiring banks to report every 5 years.

Senator GRAMM added a wickedly ironical provision that he describes as a ''sunshine'' regulation. In California sunshine provisions protect citizens by requiring that the legislative bodies act with proper and timely notice being given to the public on time of meeting and publication of issues to be discussed.

This sunshine provision in Senator GRAMM's bill is a terrible perversion of that protection. This provision mandates that community organizations working with banks to produce more affordable housing have to report on their functions, and their contracts. These reporting requirements are not made of financial institutions, only community organizations. Instead of treating these groups as heroes for their life-saving, community-saving work, they must report like criminals.

Presently, banks have to meet a satisfactory rating, and then maintain it in order to be favorable considered for expansion or mergers. S. 900 allows these banks to meet the ''satisfactory'' standard only once and frees them from further obligation to maintain it. Do it once and you are free of obligations thereafter. This is a terrible travesty of present CRA practices.

The other major weakness in S. 900 has to do with the easy access to customer's private information that is available. Presently, each one of the three functions: banking, insurance, and securities, cannot share their customers' information with each other. With the passage of S. 900 the walls are down.

Insurance companies have records on a customer's health. This record will now be available to the bank, or the insurance company that can now offer banking services, when you apply for a loan. Is this information that should be so easily available. Is this what our constituents would allow? I don't think so.

However, should customers want to know how the bank, or the insurance company, or the securities sales office is handling their account and ask for a record, and possibly make the necessary corrections, they will not be able to do so. We are considering legislation that could really produce nightmare situations for our constituents.

S. 900 only asks that banks report their plan to protect privacy without any obligation to any one, or any institution to implement it, to modify it, or to improve it. This is a hollow requirement, devoid of substance.

These are two of the major flaws of S. 900. But I have to raise the objections that I raised in the Banking Committee about the consequences of financial services modernization without appropriate safeguards.

S. 900 will allow for further mergers and conglomeratization. It will once again expose us to the congressional, national liability for the $500 billion bailout of the savings and loan industry of the 1980's.

The conglomerates will be too big to regulate and too big to fail and the taxpayer will be stuck with the consequences.

Additionally, along with my colleagues, Representatives WATERS, FRANKS, SANDERS, JONES of Ohio, and SCHAKOWSKY, we have tried to introduce the most basic of consumer protections as we give the financial services what they want. We have tried to protect fair housing by prohibiting insurance companies from discriminating, and we have tried to establish limited basic banking accounts for low-income customers, but without success.

This financial modernization bill, S. 900, or H.R. 10, is the product of 20 years of effort. It saddens me to see 20 years of work dissolve into this miserable bill. I ask my colleagues to vote against it.

GROUNDBREAKING OF THE AUSCHWITZ JEWISH CENTER

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, today I invite my colleagues to join me in commemorating the official ground–breaking for the Auschwitz Jewish Center a tribute to the Jews who perished in this century's most senseless tragedy. The Center, located in the last remaining synagogue in the town of Oswiecim (the Polish name for Auschwitz), will offer visitors to the site of the Auschwitz–Birkenau death camp an opportunity for reflection, education, and understanding of the enormous loss inflicted by the Holocaust.

The groundbreaking for the Auschwitz Jewish Center takes place on the eve of the sixty–first anniversary of Kristallnacht (''The Night of Broken Glass''), the 1938 Nazi pogrom that foreshadowed the Holocaust and marked the beginning of the Nazi effort to exterminate the Jews. Ninety–one German and Austrian Jews were murdered during Kristallnacht, and 26,000 more were arrested and deported to concentration camps. Nazi thugs set fire to 101 synagogues and destroyed almost 7,500 Jewish–owned businesses. This evening of terror and brutality marked the beginning of the end of German Jewry. Kristallnacht, which was orchestrated by Nazi Propaganda Minister Joseph Goebbels, was an attempt permanently to wreck the cultural and civic infrastructure of the Jewish people in the hope that Jews would never again find comfort in Germany.

Mr. Speaker, the anniversary of Kristallnacht reminds us yet again why the establishment of the Auschwitz Jewish Center holds such great significance. The Center will offer visitors seminar rooms, a library, a memorial wall to victims of the Holocaust, genealogy records, and a screening room for viewing testimonials from Holocaust survivors which will be made available through an agreement with Steven Spielberg's Shoah Foundation. It will allow guests to learn about Oswiecim's rich Jewish history, which dates back to medieval times, and it will permit them to ponder over the destruction of this community and thousands like it across Europe. Most of all, the Center will offer Jews and non–Jews alike the opportunity to mourn and remember.

I urge my colleagues to join me in praising the accomplishments of the Auschwitz Jewish Center Foundation, Inc., a New York based tax–exempt organization created in 1995 to support the Center's creation, and its founder and president, noted philanthropist Fred Schwartz. Mr. Schwartz and his lovely wife, Allyne, visited Auschwitz in 1993 and shortly after began the process of creating an institution that would help to ''attach human characteristics to the people who perished there.'' Fred set up the Auschwitz Jewish Center Foundation and, aided by the devoted efforts of executive director/vice president Daniel Eisenstadt and a wealth of other talented individuals, and the Center has contributed immeasurably to the memory of the victims of Auschwitz and the Holocaust.

Mr. Speaker, Fred and Allyne Schwartz and all of their associates involved in the establishment of the Auschwitz Jewish Center merit the appreciation of every Member of the House. As a Holocaust survivor, I am grateful to them for paying tribute to the most horrendous legacy of the twentieth century. As a grandfather, I am even more indebted to them for keeping this memory alive for the twenty–first century and beyond.

MEDICARE, MEDICAID, AND SCHIP BALANCED BUDGET REFINEMENT ACT OF 1999

SPEECH OF

HON. BILL ARCHER

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit for the RECORD the attached letters which I and the Chairman of the Committee on Commerce have exchanged regarding H.R. 3075, the Medicare Balanced Budget Refinement Act of 1999.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS,
Washington, DC, November 5, 1999.

Hon. THOMAS J. BLILEY, Jr.
Chairman, House Committee on Commerce, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN BLILEY: This is in response to your letter regarding further consideration of H.R. 3075, the Medicare Balanced Budget Refinement Act of 1999.

I understand that, in order to expedite consideration of this legislation, the Committee on Commerce will not be marking up the bill. The Commerce Committee will take this action based on the understanding that it will be treated without prejudice as to its jurisdictional prerogatives on this measure or any other similar legislation. Further, I have no objection to your request for conferees with respect to matters in the Commerce Committee's jurisdiction if a House-Senate conference is convened on this or similar legislation.

Finally, I will seek to include in the Record a copy of our exchange of letters on this matter. Thank you for your assistance and cooperation in this matter.

With best personal regards,
Sincerely,

BILL ARCHER,
Chairman.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
Washington, DC, November 5, 1999.

Hon. BILL ARCHER,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, Washington, DC.

DEAR BILL: I am writing regarding H.R. 3075, the Medicare Balanced Budget Refinement Act of 1999. As you know, the Committee on Commerce is an additional committee of jurisdiction for the bill, and I understand that the version of the bill that will be considered under the suspension calendar will contain a number of Medicaid provisions which fall within my Committee's exclusive jurisdiction.

However, in light of your willingness to work with me on those provisions within the Commerce Committee's jurisdiction, I will not exercise the Committee on Commerce's right to act on the legislation. By agreeing to waive its consideration of the bill, however, the Commerce Committee does not waive its jurisdiction over H.R. 3075. In addition, the Commerce Committee reserves its authority to seek conferees on any provisions of the bill that are within its jurisdiction during any House-Senate conference that may be convened on this legislation or similar legislation. I ask that you support our request in this regard.

I ask that you include a copy of this letter and your response in the Record during consideration of the bill on the House floor. Thank you for your consideration and assistance. I remain,

Sincerely,

TOM BLILEY,
Chairman.

MARCIA M. STEWART: HAPPY TRAILS

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that the Committee on Resources bids farewell to Marcia Stewart, Legislative Assistant to the Chief Counsel of the Committee. Marcia has been not only the right hand of the Chief Council's office, but often the heart, head and both feet.

Marcia Stewart is one of those staffers often seen but seldom heard. Her job was not a glamorous one, but one which was integral to the efficient and effective operation of the Committee on Resources. With her help, the Resources Committee has been one of the most productive in the House and she had a hand in every bill we moved (and we have moved hundreds so far). Her presence in markups, in hearings and on the Floor ensured that all would go well. In fact, her very first time staffing a bill on the Floor, the vote was unanimous, probably because no one could bear to disappoint her.

Marcia came to the Committee from the former Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, where she served as a staff assistant. Even then, her extraordinary skills were apparent, and she was a clear choice for the demanding duties of the Chief Counsel's office when I became Chairman of the Resources Committee in the 104th Congress. Her expertise and organizational skills have kept our legislative and oversight trains running on time. That is why I am not surprised that Marcia Stewart is known as the "Martha Stewart of legislation." Not bad for a woman who was a toddler when I began my career in Congress.

Marcia and her two-year-old daughter, Abigail, will be joining Marcia's husband Tim Stewart in Salt Lake City, where they will be giving up the white columns of the Capitol for the wide open spaces of the West. All I can say is Congressman JIM HANSEN district's gain is our loss.

We will miss you, Marcia Stewart, and wish you and your family a wonderful life in Utah. I thank you for your service to me, to the Committee on Resources, to the Congress and to America.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 900, GRAMM-LEACH-BLILEY ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 4, 1999

Mr. DINGELL. Madam Speaker, to paraphrase the words Charles Dickens penned in 1859, this is the best of bills; this is the worst of bills. It is an act of wisdom; it is an act of foolishness. It wisely recognizes the technological and regulatory changes that have blurred the lines between industries and products, and builds a new regulatory structure to house and foster competition and innovation. However, it unwisely fails to recognize that, for all that has changed dramatically, human nature has not. Prodigious failures and frauds are no less possible, indeed, perhaps are even more likely today. Yet S. 900 provides inadequate protections for taxpayers, depositors, investors, and consumers.

Now, I can tell that some of my colleagues are bracing themselves for a speech about the Crash of 1929 and the Great Depression that followed it. I am not giving that speech today. I am not opposing S. 900 because I am stuck in the past. I am opposing S. 900 because it's a bad bill today and for the future. About the past, I will only observe that he who does not learn from it, is doomed to repeat it. This bill bears dangerous seeds.

First, S. 900 facilitates affiliations between banks, brokerages, and insurance companies, creating institutions that are "too big to fail." However, it does not reform deposit insurance or antitrust implementation and enforcement. The bill's supporters tout all the benefits to consumers, but woe to the American people when they have to pick up the tab for one of these failures or when competition disappears and prices shoot up.

It also authorizes banks' direct operating subsidiaries to engage in risky new principal activities like securities underwriting and, in five years, merchant banking with Treasury and Federal Reserve approval. The flimsy limitations and firewalls will not hold back contagion and underscore the foolishness in not reforming deposit insurance, and thus the threat to taxpayers and depositors.

Second, the privacy provisions in S. 900 are a sham. The bill gives financial institutions new access to our personal financial and other information for purposes of cross-marketing and profiteering. Under S. 900, a customer cannot opt out of information sharing if his financial institution enters a "joint marketing agreement" with unaffiliated third parties. This loophole makes the privacy protections about as effective as a lace doily would be in holding back a flood.

Third, this bill undermines the Community Reinvestment Act. Many of my colleagues will speak to this point more eloquently than I, and I associate myself with their remarks. At the appropriate point, I will include National Community Reinvestment Coalition's letter in the RECORD.

Fourth, it undermines the separation of banking and commerce. Title IV closes the unitary thrift loophole by barring future ownership of thrifts by commercial concerns. But about 800 firms that are grandfathered can engage in any commercial activity, even if they were not so engaged on the grandfather date. Moreover, title I allows the new financial holding companies (which incorporate commercial banks) to engage in any "complementary" activities to financial activities determined by the Federal Reserve. And in a piece of circular mischief, any S&L holding company, whether or not grandfathered, can engage in any activities determined to be "complementary" for financial holding companies. Title I of S. 900 also waters down the prudential limitations that the House had imposed on merchant banking. S. 900 clearly ignores the warning of then Treasury Secretary Rubin to Congress in May of this year: "We have serious concerns about mixing banking and commercial activities under any circumstances, and these concerns are heightened as we reflect on the financial crisis that has affected so many countries around the world over the past two years."

Fifth, the conference agreement would let banks evaluate and process health and other insurance claims without having to comply with state consumer protections. This means that banks, of all people, will make important medical benefit decisions that patients and doctors should make. According to the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, S. 900 could prevent up to 1,781 state insurance consumer protection laws and regulations from being applied to banks that conduct insurance activities. State laws could be preempted that require consumers to be paid claims they are due and that protect consumers against predatory practices of banks that sell credit insurance. S. 900 also preempts state consumer privacy laws restricting the dissemination of medical and other personal information by a bank engaged in insurance activities. The conference committee rejected an amendment that I offered to address these serious shortcomings.

Sixth, S. 900 contains provisions (subtitle B of title III) on the redomestication of mutual insurers that are opposed by the National Conference of State Legislatures and the National Conference of State Legislatures and the National Conference of Insurance Legislators. They contend that this legislation is anti-consumer and not in the public interest in that it would preempt the anti-mutualization laws in 30 states and places as many as 35 million policyholders, many of our constituents, at risk of losing $94.7 billion in equity. Their letter also follows my statement.

Finally, our capital markets are the envy of the world and their success rests on the high level of public confidence in their integrity, fairness, transparency, and liquidity. While S. 900 pays lip service to the functional regulation of securities by the SEC, it, in fact, creates too many loopholes in securities regulation—too many products are carved out, and too many activities are exempted—thus preventing the SEC from effectively monitoring and protecting U.S. markets and investors. In a final indignity, the effective date of the securities title was extended mysteriously to 18 months from the one year approved by the conference committee. So, the title I Glass-Steagall repeal is effective 120 days after date of enactment, the insurance provisions are effective on date of enactment, the pitiful privacy provisions are effective six months after the date of enactment, but the banks do not have to comply with the federal securities laws until 18 months or a year and a half after the date of enactment. This makes absolutely no sense whatsoever, but, considering all the other problems with this bill, is par for the course.

I support modernization of our financial laws. I support competition and innovation. I do not believe either should be accomplished at the expense of taxpayers, depositors, investors, consumers, and our communities.

S. 900 is a bad bill for the reasons I have outlined. I therefore refused to sign the conference report and I will vote ''no'' on passage.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 900, GRAMM-LEACH-BLILEY ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. CAROLYN C. KILPATRICK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 4, 1999

Ms. KILPATRICK. Madam Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 900, the Financial Services Modernization Act. This conference report is the culmination of years of efforts on the part of Congress, several Administrations, and federal financial regulators to create a rational and balanced structure to sustain the continued global leadership of our nation's financial service sector. This is not a perfect bill. I would like for the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) provisions and the privacy provisions of the bill to be strengthened, but I understand the political process involves compromise, and this legislation represents just that. As a former member of the Banking Committee, I know that the agreement reached by the members of the Conference Committee and the Administration is built on the consensus that exists among the banking, securities and insurance firms regarding the need for this legislation. This act will benefit consumers, businesses and the economy by finally reforming our antiquated banking and finance laws. Consumers and businesses will benefit from a wider array of products and services offered in a more competitive marketplace that result directly from enactment of this law.

The Act will permit the creation of new financial holding companies, which can offer banking, insurance, securities and other financial products. These new structures will allow American financial firms to take advantage of greater operating efficiencies. For financial institutions, increased efficiency will mean increased competitiveness in the global marketplace. For consumers, increased competition will mean greater choice, more innovative services, and lower prices for financial products. For the economy, this will mean better access to capital to spur growth.

Since the beginning of my service in the United States Congress, I have been committed to the vitality of the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA). I am encouraged that this Act, for the first time, will apply CRA to banks and their holding companies as they expand into newly authorized non-banking activities. Until now, the law has permitted banking organizations to make very large acquisitions of securities firms and to engage in other nonbank activities without any CRA performance requirements at all. Under this bill, no banking organization can become involved in these new activities if any of its insured depository affiliates has a less than satisfactory CRA rating. This is a flat prohibition, and I believe a move in the right direction toward the expansion of CRA from current law. Like many of my colleagues, I stringently support the expansion of CRA. However, as a veteran legislator, I recognize that the legislative process, by definition, produces compromises by all parties. I believe that the CRA provisions in S. 900 are a good compromise toward ensuring that the modernization of our financial system works for all Americans.

For the first time, financial institutions must clearly state their privacy policies to customers up front, allowing customers to make informed choices about privacy protection. The Act will require financial institutions to notify customers when they intend to share financial information with third parties, and to allow customers to ''opt-out'' of any such information sharing. Under existing law, information on everything from account balances to credit card transactions can be shared by a financial institution without a customer's knowledge. This can include selling information to non-bank firms such as telemarketers. This Act provides the most extensive safeguards yet enacted to protect the privacy of consumer financial information. The Act also provides other important consumer protections, including mandatory disclosures and prohibitions on coercive sales practices, protection of a wide variety of state consumer protection laws governing insurance sales, strengthening protections when banks sell securities products, and making full disclosures of fees at ATM machines.

Madam Speaker, this Act is a step forward in improving our nation's financial service system for the benefit of consumers, community groups, businesses of all sizes, financial service providers, and investors in our nation's economy. Financial services modernization legislation has taken a long road to final passage. I remain committed to expanding access to the economic mainstream for all Americans. While not perfect, S. 900 will finally bring financial services law in step with the marketplace.

IN HONOR OF NORTHEAST OHIO AREAWIDE COORDINATING AGENCY

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Northeast Ohio Areawide Coordinating Agency (NOACA) on their recent award for Outstanding Overall Achievement for large Metropolitan Planning Organizations presented by the Association of Metropolitan Planning Organizations. This prestigious award, given to only one organization nationwide each year, was well deserved.

The Outstanding Overall Achievement for large metropolitan Planning Organizations Award recognizes exceptional work in metropolitan transportation planning. NOACA's award nomination focused on the newly adopted transportation plan, Framework for Action 2025. This plan is a 25-year innovative, goal-oriented plan that supports transportation investments that boost economic redevelopment in the region's core cities. Framework for Action 2025 also focuses on preserving the environment, improving the efficiency of the transportation system and providing greater transportation choices for the local commuters.

In the past, the NOACA has made significant achievements by making cooperative planning efforts. Their newly adopted plan shows that they are still committed to this in the future. NOACA has made tremendous efforts to reach out to Northeast Ohio and make innovative improvements in the transportation industry.

My fellow colleagues, please join me in honoring this fine organization as they accept the Outstanding Overall Achievement Award for large Metropolitan Planning Organizations. This is a significant achievement and tremendous honor for the organization.

OUR DOMESTIC CHILD LABOR LAWS SHOULD BE REFORMED SEVENTEEN MAGAZINE REPORTS ON PROBLEMS OF CHILD LABOR IN AGRICULTURE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to share with my colleagues in the House an article written by Gayle Forman which appeared in the October 1999 edition of Seventeen Magazine. The article, entitled ''We Are Invisible,'' is about one of this country's ugly secrets—children laboring in our country's fields, harvesting the produce that all of us eat, and working under deplorable and backbreaking conditions which take a toll of their health and education. In her excellent article, Ms. Forman writes about the challenges facing children and families who work in the fields in trying to scrape by on meager wages and appalling working conditions. Since most of my colleagues are not avid readers of Seventeen, I want to call their attention to this article and the very serious issue it raises.

Agriculture is one of the most dangerous industries in the United States, but children are still allowed to work legally at very young ages for unlimited hours before and after school in extremely dangerous and unhealthy conditions. As many as 800,000 children work in agriculture in this country, picking the fruits and vegetables that end up in our grocery stores, either as fresh or processed fruits and vegetables.

Children who work in our Nation's fields are killed and suffer life-changing injuries. Recently, a 9-year-old was accidently run over by a tractor and killed while working in a blueberry field in Michigan. A 13-year-old was knocked off a ladder while he was picking cherries in Washington State and was run over by a trailer being pulled by a tractor. A 17-year-old was sprayed twice by pesticides in 1 week in Utah while picking peaches and pruning apple trees and died of a massive brain hemorrhage.

Children who work in agriculture often do so at the expense of their education—and education is critical to help these children break out of the cycle of poverty. Mr. Speaker, we have a responsibility for the future of these children, which means their education, and we have a responsibility to protect them from job exploitation.

Under current Federal law, children working in agriculture receive less protection than children working in other industries because of many outdated and outmoded exceptions included in our laws. For example, children age 12 and 13 can work unlimited hours outside of school in nonhazardous agricultural occupations but are prohibited from working in nonagricultural occupations. It is illegal for a 13-year-old to be paid to do clerical work in an air-conditioned office, but the same child can legally be paid to pick strawberries under the blazing summer sun. In some instances, children as young as 10 years old are working in the fields harvesting our Nation's produce.

Mr. Speaker, our laws are inconsistent and out of date with regard to the long-term changes in agriculture that have taken place. Children working in agriculture no longer merit such separate and unequal protection. The agricultural industry is no longer dominated by family farmers who look out for their own children's health and well-being as they work in agriculture. Today, major agricultural conglomerates control much of the production and the work force in agriculture, and children who work in the fields are hired laborers. Given these and other changes in our Nation's agricultural economy, I ask why children in agriculture should be treated differently than children working in other industries.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this year, I introduced H.R. 2119, the ''Young American Workers' Bill of Rights Act'' which would provide equal standards of protection for children who work in agriculture and children who work in other sectors of our Nation's economy. The ''Young American Workers Bill of Rights'' would take children under the age of 14 out of the fields. It would create an exception only for family farms, where children would still be able to assist their parents on farms owned or operated by their family.

Mr. Speaker, last year, our colleagues, Congressman HENRY WAXMAN and BERNARD SANDERS and I released an important GAO report entitled ''Children Working in Agriculture'' which found that current legal protections, the enforcement of those protections, and educational opportunities for children working in our fields is grossly inadequate. The GAO reports that hundreds of thousands of children working in agriculture suffer severe consequences for their health, physical well-being and academic achievement. There are also weaknesses in enforcement and data collection procedures, with the result that child labor violations are not being detected.

Mr. Speaker, as a result of this article which appeared in Seventeen Magazine, young people around our Nation have written to me during passage of legislation to deal with these problems. I ask that the article be placed in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to read the article and support meaningful comprehensive domestic child labor reforms, specifically including adoption of H.R. 2119, the ''Young American Workers Bill of Rights.''

[From Seventeen Magazine, October 1999]

(By Gayle Forman)

WE ARE INVISIBLE

Imagine that it's summer and instead of sleeping in and then hanging at the pool, you wake up at 5 a.m. You get dressed in jeans and a long-sleeved flannel shirt, and head out to a dusty field. There you spend the day bent over at the waist, plucking cucumbers that grow on prickly, low-lying vines in the ground. You do this alongside your family, throughout the day, taking a half-hour break for lunch. Imagine how it feels by afternoon, when the sun's glaring down on you, making you sweat so much in your heavy clothes that your body is dripping and your shoes are as wet as if you'd stepped in a puddle. Your hands swelter in gloves, but if you took them off you'd be exposed to pesticides or cut by thorns. Imagine that you work like this, sometimes for more than 12 hours, before heading back to the trailer or tent that is your temporary home. You shower, eat and go to sleep. The next morning you do it all over again.

One more thing: Imagine that you're nine years old.

Janie doesn't have to imagine this life. The 18-year-old from Weslaco, Texas, began working in the fields when she was nine. Along with her parents, two brothers and a sister, Janie is a farmer—but not the kind most of us think of. They don't live in a farmhouse or till their own fields. Rather, they're migrant farmworkers who crisscross the country from spring to fall, traveling from crop to crop, picking the fruits and vegetables that wind up on our tables.

In spite of all the technological advances in this country, a majority of crops—including the oranges in your juice and the pickles on your burger—must be harvested by hand. And many of those hands belong to kids. The United Farm Workers union estimates that as many as 800,000 children work in agriculture in this country—and most of these kids are U.S. residents or citizens.

DANGEROUS—AND LEGAL

Here's the thing. Such work is not against the law. Under our child labor rules, a 13-year-old cannot work in a clothing store after school, but she or he can labor in a field. In fact, it's legal for children as young as 10 to hand-harvest crops for five hours a day if their parents and the farmers for whom they're working get permission from the U.S. Department of Labor. These laws may seem strange, but in the 1930s, when child labor statutes were set up to protect children, exemptions were made so kids could work on their families' farms. Today, however, most child agricultural laborers are migrant or seasonal workers who toil on someone's else's land.

Some families—whether ignorant of or just ignoring the laws—will let really young kids work legally. ''I've seen children as young as six picking with their families,'' says Diane Mull, executive director of the Association of Farmworker Opportunity Programs (AFOP), an organization that provides support for migrant farmworkers. It's not that fieldworker parents don't love their kids. ''Parents are faced with tough choices. Either they're going to take their kids to the field, to help make as much money as possible, or they won't be able to put food on the table,'' says Mull.

She's not exaggerating. Migrant farmworkers are among the poorest people in the country—the average family earns less than $10,000 a year. Janie understands that bleak economic reality all too well. ''When I first had to work, I was upset. I didn't want to do it,'' says the bright-eyed brunette, who loves salsa music and Jean-Claude Van Damme movies. ''My parents told me it was necessary if we wanted to meet our expenses. When I looked at it that way, I wanted to help.''

If parents were more aware of the dangers, they might be less willing to have their kids work on farms. Kids who labor in fields account for about 11 percent of working children in the United States—and 40 percent of all on-the-job deaths of kids happen to that small group. And then there are the pesticides: No one's sure what effect the chemicals have on kids because studies only look at how pesticides affect full-grown male adults. But a chemical that doesn't hurt a 150-pound man may be toxic to an 80-pound girl. And long-term exposure to pesticides has been linked to a bunch of health problems, from skin rashes to leukemia.

UPROOTED

The threat of danger and disease is just one of the hardships of being a picker. As a migrant family follows the ripening crops, it's not unusual for them to live in several different places in one year. Rosa, 18, has been ''moving around since I was a baby.'' She and her family do the West Coast route—picking in California from January to May, then traveling up to Washington to harvest berries and apples until November. Conditions in the camps where Rosa lives aren't as comfortable as the trailers Janie stayed in. When Rosa travels, she, her parents, and four siblings usually live in a van or in tents near the fields. Meals are cooked over a campfire. When the season's over, the family heads to Mexico for November and December.

This nomadic existence can totally mess up your academic life. When Rosa leaves California in May, she also has to leave school early. Come September, she's usually in Washington, meaning she has to start classes there. She misses six weeks of school when she's in Mexico, too. Every time she switches schools, she tries to catch up, but she still gets shoved in remedial classes. Plus her constant state of flux means that she's forever the new girl. ''It's hard. I'm always crying on the first day of school,'' Rosa says. ''I just sit in a corner, and after two weeks in one place, we move again.'' It can be a lonely life, and lots of migrant kids say they'd rather stick to themselves than build relationships only to sever them. ''I would like to have friends,'' says Rosa. ''But it's hard to make them. And I can't do the kinds of things you do with friends because I don't have money.''

Rosa hopes to graduate high school and become a nurse, but those gaps in her education mean she has missed out on more than a full social life. The director of her school's migrant program thinks Rosa will have a tough time making it to nursing school. Even so, it's not impossible for migrant teens to succeed. In spite of her stop-and-go schooling, Janie has managed to kick serious academic butt, acing her honors classes. After an essay that she'd written about being a migrant caught the eye of people at AFOP, Janie was selected to attend an International Labor Organization conference in Switzerland in June. Last spring she graduated from high school with a 4.0 GPA. She was set to go to Ohio State University—and then her scholarship fell through. Anxious to get on with her education, Janie enlisted in the army rather than wait to reapply for scholarships.

MONEY DOESN'T GROW ON TREES

If Janey is a success story among migrant teens, she's also an exception. A near majority of migrants—45 to 55 percent, says Mull—don't graduate from high school. ''There are all these incentives for the kids not to stay in school,'' says Mull. ''They have the disruption in the flow of education. Some parents want older kids to work full-time. [In Mexico, where many migrant families are from, it's not uncommon for kids to leave school at 15.] Once they [these kids] start earning money, the motivation is to make more money.''

Cash was definitely on Rosalino's mind when he dropped out of school. Up until eighth grade, Rosalino, 18, lived and went to school in Mexico. After he and his family moved to Florida when he was 13, Rosalino quit school so he could help his family earn money. ''During the winter I work in strawberry fields in Florida,'' he explains, sitting under a weeping willow tree at a migrant camp in Michigan. ''In June my father and brothers and sisters drive two days to Michigan, where we pick until October.'' At the height of the season, Rosalino clears $200 a week—most of which goes to his family. That money must tide them over during the slow winter months, when jobs are sparse. The average migrant farmer works only 26 weeks a year, and many can't collect unemployment during the off-season.

When Rosalino ponders his future, he hopes he'll be able to shake the mud off his boots and leave the fields. ''I don't want to work on farms all my life,'' he says. In his pursuit of a better career, however, he's hindered by a host of handicaps. He doesn't speak English, though he's lived in the United States for six years, and he doesn't have too many skills under his belt other than fieldwork.

It's kids like Rosalino who worry children's advocates like California Representative Tom Lantos. The migrant life is usually a prison of poverty, Lantos says, and education is the key to unlocking that jail. ''These children won't have any future 10, 20, 30 years from now if they are deprived of their education, if their total work experience is farm labor,'' says Lantos. ''We must provide them with an education and an opportunity to develop their potential.''

LABOR AGAINST LABOR

Unlike a lot of countries that turn a blind eye to child labor, the United States has been cracking down on farmers who employ underage kids. But, say advocates like Lantos, to really keep children out of the fields, we must change the laws so that it's no longer legal for them to be there. Lantos recently proposed a Young American Workers' Bill of Rights, which aims to close the loopholes in child labor laws that make it legal for kids and young teens to work long hours in agriculture. Secretary of Labor Alexis M. Herman says she's also trying ''to see how [current child labor laws] can be strengthened.''

But banning child labor and actually stopping it from happening are two very different things. ''We find children working in the fields in this country for many reasons besides a disregard for the law,'' says Secretary Herman. ''We have to address the root causes—chronic poverty, lack of child care, underemployment.'' And the government is trying. The federal government funds Migrant Head Start and other education programs that give kids a place to go during the day while their parents pick, and provide them with a school away from school, so they can continue their studies when their families are on the road. President Clinton has allocated more cash for education programs as well as job training projects that give kids (and adults) alternatives to the fields. There have also been efforts to make parents aware of the dangers of farmwork and the importance of keeping kids in school.

Ultimately, though, migrant teens and their families will find it a rough road to hoe, says Mull. Major improvement in conditions would mean, among other things, paying adult pickers more so there would be less pressure to make kids work. But increasing wages could raise produce prices—and few consumers relish the idea of shelling out more money for a head of lettuce. Maybe if people understood the plight of migrant teens, they'd be willing to pay a few extra bucks a year to help, but, as Janie says, migrants are pretty much invisible to many Americans. ''I've met people who are running the country who don't know about the migrant life,'' says Janie. ''Most people don't even know we exist.''

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MARK UDALL

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, on November 4th, I was unavoidably detained from casting rollcall vote 569.

Had I been present, I would have voted "no" on rollcall vote 569.

HONORING OUR NATION'S VETERANS ON VETERANS' DAY

HON. MARION BERRY

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the millions of Americans who served and sacrificed for our country in wars all over the world. This week we celebrate Veterans' Day in thousands of ceremonies across America, including several in the 1st Congressional District of Arkansas which I was so proud to represent.

November 11 was originally the day commemorating the 1918 armistice that ended World War I. The original Armistice Day celebrated the signing of the armistice between the Allies and the Central Powers at the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month. The first commemorative ceremony was held when an American soldier was buried in the Arlington National Cemetery at the same time as a British soldier was buried in Westminster Abbey and a French soldier was buried at the Arc de Triomphe. In 1954, following World War II and the Korean Conflict, Armistice Day became known as Veterans Day. Realizing that peace was equally preserved by veterans of WW II and Korea, Congress was requested to make this day an occasion to honor those who have served America in all wars.

Many times we have asked our veterans to put their lives on hold, to leave their families to serve their country and protect our freedoms. Because of their strength and courage, all Americans enjoy the ideals of democracy.

On Veterans Day, it is important to remember that our Nation owes a commitment to our veterans every day of the year. We salute the millions of Americans who, because of their courage, have given us the freedom that we all enjoy. These heroes sacrificed for love of country, not only answering the call of our flag, but also honoring its meaning. Veterans' Day is a time for all Americans to remember their extraordinary commitment that has made our country the greatest nation that has ever been.

On this Veterans Day, we should all express our sincere thanks to our fellow Americans who valiantly served abroad in the U.S. Armed Forces. We should all reflect on the pride we share in the men and women who have kept our Nation free and strong.

DECEPTIVE MAIL PREVENTION AND ENFORCEMENT ACT

SPEECH OF

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, November 2, 1999

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have played a part in the House consideration and markup of the Honesty in Sweepstakes Act of 1999. Last month, the Subcommittee on the Postal Service marked up H.R. 170, and unanimously approved an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the ranking minority member congressman FATTAH and chairman MCHUGH. Our bill which closely mirrors sweepstakes legislation passed by the Senate in August would:

Impose disclosure requirements relating to sweepstakes mailings and skills contests (contests in which a prize is awarded based on skill, and a purchase, payment, or donation is required) concerning rules, terms, conditions, sponsor, place of business of sponsor, odds of winning, and other information to help ensure the consumer has complete information about the contest;

Prohibit mailings that suggest a connection to the federal government, or that contain false representations implying that federal government benefits or services will be affected by participation or nonparticipation in the contest;

Require that copies of checks sent in any mailing must include a statement on the check itself stating that it is nonnegotiable and has no cash value;

Require certain disclosures to be clearly and conspicuously displayed in certain parts of the sweepstakes and skill contest promotions;

Require sweepstakes companies to maintain individual do-not-mail lists;

Give the Postal Service additional environment tools to investigate and stop deceptive mailings, including the authority to impose civil penalties and subpoena authority;

Require that companies adopt reasonable practices and procedures to prevent the mailing of materials on sweepstakes or skills contests to individuals who have written to the companies requesting not to receive such mailings;

Establish a private right of action in state court for consumers who receive follow-up mailings despite having requested removal from a mailer's list; and

Establish a federal floor above which states could enact more restrictive requirements.

H.R. 170 adds two very important and critical provisions consumer protection provisions. First, we provided the Postal Service with subpoena authority to combat sweepstakes fraud. In addition, we have limited the scope of subpoena authority to only those provisions of law addressing deceptive mailings, and required the Postal Service to develop procedures for the issuance of subpoenas.

The second provision contains language authored by the ranking minority member, Congressman FATTAH which added a private right of action to sweepstakes legislation. This provision now a part of H.R. 170, would allow consumers to file suit in state court if a sweepstakes promoter continues to send mailings despite having requested removal from a mailer's list. This important enforcement tool, contained in section 8 of H.R. 170, is supported by the National Consumers League, the American Association of Retired Persons and the Direct Marketing Association.

The issue of consumer protection, whether it relates to telemarketing fraud or sweepstakes deception is finally receiving the attention it deserves and I am pleased we have provided additional consumer protection along this line.

I would be remiss if I did not thank my colleagues who have sponsored honesty in sweepstakes legislation in the House. Special recognition deserves to go to the authors of H.R. 170, Congressmen LOBIONDO and CONDIT. Their diligence has ensured a bipartisan bill. I would also like to acknowledge the support of Congressman BLAGOJEVICH, himself the sponsor of sweepstakes legislation, H.R. 2731, the Consumer Choice and Sweepstakes Control Act.

Special recognition goes to the State of New York, Office of the Attorney General, the National Association of Attorneys General, the Federal Trade Commission, National Consumers League, the American Association of Retired Persons, Direct Marketing Association, the Postal Service Inspector General, and Courtney Cook, of the minority staff. Your hard work, input and support have been appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for being gracious and working with us to achieve a bipartisan bill.

MEDICARE, MEDICAID, AND SCHIP BALANCED BUDGET REFINEMENT ACT OF 1999

SPEECH OF

HON. BOBBY L. RUSH

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my opposition to the process by which we are considering some of the most important legislation that this House will debate during this session of Congress—the Medicare, Medicaid and Schip Balanced Budget Refinement Act of 1999. As a member of the Commerce Committee, I would have liked to have had the opportunity to fully debate the Medicare, Medicaid and SCHIP changes that this legislation makes. Particularly, in light of the impact the Balanced Budget Act has had on Illinois hospitals.

Illinois hospitals are experiencing severe financial hardship as a result of the Balanced Budget Act of 1977 (P.L. 105–33). The cuts mandated by the BBA were supposed to simply slow the growth in the Medicare program. However, the Act ''overcorrected'' the growth in Medicare spending and severely reduced Medicare reimbursements to hospitals and health service providers for five years beginning in 1997. In Illinois alone, it is estimated that hospitals will lose $2.8 billion in Medicare payments over a five year period. The financial burden of the BBA cuts is particularly acute for the teaching hospitals in my state. Because Illinois ranks fifth in the nation in the number of teaching hospitals, and these facilities are expected to lose more than $1.6 billion over the five-year period, of the BBA's life. These cuts have a devastating effect on the communities that they serve.

I opposed the Balanced Budget Act when it was debated by the House of Representatives in 1997. I believed that it was bad policy then, and believe that it is bad policy now.

In order to provide relief for the teaching hospitals and other health service providers that were so adversely impacted by the BBA, I introduced legislation, Health Care Preservation and Accessibility Act of 1999, H.R. 3145, to restore some of the Medicare reimbursements that the BBA reduced. The legislation was intended to accomplish this in a number of ways:

(1) H.R. 3415 would freeze the cuts in indirect medical payments (IME) to teaching hospitals at 1999 levels. It also freezes cuts in the disproportionate share payments (DSH payments) at 2% and provides payments directly to those serving a large share of low-income patients;

(2) directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to make payments for Graduate Medical Education (GME) to children's hospitals for the Medicare FY 2000 and 2001 cost reporting periods for the direct and indirect expenses associated with operating approved medical residency training programs;

(3) sets a floor on outpatient hospital payments so that rural hospitals do not fall below 1999 levels and establishes a new payment system for rural health centers;

(4) revises the payment system for community health centers so that it more adequately reimburses for the costs of care and allows safety net providers that provide health coverage to low-income Americans to be directly compensated for their services;

(5) eliminates the $1,500 per beneficiary cap imposed by the BBA and replaces it with a payment system that is based on the severity of illness;

(6) revises the BBA's new prospective payment system for skilled nursing facilities by increasing reimbursements for patients needing a high level of services to more accurately reflect the cost of their care;

(7) delays a scheduled 15% reduction in the home health interim payment system if the Secretary of Health and Human Services misses the deadline for instituting the new prospective system. H.R. 3415 also allows for interest free recoupment of overpayments due to HCFA's underestimation of the interim payment rates for certain agencies. Finally, H.R. 3415 provides additional protections for seniors citizens and persons with disabilities and strengthens protections and sanctions for Medicare fraud and abuse.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced the Health Care Preservation and Accessibility Act of 1999 when it looked as if we could not reach agreement on even the minimal BBA relief that the legislation before us provides to Illinois hospitals, and hospitals across the nation. I am reluctantly supporting the legislation before us today, because it is the only option that has been presented to us. But it is my hope that we will have the courage to revisit this issue in the next session, and complete the job that we have only begun with H.R. 3075.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 900, GRAMM-LEACH-BLILEY ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 4, 1999

Mr. COSTELLO. Madam Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to the Financial Services Modernization Act. This bill was brokered by the Republican leadership, in a partnership with the large financial services lobbyists, to the benefit of enormous corporations at the ultimate expense of the American consumer.

This bill will expedite the creation of megabucks malls—the one-stop shopping of the financial world. This will hurt consumers because as financial services providers consolidate, competition will decline and consolidate decision-making and services among fewer service providers. Should one of these enormous institutions suffer a financial decline, we could see calls for a bailout that will recall the savings and loan debacle of the 1980's, with taxpayers footing the bill.

I am also concerned of the effects that the Community Reinvestment Act provision may have on certain banks in my district. By reviewing small banks which provide service in underserved communities only once every 4 or 5 years, there is no guarantee that these banks will maintain their lending standards to these communities. A two-year review enforced this. Underserved communities need to be ensured of financial assistance, and this bill does not provide that guarantee.

Most frightening, however, is the effect the privacy provisions will have. Under this bill, financial institutions have access to and distribute our personal information, including our bank and brokerage account or insurance record information, to all the institution's divisions and affiliates, without the customer's permission. In addition, banks will share our consumer information with third parties unless the consumer explicitly tells the financial institution not to. The walls protecting our financial privacy and other personal information are slowly being eroded.

While the Financial Services Modernization Act may modernize the financial world, it does so at the expense of the consumers. I cannot support this legislation.

TRIBUTE TO THE HONORABLE LEO T. MCCARTHY

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor a distinguished American, a revered Californian, and a dear friend, Leo T. McCarthy, on the occasion of his induction into the San Francisco Law School Hall of Fame.

Born in Auckland, New Zealand, Leo immigrated with his family to the United States at the age of three. He earned his undergraduate degree from the University of San Francisco and his law degree from San Francisco Law School. Admitted to the practice of law in both the Federal and State courts of California on January 15, 1963, Leo McCarthy was also elected to the San Francisco Board of Supervisors in 1963.

In 1968, Leo McCarthy was elected to the California State Legislature where he served with great distinction until 1982. Chosen Speaker of the California State Assembly in 1974, he focused his considerable talents and energy upon creating State policy in areas ranging from education to health. He has given important service as a member of the World Trade Commission, the University of California Board of Regents, and the California State University Board of Trustees where both his passion for excellence and civic spirit were always evident.

On January 3, 1983, Leo McCarthy became the Lieutenant Governor of the State of California, a position he retained until his retirement from elective office in 1994. Once again, his commitment to serving both his nation and the people of California was clearly manifested by his dedication to his office. He nurtured businesses from formation to long term growth as the Chair of the California Commission for Economic Development. He focused particular attention upon working to improve the involvement of businesses in international trading and investment, particularly in Pacific Rim markets, an area of lifelong interest.

In 1992, while still in office, Leo McCarthy aided over 100 women and minority business investors by publishing an award-winning guide titled, Starting and Succeeding in Business: A Special Publication for Small, Minority- and Women-Owned Businesses. At the same time, he helped California implement the Greater Avenues for Independence (GAIN) program which helps welfare recipients move into private sector jobs. In 1992, Leo McCarthy sponsored both the Mammography Quality Assurance Act that created new standards governing both mammography facilities and technology, and Senate Joint Resolution 32, which declared that breast cancer was an epidemic in California, requesting that the President and the Congress dedicate greater funds to find the causes of and a cure for the disease.

Upon his retirement from public office in 1994, instead of indulging in a well-deserved rest, Leo McCarthy joined the board of the Linear Technology Corporation, a high tech firm which manufactures analog integrated circuits and in 1998, produced $460 million in sales. He also became a board member of two mutual funds, the Parnassus Fund, a socially responsible fund that invests a $400 million investment portfolio in domestic stocks and bonds, and Forward Funds, Inc., which focuses on investing in domestic and foreign equities and bonds with a $230 million investment portfolio.

Leo McCarthy is also the Vice Chair on the Board of Open Data Systems, a private firm which creates software aimed at facilitating the accurate recording and processing of building permits and other development documents used by local governments. All of these private sector businesses have subsequently benefited from his active and enthusiastic involvement as a board member. In 1995, Leo McCarthy became President of the Daniel Group, a law partnership which focuses on international trade and market investment.

With all these responsibilities, Leo McCarthy has continued his public service. Appointed to the National Gambling Impact Study Commission by the U.S. Senate Democratic Leadership, the Commission has undertaken a two year study of the impact of all forms of legal gambling in the United States at the order of the President and the Congress.

Leo McCarthy and his wife Jacqueline have been married for over 40 years. They have four exceptionally talented children, Sharon, a fifth grade teacher, Conna, an attorney, Adam, an import-export businessman, and Niall, an attorney, and they are the proud grandparents of eight.

Leo McCarthy's life of leadership is instructive to us all. His dedication to the ideals of both democracy and public service stand tall. I am especially blessed to have him as a mentor, a colleague, and a friend. It is fitting that the San Francisco Law School has chosen to induct him into its Hall of Fame and I ask my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, to join me in honoring a great and good man. We are indeed a better country and a better people because of him.

DOROTHY'S PLACE HOSPITALITY CENTER

HON. SAM FARR

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the millionth meal served by Dorothy's Place Hospitality Center. Founded in 1982 by Robert Smith and operated by the Franciscan Workers of Junipero Serra, Dorothy's Place is a local soup kitchen in Salinas that has provided food and support daily to the hungry and the homeless.

Dorothy's Place Hospitality Center has for more than seventeen years provided meals as well as support to the less fortunate members of Salinas County during times of need and hardship. The staff and volunteers have graciously extended themselves through commitment and generosity to our local poor. Dorothy's Place is a great community resource deserving of praise and thanks for the humanitarian spirit and service that it has provided for so many years.

It is with great pleasure that I commend Dorothy's Place Hospitality Center for serving its millionth meal. For its exemplary record of service to the poor and hungry, I would like to extend best wishes for success in the future as this establishment continues to make invaluable contributions to our community.

JAPANESE ''COMFORT WOMEN''

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about one of the great injustices, one of the most flagrant violations of human rights.

During World War Two, the Japanese military forced hundreds of thousands of women to serve as sexual slaves. Euphemistically known as ''comfort women'', they were predominantly Korean women and girls abducted from their homes and forced to serve Japanese soldiers. This government-sanctioned program created untold numbers of comfort stations or military brothels throughout Japanese-occupied territories in the Pacific Rim.

For decades after the war, the Japanese government denied the existence of ''comfort women'' and the comfort stations, but in 1994, their position changed. The Japanese government admitted that ''the then Japanese military was directly or indirectly involved in the establishment and management of comfort stations and the transfer of ''comfort women [and] that this was an act that severely injured the honour and dignity of many women''.

In 1993, international jurists in Geneva, Switzerland ruled that women who were forced to be sexual slaves of the Japanese military deserve at least $40,000 each from the state treasury as compensation for their extreme pain and suffering.

Mr. Speaker, the Japanese government has a legal as well as moral responsibility to face its history. To continue to indignantly brush away these women's claims adds insult to injury.

Stripped of their dignity, robbed of their honor, most of them were forced to live their lives carrying those horrific experiences with them covered under a veil of shame. I don't think they should do so any longer.

I believe the Japanese government must do whatever can be done to restore some dignity for these women.

The German government has formally apologized to the victims of the Holocaust as well as other war crimes victims and has gone to great lengths to provide for their needs and recovery, but the Japanese government has yet to do so.

That is why, in the strongest possible terms, I call upon Japan to formally issue a clear and unambiguous apology for the atrocious war crimes committed by the Japanese military during World War II and offer reparations no less than $40,000 for each of the ''comfort women''. The surviving women are advanced in age, and time is of the essence. They have waited so long. They should wait no longer.

Critics may ask why we should even dredge up something that happened so long ago and halfway across the world?

Let me turn the critics' attention to the U.S. Constitution. It reads: ''We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their creator with certain unalienable rights . . .''

Mr. Speaker, this nation was an experiment. An experiment to form a new system of government. A government based on the then-radical concept that we all have certain God-given rights that should not be violated—each and every one of us in this world. It matters not that injustices were committed against women and girls in East Asia over fifty years ago or fifty minutes ago. There is no statute of limitation on crimes against humanity. When human rights are violated, the international community must act because we have a moral responsibility to do so.

Even today, we sometimes turn a blind eye to human rights. We sometimes take them for granted. We sometimes stay silent. But we shouldn't.

Two hundred years ago, Thomas Jefferson wrote: ''the laws of humanity make it a duty for nations, as well as individuals, to help those whom accident and distress have thrown upon them.''

Mr. Speaker, I strongly believe we have a duty. We have a duty to help those who need our help. We have a duty to stand up for those who cannot stand up on their own. We have a duty to speak up for those who have no voices and to do what is just and what is right.

So, let us do what is just and what is right for the ''comfort women'' and other victims. Let us speak out for them. Let us stand up for them. Let us lend them our strength.

We must act and we must speak out, because in the end, people will remember not the words of their enemies, but the silence of their friends.

We must not remain silent.

MEDICARE, MEDICAID, AND SCHIP BALANCED BUDGET REFINEMENT ACT OF 1999

SPEECH OF

HON. JERROLD NADLER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, November 5, 1999

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to explain my vote against H.R. 3075, the Medicare, Medicaid, and SCHIP Balanced Budget Refinement Act. This bill makes several important restorations of cuts that were made to the Medicare program in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. However, this bill also includes a provision that would hurt New York City's teaching hospitals and render meaningless the other positive measures in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, America's hospitals are hurting and they need relief from the mammoth cuts made by the Balanced Act. I was one of the few lawmakers who voted against the Balanced Budget Act because I knew it would have these consequences. We should not be surprised that cutting over $200 billion from Medicare would cause the quality of care to suffer in many hospitals. In New York State alone, it has been estimated that hospitals have lost over $550 million so far and could face up to $3 billion more in cuts over 5 years without new legislation. H.R. 3075 would make a small, but important, down payment toward restoring those cuts.

However, it is shameful that in the name of providing relief, this bill would create even more pain for New York. At the last minute, a provision was added to change the methodology by which Medicare reimburses teaching hospitals for their direct medical education costs from one based on actual cost to one based on national average costs. This would shift over $45 million a year from New York State, where costs are well above the national average, to other parts of the country. In my district alone, teaching hospitals would lose almost $12 million in the first five years this provision would be in effect. Teaching hospitals help train the next generation of physicians. It would be unwise to shortchange this investment for the future.

It is unfortunate that this provision was inserted at the last minute during the final negotiations, from which Democrats were frozen out. In addition, H.R. 3075 was brought up under suspension of the rules, allowing little debate and no opportunity to offer an amendment to rectify the situation.

America's hospitals need relief from the deep cuts made in 1997. I hope that we will find a way to do this without pitting states against each other.

H.R. 3196—FOREIGN OPERATIONS APPROPRIATIONS BILL

HON. MIKE McINTYRE

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, November 8, 1999

Mr. McINTYRE. Mr. Speaker, for the record, this is to clarify that the ''no'' vote I cast on November 5, 1999, against the foreign Operations Appropriations bill is by no means an indication that I am opposed to foreign aid for Israel, India, Greece, or Cyprus. Indeed, my voting record with regard to aid for these countries clearly exemplifies my strong support for them. Our country should value our relationships with these and other nations who are allies and partners for peace. In fact, I voted for the Young Amendment to the Foreign Operations bill because it is critical to our national security interests that we provide assistance to implement the Wye River Accord between Israel, the Palestinian Authority, and Jordan. The reason I voted against the Foreign Appropriations bill is because we, as a Nation, have an obligation to take care of our own families first and provide them with the aid they need especially in times of dire emergencies. The citizens of North Carolina are facing an imminent crisis in the wake of three major hurricanes that must be addressed immediately by Congress with the passage of an emergency relief bill. Until that happens, it is improper for us to place the needs of other countries ahead of the needs of our own taxpayers.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 900, GRAMM-LEACH-BLILEY ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, November 4, 1999

Mr. LAFALCE. Madam Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on S. 900, the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Financial Modernization Act of 1999.

In July, the House passed its version of financial modernization (H.R. 10), with a broad bipartisan vote of 343–86. The Senate passed a partisan product (S. 900) by a narrow margin of 54–44, a bill which the White House indicated it would veto because of its negative impact on the national bank charter, highly problematic provisions on the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA) and its nonexistent privacy protections.

The conference report necessarily represents a compromise between the two versions. But it is a good and balanced compromise. It effectively modernizes our financial system, while ensuring strong protections for consumers and communities. As a result, the Administration strongly supports the conference report.

There are clear gains for our financial services system, for consumers and for communities in this bill is enacted. There are clear losses if it is not.

Without this bill, banks will continue to expand into securities and insurance business as they have been doing for some years under current law. However, they will do so without CRA coverage; without privacy protections; without the regulatory oversight and regulatory protections enhanced in this bill; and with artificial structural limitations that will place the U.S. financial services industry at a clear competitive disadvantage. Without this bill, commercial firms will continue to move more and more into the banking business, with no real limitations.

I would like to review the major provisions of the bill and the intent of those provisions.

FINANCIAL MODERNIZATION

This bill permits the creation of new financial services holding companies which can offer a full range of financial products under a strong regulatory regime based on the principle of functional regulation. Banks currently engage in securities and insurance activity under existing law and court interpretations of that law, including the Bank Holding Company Act, the Federal Reserve Act, the National Banks Act, and various state laws. This conference report ensures that such activities will occur, in the future, with appropriate regulatory oversight based on the principle of functional regulation. The conference report also provides for appropriate ''umbrella'' authority at the holding company level by the Federal Reserve, and essential consumer and community protections.

The conference report, in contrast to the Senate bill, clearly preserves the strength of the national bank charter by giving institutions a choice of corporate structure through which they can conduct their business consistent with the original House product.

I would like to clarify the intent of this legislation as it pertains to the market-making, dealing and other activities of securities affiliates of financial holding companies. Currently, bank holding companies are generally prohibited from acquiring more than five percent of the voting stock of any company whose activities are not closely related to banking. The Federal Reserve has determined that a securities affiliate of a bank holding company cannot acquire or retain more than five percent of the voting shares of a company in a market-making or dealing capacity. In addition, for purposes of determining compliance with this five-percent limit, the Federal Reserve has required that the voting shares held by the securities affiliate be aggregated with the shares held by other affiliates of the bank holding company.

I would like to make clear that, by permitting financial holding companies to engage in underwriting, dealing and market making, Congress intends that the five-percent limitation no longer apply to bona fide securities underwriting, dealing, and market-making activities. In addition, voting securities held by a securities affiliate of a financial holding company in an underwriting, dealing or market-making capacity would not need to be aggregated with any shares that may be held by other affiliates of the financial holding company. This is necessary under the bill so that bank-affiliated securities firms can conduct securities activities in the same manner and to the same extent as their non-bank affiliated competitors, which is one of the principal objectives of the legislation. The elimination of the restriction applies only to bona fide securities underwriting, dealing, and market-making activities and does not permit financial holding companies and their affiliates to control non-financial companies in ways that are otherwise impermissible under the bill.

The Conference Committee agreed to make the effective date of implementation of Title I, except for Section 104, 120 days from the date of enactment. We reached this decision to provide the regulators with an opportunity to implement this legislation effectively. It is the intent of the Conferees that Title I become effective 120 days after enactment even if the agencies are not able to complete all of the rulemaking required under the act during that time.

In addition, it should be noted that in some instances, no rule writing is required. For example, new Section 4(k)(4) of the Bank Holding Company Act, as added by Section 103 of the bill, explicitly authorizes bank holding companies which file the necessary certifications to engage in a laundry list of financial activities. These activities are permissible upon the effective date of the act without further action by the regulators. The Conferees recognize, however, that refinements in rulemaking may be necessary and desirable going forward, and for example, have specifically authorized the Federal Reserve and the Treasury Department to jointly issue rules on merchant banking activities. If regulators determine that any such rulemaking is necessary, the Conferees encourage them to act expeditiously.

COMMUNITY REINVESTMENT ACT (CRA)

DISCLOSURE AND REPORTING OF CRA AGREEMENTS

While I support the general concept of disclosure, the so-called ''sunshine'' provision could be pernicious because it could cast aspersions on the many constructive partnerships between banks and community groups that are helping to bring thousands of communities and millions of Americans into the financial mainstream.

Fortunately, however, the bill now substantially limits the scope, reporting requirements, and penalties for violating the disclosure requirements.

The ''sunshine'' amendment applies only to agreements that would ''materially impact'' a bank's CRA rating or a regulator's decision to approve a bank's application. Few if any agreements with major banks would have so large an impact. Indeed, it would neither make sense nor be workable to require annual reports for every contract between a bank and every community partner merely because they had discussed how to best meet CRA requirements. In addition, grants and cash payments under $10,000 and loans under $50,000 would be automatically exempted, as would most market rate loans that are not re-lent. I also strongly encourage the regulators to use their authority to exclude agreements with service organizations such as civil rights groups and community groups providing housing or other services in low-income neighborhoods. We have no business interfering with such organizations just because they work with banks, and it is not Congress' intent to do so.

Community groups and other partners of banks would have to make annual reports of how the funds were used, but here again the conferees have substantially scaled back their requirements. The regulators are directed to ensure that the reporting requirements do not impose an undue burden on the parties and that proprietary and confidential information is protected. Organizations with multiple agreements with banks could file a single consolidated report. In addition, the Statement of Managers directs that a bank's partner may, ''in keeping with the provisions of this section, fulfill the requirements . . . . by the submission of its annual audited financial statement or its federal income tax return.''

Finally, penalties only apply to a community group or another partner of a bank if the party makes a willful and material misrepresentation on a report and then fails to correct the problem after notification and a reasonable period. Only in such a case would an agreement between the bank and its partner become unenforceable.

This summarizes the essential and substantial changes that have been made to the original Senate disclosure provision. However, these provisions are of such potential import that I would like to elaborate in considerable detail on the history of the provision and the intent of the conferees in making the substantial changes reflected in the conference report.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

DISCLOSURE PROVISION

Some legitimate concerns have been raised over the potential burden imposed by the disclosure and reporting requirements contained in Section 711 of the bill. The provision in the final bill involved intensive negotiations by both the minority and majority parties which significantly narrowed the scope of the provision, the reporting requirements, and the circumstances under which violations may be found to have occurred and penalties imposed.

The statute provides in new section 48(h)(2)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act that the appropriate Federal banking agency ''shall . . . ensure that the regulations prescribed by the agency do not impose an undue burden on the parties and that proprietary and confidential information is protected. . . .'' This is a central component of the provision as agreed to by the conferees. It is the conferees' understanding that this subsection is intended to prevent any overly broad or unduly burdensome reading of the reporting and disclosure requirements of this provision, including the requirements of section 48(c), the reporting requirements placed on non-insured depository institutions that are parties to agreements covered by this provision.

The prohibition in section 48(h)(2)(A) against placing an ''undue burden'' on the parties applies fully to every subsection of section 48. Section 48(c), which provides for reporting of information by nongovernmental entities or persons, is to be interpreted in light of subsection (h)(2)(A), to prevent any ''undue burden'' from falling on the parties to a covered agreement. As the Statement of Managers' provides:

The Federal banking agencies are directed, in implementing regulations under this provision, to minimize the regulatory burden on reporting parties. One way in which to accomplish this goal would be whenever possible and appropriate with the purposes of this section, to make use of existing reporting and auditing requirements and practices of reporting parties, and thus avoid unnecessary duplication of effort. The Managers intend that, in issuing regulations under this section, the appropriate federal supervisory agency may provide that the nongovernmental entity or person that is not an insurer depository institution may, where appropriate and in keeping with the provisions of this section, fulfill the requirements of subsection (c) by the submission of its annual audited financial statement or its federal income tax return.

It is intended that, for example, subsection (c)(3) be read to require a ''list'' of the ''categories'' of uses to which funds received by the reporting party under covered agreements have been made.

It is not the intent that subsection (c)(3) require a reporting of any particular expense. A reporting entity might, however, include, if applicable an item in their report entitled ''administrative expenses,'' together with the amount, if any, of the funds received under a covered agreement or agreements, if any, expended for such purpose, or, the report might simply consist of an annual financial statement or federal income tax return. As the Statement of Managers states, this requirement could in most instances be fulfilled by the filing of an annual financial statement or federal income tax return.

The statute also directs the appropriate Federal supervisory agency to ''establish procedures to allow any nongovernmental entity or person who is a party to a large number of agreements described in subsection (a) to make a single or consolidated filing of a report under subsection (c) to an insured depository institution or an appropriate Federal banking agency.'' An organization with a large number of such agreements could simply file one summary report, summarizing the information requirement to be provided with respect to covered agreements in a single set of data in a single report, with the depository institution or regulator.

The conferees significantly modified the scope of agreements as to which this provision applies.

First, under subsection (h)(2)(A), this section is to be interpreted so as to avoid placing an ''undue burden'' on the parties.

Second, an agreement must be made ''pursuant to or in connection with the fulfillment of the Community Reinvestment Act,'' as defined in subsection (e). The term ''fulfillment'' means a list of factors that the appropriate Federal banking agency determines has a material impact on the agency's decision—(A) to approve or disapprove an application for a deposit facility, or (B) to assign a rating to an insured depository institution under an examination under the Community Reinvestment Act. As noted in the Manager's Statement, the regulator's assessment of material impact is to be based on factors that the regulator ''would attach importance to'' in approving or disapproving an application or in assigning a particular rating under CRA.

Third, the statute only pertains to agreements in which a party to the agreement receives grants or other consideration in excess of $10,000, or receives loans in excess of $50,000 under the agreement. An agreement under which nothing of value exceeding these amounts is revealed by the party is not covered by this provision.

Fourth, the statute provides for additional safe harbors from the provision. All individual mortgage loans are not covered. Other loans, unless they are substantially below market or involve re-lending to another party, are not covered. Agreements with a nongovernmental entity or person ''who has not commented on, testified about, or discussed with the institution, or otherwise contacted the institution, concerning the Community Reinvestment Act'' are also not covered. As noted in the Manager's Statement this exception could include a broad range of organizations providing services in low and moderate income areas, including ''service organizations such as civil rights groups, community groups providing housing or other services in low-income neighborhoods, the American Legion, community theater groups, and so forth.'' The conferees are aware that insured depository institutions may list contributions to these organizations as a factor to be evaluated in applications subject to CRA or in examinations under CRA. It is not the conferees' intent that the undertaking of such activities, and listing of such activities in an application or examination by an insured depository institution have any bearing whatsoever on the determination of whether an agreement is required to be disclosed, and as to which reporting is required to be made, under this section.

Fifth, the Federal Reserve Board may, under 48(h)(3)(B), prescribe regulations ''to provide further exemptions . . . consistent with the purposes of this section.'' It is the conferees intent that, consistent with the purposes of this section, including the requirement of subsection (h)(2)(A), the Federal Reserve Board broadly construe its authority to provide for further such exemptions.

In drafting this provision, the conferees were concerned about not ''chilling'' the atmosphere between community groups and banks by creating uncertainty over whether a particular CRA agreement was covered by the provision. A bank and a community group should be able to determine clearly, up-front under implementing regulations whether their CRA agreement is covered by this provision. The conferees intend that implementing regulations should make clear whether this provision applies to any given CRA agreement. To the greatest extent possible, we do not want community groups and banks to have to report unnecessarily, and we do not want to deter community groups and banks from entering these arrangements by creating confusion. The bank regulators should promulgate regulations so that parties know in advance whether their agreement is covered or not, consistent with the purposes of the provision.

''HAVE AND MAINTAIN'' PROVISIONS

The requirement that a banking organization have a ''satisfactory'' CRA rating is an ongoing requirement in order for it to expand into these new areas. Each and every time that a bank or its holding company seeks to expand into these newly authorized nonbanking lines of business—such as securities underwriting or insurance—their insured depository affiliates must have a ''satisfactory'' CRA rating. This requirement applies each time the banking organization commences one of these nonbanking activities, or acquires or merges with another company in a nonbanking area. The Conference Report would therefore extend enforcement of CRA, in that under the Act, a bank's CRA record would be taken into consideration in determining whether the bank or its holding company can expand into nonbanking activities.

Today, banks are permitted to expand into nonbanking activities—to the extent permitted by current law—without any consideration of their CRA performance at all. The Federal Reserve Board reports that it has approved thousands of applications for such expansions, and the current law does not impose any CRA review on these nonbank expansions at all. Under the Conference Report, each of the insured depository affiliates of banking organizations must have a ''satisfactory'' CRA rating at the time it expands into the nonbanking area. This is a new requirement, and for the first time makes satisfactory CRA performance a prerequisite to entering these nonbanking lines of business.

There are two major enforcement provisions for this requirement. First, if the banking organization violates the prohibition against entering these nonbanking lines of business without its affiliated banks having a satisfactory CRA rating, all the penalties of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act apply. The FDIA penalties for noncompliance include divestiture and cease and desist orders, civil money penalties, and removal of officers and directors. Second, by not earning a ''satisfactory'' CRA rating, a bank and its holding company would be prohibited from entering these new lines of business. In effect, that imposes a high opportunity cost in missed business opportunities, and creates a powerful imperative for the holding company to ensure that its affiliated and subsidiary banks maintain at least a satisfactory CRA rating.

The bill does not affect the existing application process for banks acquiring or merging with other banks, in which the regulators review the banks' CRA record and the public has an opportunity to comment. The existing procedures for bank mergers or acquisitions with other banks are preserved fully intact. There are no changes.

SMALL BANK CRA EXAMINATION CYCLE

Although the statute sets a time line for examinations of banks under $250 million in assets that are currently rated ''outstanding'', the regulators nonetheless retain the full discretion to examine any bank at any time for reasonable cause. Section 712 of the statute states: ''a regulated financial institution described in subsection (a) may be subject to more frequent or less frequent examinations for reasonable cause under such circumstances as may be determined by the appropriate Federal financial supervisory agency.'' This means that regulators retain full discretion to examine any bank for CRA compliance at any time for reasonable cause. For example, the bank's local market conditions may have changed significantly so that the bank's lending should have adjusted accordingly, or a change in bank management may have redirected the bank's lending practices such that the regulators find reasonable cause to conduct a CRA examination outside the routine cycle. The public could send comments to the bank regulators at any time regarding the CRA performance of any banks—even if outside the routine CRA examination or application process—and if the regulators find reasonable cause to do so, they could conduct a CRA exam of that bank. The public may comment to the regulators regarding a particular bank so that regulators can make a fully informed judgment about whether there is ''reasonable cause'' to conduct a CRA exam outside the routine cycle. Of course, regulators must come to their own conclusions about whether such an ''off-cycle'' CRA exam is justified, but public comment to the regulators can be valuable to their decisionmaking.

With regard to section 712, this provision does not affect the regulators' judgment about when to examine banks under $250 million with a less than satisfactory rating. This provision is not indented by the conferees to limit the regulators from examining small banks with less than satisfactory records as they deem appropriate. My understanding is that the bank regulators' current practice is to conduct CRA examinations of banks with less than satisfactory CRA records as often as every 6–18 months. This provision does not restrict or direct their judgment for those banks. CRA examinations in connection with applications for bank mergers and acquisitions are also not affected by these provisions in any way. The provision also does not in any way affect the current law's requirements to take into account an institution's CRA record of meeting the credit needs of its community when banks are merging or acquiring other banks, or for any application for a depository facility.

PRIVACY

For the first time, this bill imposes substantial privacy protections for consumers under federal law in the financial services context. The privacy provisions of the bill:

Impose on all financial institutions an ''affirmative and continuing obligation'' to respect the privacy of customers and the security and confidentiality of their personal information;

Requires the federal regulators to issue institutional safeguards that will protect customers against unauthorized access to and use of their personal information;

Requires that consumers be provided with notice and an ''opt-out'' opportunity before their financial institutions can disclose any personal financial information to unaffiliated third parties;

Prohibits financial institutions from sharing with unaffiliated parties any credit card, savings and transaction account numbers or other means of access to such accounts for purposes of marketing;

Prohibits unaffiliated third parties that receive confidential information from sharing that information with any other unaffiliated parties;

Requires financial institutions to fully disclose to customers all of their privacy policies and procedures;

Amends the Fair Credit Reporting Act to strengthen and expand regulatory authority to detect and enforce against violations of credit reporting and consumer privacy requirements.

These are the very same privacy provisions that passed the House by a virtually unanimous 427–1 vote. In fact, the provisions actually represent a strengthening of the House product in two key respects. First of all, the disclosure requirement has been extended to cover a financial institution's practices on information-sharing within the affiliate structure, allowing consumers to comparison shop based on a company's privacy policies. Secondly, the conference report totally safeguards stronger state consumer protection laws in the privacy area.

Section 502(d) of the conference report contains a broad prohibition against the disclosure of a consumer's account number or similar form of access device by a financial institution to any non-affiliated third party for use in direct marketing. The agencies with rulemaking authority under the legislation may grant exceptions to this prohibition if ''deemed consistent with the purposes of this subtitle.'' The report language makes clear that any exceptions to this strict prohibition are to be narrowly drawn and my be deemed consistent with the purposes of the bill only where three factors are present: (1) The customer account number or access device is encrypted, scrambled or decoded, (2) the customer provides express consent to the financial institution to make such disclosure prior to the time of the disclosure; in other words, the customer ''opts–in'' to such disclosure with the financial institution, and (3) such disclosure is necessary to service or process a transaction that the customer expressly requests or authorizes.

The joint marketing provision sought to narrow the potentially unequal application of privacy restrictions between larger financial entities that operate through affiliates and smaller banks and credit unions that must contract with outside institutions to provide basic financial services such as credit cards or mortgages to customers. It is important to note that the provision contains at least four levels of restrictions to limit its application. The joint marketing exception applies only to agreements under which one financial institution markets the products of another or markets financial products on the other institution's behalf. Permissible joint agreements and financial products would be limited by federal regulation and any sharing of information must be clearly disclosed and subject to strict confidentiality contracts.

OTHER CONSUMER AND COMMUNITY PROTECTIONS

The bill contains important other new consumer and community protections.

It:

Provides extensive new consumer protections in connection with bank sales of insurance products, including prohibitions against tying, misrepresentation or conditioning of credit on purchases of other products; clear disclosure of the risks associated with insurance products; separation of insurance sales from routine banking activity; and new federal procedures to resolve consumer complaints;

Provides new consumer protections as prerequisites for bank sales of investment products, including full disclosures regarding potential risks and the uninsured status of the products, and sales practices standards restricting such sales to qualified brokers and to areas separated from routine banking activity;

Expands small business and rural development lending by making Federal Home Loan Bank advances available for small business, small farm and agribusiness lending by smaller community banks;

Creates a new federal ''Program for Investment in Microentrepreneurs'' (PRIME) to provide technical assistance and capacity building grants for small or disadvantaged business with less than five employees that have limited access to business financing;

Prohibits discrimination against victims of domestic violence in the underwriting, pricing, sale, renewal of any insurance product and in the settlement of any claim;

States Congressional intent that financial advisors shall provide financial advice and products to women in an equal, nondiscriminatory manner.

MUTUAL REDOMESTICATION

A bill of this breadth will inevitably include some elements that are highly problematic and objectionable. I strongly oppose the conference report language on redomestication of mutual insurers.

This provision is not only not in the public interest, it is blatantly anti-consumer. It would circumvent well-designed and carefully considered state policy regarding the redomestication of mutual insurance companies. It has little or nothing to do with financial services modernization. Rather it serves to undermine state law, which seeks to protect our constituents, for the benefit of a few.

The conference report could place as many as 35 million policyholders at risk of losing $94.7 billion in equity. This amounts to a Congressionally approved taking of consumers' personal property. I believe this provision will not withstand legal scrutiny and should and will be the subject of legal challenge in the courts.

This provision would allow mutual insurers domiciled in states whose legislatures have elected not to allow mutual insurers to form mutual holding companies to escape that legislative determination. It would allow mutual insurers to move simply because a state, through its duly elected representatives, has determined that formation of mutual holding companies is not in the best interest of the state or its mutual insurance policyholders who are, after all, the owners to the company. This conference report will preempt the mutual insurance laws in approximately 30 states.

CONCLUSION

Overall, the conference report represents a reasonable and fair balance on a wide variety of difficult issues. Because of the many benefits this legislation provides for consumers, communities and the U.S. financial services industry, I offer my strong support to the legislation.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily

Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, November 9, 1999 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

SENATE—Tuesday, November 9, 1999

The Senate met at 9:31 p.m. and was called to oder by the President pro tempore [Mrs. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

In 1780, Samuel Adams said, If you carefully fulfill the various duties of life, from a principle of obedience to your heavenly Father, you will enjoy a peace that the world cannot give nor take away.

Let us pray.

Gracious Father, we seek to be obedient to You as we fulfill the sacred duties of this Senate today. May the Senators and all who assist them see the work of this day as an opportunity to glorify You by serving our country. We renew our commitment to excellence in all that we do. Our desire is to know and do Your will. Grant us a profound experience of Your peace, true serenity in our soul that comes from complete trust in You, and dependence on Your guidance. Free us from anything that would distract or disturb us as we give ourselves totally to You for the tasks and challenges of this day. In our Lord's name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable GEORGE VOINOVICH, a Senator from the State of Ohio, led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VOINOVICH). The acting majority leader is recognized.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the Chair.

SCHEDULE

Mr. SPECTER. On behalf of our distinguished majority leader, I have been asked to make the following announcements.

Today the Senate will resume consideration of the bankruptcy reform legislation with 1 hour of debate on the pending minimum wage amendments. Following the debate, the Senate will proceed to two rollcall votes at approximately 10:30 a.m. There are numerous pending amendments, and others are expected to be offered and debated during today's session. Therefore, Senators may anticipate votes throughout the day. Progress is being made on the appropriations issues, and it is hoped that those remaining issues can be resolved prior to the Veterans Day recess.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM ACT OF 1999—Resumed

Pending:

Kohl amendment No. 2516, to limit the value of certain real or personal property a debtor may elect to exempt under State or local law.

Sessions amendment No. 2518 (to amendment No. 2516), to limit the value of certain real or personal property a debtor may elect to exempt under State or local law.

Feingold (for Durbin) amendment No. 2521, to discourage predatory lending practices.

Feingold amendment No. 2522, to provide for the expenses of long term care.

Hatch/Torricelli amendment No. 1729, to provide for domestic support obligations.

Leahy/Murray/Feinstein amendment No. 2528, to ensure additional expenses and income adjustments associated with protection of the debtor and the debtor's family from domestic violence are included in the debtor's monthly expenses.

Leahy amendment No. 2529, to save United States taxpayers $24,000,000 by eliminating the blanket mandate relating to the filing of tax returns.

Wellstone amendment No. 2537, to disallow claims of certain insured depository institutions.

Wellstone amendment No. 2538, with respect to the disallowance of certain claims and to prohibit certain coercive debt collection practices.

Kennedy amendment No. 2751, to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to increase the Federal minimum wage.

Domenici amendment No. 2547, to increase the Federal minimum wage and protect small business.

Feinstein amendment No. 1696, to limit the amount of credit extended under an open end consumer credit plan to persons under the age of 21.

Feinstein amendment No. 2755, to discourage indiscriminate extensions of credit and resulting consumer insolvency.

Schumer/Durbin amendment No. 2759, with respect to national standards and homeowner home maintenance costs.

Schumer/Durbin amendment No. 2762, to modify the means test relating to safe harbor provisions.

Schumer amendment No. 2763, to ensure that debts incurred as a result of clinic violence are nondischargeable.

Schumer amendment No. 2764, to provide for greater accuracy in certain means testing.

Schumer amendment No. 2765, to include certain dislocated workers' expenses in the debtor's monthly expenses.

Levin amendment No. 2768, to prohibit certain retroactive finance charges.

Levin amendment No. 2772, to express the sense of the Senate concerning credit worthiness.

LABOR–HHS APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief comment, if I may, on one of the items referred to in a statement by the majority leader about the appropriations process, which I think will be of interest to our colleagues and perhaps to others who may be watching on C–SPAN 2.

We had negotiations beginning at 4 o'clock on Sunday afternoon with officials from the White House, and we are trying to resolve those issues in a spirit of accommodation. With respect to the dollars involved, the bill which came out of the Appropriations Committee was $93.7 billion for the three Departments. That was $600 million more than the President's figure, and it was $300 million more than the President's figure on education.

I worked on a bipartisan basis with my distinguished colleague, Senator HARKIN. The bill was crafted with what we thought was the right dollar amount—frankly, the maximum amount—to pass with votes in substantial numbers from Republicans and an amount which would be acceptable to Democrats and to the President because it was somewhat higher than his figure and we emphasized increased funding for the National Institutes of Health.

The administration has come back with a figure of $2.3 billion additional, and Congressman PORTER and I made an offer yesterday to add $228 million, provided we could find offsets because it is very important that we not go into the Social Security trust funds. So that whatever dollars we add to accommodate the President's priorities—we are going to have to have offsets on priorities which the Congress has established. We are prepared to meet him halfway on priorities on dollars—we are going to have to have offsets on priorities which the Congress has established.

There is a much more difficult issue in this matter than the dollars, although the dollars are obviously of great importance, and the issue which is extremely contentious is what will be done on the President's demand to have $1.4 billion to reduce classroom size to have additional teachers.

The Senate bill has appropriated $1.2 billion which maintains the high level of last year's funding. When it comes to the issue of the utilization of that money, we are prepared to acknowledge the President's first priority of reduction of classroom size for teachers. But if the local school board makes a factual determination that is not the real need of the local school board, then we propose that the second priority be teacher training. If the local school board decides that is not where the money ought to be spent, then we propose to give it to the school board the discretion as to the spending to local education, as opposed to a straitjacket out of Washington.

The White House Press Secretary has issued a statement this morning saying that these funds could be used for vouchers, and that is not true. That is a red herring. To allay any concern, we will make it explicit in the bill that the President's concern about the use of these funds for vouchers will be allayed. We are prepared to make that accommodation, although there had never been any intent to use it for vouchers. However, we will make that intent explicit in the bill.

Behind the issue of classroom size and the President's demand is a much greater constitutional issue. That is the constitutional issue of who controls the power of the purse. The Constitution gives the authority to the Congress to establish spending priorities, and we have seen a process evolve in the past few years which does not follow the constitutional format. The Constitution is very specific that each House will decide on a bill, have a conference, and send that bill to the President for his signature or for his veto; and if he vetoes it, the bill then comes back to the Congress for reenactment. But what has happened in the immediate past has been that executive branch officials sit in with the appropriators and are a part of the legislative process, which is a violation of the principle of separation of powers. Now, I must say that I have been a party to those meetings because that is what is going on. But I want to identify it as a process which is not in conformity with the Constitution. It is something we ought to change. When it comes to the power and the control, what we have seen happen in the last 4 years is that the President has really made an effort, and to a substantial extent a successful effort, to take over the prerogative of the Congress on the power of the purse.

When the Government was closed in late 1995 and early 1996, the Republican-controlled Congress was blamed for the closure. That, candidly, has made the Congress gun-shy to challenge the President on spending issues. Since that time there has been a concession to the President on whatever it is that he wants, sort of ''pay a price to get out of town'' when people are anxious to have the congressional session adjourn.

Speaking for myself and I think quite a few others in the Congress are not going to put on the pressure to get out of town. We are going to do the job and do it right. Senator LOTT held a news conference yesterday and was asked about the termination time. He said he thought it was possible to finish the public's business by the close of the legislative session on Wednesday, which is tomorrow, but it was more important, as Senator LOTT articulated, to do it right than get it finished by any arbitrary deadline. I concur totally with Senator LOTT. I think it is possible to get the business finished by the end of the working day tomorrow. But it is more important to get it right than to get it finished on any prescribed schedule. In modern times there is too much concern about getting out of town, than perhaps getting the job done right. But we are determined to get it done and to get it done right. If we can get it done by the end of business tomorrow, that is what our goal is. But we are not going to sacrifice getting it done right in order to be able to finish up by Wednesday afternoon to get out of town.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield for a question? Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SPECTER. No, I will not yield here, but I will in just a minute.

What we have seen is the President's ultimatum. He says this issue on schoolteachers is nonnegotiable. That is hardly the way you get into a negotiation session. Then his Chief of Staff, John Podesta, said on Sunday that if the Congress wants to get out of town they are going to have to accede to the President's demands on teachers, to do it his way. I think that is not appropriate. Congress has the power of the purse under the Constitution. It is our fundamental responsibility on appropriations. We are prepared to negotiate, but we are not prepared to deal with nonnegotiable demands. We are not prepared to deal with ultimatums. We are going back into a session—I don't know whether I should call it a negotiating session or not, because the President talks about nonnegotiable demands. Frankly, I am prepared to meet that with a nonnegotiable demand, not giving up on our prerogative to make a determination as to how the money is to be spent and getting local control over a Presidential straitjacket.

Now I would be delighted to yield to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I wanted to inquire of the desk what the Senate business was supposed to be? I was under the impression we were supposed to be, at 9:30, on the minimum wage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield the floor?

Mr. SPECTER. I have concluded. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask we extend the time. How much time did the Senator from Pennsylvania expend?

Mr. DOMENICI. What was the question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I asked how much time the Senator from Pennsylvania used?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican side has 19 minutes left.

Mr. KENNEDY. Just as a matter of inquiry, were taken out of the time of the debate. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Taken out of the Republican time.

Mr. KENNEDY. OK. Mr. President, I yield myself 12 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I listened to the Senator from Pennsylvania's comments with great interest. I will mention very briefly in defense of the administration, although they can make the case quite well for themselves that if the Appropriations Committee had finished their business on time we would not be in this particular dilemma. Only four appropriations bills were actually completed on time for the fiscal year. So with all respect to our friend on the other side, if the appropriators had placed, particularly the HEW appropriations, first rather than last, I do not think we would be having these kinds of problems in the areas of negotiation between the President and the Congress.

Second, the basic program which the President has been fighting for in this negotiation is almost identical to what the Republicans supported last year. With all respect to the comments we have just heard, the fact is if the classes reach the goals, the 15 percent setaside for funding for smaller class sizes can be used to enhance the teacher training. If the school had already achieved the lower class size of 18, it would be used for special needs or other kinds of professional purposes.

So it is difficult for me to understand the frustration of the Senator from Pennsylvania when the Republican leaders all effectively endorse what the President talked about last year. If their position is not sustained, there are going to be 30,000 teachers who are teaching in first, second, and third grades who are going to get pink slips. I don't think the problem in education is having fewer schoolteachers teach in the early grades but to have more.

I want to make clear I am not a part of those negotiations this year, but I was last year. I know what the particular issue is. With all respect to those who are watching C–SPAN II, I want them to know the President is fighting for smaller class sizes as well as for better trained teachers. We have seen Senator MURRAY make that presentation and make it effectively time and again. I think it is something that parents support, teachers understand, and children have benefited from. No one makes that case more eloquently than the Senator from the State of Washington. But I certainly hope the President will continue that commitment. We have scarce Federal resources. They are targeted in areas of particular need. That is the purpose of these negotiations. I hope we can conclude a successful negotiation.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield on my time?

Mr. KENNEDY. On your time, yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Just for an observation. He might want to answer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the truth of the matter is if schools want the new teachers, under the proposal of the distinguished chairman who just took to the floor to explain the obstinacy of the President, they can have the money for teachers. That is what he is saying. It is up to them. If they want all the money that comes from this appropriation used for teachers, they can have it. If they say, we don't need them, we don't want them, he is saying there is a second priority.

Frankly, I think that is excellent policy with reference to the schools of our country. I believe the Senator from Pennsylvania makes a good point. For the President to continue to say we are not going to get this bill unless we do it exactly his way leaves us with no alternative. We have some prerogatives, too. The fact is, if you read the Constitution, he doesn't appropriate; the Congress does.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, just to respond, we have a need for 2 million teachers. We have scarce Federal resources. If the States or local communities want to do whatever the Senator from New Mexico says, all well and good. But we are talking about scarce Federal resources that are targeted in ways that have been proven effective in enhancing academic achievement and accomplishment.

I am again surprised. The Republicans were taking credit for this last year. I was in the negotiations. Mr. GOODLING and Mr. Gingrich—as we were waiting to find out whether the powers that be, the Speaker, was going to endorse this, when we were waiting and having negotiations—went out and announced it and took credit for it. They took credit for this proposal of the President.

I find it a little difficult to understand this kind of frustration that is being demonstrated here. But we will come back to this and Senator MURRAY can address these issues at a later time. I certainly hope the President will not flinch in his commitment to getting smaller class sizes and better trained teachers and after school programs. That is what this President has been fighting for. I hope he will not yield at this time in these final negotiations, after we have only had four appropriations that have met the deadline. Before we get all excited about these negotiations, if our appropriators had completed this work in time, we would not be here.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do we have? I will be glad to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 24 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Good. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, briefly, I ask my colleague, is it not true this appropriation for education was the last of the bills considered by the Appropriations Committee? Is it not true that we waited until the very last day to even bring up this issue of education, the highest priority for American families? Now we find ourselves trying to adjourn, stuck on an issue that could have been resolved months ago had we made education as high a priority on Capitol Hill as it is in family rooms across America.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is absolutely correct. The Senator from Illinois, the Senator from California, and I know the Senator from Washington as well, had hoped—and I believe I can speak for our Democratic leader—this would be the No. 1 appropriation and not the last one. If we had this as the No. 1 appropriation on the issue of education, we would not have these little statements we have heard this morning. But it is the last one. That is not by accident; that is by choice of the Republican leadership.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-three minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 7 minutes.

In a few moments, we will be voting on the minimum wage issue that is before the Senate. I want to review what the record has been over the last 2 years.

In September of 1998, we brought up the minimum wage issue, and were unable to bring that to a vote on the basis of the merits. The Republican leadership said no.

In March of 1999, we tried to bring up this issue. Again, we were denied an opportunity to vote on it.

In April of 1999, we brought it up again as an amendment on Y2K. We were denied an opportunity to have a full debate.

In July of 1999, we brought it up again, and again we were turned down.

Now we have the minimum wage legislation before us, and in a cynical move, the Republican leadership said: Even if you get the passage of the minimum wage, it ''ain't'' going to go any further; the President isn't going to see it; it is going to end.

It is a sham. Their effort is basically a sham. That is the position in which we find ourselves today.

We know Americans are working longer and harder. The working poor are working longer and harder than at any time in the history of our country. We know that over the last 10 years, women are working 3 weeks longer a year in order to earn the minimum wage and men are averaging 50 hours a week. These are some of the hardest working men and women in the country.

At the height of the minimum wage in the late 1960s, it had the purchasing power that $7.49 would have today. If we are not able to raise the minimum wage this year and next, its value will be at an all-time low—in a time of extraordinary prosperity in this country. That is fundamentally wrong.

A vote for the Republican amendment will not help working families. It is, in fact, an insult to low-wage workers. It robs them of over $1,200 as compared to the Democratic proposal, and it drastically undermines the overtime provisions in the Fair Labor Standards Act which has been the law for over 60 years.

The Republican proposal jeopardizes the overtime pay of 73 million Americans. The Republicans did not water down their own pay increase of $4,600. They are now watering down the increase in the minimum wage, and they are watering down overtime. On the one hand, they are giving an inadequate increase in the minimum wage and taking it back by cutting back on overtime. That is a sham. That is a cynical attempt to try to win support for working families from those who are trying to do justice for those individuals.

We can ask, What difference does an increase in the minimum wage make?

Cathi Zeman, 52 years old, works at a Rite Aid in Canseburg, PA. She earns $5.68 an hour. She is the primary earner in the family because her husband has a heart condition and is only able to work sporadically. What difference would an increase in the minimum wage mean to Cathi and her family? It would cover 6 months of utility bills for Cathi's family.

Kimberly Frazier, a full-time child care aide from Philadelphia testified her pay of $5.20 an hour barely covers her rent, utilities, and clothes for her children. Our proposal would mean over 4 months of groceries for Kimberly and her kids.

The stories of these families remind us that it is long past time to raise the minimum wage by $1 over 2 years. We cannot delay it. We cannot stretch it out. We cannot use it to cut overtime. And we cannot use it as an excuse to give bloated tax breaks to the rich.

Members of Congress did not blink in giving themselves a $4,600 pay raise. Yet they deny a modest increase for those workers at the bottom of the economic ladder. I do not know how Members who voted for their own pay increase but I do not know how Members who vote against our minimum wage proposal will be able to face their constituents and explain their actions.

It is hypocritical and irresponsible to deny a fair pay raise to the country's lowest paid workers. Above all, raising the minimum wage $1 over 2 years and protecting overtime pay is about fairness and dignity. It is about fairness and dignity for men and women who are working 50 hours a week, 52 weeks of the year trying to provide for their children and their families.

This is a women's issue because a great majority of the minimum-wage workers are women. It is a children's issue because the majority of these women have children. It is a civil rights issue because the majority of individuals who make the minimum wage are men and women of color. And it is a fairness issue. At a time of extraordinary prosperity this country ought to be willing to grant an increase to the hardest working Americans in the nation—the day-care workers, the teachers aides. They deserve this increase. Our amendment will provide it, and the Republican amendment will not.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield for a question.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank my colleague for yielding. I say to the Senator from Massachusetts how much I appreciate him pushing this forward and how important it is to all of our States. I bring out an article that ran in the paper yesterday and today about the status of children in my home State of California, by far the largest State. I want my friend to respond to these numbers because they really say it.

This is what it says:

> Despite a booming economy that has seen a tide of prosperity wash over California in recent years, nearly 1 in 4 children under 18 in the Golden State lives in poverty. . . .
> Although the annual ''California Report Card 1999'' laments that so many children live in poverty, it paints an especially bleak portrait of a child's first four years of life.

Lois Salisbury, president of Children Now, says:

> Among all of California's children, our littlest ones . . . face the most stressful conditions of all. . . .
> At a time when a child's sense of self and security is influenced most powerfully, California deals them a [terrible] hand.

I say to my friend, this issue he is raising is so critical. We all say how much we care about the children. Every one of us has made that speech. Today the rubber meets the road. If you care about children, you have to make sure their parents can support them.

My last point is, and I will yield for the answer, I wonder if my friend has seen the New York Times editorial that says:

> The Senate will vote today on a Republican-sponsored amendment to raise the minimum wage and they say sadly the Republicans are not content to do this good deed and go home. They have loaded the amendment with tax cuts that are fiscally damaging and cynically focused on wealthy workers. Almost all of the Republican tax cuts go to the wealthy.

One of the economists who looked at this said:

> It would encourage the reduction of contributions made by employers to the pensions of the lowest paid workers.

Can my friend comment on the importance of this proposal to children and also this cynical proposal that our colleagues on the other side are presenting?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator has raised an enormously important point. Americans who are working in poverty, which is at the highest level in 20 years, are working longer and harder than ever. The men work 50 hours a week or more on average and the women work an average of 3 weeks more a year. They have less time—22 hours less—to spend with their children than they did 10 years ago. That is why this is a children's issue, as the Senator has pointed out.

On the issue the difference between the Republican and the Democratic proposals, the Republicans say that their proposal makes some difference for those individuals who are going to get an increase in the minimum wage over 3 years.

This is a raw deal for them. On the one hand, they give them an increase in the minimum wage, and on the other hand they take back the overtime for 73 million Americans. It is a cynical sham, and it is a cynical sham because the majority leader has said even if it passes, it will never go out of this Chamber. That is the attitude toward hard-working men and women who are trying to play by the rules and get along at a time when they have the lowest purchasing power in the history of the minimum wage and we have the most extraordinary prosperity. And then they insult these workers even further by adding a $75 billion tax break over 10 years. And then we just heard about the difficulty we are having in conference about $1 billion on education because they say we cannot afford to do things, but the same side is suggesting a $75 billion tax break. Where are they getting their money? So it is a cynical play.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAPO). Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota off our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GRAMS. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. President, I rise today to offer my enthusiastic support for the package of tax proposals introduced by Senator DOMENICI. I'm enthusiastic, in part, because it contains a provision that is very important to me—above-the-line deductibility of health insurance for individuals.

Over 40 million American workers didn't have health insurance in 1997. The number has increased in the last two years to 44 million. This is disturbing, but I believe there is something Congress can do to help without resorting to a national health care system.

Mr. President, when employers purchase a health plan for their employees, he or she can fully deduct the costs of providing that insurance, effectively lowering the actual costs of providing coverage.

However, when an employee purchases an individual policy on their own, they must do so with after tax-dollars. They don't have the ability or the advantage offered to employers to reduce the actual costs of the policy by deducting premiums from their taxes every year. Therefore, they often wind up without any health coverage at all.

Earlier this year, I introduced the Health Care Access Act, which would have ended this discrimination within the Tax Code and make health care available for many more Americans by allowing the full deduction of health insurance for those without access to employer-subsidized health coverage.

We have a tax code that discriminates against some, while favoring others. Clearly, this results in fewer people being covered.

The amendment before us today takes a slightly different approach, but its goal is the same—to level the tax-playing field. By allowing individuals without access to employer-sponsored health insurance, or those whose employers do not cover more than 50 percent of the cost of coverage, to deduct those costs regardless of whether they itemize or not, we can address a growing segment of our uninsured population by doing this.

Under this amendment, from 2002 to 2004, eligible employees can deduct 25 percent of costs, 35 percent in 2005, 65 percent in 2006, and 100 percent after that.

If there are no changes in the health care system and no significant downturn of the economy, we can expect the number of uninsured to reach 53 million over the next ten years. This translates into 25 percent of non-elderly Americans without coverage.

Forty-three percent of the uninsured are in families with incomes above 200 percent of the federal poverty level. Twenty-eight percent of the uninsured work for small firms and 18 percent of all uninsured are between the ages of 18 and 24.

The question that comes to mind is, if we're experiencing record growth in our economy and the unemployment rate is declining, why is the number of uninsured continuing to rise? The answer is costs.

In the event a small business can offer a health plan to its employees, many times it is at a higher cost to the employee than it would be if the employee were to have a job at a larger firm. In this instance, employees have to decide if they believe their health status is such that they can go without health insurance, or if they should spend after-tax dollars to pay for a larger portion of their health insurance. Here is where we have the difficulty.

Individuals employed by small businesses which can't afford to pay more than 50 percent of the monthly premiums for their employees should be able to have the same tax advantage as the employer in paying for their health insurance. Under our plan today, they will. In fact, because the tax deduction is what we call ''above-the-line,'' meaning if would be available to everyone—even if they don't itemize their taxes—we attack the most significant barrier to health coverage again, which is its costs, and move closer to eliminating all barriers to health coverage.

In other words, get more Americans covered by allowing them the deductibility of the costs.

I am also pleased that this amendment includes many other important components such as pension reform and small business tax relief.

We are talking about tax relief for small businesses, not the wealthiest as you hear from the other side of the aisle, but tax relief pinpointed at the hard-working Americans in this country who are also job providers.

Retirement income security is crucial for millions of American workers. This amendment reforms and enhances current pension laws to ensure workers will achieve income security upon retirement. It repeals the unnecessary temporary FUTA surtax, which has become a burden to many small businesses. The amendment allows millions of self-employed Americans to deduct 100 percent of their health insurance costs. This is a critical provision because 61 percent of the uninsured in this country are from a family headed by an entrepreneur or a small business employee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAMS. I ask for 2 more minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the Senator 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GRAMS. In wrapping up, the amendment increases small business expensing to $30,000. This change alone means an extra $3,850 in tax savings for each small business in new equipment next year. This amendment also allows small business to increase the meal and entertainment expense tax deduction. The Work Opportunity Tax Credit has helped millions of Americans leave welfare programs and become productive workers in our economy. This amendment makes the WOTC permanent, so small businesses and former welfare recipients will continue to benefit from the Work Opportunity Tax Credit.

It seems unfair to me that in a time of prosperity we hear our colleagues on the other side talking about tax increases. Again, in their plan, they would impose new, even higher taxes. They talk about minimum wage; they are taxing and taxing and taxing those people as they enter the job market. What we need is a plan that will reduce taxes, not increase taxes.

America's small business is the key to our economic growth and prosperity. The health care, pension reform and tax relief measures included in this amendment will help small business continue to work for America and will allow millions of Americans to realize the American Dream.

Again, that is why I rise today to enthusiastically offer my support for the tax package proposed by Senator DOMENICI.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, how much time does each side have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico controls 11 minutes 40 seconds; the Senator from Massachusetts controls 13 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time would you like, I ask Senator NICKLES?

Mr. NICKLES. Four or 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 4 minutes to Senator NICKLES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, first, I commend my colleague from New Mexico for the work that he has done in providing a more realistic substitute. But the first vote we are going to have today is voting on a motion to table the Kennedy amendment. I urge my colleagues to vote against the Kennedy amendment for a lot of different reasons, one of which is that it dramatically increases the minimum wage—about 20 percent over the next 13½ months. That is a big hit for a lot of small businesses. I am afraid it will prevent a lot of people, low-income people, who want to get their first jobs—they may not be able to get them. Estimates by some of the economists, CBO, and others, are that it could be 100,000 people; it could be 500,000 people that lose their jobs. It is a big hit.

There are a lot of other reasons to oppose the Kennedy amendment. How many of our colleagues know it has a $29 billion tax increase, that it extends Superfund taxes? We do not reauthorize the Superfund Program, but we extend the taxes. Many of us agree we need to extend the taxes when we reauthorize the program, but not before and that is in there anyway.

There is a tax increase on business. I received a letter from all the business groups opposing it. It is practically an IRS entitlement program, so they can go after anything they want.

It deals with ''Noneconomic attributes,'' whatever that means, it is a $10 billion tax increase. It may sound good and some people say that it is just to close loopholes. But it is to give IRS carte blanche to go after anything and everything they want. We reformed IRS and curbed their appetite somewhat, and regardless of those efforts this would be saying: Hey, IRS, go after anybody and everybody.

There is also a provision in the Democrat proposal that hits hospice organizations right between the eyes.

I have put letters from outside organizations addressing this very issue on Members' desks so they may see it for themselves. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD three letters from various hospice organizations.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR HOME CARE,
Washington, DC, November 8, 1999.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Association for Home Care (NAHC) represents home health agencies and hospices nationwide. While generally speaking, NAHC is supportive of efforts to maintain a reasonable minimum wage, a proposed amendment to S. 625 creates serious concerns for hospices across the country.

The proposed amendment would create a civil monetary penalty for false certification of eligibility for hospice care or partial hospitalization services. This proposal would impose a civil monetary penalty of the greater of $5,000 or three times the amount of payments under Medicare when a physician knowingly executes a false certification claiming that an individual Medicare beneficiary meets hospice coverage standards. On its face, this provision is addressed only to those physicians that intentionally and purposefully execute false certifications. However, the impact of a comparable provision on the access to home health services, as added to the law as Section 232 of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996, should caution Congress in expanding the provision to apply to hospice services.

Immediately after the physician community became aware of the 1996 amendment, physicians expressed to home health agencies across the country great hesitancy to remain involved in certifying the homebound status of prospective home health patients. The vagueness of the homebound criteria and the stepped up antifraud efforts of the Health Care Financing Administration brought a chilling effect to physicians. As a result, home health agencies reported that physicians became less involved with homecare patients rather than increasing their involvement as had been recommended by the Office of Inspector General of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

We believe that a comparable physician reaction will occur if this provision of law is extended to hospice services. A recent study reported in the Journal of the American Medical Association indicates that many eligible people may be denied Medicare hospice benefits because the life expectancy of patients with a chronic illness is nearly impossible to predict with accuracy. Medicare requires that the patient's physician and the hospice medical director certify that the patient has no more than six months to live in order to secure entitlement to the Medicare hospice benefit. The foreseeable result of the proposed amendment would be to further discourage physicians from utilizing hospice services for terminally ill patients. The existing scientific and clinical difficulties in accurately predicting the life expectancy of a patient combined with the threat of additional civil monetary penalties will adversely affect access to necessary hospice services. The experiences with home health services indicate that physicians distance themselves from the affected benefit. While the standard of applicability relates to a knowing and intentional false certification, physicians will react out of fear of inappropriate enforcement actions.

There are already numerous antifraud provisions within federal law that apply to the exact circumstance subject to the proposed civil monetary penalties. These existing laws include even more serious penalties such as the potential for imprisonment for any false claim.

We would encourage the Senate to oppose this provision, generally, and in particular, because it is contained in a non-germane legislative effort to increase the federal minimum wage. There is no evidence that physicians engage in any widespread abuse of the Medicare hospice benefit. To the contrary, evidence is growing that hospice services are underutilized as an alternative to more expensive care.

Thank you for all of your efforts to protect senior citizens in our country.

Sincerely,

VAL J. HALAMANDARIS.

HOSPICE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, November 8, 1999.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the Hospice Association of America (HAA), a national association representing our member hospice programs, thousands of hospice professionals and volunteers, and those faced with terminal illness and their families, I am requesting your support to reject a proposed amendment to S. 625 that would apply civil monetary penalties for false certification of eligibility for hospice care.

It is often difficult to make the determination that a patient is terminally ill (life expectancy of six months or less if the terminal illness run its normal course), because the course of terminal is different for each patient and is not predictable. In some rare cases patients have been admitted to hospice care and have improved so as to be discharged from the program. The determination regarding the terminal status of a patient is not an exact science and should not be judged harshly in retrospect.

In a recent edition of JAMA, The Journal of American Medical Association, researchers reported that the recommended clinical prediction criteria are not effective in a population with a survival prognosis of six months or less. According to Medicare survival data, only 15 percent of patients receiving Medicare hospice survive longer than six months and the median survival of Medicare patients enrolled in hospices is under 40 days. This information demonstrates what has been well known by those working in the hospice community, the science of prognostication is in its infancy and physicians must use the tools that are available, medial guidelines and local medical review policies developed by the Health Care Financing Administration, as well as their best medical judgment.

Physicians can not be punished for possible overestimation of a terminally ill patient's life expectancy. The only ones to be punished will be the patients in need of hospice services whose physicians will be denied from enrolling appropriate patients, thus denying access to this compassionate, humane, patient and family centered care at the end-of-their lives.

Please reject the proposed amendment to S. 625.

Sincerely,

KAREN WOODS,
Executive Director.

FEDERATION OF
AMERICAN HEALTH SYSTEMS,
Washington, DC, November 8, 1999.

Hon. DON NICKLES,
Assistant Majority leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR ASSISTANT MAJORITY LEADER: The Federation of American Health Systems, representing 1700 privately-owned and managed community hospitals has generally not taken a position on the minimum wage bill. However, we find it necessary to object to an amendment that will be offered today during consideration of the bill.

Specifically, we are concerned with an amendment that will apparently address ''partial hospitalization'' issues. While the Federation supports the goal of improving the integrity of the Medicare program by addressing concerns with partial hospitalization, we oppose its attachment to non-Medicare legislation. Clearly, any amendment that reduces Medicare trust fund spending should either be used to enhance the solvency of the trust fund, or for other Medicare trust fund purposes.

We appreciate your consideration of our position.

Sincerely,

THOMAS A. SCULLY,
President and CEO.

Mr. NICKLES. From the Hospice Association of America:

. . . . I am requesting your support to reject a proposed amendment to S. 1625 that would apply civil monetary penalties for false certification of eligibility for hospice care.

I have a letter from the Federation of American Health Systems urging opposition to the Kennedy amendment. I have a letter from the National Association for Home Care, also in opposition. It says:

We would encourage the Senate to oppose this provision, generally, and in particular, because it is contained in a nongermane legislative effort to increase the minimum wage.

The foreseeable result of the proposed amendment would be to further discourage physicians from utilizing hospice services for terminally ill patients.

Do we want to do that? I don't think so. Certainly we shouldn't do it in this legislation. Let's have hearings to find out more about this. Let's do it in Medicare reform. Let's do it when we have a chance to know exactly what we are doing because this is strongly opposed by hospice organizations.

I encourage my colleagues to oppose it for all the above reasons. I urge them to vote yes to table the Kennedy amendment. We will move to table it at the appropriate time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Kennedy amendment that we will be voting on shortly. It is important to note that 59 percent of the over 11 million workers who would receive a pay increase as a result of this minimum wage are women—women, by and large, with children; women who, because the minimum wage is so low today, are working two, three, four jobs. Those losing out in the country today because of the lack of a minimum wage increase are our children. They are being left home alone. They aren't getting the attention they deserve. They are not getting the support they deserve. A vote for the Kennedy amendment is a vote for our children.

While I have the floor, I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania came to the floor this morning to question the President's constitutional authority to insist on reducing class size. I remind our colleagues, reducing class size is something we as Democrats have fought for, stood behind, and we stand behind the President in the final budget negotiations. This is not about constitutional authority. It is about making sure young kids in first, second, and third grade get from a good teacher the attention they need in order to read and write and do arithmetic. That is a bipartisan agreement we all agreed upon a year ago, $1.2 billion to help our local schools reduce class size.

To renege on that commitment 1 year later and to have language which takes that money and gives it to whatever else school districts want to use it for sounds good except we lose out. A block grant will not guarantee that one child will learn to read. A block grant will not guarantee that a child who needs attention will have it on the day he or she needs it. A block grant will not assure that our children get the attention they deserve and learn the skills they need.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mrs. MURRAY. I ask for an additional 30 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Thirty seconds.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, what we as Democrats are going to stand strong for is a commitment we made a year ago to assure that every child in first, second, and third grade gets the attention they deserve. If our Republican colleagues want to add additional money to the budget for block grants, for needs in our schools that we agree are important, we are more than happy to talk to them about it. But we believe the commitment we made a year ago is a promise that should be kept.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts controls 10 minutes 34 seconds. The Senator from New Mexico controls 8 minutes 23 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 4 minutes.

I again thank the Senators from California and Washington for illustrating in very powerful terms what this issue is all about. It is about working women and families.

With all respect to my friend from Oklahoma, when we had an increase in the minimum wage a few years ago, the Republicans fought it. They said that it would harm the economy and adversely impact small business. In the measure I have introduced we have tried to provide some relief for small businesses and we have paid for it. Now we can't do that because we have some kind of offsets. Therefore, we can't do it.

The fact is, the Republicans are opposed to any increase in the minimum wage. That is the fact. They have been opposed to it even at a time of extraordinary prosperity. This minimum wage affects real people in a very important way, and there is no group in our society it affects more powerfully than women and children. They are the great majority of the earners of the minimum wage, and increasingly so.

These days parents are spending less and less time with their families. In the last 10 years, parents were able to spend 22 hours a week less with their families. Read the Family and Work Institute's report of interviews with small children who are in minimum-wage families. They are universal in what they say. They all say: We wish our mother—or our father—would be less fatigued. We wish they had more time to spend with us. We are tired of seeing our parents come home exhausted when they are working one or two minimum-wage jobs.

That is what this is about. It is about the men and women at the bottom rung of the economic ladder. Are they real? Of course they are real. I have read the stories. We know who they are. They are out there today, this morning, as teacher's aides in our schools. These teacher's aides are working with young children, our future, and yet they don't earn enough to make ends meet.

They are there in the day-care centers. We know that day-care center workers are often at the bottom of the pay scale, earning the minimum wage. As you can see from this graph the purchasing power of the minimum wage has declined since the last increase. As their wages lose purchasing power, turnover in low paying jobs like child care attendants and those who are working in nursing homes, increases. When people are forced to leave these jobs, there is a deterioration in quality of the service day care centers and nursing homes can offer.

This is about the most important element of our society. It is about fairness. It is about work. We hear all of these speeches on the other side of the aisle about the importance of work. We are honoring work. We are talking about men and women with dignity who have a sense of pride in what they do and are trying to do better and are trying to look out after their families. They are being given the back of the hand by the Republicans.

Their proposal is a sham. It is a raw deal for these workers. On the one hand, they are dribbling out an increase in the minimum wage; on the other hand, they are taking away overtime for 73 million Americans, and in the meantime, they are giving tax breaks to the wealthiest individuals in our society. That is a sham. Beyond that, they say the minimum wage, if we are even fortunate enough to get it to pass the Senate, will never go to the President because the Republican leadership has made a commitment to whoever it might be that it will never go there. That is what we are up against.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 4 minutes have expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I say to my friend from Massachusetts that I can yell as loud as he. But today I won't do that because I believe we have a great bill and a great position.

The Republicans do support the minimum wage. In fact, they are going to vote for the minimum wage that I propose. That is, instead of a dollar coming in two installments, it will come in three, of 35 cents, 35 cents, and 30 cents. Frankly, there will be an overwhelming vote in favor of that.

In addition, we took the opportunity to give small business and some other absolutely necessary situations that need it tax relief. We chose in this bill to do that. Those have been explained fairly well. I will take a minute at the end of my remarks to explain them one more time.

I suggest that the Democrats are living in an era that has passed.

If they were here on the floor in the 1930s, they would have a case. They would have a case that the minimum wage is going to affect poor families supporting their children. That was the issue in the 1930s. But I suggest the best research today says that day is gone in terms of who is impacted by the minimum wage. It is more likely to impact a teenager than it is the head of a household. The fact is, 55 percent of the minimum wage applies to people between the ages of 16 and 24. The overwhelming number of those are teenagers in part-time jobs, working in McDonald's-type restaurants across America. They need these jobs. They don't even stay in the minimum-wage position very long, according to the research we have seen. If they work well and choose to follow the rules and the orders and do an excellent job, they are raised above the minimum wage rather quickly.

To put it another way, to show that the arguments about who benefits from the minimum wage are passe 1930 arguments, two-thirds of all minimum-wage people are part-time employees. The fact is, the argument that these are women heads of households is absolutely dispelled by reality. The best we can find out is that 8 percent of the minimum-wage employees in America today are women heads of households, not the numbers or the tenor and tone of the argument about the slap of the hand we are giving to those who work in America. Quite the contrary.

Our minimum wage reflects a sufficient increase to match up with inflation, and we permit many people an opportunity to get into the job market. In fact, we make permanent one of the best taxes we have, which is now there on an interim basis. It says if you hire minimum-wage workers out of the welfare system, and you want to take a chance because they aren't capable of doing the jobs and you need to train them, you get a credit for that. That is a very good part of the Tax Code. We make that permanent so it costs something and it uses up some of our tax money.

As to the argument of how big this tax cut is, it is 12.5 percent of the total tax package that the Republicans offered, which passed here and the President vetoed. It tries something very new and exciting. It says to Americans who want to buy their own insurance—because their employers don't furnish it—for the first time, they are going to be permitted to deduct the entirety of their health insurance. Heretofore, they were punished if they tried to buy it, penalized because they didn't get to deduct it while everybody else did. We also made permanent the allowance that the self-employed can take the insurance deduction. We raise that to 100 percent. Everybody knows that is good. Everybody knows that helps with the problem of the uninsured in America, and that is good.

So, for all the talk, the Republicans have come forward with a very good bill. I am very pleased that I suggested to the Republicans the basics of this bill, that we ought to do it in three installments. Some wanted to make it longer. Actually, I think this is exactly the right length of time. Add to that the kind of tax relief we have provided versus the tax increases on that side, and it seems to me there is no choice.

While everybody is clamoring to do something about the estate tax because it is a very onerous tax, as if to try to punish people, in a minimum-wage bill they raise death taxes and inheritance taxes. I don't care what kind of American they impose it on. We don't have to do that when we are reforming that system because it is somewhat confiscatory. I could go on, but if anybody has any doubt, the gross tax increase under the Democrat package is $12.5 billion over 5 years, and a $28.9 billion tax increase over 10 years. What in the world are we increasing taxes for at this point? To pay for a minimum-wage bill? Of course not. It is because they want other tax relief and they choose to raise taxes to give the benefit to someone else. There is sufficient surplus. This is a very small tax cut in our package—12.5 percent of what we perceived was adequate and what we could do about 4 months ago with the surpluses we have. The President proposed $250 billion, $300 billion in tax relief. In this bill, they raise taxes rather than take advantage of what we know is the right thing; that is, to reduce taxes in these economic times.

I reserve my remaining time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 6 minutes 49 seconds. The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute 51 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. The Senator from New Mexico said he wasn't going to yell. He got a little close to it. But when I hear the yells on that side of the aisle, it is usually related to their passion for helping the wealthiest among us.

The Senator from New Mexico says that the Democrats are living in the past because we want to increase the minimum wage. Well, I have news for the Senator from New Mexico. Compassion for the poorest in our society, those at the bottom rung of the ladder, that is a timeless value; that is a moral value; that is a religious value; that is a value we ought to be proud to have around here. That is not living in the past. Come to Los Angeles, I say to my friend from New Mexico, or look around your big cities. What you will notice is that the people who are living on the minimum wage are adults. We know that to be the fact. A majority of minimum-wage workers are adults—70 percent of them.

In the Democratic proposal, out of those who will benefit from this modest increase, 60 percent of them are women. So if you want to say that we are living in the past, you can say it all you want. But it isn't true.

We saw in September a very chilling story in the L.A. Times about the working poor in Southern California. The National Low-Income Housing Coalition shows that given the high cost of a two-bedroom apartment in L.A., a minimum-wage earner must work 112 hours per week in order to make ends meet.

In San Francisco, it is even worse. A person would have to work 174 hours at minimum wage in order to pay their bills. According to a recent study of the Nation's food banks, 40 percent of all households seeking emergency food aid had at least one member who was working. That is up from 23 percent in 1994.

Low-paying jobs, I say to my friend from New Mexico, are the most frequently cited cause of hunger today, according to this well-documented L.A. Times story.

The L.A. Times, by the way, is now owned by Republicans. So this isn't a question of yesterday, I say to my friend. It is a question of living today. They have made the same arguments every time we raised the minimum wage. The last time they said it would bring the economy down. We have never seen such a strong economy. If the people at the bottom rung are left behind, it is morally wrong and it is economically wrong. It makes no sense. Those are the folks who go out and spend what they earn and they definitely stimulate the economy.

So for anybody to say you are living in the past if you support a minimum-wage increase, they don't know what is going on today. I say that from my heart. I have respect for the Senator from New Mexico, but I think it is insulting to say one lives in the past for wanting to fight for those at the bottom rung of the economic ladder—those women and those children who are living in poverty.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 3½ minutes. The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute 51 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield a minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, to make a couple of quick points, I was terribly saddened to see as part of another bill that we have a further reduction in child care provisions, which is a major blow again to working families out there. We all know that quality child care makes a difference for these children. In the midst of all of this, we are obviously told you have to come up with some offsets to pay for the provisions in this bill, which we do.

Offsets always attract opposition from one quarter or another. But these are modest offsets to pay for the provisions in the bill. What is going to happen later today we are going to vote on $75 billion in tax cuts and 56 percent of them go to the top 20 percent of income earners, and there are no offsets—none.

One of the great contradictions is, we are being accused of not liking the offsets, the pays, from some of the provisions and simultaneously we ask our Members to vote for a provision in the bill or vote for the whole bill, including a $75 billion tax cut over 10 years with no offsets.

Let me underscore, as this millennium date of 50 days away approaches, those at the bottom of the economic rung—working people, the majority who receive the minimum wage and are working full time; they are women, they are Hispanic, they are black—deserve to get a fair shake out of this Senate. In a few minutes, we will have an opportunity to give them that fair shake by providing an increase in the minimum wage, allowing them to enjoy the prosperity of the booming economy.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is important to understand exactly what the situation is for our working poor. The number of full-time, year-round workers living in poverty is at a 20-year high: 12.6 percent of the workforce, says the Bureau of Labor Statistics, as of the last 3 days. That is the fact. People are working harder, and they are living in poverty. These are people who value work.

Second, the Bureau of Labor Statistics shows that, of those who will benefit from a minimum wage increase, 70 percent are adults over age 20, and about 30 percent will be teenagers.

If Senators come to Boston and talk to the young people going to the University of Massachusetts, they will find 85 percent of their parents never went to college and 85 percent of them are working 25 hours a week or more. That is true in Boston, in Holyoke, in New Bedford, and Fall River, and cities across the country. I don't know what Members have against working young people who are trying to pay for their education. We have 6 million working in the workforce, and we have 2 million working at the minimum wage. Why are we complaining about that?

The Republican proposal is a Thanksgiving turkey with three right wings. It has a watered-down increase in the minimum wage, it has a poison pill for overtime work, and it has juicy tax provisions for the rich. This Republican turkey is stuffed with tax breaks, and it does not deserve to be passed. Vote for the real increase in the minimum wage; vote for the Daschle increase.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, as the most prosperous nation in the world, our minimum wage should be a living wage, and it is not. When a father or mother works full-time, 40 hours a week, year-round, they should be able to lift their family out of poverty. $5.15 an hour will not do that. A full time minimum wage job should provide a minimum standard of living in addition to giving workers the dignity that comes with a paycheck. The current minimum wage does not pay a fair wage.

I support the legislation introduced by Representative DAVID BONIOR in the House and Senator TED KENNEDY in the Senate which increases the minimum wage. This legislation, the Fair Minimum Wage Act, will provide a 50 cent increase to the minimum wage on January 1, 2000, and a second 50 cent increase on January 1, 2001. This would raise the minimum wage to $6.15 per hour by the year 2001.

The minimum wage increase passed in 1996 prevented the minimum wage from falling to its lowest inflation adjusted level in 40 years. The proposed minimum wage increase to $6.15 in 2001 would get the minimum wage back to the inflation adjusted level it was in 1982.

In this era of economic growth, raising the minimum wage is a matter of fundamental fairness. We must look around and realize that we have the strongest economy in a generation. However, even with our strong economy, the benefits of prosperity have not flowed to low-wage workers. A full time minimum wage laborer working forty hours a week for 52 weeks earns $10,712 per year—more than $3,000 below the poverty level for a family of three. The poverty level for a family of three is $13,880.

Some people are saying that it is not time for a minimum wage increase, that we just raised the minimum wage in 1996 and in 1997. According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, since the last minimum wage increase of 1996–97, the national unemployment rate has fallen to 4.1%. Not only that, the unemployment rate has dropped in Michigan, it is now 3.4%—lower than the national rate. It is only right that we help these minimum wage earners when the economy is booming.

Retail jobs are often cited as the industry hit hardest by an increase in the minimum wage. However, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, 38,900 new retail jobs have been added in Michigan since the last minimum wage increase. Moreover, in Michigan, since September of 1996, 206,000 new jobs have been created. The opponents claimed that the 1996 minimum wage increase would devastate the economy, yet clearly, this has not been the case.

According to the United States Department of Labor, 60% of minimum wage earners are women; nearly three-fourths are adults; more than half work full time. Under the Fair Minimum Wage Act, approximately 243,000 Michiganders would get a raise. These hardworking Americans deserve a fair deal.

The Fair Minimum Wage Act will increase the real value of the minimum wage in 2001 to the purchasing level it was in 1982. It will generate $2,000 in potential income for minimum wage workers. This $2,000 will make an enormous impact on minimum wage workers and their families.

Opponents of the minimum wage have said that the minimum wage hurts low income workers. This is not the case. In 1998, seventeen economists, including a Nobel Prize winner, a former president of the American Economics Assn. and a former Secretary of Labor, wrote to President Clinton, supporting an increase in the minimum wage. These experts determined that the 1996 and 1997 increases had a beneficial effect, not only on those whose earnings were increased, but also on the economy as a whole. In addition to directly impacting workers, billions in added consumer demand helped fuel our expanding economy in those years.

With a prosperous economy, it is only fair that we also reward those who are at the low end of the pay scale spectrum. These people do not always have the leverage to negotiate a fair salary. It is necessary that we act to ensure that they receive a livable wage.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of an increase in the Federal minimum wage. I strongly believe that the time has come to raise the minimum wage again and that we should raise the minimum wage by a $1.00 an hour increase over the next 2 years.

The minimum wage is not the only way—or even the best way—to give folks in need a helping hand to get out of poverty. But I do believe that it should at least keep pace with inflation. Unfortunately, that is not happening. Today's minimum wage is 19 percent below the 1979 level. To give you a better idea of what this means for working families, consider that a minimum wage employee working full time earns about $10,700 a year—more than $3,000 below the $13,880 poverty line for a family of three. Workers deserve better. At a time when our economy is booming, we should not allow this trend to continue. Instead, we must continue to raise the minimum wage to keep pace with the rising cost of life's basic needs

My home State of Vermont recently raised the minimum wage to $5.75 an hour in response to its awareness of the cost of living. Let's follow its lead, a dollar-an-hour increase in the Federal minimum wage will put $2,000 a year in the pockets of working families at or near the poverty line. And given that 2 years has passed since the last increase, small businesses have had the time to adjust. Although this money will not solve all the problems of the working poor, it will go a long way toward helping minimum wage workers obtain basic needs for themselves and their families.

In addition to raising the minimum wage, there are many other things that Congress can and should do to assist low wage workers and their families. We must continue to search out and support targeted solutions such as the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC). The EITC provides some 20 million low-income households with a refundable tax credit. Last year, the EITC enabled a worker earning minimum wage, who was either a single parent or the sole wage earning parent of dependent children, to receive up to $ 3,816 in additional income.

Along with measures that will raise take home pay, I know that we can do more to assist low-income families with their basic needs. Over the past few years, an organization in Vermont called the Peace and Justice Center has examined how low wage workers and their families were faring in my home State. The Vermont Wage Gap Study showed that while we are enjoying one of the most extraordinary economic booms in the history of our country, thousands of workers in my home State are having great difficulty making ends meet. The study found that the cost of meeting basic needs is more than many of Vermont's low income workers are earning.

For example, the Vermont Job Gap Study indicated that child care and health care are among working families largest expenses. Over the past few years, I have been pushing for national child care legislation to assist these working families with their child care needs. On the health care side, we were able to enact the Children's' Health Insurance Program which is helping to improve children's health for working families who cannot afford health coverage for their children. In addition, we should help low income workers in obtaining health insurance. I am currently working on a proposal that would provide uninsured and under-insured workers with the money they need to buy health insurance.

But the predominant factor influencing an individual's ability to support his or her family is not to be found in the minimum wage or the tax code. Study after study has found it is education. Simply put, you earn what you learn. I urge my colleagues to work with me on continuing to pass legislation aimed at improving our educational systems, and job training programs. It is my hope that these efforts will improve the skills and employability of our workforce and will enable low-wage workers to obtain better paying jobs.

I would like to add that I think it is entirely appropriate that an increase in the minimum wage be accompanied by tax breaks for those who will have to shoulder higher wage costs, especially small employers. And I strongly favor several of the tax breaks in this amendment. In particular, I support acceleration of deductibility of health insurance costs for the self-employed; increasing the amount of equipment purchases that small businesses can deduct each year; and providing tax credits to employers who provide on-site child care. At the same time, some of the tax provisions bear little relationship to the impact of a minimum wage hike on small businesses. In addition, I am concerned that we have not had adequate time to explore the implications and effects of all of the tax provisions. My vote in support of this amendment should not be read as an endorsement of each and every tax provision, but rather reflects my fundamental belief that the time has come for a minimum wage increase.

Lastly, I would comment on the language in Senator KENNEDY's amendment increasing disclosure to participants of cash balance pension plans and prohibiting so-called benefit ''wearaways''. This language is being offered in response to the conversion of hundreds of traditional defined benefit pension plans into cash balance or other hybrid arrangements. I believe that legitimate concerns have been raised that notices about the plan changes that were sent to participants have been insufficient. In fact, until recently many workers have been unaware that their plan was amended to significantly reduce the rate at which they are earning benefits. While pension law only requires employers to pay what an employee has actually earned under the plan, when these changes are made toward the middle of a worker's career, the effect can be devastating.

This legislation will help workers better understand what the changes in their plan mean for their retirement plans. It requires plan sponsors to give participants notice of the conversions in a more timely fashion, in plain English and on an individualized basis. In the words of my colleague Senator MOYNIHAN, this disclosure requirement helps to make cash balance conversions transparent for the plan participants. I feel this change is warranted and urgently needed.

But this amendment does more. It also prohibits an unfortunate pension practice called the benefit ''wearaway''. When some plans are converted, workers with long-years of service may not earn any benefits for a number of years. I believe this practice is unfair. There is no reason why an individual with 20 years of service should not earn any benefits while a younger worker earns benefits immediately. The language in this amendment will effectively prohibit wear-aways.

As we conclude the first session of the 106th Congress, I hold steadfast in my belief that Congress must do everything in its power to help working families. The time has come to raise the minimum wage and give the workers who are depending on it a better shot at self-sufficiency. I believe that a $1.00 increase over the next 2 years will certainly help. However, I also believe that a slower increase is better than none at all. Therefore if we do not have the votes in the Senate to pass a 2-year increase, I will also support a 3-year increase.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of Senator KENNEDY's amendment to raise the Federal minimum wage. I am proud to be an original co-sponsor of the legislation upon which this amendment is based to raise the minimum wage 50 cents a year over the next two years, bringing it to $6.15 per hour by the year 2001.

For more than half a century, Congress has acted to guarantee minimum standards of decency for working Americans. The objective of a Federal minimum wage is to make work pay well enough to keep families out of poverty and off Government assistance. Any individual who works hard and plays by the rules should be assured a living standard for his or her family that can keep them out of poverty.

If nothing is done during the year 2000, the real value of the minimum wage will be just $4.90 in 1998 dollars—about what it was before Congress last acted to increase the minimum wage in 1996. The proposed increase would restore the wage floor slightly above its 1983 level, still leaving it 13% below its 1979 peak. No one asserts that raising the minimum wage will correct every economic injustice, but it will certainly make a significant difference to those on the low end of the economic scale. We have the opportunity to enact what is in my view a modest increase to help curb the erosion of the value of the minimum wage in terms of real dollars, and it is an opportunity which we should not let pass us by.

Currently, a full-time minimum wage worker earns just $10,712—$3,000 below the poverty level for a family of three. In 1998, about 4.4 million wage and salary workers, paid hourly rates, earned at and below the minimum wage—about 1.6 million at the minimum rate and 2.8 million below the minimum. A dollar increase in the minimum wage would provide a minimum wage worker with an additional $2,080 in income per year, helping to bring that family of three closer to the most basic standard of living. This extra income will help a family pay their bills and quite possibly even allow them to afford something above and beyond the bare essentials.

According to the Department of Labor, 70 percent of workers who will benefit from an increase in the minimum wage are adults, 46 percent work full time, 60 percent are women and 40 percent are the sole breadwinners in their families. Mr. President, these are not the part-time workers and suburban teenagers many opponents of the minimum wage increase would have you believe.

After 30 years of spiralling deficits, we now have budget surpluses projected, unemployment is at a 25-year low, and inflation is at a 30-year low. However, despite this period of economic prosperity, the disparity between the very rich in this country and the very poor continues to grow. According to the Economic Policy Institute, projections for 1997 indicate that the share of the wealth held by the top 1 percent of households grew by almost 2 percent since 1989. Over that same period, the share of the wealth held by families in the middle fifth of the population fell by half a percent. In light of these estimates, consider that the Department of Labor predicts that 57 percent of the gains from an increase in the minimum wage will go to families in the bottom 40 percent of the income scale.

It is both reasonable and responsible for Congress to enact measures which provide a standard that allows decent, hard-working Americans a floor upon which they can stand. We did it back in 1996 when we approved, by a bipartisan vote of 74–24, a 90 cent increase in the minimum wage bringing it to its current level of $5.15 per hour, and it is appropriate to do it here again. With the economy strong, we have a responsibility to reinforce this basic economic floor for millions of American workers to prevent them from sliding further into the basement.

This is, and always has been, an issue of equity and fairness for working men and women in this country. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this important amendment.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I support the Minimum Wage Proposal offered by Senator KENNEDY because it is fair and responsible. It provides a minimum wage increase to 228,000 Arkansans and 11 million workers nationwide, most of whom are women. It provides important tax relief directly to small businesses to help defray costs of a wage hike. And, perhaps most importantly, it pays for the tax cuts by: offsetting tax adjustments on large estates valued at $17 million and above, which the Senate voted overwhelming to do in 1997; extending the tax imposed on corporate income for Superfund, which I hope will encourage Superfund reform, and closing corporate tax shelters, which Congress has been trying to do since Ronald Reagan was in the White House.

A $1 increase in the minimum wage over 2 years is needed to restore the purchasing power or real value of the minimum wage, which has been greatly diminished over the last 20 years by inflation. In the United States, 59% of workers who will gain from a wage increase are women; 70% are adults age 20 and over, and 40% are the sole breadwinners for their families. The bottom line—this proposal will generate $2,000 in additional income each year for full-time minimum wage workers. As a mother of two young children who balances the check book every month and shops at the supermarket each week, I honestly don't know how a single parent who makes $5.15 an hour can feed their family and provide other basic necessities for their children.

I am also very supportive of the tax relief provisions in this amendment which will help those who will be most affected by a minimum wage increase—small business owners and family farmers. This common sense package will expand access to health insurance by letting self-employed individuals deduct 100 percent of their health insurance costs, a proposal I have supported for many years. I believe providing 100 percent deductibility now to small business owners and independent farmers is more urgent today than ever as our country experiences one of the worst farm crises in recent memory. Furthermore, I have never understood why we deny a benefit to sole proprietors that is currently available to many large corporations.

This package also includes another priority of mine—estate tax relief for family owned-farms and small business. Too often those who inherit a business or family farm from a relative must liquidate all or a portion of the property just to pay the estate tax which is owed.

Another provision will help business owners provide child care assistance to their employees by allowing a 25% tax credit for qualified costs. In addition, this amendment will encourage investment in economically depressed areas like the Delta region in Arkansas and strengthen retirement security for workers by reducing small businesses' cost of setting up employee pension plans.

Finally, I am hopeful that extending the tax imposed on corporate income for Superfund will be an added incentive to roll up our sleeves and pass meaningful Superfund reform legislation. I have worked on this issue since I came to Congress in 1993. I and millions of Americans are still waiting for Congress to fulfill its responsibility. I am sorry that our former colleague Senator Chafee, who was very passionate about this issue, died before Congress addressed Superfund reform.

But before I yield the floor, I want to emphasize an important aspect of this plan that should not go unnoticed—it is paid for and does not threaten our government's ability to meet future obligations to Social Security and Medicare beneficiaries. Republicans and Democrats have knocked themselves out over the last year trying to blame each other for spending the Social Security trust fund, so I fail to understand how we can consider a proposal which costs $75 billion over ten years with virtually no means to pay for it. That is irresponsible and I can't support it.

In short, Mr. President, the Kennedy amendment is a common sense proposal that is good for both employers and employees and I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will stand with me in supporting this legislation.

I thank my colleagues and yield the floor.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, since 1938 we have had a minimum standard we accept as the lowest possible wage in our society. Today we are engaged in debate about the need to raise that standard. The modest proposal before us seeks to raise the minimum wage by $1.00 over the next two years. Even then—even if we succeed in doing what is so obvious, so reasonable, and so fair—Mr. President the real value of the lowest acceptable wage will only reach what it was in 1982, over 17 years ago. We're not really talking about an increase here, we're talking about trying to keep pace, about making work pay, about restoring minimum wage workers to the purchasing power they had nearly two decades ago.

Mr. President, opponents of a minimum-wage increase argue that it increases unemployment rates for entry-level workers, thereby hurting the very people it is meant to help. But this is not a radical proposal—as some Republicans claim—that will cause a dramatic spike in the unemployment rates and cripple small business. Numerous empirical studies, Mr. President, have found that recent hikes in the minimum wage have had little or no effect on job levels. A 1999 Levy Institute survey of small businesses revealed that more than three-quarters of the firms surveyed said their employment practices would not be affected by an increase in the minimum wage to $6.00. A September New York Times editorial reported that ''. . . a modest hike is not likely to cause higher unemployment, even among low-skilled workers. Indeed, jobless rates fell after the 90-cent minimum-wage hike of 1996–7.''

We have not in the past nor are we now advancing a radical proposal that will reverberate dangerously throughout our economy. We are merely considering a moderate increase in our Nation's wage floor, one that will bring us just back to where we were nearly 18 years ago.

And while the increase is a modest one, it is crucial to today's working families. A $1.00 increase in the minimum wage will affect 11.4 million workers. Full-time workers will make an additional $2,000 each year. Many minimum wage jobs do not provide pensions or health care. An additional $2,000 each year might mean the difference between being sick and getting treatment, the difference between a sickly child and a thriving one. An additional $2,000 each year might mean the difference between being hungry and being fed.

Currently, a full-time minimum wage worker earns $10,712 per year—an income well below the poverty line for a family of three or four. Increasing the minimum wage will bring workers wages up to $12,800 per year, an income still below the poverty line for a family of three. So while we refer to the minimum wage as the lowest wage acceptable in our society, we must acknowledge that even after we pass this modest increase, a full-time minimum wage worker cannot safely raise a family on his/her earnings.

Right now we are facing the greatest wage inequality since the Great Depression. Income inequality between the Nation's top earners and those at the bottom has been widening since the early 1970s. The strong economy and these generally prosperous times cause us to overlook the struggles faced by hard-working families. The growing wage gap between the rich and poor threatens our social fabric and the stability of our Nation. It is our job in the Congress to ensure that stability is maintained—that hard-working individuals are paid a fair wage—that working families can afford the basic necessities of life—that we are the kind of country that values work—and which values the contributions of each working American. It is time we meet that responsibility.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise today to urge my colleagues to support efforts to increase the federal minimum wage by adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KENNEDY, the Fair Minimum Wage Act of 1999. This important amendment will provide American laborers with a 50-cent increase to the minimum wage on January 1, 2000, and a second 50-cent increase on January 1, 2001. This modest increase, which would raise the minimum wage to $6.15 per hour, will help more than 11 million lower income Americans.

Our country's economy is growing. Its economic vitality and the changes wrought by welfare reform have resulted in a better life for many working people—unless those workers are minimum wage workers, anchored to the bottom of the wage scale.

The truth is, even though the economy is roaring, wages at the bottom are stagnant, and hard-working people are still living in poverty. According to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, in the mid-1990s, there were 89,000 working poor families with children in Wisconsin. Seventy-four percent of those families had at least one working parent. And sixty-nine percent of these families had at least one working parent and still required some form of public assistance. In this time of a booming economy and low unemployment, these statistics are very troubling. Mr. President, the majority of the poor people of our country are working—the problem is that many of them are holding down low-paying jobs with stagnant wages that do not allow them to finally break free from poverty.

Despite successes in the welfare to work initiative, a 1998 U.S. Conference of Mayors study, entitled ''A Status Report on Hunger and Homelessness in American Cities,'' indicates that seventy-eight percent of the 30 major U.S. cities surveyed reported an increased demand for emergency food assistance. Thirty-seven percent of those people seeking food at soup kitchens and shelters in 1998 were employed. City officials surveyed listed low-paying jobs as the top cause of hunger in their cities. It is an undeniable disgrace that, in many cases, minimum wage workers cannot afford to feed themselves or their families.

Mr. President, no hard working American should have to worry about affording groceries, shoes for their kids, or medicines. The people this amendment will help are not people who spend their money frivolously. These are the families who scrimp and save to provide their children with the necessities of life: a decent place to live, enough to eat, clothes on their back, a decent education, and some hope for a better future.

The study, ''The State of Working Wisconsin—1998,'' by the Center on Wisconsin Strategy, contains some troubling news regarding wages. The Wisconsin median hourly wage is still eight-point-four percent below its 1979 level. Since 1979, Wisconsin's median wage has declined fifty percent faster than the five-point-three percent national decline over the same period. These numbers are, sadly, not unique to Wisconsin. This is the situation all over the country.

And this is the situation that the Kennedy amendment will help to address. According to the Economic Policy Institute, more than 205,000 workers in my home state of Wisconsin, or fifteen-point-one percent of Wisconsin's workforce, will benefit from the modest increase in this amendment. Those are real people, Mr. President. Real people who deserve this modest raise in pay for the work they do to support their families and to keep the American economy moving.

Opponents of this increase argue that it will hurt the economy. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that the 1996 and 1997 raises in the minimum wage had a positive impact on the economy. Unemployment has dropped to four-point-one percent, the lowest mark in three decades. Nine-point-one million new jobs have been created. And there is no reason to believe that this proposed increase will not have the same result. In fact, history shows that minimum wage increases have not had a negative impact on unemployment.

This modest increase of 50 cents per year is really not a hike at all after inflation—over the next two years it will simply restore the real value of the minimum wage to its 1982 level. So by the time the second installment of this proposed increase would go into effect, the buying power of workers scraping by on the minimum wage will be only what is was when Ronald Reagan was a new president. Meanwhile, wages at the high levels have been climbing steadily while the real value of the minimum wage has eroded.

I urge my colleagues to begin to restore some respect for the dignity of work to the federal minimum wage. The lowest paid workers in America's labor force deserve a chance to earn a decent living and we need to give them the tools. I urge every Senator to support the Kennedy amendment. It is a vote to reward work and to support every American worker.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, there are a few brief observations that would serve us well as we engage in this debate over minimum wage. Through the years, members on both sides of this issue have been able to come together successfully, to effect minimum wage increases.

I believe we will be able to come together again, to advance a proposal that is good for individuals, as well as for economic growth and job creation. And I believe that in this effort it would be good to have such a common sense proposal follow the model of our actions in 1996.

As my colleagues know, three years ago we successfully enacted the Small Business Tax Act, which provided reasonable tax relief for businesses most affected by the costs incurred with the minimum wage increase. The current minimum wage of $5.15—which took effect on September 1, 1997—was established in that act. Minimum wage agreements prior to 1997 followed a similar pattern of consensus building.

This year, as we again consider raising the minimum wage, there are a number of tax issues involved. The minimum wage amendment proposed by Senator DOMENICI includes a package of tax measures that were previously approved by the Senate Finance Committee. The Finance Committee has jurisdiction over these matters, and as these proposal had been previously vetted within our committee, I agreed to allow them to come straight to the floor.

On the other hand, I am concerned with the revenue offsets included in the minimum wage amendment proposed by Senator KENNEDY. Many of these provisions are controversial proposals which have been rejected by this Congress. And we need to be very careful as we proceed considering them.

What is important is that we progress on this important issue—that if we are unable to agree on a compromise in this session as we are so close to adjournment, we will be able to successfully conclude this matter soon after our return next year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute 51 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank Senator KENNEDY for a good debate. It was pretty exciting for so early in the morning. The Senator is pretty energetic even at 9 o'clock.

However, let me close by saying our amendment saves small business and gives them an opportunity to grow and prosper and energize this economy; at the same time, it gives every opportunity for the young people in our country to get into jobs wherein they break into the marketplace, that first-level job, and get those kinds of jobs in sufficient numbers to be helpful for whatever they are doing. There are even high school students doing this. They are 50 percent of the minimum-wage people in this country.

I have nothing against them. I have eight children; six of them worked in restaurants before they went to college and saved enough money because I didn't have enough money to put them through, having that many children. I understand that. They worked hard. They got promoted.

Nothing could be further from the truth that we are trying to hurt young people, whatever their status. We want them and their employers to continue to have a mutual opportunity—mutual for the small business to energize the economy and mutual for job opportunity at the first level of employment in the American system.

If Members are speaking of women heads of households, they are not talking about the minimum wage today; they are talking about the minimum wage 30 years ago. Eight percent of the minimum-wage earners in America today are women with full-time jobs—not 30, 40, or 50; 8 percent.

Clearly, we are trying to give everybody an opportunity to get better training and move ahead in job opportunities in the United States.

I move to table the Kennedy amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table amendment No. 2751. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN) is necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) is absent because of a death in his family.

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 48, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 2547

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. What is the next order of business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will now be 4 minutes of debate equally divided on the Domenici amendment.

Does the Senator from New Mexico wish to begin debate?

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to Senator KENNEDY, I am prepared to yield back my time. Are you?

Mr. KENNEDY. No. If we could have order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Senators please take their conversations off the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator from Maryland would like to address this issue, and I yield her the time on our side.

I would insist on order, if I could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators please take their conversations off the floor. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Maryland is recognized for 2 minutes.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the Republican amendment. I believe it is a watered-down, slowed-down, pennies-to-the-poor approach.

Why raise the minimum wage? We are in the greatest prosperity that the United States of America has ever seen. We have the opportunity to raise the standard of living for the poor. I believe what we need to do, now that we have moved hundreds of thousands of people from welfare, is to make work worth it.

Who are the people we are talking about? We are talking about the working poor who raise our children, who care for our elderly, many working two or three jobs to hold the family together.

I believe we need to make a commitment to the working poor, as we cross into the new century, that if you live in the United States of America and you work, you should not be poor.

The amendment the Senator from Massachusetts proposed was modest. It was spread over a 2-year period. It would take us into 2001. Why should a day-care worker make less than someone who works 40 hours a week at a bank job? We need to make sure that in this country, in order to sustain the efforts we have made in improving the standard of living for people, if you work, you will not be poor.

I yield such time as I might have.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise to express my strong support for this important amendment. Without touching Social Security, it would provide significant assistance to millions of Americans struggling economically even during this time of sustained growth.

I believe this amendment demonstrates my party's continuing commitment to fostering economic growth and helping those in need. And we should not forget that, despite recent economic good times, there are many Americans who remain in economic need.

African-American youths continue to suffer from an unemployment rate three times that of white youths. Hispanic youths suffer from an unemployment rate ten points higher than that of whites. And 8 million American families continue to live in poverty.

We can do better. We can do better.

I believe this amendment constitutes an important step forward in our drive to unleash the entrepreneurial energies of the American people; energies that can lift individuals out of poverty as they push communities to higher levels of prosperity.

This amendment contains an important provision of the Renewal Alliance package I have been working toward since coming to the United States Senate. It also contains a number of other provisions that I believe represent the responsible way to raise the minimum wage: by ensuring that businesses do not find themselves saddled with costs that lead them to lay off minimum wage workers, exactly those proponents of a minimum wage hike are trying to assist.

This amendment addresses three major areas of concern to Americans striving to work their way into our vast middle class: work opportunity, investment, and health insurance.

First, as to work opportunity. In my view opportunity is the key to progress. I have sought to increase this opportunity through the Renewal Alliance, a bipartisan group of Senators seeking targeted tax benefits to spur economic growth in our nation's distressed urban and rural communities. This amendment contains key provisions of the Renewal Alliance program.

Most important is a provision to permanently extend the Work Opportunity Tax Credit. A credit of up to $2,400 for wages paid would provide businesses with extra funds for investment in growth and employee training. As a result, many Americans currently without bright futures will receive experience and training—the keys, in my view, to economic success.

Also critical to providing increased work opportunity are provisions in this amendment that encourage greater investment, and greater investment in small businesses in particular.

Mr. President, 99 percent of American employers are small businesses. Small businesses employ more than half our private work force, and they have consistently been the engine of our economic growth, whether in traditional industries or on the cutting edge of high technology.

Further, Mr. President, it is often small business owners who are willing to take a chance on someone in need—someone without experience, someone who has fallen on hard times.

If they are to employ more Americans who are in need, Mr. President, our small businesses must have access to more investment capital. This amendment would addresses our continuing shortage of investment, thereby spurring small business growth and hiring.

First, it would increase the maximum dollar amount small businesses can deduct for investment in business property. By increasing this amount to $30,000, beginning in 2001, the amendment would provide an additional $3,850 in annual tax savings for small businesses investing in new equipment.

Second, the amendment would provide more than 50 provisions encouraging investment in pensions. They would expand coverage, enhance fairness for women, increase portability, strengthen security and reduce regulatory burdens.

Finally, this amendment would addresses inequities in our tax structure that keep an estimated 44 million Americans from affording health insurance. 44 million is a distressing number. Equally distressing is the fact that fully 81 percent of uninsured Americans have jobs.

Too many Americans, including the self-employed, the unemployed, and employees of small companies that do not provide health insurance, can't afford coverage. Why not? Because, under our tax code, they must pay taxes first, and buy insurance with whatever they have left over—if anything.

Paying with after-tax dollars can make health insurance twice as expensive—too expensive for millions of working Americans.

We must address this inequity in our tax code. This amendment would do just that.

First, it would enable self-employed Americans to deduct the full cost of health insurance. Finally, entrepreneurs would get the same tax benefits as larger companies.

Second, this amendment would provide an above-the-line deduction for individuals whose employers do not subsidize more than 50% of the cost of health coverage. Thus all workers, not just those who itemize, would be better able to afford health care costs.

Taken together, these provisions would provide significantly greater economic opportunity for all Americans. They would safeguard our economic growth and spur further investment in American workers.

I urge my colleagues to give this important amendment their full support.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I wish to point out a concern I have with a seemingly innocuous, seemingly beneficial, provision contained in the Domenici amendment to S. 625, the ''Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1999''—Section 68. Modification of Exclusion for Employer Provided Transit Passes. The goal of the provision—to expand the use of the Federal transit benefit, a ''qualified transportation fringe'' in the vernacular—is admirable, but I fear that the way in which the provision pursues that goal may, in fact, unintentionally undermine the transit benefit.

The employer-provided Federal transit benefit has evolved since its creation within the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984 as a $15 per month ''de minimis'' benefit. After fourteen years of gradual change, last year's Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century (TEA–21) codified the benefit as a ''pre-tax'' benefit of up to $65 per month. The cap will increase to $100 in 2002. The ''pre-tax'' aspect was a major reform because it provided an economic incentive—payroll tax savings—for employers to offer the program. Companies would save money by offering a benefit of great utility to their workers while simultaneously removing automobiles from our choked and congested urban streets and highways. It is effective public policy. (As an aside, I should note that a similar pre-tax benefit of $175 per month exists for parking, and so despite all we know about air pollution and the intractable problems of automobile congestion, Congress continues to encourage people to drive. Discouraging perhaps, but we're closing the gap. If one doesn't have thirty years to devote to social policy, one should not get involved!)

Quite consciously, and conscientiously, Congress established a bias in the statute toward the use of vouchers—which employers can distribute to employees—over bona fide cash reimbursement arrangements. We permitted employers to use cash reimbursement arrangements only when a voucher program was not readily available. We reasoned that because the vouchers could only be used for transit, we would eliminate the need for employees to prove that they were using the tax benefit for the intended purpose. Furthermore, by stipulating that voucher programs are the clear preference of Congress, we are compelling transit authorities to offer better services—monthly farecards, unlimited ride passes, smartcards, et al.—to the multitudes of working Americans who must presently endure all manner of frustrations and indignities during their daily work commute.

While the new law has only been in effect for little more than a year, the program is catching on in our large metropolitan areas and should continue to expand. We have been alerted, however, to a legitimate concern of large multistate employers. Several of these companies have noted that establishing voucher programs can be arduous and unwieldy when the companies must craft separate programs in various jurisdictions with different transportation authorities. These difficulties, coupled with an expertise in administering cash reimbursement programs, have convinced the companies that bona fide cash reimbursement programs are more practical. Fair enough.

We should, therefore, make it easier for such companies to offer the benefit through cash reimbursement arrangements. While I am committed to that end, I have serious reservations about the repeal of the voucher preference contained in the Domenici amendment.

My main objection is that the U.S. Treasury is currently developing substantiation regulations for the administration of this benefit through cash reimbursement arrangements. These regulations will provide companies with a clear understanding of their obligations in the verification of their employees' transit usage, an understanding which does not exist today. Until these regulations are promulgated, voucher programs offer the only true mechanism of verification, as vouchers, unlike cash, are useless unless enjoyed for their intended purpose. The Congress should not take an action that might rapidly increase the use of a tax benefit without the existence of accompanying safeguards to ensue the program's integrity.

I will work with my colleagues on the Finance Committee, with my revered Chairman, and any Senator interested in this issue, to improve the ease with which companies can offer this important benefit to their employees. It is, after all, in our national interest. But I must strongly oppose efforts to repeal the voucher preference until the Treasury establishes a regulatory framework for cash reimbursement. We have been told to expect the regulations by mid-January. We anxiously await their arrival.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Republican bill does the following: It raises the minimum wage $1 in three installments instead of two. It gives great opportunity to small businesspeople and others who have been denied relief under the Tax Code of this country.

Let me explain so everybody will understand the basic ones we try to help in this bill. One, we help workers pay for health care. For the first time in history, workers in the United States, many who work for small businesses, can buy their own health insurance and deduct every penny of it. Heretofore, they could not do that. We have a 100 percent self-employed health insurance deduction. That should have been the case 10 years ago. We finally have it in this bill.

We made permanent the work opportunity tax credit, which is to help employers, mostly small businesses, hire those who cannot get jobs, and they get a credit for it. We made that permanent. That is good for America since we have reduced the number of welfare recipients in America by 48 percent; and we need to make permanent the incentive to hire them.

We have reduced the Federal unemployment surtax. As I said, we have made permanent that work opportunity tax credit I just told you about.

In addition, there is no question that the Democrats decided to raise taxes to pay for their wage increases. So they raise taxes almost $13 billion in the first 5 years, which is not necessary with the kind of surpluses that we have. We have used merely 12.5 percent of the tax cuts we had proposed 5 months ago. So 12.5 percent of them are in this bill.

This is the right thing to do.

Let me close by telling you, 55 percent of the minimum wage earners in America are young people; two-thirds are part-time workers; and 8 percent are women who are heads of households working full time.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield myself the remaining 30 seconds.

Mr. President, first, this is a watered-down increase in the minimum wage that does not deserve to pass. It is a sham.

Second, this legislation assaults the whole formula on overtime. It threatens overtime for 73 million Americans.

And third, it provides $75 billion in tax breaks for wealthy individuals that is not paid for.

It does not deserve the support of the Senate. I hope it will be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask for the yeas and nays.

NOT VOTING—2

Hollings	McCain

The amendment (No. 2547) was agreed to.

Mr. NICKLES. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. LOTT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

(Mr. ENZI assumed the Chair.)

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, to bring Senators up to date on where we are, the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, Mr. TORRICELLI, and I have been working with the distinguished Senators from Iowa and Utah, Messrs. GRASSLEY and HATCH, to clear as many amendments as we can agree to. Senators GRASSLEY, HATCH, TORRICELLI, and I have been able to get a number of these agreed to. We have more than 10 amendments we are ready to accept to show we are making progress on this bill.

For the benefit of Senators, I will briefly describe these amendments we are prepared to accept. We are prepared to accept the Feingold amendment No. 2745, an amendment to improve the bill by prohibiting retroactive assessments of disposable income. It ensures that farmers forced into bankruptcy can continue to carry on their farming operations without retroactive assessments against their disposable income.

We are prepared to accept Robb amendment No. 1723 which improves the bill by clarifying the trustees shall return any payments not previously paid and not yet due and owing to lessors and purchase money secured creditors if a plan is not confirmed.

We are prepared to accept Grassley amendment No. 1731, a bipartisan amendment improving the bill by giving bankruptcy judges the discretion to waive the $175 filing fee for chapter 7 cases for debtors whose annual income is less than 125 percent of the poverty level. Bankruptcy is the only civil proceeding where in forma pauperis filing status is not permitted. This amendment corrects that anomaly. The Grassley amendment is cosponsored by Senators TORRICELLI, SPECTER, FEINGOLD, and BIDEN.

Feingold amendment No. 2743 improves the bill by striking the requirement that debtor's attorneys must pay a trustee's attorney fees if the debtor is not substantially justified in filing for chapter 7. The current requirement that debtor's attorney must pay a trustee attorney's fee often causes a chilling effect of discouraging eligible debtors from filing chapter 7 for fear of paying future fees. Senator SPECTER is a sponsor of this amendment.

We have Hatch amendment No. 1714 improving the bill by adding procedures for the prosecution of materially fraudulent claims in bankruptcy schedules.

Hatch amendment No. 1715 improves the bill by dismissing bankruptcy cases if the debtor commits a crime of violence or a drug trafficking crime.

The Kerry amendment No. 1725 modifies the deadlines for small business bankruptcy filings. Small businesses need the reasonable time limits of this amendment to reorganize their business.

We have the Collins amendment No. 1726, a bipartisan amendment improving the bill by providing bankruptcy rules for family fishermen. The amendment is cosponsored by Senators KERRY of Massachusetts, MURRAY, STEVENS, and KENNEDY.

Johnson amendment No. 2654 improves the bill by paying chapter 7 trustees if a case is dismissed or diverted under the bill's means test.

The DeWine amendment No. 1727 improves the bill by clarifying that a debt from a qualified education loan under the Internal Revenue Service Code is nondischargable.

Grassley amendment No. 2514 improves the bill by clarifying a special tax assessment on real property secured debts under bankruptcy laws. Many municipal governments, particularly in California, depend on these real estate taxes or assessments for revenues. The distinguished Senator from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, is a cosponsor of this amendment.

Senators had been coming to the floor Friday and Monday to offer amendments. Even though we had only half a day of debate yesterday, Senators from both sides of the aisle offered amendments to improve the bill.

So I urge Senators to continue to do that. We could accept a vote or otherwise dispose of the Democratic and Republican amendments. I have discussed this with the distinguished Senator from Iowa. Both of us would like, if at all possible, to whittle down the number and be able to tell our colleagues at what point we are apt to finish the bill. We have been working. I don't think we have even had quorum calls.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, first of all, I thank the Senator from Vermont for his encouragement of all Members that although we have had so many amendments filed, it would be determined that every amendment either be offered or else dropped from the list. I hope later on this afternoon we can finish that process.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank my colleague.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 2745, 1723, 1731, 2743, 1714, 1715, 1725, 1726, 2654, 1727, 2514 EN BLOC

Mr. GRASSLEY. With respect to the individual amendments that the Senator from Vermont just gave details of, I ask unanimous consent the amendments listed be considered en bloc, agreed to en bloc, and the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

They are amendments Nos. 2745, 1723, 1731, 2743, 1714, 1715, 1725, 1726, 2654, 1727, 2514.

Mr. LEAHY. We have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments (Nos. 2745, 1723, 1731, 2743, 1714, 1715, 1725, 1726, 2654, 1727, 2514) were considered and agreed to en bloc, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 2745

(Purpose: To prohibit the retroactive assessment of disposal income)

At the end of title X, insert the following:

SEC. ___. PROHIBITION OF RETROACTIVE ASSESSMENT OF DISPOSABLE INCOME.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1225(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(3) If the plan provides for specific amounts of property to be distributed on account of allowed unsecured claims as required by paragraph (1)(B), those amounts equal or exceed the debtor's projected disposable income for that period, and the plan meets the requirements for confirmation other than those of this subsection, the plan shall be confirmed.''.

(b) MODIFICATION.—Section 1229 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(d)(1) A modification of the plan under this section may not increase the amount of payments that were due prior to the date of the order modifying the plan.

''(2) A modification of the plan under this section to increase payments based on an increase in the debtor's disposable income may not require payments to unsecured creditors in any particular month greater than the debtor's disposable income for that month unless the debtor proposes such a modification.

''(3) A modification of the plan in the last year of the plan shall not require payments that would leave the debtor with insufficient funds to carry on the farming operation after the plan is completed unless the debtor proposes such a modification.''.

AMENDMENT NO. 1723

(Purpose: To clarify the amount of payments to be returned to a debtor if a plan is not confirmed, and for other purposes)

On page 106, line 16, insert ''and not yet due and owing'' after ''previously paid''.

AMENDMENT NO. 1731

(Purpose: To provide for a waiver of filing fees in certain bankruptcy cases, and for other purposes)

On page 145, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following:

SEC. 420. BANKRUPTCY FEES.

Section 1930 of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking ''Notwithstanding section 1915 of this title, the parties'' and inserting ''Subject to subsection (f), the parties''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(f)(1) The Judicial Conference of the United States shall prescribe procedures for waiving fees under this subsection.

''(2) Under the procedures described in paragraph (1), the district court or the bankruptcy court may waive a filing fee described in paragraph (3) for a case commenced under chapter 7 of title 11 if the court determines that an individual debtor whose income is less than 125 percent of the income official poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) applicable to a family of the size involved is unable to pay that fee in installments.

''(3) A filing fee referred to in paragraph (2) is—

''(A) a filing fee under subsection (a)(1); or

''(B) any other fee prescribed by the Judicial Conference of the United States under subsection (b) that is payable to the clerk of the district court or the clerk of the bankruptcy court upon the commencement of a case under chapter 7 of title 11.

''(4) In addition to waiving a fee under paragraph (2), the district court or the bankruptcy court may waive any other fee prescribed under subsection (b) or (c) if the court determines that the individual with an income at a level described in paragraph (2) is unable to pay that fee in installments.''.

AMENDMENT NO. 2743

(Purpose: To modify the standard for the award of attorneys' fees)

On page 12, strike line 22 and insert ''frivolous.''.

AMENDMENT NO. 1714

(Purpose: To provide for improved enforcement of criminal bankruptcy filing provisions, and for other purposes)

On page 28, line 7, after ''debt'', insert ''and materially fraudulent statements in bankruptcy schedules''.

On page 28, line 12, after the period, insert ''In addition to addressing the violations referred to in the preceding sentence, the individuals described under subsection (b) shall address violations of section 152 or 157 relating to materially fraudulent statements in bankruptcy schedules that are intentionally false or intentionally misleading.''.

On page 28, line 25, strike the quotation marks and the second period.

On page 28, after line 25, insert the following:

''(d) BANKRUPTCY PROCEDURES.—The bankruptcy courts shall establish procedures for referring any case which may contain a materially fraudulent statement in a bankruptcy schedule to the individuals designated under this section.''.

On page 29, strike the item between lines 3 and 4 and insert the following:

''158. Designation of United States attorneys and agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to address abusive reaffirmations of debt and materially fraudulent statements in bankruptcy schedules.''.

AMENDMENT NO. 1715

(Purpose: To amend section 707, of title 11, United States Code, to provide for the dismissal of certain cases filed under chapter 7 of that title by a debtor who has been convicted of a crime of violence or a drug trafficking crime)

On page 14, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

(c) DISMISSAL FOR CERTAIN CRIMES.—Section 707 of title 11, United States Code, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(c)(1) In this subsection—

''(A) the term 'crime of violence' has the meaning given that term in section 16 of title 18; and

''(B) the term 'drug trafficking crime' has the meaning given that term in section 924(c)(2) of title 18.

''(2) Except as provided in paragraph (3), after notice and a hearing, the court, on a motion by the victim of a crime of violence or a drug trafficking crime, or at the request of a party in interest, shall dismiss a voluntary case filed by an individual debtor under this chapter if that individual was convicted of that crime.

''(3) The court may not dismiss a case under paragraph (2) if the debtor establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that the filing of a case under this chapter is necessary to satisfy a claim for a domestic support obligation.''.

On page 14, line 15, strike ''(c)'' and insert ''(d)''.

AMENDMENT NO. 1725

(Purpose: To amend plan filing and confirmation deadlines)

On page 155, line 16, strike ''90'' and insert ''180''.

On page 155, strike through lines 18 and 19.

On page 155, line 20, strike ''(B)'' and insert ''(A)''.

On page 155, line 22, strike ''(C)'' and insert ''(B)''.

On page 155, line 24, strike ''90'' and insert ''300''.

Redesignate sections 430 through 435 as sections 429 through 434, respectively.

''(ii) an obligation to repay funds received as an educational benefit, scholarship, or stipend; or

''(B) any other educational loan that is a qualified education loan, as that term is defined in section 221(e)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, incurred by an individual debtor;''.

AMENDMENT NO. 2514

(Purpose: To amend Title 11 of the United States Code)

Insert at the appropriate place:

Section 362(b)(18) of title 11, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

(18) under subsection (a) of the creation or perfection of a statutory lien for an ad valorem property tax, or a special tax or special assessment on real property whether or not ad valorem, imposed by a governmental unit, if such tax or assessment comes due after the filing of the petition.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I thank the managers for offering and accepting the bipartisan amendment that would allow courts to waive the filing fee for chapter 7 filers who cannot afford to pay. This is similar to an amendment that Senator SPECTER and I successfully offered on the floor in the last Congress. I am certain we could have repeated that success on this bill, but I did not think it was necessary this year to have a rollcall vote since the House-passed bankruptcy bill includes a similar provision.

It is unbelievable to me that bankruptcy is the only Federal civil proceeding in which a poor person cannot file in forma pauperis. That means that in any other federal civil proceeding you can file a case without paying the filing fee if the court determines that you are unable to afford the fee, but in bankruptcy you either pay the filing fee or you are denied access to the system.

That doesn't make any sense. The bankruptcy system, is by definition designed to assist those who have fallen on hard times, but because there is no allowance for in forma pauperis filing, the system is unavailable to the poorest of the poor. This prohibition against debtors filing in forma pauperis is a clear obstacle to the poor gaining access to justice.

Currently the filing fee for consumer bankruptcy is $175, and it may well be increased in this bill. That's roughly the weekly take home pay of an employee working a 40-hour week at the minimum wage. It is unreasonable and unrealistic to expect the indigent—people who barely get by from week to week, the very people who truly need the protection afforded by the bankruptcy system the most—to save money to raise such a fee simply to enter the system.

Congress has already acknowledged that the bankruptcy system may need an in forma pauperis proceeding by enacting a three year pilot program in six judical districts across the country. The Federal Judicial Center recently submitted a comprehensive report to Congress analyzing this pilot program in which it found that:

A fee waiver application was filed in only 3.4 percent of all chapter 7 cases, and the large majority of these waivers were granted. Indeed, the U.S. Trustees Office filed objections to less than 1 percent of the applications. In other words, only those very few individuals who really needed the fee-waiver applied for it.

The fee-waiver program enhanced access to the bankruptcy system for indigent single women above and beyond any other group. We cannot strike another blow against single mothers and their children by denying them access to the bankruptcy system because they cannot even afford the filing fee.

The nature of the debt for those who filed for the fee-waiver differed from that of other debtors in that their debts related more to basic subsistence—education, health, utility services, and housing. Moreover, 63 percent of the housing-related debts of those who filed for the fee-waiver owed their debts to public housing authorities. Therefore, these indigent debtors were not filing bankruptcy to escape paying for their boats, or their fancy entertainment systems. They were filing bankruptcy merely to subsist.

Often times the bankruptcy system was the only thing that stood between these unfortunate people and homelessness.

There was only a minimal increase in the number of filings and there was no indication that debtors filed for chapter 7 rather than chapter 13 just to obtain the benefit of the fee-waiver program. Simply stated, the debtors did not abuse the system.

In sum, this amendment would build upon the strong foundation established in the pilot program and direct the Judicial Center to create a nation-wide in forma pauperis program for the bankruptcy system, thus, establishing some fairness in the bankruptcy filing process for the most financially strapped debtors.

We have made one modification in the amendment to make sure that in forma pauperis filing status is only available to truly indigent people, namely those with an annual income of below 125% of the poverty level. That is the same income qualification required for people to receive free legal assistance from the Legal Service Corporation. Obviously, we don't intend for the bankruptcy filing fee to be waived for people who aren't really poor. So I was happy to agree to this modification.

The expenditure of funds required by this amendment is clearly justified. We made the decision long ago in this country that our judicial system would be open to everyone—those who can pay, and those who cannot—and we decided that as a nation, we would absorb the cost of allowing those who could not pay to receive the same access as those who could. If you are poor, and you cannot afford the fee to file for divorce, we absorb the cost. If someone does you wrong and you cannot afford the filing fee to sue, we absorb the cost. Likewise, if you are in such financial difficulty that you must file for bankruptcy, and you cannot afford the filing fee, now, because of this amendment, we must also absorb the cost.

In this bill, where we are giving such advantages to the well-heeled landlords and credit companies, I am pleased that we will take this small step to ensure that the poorest of the poor are not shut out of this very important part of our system of justice. Again, I thank the managers for agreeing to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, if I can get the attention of the floor manager of this bill, I think what I am about to do is all right. I will call up three amendments and immediately ask for them to be laid aside, and then I will call up an amendment which I want to debate.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 2531, 2532, AND 2753

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I call up amendments Nos. 2531, 2532, and 2753.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

AMENDMENT NO. 2753

(Purpose: To amend the Truth in Lending Act to provide for enhanced information regarding credit card balance payment terms and conditions, and to provide for enhanced reporting of credit card solicitations to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and to Congress, and for other purposes)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. CONSUMER CREDIT.

(a) ENHANCED DISCLOSURES UNDER AN OPEN END CONSUMER CREDIT PLAN.—Section 127(b) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1637(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(11)(A) Repayment information that would apply to the outstanding balance of the consumer under the credit plan, including—

''(i) the required minimum monthly payment on that balance, represented as both a dollar figure and as a percentage of that balance;

''(ii) the number of months (rounded to the nearest month) that it would take to pay the entire amount of that balance, if the consumer pays only the required minimum monthly payments and if no further advances are made;

''(iii) the total cost to the consumer, including interest and principal payments, of paying that balance in full, if the consumer pays only the required minimum monthly payments and if no further advances are made; and

''(iv) the monthly payment amount that would be required for the consumer to eliminate the outstanding balance in 36 months if no further advances are made.

''(B)(i) Subject to clause (ii), in making the disclosures under subparagraph (A) the creditor shall apply the interest rate in effect on the date on which the disclosure is made until the date on which the balance would be paid in full.

''(ii) If the interest rate in effect on the date on which the disclosure is made is a temporary rate that will change under a contractual provision applying an index or formula for subsequent interest rate adjustment, the creditor shall apply the interest rate in effect on the date on which the disclosure is made for as long as that interest rate will apply under that contractual provision, and then apply an interest rate based on the index or formula in effect on the applicable billing date.''.

(b) CIVIL LIABILITY.—Section 130(a) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1640(a)) is amended, in the undesignated paragraph following paragraph (4), by striking the second sentence and inserting the following: ''In connection with the disclosures referred to in subsections (a) and (b) of section 127, a creditor shall have a liability determined under paragraph (2) only for failing to comply with the requirements of section 125, 127(a), or paragraph (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), or (11) of section 127(b), or for failing to comply with disclosure requirements under State law for any term or item that the Board has determined to be substantially the same in meaning under section 111(a)(2) as any of the terms or items referred to in section 127(a), or paragraph (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), (9), (10), or (11) of section 127(b).''.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these three amendments be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2754

(Purpose: To amend the Truth in Lending Act with respect to extensions of credit to consumers under the age of 21)

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 2754 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], for himself and Mr. KENNEDY, proposes an amendment numbered 2754.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. EXTENSIONS OF CREDIT TO UNDERAGE CONSUMERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 127(c) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1637(c)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (6); and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following:

''(5) APPLICATIONS FROM UNDERAGE CONSUMERS.—

''(A) PROHIBITION ON ISSUANCE.—No credit card may be issued to, or open end credit plan established on behalf of, a consumer who has not attained the age of 21 unless the consumer has submitted a written application to the card issuer that meets the requirements of subparagraph (B).

''(B) APPLICATION REQUIREMENTS.—An application to open a credit card account by an individual who has not attained the age of 21 as of the date of submission of the application shall require—

''(i) the signature of the parent, legal guardian, or spouse of the consumer, or any other individual having a means to repay debts incurred by the consumer in connection with the account, indicating joint liability for debts incurred by the consumer in connection with the account before the consumer has attained the age of 21; or

''(ii) submission by the consumer of financial information indicating an independent means of repaying any obligation arising from the proposed extension of credit in connection with the account.''.

(b) REGULATORY AUTHORITY.—The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may issue such rules or publish such model forms as it considers necessary to carry out section 127(c)(5) of the Truth in Lending Act, as amended by this section.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I say to my good friend from Iowa, I know he is concerned with the number of amendments and time. We have debated this amendment in the past. It will not be a new debate for our colleagues. I am more than happy to enter into an agreement, if he wants, to move the process along. I have three other amendments I have offered and laid aside which also can be dealt with quickly. I am more than prepared to enter into a time agreement when the manager wants to discuss that with me. I will be brief and explain what this amendment does and why it is an important one. I hope our colleagues will be willing to support it.

This amendment is very straightforward and just plain common sense and something most Americans have become familiar with already.

The amendment requires that when a credit card company issues a credit card to persons under the age of 21, the issuers of those credit cards obtain an application from that individual that does one of two things: One, either they have the signature of a parent, guardian, or other qualified individual willing to take financial responsibility for any debts that may be incurred; or, two, that the applicant provides information indicating the individual has independent means of repaying any credit card debt. One of those two things: Either have a guardian or some qualified person cosign to say they will assume the responsibility, or demonstrate the borrower has independent means of paying back their debts.

Why do I suggest this amendment is important and one we ought to do? It is becoming an alarming problem in the country. One of the most troubling developments in the hotly contested battle between the credit card issuers to sign up new customers has been the aggressive way in which these companies have targeted people under the age of 21, particularly college students.

Solicitations to this age group have become more intense for a variety of reasons. First of all, it is one of the few market segments in which there are always some new faces to go after. That certainly is understandable. Second, it is an age group in which brand loyalty can be established early on. Again, I understand that. In the words of one major credit card issuer, ''We are in the relationship business. We want to build relationships early on.''

Recent press reports have reported that people hold on to their first credit cards for up to 15 years. That makes sense to me. I do not argue with that. That is good business judgment. It is a new crowd coming along, and a company knows they can develop loyalties early on, and they want to establish that relationship as early as they can for those individuals.

I do not fault the credit card companies for those arguments or those ideas from a business perspective. What does worry me is that this solicitation and signing people up without having some information which indicates these credit cards are going to be paid for is creating a very serious problem, including significant dropouts from colleges because of the huge debts these individuals are accumulating.

In fact, people under the age of 21 are such a hot target for credit card marketers that the upcoming Card Marketing Conference 98 is calling one of its key sessions ''Targeting teens: You never forget your first card.''

Providing fair access to credit is something for which I have fought throughout my tenure in the Senate, and credit cards play a valuable role in pursuing the American dream. Some credit card issuers, however, have, in my view, gone too far in their aggressive solicitations. They irresponsibly target the most vulnerable in our society and extend them large amounts of credit with absolutely no regard to whether or not there is a reasonable expectation of repayment.

On my first chart, I bring to my colleagues' attention a recent story reported in the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle in the State of New York. The article relates to the story of a 3-year-old child who recently received a platinum credit card with a credit card limit of $5,000. The credit card issuers are also enticing college students.

In the Rochester News, a 3-year-old Rochester toddler was issued a platinum credit card after the mother jokingly returned an application sent to the child. The child's mother told the bank that the child's occupation was ''preschooler'' and left the income portion of the application a total blank. A few weeks later, the tot received a $5,000 credit card limit.

This is how insane the process has become—filling out the application, listing your application as a preschooler, and showing no source of income, and you get $5,000 worth of credit.

We know in this day and age of high technology that these companies certainly have the capacity of distinguishing—I hope—between a preschooler with no source of income and providing them with $5,000 worth of credit.

Credit card issuers are also enticing colleges and universities to promote their products. Professor Robert Manning of Georgetown University told my staff recently that some colleges receive tens of thousands of dollars per year for exclusive marketing agreements. Other colleges receive as much as 1 percent of all student charges from the credit card issuer in return for marketing or affinity agreements. Even those colleges that do not enter such agreements are making money.

Robert Bugai, president of the College Marketing Intelligence, told the American Banker recently that colleges charge up to $400 per day for each credit card company that sets up a table on their campuses. That can run into tens of thousands of dollars by the end of just one semester.

Last February, I went to the main campus of the University of Connecticut in my home State to meet with student leaders about this issue. Quite honestly, I was surprised at the amount of solicitations going on in the student union. Frankly, I also was surprised at the degree to which the students themselves were concerned about the constant barrage of offers they were receiving for credit cards.

The offers seemed very attractive. One student who was an intern in my office this summer received four solicitations in 2 weeks from credit card companies. One promised ''eight cheap flights while you still have 18 weeks of vacation.'' Another promised a platinum card with what appeared to be a low-interest rate until you read the fine print that it applied only to balance transfers, not to the account overall. Only one of the four, Discover card, offered a brochure about credit terms—and I commend them for it—but, in doing so, also offered a spring break sweepstakes to 18-year-olds.

In fact, the Chicago Tribune recently reported the average college freshman receives 50 solicitations during the first few months at college. The Tribune further reported college students get green-lighted—a green light, no yellow light, a green light—for a line of credit that can reach more than $10,000 just on the strength of a signature and a student ID; $10,000 worth of credit at the age of 18 with just your student ID and a signature.

Who do you think is going to pay those bills? The parents do. They get socked with it in the end. We have to have some restraint, some controls on this. We have a huge problem with the amount of debt that is being accumulated by children or being passed on to their parents without any requirements at all that they meet some basic minimum standards, either independent sources of income or a cosignature by someone who can demonstrate the ability to pay.

It is a serious public policy question about whether people in this age bracket can be presumed—and that is what they are doing—presumed to be able to make the sensible financial choices that are being forced upon them from this barrage of marketing.

While it is very difficult to get reliable information from the credit card issuers about their marketing practices to people under the age of 21, the statistics that are available are deeply troubling. Let me share some of them with you.

Let me put up chart No. 2, if I may.

''Collegiate credit cards increasing.'' This article appeared just a few days ago in the Washington Post here in the Nation's Capital. Let me share what the Post talked about. I quote them:

> Alarmed by the trend, hundreds of colleges in recent years have forbidden credit card companies to solicit on their campuses, and Virginia lawmakers are thinking of imposing such a ban at all the State's colleges. Nine other States are considering similar measures.

The Post goes on to report that:

> An estimated 430 colleges have banned the marketing of credit cards on their campuses.

The statistics on college credit card debt are truly frightening.

Nellie Mae, a major student loan provider in the New England States, conducted a recent survey of students who had applied for student loans. It termed the results ''alarming.'' The survey found that 27 percent of their undergraduate student applicants had four or more credit cards. It found that 14 percent had credit card balances between $3,000 and $7,000, while another 10 percent had balances in excess of $10,000.

Let me repeat those statistics because they are truly alarming. Twenty-seven percent of college students already had four credit cards; 14 percent had credit card balances between $3,000 and $7,000; and 10 percent had credit card balances that were greater than $7,000. That is 24 percent; that is one out of every four who have debt somewhere between $3,000 and above $7,000—one out of every four college students with that kind of debt while they are trying to pay off student loans and other matters. This is incredible in terms of the amount of obligations, while still virtually children in many cases.

This figure of 24 percent with credit card balances in excess of $3,000 is more than double the number from last year when I stood on this floor and offered a similar amendment. The trend lines are alarming.

My hope with this amendment, which does not ban at all the solicitation among college students—if colleges want to allow them to go and solicit, they can—but the amendment merely says two things: Either have a guardian or a qualified person cosign, or show you have the independent means of paying the credit card debt you incur.

That is something you would think the credit card companies would want to do themselves. Why do they not want this information? Why are they willing to extend up to $10,000 worth of debt merely on a student signature and an ID? It seems to me that is the height of irresponsibility. Then they come around and complain that there is too much debt in the country and they want to tighten up the bankruptcy laws.

Why not tighten up your own process? Why not ask for some basic information of these young people before watching them build up the kind of debt they may spend years trying to pay back? It seems to me that if they are unwilling to impose some restraints on who can incur this kind of debt, we have an obligation to set some minimum standards.

Again, it does not ban them from going out to solicit young people to become credit card holders. If the young person can have their parents or a guardian cosign, or if they can demonstrate independent means of payment, no problem, they get their credit card. But just on a student ID, and just on their signature, I think this body ought to be on record as saying that is what is creating some of the real debt problems in the country. We ought to put a stop to it.

I mentioned the numbers. Moreover, while there is still evidence that student debt is skyrocketing, some surveys by credit card issuers themselves show that this same group of consumers is woefully uninformed about basic credit card terms and issues.

A 1993 American Express/Consumer Federation of America study—done only about 5 or 6 years ago—found that only 22 percent of the more than 2,000 college students surveyed knew that the annual percentage rate is the best indicator of the true cost of a loan. Only 30 percent of those surveyed knew that each bank sets the interest rate on their credit cards, so it is possible to shop around for the best rate. Only 30 percent knew that the interest rate was charged on new purchases if you carried a balance over from the previous month.

Some college administrators, bucking the trend to use credit card issuers as a source of income, have become so concerned that they have banned credit card companies from their campuses, as I mentioned, and even have gone so far as to ban credit card advertisements from the campus bookstores.

Roger Witherspoon, the vice president of student development at John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York, banned credit card solicitors, saying indebtedness was causing students to drop out. I quote him:

> Middle class parents can bail out their kids when this happens, but lower income parents can't.

In fact, I argue with the statement. I do not think middle-income parents can either. Only the most affluent parents would be able to bail out their children from the kind of debts many of them are incurring.

But he goes on to say:

> Kids only find out later how much it messes up their lives [when this debt occurs].

If I may, this is chart No. 3, which is from the Consumer Federation of America. This came out last June. The Consumer Federation of America says:

The average college student who does not pay off his or her balance every month now has an average debt of over $2,000.

The average college student who does not pay off their balance every month has a credit card debt of over $2,000.

One-fifth—

One out of every five—of these students have debts of more than $10,000. A number of colleges are now citing credit card debt as the most significant cause of college disenrollment.

Here we stand, day after day, week after week, talking about how important it is to get young people into higher education and to keep them there. This ought to be a matter of bipartisan concern.

I know the credit card companies are working overtime on this. But if one of the major causes of disenrollment in higher education is credit card debt—where one out of every five students in this country has debt in excess of $10,000, and the average student who does not pay their monthly balance has a $2,000 debt—then something is drastically wrong that cries out for some solution.

Again, I think banning credit card companies from college campuses, that ought not to be our decision; leave that up to the college campuses. Not allowing them to put their advertisements in bookstores, that ought to be the college's decision, not the Congress'.

But I do not think it is too much to say that we ought to require, as part of a bankruptcy bill, when we are trying to reduce the amount of bankruptcy filings in this country, that you either have to have someone who will cosign with you, if you are under the age of 18, or that you have an independent demonstration of the ability to pay.

I see my good friend from Utah has arrived. We now know that one of the most significant reasons of disenrollment in colleges is credit card debt. My colleague from Utah, who cares so much about higher education, ought to be deeply alarmed. The trend lines are dreadful. It is just dreadful what is occurring. Unless we do something to try to put some restraints on this, we are going to have this problem continue to mount.

As I said earlier, this amendment does one of two things: If you are under 21, have a guardian, a parent, a qualified person cosign, or demonstrate you can pay, and then you get your credit card. But to say you get a credit card with a student ID and your signature alone, and to be able to mount up this kind of debt, crippling these people from ever being able to get out from underneath their obligations, I think is outrageous.

The amendment I am proposing does not take any draconian action against the credit card industry. I agree with those who argue that there are many millions of people under the age of 21, who hold full-time jobs, who are as deserving of credit cards as anyone over the age of 21. I also agree that students should continue to have access to credit. They should not try to prohibit the marketing for making credit cards available to these people.

I also recognize that the period of time from 18 to 21 is an age of transition from adolescence to adulthood. As we do in so many other places in the Federal law, some extra care is needed to make sure that mistakes made from youthful inexperience do not haunt these people for the rest of their lives. All my amendment does is require that a credit card issuer, prior to granting credit, obtain one of two things from the applicant under the age of 21: Either they get a signature from a parent, a guardian, a qualified individual, or obtain information that demonstrates that that person between the ages of 18 and 21 has the capability of paying it back.

This is a vulnerable period. This is an exciting time in their lives. For many, it is the first time they are away from home. They are living on their own, independent. All of a sudden, as we know, you get 50 credit card solicitations in the space of one semester; in the case of the intern in my office, offering college sweepstakes, springs breaks, all sorts of enticements. You sign up. Before you know it, you have incurred $2,000, $3,000, $4,000, $6,000 worth of debt. You are 18 or 19 years of age. Then they come after you to pay. They don't give you a break and say: We will wait until you get through college. We will wait until you are 25 or 30 to pay it back. They want their money right away. They want to get it, immediately, if they can.

What happens, as we now find out, is one of the reasons for disenrollment in college—for one out of five students, $10,000 worth of debt by the time they are 19 or 20 years of age. By the way, on $10,000, the way the annual rates go and so forth, that probably means something like $30,000 or $40,000 because they can't pay it off all at once. By the time they get out from underneath this rock, it could end up being a fortune for them as they start out their lives with dreams and aspirations and hopes.

Again, I don't object to the credit card companies soliciting, advertising, if that is what they want to do and want to have them on board. But why do you allow an 18-year-old to get this kind of a debt with a student ID and a signature? You don't let that happen with older people. You demand some sort of information about their ability to pay. Why do you say to an 18-year-old that you can be treated so differently than someone who is 25 or 30, where they need demonstrations of ability to pay? Why shouldn't we say that if you are going to solicit an 18-year-old, at least show that they can pay it back. They may not be able to, but at least require that or have a guardian or an adult sign on.

Federal law already says people under the age of 21 shouldn't drink alcohol. We made that statement. I know my colleague from Utah was a strong supporter of that. We don't allow you to drink anymore on college campuses unless you are 21 or older because we were worried about them. We were worried what would happen to them. Isn't this a problem as well, this kind of debt they can incur?

The Tax Code makes the presumption that if someone is a full-time student under the age of 23, they are financially dependent on their parents or guardians. The Tax Code makes that presumption. Is it so much to ask that credit card issuers find out if someone under the age of 21 is financially capable of paying back the debt or that their parents are willing to assume the financial responsibility or someone else? Again, I know there are a lot of young people who are out working full-time jobs and going to school simultaneously. This isn't a big burden —they need to have that credit card—to say to them, look, just demonstrate, through a W–2 form or something, that you can pay back or you have the ability to pay back. That is not a lot to ask. Believe me, the credit card companies can do it on the Internet. They can do it in a matter of a nanosecond if they want to.

Why don't they want to? What is the hesitation? Don't tell me it is the bureaucracy. It is not the bureaucracy. They require it of adults who are older than that. They don't give platinum credit cards out to people who are not in college without getting some information about their ability to pay. Why is it in this age group that they are willing to give it to you on a signature and a student ID? I think we all know the answer why. It is outrageous. It is getting worse all the time. I mentioned to you the numbers have almost doubled in a year in terms of the amount of debt being held. Last year, when I offered the amendment, it was $3,000. Now it is at almost $7,000 worth of debt they are incurring.

I hope our colleagues will be willing to support this modest amendment. It is not a great deal to ask. As I mentioned, 430 colleges have banned credit cards from soliciting on their campuses. They know what the problem is. When we have the president of one of the major criminal justice schools in the country talk about what a drastic problem this is having on enrollment, these are serious people. They are not anticredit card. They are not antibusiness. They are not against young people having credit cards. They see what is happening on their campuses. We ought to pay attention to them and listen to them. To ignore them or to say it doesn't make any difference would be an outrage.

How can we pass a bankruptcy bill, as we try and cut down on the number of bankruptcies, and allow this situation to persist where one out of every five college students has $10,000 of credit card debt? How can we allow that to persist without setting some minimum standards that these people have to meet before they can incur that kind of debt? I suspect the credit card companies will be probably lax in what minimum standards they might even permit, but at least it might put the brakes on a little bit, just a little bit.

We have also received some strong endorsements of this amendment: the American Federation of State County Municipal Employees; the Communication Workers of America, International Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Blacksmiths; International Brotherhood of Teamsters; the Union of Needletrades, Industrial & Textile Employees; the United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers; United Food & Commercial Workers International, representing millions of working families.

Why do the unions care about a credit card bill? Because these are the parents of these kids. That is why they care about it. This isn't a union issue. These are the hard-working parents who are working two and three and four jobs to send their kids to college. They turn around and some credit card company mounts up a $10,000 debt on their back. Their kids have to drop out, after they have worked 20 or 30 years, saving to put their families through school, understanding the value of a higher education. Now the credit card companies say, no, that is too much to ask of us. You are asking way too much, that we require an 18-year-old to have a cosigner of the credit card application or to show that they have the means of paying back the debt. That is why the millions who are represented by these unions have offered such strong support of this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD at this juncture.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, AS FOLLOWS:

NOVEMBER 8, 1999.

DEAR SENATORS KENNEDY AND DODD: We support your amendment to the bankruptcy bill (S. 625), that would prohibit credit card issuers from recklessly extending credit to young people who do not have adequate means to repay their debts. Predatory lending by card issuers is one of the most significant reasons why the number of bankruptcies among those under age 25 has grown by 50 percent since 1991.

This amendment would prohibit the issuance of credit cards to persons under age 21, unless a parent, spouse, guardian or other individual acts as co-signer, or the minor can demonstrate an independent source of income sufficient to repay. The amendment would not limit the extension of credit to the millions of working young Americans who have an adequate income and are as deserving of credit as anyone over the age of 21.

The serious problem of predatory lending by credit card issuers to young people has been well-documented. Credit card issuers aggressively target young people, especially college students. It is nearly impossible for students, including those in high school, to avoid credit card pitches. Students now receive cards at a younger age, with 81 percent of students who have at least one card having received it before college or during their freshman year.

The level of revolving debt among young people is rising to alarming levels, with sometimes tragic consequences. Family tensions arise as parents attempt to pay off these obligations. Poor credit ratings hinder young people in the job and real estate markets. Students are forced to drop out of school to pay off their credit card debt.

Credit card issuers are well aware that most young people lack basic skills in personal finance. A recent survey (1997) of the financial literacy levels of high school seniors showed that only 10.2% scored a ''C'' or better and that students who use credit cards know no more about them then students who don't.

This amendment is consistent with the opinion of the American public. An April, 1999 poll by the Consumer Federation of America/Opinion Research Corporation International found overwhelming support at all age groups for the terms proposed by this amendment. We join them in supporting it.

Thank you for your leadership on this important issue.

American Federation of State, County & Municipal Employees (AFSCME); Communication Workers of America (CWA); International Brotherhood of Boilermarkes, Iron Ship Builders, Blacksmiths, Forgers & Helpers; International Brotherhood of Teamsters; Union of Needletrades, Industrial & Textile Employees (UNITE); United Automobile, Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America (UAW); United Food & Commercial Workers International Union (UFCW); United Steelworkers of America (USA).

Mr. DODD. I hope we can get a strong vote on this amendment. This shouldn't take much time. It is very little to ask. The credit card companies are the ones who have asked for this bill on bankruptcy reform. I am sympathetic to the bill because I do think there are far too many bankruptcies in the country. If we are to try to reduce the number of bankruptcies, we have to reduce the rationale or the reason why people are going to the bankruptcy courts in the first place. These are not all evil people. These are not all scam artists who are trying to game the system. The overwhelming majority of people who go to a bankruptcy court have gotten in way over their heads. You can say they have been irresponsible. That may be the case.

But I will tell you, for an awful lot of families, they have kids in college and those adolescent kids became irresponsible. I know of very few who don't get irresponsible in their adolescent years. The danger today is that they can get deeply in trouble. It isn't just a college prank that may get them in trouble. Now you have major credit card companies dumping 50 solicitations into their mailboxes in their dormitories in the first semester in college. With a student I.D. and a signature, they get themselves $10,000 into trouble. Requiring these companies to at least get some basic information may slow down this process. It will do a lot to reduce the volume of bankruptcies in this country, to reduce the ability of an 18- or 19-year-old, with no independent means of paying back their debts, from getting these cards in the first place, and saving these families the anguish and heartache and the dashed dreams that a young college student has when they go off for the first time. Many of them, by the way, are the first people in their families ever to go to college. Think how the families feel—the excitement, the thrill of a young person going off to college, from a blue collar working family in this country who never had that opportunity. All of a sudden they get a deluge of platinum credit cards flooding their mailboxes, the kids sign up, and the dreams of a family go down the drain in a matter of weeks.

This ought not to be a Democrat or Republican issue, conservative or liberal issue. This is a commonsense issue. This is basic common sense, which says to these companies that, with 18- to 21-year-olds, there has to be some cosigner, or some demonstration of an independent means to pay back. If you turn down this amendment and you turn around and say we ought to stop these bankruptcies, then you make it harder for these families to get out of these obligations and straighten out their lives. I know an awful lot of good people who have gotten themselves behind the eight ball financially; they are not evil, bad people. Because they get into a little trouble, particularly at 18 or 19 —and one out of five of them are $10,000 in debt—doesn't mean they ought not to have an opportunity to straighten things out. The best way is not to get into trouble in the first place. The way not to get into trouble in the first place is to put some governor—you know how we do with automobiles with young people, where the car can't go more than 60 miles an hour, because we know there is a danger of a young person going too fast. Why not put a governor here on the credit card companies and slow them down. They can make their solicitations, send the solicitations in there, but require that these young people have a cosigner or a demonstration of an independent means to pay. If they can't do that, then you move on to someone else who can. But don't sign up a young person and put them and their family into harm's way and pass a bankruptcy bill that doesn't allow them to take the bankruptcy act when those debts mount up.

So I hope that our colleagues will support this amendment. This will be a good way for us to build strong bipartisan support for this bill.

With that, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have to rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Mr. DODD. It would require young adults under the age of 21 to obtain parental consent or demonstrate an ''independent means of repaying'' in order to get a credit card. This amendment also caps the amount of credit a young adult can get to $1,500.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment is well-intentioned. However, if adopted, it would unfairly put young adults between the ages of 18 and 21 at a disadvantage by putting serious obstacles in their way, or, in some cases, bar them from obtaining credit cards altogether. Young adults today, whether they are serving in our Nation's military, or going to college, or trying to support a young family, do not need these hurdles placed in their path. This amendment would have an adverse effect on temporarily unemployed adults over the age of 18 who are independent of their parents, the twenty-year-old single mother, the twenty-year-old discharged from the military service, or a twenty-year-old worker between jobs—often the very person most needing the extension of credit.

I understand how difficult times can be for young adults. When I was 16 years of age, I was a skilled building tradesman. I knew a trade. I went through a formal apprenticeship and became a journeyman. I was proud of it. I was capable of supporting my family at that time. I worked as a janitor to put myself through college. I believe it is an insult to young adults to put in doubt their ability to get credit.

In addition, this amendment does not appear to be well thought out. For example, it makes absolutely no provision for young adults who may be estranged from their parents or whose parents or guardians may be deceased. It is also unclear what new burdens will be placed on lenders to verify the authenticity of a parent's or guardian's signature. I also can't resist pointing out that many of the very same folks who oppose parental consent for abortion are in favor of parental consent for getting a credit card. That seems a little odd to me.

I can appreciate that there have been some instances when young adults have been extended credit beyond their ability to repay. But it does not strike me as a reasoned public policy, in an effort to tackle the occasional abuse, to discriminate against the many honest, hard-working, decent young people between the ages of 18 and 21 who rely on credit to make their lives a little bit more livable, or even sustainable.

I also must point out that individuals under age 18 cannot enter into binding contracts, and therefore any credit inadvertently extended to them is unenforceable.

The amendment would undermine a fundamental purpose of bankruptcy reform: to make individuals take more responsibility for their personal finances. I believe that the vast majority of young adults between the ages of 18 and 21 are responsible citizens, and they do not need the big Government to tell them what they can or cannot do in this area. I oppose treating adults as if they are children; therefore, I have to oppose this amendment.

Let me make a correction. This amendment does not place a cap on the amount of credit a minor can get. I misspoke and I confused it with an amendment filed that was identical to this, only it does have the cap. So I will make that clear and make that correction.

Mr. DODD. Will my colleague yield for another correction?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. DODD. It says parents, guardians, or any other qualified person can cosign. It is not limited to parents. If the parents were deceased or the guardians were deceased, a qualified person could cosign. So we allow for a broader range of options here.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator. I will certainly make that correction.

I still believe we ought to treat them as young adults. We ought to recognize that many people who really qualify for credit cards in these age groups ought to be able to get them with or without anybody else's consent. Many of them live up to the obligations that they incur; in fact, most of them do. I don't think we should, as a public policy matter, make this particular change that my dear friend from Connecticut has suggested. We are sending these young men and women over 18 years of age to war. They can vote at 18. They can do almost anything. Now we want to take away their right to have a credit card. I think that is bad public policy. I hope our colleagues will defeat this amendment when it comes up for a vote. With that, I believe we are ready to recess.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I just have one minute in response. As my friend from Utah knows, shortly, we have an amendment that we are going to offer together on this bill. I am sorry we don't agree on this. As I mentioned earlier, we do set some restrictions. We can send men and women to war at age 18, but we don't allow them to drink; we set a standard of 21. We did so because of the dangers that we decided alcohol posed to young people. The Tax Code says there is a rebuttable presumption that at 23-year-old college student has an obligation that shifts to parents.

All I am requiring here is that the credit card companies, when they solicit an 18 or 19 year old, require that they show they have the independent means of paying for it or that they have a guardian or a qualified person who will cosign. The same thing would be required of someone else. One out of five students has $10,000 worth of financial debt and obligation. We are being told now one of the single largest reasons for disenrollment in higher education is because of this mounting—and it has doubled in the last two years—amount of credit card debt among 18-, 19-, and 20-year-olds.

It ought not to be a great deal to ask they meet these basic, simple requirements. They can solicit; they can collect. If they can sign them up, God bless them, go to it. However, for a student ID and a signature to get $10,000 worth of debt for one out of five college students—and the average student has $2,000 worth of debt and was not paying the monthly payments—is too much for the families to be burdened with.

I ask unanimous consent a letter from the Consumer Federation of America, the Consumers Union, the National Consumer Law Center, the U.S. Public Interest Research Group, and the U.S. Student Association, all of which support this amendment, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOVEMBER 8, 1999.

RE: Support for Dodd/Kennedy Amendment #2754 to Bankruptcy Bill

DEAR SENATOR, The undersigned organizations strongly support this amendment to the bankruptcy bill regarding the extension of credit to young Americans. This common sense proposal would forbid banks and other credit card issuers from granting credit to any person under 21 years-of-age, without the signature of a parent or guardian or proof of an independent means of repaying the debt incurred.

This amendment would not result in denials to credit-worthy young people, but it would protect financially unsophisticated young consumers from being enticed into a financial trap. A recent study by the Consumer Federation of America found that previous research has underestimated the extent of credit card debt by college students, as well as the social impact of this debt on students. The study documents the consequences of high levels of indebtedness for many students, including dropping out of college, difficulty finding good jobs, and in particularly tragic circumstances, extreme psychological stress and suicide.

Minors are increasingly targeted in credit card marketing campaigns. Direct solicitation of college students has intensified significantly in the past few years as high profitability has encouraged card issuers to take on riskier customers. Cards are available to almost any student with no income, no credit history and no parental signature required. Issuers know that young customers are often ''brand loyal'' to their first card for many years. They also know that many parents will pay off excessive credit card debt accumulated by their children, even though they are under no legal obligation to do so.

As a result, approximately 70 percent of undergraduates at four-year colleges possess at least one credit card. Moreover, students are obtaining their first credit card at a young age. Accordingly to the non-profit student loan provider Nellie Mae, 66 percent of college students with at least one card received their first card before college or during their freshman in 1996. By 1998, 81 percent had received their first card by the end of their freshman year.

Student credit card debt is larger than previously estimated. The Consumer Federation of America study found that college students who do not pay off their balances every month have an average debt of more then $2,000, with one-fifth of these students carrying debts of more than $10,000. Additional credit card debt is often ''refinanced'' with student loans or with private debt consolidation loans. At some schools, college loan debt averages $20,000 per graduating senior.

More than one quarter of all students reported paying late on a credit card at least once in the last two years, according to a 1998 survey by the U.S. Public Interest Research Group. One-quarter of students questioned in the survey also reported using a cash advance to pay their debts. Poor credit records and credit card defaults have lasting consequences, including the classification of the student as a high risk/high rate borrower and decreased access to rental housing, car loans and home mortgage loans.

Many colleges and universities not only permit aggressive credit card marketing on campus; they actually benefit financially from this marketing. Credit card issuers pay institutions for sponsorship of school programs, for support of student activities, for rental of on-campus solicitation tables, and for exclusive marketing agreements, such as college ''affinity'' credit cards.

Card issuers are well aware that high school and college students don't have basic financial skills. A 1993 survey of college juniors and seniors by the Consumer Federation of America and American Express found:

Just 22 percent knew that the APR was the best indicator of the cost of a loan;

Just 30 percent knew that interest rates on credit cards are set by the issuing bank, not Visa, MasterCard of the government;

Just 30 percent knew that the grace period was not available when a credit card balance is carried from month-to-month.

The American people strongly support restricting aggressive lending practices by credit card issuers. A national poll conducted for the Consumer Federation of America in April 1999 by Opinion Research Corporation found that 80 percent of those surveyed supported restrictions on the extension of credit cards to people under age 21.

Without this reasonable amendment, direct solicitation of college and high school students without the ability to repay will continue unabated. For more information, contact Travis Plunkett at (202) 387–6121.

Sincerely,

Travis B. Plunkett, Consumer Federation of America; Frank Torres, Consumers Union; Gary Klein, National Consumer Law Center; Ed Mierzwinski, U.S. Public Interest Research Group; Kendra Fox-Davis, U.S. Student Association.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to set the Dodd amendment aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent I be given an extra minute and a half.

AMENDMENT NO. 2536

(Purpose: To protect certain education savings)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up amendment No. 2536, a Hatch-Dodd-Gregg amendment relating to the protection of educational savings accounts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH], for himself and Mr. DODD and Mr. GREGG, proposes an amendment numbered 2536.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 83, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

SEC. 2___. PROTECTION OF EDUCATION SAVINGS.

(a) EXCLUSIONS.—Section 541 of title 11, United States Code, as amended by section 903, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) in paragraph (5), by striking ''or'' at the end;

(B) by redesignating paragraph (6) as paragraph (8); and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following:

''(6) funds placed in an education individual retirement account (as defined in section 530(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) not later than 365 days before the date of filing of the petition, but—

''(A) only if the designated beneficiary of such account was a son, daughter, stepson, stepdaughter, grandchild, or step-grandchild of the debtor for the taxable year for which funds were placed in such account;

''(B) only to the extent that such funds—

''(i) are not pledged or promised to any entity in connection with any extension of credit; and

''(ii) are not excess contributions (as described in section 4973(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986); and

''(C) in the case of funds placed in all such accounts having the same designated beneficiary not earlier than 720 days nor later than 365 days before such date, only so much of such funds as does not exceed $5,000;

''(7) funds used to purchase a tuition credit or certificate or contributed to an account in accordance with section 529(b)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 under a qualified State tuition program (as defined in section 529(b)(1) of such Code) not later than 365 days before the date of filing of the petition, but—

''(A) only if the designated beneficiary of the amounts paid or contributed to such tuition program was a son, daughter, stepson, stepdaughter, grandchild, or step-grandchild of the debtor for the taxable year for which funds were paid or contributed;

''(B) with respect to the aggregate amount paid or contributed to such program having the same designated beneficiary, only so much of such amount as does not exceed the total contributions permitted under section 529(b)(7) of such Code with respect to such beneficiary, as adjusted beginning on the date of the filing of the petition by the annual increase or decrease (rounded to the nearest tenth of 1 percent) in the education expenditure category of the Consumer Price Index prepared by the Department of Labor; and

''(C) in the case of funds paid or contributed to such program having the same designated beneficiary not earlier than 720 days nor later than 365 days before such date, only so much of such funds as does not exceed $5,000; or''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(f) In determining whether any of the relationships specified in paragraph (6)(A) or (7)(A) of subsection (b) exists, a legally adopted child of an individual (and a child who is a member of an individual's household, if placed with such individual by an authorized placement agency for legal adoption by such individual), or a foster child of an individual (if such child has as the child's principal place of abode the home of the debtor and is a member of the debtor's household) shall be treated as a child of such individual by blood.''.

(b) DEBTOR'S DUTIES.—Section 521 of title 11, United States Code, as amended by sections 105(d), 304(c)(1), 305(2), 315(b), and 316 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(k) In addition to meeting the requirements under subsection (a), a debtor shall file with the court a record of any interest that a debtor has in an education individual retirement account (as defined in section 530(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986) or under a qualified State tuition program (as defined in section 529(b)(1) of such Code).''.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I thank Senator DODD for his efforts and cooperation in working on this important amendment.

I am pleased to offer along with Senators DODD and GREGG, an amendment to S. 625, the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1999, that will protect education IRAs and qualified State tuition savings programs in bankruptcy. Education IRAs and qualified State tuition savings programs permit parents and grandparents to contribute funds for the tuition and other higher education expenses of their children and grandchildren. Under current bankruptcy law, creditors may access such accounts to satisfy debts owed by parents and grandparents.

The amendment I offer today balances the interest of encouraging families to save for college, with the interest of preventing the potential abuse of transferring funds into education savings accounts prior to an anticipated bankruptcy. Specifically, the amendment provides that contributions to education savings accounts made during the year immediately prior to the bankruptcy filing are not protected in bankruptcy and may be accessed by creditors; contributions up to $5,000 per beneficiary made in the second year prior to filing, however, are protected, as are all contributions made more than 2 years prior to the bankruptcy filing. To combat potential abuse, debtors must disclose their full interest in such accounts in the statement of financial affairs filed with the bankruptcy court. With respect to education IRAs, there is no limit on the amount that may be excluded from the bankruptcy estate, though the size of education IRAs are effectively limited by the $500 annual contribution limit. With respect to qualified State tuition savings programs, the excluded amount is the full, State-established amount deemed necessary to provide for the qualified education expenses of a beneficiary.

College savings accounts encourage families to save for college, thereby increasing access to higher education. In my home State of Utah, 775 children, with account balances nearing $1.2 million, are beneficiaries of such accounts. Nationwide, over one million children benefit from such accounts. Bona fide contributions to such college savings accounts, which are made for the benefit of children, should be beyond the reach of creditors. The ability to use dedicated funds to pay the educational costs of current and future college students should not be jeopardized by a bankruptcy of their parents or grandparents. The amendment I offer today prevents bona fide educational accounts of children from being accessed by their parents' or grandparents' creditors, while also protecting this exclusion from being abused as a means of sheltering assets from the bankruptcy estate.

I urge your support of this amendment.

Mr. DODD. I ask unanimous consent I be able to speak for up to 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. I know this will be somewhat confusing to people watching the debate over the last 15 or 20 minutes, but this is an amendment offered by my distinguished friend and colleague from Utah of which I am a cosponsor. This is a very good amendment. We hope our colleagues will support it.

Many parents have put aside money for college education in special accounts. This ought not to be the subject of first attack when creditors come after family income.

I commend my colleague from Utah for trying to preserve and protect these resources which working families spend years trying to accumulate, and then get behind the 8 ball for problems that may not be of their own making, and all of a sudden the resources are subject to attack. This is a good amendment that will strengthen working families' ability to educate their children. I commend my colleague from Utah for offering it. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding the order for recess, I be permitted to speak for 2 minutes as in morning business.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as part of the request of the Senator from Missouri, I be allowed to speak for up to 12 minutes. At the conclusion of the 12 minutes, I will call up an amendment.

Mrs. LINCOLN. I ask unanimous consent to be able to address the Senate as in morning business for 7 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The problem is, the previous order says 12:30 so we can attend policy conferences. That runs me past the time for making decisions as a part of that conference.

Is there a way to reduce the time so we can complete statements by 12:45?

Mr. BOND. I just asked for 2 minutes, and I will make it shorter than that.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, the managers have asked Members to offer amendments. I am trying to offer an amendment. I need 11 minutes in order to present the amendment. I am trying to facilitate the progress on the bill. I thought this would be a good opportunity. It is a total of 11 minutes. The conferences don't really begin in earnest until 1 o'clock anyway.

I renew my request to be granted 12 minutes total.

Mrs. LINCOLN. I will certainly try to complete my statement in 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair objects.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:35 p.m., recessed until 2:15 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. INHOFE].

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed in morning business for 7 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LITTLE ROCK NINE AND DAISY BATES

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, mere words seem inadequate to honor the courage of some people and so I am humbled to lend my voice to the chorus of praise for the Little Rock Nine, who today will receive the Congressional Gold Medal, and I will also speak in remembrance of Daisy Bates, a daughter of Arkansas and a civil rights activist.

Receiving the medal today are: Jean Brown Trickery, Carlotta Walls LaNier, Melba Patillo Beals, Terrence Roberts, Gloria Ray Karlmark, Thelma Mothershed Wait, Ernest Green, Elizabeth Eckford, and Jefferson Thomas. As teenagers, when they bravely walked through the doors of Central High School in Little Rock, they led our Nation one step closer to social justice and equality. While it is still painful to look at pictures from that time, where white teens sneered at their black peers, seeing the harsh face of hatred opened our Nation's eyes and propelled the civil rights movement forward.

Before the ''Crisis of 1957,'' as some call the events at Central High, Little Rock was not associated with the pervasive segregation of the Deep South. In fact, Little Rock was considered quite a progressive place and some schools in Arkansas had already integrated following the Brown v. Board of Education decision in May of 1954. So, when nine students sought to integrate Central, few Arkansans envisioned a confrontation with the National Guard at the schools entrance. And I doubt many imagined the long-lasting, profound effects of this confrontation on the entire State. While the country witnessed countless images of this face-off, they were not necessarily aware of the continuing abuse endured by the Little Rock Nine, or the fact that Central High School had to be closed because the atmosphere was so hostile.

Now, we all know that the high school years aren't easy for any teenager. For these men and women, high school was inordinately difficult. In addition to enduring the verbal taunts and even beatings, some had to uproot to other schools in the middle of the school year. Luckily for Carlotta, Thelma, Ernest, Jefferson, and the others, a woman named Daisy Bates entered their lives as a ''guardian angel'' of sorts.

According to Daisy's own accounts and those of the Little Rock Nine, the students would gather each night at the Bates' home to receive guidance and strength. It was through the encouragement of Daisy Bates and her husband, L.C., that these young men and women were able to face the vicious and hateful actions of those so passionately opposed to their attendance at Central. Ironically, Daisy Bates passed away last Thursday. She was laid to rest this morning, the very day the Little Rock Nine will receive their medals. I know she is with us in spirit—acting again as a guardian angel to these brave men and women. This great woman leaves a legacy to our children, our State and our Nation: a love of justice, freedom, and the right to be educated. As a result of her efforts, the newspaper Mrs. Bates and L.C. published was forced to close. She and L.C. were threatened with bombs and guns. They were hanged in effigy by segregationists. But Daisy Bates persevered. She did all this, withstood these challenges, because she loved children and she loved her country. She had an internal fire, instilled in her during a childhood spent in Huttig, AR. And this strong character shone through as she willingly took a leadership role to battle the legal and political inequities of segregation in our state and the nation.

Many have called that confrontation at Central High an historic moment, a pivotal moment, a defining moment. But it was more than just one moment. When these nine men and women walked into Central High School, they opened more than a door, they opened the flood gates. For them and for the rest of our country, the battle didn't end at the schoolhouse steps. Their struggle lasted for years and, in reality, it still continues. My husband and I are both products of an integrated public school system in Arkansas. We are personally grateful to the Little Rock Nine for making our school experience rich with diversity. I truly value the lifelong lessons that I learned at an early age and I might not have had the wonderful privilege of studying with children of all races were it not for the Little Rock Nine. There is still much work to be done to bring complete civil rights and equality to our Nation.

Today, as we pause to remember Daisy Bates and to honor the Little Rock Nine, I hope we will be renewed and refreshed in or efforts. I'm encouraged by the words of Daisy Bates' niece, Sharon Gaston, who said, ''Just don't let her work be in vain. There's plenty of work for us to do.''I hope my colleagues will join me in extending appreciation and commendation to the Little Rock Nine. And in remembering a matriarch of the civil rights movement, Daisy Gaston Bates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. L. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as in morning business for up to 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The distinguished Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for up to 10 minutes.

Mr. L. CHAFEE. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. L. CHAFEE and Mr. JEFFORDS pertaining to the introduction of S. 1891 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senator BINGAMAN and I be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes as in morning business for the purposes of introduction of an important bill.

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, I did not hear the request. What was it?

Mr. DOMENICI. Senator BINGAMAN and I want to introduce a bill that is very historic to New Mexico, and we would like to each speak for about 5 minutes on it. We do not ask for any action. It will be referred to its appropriate committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New Mexico.

(The remarks of Mr. DOMENICI and Mr. BINGAMAN pertaining to the introduction of S. 1892 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

Mr. SCHUMER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendment be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. AKAKA. I ask unanimous consent to be given 10 minutes as in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. AKAKA pertaining to the introduction of S. 1888 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAPO). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard. The clerk will continue the call of the roll.

The legislative clerk continued the call of the roll.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

REJECTING THE DAKOTA WATER RESOURCES ACT

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I come to the floor to speak about some important legislative matters and to announce to my colleagues I cannot and will not clear a bill called S. 623, the Dakota Water Resources Act, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. It would authorize a half billion dollars to divert additional water from the Missouri River system for additional uses, including transfer to the Cheyenne and Red River systems. We cannot and will not tolerate the diversion of water. This is strongly opposed by the Governor of my State, by the State of Minnesota, by Taxpayers for Common Sense, and a whole list of environmental groups including the National Wildlife Federation, the Audubon Society, Friends of the Earth and American Rivers. The Canadian Government opposes it, the Governor of Minnesota and the Minnesota DNR oppose it.

I understand why the Dakota Senators want to fight for this. It would be a tremendous boon for their States. But I am not going to be blackmailed because 52 other unrelated bills are being held up over this matter. There are strong substantive objections to this bill. It is not appropriate in this process to try to ram this through, to try to steal water from the Missouri River.

I serve notice on my colleagues, if they have a problem because their bills are being held up in an attempt to blackmail me, it is not going to work. We have worked in good faith with the Senators from North Dakota in the past, helping them with their problems, but I do not intend to be blackmailed into allowing diversion of the Missouri River water.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon?

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 10 minutes as in morning business. If they have a consent agreement worked out, then I will hold off.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEAHY. Reserving the right to object, I shan't object.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. LEAHY. I said I shan't object.

Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I noticed Senator GRASSLEY, who worked very hard on this bill, is trying to get a consent agreement. I will hold off if he is ready to go forward. Otherwise, I will proceed because I have the floor.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Take 5 minutes?

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I gather the consent agreement is not worked out. I did ask consent for the right to speak up to 10 minutes. I gather they can work things out during that period of time.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I ask unanimous consent the Senator from Oregon have 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Senator from Oregon has 5 minutes.

SENIOR PRESCRIPTION INSURANCE COVERAGE EQUITY ACT

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. President, I have been coming to the floor for a number of days now in an effort to try to get a focus back on this prescription drug issue which seems to involve a lot of finger pointing and a lot of partisan bickering. As part of that effort, I have been urging seniors to send in copies of their prescription drug bills. Just as this poster says, the senior can send in a copy of the prescription drug bill, and write to each of us in the Senate here in Washington, DC.

I have been actually coming to the floor and reading some of these bills for a number of weeks. Just in the last couple of days, I heard from a woman in Portland—she is 84; she has diabetes and a heart condition. She has only Social Security to support herself. She is spending over a third of that Social Security check every month on prescription drugs. She is now at a point where it is hard to pay the taxes on her home.

I heard from another gentleman recently. He has a monthly Social Security check of $633. The cost of his drugs is $644 a month. He is spending more for his prescription drugs each month than he is actually getting in income. So every month this senior is having to choose between food and fuel and fuel and health care. So as a result of this effort to get from seniors copies of their prescription drug bills, we are hearing about the kind of suffering that seniors are enduring around this country.

Senator OLYMPIA SNOWE and I have a bipartisan prescription drug bill. It would cover all senior citizens on an ability-to-pay basis. More than 50 Senators of both political parties are now on record as supporting a funding plan for this legislation. I know other Senators have approaches they would like to try. What is important is that we get a bipartisan focus on this issue. Every public opinion poll shows seniors and families across this country are having difficulty making ends meet when it comes to the high cost of essential health care services.

Our approach is marketplace oriented. There are not price controls. It is not one size fits all. The Snowe-Wyden legislation is called SPICE, the Senior Prescription Insurance Coverage Equity Act. It is designed to deal with the double whammy our seniors are facing on their prescriptions. First, Medicare does not cover the drugs they need and, second, when a senior citizen walks into a drug store, in effect that senior is subsidizing the big buyers, the health maintenance organizations, and other health plans that are able to get discounts.

So seniors have this double whammy now in front of them when it comes to their prescriptions. I hope more will, as these posters indicate, send us copies of their prescription drug bills. I think on the basis of these bills that we are getting from seniors across the country—each of us in the Senate here in Washington, DC—we can bring about bipartisan support to actually respond to the needs of the seniors.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Senate? The Senator is addressing the Senate. May we have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we still do not have order. May we have order in the Senate? You may have to rap that gavel to be heard.

Mr. WYDEN. Thank you, Mr. President. The Senator from West Virginia has been a great ally of the Nation's older people, and I very much appreciate his thoughtfulness. I believe my time is almost up.

I intend to keep coming to the floor of the Senate to read from these bills that we are getting from the Nation's senior citizens. We have 54 Members of the Senate already on record as having voted for a specific plan to fund a prescription drug benefit for older people. We can do this in a bipartisan way. We have the chairman of the Aging Committee, Senator GRASSLEY, who has led our efforts on the committee on so many issues.

I am going to keep coming back to the floor and read from these bills. Again and again, we are hearing from seniors who cannot afford important drugs such as their diabetes medicines.

I will wrap up by saying, when I am asked the question whether our Nation can afford prescription drug coverage, my response is we cannot afford not to cover prescriptions.

A lot of these drugs help seniors stay healthy, keep their blood pressure down, or help to reduce cholesterol. I have cited previously an anticoagulant drug. It costs senior citizens about $1,000 a year. With those kinds of medicines, we can help prevent strokes that involve expenses of more than $100,000.

I am going to keep coming back to this floor to focus on the needs of seniors. We ought to do this in a bipartisan way. That is what is behind the Snowe-Wyden legislation. A lot of our colleagues have other ideas for addressing this issue.

As this poster says, I hope seniors will continue to send copies of their prescription drug bills to us in the Senate, Washington, DC.

I will keep coming to this floor until we can get the bipartisan action we need that provides real relief for the Nation's older people.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. FEINGOLD, now be recognized to offer his amendment No. 2748, and he be recognized for up to 12 minutes for general debate on the amendment. I further ask consent that the amendment be laid aside, with a vote occurring on or in relation to the amendment at 5 o'clock, with no second-degree amendment in order prior to the vote. I further ask consent that votes occur on or in relation to the following two amendments in sequence at 5 o'clock, with no second-degree amendments in order prior to the votes, and there be 4 minutes for explanation prior to each vote. Those amendments are No. 2521 offered by Senator DURBIN and No. 2754 offered by Senator DODD. I further ask consent that following the sequencing of the amendments, Senator SCHUMER then be recognized to call up an amendment and to speak for up to 2 minutes and the amendment then be laid aside.

I further ask unanimous consent that the time between now and 5 o'clock be equally divided in the usual form. I further ask consent when the Senate resumes consideration of S. 625 tomorrow, I be recognized to call up our amendment No. 2771 on which there will be a 4-hour time limit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, if I could ask my friend, the manager of this bill, it is my understanding that the time between now and 5 o'clock would be evenly divided between the majority and minority?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. REID. During that period of time, Senators DODD and DURBIN would be able to speak on those two amendments?

Mr. GRASSLEY. That is right.

Mr. REID. Also, during that same period of time, it is my understanding—for example, Senator SCHUMER wanted to offer amendments during that period of time. He would be allowed to do that?

Mr. GRASSLEY. We have it stated here.

Mr. REID. After the votes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. After the votes.

Mr. REID. We want Senator SCHUMER to use some of the time of Senator DODD and Senator DURBIN prior to the 5 o'clock vote.

Mr. GRASSLEY. To answer your question with a further question, this would be to call up, spend a little bit of time explaining them, and lay them aside?

Mr. REID. That is right.

Further, Mr. President, I ask my friend from Iowa, Senator FEINGOLD, I am told, was not expecting a vote tonight.

Is that true?

Mr. FEINGOLD. That is correct.

Mr. REID. He was not expecting a vote on his amendment tonight. So unless there is some reason the majority believes a vote should go forward on that, Senator FEINGOLD would prefer not to go forward with the vote tonight. So we would still have the two votes on the Durbin and Dodd amendments at 5 o'clock.

Mr. GRASSLEY. We will modify the request accordingly.

Mr. DODD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Reserving the right to object, just so I understand it correctly, the two amendments that have been debated are the Durbin and Dodd amendments. We have debated those two amendments. This unanimous consent request, Mr. President, if I understand it correctly, would allow us some additional time to debate those two amendments between now and 5 o'clock, but the only amendments to be voted on at 5 o'clock are the Durbin and Dodd amendments?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. DODD. However, if other amendments were to be debated or raised for purposes of debate, and then laid aside, the manager of the bill is suggesting that would be allowable in the unanimous consent request?

Mr. GRASSLEY. We are suggesting for the Schumer amendment, according to the agreement, because the other side of the aisle had suggested in the preliminary negotiations that we had on this—negotiations which fell through—that it was very necessary to have a lot of time to devote to debate these amendments on which we had not had votes.

Mr. DODD. Right.

Mr. GRASSLEY. And we had not had debate on them either. So Members on that side of the aisle would be secure that they had an opportunity to thoroughly debate their amendments, that is why we reserved this time.

Mr. DODD. Further reserving the right to object.

Mr. REID. If I could say to my friend from Connecticut, we also have a subsequent unanimous consent request that we expect to propose, once we get this done, which would allow the Senator from Connecticut to offer an amendment that we talked about earlier today.

Mr. SCHUMER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to clarify with either the Senator from Iowa or the ranking minority whip, I would be allowed to offer my amendments in the next hour and a half?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. SCHUMER. And would be allowed to debate them, if time permitted, given how much time the Senators from Connecticut and Illinois took on their amendments; is that correct?

Mr. GRASSLEY. It says here you shall have up to 2 minutes on the amendment, then lay it aside.

Mr. REID. I say to my friend from Iowa, that was contemplating his offering them tonight after the 5 o'clock votes. I do not know if we are going to be able to use all of our time, which is approximately 75 minutes, on these two amendments. It would leave Senator SCHUMER time to offer his amendments and talk under the minority's allotted time.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I think it would be fair, for the purpose of our responding to the desires of your side to have time for your folks who are offering the amendments to have adequate time, that we not let the Senator from New York go beyond what we have agreed to, or then I am going to be subject to criticism at 5 o'clock that somebody on your side did not get enough time to offer their amendment.

Mr. DODD. That is good. Let's go.

Mr. SCHUMER. So just clarifying, in other words, if the Senator from Connecticut and if the Senator from Illinois have extra time, we could debate the amendments that I would now offer; is that correct?

Mr. DODD. Fine.

Mr. SESSIONS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Reserving the right to object, will this mean we will have an opportunity this afternoon for debate by those who would be opposed to those amendments?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes. We will have equal time on our side for this Senator to allocate to you.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request, as modified?

Mr. SCHUMER. Those are the amendments I had asked for, not just one?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes. Those are the amendments you spoke to me about this morning, banking amendments?

Mr. SCHUMER. Correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, another request. After the 5 p.m. votes, on behalf of the prime sponsor of the pending second-degree amendment, No. 2518, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment in order for the Senator from Texas, Mrs. HUTCHISON, to offer a second-degree amendment.

Mr. REID. If I may interrupt my friend from Iowa, we just received a phone call that we are going to have to wait a minute on that. So let's get started on the rest of it.

Mr. GRASSLEY. OK. I will withhold and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2748

(Purpose: To provide for an exception to a limitation on an automatic stay under section 362(b) of title 11, United States Code, relating to evictions and similar proceedings to provide for the payment of rent that becomes due after the petition of a debtor is filed, and for other purposes)

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, in a few minutes I will offer amendment No. 2748. This amendment concerns section 311 of the bill, which provides a complete exemption from the automatic stay for eviction of proceedings.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is advised this requires the Senator to offer his amendment first and then begin debate.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I would be happy to do that.

I ask unanimous consent to set aside the pending amendments so I may call up amendment No. 2748.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. FEINGOLD] proposes an amendment numbered 2748.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I ask unanimous consent further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 108, line 15, strike ''; and'' and insert a semicolon.

Beginning on page 108, strike line 18 and all that follows through page 109, line 7, and insert the following:

''(23) under subsection (a)(3), of the commencement or continuation of any eviction, unlawful detainer action, or similar proceeding by a lessor against a debtor involving residential real property—

''(A) on which the debtor resides as a tenant under a rental agreement; and

''(B) with respect to which—

''(i) the debtor fails to make a rent payment that initially becomes due under the rental agreement or applicable State law after the date of filing of the petition, if the lessor files with the court a certification that the debtor has not made a payment for rent and serves a copy of the certification to the debtor; or

''(ii) the debtor's lease has expired according to its terms and the lessor intends to personally occupy that property, if the lessor files with the court a certification of such facts and serves a copy of the certification to the debtor;

''(24) under subsection (a)(3), of the commencement or continuation of any eviction, unlawful detainer action, or similar proceeding by a lessor against a debtor involving residential real property, if during the 1-year period preceding the filing of the petition, the debtor—

''(A) commenced another case under this title; and

''(B) failed to make a rent payment that initially became due under an applicable rental agreement or State law after the date of filing of the petition for that other case; or

''(25) under subsection (a)(3), of an eviction action based on endangerment of property or the use of an illegal drug, if the lessor files with the court a certification that the debtor has endangered property or used an illegal drug and serves a copy of the certification to the debtor.''; and

(4) by adding at the end of the flush material at the end of the subsection the following: ''With respect to the applicability of paragraph (23) or (25) to a debtor with respect to the commencement or continuation of a proceeding described in that paragraph, the exception to the automatic stay shall become effective on the 15th day after the lessor meets the filing and notification requirements under that paragraph, unless the debtor takes such action as may be necessary to address the subject of the certification or the court orders that the exception to the automatic stay shall not become effective or provides for a later date of applicability.''.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, my amendment would limit the reach of section 311 of the bill, which I believe is far too broad. I think it is too harsh a solution for the limited abuse that its sponsors say they are trying to address.

Since the Bankruptcy Code was enacted, the automatic stay that becomes effective upon the filing of a bankruptcy petition has always prohibited a landlord from evicting a tenant unless the landlord obtains permission from the bankruptcy court—what is called ''relief from the stay.'' The stay serves several purposes. In chapter 13, a tenant has a right to assume a lease and to cure a default by paying the accumulated back rent. In chapter 7, the stay was intended to provide the debtor a short ''breathing spell.'' Breathing room is especially helpful to debtors who want to remain in their homes. In many cases, when a chapter 7 debtor is relieved of other debts, he or she can use this brief period to catch up on the rent and avoid eviction.

The right to avoid eviction by filing bankruptcy is obviously of great importance to tenants who at the very point when they have undertaken the difficult and draining bankruptcy experience would otherwise suffer the additional hardships of moving and having to find new housing. And then you have tenants in rent-controlled or rent-stabilized apartments, who lose valuable property rights if they are evicted. Of course, an eviction would normally doom any hope of the tenant completing a chapter 13 repayment plan or getting much benefit from the fresh start bankruptcy is intended to provide.

I understand that the applicability of the automatic stay to eviction proceedings has come under attack because of abuses. This is primarily due to the practice of debtors in a few cities, especially Los Angeles, of filing bankruptcy cases, sometimes repeatedly, solely for the purpose of delaying eviction and, in effect, ''living rent free.'' these debtors are often aided by nonattorney bankruptcy petition preparers and file pro se. I have seen the advertisements by some of these unscrupulous individuals, and I deplore this kind of abuse as much as anyone does.

But to address this limited problem of abuse, what S. 625 does is totally eliminate the automatic stay for tenants.

In fact, the bill contains an even more sweeping provision than the language adopted in the conference report last year and contained in the House bill this year.

The problem of abusive bankruptcy filings by tenants in a few jurisdictions can be addressed by more limited, carefully targeted provisions. First, we can cut a whole area of abuse by simply lifting the stay in cases where there are repeat bankruptcy filings. My amendment includes that. These abuses inspired this amendment and they also point to its underlying goal: to eliminate the possibility that debtors can use the bankruptcy law to live ''recent free'' after they file. I agree that we should not let tenants take advantage of the bankruptcy laws to live ''rent free.'' But if a debtor is able to put together enough money to pay rent during the pendency of the bankruptcy, that goal is satisfied. Certainly, the landlord is not losing anything financially by allowing the tenant to stay.

If the landlord again begins collecting rent on the apartment after a bankruptcy filing, it is in the same position as it would be if it evicted the debtor and began collecting rent from a new tenant. So under my amendment, relief from the automatic stay is only available if the debtor fails to pay rent that comes due after the bankruptcy filing.

I also believe that it is important to keep the bankruptcy court involved and aware of the lifting of the stay as it is under current law when a landlord applies for relief from the stay. There does seems to be good reason, however, to provide expedited relief from the stay if the debtor does not pay rent while the proceeding is pending.

So my amendment creates a simple and straightforward process. Once a debtor misses a rent payment after filing for bankruptcy, the landlord can immediately file a certification with the court that the payment has not been received. It must also serve a copy of the certification on the debtor, to make sure that the debtor is aware that the landlord intends to seek to have the stay lifted. After that certification is filed and served, the debtor has 15 days to cure the default. The exemption from the stay will become effective 15 days after the certification is filed and served, unless the court orders otherwise. And one reason for the court to order otherwise is that the rent has been paid.

This certification and expedited exemption process also applies to evictions based on property damage or illegal drug use. By giving discretion to the court to delay or stop the eviction proceeding from going forward, the amendment protects against these provisions being abused by landlords. We don't want landlords alleging property damage for the most minor scratches on the wall in order to take advantage of these expedited procedures.

The expedited procedures also apply to one other situation, which the Senator from Alabama raised during our consideration of this amendment in the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from Alabama sketched out a hypothetical situation where a landlord who has rented his or her own house or apartment to someone wants to move back in after the expiration of the lease. Under the amendment that I offered in committee, the landlord could theoretically be prevented from moving back in to his or her own house if the tenant files for bankruptcy and keeps paying rent.

I think the Senator from Alabama raised a good point in committee, so I have addressed it in this amendment. Again, the underlying goal is to allow tenants the benefits of the automatic stay as long as landlords are no worse off. In the usual case of a landlord who would simply rent to someone else after an eviction, renewed and continuous payment of rent after the bankruptcy filing protects the financial interests of the landlord. But in the case sketched out by the Senator from Alabama, landlords have other rights, namely the right to reoccupy their own homes, that we need to protect as well.

So my amendment contains an additional circumstance in which a landlord can seek expedited relief from the stay—when the lease has expired according to its terms and the landlord intends to occupy the property after the eviction. Once again, the landlord must simply certify that these circumstances exist and 15 days later, the stay is lifted, unless the tenant demonstrates to the court that the certification is erroneous.

It should be remembered that this amendment does not effect the landlord's ability to seek relief from the stay under the procedures provided by current law. Expedited procedures are available for nonpayment of rent after filing for bankruptcy, for evictions based on property damage or drug use, or when a lease has expired and the landlord wishes to reoccupy the property. For all other types of evictions, the landlord may continue to pursue remedies under current law.

As in so many parts of our debate on this bill, the main issue is balance. To the extent there are abuses they should be addressed, but the solutions should be narrowly targeted so that they do not eliminate the rights of honest debtors who need the fresh start that bankruptcy is designed to provide. In this case, I truly believe that the solution is S. 625 for the problem that landlords say they are concerned about goes too far. I am not comfortable with provisions that would kick people out of their apartments even if they can pay rent during the time that they are trying to get their financial house in order. To me that is not constructive, it is punitive. It is not really helping landlords, it is just punishing people who may be trying their very best to keep their heads above water. Shame on us, if we can't see that.

I hope my colleagues will support this modest and balanced amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 2748 be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, in response to the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin, I will not be able to support this amendment, although I do believe he has put some parts in it that make it superior to what had originally been offered in this regard.

I will share with Members some of the reasons I believe we need to reject this amendment and why this is a classic problem with the current bankruptcy law that we need to fix. We haven't had a major reform of bankruptcy law since 1978. It is time for us to look at it to see how it is working out in the real world. Are there abusers? Are there loopholes, with clever lawyers zealously representing their clients able to utilize some of these loopholes and situations to abuse the fair workings of the bankruptcy court?

Remember, a bankruptcy reform bill sets the law for an entire court. That is the court that handles bankruptcy.

Senator GRASSLEY's bill, with this amendment involving landlord/tenant that I helped sponsor, simply clarifies existing law. It simply makes real and more effectual the existing law. The amendment offered by Mr. FEINGOLD changes the current law; it moves us in a direction that will enhance and encourage litigation and delay and undermine the rule of law as we ought to see it in the country. There are some good lawyers out there practicing bankruptcy law. That is all they do. They know how to work the system and work it well.

Under current law, if a landlord files an eviction against a tenant before the bankruptcy petition is filed by the tenant, that eviction can continue. If an eviction is filed by a landlord based on the fact that his lease has terminated—he has a 1-year lease; we are now in month 14, he files to evict the tenant; he can't just go and throw him out physically—he files a lawsuit in State court to evict the tenant, he will prevail in bankruptcy court. That is not the kind of action the bankruptcy court will permanently stay.

What is the problem? Why are we having a problem? The problem is that when a person files for bankruptcy, all litigation is stayed; there is an automatic stay. So if you file for bankruptcy in Federal court, any lawsuits filed against you in the State court system for collection of your debts, including landlord/tenant, are automatically stayed. So what happens is, the landlord has to hire an attorney, send him down to Federal bankruptcy court, at great expense to himself, to file a motion and ask for a hearing to lift the stay and to say to that bankruptcy judge: Judge, we don't need you to stay this eviction case because the person is clearly in violation of his lease; he hasn't paid his rent, and/or the lease is terminated. It is time for him to be removed from his premises. He has to argue that.

Uniformly, the courts will rule in his favor, and he can then take the matter to State court. In State court, the tenant has all the rights and privileges he has always had to defend himself against eviction. He gets a hearing in court. He just doesn't get a double hearing in Federal court and State court.

This is a great cost to the landlords who have to go through this process. It also deals with landlords who have just a few apartment complexes or maybe just one and maybe the lease is coming up and they don't want to just occupy the premises themselves. Maybe they have already executed a lease with another tenant to take over this apartment. All of a sudden they find the tenant won't leave under his lease. Then he files a petition in bankruptcy. The court stays the efforts to evict and months go by. That is the kind of problem we are having.

How does this abuse occur? We have seen advertisements and pulled them from phone books and newspapers. Here is one: ''Seven months free rent.'' It goes on to talk about how you can file bankruptcy—it has 7 calendar months here—and not be evicted for up to 7 months, even though your lease may have already expired. You have a 12-month lease, and that means you can stay there 19 months by the time you can get around to getting somebody removed from the premises, when you may have already agreed with your son, daughter, or some other possible tenant, that they can take over the property at a given time.

The Feingold amendment, as I understand it, would protect the landlord who wanted to move in himself but not from leasing it to somebody else or letting a family member take over the property.

Here is another one to a tenant organization, a flier that was passed out: ''We have more moves, when it comes to preventing your eviction, than Magic Johnson. Call us,'' the law firm says, ''and we will take care of you.'' ''Need more time to move? Stop this eviction from 1 to 6 months.''

And there are others we have seen here, quite a number of those kinds of activities. So I say to you that this is not just an imagined problem; it is very real. And still attorneys are advertising around the country, and they are disrupting legitimate landlord-tenant situations. It is an abuse.

Eventually, under the current law, when they go to bankruptcy court and ask that the stay be lifted so they can continue with their eviction, they always win—but they always lose. They win on the law eventually, but they lose because they have been delayed in taking control of their own property and because they have had to pay an extensive legal fee. This is the kind of thing that is driving people mad who are dealing with bankruptcy on a regular basis. They are coming to us in Congress and saying: JEFF, these things are not healthy; they are frustrating, and they are hurting our ability to commercially operate in an effective way.

So how often does it happen? I would like to read a report from the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Office—just in one county in America. This is what the L.A. County Sheriff's Office said. They estimate that 3,886 residents—3,886—filed for bankruptcy in 1996 alone—in 1 year, in that county—to prevent the execution of a valid court-ordered eviction notice. Think about that. You can even have won your eviction case in court, and an order has been issued to have this person evicted, his or her lease is up, and this stay in bankruptcy stops that.

It goes on to say that 7 percent of the eviction cases handled by the Los Angeles County sheriff's department are stayed as a result of bankruptcy filings. Losses are estimated at nearly $6 million per year. They advertise in many of the publications ''Live Rent Free.'' That is really what has been happening. ''More moves than Magic Johnson'' to prevent a legitimate execution of an eviction order.

Remember, we are not saying a landlord can just go remove somebody. Every State has protection for renters. They have to go to court and get a valid eviction order. Many times, they are entitled to other delays before they can be evicted. So I think that is significant.

Another matter that I think is important is the quote from a judge in the Central District of California who is concerned about these cases. He sees them very frequently. Judge Zurzolo in the Central District of California had this to say about bankruptcy and efforts to delay eviction. This is a quote from his opinion in court:

> The bankruptcy courts are flooded with chapter 7 and chapter 13 bankruptcy cases filed solely for the purpose of delaying unlawful detainer eviction. Inevitably and swiftly following the filing of these bankruptcy cases is the filing of motions for relief of stay by the landlords. They have hired a lawyer and they have to file a motion for relief of stay. These landlords are temporarily thwarted by this abuse of the bankruptcy court system.

This judge calls it an abuse of the system. These relief from stay motions are rarely contested and never lost. That is, the lawyer who filed the bankruptcy rarely even contests them, and never are they ruled against the landlord. It is never ruled against the landlord, but they are filed and delay has already occurred. He says this:

> Bankruptcy courts in our district hear dozens of these stay motions weekly, none of which involve any justiciable conflicts of fact and law.

So it is pretty clear. We have a national problem that ought to be fixed. We can fix it.

What does the current legislation, the bankruptcy reform bill, say about it? It simply says that the automatic stay is not available when an eviction proceeding has already started prior to the filing of a bankruptcy. In other words, if the eviction has started before, you don't get that stay. If an eviction proceeding is based on the fact that the lease is already terminated, you don't get a stay. Otherwise, you would have the same stay. This will stop a lot of wasted effort, a lot of unnecessary costs, a lot of frustration for tenants and those kinds of problems.

I believe this law is good public policy—the way it is written in the Grassley bankruptcy bill—because a bankruptcy court only has control over the assets of the person filing bankruptcy. A lease that has already expired, by its very definition, is not an asset. A lease that has clearly been terminated because of nonpayment of rent is not an asset of the person who is filing bankruptcy. Therefore, the bankruptcy court does not have legal power to control an asset that is not theirs; it is the landlord's. So that is why the courts always rule in favor of the landlord in these cases. The landlord may have another tenant who would want to take over, and that tenant's life may be disrupted if the landlord can't deliver the premises.

In conclusion, the changes suggested in the Feingold amendment alter current law substantially. They allow the tenant to stay in the premises on which the lease has expired and for which they have been in default for lack of payment, or other reasons. This is unacceptable, and it is not sound law. You ought not to have a law that says you can stay in the premises when the lease has expired, for Heaven's sake. This would be the Federal bankruptcy court overruling State law that says when your lease expires, you are out. If we can't have honesty in the effectuation of contracts in America, we are in sad shape. I believe this is a poor amendment and it should not be approved.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, how much time do we have on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 23 minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield 20 minutes to the Senator from North Carolina.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

NOMINATION OF CAROL MOSELEY-BRAUN

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, 4 days ago, on November 5, the Senate Foreign Relations East Asian and Pacific Affairs Subcommittee conducted its hearing on the Moseley-Braun nomination. Since it was a subcommittee meeting and a hearing, I viewed it on television. I have a long practice of giving chairmen and ranking members of our subcommittees free rein in conducting their respective hearings. So I viewed the hearing on television, as I say, and it was a sight to behold.

In fact, what it was was a political rally, lacking only a band and the distribution of free hot dogs, soda pop, and balloons. Last night, the full committee met briefly, almost informally, just outside the Chamber here, and reported the nomination to the Senate, with one dissent. I will let you guess whose dissent that was.

Before I proceed further, I express the sincere hope that the nominee, when confirmed to serve as U.S. Ambassador to New Zealand, will serve diligently, effectively, and honestly. She will be representing the United States, the country of all Americans. For the sake of our country, I pray there will be no further reports of irregularity involving her conduct. In short, I wish her well.

Before the book is closed on the scores of reports regarding the nominee's often puzzling service as a U.S. Senator, I decided a few footnotes were in order. Many citizens from many States all over this country—principally, however, from the Chicago area—have contacted me during the past few weeks. There have been expressions of puzzlement that the President of the United States decided to reverse the clearly expressed judgment of the people of Illinois in the 1998 election. Several speculated over the weekend that the Senate was about to rubber stamp the President's nomination to serve as U.S. Ambassador to New Zealand. After all, the Illinois voters have made the judgment that serious charges of ethical misconduct by Senator Moseley-Braun disqualified her from further representing them in the Senate. Now they say the same Senate is preparing to declare she is qualified to represent all Americans abroad.

I think it important, therefore, that the people of Illinois —indeed, all Americans—be assured before the Senate proceeds that what they are witnessing is by no means an absolution of Ms. Moseley-Braun. What the American people are witnessing is a successful coverup of serious ethical wrongdoing. I am not going to dwell this afternoon on each of the many serious charges that have been raised, such as the continuing mystery of who really paid for her numerous visits to Nigerian dictator Sani Abacha or where Ms. Moseley-Braun's fiance, Kosie Matthews, got the $47,000 downpayment on the Chicago condo. For the record, Mr. Matthews was also her campaign manager and is now conveniently a missing man. Nobody knows where he is.

Whatever happened to the $249,000 the Federal Election Commission cannot account for her in her campaign? Or who was it exactly who paid for several thousand dollars in airfare, luxury hotel bills, and jewelry purchases during her 1992 trip to Las Vegas or the $10,000 in jewelry she purchased on her 1992 trip to Aspen, CO?

In most cases, the Foreign Relations Committee and its legal officer were unable to get to the bottom of these and other matters because Ms. Moseley-Braun has been hiding behind Mr. Matthews. Mr. Matthews, a South African native, has skipped the country and is nowhere to be found.

My purpose today is not to go through the laundry list of Ms. Moseley-Braun's well-known ethical lapses but, rather, to focus on the Clinton administration's culpability in all of this affair. Ms. Moseley-Braun was suspected of serious tax crime by the Internal Revenue Service following her 1992 campaign. According to a report in the New Republic magazine, she had:

> . . . a $6 million-plus war chest for her general election campaign, only $1 million of which was spent on TV advertising. Moreover, her campaign wound up $544,000 in debt.

Where did this money go? The IRS wanted to find out, but the IRS' efforts to investigate allegations that Moseley-Braun had diverted an estimated $280,000 of those campaign funds for personal use and failed to report it as personal income, those allegations were blocked every step of the way by the Clinton Justice Department.

In 1995, the Clinton Justice Department twice refused routine requests by the IRS Criminal Tax Division to convene a grand jury to investigate the charges against Ms. Moseley-Braun. The IRS had credible evidence that, among other things, she had spent some $70,000 in campaign funds on designer clothes, $25,000 on two jeeps, $18,000 on jewelry, $12,000 on stereo equipment, and some $64,000 on luxury vacations in Europe, Hawaii, and Africa.

Without a grand jury, Government investigators were denied the subpoena power to get at the key documents they had to have to prove their case. The Clinton Justice Department refused repeated requests to convene a grand jury.

Refusing such a request is highly unusual, according to numerous former IRS and Justice Department officials who made clear that the Justice Department's routine in such matters was to impanel grand juries so the IRS could continue gathering evidence. One former official with the Criminal Tax Division of the Justice Department, a Mr. John Bray, called it virtually unheard of to deny such a request. A former head of the Criminal Tax Division, Cono Namorato, commented:

> They [that is to say, the IRS] don't need to show much. . . . By and large, if it is requested, it is approved.

Another described the relationship between the Justice Department and the IRS this way:

> The Justice Department basically sees the IRS as their client, and as their attorney they should do as requested.

But in Moseley-Braun's case, this routine request from the client was denied, not once but twice.

Then the Foreign Relations Committee requested all of the documents from both IRS and the Department of Justice on this matter. Contrary to declarations by Ms. Moseley-Braun, the documents do not absolve her of wrongdoing. What the documents prove is that these serious allegations of ethical misconduct were never properly examined because the investigation was blocked by political appointees at the Justice Department, no doubt on instructions from the White House. Interestingly enough, the official at the Justice Department who made the decision, Loretta Argrett, was a Moseley-Braun supporter who had made a modest contribution to the Moseley-Braun 1992 campaign and who had a picture of Ms. Moseley-Braun on her office wall. Senator Moseley-Braun even presided over Ms. Argrett's confirmation in 1993.

It is noteworthy that the White House had to spend more than a week digging around in the bowels of the Justice Department to find the documents requested by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. That is compelling evidence in and of itself because it demonstrates that the administration failed to properly examine the charges against this nominee when the charges were presented by the IRS in 1995. Again, the administration demonstrably failed even to review the charges in 1999 before sending her nomination up to the Senate.

It occurs to me that perhaps that was not unintentional. Perhaps the folks in the administration knew exactly what they were doing. Perhaps they hoped the spectacle of a public dispute between JESSE HELMS and Carol Moseley-Braun would serve the base political interests of the Clinton administration.

Well, Mr. President, I am not going to give them the spectacle they have been hoping to provoke. It may be that history, in a strange way, is now repeating itself. It is of interest to me that back in 1943, the then United States Senator Josiah William Bailey of North Carolina strongly opposed a proposal that President Franklin Delano Roosevelt nominate FDR's press secretary, a former Raleigh newspaper editor named Jonathan Daniels, as nominee to go—where? To New Zealand as United States Ambassador. Jonathan Daniels was a son of Josephus Daniels who had founded the Raleigh News and Observer many years earlier. Josephus once served as Secretary of the Navy and had chosen Franklin D. Roosevelt to be his assistant. Later on Josephus Daniels served as Ambassador to Mexico, nominated by President Roosevelt.

Jonathan Daniels repeatedly pleaded with FDR to nominate him to be Ambassador to ''somewhere'' so that he could emulate his father Josephus, but FDR told Jonathan Daniels that he would nominate him to be an Ambassador only if Jonathan persuaded Senator Bailey to approve the nomination. The fly in the ointment was that Jonathan Daniels, prior to going to Washington as press aide to FDR, had written a series of abusive, mean editorials about Senator Bailey. Anyhow, Jonathan decided that he had nothing to lose by going to Senator Bailey's office to plead his case. Senator Bailey flatly rejected the idea of Jonathan Daniels' going anywhere as Ambassador—and flat-out told Jonathan so. To which Jonathan Daniels played his last card, pleading:

> Well, Senator, I would have thought that you wouldn't mind my being sent to New Zealand—it's on the other side of the world, you know.

To which U.S. Senator Josiah William Bailey slowly shook his head and said:

> Yes, and it ain't fur enough.

Mr. President, you are free to draw your own conclusion. I thank you, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I come to the floor to offer an amendment on the bankruptcy bill, but in light of the statement that was just entered into the record by Senator HELMS, in reference to my former colleague, Senator Carol Moseley-Braun, I am constrained to respond.

Let me say at the outset, I fully support President Clinton's decision to nominate Senator Carol Moseley-Braun to continue to serve this Nation as our Ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa. I was happy to appear before the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee last Friday and to introduce her. I believe she received a fair hearing that day, and those of us who were there came away with the impression that, when her name is called to be appointed Ambassador, she will receive a strong bipartisan vote of the Senate. But I have to say some of the suggestions that have been made in the previous statement at least need to be cleared up for the record.

Running for the Senate subjects you to all sorts of inquiry and investigation, not only by your opponent, who will look at you in the harshest terms, but by the press and any other inquiring mind. Those of us who subject ourselves to that process understand it is going to be tough. Senator Carol Moseley-Braun has done that repeatedly throughout her career, running for offices at the legislative level, the county level, and twice as a statewide candidate in Illinois. Not surprisingly during that period of time there have been many charges that have been thrown at her. Many of those charges were just repeated today on the floor of the Senate. I might remind my colleagues in the Senate, they are just that. They are charges; they are not proven.

I might also say to my colleagues in the Senate, those who view this body as somehow a closed club that takes care of its own ought to take a look at what happened with this nomination, because what Senator Carol Moseley-Braun was subjected to during the course of this process is a standard which, frankly, may exceed a standard imposed on any other person who comes up for an ambassadorship to a post such as New Zealand. In other words, she was subjected to more rigorous examination and questioning than virtually any person off the street nominated by the President.

It may surprise some people to think a former United States Senator would go through that process, but I am happy to report, as the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee learned last Friday, after Senator Carol Moseley-Braun went through an extensive background check at the request of the White House, after her campaign records were reviewed in detail, after all the charges put in the RECORD on this floor were investigated, after the Internal Revenue Service and Department of Justice and FBI were called in and asked point blank if she was guilty of wrongdoing, they all concluded there was no proof of wrongdoing, and they recommended her name to the President, who then submitted it to the Senate.

Now we are in a position where many of those same charges, with no basis in fact, have been repeated again on the Senate floor. That is truly unfortunate. Let me address two of them. No. 1, as a Senator serving in this body, she visited Nigeria and a leader there of whom the United States did not approve.

I will have to tell you I did not approve of that leader either, but no one has ever questioned the right of any Senator or any Member of the House to decide to take foreign travel and visit a foreign leader without the approval of the State Department. I think, frankly, that is all well and good. When the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Senator HELMS, chose to visit General Pinochet in Chile, that was his right. Many people in the United States might question it, but I do not question his decision to do that. That is something for him to defend to the voters of North Carolina.

When my Governor in the State of Illinois decided 2 weeks ago to visit with the dictator leader in Cuba, Fidel Castro, again it was his right. In fact, I supported his visit. I thought it was important.

So to bring up this red herring of a visit to Nigeria while she served in the Senate is to hold Carol Moseley-Braun to a different standard than we hold our own colleagues and other leaders across the Nation. I don't think that is fair.

Second, on the talk about campaign finances and whether she misspent them, the record of the committee tells the story. When an auditor came from the FEC and looked at detailed records from the Carol Moseley-Braun campaign in 1992 and went through the $8 million in expenditures in that campaign, they were able to identify $311 unaccounted for.

Mr. President, I make a great effort to try to have a full accounting, as required by law. I am sure every Senator does. But $311 out of $8 million? To make of that some sort of a disgrace or scandal is to exaggerate it beyond recognition. Those are the charges flung again at Senator Carol Moseley-Braun on the Senate floor.

That is a sad occurrence and one which I wish had not occurred. Frankly, I hope the Members of the Senate, before we adjourn today, have a chance to vote on giving our colleague a chance to serve because we are not only sending an able representative to represent the United States with one of our great allies, New Zealand, we are sending to New Zealand evidence the American dream is still alive because Carol Moseley-Braun—and I will readily concede she is not only my former colleague but my friend—and her public life are a testament to what America stands for. Born in a segregated hospital facility in Chicago, her mother, a medical technician in the same place, her father a Chicago policeman, she worked her way through college to not only earn a degree but earn a law degree from the University of Chicago, to serve for 5 years as an assistant U.S. attorney and prosecutor, to become the first African American woman to ever serve as a member of the leadership in the Illinois General Assembly, to become the first African American woman ever elected countywide in Cook County, and the first African American woman in this century to be elected to the Senate.

Time and time again, every step of her life has crushed down another barrier so that those who follow her will have a better opportunity.

Now she joins some four other African American women who serve as our Ambassadors should the Senate decide to give her that chance. As she journeys to New Zealand—and I hope she will soon—she will bring with her not only a wealth of public service but a story about how the American dream can be realized if you believe in yourself and if you believe that equality is more than just a word—it is a principle which guides this great country.

I stand in strong support of Carol Moseley-Braun. I believe she will be an excellent Ambassador, and I believe the vote that comes out of this Chamber will be strong and bipartisan and put to rest, once and for all, many of the charges and rumors which have been swirling around her nomination over the past several weeks.

Mr. President, I yield the floor to my colleague, the Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. I thank the Senator for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

AMENDMENT NO. 2761

(Purpose: To improve disclosure of the annual percentage rate for purchases applicable to credit card accounts)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, as per the agreement, I call up amendment No. 2761, to be debated for 15 minutes and then laid aside.

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. SANTORUM be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

The Senator from New York [Mr. SCHUMER], for himself and Mr. SANTORUM, proposes an amendment numbered 2761.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . TRUTH IN LENDING DISCLOSURES.

Section 122(c) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1632(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking the current text and inserting the following:

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The information described in paragraphs (1), (3)(B)(i)(I), (4)(A), and (4)(C)(i)(I) of section 1637(c) of this title and the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases shall—

''(A) subject to paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, be disclosed in the form and manner which the Board shall prescribe by regulations; and

''(B) be placed in a conspicuous and prominent location on or with any written application, solicitation, or other document or paper with respect to which such disclosure is required.''

For purposes of this subsection, the term ''long-term annual percentage rate for purchases'' means the highest nondefault annual percentage rate for purchases applicable to the credit card account offered, solicited or advertised, calculated at the time of mailing (in the case of an application or solicitation described in paragraph (1) of section 1637(c) of this title) or printing (in the case of an application or solicitation described in paragraphs (3)(B) of section 1637(c) of this title), except that in the case of a credit card account to which an introductory or temporary discounted rate applies, the term ''long-term annual percentage rate for purchases'' means the highest nondefault annual percentage rate for purchases applicable to the credit card account offered, solicited or advertised that will apply after the expiration of the introductory or temporary discounted rate, calculated at the time of mailing (in the case of an application or solicitation described in paragraph (1) of section 1637(c) of this title) or printing (in the case of an application or solicitation described in paragraphs (3)(B) of section 1637(c) of this title.''

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking the current text and inserting the following:

''(2) TABULAR FORMATS FOR CREDIT CARD DISCLOSURES.—

''(A) The long-term annual percentage rate for purchases shall be disclosed on or with a written application or solicitation described in paragraphs (1) or (3)(B) of section 1637(c) of this title in 24-point or larger type and in the form of a table which—

''(i) shall contain a clear and concise heading set forth in the same type size as the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases;

''(ii) shall state the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases clearly and concisely;

'(iii) where the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases is based on a variable rate, shall use the term 'currently' to describe the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases;

''(iv) where the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases is not the only annual percentage rate applicable to the credit card account offered, solicited or advertised, shall include an asterisk placed immediately following the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases; and

''Iv) shall contain no other item of information.

''(B) The information described in paragraphs (1)(A)(ii), 1(A)(iii), (1)(A)(iv), 1(B) and (3)(B)(i)(I) of section 1637(c) of this title shall be disclosed on or with a written application or solicitation described in paragraph (1) of section 1637(c) of this title or a written application or solicitation as large as or larger than 8.5 inches in width and 11 inches in length described in paragraph (3)(B) of section 1637(c) of this title in 12-point type and in the form of a table which—

''(i) shall appear separately from and immediately beneath the table described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph;

''(ii) shall contain clear and concise headings set forth in 12-point type;

''(iii) shall provide a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each such heading; and

''(iv) may list the items required to be included in this table in a different order than the order set forth in paragraph (1) of section 1637 of this title, subject to the approval of the Board.''

''(C) The information described in paragraphs (1)(A)(ii), (1)(A)(iii), (1)(A)(iv), (1)(B) and (3)(B)(i)(I) of section 1637(c) of this title shall be disclosed on or with a written application or solicitation smaller than 8.5 inches in width and 11 inches in length described in paragraph (3)(B) of section 1637(c) of this title in 12-point type and shall—

''(i) be set forth separately from and immediately beneath the table described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph; and

''(ii) not be disclosed in the form of a table.

''(D) Notwithstanding the inclusion of any of the information described in paragraph (1)(A)(i) of section 1637(c) of this title in the table described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the information described in paragraph (1)(A)(i) of section 1637(c) of this title shall be disclosed on or with a written application or solicitation described in paragraphs (1) or (3)(B) of section 1637(c) of this title and shall—

''(i) be set forth in 12-point boldface type;

''(ii) be set forth separately from and immediately beneath the table described in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph or the information described in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, whichever is applicable;

''(iii) not be disclosed in the form of a table; and

''(iv) where the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases is not the only annual percentage rate applicable to the credit card account offered, solicited or advertised, be preceded by an asterisk set forth in 12-point boldface type.''

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(3) TABULAR FORMAT FOR CHARGE CARD DISCLOSURES.—

''(A) In the regulations prescribed under paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection, the Board shall require that the disclosure of the information described in paragraphs (4)(A) and (4)(C)(i)(I) of section 1637(c) of this title shall, to the extent the Board determines to be practicable and appropriate, be in the form of a table which—

''(i) contains clear and concise headings for each item of such information; and

''(ii) provides a clear and concise form for stating each item of information required to be disclosed under each such heading.''

''(B) In prescribing the form of the table under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Board may—

''(i) list the items required to be included in the table in a different order than the order set forth in paragraph (4)(A) of section 1637(c) of this title; and

''(ii) employ terminology which is different than the terminology which is employed in section 1637(c) of this title if such terminology conveys substantially the same meaning.''

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCHUMER. I yield for a question.

Mr. GRASSLEY. The Senator's 15 minutes are coming within the framework of our voting at 5 o'clock.

Mr. SCHUMER. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Illinois for their courtesy and the Senator from Nevada for his diligent work in seeing we all get some time.

I am offering an amendment, along with the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. SANTORUM, to do something very basic to the bankruptcy bill, and that is to make credit card disclosure easier to find, easier to read, and easier to understand. I offer this amendment to achieve a goal I share with the sponsors of this bill—seeing fewer American consumers declare bankruptcy.

I believe, however, that real bankruptcy reform must address one of the root causes of consumer indebtedness, and that is, abusive consumer credit industry practices. Having saturated the middle market, credit card companies, of course, search ever harder for new users. Their search for new customers leads inevitably to those who have the least ability to repay and are most likely to wind up mired in debt.

The Federal Reserve reports that credit card solicitations skyrocketed to a shocking $3.5 billion in 1998, a 15-percent increase from the previous year. That represents an average of 13 solicitations per year—more than one a month for every man, woman, and child in the United States. That is 12 a year for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

To reach these new customers, the credit card companies are in a race to the bottom oftentimes to come up with misleading marketing gimmicks and hidden fees.

The whole purpose of this bill is to say that those who get deeply into debt should have to repay their debts, even if they are poor. I understand that. I do not agree with certain provisions of it, but I understand it. We can all agree that we ought to have full and broad disclosure before someone signs up for a credit card so they do not get mired in that debt. That is not a Democratic or Republican principle, it is an Adam Smith free market principle: full information.

I am hopeful this bipartisan Schumer-Santorum amendment will meet the approval of this body and improve the bill.

Let me show my colleagues what is happening. Credit card accounts have become more complicated than ever. Look at this credit card solicitation. It is blown up significantly from its actual size. Count the number of rates applicable to the account. There is a teaser rate, 3.9 percent on introductory purchases and balance transfers. That is the only thing that jumps out at you. An unknowing consumer, someone not really trained in legalese, would think that is the annual rate, but it is not. Here are the other rates mired in this very complicated language: a 9.9 percent long-term rate on purchases and balance transfers; 19.99 percent on cash advances; 9.99 penalty rate, 19 and 22 percent penalty rates on balances in the long run.

My colleagues, that is not disclosure; that is an advance math problem on a college entrance exam. I have had a deep and abiding interest in credit card disclosure.

In 1988, as a House Member, I authored the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act. The act required that certain information about a credit card account be disclosed: the annual percentage rate, the annual fee, the minimum finance charge, the method of computing the balance for purchases.

The act required that this amendment be disclosed in a table, the so-called Schumer box. By putting the information in the table and mandating the table be prominently disclosed, the hope was consumers would be able to understand what the costs of credit truly were. But instead of clarity, they got obfuscation. Because of how the Federal Reserve has interpreted the table, disclosure provisions to the Fair Credit and Charge Card Disclosure Act, the result has not been disclosure, but a hide-the-rate shell game.

Again look at this chart. The only number that stands out is 3.9 percent, and on the solicitation in big white letters on the front is 3.9 percent. If you were looking at this, you would think you are getting a 3.9-percent credit card; 3.9 is the only number in big letters. If you read all the little fine print on the inside, you will see the rate is 10 percent, 19 percent, even 22 percent.

We must correct this. We have seen the disclosure box can be stashed away in places far from prominent—the back page or accompanying scrap of paper. We see the disclosure box can appear in font sizes so small it is virtually unreadable. The disclosure box that appears on these is blown up significantly. In the actual solicitation, the letters are so small that even with my 48-year-old eyes, and getting older every minute, I cannot read them.

Finally, we have seen the box disclosure rate of information has turned out to be a mess. The so-called Schumer box, of which I was proud when it first passed, has not helped the consumer as much as intended. The amendment that Senator SANTORUM and I are offering will restructure the existing disclosure box in the following way:

First, it will create a large, readable, 24-point font table solely for the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases. This is the old card, where all you see is the introductory rate in big letters. This is the new rate, and it is easily seen, 9.99 percent, which would be the annual rate. If there is a teaser rate, a so-called introductory offer rate that is very low, that could be on the credit card, but you do not need a college education or calculus to see the annual rate. It is very important.

Second, beneath the table disclosing the long-term annual percentage rate for purchases, it would mandate another table in standard 12-point font that discloses such items as the grace period for repayment, annual fees, minimum finance charges, transaction fees, and other items that are not required to appear in any disclosure box under current law—cash advance fees, late fees, and over-the-credit limit fees.

Finally, beneath this second table there would be full disclosure on all rates applicable to the credit card account. The poster shows the difference. This one looks as if you have a 3.9-percent rate; this one, the annual rate. Again, we are not limiting the consumer. We are simply providing information. This is good old Adam Smith American competition, and companies will compete for people based on who has the best rates.

It is fair to say consumers will be better off under my amendment, in terms of understanding the true costs of credit.

Senator SANTORUM and I believe that disclosure is the way to go, not putting a cap on, not putting limits on, but simply disclosure—but real disclosure—so that people could understand this.

It will fit on an 8½ by 11 sheet. We do not want the credit card companies to be able to say that it is difficult to put this together. All this information, including the large ''9.9 percent,'' is on an easily understandable sheet.

It is a shame we have to resort to putting font sizes into legislation, but if you look at the old ''Schumer box,'' with all the legalese, you will know that we need it.

Armed with better information, consumers will avoid some of the financial missteps that can send them into bankruptcy. That is a goal we all share.

So I urge my colleagues to support this amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. SANTORUM, and myself. I urge that we could come together, in a bipartisan way, on an amendment that makes good sense, that improves the legislation. And then if someone falls into bankruptcy—which we hope does not happen—at the very least it would mean they knew what they were getting into.

Mr. President, how much time do I have left on the 15 minutes that have been yielded to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. SCHUMER. Six minutes.

Mr. President, I reserve that 6 minutes to wait for the Senator from Pennsylvania to come speak and for me to conclude.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I understand that the Senator from Illinois has yielded 4 minutes to me.

AMENDMENT NO. 2754

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I add my support for the amendment that has been offered by the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. DODD, to address the explosion of credit card debt because students on college campuses are offered credit cards. The amendment, as has been outlined, prohibits credit card companies from giving an individual under the age of 21 a credit card unless the young person has income sufficient to repay the debt or a parent or a guardian, or other family member over the age of 21, to share the liability for the credit card.

The point has been made, but I think it needs to be underlined, that when you get right behind this whole issue, what is happening is that the credit card companies are making these credit cards so available to young people who are attending college that the credit cards are effectively irresistible. The amount of debt that is being run up by these students is escalating into significant figures. What inevitably happens is that the parents are required, by one reason or another, to assume the debt obligation. That is the background, really, on why these efforts are being made by the credit card companies.

What isn't so evident is the kind of turmoil, anxiety, and depression that surrounds this whole atmosphere of student debt. What we found, in the course of the hearings on the Judiciary Committee, in a number of the different presentations that were made while considering the bankruptcy legislation, is that it isn't only the financial obligations that were assumed, but that many of the young people, who had stellar academic records, who were outstanding students in all forms of behavior, who were actually seduced by these credit card obligations and responsibilities, when they found they were unable to free themselves from these kinds of obligations, went into severe depression and into adverse behavior, where the students had tensions in their relationships with their parents, assuming an entirely different chapter in their development. And this is something that is happening with increasing frequency across this country.

The kind of recommendations that the Senator from Connecticut has outlined in the amendment is a very modest and reasonable way of addressing the excesses of this particular phenomenon taking place. This is the place to be able to do it.

I welcome the chance to join with Senator DODD in urging that this particular amendment be adopted. It makes a great deal of sense in terms of the young students in this country. It makes a great deal of sense in terms of their parents, most of whom are hard working, decent parents who get caught up in these obligations, assuming the debts of their children. It puts an extraordinary burden on them as well.

This is a winner for the students and for their parents and for more sensible and responsible bankruptcy legislation.

I reserve the remainder of the time.

Mr. DURBIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 2659 AND 2661, EN BLOC

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to call up amendment No. 2659, regarding credit counseling, and amendment No. 2661, regarding prescreening for debtors between 100 and 150 percent of median income, and to immediately set them aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] proposes amendments numbered 2659 and 2661, en bloc.

The amendments are as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 2659

(Purpose: To modify certain provisions relating to pre-bankruptcy financial counseling)

On page 18, line 5 insert ''(including a briefing conducted by telephone or on the Internet)'' after ''briefing''.

On page 19, line 15, strike ''petition'' and insert ''petition without court approval.''

AMENDMENT NO. 2661

(Purpose: To establish parameters for presuming that the filing of a case under chapter 7 of title 11, United States Code, does not constitute an abuse of that chapter)

On page 7, between line 14 and 15, insert the following:

''unless the conditions described in clause (iA) apply with respect to the debtor.

''(iA) the product of the debtor's current monthly income multiplied by 12—

''(I)(aa) exceeds 100 percent, but does not exceed 150 percent of the national or applicable State median household income reported for a household of equal size, whichever is greater; or

''(bb) in the case of a household of 1 person, exceeds 100 percent but does not exceed 150 percent of the national or applicable State median household income reported for 1 earner, whichever is greater; and

''(II) the product of the debtor's current monthly income (reduced by the amounts determined under clause (ii) (except for the amount calculated under the other necessary expenses standard issued by the Internal Revenue Service and clauses (iii) and (iv) multiplied by 60 is less than the greater of—

''(aa) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims in the case; or

''(bb) $15,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments are set aside.

Mr. DURBIN. How much time is remaining on the debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eleven minutes 30 seconds for that side; 11 minutes for Senator GRASSLEY.

AMENDMENT NO. 2521

Mr. DURBIN. Shortly the Members of the Senate will have a chance to vote on an amendment to which I hope they will give consideration. It is an amendment which addresses a segment of the credit industry which represents the bottom feeders. These are the people who prey on the vulnerable in society. These are the people who try to ensnare vulnerable, frail, elderly, and sick people into literally signing over the only thing they own on Earth—their homes.

You have seen the cases. You have read about them in the papers and seen the exposes on television. They find a widow living alone in her home. They come in and want to sell her some siding or a new roof or new furnace. The next thing you know, she has a second mortgage on her home. The terms of the mortgage are outrageous. She finds herself losing the only thing she has left on Earth—her home. These are so-called ''equity predators.''

I salute the Senator from Iowa, Mr. GRASSLEY, who is the manager of this bill on the Republican side, because he had a hearing in March of 1998 of the Special Committee on Aging of the Senate that was dedicated exclusively to this outrage in the credit industry, that these people would come in and prey on so many vulnerable people.

Let me quote Senator GRASSLEY. I do not know if I have his permission, but I did give him notice that I would read this from the hearing. He said:

> Before we begin, I want to quote a victim—a quote that in my mind sums up what we are all talking about here today. She said the following: ''They did what a man with a gun in a dark alley could not do. They stole my house.''

That is what is happening, time and again, when these unscrupulous creditors and lenders prey on the elderly and people who are less educated and end up taking something away from them that they have saved for their entire lives.

What does my amendment do? My amendment says that if this plays out, if they end up ensnaring some poor person into their trap, so that they stand to lose their home, and ultimately that person has to go bankrupt because of this unscrupulous lender, when they go to bankruptcy court, that same equity creditor cannot take away their home. If that person did not follow the law that requires full disclosure and fair treatment of people who are loaned money, they cannot come to bankruptcy court and end up with the deed to the home of an elderly widow. I think that is simple justice. It was a question before this Senate today as to whether or not, when we talk about abuses by those filing for bankruptcy, we will be equally outraged by abuses by creditors such as these predatory lenders who use our legal system and our bankruptcy court to literally push through processes that take away from people things they have saved for their entire life. They are serial credit predators. They prey on the elderly, the less educated, the frail, and the vulnerable. They are the bottom feeders in the credit industry. My amendment will give my colleagues in the Senate a chance to tell them once and for all, stop this devious conspiracy to go after the elderly in America.

How many people are affected by this? So many that in the State of California they have set up a special fraud unit to go after these predatory lenders.

I am sad to report that as I stand here today, many reputable lenders are opposing my amendment. What does that say about them? If they are opposing my amendment to go after the bad guys, how does that reflect on the good guys in this business? I don't think it tells a very good story.

The groups supporting my amendment include the Consumer Federation of America, the Consumers Union, National Consumer Law Center, the U.S. Public Interest Research Group, the UAW, and others who have decided, as I have, that we should put an end to this once and for all, as is stated in their letter in support of my amendment: As consumers who receive these loans are commonly forced into bankruptcy, it is essential to create a bankruptcy remedy that protects debtors and other honest creditors from the predators who seek to enforce these loans.

Let me give a couple examples of these loans. Lillie Coleman is a resident of New City in Illinois, 68 years old, living on a pension. In comes a person who says: I'll tell you what I will do, Ms. Coleman. I know you own a house. I will consolidate all your debts, and I will lend you $5,000 for home improvement. The next thing you know, she has signed a $65,000 mortgage on the home she owned and had worked for for a lifetime. The next thing you know, they are holding these closings without inviting her. They are not giving her the papers to sign. They have broker's fees that were never disclosed to her. They find out that checks that were supposed to go to her creditors aren't going to creditors. They are finding out basically that there is money missing.

There sits Ms. Coleman with a second mortgage on her home and the prospect of losing her home in her retirement at the age of 68. Those are the people we are talking about. Those are the folks knocking on the doors, ringing the telephone off the hook night and day, sending all these luring mailings to people saying: You can just sign the back of this little check, and the next thing you know, there will be money in your hand.

The next thing you know, there is a new mortgage on your home. And if you miss a payment or if you don't understand the terms, you could lose it.

It didn't just happen in Illinois. It happens all over the place. In fact, it has happened in Utah, two or three cases of balloon payments. Do you know what a balloon payment is? You make the regular monthly payments; everything is going along fine. There is a small clause in the contract that says: At one point in time you had better come up with $49,000 or you lose your home. That is a balloon payment. Many borrowers don't know the details, particularly if they are folks who are elderly. They don't see well. They may not hear well. They think they are doing the right thing. They, of course, have the legal capacity to sign a contract. The next thing you know, they end up with their home on the line. They may end up in bankruptcy court.

What I am saying with this amendment is, we are not going to give them a chance to use the bankruptcy courts of America as a fishing expedition for the well-earned assets of American families.

This amendment was part of the bankruptcy bill we passed last year 97–1. If there is anybody sitting on the floor saying this idea is way too radical, they voted for it last year. They voted for it last year 97–1. It is something that should be part of this bill.

If you are outraged by the lawyers who are ripping off the system, as I see my friend, the Senator from Alabama, on the floor, who brings this up regularly, if you are outraged by those who go to bankruptcy court who shouldn't be there, share your outrage when it comes to these predatory lenders. Join me in passing an amendment that tells them once and for all, you can't use our legal system to continue this deceptive scheme.

We have found in the course of researching this matter that there are several different approaches these predatory lenders use. They engage in practices where they lend somebody money far beyond their ability to repay. They know going in, with a borrower of limited savings and equity in a home, that they can put that borrower on the spot where, in a short period of time, they are going to default.

We know as well that they try to make an arrangement saying: I will tell you what, we will put the siding on the home. We will make the direct payments to the home contractor, and don't you worry about it. The next thing you know, they have signed the mortgage, the home contractor is not paid, and the poor widow finds herself being assaulted in every direction by those who expect to be paid and finds herself in bankruptcy court.

They impose illegal fees, such as prepayment penalties or increased interest rates at default. They impose balloon payments due in less than 5 years.

We have a group of people who are gaming the system at the expense of the most vulnerable people in America.

This amendment does not add any additional requirements to current law. It says that those who want to lend money have to themselves obey the law. If you want to stand for law and order when it comes to somebody coming into bankruptcy court, a debtor who can no longer pay their debts, if you want to establish new and higher standards for them so that they don't rip off the system, for goodness' sake, show some heart when it comes to those who are in bankruptcy court through no fault of their own. They are elderly people who signed onto the contract, and the next thing you know the only thing they own on Earth is at risk.

I have considered this amendment. I have read the transcripts of hearings, particularly the one from Senator GRASSLEY's Committee on Aging. I have read some testimony there that I think says it all. But Senator GRASSLEY's own words really put this in context. In March of 1988, he said as follows:

What exactly are we talking about when we say that equity predators target folks who are equity-rich and cash-poor? These folks are our mothers and our fathers, our aunts and our uncles, and all people who live on fixed incomes. These are people who oftentimes exist from check to check and dollar to dollar, and who have put their blood, sweat and tears into buying a piece of the American dream, and that is their own home.

Senator COLLINS of Maine at the same hearing noted, I think accurately, that we need higher legal standards for those who provide financial services to senior citizens. Let me remind the Senate, I don't impose a higher legal standard here. I only say that those who want to take advantage of the bankruptcy court have to come in with clean hands. If they have been guilty of misuse of the law, dereliction of duty, or violation of the law, they should not be allowed to recover.

Senator LARRY CRAIG, a Republican of Idaho, said at the same hearing: There are many loopholes found in existing protection laws which can and are easily exploited by these creditors. Statements by Senator ENZI and so many of my colleagues attest to the fact that they know that in every State in the Union these smoothies are at work.

The question today before the Senate is what we will do about it. These low-life lenders who give the Merchant of Venice credit standards a good name are the people who will be protected if the Durbin amendment is defeated.

I hope if we are going to hold to a high standard those seeking relief in bankruptcy court, that we start with those who have been shown time and time again to have taken advantage of the system.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the Democratic side has expired.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, what we have before us this afternoon is a perfect example of what can happen when a bankruptcy bill is on the floor, and Members are offering amendments that have nothing to do with bankruptcy law but everything to do with banking.

We have two amendments before us, and I have a short period of time, so I'll make my points briefly.

The amendment offered by Senator DURBIN basically attempts to enforce the truth-in-lending law—which has many remedies under current banking law, including damages, including class action suits—through a new mechanism, the bankruptcy courts.

What is the practical import of all this, and why is this opposed by virtually everybody who is involved in mortgage lending?

Basically, it is a violation of truth in lending to lend money to someone who is not capable of paying it back. So, if we change the law—if we change permanent banking law as part of this bankruptcy bill—to say that if a borrower can prove that someone violated the Truth in Lending Act, then he doesn't have to pay back his mortgage loan when he's in bankruptcy, what is going to happen?

What is going to happen is that everybody in bankruptcy who has a mortgage loan is going to file a lawsuit claiming, Well, obviously, I am bankrupt, so the lender should have known I could not pay this loan back; therefore, under the Durbin amendment, I should not have to pay it back.

This is an absurd amendment that would undercut truth in lending, which has more enforcement powers than most other lending laws in America, by literally creating a situation where every deadbeat would file a lawsuit saying: I have gone bankrupt because I have spent my money. I have not paid my bills, and because I have gone bankrupt, it is the bank's fault; therefore, I should be able to default on my mortgage. Which would mean that every honest person in America who pays their bills, who sacrifices and saves their money and pays off their mortgage, will end up paying a higher rate of interest.

So I hope our colleagues will roundly defeat this amendment. It has absolutely nothing to do with bankruptcy law, and everything to do with banking law, and it should not even be considered.

The second amendment I want to mention is paternalism at its worst, and that is the amendment of my dear friend, Senator DODD, which would require students between the ages of 18 and 21 to get parental consent in order to be issued a credit card.

I want to remind my colleagues that college students who are 18 and older are adults under Federal law for purposes of credit. This amendment would therefore be a violation of the Federal Equal Credit Opportunity Act, which prohibits the use of age on a discriminatory basis against anyone over 18 years of age.

The second point I want to make is that this concern about the danger of students having credit cards is based on a myth. Fifty-nine percent of all college students in America pay their balance in full at the end of the month. But only 40 percent of the general population pays their balance in full. Eighty-six percent of students pay their credit cards with their own money, not with their parents' money. The plain truth is that college students are better credit card risks than the general population. It is obvious that if you are dealing with people who are highly motivated, highly disciplined, successful college students, you want them to become your customer because they are going to go out and make a lot of money and become very profitable customers. The idea that we would be engaged in this sort of paternalism, which would require every student in America, even though it is against the law for the bank to discriminate against them if they are over 18—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I will yield the Senator 1 more minute, the Senator from Pennsylvania 2 minutes, and the Senator from Alabama 3 minutes. That will be the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas may continue for another minute.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, the idea that we in the U.S. Congress are going to pass a law that takes adults, under our Federal credit statutes, and force them to go back to their parents in order to get a credit card, when the credit behavior of students is superior to the general population, is simply an outrage. Our Democrat colleagues cannot get it right. When we debated the banking bill, they were concerned that banks wouldn't lend money to people who are needy. But when we are debating the bankruptcy bill, it is the bank's fault for lending too much money to people who are needy. They can't quite get it straight. I guess it varies depending on which bill are considering. Both of these amendments should be roundly defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New York for his amendment dealing with disclosure—as the Senator from New York talked about in his remarks—on credit card solicitations, as to what the real interest rate is that is going to be involved and all the other information that is necessary for consumers to make intelligent decisions as to whether to contract with a credit card company.

All of us get solicitations—I do every day—in the mail offering outrageously low rates of interest. I have looked through them and it is very difficult, even for somebody who is somewhat sophisticated in looking at this information, to find what the true interest rate is and the true terms of the credit card for which you may be signing up.

What the amendment of the Senator from New York does is put it in an obvious place, in clear and bold type, in a box, in a format that people are used to using, as a result of his legislation from a few years ago with respect to credit card statements. This would make it applicable to applications and to solicitations. I think it is a constructive amendment, a disclosure-oriented amendment. It is not something I think is unduly burdensome and it can be helpful to everybody, not just seniors and the others who may have difficulty reading the small print and understanding very complex legal documents but also the average consumer who wants to be able to make intelligent decisions. And what we are looking at in this bill is the failures as a result of credit card overpayments, as a result of decreased savings rates. This is the kind of commonsense type of thing we ought to be supporting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I know some young people get in trouble by overspending their credit cards. A lot of adults get in trouble for that. The fact is, I don't believe we, as part of an effort to reform the bankruptcy court, need to be, at this moment, offering amendments; that ought to be done in the Banking Committee. There have been complaints about the fact that credit card solicitations are mailed out to people. Let me say this: We have had a banking bill in which Members have been outraged that banks won't loan to high-risk people, and they are complaining about not making enough loans. It is odd, striking, and shocking to me that poor people are being told they ought not to be even offered credit cards. Some say they are being mailed credit cards. Not so. It is a Federal law, a crime, and it is prohibited to mail credit cards unrequested to somebody. What they are receiving is offers of credit cards. They have to fill out forms and show their income and all that, and they may or may not get it once they fill it out. But to say you can't even offer a person below the poverty level a credit card is amazing to me. Credit cards are good for poor people.

If somebody has a credit card and his tire blows up and he needs a set of tires for his car and doesn't have $200 cash, what is he going to do, park it until he can save up the money? With a credit card, he can do that and pay it off as he can. Credit cards are valuable things for poor people, for heaven's sake.

For young people, we have this vision that an 18-year-old at college who is being funded by mama runs up a big debt on his credit card. The truth is, a lot of people are not doing that. A lot of people who are 18, 19, and 20 years old will be affected by this legislation, and they may be married, out on their own, going to college during the night, and working during the day. They have to get mama and daddy to sign on before they can even get the credit card they may need to help them through the unexpected expenses that may occur for them.

The suggestion that somehow poor people are being oppressed by being offered credit cards is beyond my comprehension. In fact, one of the good things that is occurring is that we are seeing some competition now. Rates are coming down. People have alternatives. They can cancel a card and get a better card.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The question is on the Durbin amendment No. 2521.

Mr. GRASSLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Is the Durbin amendment the first vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, under the unanimous consent agreement, Senator DURBIN and whoever wants to close on that side have 2 minutes, correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no unanimous consent agreement to that effect.

Mr. REID. Based on what we have done in the past, Senators have been expecting that. I ask unanimous consent that on this amendment and the other, there be 4 minutes evenly divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Illinois is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DODD. Reserving the right to object, does that also apply to the Dodd amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was also an agreement on the Dodd amendment.

The Senator from Illinois, Mr. DURBIN, is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2521

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, this amendment was enacted by the Senate as part of the bankruptcy bill last year. The bill received a vote of 97–1. It imposes no new legal duties on creditors or lenders but says they must follow the law if they want to take advantage of the law.

We are talking about equity creditors, lenders who prey on people who are disabled, elderly, vulnerable, and less educated. Folks on a fixed income with a home end up with a new mortgage because they wanted siding on their home or a new roof and several months or years later find out they are about to lose the last thing they have on Earth—their home—because of unscrupulous practices by these creditors.

The bottom line is this: If we are going to have rules in this society for borrowers, we should also have rules for creditors. The rules are called the law. If they do not follow the law, they can be thrown out of bankruptcy court if they are a borrower. If they do not follow the law and the Durbin amendment passes, they will be thrown out of the court because they have been guilty of unscrupulous credit practices, taking advantage of the elderly.

All the Senators on the floor who have lamented the scandalous behavior of these creditors in the past have a chance now to vote for an amendment to tell them once and for all that their low-life tactics are unacceptable in America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, we have a truth-in-lending law. It is vigorously enforced with many remedies, including damages in class action lawsuits.

Senator DURBIN's amendment would make bankruptcy courts, which have no jurisdiction over truth in lending whatsoever, an enforcement mechanism of the truth-in-lending law. This produces an absurd situation. Under truth in lending, the lender has an obligation to make some assessment about the borrower's ability to pay. Under this amendment, everyone who is in default or in bankruptcy will be able to argue that the bank should have known that the lender could not pay the loan back and therefore the mortgage should be forgiven.

The net result is that hard-working, frugal people who save money and pay their debts would end up paying hundreds of millions of dollars, billions of dollars, in additional interest costs to cover people who would file lawsuits claiming, ''Well, I went broke and it's the bank's fault, and therefore I shouldn't have to pay my mortgage.''

This amendment should be defeated. Giving one court, which has no jurisdiction over the pertinent law, the ability to enforce that law, which rightly belongs in another court, is, I think, a gross violation of logic and the basic structure of the legal system. This is a bad amendment that will produce an even worse situation where honest people who pay their debts will end up paying higher interest rates for people who don't pay their debts.

I move to table the Durbin amendment.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table amendment No. 2521. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative assistant called the roll.

Mr. FITZGERALD (when his name was called). Present.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN) is necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) is absent because of a death in the family.

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 46, as follows:

NOT VOTING—2

Hollings McCain

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOTT. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. COVERDELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Oregon). The majority leader.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—EXECUTIVE CALENDAR NO. 257

Mr. LOTT. As in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the next vote, the Senate proceed to executive session and an immediate vote on Calendar No. 257, the nomination of Linda Morgan to be a member of the Surface Transportation Board. I further ask consent that immediately following the vote, the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action, and the Senate then resume legislative session.

Let me confirm, as a result of this vote, there are about five or six other nominations that will be cleared tonight in wrapup.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the next two votes be 10-minute votes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2754

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there are now 4 minutes equally divided prior to the vote on or in relation to the Dodd amendment No. 2754.

Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, Senator DODD and I have proposed an amendment to address the explosion of credit card debt offered to students on college campuses.

The amendment prohibits a credit card company from giving an individual under the age of 21 a credit card unless the young person has income sufficient to repay the debt or a parent, guardian, or other family member over the age of 21 shares liability for the credit card. Credit card applications and solicitations must disclose this information to potential consumers.

This amendment is particularly appropriate during debate on bankruptcy reform legislation. We know that credit card debt may not be the sole factor leading to bankruptcy, but for many individuals it is a significant contributing factor.

Congress should be particularly concerned that since 1991, there has been a 50-percent increase in bankruptcy filings by those under the age of 25. In many cases, these are young men and women who are just establishing their independence—and just starting to build a credit history. Poor financial decisions, especially credit card mismanagement can have long-term implications.

We know the siren song of the credit card industry is loud and clear. In 1998, credit card issuers sent out 3.45 billion credit card solicitations to people of all ages, including college students and others who may not have the ability to repay their debts. In fact, First USA recently issued a credit card to 3-year-old Alessandra Scalise. Alessandra's mother said she accurately completed and mailed in the preapproved credit card application as a joke. There was no Social Security number or income listed and Alessandra's occupation was listed as ''preschooler.'' Apparently, this didn't make a difference to First USA. Alessandra received a Platinum Visa with a $5,000 credit limit.

This incident may be attributable to ''human error'' but there are numerous examples of irresponsible lending practices by credit card issuers—especially when they lend to students who don't have the capacity to repay their debts.

For example, one Discover platinum card issuer's terms of qualification require a minimum household income of $15,000 unless you are a full-time student. Discover explains that an individual either has to have a $15,000 minimum income or needs to prove that they are a full-time student. Student applications are rejected only if they have a bad credit history—a prior bankruptcy filing, for example—or if their student status can not be confirmed.

During a February 1998 Banking Subcommittee hearing, Senator SARBANES asked credit card issuers how they determined student income. Bruce Hammonds, senior vice chairman and chief operating officer of MBNA Corporation responded if a student has a loan, ''that means they do not have to pay tuition in most cases and we are looking at that tuition payment. Then we would not count the tuition payment against them with their income and expense analysis.'' In other words, the company ignores the reality of tuition and views a student loan as ''free'' money—an income stream that can be used to repay credit care debt.

Not surprisingly, credit card companies have unleashed a well-organized and pervasive campaign to attract student consumers. Credit is available to almost any college student—no income, no credit history, and no parental signature required. The National Bankruptcy Review Commission received an advertisement for a 2-day workshop for creditors entitled, ''Competing in the Sub Prime Credit Card Market,'' including a presentation entitled, ''Targeting College Students: Real Life 101,'' with tips on how to ''target the money makers of tomorrow.''

Students are targeted by the industry the moment they step on to a college campus. Applications are placed in their book bags at the student store, and tempting gifts and bonuses and low teaser rates are used to entice them to send in the application. The American Express Card for College Students has a teaser rate of 7.75 percent for the first 90 days, then it more than doubles to 15.65 percent. Perks include Continental Airlines travel vouchers. The Citibank College Card for Students initial rate is 8.9 percent for 9 months and then it skyrockets to 17.15 percent. The incentive? Eight American Airlines travel coupons.

Brian is a student at the University of Minnesota. He said,

They gave me a free T-shirt and a water bottle to apply for their credit cards. My clever plan? To sucker them out of their prizes and cut up the cards. $4,000 later . . . I stopped spending . . . In my glory days, I was like King Midas, pointing to things and turning them into my own . . . For me, the worst temptation was food . . . While listening to tunes on your new stereo and munching take out food, the monthly payment seems easy to pay, especially when you can get a cash advance to cover it.

The ads are tempting, too. One ad directly targeting students reads: ''Free from parental rule at last. Now all you need is money. Cha-Ching! Get 3 percent cash back on everything you buy.''

The Internet is the new frontier for credit card advertising to students. When a student clicks on ''www.studentcreditcard.com'' he or she finds a treasure trove of shopping offers and discounts, as well as the assurance of 3 percent cash back. Students are told that, ''It's totally simple. Spend $200 on an item with your card and you have an extra six bucks in your pocket. Spend another $400, that's $12. It adds up fast when you use The Associates Student Credit Card for all your purchases.''

The web site includes some information on establishing a good credit record, but nothing compared to the bonuses and incentives for student consumers.

Not surprisingly, college students respond to solicitation by credit card companies. A recent study by Nellie Mae found that 60 percent of undergraduates have credit cards and 21 percent have 4 or more cards. The median credit card debt among students is $1,200 and 9 percent of students have debt between $3,000 and $7,000. Five percent of students have credit card debt exceeding $7,000.

Other studies replicate similar findings. A June 1998 national survey by the Education Resources Institute—''Credit Risk or Credit Worthy''—found that 55 percent of students obtained their first card during their first year of college and a significant proportion received their first credit card while still in high school.

The study argues that many students use credit cards reasonably, but the facts and statistics are disturbing. Fifty-two percent of students say that one of the most important reasons to have a credit card is to ''build a credit history'' and 45 percent say it's to use in an emergency, but the survey shows that 77 percent of all student credit card purchases were for ''routine personal expenses''—a category that may include a wide-range of items.

While attending Villanova, Meghan charged $15,000 on her credit cards. When she and her friends first applied for the cards they decided to keep them for emergencies, only. But, according to Meghan, they would ''end up buying things . . . or taking cash advances just to live on.'' Meghan planned to get a job to pay off her debt, but that didn't happen. Instead, her mother paid-off the balance on the card—twice.

What's particularly troubling is that many students who use their credit cards when they ''run out of checks'' or are ''on Spring Break'' don't realize the financial implications of credit. In a September 1999 article, Joan Bodnar, senior editor of Kiplinger's Personal Finance Magazine wrote, ''Kids tend to equate credit cards with free money—in a recent survey of college students, fewer than half of those interviewed knew the interest rate on their cards.''

Similarly, a 1993 American Express/Consumer Federation of America study of college students revealed that college juniors and seniors only have a ''fair'' understanding of financial services products, and few appear to understand an annual percentage rate. A similar study of high school seniors reveals that they have a ''poor'' understanding of such products.

The result? College students with no income and good intentions often find themselves in debt with no way out. For example, of the 20 percent of students who report an average balance greater than $1,000, half of those students have four or more credit cards and only 18 percent pay off their outstanding balances every month. In addition, 48 percent of these students have other debt and nearly one-third have charged tuition and fees.

The economic and emotional consequences of credit card debt can be devastating—even deadly—for many students. Tricia Johnson received a desperate call from her daughter, Mitzi, a student in her first year at the University of Central Oklahoma. Mitzi had lost her part-time job and was afraid she could not pay her debts. Mrs. Johnson tried to comfort her distraught daughter. But, later that night, Mitzi committed suicide. She had accumulated $2,500 in credit card debt, but her weekly income rarely exceeded $65. When the police found Mitzi, credit cards were spread across her bed.

Janie O'Donnell—the mother of Sean Moyer, a National Merit Scholar attending the University of Oklahoma—had the same devastating experience. In 1998, Sean told his mother he had no idea how to get out of his financial mess, and he did not see much of a future for himself. Sean had moved home to save money and pay off the $10,000 he owed Visa and Master Card. A week later, he committed suicide.

A study by the University of Minnesota in 1996, suggests that credit card debt by students often goes hand in hand with stress and depression. Two-thirds of students who said they were taking medication for depression had more than $1,000 in credit card debt. The study also found that as credit card debt increased, the student's grade point average went down. In 1998, a University of Indiana administrator said, ''we lose more students to credit card debt than to academic failure.''

Tennessee legislators were disturbed by a study that revealed a large number of Tennessee bankruptcy filers to be surprisingly young, and they are taking action. Several bills were introduced, and the state Senate passed legislation that gives students an opportunity to remove their name from solicitation lists.

It's time for Congress to take action as well. The purpose of the amendment before the Senate is to ensure responsible lending by credit card companies to students. In fact some credit card issuers are adhering to self-imposed restrictions that are more narrow than the Dodd/Kennedy amendment. For example, Dorinda Simpson, CEO of American Partners Federal Credit Union testified that when issuing student credit cards, they set a $500 credit limit and require a co-signor ''so parents know up front what we are loaning to that college student.''

This amendment doesn't go that far. It requires credit card companies to either establish that a student has the income to repay the debt or have a cosignor.

The requirements aren't overly burdensome. They won't disadvantage 20-year-olds in the military—they have an income. They won't disadvantage a student with deceased parents—another person may co-sign or the student may have income. They won't disadvantage a 19 year-old, non-college student who is between jobs—that person may have unemployment compensation or another form of income.

And, finally, this amendment is not a form of lending discrimination. When similarly situated individuals aren't treated equally, that's discrimination. When underwriting standards are based on perception instead of facts, that's discrimination. But, requiring credit card issuers to stop preying on college students they know don't have a means to repay debt—that is ensuring responsible behavior.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. DODD addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, very briefly, the amendment that I have offered, along with Senator KENNEDY, does the following: It says for persons between the ages of 18 and 21, you must either prove you have the ability to pay or to have a parent, guardian or some qualified person cosign your credit card application. The reason for this provision is because there is an alarming increase.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please be in order. Will Senators having conversations please take them into the Cloakroom.

The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Thank you, Mr. President.

There is an alarming increase in the number of young people who are being swamped with credit card applications where with merely their signature and the showing of a student ID they can receive credit of up to $10,000. In fact, today, the average college student, who does not pay their monthly balance, has a credit card obligation of $2,000. And one-fifth of those have credit card obligations of $10,000 or more. We are being told now that one of the largest reasons for disenrollment in higher education is because of credit card debt.

My amendment merely says that between the ages of 18 and 21, you must either prove you have the ability to repay or you must have a cosignature by a parent, guardian, or other qualified individual with the means to repay. It is not outrageous to ask credit card companies to require this kind of information. Students are receiving, on the average, 50 credit card applications in their first semester of college.

We set the age of 21 for legal consumption of alcohol in this country. The IRS has a presumption of age 23, if you are in college, in terms of student obligations in loans.

By merely requesting that the credit card companies ask for this basic information, we can slow down this alarming increase in the number of young people who are incurring tremendous debts. Many of these kids are dropping out of school as a result of these debts.

Mr. President, I urge adoption of this amendment to stop this alarming trend of too many young people, while at too young an age, incurring unreasonable credit card debts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

I must say before the Senator speaks, the Senate is not in order. Will the Senate please come to order.

The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment unfairly discriminates against young adults, and I think it should be opposed. Adults between the ages of 18 and 21 can defend our country in the military. Yet under this amendment, they will not be able to even get a credit card without overcoming regulatory obstacles in their way.

Many young adults, some of whom are students and are supporting young families, need access to credit cards to make their lives just a little bit easier. So I oppose this paternalistic amendment.

I remember what it was like to work in a low-paying job as a janitor. I can appreciate the benefits that being able to obtain credit will provide to hard-working young adults.

Keep in mind, many in this group oppose parental consent for abortion, and you are going to impose parental consent on young adults who may be working, who may have families, who may be in the military, who may be as responsible as anybody else. It just plain isn't right. I do not think we should vote for that.

So I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table amendment No. 2754. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. FITZGERALD (when his name was called). Present.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN) is necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS) is absent because of a death in family.

The result was announced—yeas 59, nays 38, as follows:

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I move to reconsider that vote.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BREAUX. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the managers. I understand there is an informal agreement to allow myself and my colleague, Senator FRIST, to proceed for 5 minutes as in morning business. If that is the case, I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to proceed as in morning business for 5 minutes followed by my colleague from Tennessee with the same request.

Mr. DODD. Reserving the right to object, is that with the understanding that at the conclusion of the 10 minutes I have the opportunity to offer my amendment?

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object, if the Senator will withhold, we are attempting to get unanimous consent agreement so we can move on.

Mr. DODD. If the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Louisiana want to proceed, that is fine.

Mr. REID. If we get unanimous consent, the Senator can interrupt.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWNBACK). The Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

MEDICARE REFORM

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I take this time with my distinguished colleague, Senator FRIST from Tennessee, and our distinguished colleague, Senator BOB KERREY, who served with me on the National Bipartisan Commission on the Future of Medicare, to offer what I think is the first ever comprehensive Medicare reform bill to be introduced since the advent of Medicare back in 1965.

We introduced a bill today. It is available for consideration by our colleagues. I hope this legislative effort becomes the marker for future discussions and debate on the question of what we do with Medicare. We introduced the bill today because we think it is absolutely essential that the Congress in this session take up the question of how to reform the Medicare Program that is currently serving 40 million Americans.

We did it essentially for two reasons. First of all, the program that the seniors now benefit from is not nearly as good as it should be nor nearly as good as it can be. Medicare today is noted more for what it does not cover than for what it actually covers. As an example, it does not cover prescription drugs; it does not cover eyeglasses; it does not cover hearing aids—three examples of things our seniors need and need very desperately.

So in addition to not covering these items, it does not cover a number of other expenses, including about 47 percent of the expenses for seniors who are not covered by Medicare insurance. They have to go out and buy supplemental insurance. So the program is not nearly as good as it should be, nor as good as we could make it.

The second reason we have introduced it is because, as bad as the program is, it is going broke. By the year 2020, one-half of all the revenues to fund the Medicare program are going to have to come out of general revenues. It was never intended to come out of general revenues. It was supposed to be paid from the payroll tax. But, by 2020, over half the costs of the program are going to have to come from general revenues. In addition, by the year 2015, the program is going to be insolvent. It is going to be broke. There is not going to be enough money to pay for the benefits the seniors currently get.

For those two reasons, we have built on what the Medicare Commission recommended, expanded on it, and improved upon it, to present to our colleagues the first ever comprehensive Medicare reform bill.

Basically, building on the Federal Employees Health Benefits Plan, we are saying about the plan that I, as a Senator, have, and what all of our colleagues and all the House Members and the other 10 million Federal employees have, is if it is good enough for them, it should also be good enough for our Nation's seniors.

What we have suggested is we pattern a new Medicare program based on the Federal employees plan. We would create a Medicare board, which would be appointed by the President, confirmed by the Senate, for 7-year terms. They would guarantee all the plans being submitted to serve our seniors would ensure quality standards. They would negotiate the premiums. They would approve the benefits package. They would make sure there are safeguards against adverse selection of only healthy seniors. They would provide information to our seniors.

This Medicare board would call upon the existing health care financing authority and all private groups such as insurance companies—whether it is an Aetna or a Blue Cross—all of these who want the privilege of serving the Medicare beneficiaries would have to compete for the right to do so. They do not do that today.

We would say to all these people who want to serve Medicare beneficiaries, they have to offer at least as much as what Medicare pays for today, at least as much but hopefully a lot more. We would require every group that wants to sell health insurance to Medicare beneficiaries to have to compete for the right to do so, compete on the price they request seniors to pay, and compete on the quality of service they make available to seniors.

In addition, every one of these plans would have to offer a high option plan which would contain a prescription drug plan. Prescription drugs today are as important as a hospital bed was in 1965, and maybe even more so because prescription drugs keep people out of hospitals. They keep people out of nursing homes. They make their lives better and the quality of their lives better than it would be, were they not getting prescription drugs.

So every one of these single plans would have to offer a high option plan and they would have to make that a prescription drug plan with an actuarial value of at least $800 per year, which would be indexed to the increase of costs of prescription drugs annually.

They would also have a stop-loss guarantee which simply means no senior would ever have to pay more than $2,000 out of their pocket.

We think, in essence, what this plan would do is bring about substantive, real reform to a 1965 model program which simply is not working as we move to the 21st century. We cannot continue to tinker around the edges. We need complete, total reform of the Medicare program. If we do that, then we can start talking about adding other benefits such as prescription drugs, which I think are very important and I strongly support. But you cannot add prescription drugs to a broken program. You have to fundamentally restructure it and reform it; bring about real competition where all these plans will compete for the right to serve.

That is what I have as a Senator. That is what 9 million other Federal employees have. I think we would see substantial savings brought about by companies having to compete for who can offer the best package at the best price. If they want to stay in a current fee-for-service plan offered by Medicare, they can stay right where they are. They don't have to make a change. But if they see one of these other plans offer them a better deal, they should take that better deal.

We hope our colleagues take a look at what we have offered. We think it is where we are ultimately going to end up. My colleagues, Senators KERREY and FRIST, have done a terrific job. We think this is where we should go as a nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized for up to 5 minutes.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I have joined Senators BREAUX and KERREY here this evening to introduce a bill to comprehensively reform Medicare. The obvious question is, why is it necessary to reform Medicare? The very simple answer is that our seniors need and deserve better health care than what the current Medicare program can provide. The problem facing Medicare today is that, although we are in 1999, we are still relying on an antiquated system based on a 1965 model of health care. Medicare today is an inflexible system, it is an incomplete system, and it is a system that is going bankrupt. The rigidity of Medicare today limits access to new treatments and medical technologies, whether it is transplantation or treatment for hypertension.

The benefit package, in particular, is severely outdated, as evidenced by a lack of outpatient prescription drug coverage. I can tell you as a physician, that in order to deliver quality health care to our seniors, prescription drug coverage is imperative.

Most seniors today do not realize the Federal Government only pays 53 percent, or about half, of their overall health care costs. Our nation's seniors deserve better.

Right now, Medicare is micromanaged by Congress through 130,000 pages of regulations, 4 times the number of pages for the IRS code. Right now there are over 10,000 different prices in 3,000 different counties which are managed by the Health Care Financing Administration and Congress.

With 77 million baby boomers entering the Medicare program in 2010, we can expect a doubling of our eligible Medicare beneficiaries over the next 30 years. Medicare, in it's current form, is not prepared for and cannot endure these immense demographic changes. The program is already due to be insolvent by the year 2015.

This bill incorporates three main concepts. The first is health care security for our seniors. The second is choice, to meet beneficiaries' individual health care needs, as Senator BREAUX just outlined. The third is the establishment of a comprehensive, health care system that offers an integrated set of benefits.

We model this proposal on the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program. As the Senator from Louisiana just said, that is the way we in Congress get our health care. In addition, 9 million others get their health care through the FEHBP model. We have a long history, almost 40 years of experience with this model. All federal employees, including myself and my family, receive a description of benefits and choices, which outlines all the plans available in a geographic area, including the cost and quality of each plan. It is all right here in this booklet. This is what we as Members of Congress have today and it is what our seniors deserve.

This bill guarantees all current Medicare benefits, which is critical in maintaining health care security. Regardless of what plan a beneficiary chooses, HCFA-sponsored or private, all benefits in Medicare are guaranteed in a system based on choice and competition.

For the first time in Medicare, not only are outpatient prescription drugs offered to all beneficiaries, but all Medicare beneficiaries receive a discount for drug benefits. Full coverage is offered for beneficiaries below 135 percent of poverty. For beneficiaries between 135 percent and 150 percent of poverty there will be a discount based on a sliding scale, ranging from 50 percent to 25 percent. For all other beneficiaries who are above 150 percent of poverty, a 25-percent discount is offered.

This bill protects beneficiaries against high out-of-pocket costs. Most seniors do not realize today that if they get sick, there is no limit on what they will pay for care. We, for the first time, through enrollment in a high-option plan, limit out-of-pocket expenditures to $2,000 for core Medicare benefits.

This bill also offers low-income and rural protections. In our legislation, we specifically address the lack of private plans in certain areas, such as rural areas. In these underserved or rural areas, we make sure that affordable health care is available for seniors. We guarantee both the current Medicare benefits and prescription drug benefits.

We include beneficiary outreach and education efforts coordinated at the federal, state and local levels, to ensure timely, accurate, and understandable information, outlining affordable health care options, is available for all Medicare beneficiaries.

In summary, the bill we have introduced today promotes high-quality, comprehensive, integrated health care for our seniors that meets their individual needs. It assists all beneficiaries, especially those with low incomes, in obtaining comprehensive benefits, including prescription drug coverage. It increases the flexibility of the Medicare program to capture innovations in medicine. Whether it is new technologies, new breakthroughs in medicines, or new drugs, it is important seniors have access to these services, something they don't have today. This bill also ends congressional micromanagement. We have been struggling all week with fixes to a Balanced Budget Act from 2 years ago, trying to figure out how to correct the problems we created by micromanaging Medicare on the Senate floor. This just does not make sense. As I said, there are over 130,000 pages of regulations that we are trying to oversee here in Congress. Finally, we adopt a stable, competitive system based on the proven FEHBP model. This bill is based on competition, choice, health care security, and the need for comprehensive and integrated benefits, including prescription drugs.

I urge all of our colleagues to support this legislation as it is a critical focal point and sets the stage for future discussions as we address Medicare reform and modernization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I join the distinguished Senator from Tennessee and the distinguished Senator from Louisiana in introducing this legislation. I want to emphasize something both Senators emphasized in an earlier press conference, and that is, the goal of this legislation has three parts: No. 1 is security, securing Medicare for beneficiaries today and beneficiaries in the future. It is a terribly important program, and the roughly 40 million Americans who currently benefit from this program need to know the law guarantees their benefits. This proposal actually secures their benefits even more than existing law.

Some people will attack this proposal, but we have been very careful in drafting this legislation to accommodate the beneficiaries' concerns that their benefits under a competitive model might be lower. This legislation says their benefits cannot be less than what is currently available under existing law, and there is, I say to those who are concerned about rural communities, as I know the distinguished occupant of the Chair is, there is a provision in here that says if competition does not bring alternative plans, plans other than the fee-for-service offering of the Health Care Finance Administration, that the cost to the beneficiaries cannot exceed 12 percent of the national weighted average. That would make it very likely that in rural areas there will be no penalty; indeed, it is likely to be they will be paying less than they do under the current law.

The second is that it is comprehensive and it offers comprehensive choice. There is a very important part of this legislation that, almost all by itself, is going to increase the satisfaction of citizens as they examine Medicare. That is, we establish a public board that has significant power not just over HCFA but over the plans that are offered in the marketplace.

Right now, HCFA writes the rules for competing plans; obviously, a conflict of interest. We do not want to decrease the ability of HCFA to offer plans. We have written this so HCFA can offer its fee-for-service plan and be competitive, but we want this board to set the rules and conditions under which competitive plans come into the marketplace, although we have written in the legislation guarantees, as I indicated earlier, to make certain the program is secure.

A public board is much more likely to give the public satisfaction than the current environment. All of us understand it is exceptionally difficult both to evaluate what is right and what is wrong when we are faced with a request from a provider or from a beneficiary, and it is even more difficult to get HCFA to change its rules mostly on account of HCFA knowing that if it changes a rule, for example, in Nebraska, it is going to be changing rules for all other 49 States as well and could add significant costs to the program. So HCFA ends up being very inflexible, I argue not through any fault of its own but through the fault of the way the law is written.

The second objective of this legislation is that we provide comprehensive choice in a new legal environment, where the citizens will have more opportunity to make their case to a public board and the public board will have much greater expertise in making decisions about how to create a competitive environment that will enable HCFA to compete as well as private sector companies to come on line and offer more choice at lower cost to beneficiaries.

The third thing is we say that a prescription benefit should and must be considered in a comprehensive solution with Medicare reform. We cannot separate it. You cannot take a prescription benefit for a Medicare beneficiary and separate it and create an entirely new program without considering the need for comprehensive change in the program. It is much more likely that we will satisfy concerns of taxpayers that we not end up with a program that has an open-ended cost to it and much more likely, especially with the structural change of the board, that the rules will be written so the marketplace cannot only develop affordable products, but develop creative products that we are apt to see increasingly being asked for by our health care delivery system.

I am very pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation. I hope we are able to get a markup in the Senate Finance Committee next year. I hope this becomes the basis for bipartisan reform. All too often this is a subject matter that lends itself to demagoging on both sides. Mediscare has become a verb and a form of political art. Hopefully, as a consequence of it beginning in a bipartisan fashion, it will end up in a bipartisan fashion, and the rhetoric will be much more tame and much more honest as well.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I would also like to take a minute to talk about a companion program to Medicare, and that is Social Security.

A Social Security beneficiary will say Social Security and Medicare are in the same program, indeed, in the same act, in the same law. As far as the beneficiary is concerned, one program serves the needs of the other.

The General Accounting Office today released a public report which evaluates five plans that have been presented to the people, five plans that the people should look to and evaluate to answer the question: Is this a plan I support?

Let me list what those plans are. The first plan is the status quo, what I call in a nonpejorative fashion the do-nothing plan; the do-nothing plan calls for maintaining current law, waiting until manana, and fixing the program 10 years, 20 years from now. GAO evaluates the do-nothing plan, which, by the way, has 500 cosponsors at the moment in the House and the Senate. The GAO evaluated the plan that Senator GREGG, myself, Senator GRASSLEY, Senator BREAUX, and three others in the Senate have introduced. The bill number is S. 1383. The House companion bill to S. 1383 is H.R. 1793, a companion bill which has nine cosponsors. The GAO evaluated that bill as well.

The GAO also evaluated S. 1831. That is the President's reform plan. It has been introduced in the Senate. The GAO also evaluated the Archer-Shaw proposal, though Chairman ARCHER and Representative SHAW have yet to introduce their reform plan in the form of a bill. They evaluated the details of the Archer-Shaw proposal that were provided to them. And finally, GAO evaluated Representative KASICH's proposal. I do not know what its number is or how many people are on it, but it is a specific piece of legislation that has been introduced.

The GAO has done a very useful service, in my view, for a couple of reasons.

Reason No. 1 is that GAO finally identifies the status quo as a plan. In other words, you cannot not be for something. If you are not on a bill, you are supporting the status quo, you are supporting existing law. There are serious consequences to supporting existing law.

The GAO evaluated all five of these plans.

Secondly, GAO outlined for the first time the eight financial and budgetary criteria by which these five proposals ought to be judged by the American public. In the report, they ask:

First, does it reduce pressure of Social Security spending on the budget?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KERREY. How much time did I have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator had 5 minutes under a unanimous consent agreement to proceed.

Mr. KERREY. I ask unanimous consent that I be given 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, there were eight other questions on the financial side.

Question No. 2: Does it reduce the national debt?

Question No. 3: Does it reduce the cost of Social Security as a percent of GDP?

Question No. 4: Does it increase national savings?

Question 5: Does it solve the 75-year actuarial solvency problem? In other words, can it keep the promise to all 270 million beneficiaries both eligible today and out into the future?

Question No. 6: Does it create new, undisclosed contingent liabilities?

Question No. 7: Does it increase payroll taxes or place an obligation on general revenues?

And question No. 8: Are there safety valves to accommodate future growth in the program?

These are the key financial questions. The GAO has laid out an evaluation of the five dominant plans that have been offered by Members of Congress to the public.

In addition, GAO attempts to do an analysis of the administration and implementation issues in each plan.

Finally, GAO attempts to evaluate whether or not equity—generational equity—and progressivity have been taken into account in each plan. Equity and progressivity are always important. Social Security is a very progressive program to beneficiaries.

I hope that this GAO report gets a little bit of air time and a little bit of consideration by Members. I hope that particular attention will be paid to the do-nothing, status quo plan.

There are consequences to the do-nothing plan. The current status quo plan dramatically increases debt and interest costs in the future. This large debt will have a major impact on the tax burdens and interest rates of future workers. GAO comments very unfavorably when it measures the status quo approach against its eight financial criteria. There are very negative consequences for both current beneficiaries and future beneficiaries and the American taxpayers for doing nothing.

I urge my colleagues to take a closer look at this GAO report—and to really understand the cost tradeoffs between different approaches to Social Security reform. The battle cry all year long has been to save Social Security first. We created an elaborate lockbox mechanism so we could do it. My hope is that next year, with the assistance of GAO and this report, we will see an increasing number of Members who are enthusiastic about putting their names on specific legislation to reform Social Security.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, following the vote in relation to the drug amendment to the bankruptcy bill, the Senate proceed to executive session for the consideration of calendar Nos. 399 to 400, the nomination of Carol Moseley-Braun to be ambassador to New Zealand and Samoa. I further ask unanimous consent that the Senate then immediately proceed to a vote on the confirmation of the nomination and, following the vote, the President then immediately be notified of the Senate's action, and the Senate then proceed to the nomination of Linda Morgan and, following that confirmation vote, the President be immediately notified and the Senate then resume executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I announce for the leader that in light of this agreement, there will be three rollcall votes between noon and 1:00 p.m. tomorrow.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM ACT OF 1999—Continued

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, we can proceed, then, to our adoption of some amendments on which we have agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 1722, AS MODIFIED; 2530, AS MODIFIED; 2546; 2749; 2750; 2758, AS MODIFIED; 2768; 2772, AS MODIFIED; 2528; 2664; AND 2665, EN BLOC

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendments be considered en bloc, and modifications be considered agreed to, where noted, that the amendments be agreed to, en bloc, and the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, all without intervening action or debate.

I will give you the amendment Nos.: Amendment No. 1722 by Mr. ROBB, as modified; amendment No. 2530 by Mr. BYRD, as modified; amendment No. 2546 by Mr. BENNETT; amendment No. 2749 by Mr. FEINGOLD dealing with PACs; amendment No. 2750 by Mr. FEINGOLD dealing with FEC fine; amendment No. 2758 by Mr, ROTH and Mr. MOYNIHAN, as modified—I will send that modification to the desk—amendment No. 2768 by Mr. LEVIN; amendment No. 2772 by Mr. LEVIN, as modified—that modification will be sent to the desk—amendment No. 2528 by Mr. LEAHY; amendment No. 2664 by Mr. KOHL; and amendment No. 2665 by Mr. KOHL. I send the modifications to the desk.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the last two are by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. KOHL; is that right?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes.

Mr. LEAHY. Of course, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments (Nos. 1722, as modified; 2530, as modified; 2546; 2749; 2750; 2758, as modified; 2768; 2772, as modified; 2528; 2664; and 2665) were agreed to as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1722, AS MODIFIED

(Purpose: To provide that duties of a trustee shall include providing certain information relating to case administration, and for other purposes)

On page 51, strike line 24 and insert the following:

section (d); and

''(7) provide information relating to the administration of cases that is practical to any not-for-profit entity which shall provide information to parties in interest in a timely and convenient manner, including telephonic and Internet access, at no cost or a nominal cost.

An entity described in paragraph (7) shall provide parties in interest with reasonable information about each case on behalf of the trustee of that case, including the status of the debtor's payments to the plan, the unpaid balance payable to each creditor treated by the plan, and the amount and date of payments made under the plan. The trustee shall have no duty to provide information under paragraph (7) if no such entity has been established.''; and

---

AMENDMENT 2530, AS MODIFIED

(Purpose: To make an amendment with respect to credit card applications and solicitations that are electronically provided to consumers)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. PROVISION OF ELECTRONIC FTC PAMPHLET WITH ELECTRONIC CREDIT CARD APPLICATIONS AND SOLICITATIONS.

TITLE VII—BANKRUPTCY TAX PROVISIONS

SEC. 701. TREATMENT OF CERTAIN LIENS.

(a) TREATMENT OF CERTAIN LIENS.—Section 724 of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (b), in the matter preceding paragraph (1), by inserting ''(other than to the extent that there is a properly perfected unavoidable tax lien arising in connection with an ad valorem tax on real or personal property of the estate)'' after ''under this title'';

(2) in subsection (b)(2), by inserting ''(except that such expenses, other than claims for wages, salaries, or commissions which arise after the filing of a petition, shall be limited to expenses incurred under chapter 7 of this title and shall not include expenses incurred under chapter 11 of this title)'' after ''507(a)(1)''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(e) Before subordinating a tax lien on real or personal property of the estate, the trustee shall—

''(1) exhaust the unencumbered assets of the estate; and

''(2) in a manner consistent with section 506(c), recover from property securing an allowed secured claim the reasonable, necessary costs and expenses of preserving or disposing of that property.

''(f) Notwithstanding the exclusion of ad valorem tax liens under this section and subject to the requirements of subsection (e), the following may be paid from property of the estate which secures a tax lien, or the proceeds of such property:

''(1) Claims for wages, salaries, and commissions that are entitled to priority under section 507(a)(4).

''(2) Claims for contributions to an employee benefit plan entitled to priority under section 507(a)(5).''.

(b) DETERMINATION OF TAX LIABILITY.—Section 505(a)(2) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking ''or'' at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (B), by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; or''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(C) the amount or legality of any amount arising in connection with an ad valorem tax on real or personal property of the estate, if the applicable period for contesting or redetermining that amount under any law (other than a bankruptcy law) has expired.''.

SEC. 702. TREATMENT OF FUEL TAX CLAIMS.

Section 501 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(e) A claim arising from the liability of a debtor for fuel use tax assessed consistent with the requirements of section 31705 of title 49 may be filed by the base jurisdiction designated pursuant to the International Fuel Tax Agreement and, if so filed, shall be allowed as a single claim.''.

SEC. 703. NOTICE OF REQUEST FOR A DETERMINATION OF TAXES.

Section 505(b) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(2) by striking ''(1) upon payment'' and inserting ''(2)(A) upon payment'';

(3) by striking ''(A) such governmental unit'' and inserting ''(i) such governmental unit'';

(4) by striking ''(B) such governmental unit'' and inserting ''(ii) such governmental unit'';

(5) by striking ''(2) upon payment'' and inserting ''(B) upon payment'';

(6) by striking ''(3) upon payment'' and inserting ''(C) upon payment'';

(7) by striking ''(b)'' and inserting ''(2)''; and

(8) by inserting before paragraph (2), as so designated, the following:

''(b)(1)(A) The clerk of each district shall maintain a listing under which a Federal, State, or local governmental unit responsible for the collection of taxes within the district may—

''(i) designate an address for service of requests under this subsection; and

''(ii) describe where further information concerning additional requirements for filing such requests may be found.

''(B) If a governmental unit referred to in subparagraph (A) does not designate an address and provide that address to the clerk under that subparagraph, any request made under this subsection may be served at the address for the filing of a tax return or protest with the appropriate taxing authority of that governmental unit.''.

SEC. 704. RATE OF INTEREST ON TAX CLAIMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of chapter 5 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''§ 511. Rate of interest on tax claims

''(a) If any provision of this title requires the payment of interest on a tax claim or the payment of interest to enable a creditor to receive the present value of the allowed amount of a tax claim, the rate of interest shall be the rate shall be determined under applicable nonbankruptcy law.

''(b) In the case of taxes paid under a confirmed plan under this title, the rate of interest shall be determined as of the calendar month in which the plan is confirmed.''.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 5 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 510 the following:

''511. Rate of interest on tax claims.''.

''(i) of a total value, as of the effective date of the plan, equal to the allowed amount of such claim;

''(ii) with interest thereon calculated at the rate provided in section 6621(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986;

''(iii) over a period ending not later than 5 years after the date of the entry of the order for relief under section 301, 302, or 303; and

''(iv) in a manner not less favorable than the most favored nonpriority unsecured claim provided for in the plan (other than cash payments made to a class of creditors under section 1122(b)); and''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(D) with respect to a secured claim which would otherwise meet the description of an unsecured claim of a governmental unit under section 507(a)(8), but for the secured status of that claim, the holder of that claim will receive on account of that claim, cash payments, in the same manner and over the same period, as prescribed in subparagraph (C).''.

SEC. 711. AVOIDANCE OF STATUTORY TAX LIENS PROHIBITED.

Section 545(2) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting '', except in any case in which a purchaser is a purchaser described in section 6323 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, or in any other similar provision of State or local law;''.

SEC. 712. PAYMENT OF TAXES IN THE CONDUCT OF BUSINESS.

(a) PAYMENT OF TAXES REQUIRED.—Section 960 of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting ''(a)'' before ''Any''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(b) A tax under subsection (a) shall be paid on or before the due date of the tax under applicable nonbankruptcy law, unless—

''(1) the tax is a property tax secured by a lien against property that is abandoned within a reasonable period of time after the lien attaches by the trustee of a bankruptcy estate under section 554 of title 11; or

''(2) payment of the tax is excused under a specific provision of title 11.

''(c) In a case pending under chapter 7 of title 11, payment of a tax may be deferred until final distribution is made under section 726 of title 11, if—

''(1) the tax was not incurred by a trustee duly appointed under chapter 7 of title 11; or

''(2) before the due date of the tax, an order of the court makes a finding of probable insufficiency of funds of the estate to pay in full the administrative expenses allowed under section 503(b) of title 11 that have the same priority in distribution under section 726(b) of title 11 as the priority of that tax.''.

(b) PAYMENT OF AD VALOREM TAXES REQUIRED.—Section 503(b)(1)(B)(i) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting ''whether secured or unsecured, including property taxes for which liability is in rem, in personam, or both,'' before ''except''.

(c) REQUEST FOR PAYMENT OF ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSE TAXES ELIMINATED.—Section 503(b)(1) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (C), by adding ''and'' at the end; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(D) notwithstanding the requirements of subsection (a), a governmental unit shall not be required to file a request for the payment of an expense described in subparagraph (B) or (C), as a condition of its being an allowed administrative expense;''.

''(A) the date that is 10 days after the mailing to creditors of the summary of the trustee's final report; or

''(B) the date on which the trustee commences final distribution under this section;''.

SEC. 714. INCOME TAX RETURNS PREPARED BY TAX AUTHORITIES.

Section 523(a) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(B)—

(A) in the matter preceding clause (i), by inserting ''or equivalent report or notice,'' after ''a return,'';

(B) in clause (i)—

(i) by inserting ''or given'' after ''filed''; and

(ii) by striking ''or'' at the end; and

(C) in clause (ii)—

(i) by inserting ''or given'' after ''filed''; and

(ii) by inserting '', report, or notice'' after ''return''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following flush sentences:

''For purposes of this subsection, the term 'return' means a return that satisfies the requirements of applicable nonbankruptcy law (including applicable filing requirements). Such term includes a return prepared pursuant to section 6020(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, or similar State or local law, or a written stipulation to a judgment or a final order entered by a nonbankruptcy tribunal, but does not include a return made pursuant to section 6020(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, or a similar State or local law.''.

SEC. 715. DISCHARGE OF THE ESTATE'S LIABILITY FOR UNPAID TAXES.

The second sentence of section 505(b) of title 11, United States Code, as amended by section 703 of this Act, is amended by inserting ''the estate,'' after ''misrepresentation,''.

SEC. 716. REQUIREMENT TO FILE TAX RETURNS TO CONFIRM CHAPTER 13 PLANS.

(a) FILING OF PREPETITION TAX RETURNS REQUIRED FOR PLAN CONFIRMATION.—Section 1325(a) of title 11, United States Code, as amended by section 213 of this Act, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (6), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(2) in paragraph (7), by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; and''; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (7) the following:

''(8) if the debtor has filed all applicable Federal, State, and local tax returns as required by section 1308.''.

(b) ADDITIONAL TIME PERMITTED FOR FILING TAX RETURNS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 13 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''§ 1308. Filing of prepetition tax returns

''(a) Not later than the day before the date on which the meeting of the creditors is first scheduled to be held under section 341(a), the debtor shall file with appropriate tax authorities all tax returns for all taxable periods ending during the 4-year period ending on the date of the filing of the petition.

''(b)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), if the tax returns required by subsection (a) have not been filed by the date on which the meeting of creditors is first scheduled to be held under section 341(a), the trustee may hold open that meeting for a reasonable period of time to allow the debtor an additional period of time to file any unfiled returns, but such additional period of time shall not extend beyond—

''(A) for any return that is past due as of the date of the filing of the petition, the date that is 120 days after the date of that meeting; or

''(B) for any return that is not past due as of the date of the filing of the petition, the later of—

''(i) the date that is 120 days after the date of that meeting; or

''(ii) the date on which the return is due under the last automatic extension of time for filing that return to which the debtor is entitled, and for which request is timely made, in accordance with applicable nonbankruptcy law.

''(2) Upon notice and hearing, and order entered before the tolling of any applicable filing period determined under this subsection, if the debtor demonstrates by clear and convincing evidence that the failure to file a return as required under this subsection is attributable to circumstances beyond the control of the debtor, the court may extend the filing period established by the trustee under this subsection for—

''(A) a period of not more than 30 days for returns described in paragraph (1); and

''(B) a period not to extend after the applicable extended due date for a return described in paragraph (2).

''(c) For purposes of this section, the term 'return' includes a return prepared pursuant to section 6020 (a) or (b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, or a similar State or local law, or a written stipulation to a judgment or a final order entered by a nonbankruptcy tribunal.''.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for chapter 13 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1307 the following:

''1308. Filing of prepetition tax returns.''.

(c) DISMISSAL OR CONVERSION ON FAILURE TO COMPLY.—Section 1307 of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (e) and (f) as subsections (f) and (g), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (d), the following:

''(e) Upon the failure of the debtor to file a tax return under section 1308, on request of a party in interest or the United States trustee and after notice and a hearing, the court shall dismiss a case or convert a case under this chapter to a case under chapter 7 of this title, whichever is in the best interest of the creditors and the estate.''.

(d) TIMELY FILED CLAIMS.—Section 502(b)(9) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following '', and except that in a case under chapter 13, a claim of a governmental unit for a tax with respect to a return filed under section 1308 shall be timely if the claim is filed on or before the date that is 60 days after the date on which such return was filed as required''.

(e) RULES FOR OBJECTIONS TO CLAIMS AND TO CONFIRMATION.—It is the sense of Congress that the Advisory Committee on Bankruptcy Rules of the Judicial Conference should, as soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, propose for adoption amended Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure which provide that—

(1) notwithstanding the provisions of Rule 3015(f), in cases under chapter 13 of title 11, United States Code, an objection to the confirmation of a plan filed by a governmental unit on or before the date that is 60 days after the date on which the debtor files all tax returns required under sections 1308 and 1325(a)(7) of title 11, United States Code, shall be treated for all purposes as if such objection had been timely filed before such confirmation; and

(2) in addition to the provisions of Rule 3007, in a case under chapter 13 of title 11, United States Code, no objection to a tax with respect to which a return is required to be filed under section 1308 of title 11, United States Code, shall be filed until such return has been filed as required.

SEC. 717. STANDARDS FOR TAX DISCLOSURE.

Section 1125(a)(1) of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting ''including a discussion of the potential material Federal tax consequences of the plan to the debtor, any successor to the debtor, and a hypothetical investor typical of the holders of claims or interests in the case,'' after ''records''; and

(2) by striking ''a hypothetical reasonable investor typical of holders of claims or interests'' and inserting ''such a hypothetical investor''.

SEC. 718. SETOFF OF TAX REFUNDS.

Section 362(b) of title 11, United States Code, as amended by section 402 of this Act, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (25), by striking ''or'' at the end;

(2) in paragraph (26), by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; or''; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (26) the following:

''(27) under subsection (a), of the setoff under applicable nonbankruptcy law of an income tax refund, by a governmental unit, with respect to a taxable period that ended before the order for relief against an income tax liability for a taxable period that also ended before the order for relief, except that in any case in which the setoff of an income tax refund is not permitted under applicable nonbankruptcy law because of a pending action to determine the amount or legality of a tax liability, the governmental unit may hold the refund pending the resolution of the action, unless the court, upon motion of the trustee and after notice and hearing, grants the taxing authority adequate protection (within the meaning of section 361) for the secured claim of that authority in the setoff under section 506(a).''.

SEC. 719. SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATED TO THE TREATMENT OF STATE AND LOCAL TAXES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 346 of title 11, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''SEC. 346. SPECIAL PROVISIONS RELATED TO THE TREATMENT OF STATE AND LOCAL TAXES.

''(a) Whenever the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 provides that a separate taxable estate or entity is created in a case concerning a debtor under this title, and the income, gain, loss, deductions, and credits of such estate shall be taxed to or claimed by the estate, a separate taxable estate is also created for purposes of any State and local law imposing a tax on or measured by income and such income, gain, loss, deductions, and credits shall be taxed to or claimed by the estate and may not be taxed to or claimed by the debtor. The preceding sentence shall not apply if the case is dismissed. The trustee shall make tax returns of income required under any such State or local law.

''(b) Whenever the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 provides that no separate taxable estate shall be created in a case concerning a debtor under this title, and the income, gain, loss, deductions, and credits of an estate shall be taxed to or claimed by the debtor, such income, gain, loss, deductions, and credits shall be taxed to or claimed by the debtor under a State or local law imposing a tax on or measured by income and may not be taxed to or claimed by the estate. The trustee shall make such tax returns of income of corporations and of partnerships as are required under any State or local law, but with respect to partnerships, shall make said returns only to the extent such returns are also required to be made under such Code. The estate shall be liable for any tax imposed on such corporation or partnership, but not for any tax imposed on partners or members.

''(c) With respect to a partnership or any entity treated as a partnership under a State or local law imposing a tax on or measured by income that is a debtor in a case under this title, any gain or loss resulting from a distribution of property from such partnership, or any distributive share of any income, gain, loss, deduction, or credit of a partner or member that is distributed, or considered distributed, from such partnership, after the commencement of the case, is gain, loss, income, deduction, or credit, as the case may be, of the partner or member, and if such partner or member is a debtor in a case under this title, shall be subject to tax in accordance with subsection (a) or (b).

''(d) For purposes of any State or local law imposing a tax on or measured by income, the taxable period of a debtor in a case under this title shall terminate only if and to the extent that the taxable period of such debtor terminates under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

''(e) The estate in any case described in subsection (a) shall use the same accounting method as the debtor used immediately before the commencement of the case, if such method of accounting complies with applicable nonbankruptcy tax law.

''(f) For purposes of any State or local law imposing a tax on or measured by income, a transfer of property from the debtor to the estate or from the estate to the debtor shall not be treated as a disposition for purposes of any provision assigning tax consequences to a disposition, except to the extent that such transfer is treated as a disposition under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

''(g) Whenever a tax is imposed pursuant to a State or local law imposing a tax on or measured by income pursuant to subsection (a) or (b), such tax shall be imposed at rates generally applicable to the same types of entities under such State or local law.

''(h) The trustee shall withhold from any payment of claims for wages, salaries, commissions, dividends, interest, or other payments, or collect, any amount required to be withheld or collected under applicable State or local tax law, and shall pay such withheld or collected amount to the appropriate governmental unit at the time and in the manner required by such tax law, and with the same priority as the claim from which such amount was withheld or collected was paid.

''(i)(1) To the extent that any State or local law imposing a tax on or measured by income provides for the carryover of any tax attribute from one taxable period to a subsequent taxable period, the estate shall succeed to such tax attribute in any case in which such estate is subject to tax under subsection (a).

''(2) After such a case is closed or dismissed, the debtor shall succeed to any tax attribute to which the estate succeeded under paragraph (1) to the extent consistent with the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

''(3) The estate may carry back any loss or tax attribute to a taxable period of the debtor that ended before the order for relief under this title to the extent that—

''(A) applicable State or local tax law provides for a carryback in the case of the debtor; and

''(B) the same or a similar tax attribute may be carried back by the estate to such a taxable period of the debtor under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

''(j)(1) For purposes of any State or local law imposing a tax on or measured by income, income is not realized by the estate, the debtor, or a successor to the debtor by reason of discharge of indebtedness in a case under this title, except to the extent, if any, that such income is subject to tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

''(2) Whenever the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 provides that the amount excluded from gross income in respect of the discharge of indebtedness in a case under this title shall be applied to reduce the tax attributes of the debtor or the estate, a similar reduction shall be made under any State or local law imposing a tax on or measured by income to the extent such State or local law recognizes such attributes. Such State or local law may also provide for the reduction of other attributes to the extent that the full amount of income from the discharge of indebtedness has not been applied.

''(k)(1) Except as provided in this section and section 505, the time and manner of filing tax returns and the items of income, gain, loss, deduction, and credit of any taxpayer shall be determined under applicable nonbankruptcy law.

''(2) For Federal tax purposes, the provisions of this section are subject to the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and other applicable Federal nonbankruptcy law.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 728 of title 11, United States Code, is repealed.

(2) Section 1146 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking subsections (a) and (b) and by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (a) and (b), respectively.

(3) Section 1231 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by striking subsections (a) and (b) and by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (a) and (b), respectively.

SEC. 720. DISMISSAL FOR FAILURE TO TIMELY FILE TAX RETURNS.

Section 521 of title 11, United States Code, as amended by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(k)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, if the debtor fails to file a tax return that becomes due after the commencement of the case or to properly obtain an extension of the due date for filing such return, the taxing authority may request that the court enter an order converting or dismissing the case.

''(2) If the debtor does not file the required return or obtain the extension referred to in paragraph (1) within 90 days after a request is filed by the taxing authority under that paragraph, the court shall convert or dismiss the case, whichever is in the best interests of creditors and the estate.''.

On page 268, line 13, strike ''1231(d)'' and insert ''1231(b)''.

On page 280, strike lines 16 through 19.

AMENDMENT NO. 2768

(Purpose: To prohibit certain retroactive finance charges)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. PROHIBITION ON CERTAIN RETROACTIVE FINANCE CHARGES.

Section 127 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1637) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(h) PROHIBITION ON RETROACTIVE FINANCE CHARGES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any credit card account under an open end credit plan, if the creditor provides a grace period applicable to any new extension of credit under the account, no finance charge may be imposed subsequent to the grace period with regard to any amount that was paid on or before the end of that grace period.

''(2) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'grace period' means a period during which the extension of credit may be repaid, in whole or in part, without incurring a finance charge for the extension of credit.''.

AMENDMENT NO. 2772, AS MODIFIED

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate concerning credit worthiness)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve shall report to the Banking Committee of Congress within 6 months of enactment of this act as to whether and how the location of the residence of an applicant for a credit cared is considered by financial institutions in deciding whether an applicant should be granted such credit card.

AMENDMENT NO. 2528

(Purpose: To ensure additional expenses and income adjustments associated with protection of the debtor and the debtor's family from domestic violence are included in the debtor's monthly expenses)

On page 7, line 22, insert after the period the following:

''In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses shall include the debtor's reasonably necessary expenses incurred to maintain the safety of the debtor and the family of the debtor from family violence as identified under section 309 of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (42 U.S.C. 10408), or other applicable Federal law. The expenses included in the debtor's monthly expenses described in the preceding sentence shall be kept confidential by the court.''

AMENDMENT NO. 2664

(Purpose: To exclude employee benefit plan participant contributions and other property from the estate)

On page 124, insert between lines 14 and 15 the following:

SEC. 322. EXCLUDING EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN PARTICIPANT CONTRIBUTIONS AND OTHER PROPERTY FROM THE ESTATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 541(b) of title 11, United States Code, as amended by section 903 of this Act, is amended—

(b) APPLICATION OF AMENDMENT.—The amendment made by this section shall not apply to cases commenced under title 11, United States Code, before the expiration of the 180-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

AMENDMENT NO. 2665

(Purpose: To clarify the allowance of certain postpetition wages and benefits)

On page 124, insert between lines 14 and 15 the following:

SEC. 322. CLARIFICATION OF POSTPETITION WAGES AND BENEFITS.

Section 503(b)(1)(A) of title 11, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(A) the actual, necessary costs and expenses of preserving the estate, including wages, salaries, or commissions for services rendered after the commencement of the case, and wages and benefits awarded as back pay attributable to any period of time after commencement of the case as a result of the debtor's violation of Federal or State law, without regard to when the original unlawful act occurred or to whether any services were rendered;''.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I compliment the distinguished Senator from Iowa. He and I and the distinguished Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH, and the distinguished Senator from New Jersey, Mr. TORRICELLI, have been working to clear amendments throughout the day.

Earlier today we cleared—what?—12, I believe, on this. We just cleared another large number. I mention this because Senators are coming to the floor offering amendments and clearing them. I commend those Senators who have been moving forward.

I also thank the distinguished senior Senator from Connecticut who has withheld his own debate so we could do this.

I thank him for that and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

AMENDMENT NO. 2532, AS MODIFIED

(Purpose: To provide for greater protection of children, and for other purposes)

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 2532 and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I send a modification to the desk to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, for those who are interested in following the amendment process, the modification is purely technical in nature to what I earlier offered. So it is just technical corrections.

Mr. President, I am going to use some charts on this. I call up this amendment, as modified, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], for himself, Ms. LANDRIEU, and Mr. KENNEDY, proposes an amendment numbered 2532, as modified.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 7, line 15, strike ''(ii)'' and insert ''(ii)(I)''.

On page 7, between lines 21 and 22, insert the following:

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I offer this amendment on behalf of myself and

Senator LANDRIEU, Senator KENNEDY, and others who may be interested in joining in this particular effort.

Mr. President, this is an amendment which I would hope would be adopted. I am sorry in a sense it is not being accepted because it goes to the very heart of what many of us have talked about and tried to accomplish over the years, since bankruptcy laws were first modernized and adopted almost a century ago in 1903. This amendment deals with families, with spouses, with child support issues, and where they come in the context of priorities when it comes to discharging responsibilities under the bankruptcy act.

It is no great secret that in 1998, we learned that as much as $43 billion in child support payments remained uncollected in the United States. It is a staggering sum of money and makes a huge difference to children growing up under adverse circumstances as they are. When you exclude the ability to receive the financial support necessary to make ends meet, the problem becomes even more pronounced.

I raise that because last year this body voted on important legislation that would provide needed reform to our bankruptcy laws, while at the same time ensuring that children and families would remain unhindered in their efforts to collect domestic support from bankrupt debtors.

Since 1903, our Nation's bankruptcy code has been guided by the firm principle that women and children must be first in the distribution line of available assets during bankruptcy proceedings. For almost a century, debt owed to children and families has been nondischargeable. Thus, if a head of household fails financially, whatever remaining assets he has could be used to spare his spouse or ex-spouse and his children from impoverishment. We do this because those who are most vulnerable in our society deserve the most protection.

With this principle in mind, this body recently added another protection for domestic support obligations in bankruptcy. The Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1994 made children and families a priority unsecured creditors. This enabled women and children to receive payments on their claims before other creditors.

Today's bill, the Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1999, would fundamentally alter this delicate balance achieved after almost a century of jurisprudence. We are altering the bankruptcy landscape for the benefit of the credit card industry without understanding what the consequences for families will be.

Women and children will be disproportionately affected by this legislation, unless it is amended. Whether as debtors filing for bankruptcy themselves or as creditors, three quarters of a million women will be affected this year by the bankruptcy system, and it is estimated that as many as 1 million women will be affected in the coming year.

I recognize the precipitous rise in bankruptcies in the last few years. It is a problem that needs to be dealt with. I agree with those of my colleagues who think the law needs to be reformed and tightened up. I also agree with HENRY HYDE, Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, that it is possible to enact legislation that is highly favorable to the credit card companies and tightens the laws without depriving debtors and their families of reasonably necessary living expenses.

As the legislation is currently drafted, the credit card industry is protected. Unfortunately, families are not, in my view. Maybe that is why all the major family and children advocacy groups presently oppose this bill. Yet with the adoption of the amendment that Senator LANDRIEU and I have offered, we think we can bring substantial support to this bill.

I have serious concerns about the bill, as it is presently drafted, because of its potential harm to children and to families. This bill presents obstacles to families both before, during, and after bankruptcy that leave the alarming potential for family support income to be dissipated and misdirected to credit card companies rather than to the families who need that help.

First, I am greatly concerned about the means test, which requires the trustee in bankruptcy to review all individual Chapter 7 cases for ability to pay debts under a rigid IRS formula devised originally for delinquent taxpayers, now to be applied in bankruptcy proceedings. These standards neither take into account differences in the cost of living from region to region nor do they ascribe rational expenses to individual families. As such, the use of these standards will deprive children and families of reasonably necessary living expenses.

Additionally, because the means test increases the potential for dismissing chapter 7 cases, this bill channels many debtors into 5-year chapter 13 repayment plans, even though we know for a fact two-thirds of such plans fail today. What will families live on during this time?

I am also concerned about the provisions of the legislation that make certain credit card debt nondischargeable. While the recent family support provisions added to the legislation are positive improvements, they have not cured the problems caused by other provisions of the bill which give greater collection rights to credit card lenders and fewer, in my view, to families and children.

This bill elevates credit card debt to a presumed nondischargeable status. If a debtor purchases items or services on credit from a single creditor within 90 days of bankruptcy and such items exceed $250 in value, these items would be presumed luxuries. This chart to my right explains it.

Under current law, food, medicine, and clothing equal necessities. Under present law, if the amount is less than $1,075 per creditor and incurred within 60 days of the bankruptcy petition, then they are protected.

Under the law as presently drafted, without amendment, food, medicine, and clothing are considered luxuries, if the amount is greater than $250 and incurred within 90 days of the bankruptcy petition. So if you have $251 of food, medicine, and clothing expense and it is incurred within the last 90 days, then you have to go to court and spend the money to prove these are not luxuries: food, medicine, and clothing.

This point is one I find stunning in its potential implications. Let me emphasize, under current law, food, medicine, and clothing are considered necessities. If the amount is in excess or less than $1,075 and incurred within 60 days, there is a presumption those are necessities. That is considered, by today's dollars, enough to accommodate a family.

Here we are now saying food, medicine, and clothing, if it is in excess of $250 within 90 days, that is a luxury. So $251, you have to go to court. If you are a debtor and you are a woman with a family you are raising on your own, you go to bankruptcy court. You have to come up with the money now to prove because it is a rebuttable presumption that you have to overcome if it is $251. By the very factor that you are in bankruptcy court, how many resources are you going to have to hire a lawyer to go in and prove that $251 were necessities and not luxuries. If you are a creditor in this situation, a family, then obviously the problem is also difficult.

If you go to a Kmart and buy clothes for your children, necessities they may need, that is considered a luxury if it is $251. A judgment could be entered by default, and then the debt survives. If you are a single woman as a creditor, then you must wait until your ex-husband tries or does not try to defend a similar purchase. And if he is unsuccessful, there will be less money for him to pay child support. So on either side of the equation, if you are a woman raising children on your own, either as a debtor or a creditor, this places tremendous burdens on the family.

If this stays in the bill as is, this is a huge blow to average families. There is no consideration of region of the country. I don't care where you live in the United States. Imagine some parts of the country where $251 in 90 days, that is 3 months, if you have three children, $251 is a luxury? You have to go to court and hire a lawyer to prove it wasn't a luxury. We are reforming the bankruptcy laws to try to protect people and families from hardships they can incur? I don't understand this.

If this is sustained in the bill, I urge the President to veto this legislation regardless of what else is here. This would be a huge blow to families to allow this to persist in the legislation.

The bill's proponents will tell us that this is really not the case. Child support is still the No. 1 priority. The reality is that this change will place kids and families first in line for nothing, since such assets are available to support families in less than 1 percent of the cases.

In addition, this change may not place families above lenders if the lenders say their claims are secured by the debtor's property. For the first time, we have allowed these heretofore unsecured creditors to get into the bankruptcy courthouse. Currently, children and family support recipients, taxes, student loans were nondischargeable debts. For the first time in a century the proposed legislation would bring into this unique category these other creditors, i.e. credit card companies, who will make the competition for scarce assets that much fiercer.

These creditors have historically been unsecured because they have received the benefit of high interest. Now they are becoming effectively secured creditors. Most household finance groups secure items of property with agreements. So if you have a television set, the household finance company will have a security interest in the TV obligation, and the company is a secured creditor. The same thing occurs with reaffirmation agreements, and indeed the bill increases the potential for these agreements. Creditors can ask debtors to reaffirm debts of have their property—often of little value—repossessed. These items may be of little value to creditors, but of tremendous value to families, enabling them to continue to survive with the bare necessities. And they too will be elevated into the same sort of status that we have had for children and families, which I think, again, goes beyond anything I think we intended.

With those concerns in mind, the amendment Senator LANDRIEU and I and Senator KENNEDY have offered tries to address these concerns in the bill. Let me address each of the provisions very quickly and turn to my colleague from Louisiana for any further comment she would like to make on this amendment.

First of all, this amendment would modify the means test to provide greater flexibility and reasonableness when calculating the ability to pay. Allowable expenses would include family support, expenses associated with adoption of a child, child care, medical expenses, caring for elderly members of the family, education expenses, and other such critical areas that have been identified as those most families must make. Such expenses should be considered not ignored by the bankruptcy courts.

Second, my amendment will ensure that support payments and other funds intended for the current needs of children do not become the property of the bankruptcy estate with the corollary potential of being distributed to creditors. Money for kids should go to kids, not to creditors.

This amendment will also adopt the House definition of household goods, which enables debtors to keep, during bankruptcy, personal property normally found in and around the home, excluding automobiles. This will ensure that in a bankruptcy children and families are able to keep, without fear of repossession, certain household goods that typically have no resale value, such as toys, swing sets, VCRs, and other items used by parents to help raise their children.

Finally, this amendment will ensure that debtors are not forced into bankruptcy court to seek to prove that food, diapers, school uniforms, toys, and the like are not luxury goods. It would do this by providing that items purchased with a credit card would be nondischargeable only if they were purchased within 70 days, not 90 days, of bankruptcy, have a value of $400 or more per item, and require the creditor to prove at a hearing that the items were not reasonably necessary for the maintenance and support of the debtor and her dependents—shifting the burden, if you will.

Mr. President, I hope that these efforts will win broad support here as we try to again go back to what we have sustained for almost a century, recognizing the modern world we live in and the needs of families trying to see their way through the difficult period of a bankruptcy, which we are going to make far more difficult now for people to take under this law.

I am not opposed at all to the idea of trying to restrain the proliferation of bankruptcy in the country. But as we are doing that, let's not do so in such a way that it places an undue hardship and burden on families trying to make ends meet and trying to keep themselves together. Let's go back to the notion that, since 1903, the bankruptcy code has protected families.

When it comes to families, and women in particular, who could be so adversely affected by changing the means test here, placing the legal burdens on a family to go out and hire a lawyer to prove that $251 in goods over 90 days for a family is not a luxury item—nobody needs to be educated here about who has greater power. Credit card companies have teams of lawyers; they hire them on a permanent basis. But if you are some family out there who has gone through the agony of a bankruptcy, how many lawyers will take on the cases for $251 and try to prove that some items weren't luxury items? How many lawyers want to take on those cases? How long can you stay in court? How many motions can you argue back and forth? Such families are truly at a disadvantage. I am not talking about the poorest families in America; I am talking about middle income, hard-working families that find themselves in the dreadful position of all of a sudden having to readjust their lives because they have been hit by a financial disaster.

I also know there are people out there who abuse the system, who are scam artists, who game the system and use the bankruptcy laws to take advantage of a situation. I know they exist. I am as angry as anybody else that there are people like that out there. But I also happen to believe that the overwhelming majority of people are not scam artists; they are good people, honest people, and they are trying to keep their families together.

I noted last night that during this wonderful economic time we have been having, the top 20 percent of income earners have enjoyed a 115 percent increase in earning power. The middle 20 percent has had a 9 percent increase. The bottom 20 percent has had an 8 percent decline in earning power. While we all rave about the great economy, for middle income families and less than middle income families the times have still been tough.

These are not evil people. The fact that they end up in a financial mess doesn't mean that their children ought to pay a price for it. If you want to be angry at the parent, don't take it out on a child who was born into a family that may face these kinds of financial crises. To say to them you are not going to be able to have access to basic household goods, things like toys, a VCR, and other basic necessities of raising a family, I think that goes too far. It is overreaching and it is unnecessary and it is harmful, and it hurts people. I don't know of anybody in this Chamber who wants to be a party to that.

For those reasons, Mr. President, the Senator from Louisiana and I, and others have offered this amendment. Hopefully, we can get broad and wide support for it to restore what, for 100 years, was basic policy. Families and children come first. Those who are the most vulnerable deserve the most protection. We ought to see to it in this bill that that fundamental principle is not changed. Whatever else we are doing with this law, children and families still come first in our minds, and we are not going to allow them to be hurt, intentionally or unintentionally, by provisions of this bill, as presently written, which would do just that. For those reasons, we offer this amendment for the consideration of the Senate and hope our colleagues will support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from the great State of Louisiana is recognized.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I rise in support of this amendment, which attempts to enhance a bill that is intended to do some good things to stop fraud and abuse. But this amendment attempts to take that bill and make it work for everyone and continue the tradition of protecting our children and our families, which is so important.

I thank the Senator from Connecticut for his great leadership and the way he has articulated this issue so well. Neither one of us is on the committee that considered this piece of legislation. I know there were many good Senators from the Republican side and many good Senators from the Democratic side who have come at this with the right intention—to eliminate fraud and abuse. But I thank him for his leadership because, frankly, without this amendment, this bill falls very short of those good intentions.

We, in Louisiana—I know the people in Kansas are like this, too, and I know the people in Connecticut are like this—believe in paying our debts. We do not like freeloaders. We do not like people who are reckless with their finances, although every now and then sometimes we might be, in small instances or large. We do not like that. It is not a value we hold. We believe in being fiscally responsible. We believe in taking care of your own. We believe in taking care of our debts.

So I certainly want to support a bill that would clamp down on fraud and abuse. If it was a poor person who was using fraud and being abusive of the system, they would certainly have to follow the same rules as a middle-class family or as the wealthiest person in my State. I am not asking, and neither is Senator DODD, for any special privilege for any man or any woman. We do ask for special consideration for children. They are not the ones who are ''guilty.'' But we ask no special provision.

This bill as it is currently written goes much too far. I also join Senator DODD in asking the President, if this amendment is not adopted—and I do not know; it may be I will join him in asking the President to veto this bill because this would be a terrible blow to families, to children, and particularly single parents, many of whom are women but not all. There are some fathers who have custody of their children—one, two, three or four—who would fall under the same draconian terms of this bill.

There is no denying, as I said, that there is need for reform of the current bankruptcy law and practice. However, it is important the final bill accurately reflect the needs of those most affected by bankruptcy. This amendment we offer does just that. It has four parts. I am going to speak briefly about only one.

Over the past two decades we have witnessed a 400-percent increase in the use of bankruptcy courts in this country. That figure is alarming. That is why we are trying to see what is causing that and trying to offer some solutions. The figures show a rising number of those claiming bankruptcy, however, are single women. In fact, single women comprise the fastest growing group to file bankruptcy, surpassing men and married couples.

In 1999, more than a half-million single women will file for bankruptcy, 10 times the number who filed in 1981. Despite the overwhelming number of women who find themselves in this untenable state of economic instability, S. 625, as written, does not at all reflect the needs of this population of debtors. This amendment simply revises necessary sections of the bill so it is more realistic, more flexible, and more reasonable in dealing with women and their children, single women and their children—sometimes one child, sometimes two, sometimes three, and in a few cases more than that.

Our amendment does not ask that women with children be treated any differently under the law. It simply ensures the standards which apply to all debtors be sensitive to the very different situations which cause a person to file for bankruptcy. So, in our zest to curb the abuse of some, the rights and needs of others should not be ignored.

S. 625, as currently written, makes it significantly easier for credit card debt to be considered nondischargeable, which is necessary in ending fraud and abuse. However, I think this bill inadvertently puts the claim of credit card companies at a distinct advantage over single mothers or single fathers who are trying to claim their child support. In most cases that is going to be a single mother.

I concede the language clearly is written in the bill that states women and children are the ''first in priority.'' The practical reality, as the Senator from Connecticut has pointed out, as it is currently drafted, is they are first in line for nothing. Given their circumstances of bankruptcy and their lack of resources, how would they ever find the money to hire a lawyer or get the professional services they need to compete in this legal, cumbersome, complicated, time-consuming, and actually spirit-breaking system we are attempting to create here.

Let me demonstrate with an example. I think if people can see an example they might understand this. For the purposes of this argument, let's take Doris, who is a divorced mother of three children ranging in age from 3 to 13 years old. She works at a job earning more than minimum wage but not much. Her ex-husband is 5 months behind in child support—not atypical, given the millions and billions of dollars that are owed. If this bill passes, this is what will happen.

In September of this year, she goes to Kmart where she purchases food, clothing, and other essential items for her family totaling $260. I go to Kmart and Wal-Mart. That is not an unreasonable bill. It is hard to support a family with food and clothing and essentials for much less than that. Actually, I spend more than that in a month. But she spends only $260, trying to be frugal.

In November, she comes to grips with the reality that her income will not get her through the winter. She files for bankruptcy. Under the bill this Senate is about ready to pass, she is going to have to hire a lawyer and go to court to prove that her Kmart purchases were necessary for her family and were not made in an attempt to defraud the system.

I could not under any circumstances vote for a bill that would ask any of my constituents who live in Louisiana, or any who live in Connecticut or any place, to hire a lawyer to go to court to claim that the orange juice, milk, diapers, cookies, some snacks for school, maybe part of a school uniform, is a luxury item. When they come knocking at my door, saying, Senator, why does the law say this, I am going to say we made a terrible mistake. But I didn't make the mistake because we were on the floor trying to explain this to people. Hopefully, they are listening.

Our amendment makes a simple change to this process. Rather than putting the burden on proving the necessity of the purchase on a single mother who has no money, a lot of heartache, a lot of children to take care of, it just puts the onus on the credit card companies to prove these purchases were unnecessary. As the Senator has pointed out, they already have lawyers; they are a credit card company. They have accountants and lawyers to see, perhaps, if something does look amiss. Perhaps if the charges are quite large, they most certainly should be able to pull them into court and make sure the judge would take the proper action.

Credit card companies, as I said, have these investigators to check fraud. The people in my State of Louisiana, in that situation, I promise you, they do not.

Under our system of justice, a person is innocent until proven guilty. Under S. 625, as it stands right now, a woman is guilty of fraud unless she can prove her innocence. This is not what we want to do. I am positive this is not what this President of the United States wants to support. It is unacceptable. If our amendment does not get on this bill, I am going to vote against it. There may be some other amendments that we need to put on, but this clearly is one.

I thank Senator DODD for his leadership in this piece of legislation and will only add this to this discussion: One of the wonderful things I like about being a Senator is I learn something new every day. I guess my colleagues here feel that way, and I hope the staff does, because it is one of the most interesting things about this job.

I got, today, the gross monthly income schedule for the IRS. I have never had to file for bankruptcy. I don't think I have ever owed any taxes where I had to go according to this schedule. So this would be the first time I will have seen something like this. I am not a lawyer.

I want to say how surprised I am that our Government would have a schedule that basically says if you make $830 or less a month, and you owe taxes to the Federal Government, that you get to eat $170 worth of food. But if you are wealthy and you owe taxes to the Government, you get to eat $456 worth of food every month.

If you have children, if you have one child who happens to be in diapers, you get to buy $71 a month at the store. But if you are wealthy and you have a child—not wealthy but you make $5,000 a month, which would be fairly wealthy—and have one child, you get to buy almost $350 worth of diapers and apparel or services at the store.

My husband and I have a 2-year-old. I spend more than $40 a month on diapers alone—diapers. I don't want anyone in my State to have to hire a lawyer to prove that the expenses they have on their credit card to purchase food or clothing or diapers or milk or formula for their children is not a luxury.

I urge Members who might not have ever looked at this schedule that indicates, when you owe taxes, how much you get to keep—it has no mention of children, no educational expenses. I guess the IRS just assumes children should stop going to school while their parents pay back their taxes.

This is the same schedule I think the Senator from Connecticut has pointed out. I wish I had it blown up because I think people in America would have a hard time believing this.

Mr. DODD. Will my colleague yield?

Ms. LANDRIEU. I will.

Mr. DODD. This is a question for my colleague. The relevance of this is that under the bill as presently written, this is the schedule. This is not interesting subject matter because it is an IRS schedule for tax purposes. This is what has been adopted as part of the bankruptcy bill. So this is your schedule, this is what you know you are going to be limited to; is that correct?

Ms. LANDRIEU. Correct. That is my understanding. Under the current bill, we are adopting an IRS schedule that, in my opinion—and I imagine a majority of people in Louisiana will feel that way—this is an inappropriate schedule for that purpose. It most certainly is an inappropriate schedule for bankruptcy since nowhere on the schedule does it even mention the word ''child'' or children's needs. It does not mention medicine. It does not mention some of the essential things, as the Senator from Connecticut has pointed out.

Mr. DODD. If my colleague will further yield, nor does it mention any geography distinction. This is a standard price whether you live in Louisiana, Connecticut, California, New York City, Washington, DC—this is the same schedule for every person, regardless of where they live in the country; is that correct?

Ms. LANDRIEU. That is correct. As we know, the cost-of-living escalates and is very different from place to place and region to region. This chart is quite deficient.

After this debate, I will be looking at ways the IRS should improve their own schedule.

For the purposes of this debate, we most certainly do not want to take a schedule that is flawed for the purposes of collecting taxes and then apply it to a bankruptcy which is an equally difficult situation in which our families find themselves.

In conclusion, I realize there is fraud and abuse, and I will be the first one to step up and vote for a bill that will clamp down on it. No one deserves special privileges, whether they are poor, middle income or wealthy. This bill, as written, goes too far, and we will be sorry if we do not adopt some amendments to fix it and make it more fair. Let us fight hard for our families. Many of them are having a tough time already. Let's not have the children pay the price for us trying to expedite a bill that does not work for them or for their parents. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. The Senator from Louisiana may want to do this. It is worthwhile. I ask unanimous consent that the IRS schedule be printed in the RECORD so our colleagues have the benefit of looking at the rigidity of this schedule and the paucity of information and items one would normally, reasonably conclude a family might need in order to sustain itself during a period of bankruptcy, such as we suggested.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. DODD. Lastly, as I mentioned, virtually all the advocacy groups involved with children and families are in support of this amendment. There is a letter that comes from many of them, including the YWCA, Women Work, Women Employed, Older Women's League, Equal Rights Advocates, who issued a nice letter in support of this.

The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights also has a letter in support of this amendment, along with several other amendments. It specifically mentioned this amendment. I ask unanimous consent both of these letters be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOVEMBER 5, 1999.

DEAR SENATOR: The undersigned women's and children's organizations write to urge you to support Senator Dodd's amendment to S. 625, the ''Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1999,'' to protect income dedicated to the support of children and families.

S. 625 puts economically vulnerable women and children—those who are forced into bankruptcy, and those who are owed support by men who file for bankruptcy—at greater risk. By increasing the rights of many creditors, including credit card companies, finance companies, auto lenders and others, the bill would set up a competition for scarce resources between parents and children owed child support and commercial creditors both during and after bankruptcy. And single parent facing financial crises—often caused by divorce, nonpayment of support, loss of a job, uninsured medical expenses, or domestic violence—would find it harder to regain their economic stability through the bankruptcy process. The bill would make it harder for these parents to meet the filing requirements; harder, once in bankruptcy, to save their homes, cars, and essential household items; and harder to meet their children's needs after bankruptcy because many more debts would survive.

Senator Dodd's amendment would address several of the problems the bill would create for women and their families.

The means test provision would reduce some of the harsh and arbitrary barriers to accessing the bankruptcy process that are part of S. 625. S. 625 requires that a rigid means test, devised by the IRS for use with delinquent taxpayers, be applied to individuals and families that file for bankruptcy under Chapter 7 liquidation. The test is used to determine whether the debtor can repay some debt and will be forced into a Chapter 13 repayment plan. The Dodd amendment would make the test more reasonable as applied to families with children by including more family expenditures as allowable expenses, including costs of child care and the care of elderly and disabled family members, health care expenses; spousal and child support payments; expenses associated with adoption; and expenses for children's toys, among others.

The provision on household goods and property of the estate would provide more protection for essential household goods and income intended for the support of children during bankruptcy. In S. 625, only a very limited and specific list of household goods are protected from repossession or threat of repossession: one radio, one television, one VCR per household. Tape players and CD players are not on the list. A personal computer is protected, but only if it is used primarily for minor children; older children who use a computer for research and parents who do some work at home are out of luck. Senator Dodd's amendment, like the household goods provision in the House-passed bill, would allow each situation to be judged on a case-by-case basis, and would allow debtors to keep tangible property normally found in and around a residence.

The provision concerning property of the bankruptcy estate (assets that may be distributed to creditors during the bankruptcy) would ensure that child support payments, and Earned Income Tax Credit refunds available to low-income working families, are not subject to the claims of creditors.

The nondischargeability provision of Senator Dodd's amendment would reduce the competition between credit card companies, and women and children owed support, after bankruptcy. Under current law, child support and alimony are among the few debts that are not dischargeable in bankruptcy. S. 625 would elevate many credit card debts to nondischargeable status. This would increase the competition between credit card companies and women and children owed support after bankruptcy, and make it harder for hard-pressed families with children to get a ''fresh start'' through the bankruptcy process. S. 625 provides that if a person, within 90 days of bankruptcy, purchases items on a single credit card that total $250, they are presumed to be nondischargeable. S. 625 does give the debtor the right to show that the charges were for necessities, not for luxuries. But debtors will have to bear the burden and expense of going into court to prove that the $251 spent over three months for food, and clothing, and school supplies, were not luxuries.

Senator Dodd's nondischargeability provision would provide that credit card purchases would be nondischargeable only if: they are for $400 or more per item or service; they were made within 70 days of filing; and the creditor proves at a hearing that the items are not reasonably necessary for the maintenance and support of the debtor.

This amendment would not address all of the problems with S. 625. But it would ameliorate some of the harshest effects of the legislation on women and their families.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE ON CIVIL RIGHTS,

Washington, DC, November 9, 1999.

Re: The ''Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1999''.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the Leadership Conference on Civil rights (LCCR), a coalition of 180 national organizations representing people of color, women children, organized labor, persons with disabilities, older Americans, major religious groups, gays and lesbians and civil liberties and human rights groups, we urge you to oppose S. 625, the ''Bankruptcy Reform Act of 1999.''

As you know, bankruptcy reform has not been, per se, an issue of traditional concern to the LCCR. However, S. 625 poses significant concerns for the civil rights of all working persons in the United States.

While the LCCR does not support the comprehensive legislation of S. 625, we do support three amendments to the bill. First, we support the ''Children and Families amendment,'' which will be offered jointly by Senators Dodd, Landrieu and Kennedy. Second, we support the ''Predatory Leading Amendment,'' which Senator Durbin will offer. Third, we support the Minimum Wage Amendment which will be offered by Senator Kennedy. Each of these amendments is important to balanced and effective bankruptcy reform; and we strongly urge you to support them.

The ''Children and Families Amendment'' is designed to ensure that child and espousal support payments and earned income tax credits are not property of the bankruptcy estate. The legislation will replace the current definition of household goods with the House of Representative's definition to allow debtors to keep personal property found in and around the residence. Finally, the amendment will modify the means test to allow more flexibility when there are special expenses related to the care and support of children.

The ''Predatory Lending Amendment'' is designed to discourage abusive lending practices. The Durbin amendment targets lenders that violate current Truth in Lending Act standards. The amendment simply says if an individual violates current law they lose their claim in bankruptcy.

The Mimimum Wage Amendment is especially important and we strongly urge you to support it. It will help over 12 million Americans—mostly adult workers trying to support their families. By increasing the earnings of workers who are paid hourly from $5.15 to $5.65 an hour in 1999 and to $6.15 in 2000, we will be making it easier for these working families to provide the essentials for their children. Given that bankruptcy is particularly hard on low wage workers, this modest increase in the minimum wage is an especially fair element to any bankruptcy reform measure.

BACKGROUND

As a general matter, every economic discrimination suffered by disadvantaged groups in our society is reflected in the bankruptcy courts. Last year nearly 1.4 million families filed for bankruptcy, a record number. Most of the families that used the bankruptcy system were those middle class Americans who are most vulnerable economically:

SINGLE PARENTS AND THEIR CHILDREN

In 1997, about 300,000 bankruptcy cases involved child support and alimony orders.[1] For about half, women were creditors seeking payments from their ex-husbands following a divorce. In addition, nearly 400,000 women heads-of-households filed for bankruptcy to stabilize their economic conditions. Many dealt with debts incurred during marriage, including debts their ex-husbands had been ordered to pay but for which the wives remained legally responsible when their ex-husbands did not pay. Without bankruptcy, these women would have been forced to choose between spending their now-reduced family incomes on rent, groceries and utilities or on past-due credit card bills.

For women, the cumulative effects of lower wages, reduced access to health insurance, the devastating economic consequences of divorce, and the disproportionate financial strain of rearing children alone is reflected in why women heads of households find themselves in bankruptcy courthouses.

OLDER AMERICANS

About 280,000 Americans aged 50 and older filed for bankruptcy during 1997.[2] Older Americans are more vulnerable to the consequences of a job loss; someone pushed out of a job at age 54 has a very hard time coming back economically. Medical coverage is limited just as their medical needs increase. Among Americans older than 65, about a third explained that medical bills not covered by medicare has pushed them to economic collapse. Altogether, more than two-thirds of older Americans attributed their financial problems to uninsured medical bills and job losses.

AFRICAN AMERICAN AND HISPANIC AMERICAN HOMEOWNERS

About 650,000 homeowners filed for bankruptcy last year trying to save their homes.[3] For all homeowners, bankruptcy gave them a chance to stabilize economically and focus their incomes on paying their mortgages to save their homes. However, the economic struggle for Hispanic American and African American homeowners is harder than for any other group. While 68% of whites own their own homes, only 44% of African Americans and Hispanic Americans own their own homes. Both African American and Hispanic American families are likely to commit a larger fraction of their take-home pay for their mortgages, and their homes represent virtually all of their family wealth. It is no surprise, then, that African American and Hispanic American homeowners are six hundred percent more likely to seek bankruptcy protection when a period of unemployment or uninsured medical loss puts them at risk for losing their homes.

Industry consultants estimate that credit card companies could cut their bankruptcy losses by more than 50% if they would institute mimimal credit screening.[4] Instead, the credit issuers have spent a reported $40 million last year on lobbyists and lawyers to urge Congress to become the collection agent for their bad loans—even as their profits reach into the billions of dollars.

We strongly believe that the underlying provisions of S. 625 would disproportionately affect working families and the constituencies that comprise the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights. While the LCCR does not support the overall bankruptcy reform bill, we fully support the ''Children and Families Amendment;'' the ''Predatory Lending Amendment;'' and the Minimum Wage Amendment. Each of these amendments is important to balanced and effective bankruptcy reform. We strongly believe that no bill should be enacted that does not include these three amendments that are crucial to the livelihood of all working Americans.

Thank you for consideration of our views.

Sincerely,

WADE HENDERSON,
Executive Director.

Endnotes at end of article.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I do not know what the schedule is for this. I know we are not going to vote this evening, obviously. I ask unanimous consent that prior to a vote on this amendment the proponents and opponents will have at least a couple of minutes on either side to explain this amendment to our colleagues, since it is a bit complicated. There are pieces to it. Two minutes may not be enough; maybe 3 minutes on a side to explain what is in this amendment prior to the vote, whenever that occurs, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. I know other colleagues want to be heard. I thank the indulgence of my colleagues on the floor for listening to this debate.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, one of the provisions of the bill before the Senate today would ''amend the Federal Reserve Act to broaden the range of discount window loans which may be used as collateral for Federal Reserve notes.'' This legislation was considered by the House Banking Committee and has been referred to the Senate Banking Committee. It is now being offered as an amendment to the bankruptcy bill to expedite its enactment prior to the adjournment of the Congress.

The currency collateral legislation would expand the field of assets that the Federal Reserve may use to collateralize Federal Reserve notes. All currency in circulation must be backed by specific assets, but much of the collateral that the Federal Reserve accepts for discount window loans is ineligible under current law for use to back the currency. The changes put in place by this legislation will allow the Federal Reserve to apply all eligible discount loan assets to collateralize the currency.

This legislation poses some risks unless adequate safeguards are in place. The Federal Reserve applies a discount to each type of asset used as collateral. Broadening the scope of eligible assets makes it even more imperative that strict and aggressive discounting be applied to any assets used to back U.S. currency. The Federal Reserve should discount aggressively these assets through an objective and clearly defined process that leaves no room for doubt that our currency is fully backed by reliable assets. At the most basic level, when valuing these assets this should be our general rule: when in doubt, discount.

Failure to discount collateral assets aggressively would do more than threaten the safety and soundness of the Federal Reserve's balance sheet; it would threaten the U.S. economy and all economies that rely on a stable dollar. Many countries around the world recently have learned a painful lesson on the value of a sound currency.

We must remember that any country can engage in monetary mismanagement, and most have at some point in time. The United States must avoid that path. With a currency that is considered a stable medium by U.S. citizens and a store of value by both domestic and foreign investors, the Federal Reserve must hold sound money paramount as it implements this important change in currency collateral requirements. It has taken nearly two decades to rebuild the reputation of the dollar after the inflation of the Carter years. Today, ''sound as a dollar'' has meaning here and all over the world. We must do nothing to undermine it.

Mr. L. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I rise to clarify my two votes today on amendments to the bankruptcy reform legislation to increase the minimum wage by $1.00, from $5.15 to $6.15 per hour. Let me begin by saying that I preferred the approach taken by Senator KENNEDY's amendment to increase the minimum wage in two increments over the next fourteen months.

As my colleagues are aware, an increase in the minimum wage is needed for our Nation's workers. At our current minimum wage of $5.15 per hour, many of our workers are unable to support themselves and their families. In response to this need, I voted against a motion to table the Kennedy amendment because I believe workers should receive the increase over fourteen months, as opposed to the twenty-nine months proposed in the Domenici amendment. I also preferred the Kennedy approach because the business tax incentives offered in the amendment were fully paid for. On the other hand, the Domenici amendment provided $75 billion in business tax incentives to be funded by projected budget surpluses which may, or may not, materialize. Nevertheless, to its credit, the Domenici amendment offered provisions related to health insurance deductibility, and the permanent extension of the Work Opportunity Tax Credit—two important legislative items.

It is no secret that our economy is strong. Inflation is low and the economic arguments against raising the minimum wage are attempts not particularly persuasive. In fact, a recent editorial in the Providence Journal stated that ''. . . higher wages often mean greater loyalty and effort on the part of employees. Thus, whatever the increment of a higher minimum wage, that cost could be more than offset by higher revenue and profits from increased productivity and reduced turnover, hiring, and training costs. . . . Congress ought to do it.''

However, when the Kennedy amendment was tabled, I thought it was important to have, at the very least, some version of a minimum wage package approved by the Senate. Thus, I then voted in favor of the Domenici amendment. Although it is not an ideal package, I am hopeful that an agreement can be reached on a sensible, bipartisan approach to raising the minimum wage once the House passes its own version of the legislation. I urge my colleagues find that common ground, which in the end, will help our economy and our working families. We ought to do it.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the amendment I will offer requires the Federal Reserve to submit a report to the Senate and House Banking Committees concerning: (1) whether the location of the residence of an applicant for a credit card is considered by a financial institution in determining whether the applicant should be granted such card; and (2) the purposes for which such location is taken into consideration by such institution.

Mr. President, an individual's credit worthiness should be judged on his or her own credit history and not on where that individual happens to live. The stereotyping of consumers based on where they live is a social evil with very negative social consequences. The Congress has been instrumental in formulating legislation that seeks equal credit opportunity for all. If creditworthy persons can be rejected on account of his or her place of residence, our work is incomplete. Credit applicants should be considered on the basis of their individualized creditworthiness and not on the basis of place of residence.

Mr. President, this amendment requires that the Federal Reserve report be submitted not later than six months after the date of enactment of this act. I understand that the committee has no obligation to this amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the text of my amendment be printed following my remarks. The amendment is as follows:

SECTION 415

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today I want to discuss a measure that will deal with a problem with the pension limits in section 415 of the Tax Code as they relate to multiemployer pension plans. This is a problem I have been trying to fix for years.

Section 415, as it currently stands, deprives working people of the pensions they deserve. In 1996, Congress addressed part of the problem by relieving public employees from the limits of section 415. It is only proper that Congress does the same for private workers covered by multiemployer plans.

Mr. DOMENICI. How does the current language of section 415 deprive workers of the pensions they earn?

Mr. STEVENS. That is a good question. It is a difficult issue that points to the complexity of the current Tax Code. Section 415 negatively impacts employees who have had various employers. Currently, the pension level is set at the employee's highest consecutive 3-year average salary. With fluctuations in industry, often times employees have up and down years rather than steady increases in their wages. This is especially true for those in the construction industries and other sectors that fluctuate with the local economic conditions. Fluctuations in work and income from year-to-year can skew the 3-year salary average for the employee, resulting in a lower pension when the worker retires.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the Senior Senator from Alaska have any examples of how section 415 negatively impacts workers in multiemployer plans?

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Budget Committee chairman for asking about section 415's real impact. An example of section 415's impact illustrates how unfairly the current law treats working people in multiemployer plans. Take, for instance, a woman who held two jobs before retiring. Upon leaving her first job she had accrued a monthly retirement benefit of $474 per month. In her second job she was employed for 15 years by a local union and her highest annual salary was $15,600. When she retires she applies for pension benefits from the two plans by which she was covered. She had earned a monthly benefit of $1,000 from the one plan and combined this with the monthly benefit of $474 from the second plan for a total monthly income of $1,474 or $17,688 per year. She looked forward to receiving this full amount throughout her retirement. However, the benefits had to be reduced by $202 per month, or about $2,400 per year to match her highest annual salary of $15,600. The so-called ''compensation based limit'' of section 415 of the Tax Code did not to take into account disparate benefits, but intended only to address people with a single employer likely to receive steady increases in salary.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does this affect all retirees with pension plans?

Mr. STEVENS. No. Section 415 treats public employees differently from workers in multiemployer plans. If she had been a public employee covered by a public plan, her pension would not be cut. This is because public pensions plans are not restricted by the compensation-based limit language of section 415. This robs employees in multiemployer plans of the money they have earned simply because they were not public employees.

Mr. DOMENICI. How does the current treatment of section 415 comport with recent efforts to increase pension education and to encourage people to save for retirement?

Mr. STEVENS. We do look for ways to encourage people to save for retirement and we try to educate people of the fact that relying on Social Security alone will not be enough. Yet the law may penalize many private sector employees in multiemployer plans by arbitrarily limiting the amount of pension benefits they can receive. It is wrong, and it should be fixed.

Mr. DOMENICI. How would the proposed changes to section 415 impact the treasury?

Mr. STEVENS. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimated last year that the changes adopted by the Senate on July 30th and included in my proposal would result in a tax expenditure of $4 million in the first year, $26 million over 5 years and $69 million over 10 years. It is a modest price to pay to ensure that people who have worked all their life can get the retirement benefits they are entitled to.

Mr. DOMENICI. This is not a new issue, is it?

Mr. STEVENS. No. It is an issue I have been involved with since the mid-1980's. Since that time we have seen thousands of working people in multiemployer plans retire with benefits below what they actually earned. I cosponsored S. 1209 with Senator MURKOSWKI in this session to address the problems of section 415. The provisions of that bill were accepted by the Senate Finance Committee and were included in section 346 of the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 passed by the Senate. That provision would have:

(1) Eliminated the application of the 100 percent of compensation defined benefit plan limit for multiemployer plans;

(2) Not allowed multiemployer plans to be aggregated with other plans maintained by an employer contributing to the multiemployer plan in applying the limits on contributions and benefits except in applying the define benefit plan dollar limitation;

(3) Applied the special rules for defined benefit plans of governmental employers to multiemployer plans, thus eliminating the high-three-year average limitation; and

(4) Increased reductions of the dollar limit prior to age 62 for defined benefit plans of governmental employers and tax-exempt organizations, qualified Merchant Marine plans and multiemployer plans from $75,000 to 80 percent of the defined benefit dollar limit.

In addition, measures to relieve the inequity of applying the three year high average had been passed three times prior to the passage of the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 by the Senate, most recently in the 1997 Taxpayer Relief Act.

The provisions contained in the Domenici Amendment to the bankruptcy bill would:

(1) Increase the limit for defined benefit plans from $90,000 to $160,000;

(2) Increase the limit to be adjusted before the Social Security retirement age from $90,000 to $160,000; and

(3) Increase contribution limits from $30,000 to $40,000.

While these proposals are important to ensuring retirees get the benefits they deserve, they do not go far enough to create parity between retirees in multiemployer plans and retirees in public plans.

Mr. NICKLES. Note that the Senate Finance Committee approved most of the provisions outlined by Senator STEVENS and later all of the provisions in his proposal were included in the Senate version of the Taxpayer Refund Act of 1999 that passed the Senate on July 30th. The problems for working people in multiemployer plans associated with section 415 concern me and I understand the Budget Chairman will join me in working to secure the provisions described by Senator STEVENS.

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. The assistant majority leader is correct.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the distinguished budget chairman and the assistant majority leader.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MICROSOFT FINDINGS OF FACT

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, it was recently reported that Department of Justice anti-trust chief Joel Klein attended a party to celebrate James Glassman's new book ''Dow 36,000.'' During the party, Mr. Klein, who is prohibited from buying and selling stocks while he serves in his current post, was overheard saying to the author, ''Wow. Dow 36,000—I hope it'll wait until I get out of office.'' Mr. Glassman reportedly responded that Mr. Klein was already doing his part to keep the Dow down.

Mr. President, I am here to report that not even Joel Klein and the Department of Justice can shake the confidence of investors all across this great land who responded to Judge Jackson's Findings of Fact with a mild yawn. Apparently, investors understand that punishing trail blazing companies that have brought dramatic and positive change to consumers never has been, and never should be, the American way.

Despite the Government's attempts to turn the public against Microsoft, Microsoft continues to be one of the most respected companies in America. A majority of Americans believe Microsoft is right and the Government is wrong in this current lawsuit. In fact, a Gallup poll conducted over the weekend suggested that 67 percent of Americans still have a positive view of Microsoft despite the efforts of the Federal Government.

Judge Jackson made clear early in the case that he shared the administration's desire to punish Microsoft for being too successful. His Findings of Fact do not remotely reflect the phenomenal competition and innovation that is taking place in the high-tech industry every day. Reading the Findings, it is clear that even this judge could not document tangible consumer harm. Judge Jackson's thesis is that Microsoft is a tough competitor and that that toughness must stifle innovation and must harm consumers. But the judge could document no tangible harm * * * and this is why he will be reversed.

When you look at the world around us, whether in the workplace, at home, in schools, you see first-hand how 25 years of innovation in the high-tech industry has empowered and enriched people from all walks of life.

Every family and every community in America has benefited from the information revolution fueled by Microsoft. Sitting on the desktop in every office, school and hospital is a machine that brings power directly to people. Ten years ago only governments and large institutions had the power that so much information and knowledge brings. Today, because of competition among software and Internet businesses, that power runs to people and to families in cities and towns everywhere.

While the trial was going on, the high-tech industry has changed dramatically and reinvented itself a dozen times. Competition is alive and well and consumers are reaping the benefits.

Do the following numbers sound like they come from an industry that is stifled by monopolistic practices?

In 1990, there were 24,000 software companies. Today there are 57,000. And this growth shows signs of accelerating even further.

The high-tech industry accounts for 8.4 percent of America's GNP and one-third of our economic growth.

This year, the software industry alone will add almost $20 billion in exports to America's balance of trade.

It is particularly amazing that Judge Jackson found that barriers to entry into the market are too high. Apparently Linus Torvalds didn't get that memo. The 21-year-old student at the University of Helsinki recently disseminated into cyberspace the code for a computer operating system he had written. This experiment has evolved into the Linux operating system, which now has over 15 million users and is supported by such industry heavyweights as IBM, Intel, Hewlett-Packard, Dell, Gateway, Compaq, and Sun Microsystems.

Also fascinating is the fact that the co-founder of Netscape, Marc

Andreessen, created the technology for the Netscape web browser when he was a student at the University of Illinois. Four years later, the company he founded sold for $10 billion. Clearly, anyone with a great new idea can compete in this fast-paced competitive economy.

Although Microsoft is at the center of this fantastic growth that has helped the economy and brought incredible technological advances to consumers, its position as a market leader is not secure. It remains true that anyone, from any background, can by hard work and determination, take on the most successful corporation of the 20th century. As the explosive growth of Linux shows, Microsoft, too, must be allowed to compete, or be relegated to the slow lane of the information superhighway.

The competitive environment in high-tech has never been stronger. Every day new alliances change the face of the industry. America Online has transformed itself into a web, software, and hardware dynamo by purchasing Netscape, forming an alliance with Sun Microsystems, and investing heavily in Gateway. It is competitors like this who are positioned to ensure that vigorous competition, which is a boon to consumers, will lead the way into the 21st century.

Should the Federal Government intervene, our entire economy will suffer. By picking winners and losers, stifling innovation and attempting to regulate through litigation, the Federal Government can do immeasurable harm to an industry it admits it doesn't even understand. Need I remind you that these are the same people who have brought you models of efficiency such as the IRS?

Regardless of the exponential growth and vigorous competition in the high-tech industry, Judge Jackson seems convinced that consumers have been harmed by Microsoft. This he believes despite the testimony of the government's own witness, MIT professor Franklin Fisher, who when asked whether consumers have been harmed by Microsoft, responded, ''On balance, I'd think the answer is no.''

Nevertheless, I was stunned when listening to Joel Klein proclaim that the Findings were great news for consumers. When is it good news for consumers to learn that the Federal Government is now running the high-tech industry? When Bill Gates, Scott McNealy (Sun CEO), or the head of a new high-tech start-up want to integrate new products or features into their software they will first have to get clearance from the de facto CEO of high tech, Joel Klein.

Speaking of the Associate Attorney General, if you were watching CNN last Friday evening without the volume on, you would have thought from the looks on their faces that Janet Reno and Joel Klein had just won the POWERBALL lottery or been given $10 million dollars by Ed McMahon. Mr. President, I repeat—this decision is not good news for consumers. The findings represent a terrible precedent, not only for Microsoft, but for high-tech companies in Silicon Valley, Austin, TX and the Dulles corridor in Virginia. The message is: if you get big, or too successful—you will be punished. The Department of Justice is keeping an eye on you—be careful or you may be next. The capital of the high-tech world isn't in Silicon Valley or Washington State, it's conveniently located within our Department of Justice on Pennsylvania Avenue.

But, Mr. President, I have been a frequent critic of the Department of Justice's attacks against Microsoft and the high tech industry for a long time now. I will continue to ask questions—I will continue to defend the ability of high-tech companies that wish to compete without the threat of government intervention. I will continue to be deeply concerned about how the Department of Justice's action on Friday will jeopardize America's standing as a global leader in the field of technology. The Department of Justice has now invited Microsoft's foreign competitors to use their governments to limit Microsoft's success. Joel Klein has just tilted the balance of power in favor of high tech companies abroad, in effect saying to Microsoft: Slow down and let the rest of the world catch up.

But I am sure many of these same questions and concerns will be raised by Microsoft's own employees next week when they host Vice President GORE on the Redmond campus.

To conclude, I repeat: This case should be dropped because antitrust laws exist to protect consumers—people who buy goods and services. Antitrust laws were not created to protect Microsoft's competitors, but that is what this Justice Department is doing. It is using the power of the Federal Government to punish Microsoft for being too successful in comparison to its competitors.

In the end, I believe, higher Federal courts will throw this case out. The truth and the correct legal analysis will prevail—Microsoft has not harmed consumers and, thus has not violated our antitrust laws.

EDUCATION

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, two major debates are taking place in the Congress and in the White House at the present time, two major debates relating to education.

Tomorrow we are likely to take up an amendment to establish the Teacher Empowerment Act. And tomorrow we will almost certainly deal, finally, with the appropriations bill for Labor, Health and Human Services, an appropriations bill that includes billions of dollars for public education in the United States of America.

There is a profound difference between the President of the United States and what I believe is a majority of the Members of both Houses of Congress over how that money on education should be spent. This morning's Washington Post summarizes that argument in quotations from our majority leader, Senator LOTT, and the President of the United States.

Senator LOTT said:

> The big issue is, who controls it? Will Washington bureaucrats assert and control where this money is used, or will there be some discretion at the local level, based on what local needs are, whether it's books or computers or training for teachers, or for teachers themselves?

The President of the United States, according to the Washington Post:

> . . . told reporters that the federal money for new teachers does not belong to states and local school districts. ''It's not their money,'' he said.

What arrogance. The money does not belong to President Bill Clinton. This is money that comes out of the pockets of the American people across the United States, money they want to be used on the most effective possible education for their children.

The American people believe very firmly that decisions relating to the education of their children can be made more effectively and more sensitively at home by elected school board members, by superintendents, by principals, by teachers, and by parents than they can be by bureaucracies in the Department of Education in Washington, DC, or even by that national superintendent of public instruction, the President of the United States.

In fact, during the course of this debate over whether or not we should grant more authority to local school districts and to teachers and parents, a number of studies have come out on the question of whether the primary need in education in the United States is more teachers.

One of them comes from my own State from the Joint Legislative Audit and Review Committee, the ''K–12 Finance and Student Performance Study.'' That study, just a little bit earlier this year, stated:

> An analysis of 60 well-designed studies found that increased teacher education, teacher experience, and teacher salaries all had a greater impact on student test scores per dollar spent than did lowering the student-teacher ratio. According to one researcher, ''Teachers who know a lot about teaching and learning and who work in settings that allow them to know their students well are the critical elements of successful learning.'' Given limited funds to invest, this research suggests considering efforts to improve teacher access to high quality professional development. A recent national survey of teachers found that many do not feel well prepared to face future teaching challenges, including increasing technological changes and greater diversity in the classroom.

The legislature's approach to funding K–12 education is consistent with the JLARC [Joint Legislative Audit and Review Committee] and national research. The legislature has provided additional funding for teacher salaries, staff development, and smaller classes, with more funding going to support teachers and less for reducing the student-teacher ratio.

In fact, the chart accompanying this study shows that increasing teacher salaries is 4 times more cost efficient than reducing class size, increasing teacher experience is 4.5 times more cost efficient than reducing class size, and increasing teacher education is 5.5 times more cost efficient than reducing class size. Given this information, it is clear that the President of the United States is putting politics ahead of academic achievement for our children.

There is another interesting statement on this subject written in April of this year by Andy Rotherham at the Progressive Policy Institute, an arm of the Democratic Leadership Council. He now, incidentally, works for the President. But he wrote in April:

. . . President Clinton's $1.2 billion class-size reduction initiative, passed in 1998, illustrates Washington's obsession with means at the expense of results and also the triumph of symbolism over sound policy. The goal of raising student achievement is reasonable and essential; however, mandating localities do it by reducing class sizes precludes local decision-making and unnecessarily involves Washington in local affairs.

During the debate on the Clinton class-size proposal, it was correctly pointed out that research indicates that teacher quality is a more important variable in student achievement than class size. In fact, this crucial finding was even buried in the U.S. Department of Education's own literature on the issue.

Finally, another quite liberal organization, the Education Trust, agrees that we cannot afford to make schools hire unqualified teachers. Kati Haycock, executive director of the Education Trust, said yesterday:

The last thing American children need—especially low-income children—is more underqualified teachers. If the White House hopes to ensure that the Class Size Reduction program will boost student achievement, it should accept the Congressional Republicans' proposal that would allow only fully qualified teachers to be hired with these funds.

Teacher quality matters, and it matters a lot. Highly qualified teachers can help all students make significant achievement gains, while ineffective teachers can do great and lasting damage to students. The difference between an effective teacher and an ineffective teacher can be as much as a full grade level's worth of academic achievement in a single year. That—for many students—can make the difference between an assignment to the ''honors/college prep track'' and an assignment to the remedial track. And that assignment can be the difference between entry into a selective college and a lifetime at McDonald's.

Yes, small classes matter, but good teaching matters more. Our kids can have it all—smaller classes and better teachers. But first, the adults in Washington need to put aside the partisan bickering and remember what really matters—the best interests of American students.

This is exactly what we are trying to do. It is what we are trying to do in this last great appropriations bill: Saying yes, more teachers is a very important priority, but school districts ought to be able to decide that perhaps teacher training is even more important than that, or perhaps there is another higher education priority in their schools, in their communities, in their States.

Tomorrow, when we debate whether or not to add to this bill the Teacher Empowerment Act, we will be doing exactly the same thing, saying we in this body in Washington, DC, do not know all the answers, that there is not one answer for 17,000 school districts across the country; and we ought to trust the people who are spending their lives educating our children.

This is a vitally important debate, and one that the children can only win if we grant flexibility to those who are providing them with that education.

SENATOR LUGAR'S 9,000TH VOTE

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I bring to the attention of the Senate that today the senior Senator from Indiana cast his 9,000th vote as a Member of this body.

Throughout his career, Senator LUGAR has compiled a 98 percent voting attendance record. He did not miss a single vote during the entire 105th Congress. Along with our colleagues from Maryland, Senator SARBANES, and Utah, Senator HATCH, Senator LUGAR stands next in line to join the Senate's 10,000 vote club. A mark reached by only 21 Senators in history.

Many of you know of Senator LUGAR's passion for long-distance running. On occasion, a vote has been called while he was on one of his late afternoon runs on the Mall. Senators are not surprised when they encounter their colleague from Indiana in running shoes after double-timing back to the Senate Chamber for the vote. Casting 9,000 Senate votes is a fitting accomplishment for a long-distance runner who already stands as the longest-serving U.S. Senator in Indiana's history.

I am honored to have the opportunity to work with Senator LUGAR and pleased to recognize him on this historic milestone.

THE SATELLITE HOME VIEWER ACT

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I rise to speak for a moment about another subject. I do not want to interfere with this important debate, but I think the subject I want to speak about is important in its own right. I want to put my colleagues and the public on notice about what is happening.

Probably we have all received more telephone calls and more letters on the so-called Satellite Home Viewer Act than any issue we have dealt with in this Congress. This is an issue that flows from the fact that people who have satellite dishes, especially people who live in the country, want to have access to their nearest television station. It is something we all understand. For those of us who live in the country, it is something we want.

The House of Representatives adopted a very good bill that would allow negotiations between satellites and local television stations with a goal of bringing the local television station into every living room and den in America. This would be a great boon to people who have satellite dishes in rural areas.

That bill was adopted in the House 422 to 1 on April 27. On May 20, the Senate unanimously adopted a similar bill. These bills are very strongly supported. We are all getting hundreds of telephone calls in support of them. They do what each caller wants, and that is make it possible for people, especially in rural areas, who have satellite dishes to get the news and the weather from the local station, however far away that may be.

The problem is, for some unexplainable reason—at least unexplainable to logic—in the conference, rather than adopting the House bill or the Senate bill or something in between, the conferees apparently decided that not every problem in the world was solved, and therefore in an effort to try to solve problems which were not part of either bill, they decided to put the American taxpayer on the hook for a $1.25 billion loan guarantee.

I want to make it clear. This loan guarantee was not part of the Senate bill for which we voted unanimously. It was not part of the House bill that passed 422 to 1. It was produced out of whole cloth in conference when the basic idea was there are additional problems that might be dealt with, so as a result, we want to simply add $1.25 billion.

When you approach the people who added it, you get the idea this is somehow for small business. But when you read their bill, one of the loans can be as large as $625 million. The two obvious beneficiaries are two companies, one of which saw its equity value go up 4½ times the rate of the growth of the Dow Industrial Index over the last 12 months; the other one saw its equity value go up 49 times as fast as Dow did in the last 12 months.

You might wonder why these two extraordinarily successful businesses with an explosion in their equity value, as measured by the value of common stock, suddenly need the taxpayer to come forth and sign a loan guarantee of $1.25 billion to get to the bottom line. I am for the satellite bill. I voted for it in the Senate. I would like to see it passed. I think it is an important piece of legislation. But I am adamantly opposed to Members of the House and the Senate simply deciding to put the taxpayer on the hook for $1.25 billion, with a provision that was in neither the House bill or Senate bill, a provision that cannot be justified by any logic whatsoever.

I want to make it clear if that bill comes to the floor of the Senate and it has that loan guarantee in there obligating the American taxpayer for $1.25 billion, money that was not in the House bill, was not in the Senate bill, I intend to object to its consideration, and it will not become law in this millennium.

I cannot speak beyond this thousand years. But I can assure you that under the rules of the Senate, it will not become law before the turn of the new millennium, if then.

One of the authors of this provision, referring to me, said:

I don't think anybody would want to have the reputation of having cost millions of Americans the loss of their network signal, so I don't anticipate problems on either floor.

My response to our colleague in the House is: Anticipate problems on the floor of the Senate. And if anyone is endangering the ability of Americans to get the local television signal, it is not me; it is those who have added a $1.25 billion loan guarantee in this bill.

I know there are going to be a lot of people calling my office and others. Here is my message: If you are for the satellite bill, if you want to be able to get your local television station, don't bother calling me. Call the people who want to add to a conference report this $1.25 billion giveaway which was not voted on in either House of Congress, and say to them: Quit trying to give my money away and give me my local television signal.

I am not going to let this bill be adopted this year with that $1.25 billion giveaway in it. It is not too late. The conferees can come to their senses and take this provision out. It was not in either bill. It should not have been there to begin with. We can have the satellite bill passed by the end of tomorrow's business. But if it is not taken out, it is not going to be adopted. I wanted to come over and make that clear so everybody would know exactly where we are. If you want this bill, insist the $1.25 billion giveaway be taken out of it. We have the ability and we should make it possible for people in the country to get the adjacent cities' TV stations. I am for that. I am a direct beneficiary of it. Many of the people I care about are.

But the idea we are talking about giving away $1.25 billion in loan guarantees to some of the most well-off companies in America as a rider on this bill is the kind of outrageous legislative action that has to be stopped. If they think because the underlying bill is so popular that everybody is just going to turn the other way and let this $1.25 billion giveaway occur, they are wrong. I do not intend to do that. It is not going to pass the Senate unless they take it out.

I yield the floor.

ORGAN DONATION REGULATORY RELIEF ACT

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, I rise today to address a potential crisis in our nation's system of organ donation. Last year, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) proposed regulations that would have had devastating effects on community-based transplant programs by prohibiting states from offering organs to their own sickest residents before making them available nationwide. In response to the overwhelming concerns of patients and health care professionals nationwide, Congress delayed the implementation of the regulations and commissioned a study by the Institute of Medicine to examine the impact of the regulations on the nation's current system.

The study drew several conclusions which demonstrate how the current system is effective and why the proposed regulations are misguided. For example, the study found that the current system of organ transplantation is reasonably equitable and effective for the sickest patients. It also found that the proposed regulations would increase the overall cost of transplantation in the U.S. Perhaps most important, the study found that the current system does not discriminate because of race or any other factors and that the waiting list for an organ transplant are treated fairly.

These conclusions support the long-held concerns of the organ transplant community that the regulations, which would direct the United Network for Organ Sharing (UNOS) to develop a system which removes geography as a factor in organ donation, may actually increase waiting times in states, like New Jersey, with efficient systems.

These unintended consequences will be felt most greatly among patients with disadvantaged backgrounds. In New Jersey, we are extremely fortunate to have a system that is fair and efficient. New Jersey's unique system of certificate of need and charity care ensures that the most critical patients get organs first regardless of insurance. A national organ donation system will force the smaller transplant centers that serve the uninsured and underinsured to close as the vast majority of organs go to the handful of the nation's largest transplant centers with the longest waiting lists. Without access to smaller programs, many patients will be faced with the hardship of registering with out-of-state programs that may turn them away due to lack of insurance. Those who are accepted will be forced to travel out of state at great medical risk and financial hardship.

In light of these concerns, the conferees of the FY 2000 Labor, Health, and Human Services, and Education bill included language extending the moratorium on the regulations for a period of three months. While this is a very positive step, I am concerned that this moratorium would not provide sufficient time for Congress to consider this issue as part of the debate on the reauthorization of the National Organ Transplant Act.

I am pleased to join my colleagues Senators SESSIONS, HUTCHINSON, WARNER, MACK, SHELBY, NICKLES, INHOFE, THURMOND, ASHCROFT, MCCONNELL, ROBERTS, KOHL, FEINGOLD, CLELAND, HOLLINGS, BREAUX, GRAHAM, COLLINS, GRAMS, LAUTENBERG, ENZI, MURSKOWSKI, GORTON, LANDRIEU, ROBB, and LINCOLN to introduce the Organ Donation Regulatory Relief Act of 1999.

This bipartisan legislation will delay the Secretary's ability to issue regulations regarding the nation's organ donation system until Congress considers the complex issues surrounding organ procurement and allocation as part of the reauthorization of the National Organ Transplant Act.

For the past 15 years, the national organ procurement and allocation system has existed without federal regulation. During this time, each State has developed a unique system to meet their individual needs. Many states, such as New Jersey, have focused on serving uninsured and underprivileged populations. Clearly improvements can be made to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of organ donation nationwide. The legislation will ensure Congress has ample time to consider these important issues prior to allowing the implementation of far-reaching regulations that will revamp the system.

FOREST FIRES IN EASTERN MONTANA

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, when a hurricane engulfs the Eastern seaboard or an earthquake shatters the lives of Californians, we reach out with compassion to those people who are affected. America's hearts and minds always turn to those who are adversely impacted by these events.

I bring to your attention a devastating natural disaster that recently struck the Eastern portion of my home State, Montana. On Halloween night, it seems as if Mother Nature played a frightening trick on many rural Montanans. A storm below out of the Rocky Mountains and onto the plains of the short grass prairie with winds in excess of 70 miles per hour.

These violent winds stoked several prairie fires. The wild fires immediately became uncontrolled infernos as they are driven along by the gusts, in some cases the wall of flames spanning many miles.

The tiny town of Outlook, MT, was evacuated in the face of this unmanageable fire. Unfortunately, the town itself was laid to waste in the wake of the flames. Thankfully, due to the early evacuation and quick response of the authorities, no lives were lost.

Two hundred and fifty miles south of Outlook another town was facing the same fate. The rural community of Ekalaka was also under evacuation orders. A different fire of the same magnitude was moving toward town as it was swept ahead of the horrific winds. This fire spared the community but still left ruin in its wake. It is estimated that ten to twenty sections of good winter grazing land has been destroyed along with miles of fences and corrals. That is between 6,400 and 12,800 acres that producers will not be able to use for winter feed. The increased costs of buying hay to feed livestock will put a great burden on ranchers already experiencing financial hardship within their industry.

Not only were these two communities impacted, there were several other communities in Eastern Montana that sustained damage due to fires. I offer my sincere gratitude to all of those who worked so diligently to fight these fires and save property and lives.

We now have Montanans facing the onset of winter, homeless, without the security of their places of business, and agricultural producers, without feed for their livestock. Just as we unite together for those who are struck by other natural disasters, I hope that you will join with me in support of these Montanans, who lost not only their homes but their livelihoods.

Entire communities have been adversely affected by this unforeseen emergency and I will be watching closely to see that these folks receive the aid needed to rebuild their lives. Montanans have suffered great losses no less devastating than the hurricanes on the East Coast and they too deserve a helping hand in their time of need.

My thoughts and prayers go out to each and every individual whose lives are in disarray due to this sudden tragedy.

COST ESTIMATE ON EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a cost estimate on the Export Administration Act of 1999, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the cover letter and estimate were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, November 3, 1999.

Hon. PHIL GRAMM,
Chairman, Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for S. 1712, the Export Administration Act of 1999.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contacts are Mark Hadley (for federal costs), Hester Grippando (for governmental receipts), Shelley Finlayson (for the state and local impact), and Patrice Gordon (for the private-sector impact).

Sincerely,

BARRY B. ANDERSON
(For Dan L. Crippen, Director).

Enclosure.

S. 1712—Export Administration Act of 1999

Summary: The bill would replace the expired Export Administration Act (EAA), thereby updating the system for applying export controls on American business for national security or foreign policy purposes. Since the expiration of the EAA in 1994, the President has extended export controls pursuant to his authority under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act. The Bureau of Export Administration (BXA) in the Department of Commerce administers export controls. The bill also would prohibit participation in boycotts imposed by a foreign country against a country that is friendly to the United States, and would preempt state laws pertaining to participation in such a boycott.

CBO estimates that funding the Department of Commerce to carry out the bill would cost $255 million over the 2000–2004 period if funding is maintained at the 1999 level or $280 million if funding is increased each year for anticipated inflation. Because the bill would increase penalties for violations of export controls, CBO estimates governmental receipts would increase by $18 million over the 2000–2004 period. CBO estimates that half that amount would be spent from the Crime Victims Fund, and BXA would pay informants about $500,000 a year. Because the bill would affect direct spending and receipts, pay-as-you-go procedures would apply.

Section 4 of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) excludes from the application of that act any legislative provisions that are necessary for the national security. CBO has determined that several provisions of S. 1712 fall within that exclusion. One section of the bill that does not fall within that exclusion contains an intergovernmental mandate as defined in UMRA, but CBO estimates that the costs of this mandate would not be significant and would not exceed the threshold established in that act ($50 million in 1996, adjusted annually for inflation). Provisions of the bill that are not excluded from the application of UMRA also contain private-sector mandates. CBO estimates that the direct costs of those mandates would be below the threshold established in UMRA ($100 million in 1996, adjusted annually for inflation).

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: The estimated budgetary impact of the bill is shown in the following table. The costs of this legislation fall within budget function 370 (commerce and housing credit).

Estimated Authorization Level[1]	44	59	56	57	59	61
Estimated Outlays	43	56	55	57	59	61

[1] The 1999 level is the amount appropriated for that year. BXA has not yet received a full-year appropriation for 2000.

[2] The estimated authorization levels include annual adjustments to cover anticipated inflation, resulting in an estimated cost of $280 million over the next five years. Alternatively, if funding is not increased to cover anticipated inflation, the cost would be $255 million over the 2000–2004 period.

Basis of estimate: S. 1712 would authorize the BXA to control the export of certain items from the United States for national security or foreign policy purposes. Generally, export controls would not apply to products that are mass-market items or available from foreign sources at a comparable price and quality. Under the bill, exporters who are executing existing contracts that involve items which are prohibited from being exported for foreign policy reasons would be allowed to fulfill such contracts. CBO estimates that provisions of the Export Administration Act of 1999 would increase revenues by about $6 million a year beginning in fiscal year 2002 and direct spending by about $1 million in 2002 and $4 million a year thereafter. In addition, we estimate that implementing the bill would cost $280 million over the 2000–2004 period, assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts.

Revenues

Since the expiration of the EAA in 1994, criminal and civil penalties for violating export control laws have been collected under the Economic Emergency Powers Act. The bill would transfer the authority to levy fines back to the EAA and would significantly raise the maximum criminal fines that could be imposed—up to $10 million for corporations or $1 million for individuals—for violation of export controls. Under the bill, civil penalties of up to $1 million could also be imposed for violations of the law. On average, about two years elapse between the initial investigation of violations of export control law and the collection of a penalty. Fines are based on the law in force at the start of an investigation. CBO does not expect penalties under the new law to be collected until fiscal year 2002. Based on information from the Department of Commerce, CBO estimates that enacting the bill would increase receipts from penalties by $6 million a year beginning in 2002.

Direct spending

Collections of criminal fines are recorded in the budget as government receipts (i.e., revenues), which are deposited in the Crime Victims Fund and spent in subsequent years. We estimate half of the increase in governmental receipts attributable to this bill ($3 million a year), would be for criminal fines. Thus, the additional direct spending for this provision of the bill also would be about $3 million a year beginning in 2003, because spending from the Crime Victims Fund lags behind collections by about a year.

Under current law, BXA pays informants negligible amounts each year for leads on possible violations of export control law. The bill would allow BXA to pay informants the lesser of $250,000 or 25 percent of the value of fines recovered under the act as a result of the information provided. This provision would greatly expand the authority to pay informants. Based on information from BXA, CBO estimates that the bureau would pay informants about $500,000 a year, starting in 2002.

Spending subject to appropriation

BXA is responsible for implementing the EAA. Based on information from the Department of Commerce, CBO estimates that BXA's budget for this work was about $44 million in 1999, and about $45 million would be needed in 2000 to continue this work. S. 1712 would authorize the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary to continue this work, to hire 20 employees to establish a best practices program for exporters, to hire 10 overseas investigators, and to procure a computer system for export licensing and enforcement. Based on information from BXA, CBO estimates that implementing a best practices program for exporters would cost about $4 million a year, stationing overseas investigators would cost about $5 million a year, and procuring the computer system would cost about $5 million in 2000. Any such spending would be subject to appropriation of the necessary amounts. Assuming historical spending patterns and allowing for cost increases to cover anticipated inflation, CBO estimates that implementing the bill would cost $280 million over the 2000–2004 period.

Pay-as-you-go considerations: The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act sets pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or receipts. The net changes in outlays and governmental receipts that are subject to pay-as-you-go procedures are shown in the following table. For the purposes of enforcing pay-as-you-go procedures, only the effects in the budget year and the succeeding four years are counted.

	By fiscal years, in millions of dollars—
	2000	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009
Changes in outlays	0	0	1	4	4	4	4	4	4	4
Changes in receipts	0	0	6	6	6	6	6	6	6	6

Estimated impact on state, local, and tribal governments: Section 4 of the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act excludes from the application of that act legislative provisions that are necessary for the national security. CBO has determined that several provisions of S. 1712 fall within that exclusion. One section of the bill that does not fall within that exclusion contains an intergovernmental mandate as defined in UMRA. That section would preempt a state or local government's ability to participate in, comply with, implement, or furnish information regarding restrictive trade practices or boycotts fostered or imposed by foreign countries against other countries. Because state and local governments would not be required to take any action, however, CBO estimates that the cost of this preemption would be insignificant.

Estimated impact on the private sector: Section 4 of UMRA excludes from the application of that act legislative provisions that are necessary for the national security. CBO has determined that several provisions of S. 1712 fall within that exclusion. Provisions of the bill that do not fall within that exclusion contain private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA.

By replacing the expired Export Administration Act, the bill would impose private-sector mandates on exporters of items controlled for foreign policy purposes. (At the same time the bill would put into place certain new procedural disciplines on the President in the implementation of such controls.) In addition, S. 1712 would impose a mandate by prohibiting anyone, with respect to that person's activities in the interstate or foreign commerce of the United States, from participating in boycotts imposed by a foreign country against a country that is on good terms with the United States.

The bill also would make changes in the system of foreign policy export controls that would lower costs to the private sector of complying with requirements under that system. In particular, S. 1712 would restrict the use of foreign policy export controls on agricultural commodities, medicine, or medical supplies. According to information provided by several government and industry sources, the nonexcluded provisions of the bill would largely either codify current policies with respect to export controls or make reforms that could reduce requirements on exporters of controlled (and de-controlled) items. Thus, CBO expects that the direct costs of complying with private-sector mandates in the bill would fall well below the statutory threshold established in UMRA ($100 million in 1996, adjusted annually for inflation).

HATE CRIME VIOLENCE

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, a few weeks ago, I met with Alan Stepakoff, the father of six-year old Joshua, who was among five victims—three children ages 5 and 6; one 16-year old teenager and a 68-year old adult—gunned down at a Los Angeles Jewish community center last August by Buford Furrow, Jr., a white supremacist. Fortunately, the son and the four other victims survived the shooting and are on their way to recovery. Unfortunately, within minutes of this tragic shooting, the Nation learned that the same assailant had murdered in cold blood U.S. Postal Service carrier Joseph Ileto, a Filipino American, on account of his race.

This episode is but one of a growing list of hate crimes targeting places once believed to be safe havens—including schools, synagogues, churches, community centers. This incident is a grim reminder of how hate can provoke violence against the young and innocent. Unless we address this hatred and violence in our communities immediately and unequivocally, the list of such horrific events will certainly grow.

We have before us legislation that would address this growing blight on our society: the Hate Crimes Prevention Act of 1999. This important legislation was introduced by my colleague Senator KENNEDY and adopted by the Senate as part of Fiscal Year 2000 Commerce, Justice, State Appropriations Act.

Unfortunately, the measure was stripped from the first Commerce, Justice, State appropriations bill presented to the President. I urge my colleagues to insist on this provision's inclusion in the next such bill.

This legislation is urgently needed to compensate for two limitations in the current law. First, even in the most blatant cases of racial, ethnic, or religious violence, no federal jurisdiction exists unless the victim was targeted while exercising one of six federally protected activities—attending a public school or college; participating in a service or program sponsored by a state or local government; applying for or engaging in employment; serving as juror in a state court; traveling or using a facility of interstate commerce; and enjoying the goods or services of certain places of public accommodation.

These limitations have led to acquittals in several of the cases in which the Department of Justice has determined a need to assert federal jurisdiction and has limited the ability of federal law enforcement officials to work with state and local officials in the investigation and prosecution of many incidents of brutal, hate-motivated violence.

A second limitation in current law is that it provides no coverage whatsoever for violent hate crimes committed because of bias based on the victim's sexual orientation, gender or disability. As a result, federal authorities cannot prosecute individuals who commit violent crimes against others based on these characteristics. This is especially disturbing given the fact that according to the FBI, crimes against gays, lesbians and bisexuals ranked third in reported hate crimes in 1998, registering 1,260 or 15.6 percent of all reported incidents. Unfortunately, there are those who would stop short of supporting this important legislation because it extends protections to those targeted on account of their sexual orientation.

The hate crimes legislation introduced this year would remedy would expand the legislation I authored in 1994, which provided a bifurcated trial and enhanced penalties for felonies spawned by hate that took place either on federal land or in pursuance of a federally protected right (such as voting or attending a public school).

The Hate Crimes Protection Act broadens federal jurisdiction to cover all violent crimes motivated by racial or religious hatred, regardless of whether the victim was exercising a federally protected right. It would also include sexual orientation, gender and disability to the list of protected categories within current federal hate crime law, provided there is a sufficient connection with interstate commerce.

At the same time, federal involvement would only come into play if the Attorney General certifies that federal prosecution is necessary to secure substantial justice. In recent years, the existing federal hate crimes law has been used only in carefully selected cases where the state criminal justice system did not achieve a just result.

For many years I have been deeply concerned about hate crimes and the immeasurable impact they have on victims, their families and our communities. As I have previously mentioned, in 1993 I sponsored the Hate Crimes Sentencing Enhancement Act, which was signed into law in 1994 as a part of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994. Today, I believe the Hate Crimes legislation will build on this effort by modifying the current laws to allow the federal government to provide the vital assistance to states in investigating of crimes of this magnitude.

Sadly, hate crimes are becoming too commonplace in America. According to the U.S. Department of Justice, in 1998, 7,775 hate crime incidents were reported in the United States and 9,722 victims. Of that total, 4,321 or 58 percent of the crimes were committed on account of the victim's race. More than 3,660 victims of anti-Black crimes; 1,003 victims of anti-White crimes, 620 victims of anti-Hispanic crimes; and 372 victims of anti-Asian/Pacific Islander crimes.

In that same year, 1,390 or roughly 16.0 percent of the victims were targeted because of their religious affiliation. The number of anti-Jewish incidents is second only to those against blacks and far exceeds offenses against all other religious groups combined. Moreover, while by most accounts anti-Semitism in America has declined dramatically over the years, the level of violence is escalating.

Civil rights groups as well as federal and State authorities agree that in the last five years, reported hate crimes have increased annually, from 5,932 in 1994 to 7,755 in 1998. As of 1998, four States still do not collect hate crime data. Yet, even if all States were reporting these incidents, it would be difficult to gauge the true extent of the hate crime problem in this country because bias-motivated crimes typically are under reported by both law enforcement agencies and victims.

And while these crimes have become more numerous, they have also become more violent. Monitoring groups have observed a shift from racially-motivated property crimes, such as spray painting, defacement and graffiti, to personal crimes such as assault, threat and harassment. On a national scale, according to FBI statistics, almost 7 out of 10 hate crimes are directed against people. Nonhate crimes, by contrast, are directed against people only 11 percent of the time.

This legislation is long overdue. Looking back on this year alone, one might recall the litany of news stories describing a murderous rampage at a school in Littleton, Colorado; or the drive-by shooting attacks on Jews, an African-American, and Asian-Americans in Chicago, Illinois; or the two pipe-bomb explosions at the predominantly African American Florida A&M University; the brutal murders of two gay men in California; or the torching of synagogues in California; all despicable acts of virulent hatred.

We should work to give our citizens protection from those who would do them harm simply based upon their race, religion, gender, disability, or sexual orientation. Enactment of the Hate Crimes Prevention Act would send a message to our nation and the world that the singling out of an individual based on any of these characteristics will not go unnoticed or unpunished.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to enact this important legislation prior the end of this session.

SUPERFUND TAX RENEWAL

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I stand again in opposition to a proposal from my Democratic colleagues that attempts to renew the expired Superfund tax for the sole purpose of raising revenue to meet budgetary targets. We are once again faced with a policy which advances spending for social programs on the backs of small business owners and municipalities without any attempt to reform the current program.

I am puzzled at this current proposal for several reasons. First, it is estimated that the Superfund Trust Fund has maintained a surplus of $1.5 billion. In addition, appropriation committees in the House and Senate have allotted $700 million in general revenue to supplement funding for the program through Fiscal Year 2000. According to an analysis conducted by the Business Roundtable, it is estimated that the Superfund Trust Fund will have sufficient funding through 2002 without the need for further taxes.

Even without the imposition of taxes, contributions to the Superfund Trust Fund are plentiful. In 70 percent of all sites responsible parties paid cleanup costs in addition to reimbursing the EPA for its oversight expenditures. These payments, and the collection of all related costs to the EPA, are applied to the Trust Fund. In the remaining 30 percent of cases, the responsible parties pay the EPA to scrub the contaminated site in addition to paying for oversight costs. According to the Chemical Manufacturers Association, only 3 out of 150 sites required sole payment from general revenues because the parties involved either abandoned the site or were bankrupt.

The premise behind the initial creation of the Superfund program was to facilitate a rapid cleanup of hazardous waste sites nationwide, with the responsible parties largely funding the site cleanup. This is a relatively simple and logical concept known as the ''polluter pays'' principle.

Secondly, the EPA has admitted that the Superfund program is drawing to a close. Under such conditions, there is no compelling reason to reinstate a tax to fund a program which is not only flawed, but is being phased out.

I ask my colleagues to heed the advise of numerous business and taxpayer organizations that oppose the reinstatement of the superfund tax in the absence of overall reform. I ask unanimous consent that the letters from the following organizations be printed in the Record:

U.S. Chamber of Commerce, American Petroleum Institute, The Business Roundtable, American Insurance Association, and Americans for Tax Reform.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICANS FOR TAX REFORM,
Washington, DC, October 28, 1999.

Hon. BILL ARCHER,
Committee on Ways and Means, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN: I am writing to support your publicly-stated opposition to the imposition of any new taxes related to potential Superfund reform legislation pending in the House of Representatives. At a time when the non-Social Security budget surplus is projected to grow as high as $1 trillion, Congress should not be raising taxes to pay for more government spending.

Furthermore, the Corporate Environmental Income Tax (CEIT) that expired in 1995 is a direct tax on corporate income. Thus, if any one of the 209 of Members of the House Republican Conference who signed the Americans for Tax Reform pledge not to raise new personal or corporate income taxes were to vote for them, they would be in direct violation of their signed pledge.

The House of Representatives has correctly rejected President Clinton's proposal for new taxes on at least three different occasions, most frequently by passing the Sense of Congress that Congress should not raise taxes to pay for more government spending. We hope that this steadfast opposition to any new tax increases continues in the debate over reform of the Superfund program.

In summary, no new taxes means no new taxes, and we support your position not to raise any taxes to pay for more spending.

Sincerely yours,

GROVER G. NORQUIST.

THE BUSINESS ROUNDTABLE,
Washington, DC, October 19, 1999.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The Business Roundtable is opposed to renewal of the Superfund taxes for purposes of raising revenue to meet budgetary targets. By law the Superfund Trust Fund was intended to be dedicated to cleaning up sties on the National Priorities List (NPL) and not for other budgetary purposes. The Superfund is funded both by Superfund taxes, but also from recovery of cleanup costs from responsible parties. Members of The Business Roundtable fall significantly in both categories.

We strongly believe that the taxes, which expired in 1995, should not be renewed for the following reasons:

1. The Superfund Trust Fund has an estimated surplus of $1.5 billion. In addition, both the House and Senate appropriations committees have allotted $700 million in General Revenues to supplement funding for the Superfund program through fiscal year 2000. Under our analysis, we estimate Superfund will have sufficient funding through the year 2002 without renewal of the taxes.

2. Under the Superfund law's liability scheme, responsible parties largely fund site cleanup regardless of the imposition of taxes. The preponderance of funding for Superfund is driven by the law's liability scheme, not from taxes. Most ''deep pocket,'' responsible parties contribute well in excess of their actual fair share of responsibility. Where EPA spends money from the Trust Fund for cleanup, these expenditures are also in large measure recovered from responsible parties.

3. The Business Roundtable continues to support the principle that Superfund taxes be tied to comprehensive Superfund reform, including Natural Resource Damages. Both the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee and the House Commerce Committee have reported reform bills. ''Regular order'' would suggest that any future federal funding of superfund be tied to an assessment of the impact of these reforms on the future of the program. Taxes should not be renewed absent comprehensive reform, and the current bills need to be evaluated against this criterion. In particular we would note that at this point the legislation is silent on Natural Resource Damages, which we believe must be reformed.

4. Finally, both House and Senate Appropriations for EPA include directives for a study of the costs to cleanup the remaining sites on the NPL and bring the Superfund program to successful closure. We support such an analysis to determine what the actual cost estimates are for Superfund. Under an earlier Roundtable analysis we concluded that it would be feasible to finance the current program at a rate of about 20 to 30 new sites per year (historical average) with an endowment representing approximately four years worth of funding (historical tax rates). There is no compelling reason to reinstate the taxes at their full rate for five years to fund a program which is phasing down. Nor should funding be renewed absent completion of the analysis directed by both House and Senate committees.

We urge you to resist any efforts to reinstate Superfund taxes for budgetary purposes, absent the Congressionally directed evaluation of future program costs and reform legislation, which includes Natural Resource Damages.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

ROBERT N. BURT,
Chairman, The Business Roundtable Environmental Task Force, Chairman and CEO, FMC Corporation.

AMERICAN INSURANCE ASSOCIATION.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House,
U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.
Hon. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT,
Minority Leader, U.S. House of Representatives.
Hon. TRENT LOTT,
Senate Majority Leader, U.S. Senate.
Hon. THOMAS A. DASCHLE,
Senate Minority Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER, MR. LEADER, MR. GEPHARDT, AND MR. DASCHLE: In recent days proposals have been made to reinstate the expired Superfund taxes to provide revenue offsets for non-Superfund spending—such as the tax extenders bill now under consideration—without enacting meaningful Superfund reform. In addition, as this session of Congress draws to a close, there may be separate attempts to attach to unrelated legislation Superfund liability carveouts that shift cleanup costs to parties who remain liable at Superfund sites. We are writing to express our continued strong opposition to both of these proposals.

No Superfund Taxes Without Meaningful Superfund Reform.

Reinstatement of the expired Superfund taxes prior to enactment of meaningful Superfund reform would effectively prevent legislative reform of the Superfund program. That's because under the ''pay-go'' rules of the Federal budget laws, any Superfund reauthorization bill that includes mandatory spending provisions must also include provisions to reinstate the expired Superfund taxes or provide equivalent offsetting revenues ''within the four corners of the bill'' to keep it deficit neutral. Thus, if the Superfund taxes were to be enacted prior to consideration of a Superfund reform bill, Superfund reform could not be enacted without finding a new source of revenue, essentially an impossible task.

The taxes should not be prematurely reinstated, especially now that legislative reform of the Superfund program is within our reach. On August 5th the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee voted 69–2 to report H.R. 1300, the Recycle America's Land Act, introduced by Subcommittee Chairman Sherry Boehlert. That bill now has some 138 cosponsors, divided nearly equally between Democrats and Republicans. The House Commerce Committee is expected to mark up a similar bill, Mr. Greenwood's H.R. 2580, in the next few days.

In the meantime, the Superfund program does not need reinstatement of the taxes to continue operating at full speed. The current surplus in the Superfund Trust Fund, combined with continued appropriations at the most recent level, mean the program will be fully funded through at least FY 2002. In fact, even with enactment of legislative reform, reinstatement of the taxes at the full levels that existed prior to their expiration in 1995 is not necessary. As the Boehlert bill, H.R. 1300, recognizes, any new funding for Superfund should be carefully tailored to reflect the declining needs of the cleanup program, which EPA has acknowledged is winding down.

No Cost-shifting for Liability Exemptions.

We are also concerned that there may be attempts this year (just as there were last year) to provide liability relief for certain parties by inserting amendments into appropriations bills or other legislation. While we do not oppose properly-crafted liability exemptions for small business, municipalities, recyclers, or others, we do oppose exemptions that shift their shares of cleanup costs to the remaining Superfund parties. Under the Boehlert bill, H.R. 1300, these costs would be part of the orphan share paid by the Trust Fund. This is the original purpose for which Congress created the Trust Fund.

There is certainly no justification for shifting these orphan shares to the other parties. In fact, in recent years even EPA has consigned much more of these orphan shares to the Trust Fund. Shifting costs to other parties is not only unfair, it is one of the main causes of litigation and the attendant cleanup delay at Superfund sites.

In sum, we urge you to oppose reinstatement of the expired Superfund taxes without enactment of meaningful Superfund reform. We also urge you to oppose Superfund liability exemptions which shift cleanup costs to other liable parties.

If we can provide assistance or further information on these or other related matters, please do not hesitate to call on us.

Sincerely,

ROBERT E. VAGLEY,
President.

U.S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
AMERICAN PETROLEUM INSTITUTE,
October 8, 1999.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.
Hon. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT,
House Minority Leader, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.
Hon. TRENT LOTT,
Senate Majority Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.
Hon. THOMAS A. DASCHLE,
Senate Minority Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER, SENATOR LOTT, MR. GEPHARDT, AND SENATOR DASCHLE: We are writing to express our concern about possible efforts to reinstate the expired Superfund taxes. Proposals to reinstate the taxes solely as a means of raising revenue without enacting comprehensive reform of the Superfund program are very disturbing to us. Raising taxes on industry runs directly counter to congressional efforts to reduce taxes. Furthermore, the Superfund taxes do not need to be reinstated to keep the program going. Under the most recent appropriations and funding mechanisms, the trust fund will remain solvent for many years as the program begins to wind down. Even by EPA's own admission the Superfund program is drawing to a close.

The Superfund program was created to address a broad problem—paying for the cleanup of ''orphan'' waste disposal sites (those that were either abandoned or whose owners were bankrupt). A wide range of individuals, businesses and government entities have contributed to Superfund sites, therefore general revenues should pay for the program's administrative costs and the clean-up of sites where the responsible parties cannot be found.

In 1995, the Superfund taxes expired. EPA officials claim that using general revenues rather than industry-specific taxes to pay for Superfund would ''constitute paying for polluters' clean-ups on the 'backs' of the American taxpayers.'' That is simply not true.

Private sector responsible parties (the so-called ''polluters'') have always paid the majority of cleanup costs associated with the program. In addition, all responsible parties continue to pay their share of Superfund clean-up costs, even though the dedicated taxes have expired. Under CERCLA's strict joint and several liability standard, persons identified as contributing wastes to a Superfund site are paying their share (in addition to the shares of other contributors) of the clean-up costs.

Even without industry tax revenues, Superfund will have sufficient funding from general revenues, fines, penalties, and profits on investments to support the program into Fiscal Year 2002. For fiscal year 2000, the Appropriations Committees have chosen to fund between $700 and $725 million of the Superfund program from general revenues. In fact, Congress can fund the entire program from general revenues, according to the General Accounting Office and the Congressional Budget Office.

Simply stated the Superfund taxes should not be reinstated—instead, general revenues should continue to be used to pay for the program. Reinstating industry-specific taxes is not consistent with Congress' intent for the program, that is, whenever possible, polluters should pay for the costs of cleaning up the sites they helped contaminate. The debate over Superfund should not be about reinstating the taxes. It should be about winding down the program as it completes its original mission and devolving the day-to-day operation of the program to the states.

Sincerely,

RED CAVANEY,
American Petroleum Institute.
THOMAS J. DONAHUE,
Chamber of Commerce of the US.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, now is not the time to consider tax increases to pay for government spending, especially at the same time we are experiencing a non-Social Security surplus, projected to grow as high as $1 trillion over 10 years, and at a time when American citizens are paying taxes at the highest peacetime rate in history.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

SAFEGUARDING OUR SECURITY

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, there are few matters of more importance to the nation than the safeguarding of our security. Every day, tens of thousands of men and women wear the American uniform proudly in all the world's time zones while guarding against threats to American citizens and our interests. Perhaps there is no more perilous environment in which our servicemen and women operate than beneath the oceans. Because of the secrecy demanded by the myriad missions, Navy submariners have come to be known as the silent service. Often reluctant to speak on their own behalf, I commend to my colleagues attention the following article which is of great importance, not only to our nation's undersea warriors, but to the nation's security.

The commentary in Defense News touches upon an important opportunity. It is the chance to secure more useful life from four Ohio-class submarines slated for retirement. The article suggests the possibility of converting them from their strategic nuclear duties into tactical Tomahawk shooters able to provide our overseas warfighting commanders additional striking capability.

I ask unanimous consent this article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Defense News, Mar. 29, 1999]

CONVERTED SUBMARINES COULD BOLSTER U.S. POWER PROJECTION

(By Ernest Blazar)

Power projection can be a difficult concept to understand in the abstract. It is a nation's ability to make its military might felt beyond its borders—as diplomacy's coercive underpinning, deterrence or in actual combat.

American power projection has taken many forms in years past; the man-o-war, expeditionary Marines, the dreadnaughts of the Great White Fleet, the aircraft carrier, the Army's 82nd Airborne division and the Air Force's expeditionary wings. Different crises have demanded different kinds of U.S. power projection at different times.

In recent years, however, U.S. power projection at the lethal end of the spectrum combat has increasingly relied upon a single tool. Since its 1991 Persian Gulf war debut, the Tomahawk cruise missile has become the weapon of choice when crises demand swift and accurate U.S. military response.

They have cleared safe lanes for U.S. warplanes through enemy air defenses. Tomahawks have hit terrorists. And they have destroyed sites thought to hold mass destruction weapons. Over 700 have been used in six different strikes since 1991.

As Tomahawks' use grows so do the strains upon their launch platforms in the shrinking 300-ship fleet. So some in the Navy and Congress are seeking new ways to quickly boost the number of Tomahawk missiles—the power projection tool of choice—available to overseas U.S. commanders.

Attention has now fallen upon four Ohio-class submarines to be retired in 2003 and 2004. A now overdue Navy study to Congress reveals how these Cold War-era submarines, that once aimed nuclear-tipped missiles at the Soviet Union, can easily be converted to carry hundreds of Tomahawk missiles.

Doing so would give the U.S. Central Command in the Persian Gulf, for example, one such submarine year-round, thereby almost doubling the in-theater inventory of Tomahawks. That would take the pressure off other Navy ships needed elsewhere, increase deterrence and strengthen U.S. combat power should strikes be necessary.

The Navy's imminent report has found that the four Ohio-class subs could be fitted with Tomahawks and Navy Sea, Air and Land (SEAL) commando gear for $500 million each. According to New Jersey Senator Robert G. Torricelli, ''It's an inexpensive way of adding a new dimension to U.S. warfighting capabilities.''

All but two of the 24 strategic missiles tubes aboard the Ohio-class boats could be refitted to accept a canister holding six or seven Tomahawk missiles each, yielding a maximum of 154 cruise missiles. If some SEALs are aboard, along with their special gear, only 98–140 Tomahawks could be loaded—still more than any other Navy ship carries.

The full warload—all 154 Tomahawks—can be ''ripple-fired'' from the submerged submarine in less than six minutes. That is key because it allows the submarine to quickly, quietly and safely remove itself from the launch site after firing all its missiles.

A submarine-launched strike of that size offers two main advantages. First, by virtue of its stealth, a submarine can launch a surprise attack from within an enemy's early-warning perimeter. With no advance warning, large numbers of enemy targets can be hit before they are hidden, dispersed or emptied. There is no build-up of U.S. forces to warn an enemy of a pending attack. Second, submarines are less vulnerable to attack and counter-attack than are surface ships. If embarked SEALs are the best weapon for a mission, the converted Ohio-class boats can house 102 such men for short durations and 66 SEALs nearly indefinitely. This allows for a sustained special operations campaign, rather than solitary strikes, from a stealthy, invulnerable platform.

SEALs can also use the submarine's silos that once held nuclear-tipped strategic missiles to store their unique gear. There is ample room for a hyperbaric chamber to recompress divers if needed and a warming chamber which helps SEALs recover from prolonged exposure to cold water. The converted Ohio-class boats could also serve as 'mother-ships' to special underwater SEAL delivery craft like the Advanced Swimmer Delivery Vehicle minisub.

INNOCUOUS

Even though the four converted Ohio-class boats would no longer carry nuclear-tipped missiles, strategic arms control treaty limits would still apply to these boats. This means the ships' missile tubes, now filled with tactical missiles and Navy SEALs, would still be counted against ceilings that cap the number of U.S. and Russian strategic weapons. The Navy's study to Congress has found that, while complex, this issue can be accommodated as has been done before for other strategic missile submarines converted to special, tactical duties.

The nation has a rare opportunity to swiftly and cheaply boost its ability to project power. The conversion of these four Ohio-class boats will complement, not compete with, other Navy ships and Air Force expeditionary warplanes deployed to overseas hotspots. This chance to get new, useful life out of old Cold War-era systems on the cheap is the innovative and right thing to do for the Navy and the nation.

IN HONOR OF SENATOR JOHN H. CHAFEE

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in memory and tribute to Senator John H. Chafee, who was for me not just a colleague and friend, but a mentor on the Environment and Public Works Committee for the eleven years I have been in the Senate. Nearly every single environmental statute bears the strong stamp of his commitment and leadership; Superfund, the Clean Water Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act, barrier beach legislation, transportation laws, the Oil Pollution Protection Act. The list goes on and on.

When John Chafee first announced that he was not going to run for reelection, a lot of us who care about the environment realized what a great loss John Chafee's retirement would be. Now his sudden death reminds us all too quickly that he was an irreplaceable friend of the environment. He was a very sturdy, forthright, faithful leader at a time when the number of legislators in his great party who consider themselves environmental stewards grew smaller. This trend has been contrary to the proud environmental tradition of the Republican party that goes back to the days of Teddy Roosevelt and contrary to what I find to be the opinion of Republicans in Connecticut who are quite enthusiastically supportive of environmental protection. Senator Chafee held high the banner of that tradition.

He always considered himself a centrist and I know that what he meant by that was not that he was neutral, but that he was committed to bringing different groups and factions within Congress and outside together to get things done. One of my first and best experiences as a Senator was in 1990 when we were considering the Clean Air Act Amendments. Senator George Mitchell, then Majority Leader, pulled a group of us together with representatives of the Bush Administration in his conference room. John Chafee was there day after day, and night after night, throughout long, tedious negotiations. But in the end, he helped put the pieces together for us to adopt a bill signed by President Bush that has clearly made our nation's air healthier and cleaner.

He was also a leader in the effort to protect against global climate change, urging the President to adopt an international framework to address the issue as early as 1988, and supporting the efforts to achieve the signing and ratification of the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change. We went to Kyoto, Japan for the critical meetings there to forge further agreements to fulfill the objectives of the Framework Convention agreement. In that difficult setting John sent a message to the countries of the world which were being quite critical of the United States' position, that there was bipartisan support in Congress for taking action to address global warming. He and I then worked together with Senator MACK to sponsor what we thought was a modest proposal in this Congress to begin to give companies that reduce greenhouse gas emissions the promise of credit if and when we adopt a mandatory system for controlling that kind of air pollution. I remember laughing with John that we must be on the right path because our proposal was opposed by both sides of the debate.

John Chafee was the quintessential New Englander; he was a straightforward, very honest, very civil man. He also was a great outdoorsman. I think that some of the work he was proudest of involved his efforts to protect natural resources. He played a critical role in expanding our National Wildlife Refuge System and worked hard to conserve wetlands. He instituted several reforms to tax policy to encourage the preservation of open space. He was a great advocate right up to his death for full and permanent funding for the Land and Water Conservation Fund, which is so important to preserving open spaces in our states.

John Chafee was a good man and a superb chairman. Always respectful to those who came before our Committee, he wanted to get things done. When it came to the environment, he really did get things done. I'll miss him. We'll all miss him. The Lord's good earth will miss him, because he was indeed a good friend. My wife Hadassah joins me in extending condolences to Ginny Chafee and the entire family. We all do truly share in their loss.

TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1999

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to make additional remarks on a provision contained in the Manager's Amendment to the Trade and Development Act of 1999 adopted last week by voice vote. The manager's included a Sense of the Senate on Tariff Inversions that has raised some concerns with several of my colleagues. I would like to engage them in a discussion of the issue on the floor of the United States Senate.

There is a company in my state, The Warren Corporation, that specializes in the manufacture of high quality woolen and worsted apparel fabric. This company has been producing luxurious fabrics for decades and recently invested heavily in the U.S. to become a fully integrated textile mill with a diverse set of manufacturing operations. I mention Warren today because this proud contributor to the New England textile heritage could be adversely affected by a tariff provision recently adopted by voice vote in the Manager's Amendment to the Trade and Development Act of 1999. I would like to call on some of my esteemed colleagues who I am sure have similar concerns in their states. Senator HELMS, is it not true that you have thousands of workers in the textile industry that could be adversely affected by this legislation.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President in responding to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, it is certainly true that North Carolina is the largest of the nation's textile and apparel states in terms of employment. In fact, North Carolina employs over 200,000 workers in this industry, many of which are directly involved in wool fabric production. For that reason, I share his deep interest in this wool fabric issue. I want to make it clear that any such legislation would institute a unilateral tariff reduction on the part of the U.S. I do not believe that it is wise policy for the U.S. to simply reduce important tariffs and gain nothing in return. These same fabric makers are essentially precluded from shipping their products to many key markets overseas. My point is simply, if we want to consider reducing these duties, it would be better done as part of the upcoming World Trade Organization talks later this month in Seattle. At the very least, in that forum we would have the ability to gain some reciprocal market access to our manufacturers.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise to also express my concern in regard to this wool fabric issue. Like my colleague from Connecticut, I have great respect for the workers and employers in the textile sector in my state. In particular the Warren corporation was mentioned. Eleven years ago, this company invested over $40 million in an abandoned textile factory in Stafford Springs, Connecticut. For several years they operated at a loss as they fought for market share here in the U.S. However, they understood that if they produced a quality product at reasonable price, they would succeed. Today they are one of the most respected suppliers of fine grade wool fabrics in the world, and they are providing nearly 300 jobs in a depressed area of my state. This is the type of investment and the type of jobs that we want to attract to our region. As a result, we in Congress need to be very careful about proposals that would cut the legs out from under a company such as Warren. Instead of unilaterally cutting their tariffs, we should be searching for ways to further encourage such investment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I too have an interest in this matter, but from a different angle. The U.S. fabric industry consumes virtually all the wool fiber produced in the United States. My home state is a significant producer of wool. If we approve legislation that damages fabric makers, it will have a direct and adverse impact on wool growers. The growers in my state are already suffering from surging imports of lamb meat. In addition, the price of their wool has been severely depressed due to the fact that wool from Australia and New Zealand is routinely dumped on the world market. As a result, I am on the record as strongly opposing any legislation that cuts U.S. wool fabric duties. It is critical that in the discussions of this issue members from the wool producing regions are fully informed and involved. We simply cannot accept a move that would take steps to appease suit makers without fully understanding and considering the impact of such legislation all the way down the chain—from fabric makers to wool growers.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I rise to fully support the remarks of my colleague from Colorado. The wool fiber industry in my state is critical to our overall state economy,

Mr. LIEBERMAN. And Senator THOMAS, am I correct in noting that 23 distinguished members of this body submitted a letter to the Chairman of the Finance Committee earlier this year expressing concern over legislation that would threaten domestic textile producers?

Mr. THOMAS. That is correct. I was one of 23 signatories of a letter dated April 16, 1999, that provides several reasons why unilateral tariff reductions should be avoided. First, wool fabric similar to the foreign imported product, subject to tariffs, is already available from domestic producers. Second, this is not the appropriate time to address accelerated tariff reductions as wool fabric tariffs are currently being reduced at the multilateral level. U.S. producers and textile companies have made investments and based business decisions on trade negotiations that were reached under the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and the World Trade Organization (WTO). If we are to consider additional tariff reductions, those discussions should occur during trade negotiations, instead of being legislated on the floor of the U.S. Senate. U.S. manufacturers are the only customers domestic wool growers have; virtually no wool is exported. Wyoming is the second largest wool producing state and because of already depressed wool prices, our growers can not break even, let alone turn a profit. Accelerating wool fabric tariff cuts, at this time, will only further decrease fiber prices and sales, consequently putting U.S. wool growers and textile workers at risk. I thank my colleague, Senator LIEBERMAN, for his work on this crucial issue.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. I thank my colleague from Wyoming for his kind words. On November 3, I presented legislative background on the wool tariff provision to reflect the concerns of my constituents about any revision to tariff reduction and phase-out schedules that would unfairly alter their competitive posture and force layoffs. Specifically, I noted that the language in the provision as originally proposed dinting the inclusion of the wool fabric industry was purposely deleted in the version that passed in the Manager's Amendment, underscoring the Senate's clear intent that this provision is not directed at this sector.

Second, the provision specifically requires that full account be taken of ''conditions'' in the various ''producing industry in the United States,'' indicating that whatever further action Congress may want to consider in the future on this issue, or that the U.S. Trade Representative may raise in future negotiations, must assure fairness and equitable treatment to those currently producing in the United States. Furthermore, the language specifically states that special attention and equity is to be provided to ''those currently facing tariff phase-outs negotaited under prior trade agreements.'' Since my constituents in the wool fabrication sector specifically fall into exactly that posture, property relying on phase-out schedules negotiated in prior trade agreements, this protection and assurance is directed at their concerns, which, in turn, is why their industry sector was dropped from application of this provision.

Senator HELMS, is it not true that Senators MOYNIHAN and ROTH provided assurances that I would be given full notice of any consideration of this issue in conference and that it will be resolved in a manner satisfactory to me in representative of my constituents concerns?

Mr. HELMS. That is my understanding of your verbal agreement with the managers of the bill.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, we have reiterated our concerns concerning the wool tariff provision with the hope that the leadership will find a way to support the views of nearly one quarter of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a letter from April 16, 1999, from 23 Senators opposed by any changes in wood tariffs addressed to Senator ROTH.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, April 16, 1999.

Hon. WILLIAM ROTH
Chairman, Finance Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We write to express strong opposition to S. 218, which is designed to reduce some and eliminate other existing U.S. tariffs on certain types of wool fabric. This bill is virtually identical to legislation introduced last Congress, which drew widespread, adverse reaction from U.S. producers of wool fiber, top, yarns, and fabrics, as well as many in Congress.

Our continued opposition to this legislation is based on a number of factors:

The fabric types covered by S. 218 are readily available from U.S. producers.

Wool fabric tariffs are already in the process of being reduced, and as such there is no need for these additional, unilateral cuts. In 1995 the WTO/Uruguay Round instituted a phased 30% tariff reduction and import quota elimination for the same products covered by S. 218.

Based on the trade laws and tariffs in place as a result of the Uruguay Round/WTO and the NAFTA, hundreds of millions of dollars in investments were made by the domestic wool fabric industry to try to help ensure their survival. Changing the rules of the game now by making additional, unforeseen tariff cuts will undermine the integrity of these trade rules/agreements and destroy these investments.

In preparation for the new WTO Round, the U.S. is participating in multilateral trade talks this year. Rather than sanctioning additional, unilateral U.S. tariff cuts, Congress should instead instruct the Administration to focus on improving foreign market access for U.S. produced wool fabric and other textile products during these talks. We believe that even those in Congress who may favor tariff cuts, would understand that doing so outside the WTO negotiating context is not in the best interests of the United States, since there would be no possibility of using these or any other cuts as a bargaining tool to get trade concession in return.

These proposed cuts would have an extremely severe impact on the approximately 90,000 U.S. workers whose livelihoods are directly tied to the production of wool textiles.

The unilateral giveaway of U.S. wool fabric tariffs mandated under S. 218 comes at a time when imports are already at record levels. Adding to the current import crisis in this sector is the fact that many Asian suppliers are exporting these fabrics well below 1997 prices as a result of the economic crisis in that region.

The flood of low cost imports has forced U.S. companies to lay-off over 1,600 wool yarn and fabric workers in January 1999, alone. This is the continuation of a devastating trend whereby nearly one-third of all U.S. wool yarn and fabric jobs have been lost in recent years. Certainly, passage of S. 218 will result in the loss of thousands of additional jobs.

U.S. woolgrowers produce fine wools that go into the fabrics covered by S. 218. U.S. wool, top, yarn, & fabric manufacturers are the only customers U.S. woolgrowers have; virtually no wool is exported. Due to surging wool textile and apparel imports, U.S. wool fiber sales and prices have been extremely depressed. Wool fabric tariff cuts will leave woolgrowers with an even more diminished customer base for their wool fiber, at a time when the lamb meat portion of their business is also being severely harmed by increased lamb meat imports.

For these reasons, we believe that you should oppose S. 218. Specifically, we encourage you to block the inclusion of this legislation as part of any trade bill or other legislation that your committee may approve in the 106th Congress. Thank you for your consideration of our views on this important matter.

Sincerely,

Larry E. Craig; Mike Enzi; Olympia Snowe; Mike Crapo; Ben Nighthorse Campbell; John Warner; Chuck Robb; Fritz Hollings; Susan Collins; Conrad Burns; Max Baucus; Craig Thomas; Pete V. Domenici; Joe Lieberman; Richard Shelby; Robert F. Bennett; Strom Thurmond; Jesse Helms; John Edwards; Tim Johnson; Jeff Bingaman; John H. Chafee; Jeff Sessions.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Monday, November 8, 1999, the Federal debt stood at $5,660,688,811,424.68 (Five trillion, six hundred sixty billion, six hundred eighty-eight million, eight hundred eleven thousand, four hundred twenty-four dollars and sixty-eight cents).

Five years ago, November 8, 1994, the Federal debt stood at $4,724,109,000,000 (Four trillion, seven hundred twenty-four billion, one hundred nine million).

Ten years ago, November 8, 1989, the Federal debt stood at $2,895,742,000,000

(Two trillion, eight hundred ninety-five billion, seven hundred forty-two million).

Fifteen years ago, November 8, 1984, the Federal debt stood at $1,616,564,000,000 (One trillion, six hundred sixteen billion, five hundred sixty-four million).

Twenty-five years ago, November 8, 1974, the Federal debt stood at $478,873,000,000 (Four hundred seventy-eight billion, eight hundred seventy-three million) which reflects a debt increase of more than $5 trillion—$5,181,815,811,424.68 (Five trillion, one hundred eighty-one billion, eight hundred fifteen million, eight hundred eleven thousand, four hundred twenty-four dollars and sixty-eight cents) during the past 25 years.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Williams, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry two withdrawal and nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

At 11:22 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 359. An act to clarify the intent of Congress in Public Law 93–632 to require the Secretary of Agriculture to continue to provide for the maintenance and operation of 18 concrete dams and weirs that were located in the Emigrant Wilderness at the time the wilderness area was designated in that Public Law.

H.R. 1832. An act to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to increase the Federal minimum wage.

H.R. 2307. An act to designate the building of the United States Postal Service located at 5 Cedar Street in Hopkinton, Massachusetts, as the ''Thomas J. Brown Post Office Building.''

H.R. 2904. An act to amend the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 to reauthorize funding for the Office of Government Ethics.

H.R. 3002. An act to provide for the continued preparation of certain useful reports concerning public lands, Native Americans, fisheries, wildlife, insular areas, and other natural resources-related matters, and to repeal provisions of law regarding terminated reporting requirements concerning such matters.

H.R. 3077. An act to amend the Act that authorized construction of the San Luis Unit of the Central Valley Project, California, to facilitate water transfers in the Central Valley Project.

H.R. 3189. An act to designate the United States post office located at 14071 Peyton Drive in Chino Hills, California, as the ''Joseph Ileto Post Office.''

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2116) to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish a program of extended care services for veterans and to make other improvements in health care programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs, and agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and appoints Mr. STUMP, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. QUINN, Mr. STEARNS, Mr. EVANS, Ms. BROWN of Florida, and Mr. DOYLE, as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

At 2:15 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2280) to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide a cost-of-living adjustment in rates of compensation paid for service connected disabilities, to enhance the compensation, memorial affairs, and housing programs of the Department of Veterans Affairs, to improve retirement authorities applicable to judges of the United States Court of Appeals for Veterans Claims, and for other purposes, with amendments, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.J. Res. 76. Joint resolution waiving certain enrollment requirements for the remainder of the first session of the One Hundred Sixth Congress with respect to any bill or joint resolution making general appropriations or continuing appropriations for fiscal year 2000.

At 5:12 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1555) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2000 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on November 9, 1999, he had presented to the President of the United States, the following enrolled bills:

S. 468. An act to improve the effectiveness and performance of Federal financial assistance programs, simplify Federal financial assistance application and reporting requirements, and improve the delivery of services to the public.

S. 900. An act to enhance competition in the financial services industry by providing a prudential framework for the affiliation of banks, securities firms, insurance companies, and other financial service providers, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The following bills and joint resolution, previously signed by the Speaker of the House, were signed on today, November 9, 1999, by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND):

S. 468. an Act to improve the effectiveness and performance of Federal financial assistance programs, simplify Federal financial assistance application and reporting requirements, and improve the delivery of services to the public.

S. 900. An Act to enhance competition in the financial services industry by providing a prudential framework for the affiliation of banks, securities firms, insurance companies, and other financial service providers, and for other purposes.

H.R. 3122. An act to permit the enrollment in the house of Representatives Child Care Center of children of Federal employees who are not employees of the legislative branch.

H.J. Res. 54. Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to the Missouri-Nebraska Boundary Compact.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM–370. A resolution adopted by the Nevada State AFL–CIO Annual Convention relative to the National Surface Transportation Board; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC–6102. A communication from the Executive Director, Appraisal Subcommittee, Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to its commercial activities inventory; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6103. A communication from the Inspector General, Farm Credit Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to its commercial activities inventory; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6104. A communication from the Chairman, National Credit Union Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to its commercial activities inventory; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6105. A communication from the Staff Director, Federal Election Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to its commercial activities inventory; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6106. A communication from the Administrator, National Aeronautics and Space, Administration, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to its commercial activities inventory; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6107. A communication from the Director, National Gallery of Art, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to its commercial activities inventory; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6108. A communication from the Director, Office of Personnel Management, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of a rule entitled ''Prevailing Rate Systems; Abolishment of the Dubuque, Iowa Appropriated Fund Wage Area'' (RIN3206–AI90), received November 4, 1999; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6109. A communication from the Chairman, U.S. Merit Systems Protection Board, transmitting, pursuant to the Federal Manager's Financial Integrity Act, the annual report for fiscal year 1999; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6110. A communication from the President, James Madison Memorial Fellowship Foundation, transmitting, pursuant to the Federal Manager's Financial Integrity Act, the annual report for fiscal year 1997; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–6111. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report relative to Medicare approved home health agencies; to the Committee on Finance.

EC–6112. A communication from the Chief, Regulations Branch, U.S. Customs Service, Department of the Treasury, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of a rule entitled ''Foreign Locomotives and Railroad Equipment in International Traffic; Technical Amendment'' (R.P. 98–21), received November 4, 1999; to the Committee on Finance.

EC–6113. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act, a report relative to certification of a proposed license for the export of defense articles or defense services sold commercially under a contract in the amount of $50,000,000 or more to the Republic of Korea; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC–6114. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act, a report relative to certification of a proposed license for the export of defense articles or defense services sold commercially under a contract in the amount of $50,000,000 or more to Japan; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC–6115. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act, a report relative to certification of a proposed license for the export of defense articles or defense services sold commercially under a contract in the amount of $50,000,000 or more to Australia, Bermuda, Canada, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Norway, Sweden, and the United Kingdom; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC–6116. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act, a report relative to certification of a proposed license for the export of defense articles or defense services sold commercially under a contract in the amount of $50,000,000 or more to Australia; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC–6117. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act, a report relative to certification of a proposed license for the export of defense articles or defense services sold commercially under a contract in the amount of $50,000,000 or more to Italy; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC–6118. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act, a report relative to certification of a proposed Manufacturing License Agreement with Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC–6119. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act, a report relative to certification of a proposed Manufacturing License Agreement with Japan; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC–6120. A communication from the Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs, Department of State, transmitting, pursuant to the Arms Export Control Act, a report relative to certification of a proposed Technical Assistance Agreement with Greece; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EC–6121. A communication from the Director, Defense Procurement, Department of Defense, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of a rule entitled ''Coordinated Acquisition Procedures Update'' (DFARS Case 99–D022), received November 5, 1999; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC–6122. A communication from the Director, Defense Procurement, Department of Defense, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of a rule entitled ''Contract Administration and Audit Services'' (DFARS Case 98–D003, 99–D004, 99–D010), received November 5, 1999; to the Committee on Armed Services.

EC–6123. A communication from the Director, Defense Procurement, Department of Defense, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of a rule entitled ''Weighted Guidelines and Performance-Based Payments'' (DFARS Case 99–D001), received November 5, 1999; to the Committee on Armed Services.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, from the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

S. 1627. A bill to extend the authority of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to collect fees through 2004, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 106–220).

By Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

S. 979. A bill to amend the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act to provide for further self-governance by Indian tribes, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 106–221).

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEE

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. GRAMM for the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

Susan M. Wachter, of Pennsylvania, to be an Assistant Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, vice Michael A. Stegman, resigned.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. ROBB (for himself, Mr. SARBANES, and Ms. MIKULSKI):

S. 1885. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide for more equitable policies relating to overtime pay for Federal employees, limitations on premium pay, and the accumulation and use of credit hours; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. INHOFE (for himself, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, and Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire):

S. 1886. A bill to amend the Clean Air Act to permit the Governor of a State to waive the oxygen content requirement for reformulated gasoline, to encourage development of voluntary standards to prevent and control releases of methyl tertiary butyl ether from underground storage tanks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. ENZI:

S. 1887. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to provide for an increase in the minimum wage and protect the rights of States that have adopted State minimum wage laws; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

By Mr. AKAKA (for himself, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. GRAHAM):

S. 1888. A bill to support the protection of coral reefs and other resources in units of the National Park System and other agencies under the administration of the Secretary of the Interior; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. GRAMS:

S. 1889. A bill to amend the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to provide for joint resolutions on the budget, reserve funds for emergency spending, strengthened enforcement of budgetary decisions, increased accountability for Federal spending; accrual budgeting for Federal insurance programs, mitigation of the bias in the budget process toward higher spending, modifications in paygo requirements when there is an on-budget surplus, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs, jointly, pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, with instructions that if one Committee reports, the other Committee have thirty days to report or be discharged.

By Mr. SANTORUM (for himself and Mr. SPECTER):

S. 1890. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide that geographic reclassifications of hospitals from one urban area to another urban area do not result in lower wage indexes in the urban area in which the hospital was originally classified; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. L. CHAFEE:

S. 1891. A bill to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to improve literacy through family literacy projects; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 1892. A bill to authorize the acquisition of the Valles Caldera, to provide for an effective land and wildlife management program for this resource within the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. BOND:

S. 1893. A bill to amend the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act to prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from taking land into trust for Indian tribes for gaming purposes under certain conditions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS (for himself and Mr. ENZI):

S. 1894. A bill to provide for the conveyance of certain land to Park County, Wyoming; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. BREAUX (for himself, Mr. FRIST, Mr. KERREY, and Mr. HAGEL):

S. 1895. A bill to amend the Social Security Act to preserve and improve the medicare program; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 1896. A bill to amend the Public Buildings Act of 1959 to give first priority to the location of Federal facilities in central business areas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works..

By Mr. BIDEN:

S. 1897. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish an Office of Autoimmune Diseases at the National Institutes of Health, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

By Mr. DORGAN (for himself, Mr. ASHCROFT, and Mr. LEAHY):

S. 1898. A bill to provide protection against the risks to the public that are inherent in the interstate transportation of violent prisoners; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY):

S. Res. 226. A resolution expressing the sense of the Senate regarding Japanese participation in the World Trade Organization; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. BOND (for himself, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER):

S. Res. 227. A resolution expressing the sense of the Senate in appreciation of the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve; to the Committee on Armed Services.

By Mr. LOTT (for himself and Mr. DASCHLE):

S. Res. 228. A resolution making changes to Senate committees for the 106th Congress; considered and agreed to.

By Mr. LOTT:

S. Res. 229. A resolution making certain majority appointments to certain Senate committees for the 106th Congress; considered and agreed to.

By Mr. ENZI (for himself and Ms. LANDRIEU):

S. Res. 230. A resolution expressing the sense of the Senate with respect to government discrimination in Germany based on religion or belief; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. ROBB (for himself, Mr. SARBANES, and Ms. MIKULSKI):

S. 1885. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide for more equitable policies relating to overtime pay for Federal employees, limitations on premium pay, and the accumulation and use of credit hours; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EQUITABLE OVERTIME PAY FOR FEDERAL SUPERVISORS AND MANAGERS

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I am very pleased to be joined by my colleagues, Senators SARBANES and MIKULSKI, to introduce legislation to pay overtime to federal managers and supervisors more equitably.

I'm proud of our federal workers. Despite seemingly constant assaults, our nations's civil servants have persevered to provide government that is working better and more efficiently than ever. We've seen a streamlined federal government that's continually asked to improve services to its customers—the American people. But with smaller staffs and the push to increase the federal government's productivity, workloads continue to grow. As federal employees' duties grow, the need to work more overtime hours increases as well. Managers, supervisors and other FLSA-exempt employees within the federal government can receive overtime, but the current overtime cap presents two problems to these employees: they earn less working on overtime than they do for the work they perform during the week and they earn less while working overtime than the employees they supervise. Who then, can blame prospective candidates for supervisory or management positions for declining promotions when remaining in their current, non-supervisory position can mean more money for their families? If the federal government is to continue to recruit and retain a top-notch workforce, then the present overtime cap is one issue that we need to address.

Our legislation will ensure that supervisors and managers neither make less working overtime than they would during regular work hours nor make less working overtime than those they supervise. This bill increases the overtime cap from GS–10 step 1 to GS–12 step 1, the first adjustment in the overtime cap since 1966. Our bill doesn't mandate that overtime be paid; overtime pay will be implemented as it is currently, based on personnel decisions made by individual agencies.

We should encourage incentives to attract bright and capable workers to join the management ranks of the federal government, and this bill is one such incentive. I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure its consideration and favorable recommendation as quickly as possible.

By Mr. INHOFE (for himself, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, and Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire):

S. 1886. A bill to amend the Clean Air Act to permit the Governor of a State to waive the oxygen content requirement for reformulated gasoline, to encourage development of voluntary standards to prevent and control release of methyl tertiary butyl ether from underground storage tanks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

OXYGEN CONTENT REQUIREMENT FOR REFORMULATED GASOLINE

● Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator JAMES INHOFE of Oklahoma, the chairman of the Clean Air Subcommittee, in introducing a bill, S. 1886, to allow the governor of a state to waive the oxygenate content requirement for reformulated or clean-burning gasoline. The bill also requires U.S. EPA to conduct a study on whether voluntary standards to prevent releases of MTBE from underground tanks are necessary.

This is the fifth bill I have introduced in this Congress to address the widespread contamination of drinking water by MTBE in my state. I do this in hopes that this bill will be a straightforward solution to a very serious problem—MTBE detections in ground and surface water in my state and at lest 41 other states.

The Clean Air Act requires that cleaner-burning reformulated gasoline (RFG) be sold in areas with the worst violations of ozone standards: Los Angeles, San Diego, Hartford, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Baltimore, Houston, Milwaukee, Sacramento. (In addition, some states and areas have opted to use reformulated gasoline as way to achieve clean air.) Second, the Act prescribes a formula for reformulated gasoline, including the requirement that reformulated gasoline contain 2.0 percent oxygen, by weight.

In response to this requirement, refiners have put the oxygenate MTBE in over 85 percent of reformulated gasoline now in use. MTBE stands for methyl tertiary butyl ether. The problem is that increasingly, MTBE is being detected in drinking water. MTBE is a known animal carcinogen and a possible human carcinogen, according to U.S. EPA. It has a very unpleasant odor and taste, as well.

The Inhofe-Feinstein bill, S. 1886, would allow governors, upon notification to U.S. EPA, to waive the 2.0% oxygenate requirement, as long as the gasoline meets the other requirements in the law for reformulated gasoline.

On July 27, the U.S. EPA Blue Ribbon Panel on Oxygenates in Gasoline recommended that the 2 percent oxygenate requirement be ''removed in order to provide flexibility to blend adequate fuel supplies in a cost-effective manner while quickly reducing usage of MTBE and maintaining air quality benefits.'' In addition, the panel agreed that ''the use of MTBE should be reduced substantially.'' Importantly, the panel recommended that ''Congress act quickly to clarify federal and state authority to regulate and/or eliminate the use of gasoline additives that pose a threat to drinking water supplies.''

This bill, while not totally repealing the 2 percent oxygenate requirement, moves us in that direction. It gives states that choose to meet clean air requirements without oxygenates to do so. It allows states that choose an oxygenate, such as ethanol, to do so. Areas required to use reformulated gasoline for cleaner air will still be required to use it. The gasoline will have a different but clean formulation. Areas will continue to have to meet clean air standards.

MTBE has contaminated groundwater at over 10,000 sites in California, according to the Lawrence Livermore Laboratory. Of 10,972 groundwater sites sampled, 39 percent had MTBE, says the state Department of Health Services. Of 765 surface water sources sampled, 287 or 38% had MTBE.

Nationally, one EPA-funded study found, of 34 states, MTBE was present more than 20 percent of the time in 27 states. A U.S. Geological Survey report had similar findings. An October 1999 Congressional Research Service analysis concluded that 41 states have had MTBE detections in water.

In California, Governor Davis concluded that MTBE ''poses a significant risk to California's environment'' and directed that MTBE be phased out in California by December 31, 2002. There is not a sufficient supply of ethanol or other oxygenates to fully replace MTBE in California, without huge gas price spikes and gasoline supply disruptions. In addition, California can make clean-burning gas without oxygenates. Therefore, California is in the impossible position of having to meet a federal requirement that is (1) contaminating the water and (2) is not necessary to achieve clean air.

On April 12, 1999, Governor Davis asked U.S. EPA for a waiver of the 2% oxygenate requirement. I too wrote U.S. EPA—on May 18, 1999; December 3, 1998; September 29, 1998; September 28, 1998; September 14, 1998; November 3, 1997; September 24, 1997; April 22, 1997; and April 11, 1997. I have met with EPA officials several times and have talked directly to Administrator Carol Browner. To date, EPA has not granted California a waiver of the two percent. Again, today I call on EPA to act. In the meantime, I will continue to urge Congress to act.

Time is of the essence. California Governor Davis is phasing out MTBE in our state, but the federal law requiring 2 percent oxygenates remains, putting our state in an untenable position. Refiners needs a long lead time to retool their facilities and time is growing short.

A major University of California study released last year concluded that MTBE provides ''no significant air quality benefit'' but that its use poses ''the potential for regional degradation of water resources, especially ground water. . . .'' Oxygenates, say the experts, are not necessary for reformulated gasoline.

California has developed a gasoline formula that provide flexibility and provides clean air. Called the ''predictive model,'' it guarantees clean-burning RFG gas with oxygenates, with less than 2 percent oxygenates and with no oxygenates. Several refiners, including Chevron and Tosco, are selling MTBE-free gas in California, for example, in the Lake Tahoe area.

Under S. 1886, air standards would still have to be met and gasoline would have to meet all other requirements of the federal reformulated gasoline program, for example, the limits on benzene, heavy metals, emission of oxides of nitrogen.

This is a minimal bill that will give California and other states the relief they need from a unwarranted, unnecessary requirement. It will allow states that want oxygenates in their gasoline to use them and those that do not to not use them.

The bill does not undo the Clean Air Act. The bill does not degrade air quality.

Importantly, it can stop the contamination of drinking water in may state by MTBE.●

By Mr. ENZI:

S. 1887. A bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to provide for an increase in the minimum wage and protect the rights of States that have adopted State minimum wage laws; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

MINIMUM WAGE STATE FLEXIBILITY ACT OF 1999

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, as I have listened to those Senators who support an increase in the minimum wage speak today—and I've listened closely—what I've heard them repeatedly say is that the minimum wage is not high enough for workers to afford to put food on the table, pay rent or take care of their families. This is a vital point for any American family, so I've listened carefully to see if anyone who supports an increase could explain why folks in rural states and counties have identical living standards of people residing in New York City or Boston or Los Angeles. Interestingly enough, this question has been essentially left unanswered. No one who supports an increase has been able to explain how wages affect workers differently in different states, and why that matters so much when we are talking about increasing the minimum wage. In an effort to ensure that no worker gets left behind and that we are considering all economic scenarios, I feel compelled to stand up here and talk about it—about why the number of dollars a worker gets paid has a drastically different impact from one state to another and even from one county to another. We must consider how increasing the minimum wage can make jobs in rural states and counties even more scarce; and, about how a wage hike can add even more people to the welfare rolls.

We have heard the old adage that people are entitled to their own opinions, but not their own facts. Well, here are the facts. It costs over twice as much to live in New York City than it does to live in Cheyenne, WY. That's a fact. A $25,000 salary in Cheyenne has the same buying power as a $51,000 salary in New York, a $32,000 salary in Boston, or a $30,000 salary in Los Angeles. In other words, the average Wyoming worker can buy more than twice as much for the same wage as a worker in Manhattan. Twice as much. To put an even finer point on this staggering disparity, if the average worker in New York City is looking to rent an apartment, she would have to spend a whopping $2,730 per month—that's almost six times as expensive as the average apartment in Cheyenne. An apartment in Cheyenne only costs $481 on average per month.

What about buying a home? The price difference between urban cities and rural towns is just as alarming. In New York, the average home costs $533,000; in Boston, it costs $244,000 and here in Washington, DC, it costs $205,000. In Cheyenne, the cost of the average house is much, much less: $116,000. In other rural towns, it's far below $100,000—even $50,000.

Let's look at other necessities. In New York, it is 50 percent more expensive to buy groceries than it is in Cheyenne. In Boston, the cost of utilities are almost double what they are in Cheyenne. And in Los Angeles, medical expenses are a third higher than in Cheyenne. My point is this: the cost of living in New York, or Boston, or Los Angeles is drastically higher than it is in rural towns. This is not one person's opinion—it's a fact. And so to propose a wage level increase across the board and from coast to coast has an impact on these empirical disparities. It is like saying that rent for every apartment in this country must not be any higher than an apartment rent in rural towns, or that every bag of groceries must not cost any more than what it costs at a small town grocery store. No one would ever propose that, which is the reason I feel the need to ensure that such economic differences are, at the very least, debated.

It is different—supporters of an increase will argue—because the increase just sets a floor, a minimum wage for workers. States like New York, and California, and Massachusetts can tack on to that if they wish. But doesn't that just beg the question? If there is a minimum wage disparity for workers in those states with higher costs of living, then why are we raising the minimum wage in every state just to compensate for those states where it costs more to live? Why are we endangering the economic stability of rural states and counties by not considering this reality?

The raw statistics show that job growth in Wyoming is exactly half of job growth nationwide—it's growing, but just not as quick as we would like. Each year, at least 50 percent of Wyoming's college graduates leave the state, unable to find work because there aren't enough businesses to keep pace. What that translates into is this: if the minimum wage increase passes, rural areas cold face fewer jobs than they already provide. What every student who has ever taken an economics course knows is that if you increase the price of something (in this case, a minimum wage job), you decrease the demand for those jobs. Indeed, a survey of members of the American Economic Association revealed that 77 percent of economists believe that a minimum wage hike causes job loss. For states that already struggle just to grow small businesses and increase the number of jobs they produce, such an outcome can be detrimental. And for those parents in Wyoming who tell me over and over again how tired they are of seeing their kids leave the state to attend college elsewhere—simply because there are not enough part-time and full-time entry level jobs to get experience from and help pay for their education. One restaurant owner in a small town told me that he would increase the wage, but that would mean 5 less jobs for bus boys. After the last increase, I also recall college students complaining because college grants—or work studies—were negatively impacted. What happened was that grant amounts weren't increased, so the minimum wage hike resulted in less hours available per student under the grant. Students said that it resulted in a net loss for them. It's because of unforeseen situations like these, I am compelled to bring this issue to the table.

The legislation I'm proposing today is an attempt to save rural states and counties from losing even more precious jobs because ''Inside the Beltway'' types think that a minimum wage hike might help workers in higher cost of living states like Massachusetts, California, and New York. This legislation, which I call ''State Flexibility,'' is not a perfect solution. What this bill would do is give some discretion back to the states to decide whether it wants to remain at the increased federal rate of $6.15 an hour, or whether a wage that's 15 percent under the federal wage works better for the economic growth—and the workers—of that state.

Here's how the bill would work. First, just so that there is no confusion, it would not prevent any federal minimum wage increases from applying nationally. But this legislation would provide state legislators the ability to set the minimum wage for the state, or a county within the state, at 15 percent under the federal floor. This legislation would also allow a Governor on a ''temporary'' basis to set the minimum wage for a state or a county at 15 percent less than the federal floor for reasons such as high unemployment, slow economic growth or potential harm to the state's welfare-to-work programs. I have listened carefully to the concerns of one-size-fits-all wage hike advocates, who say that the proposed increase is for workers. I agree, which is precisely why I'm advocating this approach—to ensure that welfare-to-work moms and dads living in counties with high unemployment rates aren't excluded. I am confident that nobody in this Chamber wants to leave anyone behind.

I've talked quite a bit today about how increasing the minimum wage would affect the small business owner. Having owned a small business in Wyoming for 27 years, I can speak with some experience about just how detrimental an increase would be on small employers and job growth, and how this legislation would offer some flexibility to rural states and counties. But one area that I've been learning more about is how bad an increase would be on folks who have just recently entered the job market through welfare-to-work programs. What I've read has startled me, and as a former small business owner, the statistics pertaining to rural regions of the country make tangible sense to me. So much sense, in fact, that I am more convinced than ever that just increasing the minimum wage is not as sound a policy as advocates suggest.

First. Just as a minimum wage increase would slow job creation in rural states and negatively affect people who have been employed in their field for years, college students looking for jobs, or new graduates, it would also severely impact welfare recipients looking for work. University of Wisconsin economist Peter Brandon has actually determined that minimum wage hikes actually increase duration on welfare by more than 40 percent.

Second. The Educational Testing Service has concluded that fully two-thirds of welfare recipients have skills that qualify, at best, for entry-level employment, and many fall far below. And what researchers at Boston University have shown is that lower-skilled adults are displaced after a minimum wage hike by teens and students who are perceived as having better skills.

Third. Undoubtedly due to the above, research from Michigan State University shows that minimum wage hikes push as many families into poverty (due to job loss, for example), as they pull out of poverty.

These daunting statistics sound alarms if we haphazardly push through a minimum wage hike that has a heck of a good sound bite, but an awful aftertaste when the dust settles and a number of workers are left behind. This proposal, however, speaks to this point. If a state legislature or a Governor sees a potential for a detrimental impact on welfare to work programs within that state, they can act to keep the rate at 15 percent under the federal floor. This is simple, rational discretion. This legislation instills the same ideals incorporated in the 1996 Welfare Reform Act and the 1998 Workforce Investment Act. Congress and the President entrusted states with administering welfare-to-work and our nation's job training programs. This bill would complement those landmark laws by saying that states can adjust the mandatory wage—ensuring that no worker gets left behind. We must not turn a blind eye when state flexibility matters most.

As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Employment, Safety and Training, my colleagues can be assured that the problem of economic disparities spurred by the lack of consideration by federal mandates will continue until we take a closer look. It's real and it deserves our attention. It is my hope that by discussing this bill, the Senate will begin to exclude the politics from the minimum wage debate and start examining the full spectrum of this issue. I am serious about addressing this and I fully intend to debate it during the second session. The media and interest groups have asked that we not politicize the minimum wage. I couldn't agree more, which is why I ask you to carefully consider not leaving anyone behind. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1887

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Minimum Wage State Flexibility Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. STATE MINIMUM WAGES AND AREA STANDARDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6 of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 206) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(h) STATE MINIMUM WAGES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section and sections 13(a) and 14, an employer in a State that has adopted minimum wage legislation that meets the requirements of paragraph (2) shall pay to each of its employees a wage at a rate that is not less than the rate provided for in such State's minimum wage legislation.

''(2) REQUIREMENT.—This section and sections 13(a) and 14 shall only apply in such States that have adopted minimum wage legislation that sets wages for at least 95 percent of the workers within the State at an hourly rate that is not less than 85 percent of the hourly rate generally applicable for the year involved under subsection (a).

''(3) EMERGENCY CIRCUMSTANCES.—The chief executive officer of a State, through an executive order (or its equivalent), may set wages applicable to at least 95 percent of the employees within the State (or particular county of the State) at an hourly rate that is not less than 85 percent of the hourly rate generally applicable for the year involved under subsection (a) if any of the following circumstances exist:

''(A) The State welfare-to-work programs would be sufficiently harmed by mandating a minimum wage rate above an hourly rate equal to 85 percent of the hourly rate required under subsection (a).

''(B) The State (or county) is experiencing a period of high unemployment.

''(C) The State (or county) is experiencing a period of slow economic growth.

This paragraph shall only apply to an executive order (or its equivalent) that is effective for a period of 12 months or less.''.

(b) APPLICABILITY OF MINIMUM WAGE TO THE TERRITORIES.—Notwithstanding section 5 of the Fair Labor Standards Act (29 U.S.C. 205), the provisions of section 6 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 206) shall apply to the territories and possessions of the United States (including the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands) in the same manner as such provisions apply to the States.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall take effect on April 1, 2000.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN STATES.—In the case of a State which the Secretary of Labor identifies as having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet prior to the effective date described in paragraph (1) in a legislative session, the date specified in such paragraph shall be the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after such effective date, and in which a State law described in section 6(h)(2) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (as added by subsection (a)) may be considered. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

S. 1888. A bill to support the protection of coral reefs and other resources in units of the National Park System and other agencies under the administration of the Secretary of the Interior; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

CAROL REEF RESOURCE CONSERVATION AND MANAGEMENT ACT

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill that will enhance our ability to understand and conserve coral reef ecosystems and the ocean life that depends on them.

In the past few years, Congress and the administration have recognized the importance of coral reefs to ocean ecologies and grown increasingly concerned about the challenges facing our reefs. 1997 was recognized as ''Year of the Reef,'' and the House passed House Concurrent Resolution 8 which recognized the significance of maintaining the health and stability of coral reef ecosystems by promoting stewardship for reefs. In 1998 the President signed Executive Order 13089 establishing the U.S. Coral Reef Task Force under joint leadership of the Department of Commerce and Department of the Interior. The Executive order directs federal agencies to take steps to protect, manage, research and restore coral ecosystems. The bill I am introducing today supplements these actions by establishing a targeted national program for coral reef research, monitoring, and conservation for areas under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior. It is a companion measure to S. 1253, introduced earlier this year by Senator INOUYE, that authorizes a coral reef program through the Department of Commerce.

Mr. President, the importance of reefs to our economy, culture, and to the stability of our shorelines is becoming increasingly apparent as we begin to understand more about the interdependence of reefs and human activity. Substantial research shows that reefs are under greater stress than ever before, both from natural causes and human-induced damage. We need to act now before the decline of reefs becomes irreversible.

This measure authorizes coral reef research and conservation efforts through the Department of the Interior. The Department manages over 2,000 acres of sensitive coral reef habitat and adjacent submerged land at 20 national wildlife refuges and 9 units of the National Park System in Hawaii, Florida, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and the territories of Guam and American Samoa in the Pacific. Of the 4.2 million acres of reefs in the United States, few have been mapped, assessed, or characterized. There is still much to learn about the location and biology of coral reefs, their susceptibility to disease, and how they can be restored and sustained.

This measure establishes a coral reef conservation matching grant program that will leverage federal monies with non-federal funds raised through a nonprofit foundation. This initiative is consistent with the efforts of the President's Coral Reef Task Force established by Executive Order No. 13089, and with the activities of other agencies, such as the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, that are involved in coral reef research, monitoring, restoration and conservation.

Under my legislation, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to provide grants for coral reef conservation projects in areas under the Department's jurisdiction, through a merit-based, competitive program. Grants will be awarded on a 75 per cent federal and 25 per cent non-federal basis. The Secretary may also enter into an agreement with one or more foundations to solicit private funds dedicated to coral conservation programs. Up to 80 percent of the funding will be distributed equally between the Atlantic/Caribbean and the Pacific Ocean, and 20 percent of the funding can be used for emerging priorities or threats identified by the Secretary in consultation with the Coral Reef Task Force. Grants may be made to any relevant natural resource management authority of a State or territory of the United States, to other government authorities with jurisdiction over coral reefs as well as to educational or non-governmental institutions or organizations with demonstrated expertise in coral reef conservation. Priority will be given to projects that promote reef conservation through cooperative projects with local communities; that involve non-governmental organizations, academic or private institutions or local affected governments; that enhance public knowledge and awareness of coral reef resources; and that promise sound scientific information on the extent, nature and condition of reef ecosystems.

Most importantly, this legislation encourages community-based conservation efforts that involve local communities, nongovernmental organizations, and academic institutions in the protection of reefs. It brings people and communities together to participate in, and learn more about, the conservation of ocean resources—coral reefs and the many species that depend on reef ecosystems. Only by making ordinary people responsible for reef conservation, can we alter the types of human activity and behavior that are responsible for the adverse impacts on coral reefs that we glimpse today.

Mr. President, the people of Hawaii, our Nation's only insular state, are perhaps more aware of the subtle and interdependent relationship we have with coral reefs.

But all citizens should appreciate that the health of coral reefs is emblematic of the health of our oceans—upon which we depend for so many resources, from clean water to food to pharmaceuticals. Coral reefs are the rain forests of the ocean—a wild, beautiful, complex bountiful resource whose importance to life on earth, much less ourselves, is only beginning to be understood. But the harsh reality is that we are going to lose our reefs if we do not act soon, before we fully understand their role in the great web of marine life.

There are simply more people on the globe, in more places in the ocean, than ever before. Boats, anchors, snorkelers and divers are entering the water in increasing numbers. We are removing things from the water at an increasing rate—exotic salt water fish for home aquariums and pieces of coral for houses and home decor. The amount of sediment and pollution runoff onto coral reefs increases with every major shoreline development. It is vital that we start now, to research and preserve our reefs, before human impacts cause irreversible damages to a resource whose essential role in nature is only just beginning to be understood.

Thank you, Mr. President. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation, which represents a critical step in helping us understand and live sustainably with coral reef ecosystems.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1888

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Coral Reef Resource Conservation and Management Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) coral reefs have great commercial, recreational, cultural, environmental, and aesthetic value;

(2) coral reefs—

(A) provide habitat to ⅓ of all marine fish species;

(B) are essential building blocks for biodiversity;

(C) are instrumental in forming tropical islands;

(D) protect coasts from waves and storms;

(E) contain an array of potential pharmaceuticals; and

(F) support tourism and fishing industries in the United States worth billions of dollars;

(3) studies indicate that coral reefs in the United States and around the world are being degraded and severely threatened by human and environmental impacts, including land-based pollution, overfishing, destructive fishing practices, vessel groundings, and climate change;

(4) the Department of the Interior—

(A) manages extensive acreage that contains sensitive coral reef habitat and adjacent submerged land at 20 national wildlife refuges and 9 units of the National Park System—

(i) in the States of Hawaii and Florida; and

(ii) in the territories of Guam, American Samoa, and the United States Virgin Islands; and

(B) maintains oversight responsibility for additional significant coral reef resources under Federal jurisdiction in insular areas, territories, and surrounding territorial waters in the Pacific Ocean and Caribbean Sea;

(5) few of the 4,200,000 acres of coral reefs of the United States have been mapped or have had their conditions assessed or characterized;

(6) the Department of the Interior conducts scientific research and monitoring to determine the structure, function, status, and condition of the coral reefs of the United States; and

(7) the Department of the Interior, in cooperation with public and private partners, provides technical assistance and engages in management and conservation activities for coral reef habitats.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to conserve, protect, and restore the health of coral reef ecosystems and the species of fish, plants, and animals that depend on those ecosystems;

(2) to support the monitoring, assessment, management, and protection of coral reef ecosystems over which the United States has jurisdiction (including coral reef ecosystems located in national wildlife refuges and units of the National Park System);

(3) to augment and support the efforts of the Department of the Interior, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and other members of the Coral Reef Task Force;

(4) to support research efforts that contribute to coral reef conservation;

(5) to support education, outreach, and enforcement for coral reef conservation;

(6) to provide financial resources and matching funds for partnership efforts to accomplish the purposes described in paragraphs (1) through (4); and

(7) to coordinate with the Coral Reef Task Force and other agencies to address priorities identified by the Coral Reef Task Force.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) CORAL.—The term ''coral'' means any species of the phylum Cnidaria, including—

(A) any species of the order Antipatharia (black corals), Scleractinia (stony corals), Gorgonacea (horny corals), Stolonifera (organpipe corals and others), Alcyanacea (soft corals), or Coenothecalia (blue corals), of the class Anthozoa; and

(B) any species of the order Hydrocorallina (fire corals and hydrocorals) of the class Hydrozoa.

(2) CORAL REEF.—The term ''coral reef'' means the species (including reef plants and coralline algae), habitats, and other natural resources associated with any reef or shoal composed primarily of corals within all maritime areas and zones subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, including Federal, State, territorial, or commonwealth waters in the south Atlantic, the Caribbean, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Pacific Ocean.

(3) CORAL REEF CONSERVATION PROJECT.—The term ''coral reef conservation project'' means an activity that contributes to or results in preserving, sustaining, or enhancing any coral reef ecosystem as a healthy, diverse, and viable ecosystem, including—

(A) any action to enhance or improve resource management of a coral reef, such as assessment, scientific research, protection, restoration and mapping;

(B) habitat monitoring and any species survey or monitoring of a species;

(C) any activity necessary for planning and development of a strategy for coral reef management;

(D) community outreach and education on the importance and conservation of coral reefs; and

(E) any activity in support of the enforcement of laws relating to coral reefs.

(4) CORAL REEF TASK FORCE.—The term ''Coral Reef Task Force'' means the task force established under Executive Order No. 13089 (June 11, 1998).

(5) FOUNDATION.—The term ''foundation'' means a foundation that is a registered nonprofit organization under section 501(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(6) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(7) STATE.—The term ''State'' means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Mariana Islands, or any other territory or possession of the United States.

SEC. 4. CORAL REEF RESOURCE CONSERVATION GRANT PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide grants for coral reef conservation projects in accordance with this section.

(b) ELIGIBILITY.—The Secretary may award a grant under this section to—

(1) any appropriate natural resource management authority of a State—

(A) that has jurisdiction over coral reefs; or

(B) the activities of which affect coral reefs; or

(2) any educational or nongovernmental institution or organization with demonstrated expertise in marine science or coral reef conservation.

(c) MATCHING REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) FEDERAL SHARE.—Except as provided in paragraph (3), the Federal share of the cost of a coral reef conservation project that receives a grant under this section shall not exceed 75 percent of the total cost of the project.

(2) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the cost of a coral reef conservation project that receives a grant under this section may be provided in cash or in kind.

(3) WAIVER.—The Secretary may waive all or part of the matching requirement under paragraph (1) if—

(A) the cost of the project is $25,000 or less; or

(B) the project is necessary to undertake, complete, or enhance planning and monitoring requirements for coral reef areas under—

(i) the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 (16 U.S.C. 668dd et seq.); or

(ii) the Act entitled ''An Act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes'', approved August 25, 1916 (16 U.S.C. 1 et seq.).

(d) ALLOCATION.—The Secretary shall award grants under this section so that—

(1) not less than 40 percent of the grant funds available are awarded for coral reef conservation projects in the Pacific Ocean;

(2) not less than 40 percent of the grant funds available are awarded for coral reef conservation projects in the Atlantic Ocean, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Caribbean Sea; and

(3) the remaining grant funds are awarded for coral reef conservation projects that address emergency priorities or threats identified by the Secretary, in consultation with the Coral Reef Task Force.

(e) ANNUAL FUNDING PRIORITIES.—After consultation with the Coral Reef Task Force, States, regional and local entities, and nongovernmental organizations involved in coral and marine conservation, the Secretary shall identify site-specific and comprehensive threats and constraints that—

(1) are known to affect coral reef ecosystems (including coral reef ecosystems in national wildlife refuges and units of the National Park System); and

(2) shall be considered in establishing annual funding priorities for grants awarded under this subsection.

(f) PROJECT REVIEW AND APPROVAL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall review and rank coral reef conservation project proposals according to the criteria described in subsection (g).

(2) PEER REVIEW.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—For projects that have a cost of $25,000 or more, the Secretary shall—

(i) provide for merit-based peer review of the proposal; and

(ii) require standardized documentation of the peer review.

(B) EXPEDITED PROCESS.—For projects that have a cost of less than $25,000, the Secretary shall provide an expedited peer review process.

(C) INDIVIDUAL GRANTS.—As part of the peer review process for individual grants, the Secretary shall request written comments from the appropriate bureaus or departments of the State or other government having jurisdiction over the area where the project is proposed to be conducted.

(3) LIST.—At the beginning of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make available a list describing projects selected during the previous fiscal year for funding under subsection (g).

(g) PROJECT APPROVAL CRITERIA.—The Secretary shall evaluate and select project proposals for funding based on the degree to which each proposed project—

(1) is consistent with the purposes of this Act; and

(2) would—

(A) promote the long-term protection, conservation, restoration, or enhancement of coral reef ecosystems in or adjoining areas under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior;

(B) promote cooperative conservation projects with local communities, nongovernmental organizations, educational or private institutions, affected local governments, territories, or insular areas;

(C) enhance public knowledge and awareness of coral reef resources and sustainable use through education and outreach;

(D) develop sound scientific information on the condition of and threats to coral reef ecosystems through mapping, monitoring, research and analysis; and

(E) increase compliance with laws relating to coral reefs.

(h) REGULATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations to implement this Act.

(2) PROJECT APPROVAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall promulgate regulations to implement subsection (f), including requirements for project proposals.

(3) CONSULTATION.—In developing regulations under this subsection, the Secretary shall identify priorities for coral reef resource protection and conservation in consultation with agencies and organizations involved in coral and marine conservation, including—

(A) the Coral Reef Task Force;

(B) interested States;

(C) regional and local entities; and

(D) nongovernmental organizations.

(i) ADMINISTRATION.—

(1) FOUNDATION INVOLVEMENT.—

(A) AGREEMENTS.—The Secretary may enter into an agreement with 1 or more foundations to accept, receive, hold, transfer, solicit, and administer funds received or made available for a grant program under this Act (including funds received in the form of a gift or donation).

(B) FUNDS.—A foundation that enters into an agreement described in subparagraph (A) shall—

(i) invest, reinvest, and otherwise administer funds described in subparagraph (A); and

(ii) maintain the funds and any interest or revenues earned in a separate interest-bearing account that is—

(I)(aa) an insured depository institution, as the term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813); or

(bb) an insured credit union, as the term is defined in section 101 of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1752); and

(II) established by the foundation solely to support partnerships between the public and private sectors that further the purposes of this Act.

(2) REVIEW OF PERFORMANCE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Beginning in fiscal year 2000, and biennially thereafter, the Secretary shall conduct a review of each grant program administered by a foundation under this subsection.

(B) ASSESSMENT.—Each review under subparagraph (A) shall include a written assessment describing the extent to which the foundation has implemented the goals and requirements of this section.

(j) TRANSFERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Under an agreement entered into under subsection (i)(1)(A), the Secretary may transfer funds appropriated under section 5(b) to a foundation.

(2) USE OF TRANSFERRED FUNDS.—Amounts received by a foundation under this subsection may be used for matching, in whole or in part, contributions (whether in currency, services, or property) made to the foundation by private persons and State and local government agencies.

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this Act $20,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2000 through 2004, to remain available until expended.

(b) LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE FUNDS.—Not more than 6 percent of the amounts appropriated under this section may be used for program management and administration under this Act.

By Mr. GRAMS:

S. 1889. A bill to amend the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to provide for joint resolutions on the budget, reserve funds for emergency spending, strengthened enforcement of budgetary decisions, increased accountability for Federal spending; accrual budgeting for Federal insurance programs, mitigation of the bias in the budget process toward higher spending, modifications in paygo requirements when there is an on-budget surplus, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Budget and the Committee on Governmental Affairs, jointly, pursuant to the order of August 4, 1977, with instructions that when one Committee reports, the other Committee have thirty days to report or be discharged.

COMPREHENSIVE BUDGET PROCESS REFORM ACT OF 1999

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, we are now in the final stages of completing the FY 2000 Appropriation bills. We will soon end the first session of the 106th Congress. Looking back, I must say, we have had some successes, and I am proud of these achievements. However, the biggest failure, in my judgment, is that we have failed to learn the lessons from our past two years' experience and we have failed to maintain fiscal discipline due to our seriously flawed budget process.

That's why I rise today to introduce legislation that would reform the federal budget process, strengthen fiscal discipline, and restore government accountability to ensure that taxpayers are fully represented in Washington.

Mr. President, after last year's abuse of the budget/appropriation process, many of us realized that the federal budget process became a reckless game in which the team roster was limited to a handful of Washington politicians and technocrats while the taxpayers were relegated to the sidelines. This not only weakened the nation's fiscal discipline but also undermined the system of checks and balances established by the Constitution.

At the beginning of the 106th Congress, I argued repeatedly in this chamber that the key to a successful Congress was to pursue comprehensive budget process reforms. I introduced legislation to achieve these goals. I was pleased that Senate leaders included budget process reform as one of the top five priorities in the 106th Congress. Unfortunately, that commitment has not yet materialized.

As a result, this year's appropriation process is almost a play-by-play of 1998. Congress over-used advanced appropriations, and used directed scoring, emergency spending and other budgetary techniques to dodge fiscal discipline and significantly increase government spending.

Mr. President, our failure can be traced to our seriously flawed budget process. Twenty-five years ago, Congress tried to change its budget practices and get spending under control by passing the Congressional Budget Act. Yet, over these 25 years, our national debt has grown from $540 billion to $5.7 trillion.

Spending is at an all-time high, and so are taxes. The budget process has become so complicated that most lawmakers have a hard time understanding it. Of course, that hasn't stopped the proliferation of budget smoke and mirrors to circumvent the intent of the Congress. The flawed process allows members to vote to control spending in the budget and then turn right around and vote for increased appropriations. The process encourages spending increases rather than spending control. It encourages continued fiscal abuse, waste, and irresponsibility.

Clearly, we need to immediately pursue comprehensive reform to ensure the integrity of our budget and appropriations process and avoid repeating the same mistakes we made in the past two years. We must do this early in the year before we begin to face appropriation pressures.

This is why I am introducing the Comprehensive Budget Process Reform Act. This legislation is the companion bill of HR 853, which was a bipartisan effort led by Congressmen NUSSLE and CARDIN. It has been reported by the House Budget Committee. There are also a number of good budget reform proposals in the Senate I have earlier supported. Reforms introduced by our Budget Committee Chairman Senator DOMENICI are important and I strongly support his leadership in this area. My legislation is complementary to but broader than Senator DOMENICI's efforts.

Mr. President, let me highlight my legislation. The legislation will force us to pass a legally-binding federal budget, set aside funds each year in the budget for true emergencies; strengthen the enforcement of budgetary controls; enhance accountability for Federal spending; display unfunded liabilities for Federal insurance programs; mitigate the bias toward higher spending, modify Pay-As-You-Go (PAYGO) procedures to accommodate budget surpluses; and ensure the Social Security surplus will be protected.

The core of the legislation will provide for an annual joint budget resolution, rather than a concurrent resolution, thus making it a legally binding budget through a law requiring the President's signature.

I believe this is a critical step in reforming the budget process. If Congress and the President agree on a Joint Budget Resolution at the beginning of the process, appropriators in Congress would be legally bound to stay within those spending limits. It forces confrontation at the earliest stages of the budget process, leaving adequate time for legislating detail and minimizing disputes at the end of the process which threaten to shutdown the government.

The second component of the bill will redefine emergency spending and create a reserve fund to pay for emergencies. Emergency spending was traditionally used for unanticipated wars and natural disasters that took life and severely damaged property. Because emergency spending today is effectively exempt from congressional spending controls, Congress and the Administration have used this as an opportunity to bust the budget for a lot of spending that isn't emergency related at all.

Last year alone, Congress appropriated $35 billion for so-called emergencies. This year again, over $24 billion of emergency spending is appropriated. Since 1991, emergency spending has totaled over $145 billion. Most ''emergencies'' were used to fund regular government programs, not unanticipated events. Emergency spending is sought as a vehicle to add on even more spending priorities. This has gone too far. We need a better way to budget for emergencies. Most of this spending can be planned within our budget limits. Even natural disasters happen regularly—why not budget for them?

My legislation will end this abuse of emergency spending. It requires both the President and the Congress to budget up front for emergencies by setting aside dollars in an emergency reserve fund. The reserve fund will contain an amount at least equal to the 5-year historical average of amounts provided for true emergencies. It includes a clear definition of ''emergencies.'' My legislation prohibits release of funds from the reserve pending Budget Committee certification that: (1) A situation has arisen that requires funding for ''the prevention or mitigation of, or response to, loss of life of property, or a threat to national security'', and (2) The situation is ''unanticipated''—with ''unanticipated'' defined as sudden, urgent, unforeseen, and temporary.

In the event that Congress and the President fail to agree on annual appropriation measures by October 1, my legislation will allow the budget resolution signed into law earlier in the year to automatically kick in. This will effectively prevent any future government shutdowns due to disagreements on spending priorities between Congress and the Administration.

Mr. President, the 1995 federal government shutdown is still fresh in our minds. It was the longest shutdown in history and caused financial damage and inconvenience to millions of Americans when the President refused to support a Balanced Budget Act and tax relief for Americans. The shutdown shook the American people's confidence in their government and in their elected officials.

Since 1997, I, along with Senator MCCAIN, have been advocating an automatic continuing resolution, or CR, as we call it, to prevent a government shutdown. I was able to obtain a commitment from the Senate leadership of both parties to pursue this legislation separately in the near future. But no action has followed. If we had an automatic CR, we would not have to go through bitter battles at the end of every fiscal year.

The virtue of an automatic CR is that it would allow us to debate issues concerning spending policy and the merits of budget priorities while we continue to keep essential government functions operating. The American taxpayer will no longer be held hostage to a government shutdown.

Mr. President, there will always be plenty of uncertainties involved in our budget and appropriations process. The automatic kick-in of the budget resolution in the bill I introduce today will work the same as my automatic CR.

Another flaw of the budget process is so-called budget baselines. When a government program is going to increase by 4.5 percent per year, anyone with common sense would think that is a budget increase, not a budget ''cut.'' But under baseline budgeting it could mean ''cut.'' Lee Iaccoca once stated that if business used baseline budgeting the way Congress does, ''they'd throw us in jail.''

This is a typical budget gimmick. Any proposed spending levels below current baselines are perceived as program reductions, allowing some politicians to claim savings while permitting others to claim increases. Baseline budgeting is biased in favor of more spending. It is not honest budgeting but rather very misleading. My legislation would require Congress and the President to use this year's actual spending total as the baseline for the next year's budget. If we decide to spend more than the current year, we are increasing the budget. If we spend less, we are cutting it. Let's call a spade a spade.

Mr. President, we have entered an era of budget surplus. It is estimated that in the next ten years, our strong economy will generate an over $1 trillion non-Social Security surplus. If we don't return this surplus to taxpayers in the form of tax relief and debt reduction, the government will spend it all. However, the current budget process limits our ability to provide tax relief for working Americans.

The budget law requires that all tax cuts be offset with tax increases or cuts in entitlement programs such as Medicare. Tax cuts may not be paid for by cutting discretionary spending, such as wasteful government programs. This rule, called the PAYGO rule, applies regardless of whether there is a surplus or deficit. The PAYGO rule effectively limits options with respect to reducing taxes because it precludes using spending cuts in discretionary programs to offset tax cuts. Thus there is a built-in bias in favor of higher levels of spending and taxation in the current budget process.

My legislation would amend Pay-As-You-Go requirements to permit any portion of the on-budget surplus, excluding Social Security, to be used for tax cuts.

Related to the PAYGO rule reform, my legislation also creates a lockbox to lock in every penny that is saved from floor amendments to appropriations bills and use it to reduce federal government spending. Spending levels in the budget resolution and any caps on discretionary spending would be automatically reduced by the amount in the floor amendment.

The bill requires committees to submit a plan for reauthorizing all programs within their jurisdictions in 10 years. It also prohibits the Congress from considering a bill that creates a new spending program unless it is sunset within 10 years. My legislation also guarantees Members the right to offer amendments subjecting proposed entitlements to the enhanced oversight of the appropriations process.

Under the current budget process, we have over 20 budget functions, and a half dozen different committees with jurisdiction over one budget function. This has complicated the process greatly. To simplify the process, my bill collapses the 20 non-enforceable budget functions currently used into total (aggregate) spending and revenue levels, with separate categories for discretionary and mandatory spending. It is simple, and easy enough for everyone to understand.

Mr. President, a number of the Federal insurance programs (excluding Social Security and Medicare) that have a looming impact on the federal budget are not included in our budget process. The liabilities caused by these programs could be enormous. Budgeting for these liabilities will give us better control over long-term programs. My legislation requires the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget to report periodically on long-term budgetary trends, to help make Members aware of the future budgetary implications of spending programs.

Finally, Mr. President, it's vitally important that we save the entire Social Security surplus, not for government spending, not for tax relief, but exclusively for Social Security.

I believe we need an enforcement mechanism to ensure that Congress and the President do not touch the Social Security surplus. My legislation requires that if any fiscal year's appropriations end up spending the Social Security surplus, a sequestration will be automatically triggered to reduce government spending across the board in the amount of the Social Security surplus that was used. Entitlement programs like Social Security and Medicare would not be cut. In addition, the bill reaffirms the protected status of Social Security under the current budgetary law.

Mr. President, it is true that our short-term fiscal situation has improved greatly due to the continued growth of our economy. However, our long-term financial imbalance still poses a major threat to the health of our future economic security. Without budget process reform, we will find ourselves again and again making the same mistakes which result in bigger government, more spending and more abuse. We need to spend more time on oversight and reauthorizing expiring programs rather than on endless budget battle at the end of every fiscal year.

President Reagan summed up the real problem of our budget process when he pointed out ''this budget process does not serve the best interests of the nation, it does not allow sufficient review of spending priorities, and it undermines the checks and balances established by the Constitution.''

If the Congress adopts the Comprehensive Budget Process Reform Act, it will ensure a budget process that serves the best interests of the nation and allow for careful policy and spending deliberation. That's why I am introducing this legislation today. I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

By Mr. L. CHAFEE:

S. 1891. A bill to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to improve literacy through family literacy projects; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions

THE LITERACY INVOLVES FAMILIES TOGETHER ACT

Mr. L. CHAFEE. Mr. President, today I have the enormous honor of introducing legislation to renew and strengthen the Even Start Family Literacy Act. On October 1, 1985, my father stood at this desk, where I stand today, and introduced the Even Start Act. He did so because of his profound commitment to the most vulnerable and disadvantaged members of our society. As I introduce this bill, which attempts to break the cycle of illiteracy that divides our Nation into haves and have nots, I do so in an effort to continue that commitment to disadvantaged Americans.

Last week, an identical bill was introduced in the House of Representatives by BILL GOODLING, chairman of the House Committee on Education and the Workforce. Chairman GOODLING introduced the original Even Start Act in the House on May 16, 1985. Both versions of the Even Start Act were reintroduced in the 100th Congress and became law as part of the Hawkins-Stafford Elementary and Secondary Improvement Act Amendments of 1987.

There are approximately 40 million Americans who suffer from illiteracy. Like a disease, illiteracy often goes undetected. Like a disease, illiteracy too often is passed from generation to generation. Like a disease, illiteracy is painful for families to endure. There is no certain cure for illiteracy, but by renewing and expanding the Even Start Family Literacy Program, we offer tens of thousands of families hope for a better future.

There are many controversies related to education policy at the local, state and federal levels. There are heartfelt, passionately held opinions about everything from funding levels to particular teaching techniques. Nevertheless, there are a few things on which nearly everyone agrees: parents are their children's first and most important teachers, and children who are read to early and often do better in school than children who are not.

As the father of three young children, reading together is a part of daily life that I take for granted. I suspect that it is difficult for most of the members of this body to imagine what it would be like not to have the ability to sit down with your children or grandchildren to read a favorite story. But for millions of Americans, reading a bedtime story or helping with a son or daughter's homework assignment is impossible.

The Even Start Family Literacy Act brings families together to learn. Parents who do not have a high school degree or its equivalent are eligible for this program. They learn the basic educational skills that enable them to improve their own situations and, perhaps even more importantly, they learn the skills they need to help their children in school. At the same time, children from birth to age 8 receive appropriate educational services.

The bill I am introducing makes two notable changes in the Even Start program. First, it enables a child, who also is receiving title I services, to remain in the Even Start program beyond age 8. It also requires Even Start programs to utilize research-based teaching techniques for children. In addition to these improvements, it authorizes the Institute for Literacy to investigate the most effective means of improving adults' literacy skills, and it increases the authorization level to $500 million so that more families can be served.

Currently, there are four Even Start programs in Rhode Island receiving federal funds. Each of these programs serves between 25 and 40 families. In Newport, the Sullivan School Children's Opportunity Zone/Family Center has entered into an Even Start partnership with New Visions—the local Head Start provider, the Newport Public Library, the Florence Gray Center—which provides housing for low-income families, the Community College of Rhode Island and the Newport Hospital. Half of its participants are non-English readers.

In Woonsocket, the Fairmont School is the Even Start center, with partners from Literacy Volunteers of Northern Rhode Island and Woonsocket Head Start, among others. Three cities and towns—Johnston, North Providence, and Smithfield, have joined together to create the Tri-Town Community Action Even Start Program. Finally, the Cunningham School Even Start Program has established a partnership with Pawtucket Public Schools and Libraries, the Pawtucket Day Nursery, and a range of education and social service providers.

Each of these programs has utilized existing early childhood and adult education services. Together they are striving to address the needs of the whole family.

In the 12 years since the Even Start Program first was created, our nation has been propelled into the information age. Americans are increasingly dependent on technology for a wide range of needs and services. This new age magnifies our need for a literate society. As we continue to experience technological advancements, the educationally disadvantaged fall further behind. I believe that the Even Start Family Literacy Act as reauthorized by this bill—the Literacy Involves Families Together Act—is critically important to our Nation's children, our Nation's families, and our Nation's future.

I see Senator JEFFORDS on the floor. Before I yield to him, I thank him for his generosity to me and for his leadership in the area of education. Chairman JEFFORDS has the daunting task of leading the Senate's efforts to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. From what I know of Senator JEFFORDS, this major undertaking couldn't be in more able hands.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me as cosponsors of this bill.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, we were all deeply saddened just a few days ago at the death of Senator John Chafee. Certainly, that sadness can never diminish completely. But having his son with us today and starting right off by introducing an excellent piece of legislation certainly brings us strong hope for the future.

Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Rhode Island for introducing the Literacy Involves Families Together Act, the LIFT Act. This legislation reauthorizes one of the most effective education programs, Even Start.

The Even Start Act was first introduced in 1985 by Representative BILL GOODLING, chairman of the House Education and Workforce Committee, and our former colleague, Senator John Chafee.

When first created, the goal of the Even Start program was to develop a comprehensive literacy program that improves educational opportunities for disadvantaged families by focusing on parenting education, early childhood education, and adult education. Since its establishment a little over a decade ago, Even Start has grown from 76 local programs serving 2,500 families to an estimated 600 programs assisting over 36,000 parents and 48,000 children.

The most recent evaluation of the Even Start program illustrated that both the adults and children who participated in the program significantly improved their reading and basic education skills. The evaluation specifically pointed out that the educational gap that existed at the beginning of the school year for first term Even Start students was reduced by approximately two-thirds when the Even Start students were tested at the conclusion of the school year.

The most recent national survey of reading achievement by fourth graders indicates that forty-four percent of school age children in this nation are reading below a basic level of achievement.

Sadly, the statistics are also dismal when analyzing adult literacy skills. The most recent National Adult Literacy Survey found a total of 44 million adults, almost 25 percent of the adult population in the United States, were at the lowest literacy level. The lowest literacy level means that 44 million adults in this country have demonstrated difficulty in the reading and writing skills essential for carrying out daily routines. The uniqueness of the Even Start program is that it provides services to the entire family—it enables families to learn together.

I commend my colleague from Rhode Island for making literacy a very high priority. I am especially pleased that he chose to sponsor the reauthorization of the Even Start program which was first introduced to this body by his father.

I look forward to working with the Senator from Rhode Island on the Literacy Involves Families Together Act, the LIFT Act, as a part of the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act which the Senate will consider early next year and on other education and literacy initiatives that will enable all of our Nation's citizens to have the knowledge and skills necessary to compete in the global economy.

I again commend the Senator from Rhode Island for being out here so fast and quick with a very important piece of legislation. I share his enthusiasm and look forward to working with him.

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 1892. A bill to authorize the acquisition of the Valles Caldera, to provide for an effective land and wildlife management program for this resource within the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

THE VALLES CALDERA PRESERVATION ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, in Northern New Mexico there is a truly unique working ranch on an historic Mexican land grant known as Baca Location No. 1. The ranch is currently owned and managed by the Baca Land and Cattle Company, and it comprises most of a collapsed, extinct volcano known as the Valles Caldera. The Valles Caldera is a beautiful place with rolling meadows, crystal-clear streams, roaming elk, and vast stands of Ponderosa pines. I am very proud to announce we are introducing legislation today that will authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire this property which is a truly unique 95,000 acre working ranch in New Mexico.

For Senator BINGAMAN and I, and a few others working on this issue, this is a not-so-instant replay from last year. Last year around this time, Senator BINGAMAN and I announced that we had reached agreement with the President on a comprehensive plan to acquire the Baca Ranch and, at the same time, to provide for disposal of designated surplus land from the Federal inventory. Those two concepts, embodied in Titles I and II of last year's bill, have survived in this new bill.

Title I provides for an innovative trust structure to manage this ranch, when it is purchased by the Federal Government. Title II provides a process for compensating citizens who await Federal payment for land trapped within vast areas of Federal land, so-called ''inholders'', and the orderly disposal of Federal land that has already been declared surplus by the Federal Government.

As you may recall, Senator BINGAMAN began this process with his purchase bill in 1997. The process of purchasing the Baca Ranch for the public was jump-started last summer when President Clinton and I, flying on Air Force One to Washington, reached an agreement on the concept of an innovative trust arrangement to manage the Baca, if it were to become part of Federal land holdings. The President's response led to a number of rounds of negotiations between representatives of the Administration and our offices.

Finally, after literally thousands of hours of discussion at all levels, agreement was reached, we introduced the bill and a similar one was introduced in the House of Representatives. And, in what I frankly admit was almost miraculous, we were able to persuade Congress to provide $40 million in last year's appropriations process as earnest money for any Baca Ranch purchase that might be authorized by Congress.

Then, unexpected disaster struck. The owners of the Baca Ranch decided not to sell the land after all. I said to many of you then that I thought the purchase was dead.

However, like Lazarus the Baca Ranch purchase lives again. I must thank Senator BINGAMAN for his leadership in this matter, Congresswoman WILSON for her extremely effective work behind the scenes in the House to promote the purchase, and the new Congressman from Santa Fe, Mr. UDALL, for his support. And, I must thank the Administration for its commitment.

This kind of cooperation has brought us to this day of good news. Today, Senator BINGAMAN and I again introduce a bill to authorize both the purchase of the Baca Ranch by the federal government and the orderly disposal of surplus lands in order to pay for debts the government owes to ''inholders.'' I understand that Representatives WILSON and UDALL will introduce companion legislation in the House.

Now, let's talk for a moment about the $101 million price tag the Baca Ranch purchase carries. The $40 million that we won last year from the Appropriations process had been spent. The President didn't ask for it in his budget, logically, since he thought the ranch was no longer for sale. And, the Interior Appropriations Subcommittees in the House and Senate failed to appropriate the $40 million for the same reason—it seemed that the purchase was dead.

However, the President recently announced a $101 million purchase agreement between the federal government and the Dunigan family, the current owners of the Baca Ranch. Quickly, we jumped to action, and in October, the New Mexico delegation succeeded in restoring the $40 million originally approved last year for the purchase. As a member of the Senate Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, I have been involved in talks between congressional negotiators and the White House over several issues in the FY 2000 Interior Appropriations Bill. Those talks have led to a tentative agreement to provide an additional $61 million, on top of the $40 million restored in October, for the Baca Ranch purchase. If the $101 million appropriation becomes law, its release would be subject to congressional authorization of the land acquisition, as well as a review of the ranch appraisal by the Comptroller General of the United States.

This is a terrific development and could very well help in moving this authorizing legislation through Congress next year. The drive to bring this beautiful ranch into public ownership has helped gain this funding. As important as the money, however, is retaining the dual nature of this legislation. This bill contains two major titles: one to authorize purchase of the Baca Ranch, which draws most of the headlines; and the other to begin a major reform in federal land management. The President has signed onto both; we have signed onto both. Both Titles must eventually become law in order for the Baca Ranch purchase to proceed.

I have visited the Baca Ranch, and I can tell you that it is one beautiful piece of property. The Valles Caldera is one of the world's largest resurgent lava domes. The depression from a huge volcanic eruption over a million years ago is more than a half-mile deep and fifteen miles across at its widest point. The land was originally granted to the heirs of Don Luis Maria Cabeza de Vaca under a settlement enacted by Congress in 1860. Since that time, the property has remained virtually intact as a single, large, tract of land.

The careful husbandry of the Ranch by the Dunigan family provides a model for sustainable land development and use. The Ranch's natural beauty and abundant resources, and its proximity to large municipal populations could provide numerous recreational opportunities for hiking, fishing, camping, cross-country skiing, and hunting. The Baca is a unique working ranch. It is not a wilderness area, and can best be protected for future generations by continuing its operation as a working asset through a unique management structure. This legislation provides that unique management under a trust that may allow for its eventual operation to become financially self-sustaining.

Mr. President, because of the ranch's unique character, I am not interested in having it managed under the usual federal authorities, as is typical of the Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management, or the National Park Service. Under the current state of affairs on our public lands, Forest Service and BLM management is constantly hounded by litigation initiated by some of the same groups that wish to bring this ranch into government ownership. The Valles Caldera National Preserve will serve as a model to explore alternative means of federal management and will provide the American people with opportunities to enjoy the Valles Caldera and its many resources.

The unique nature of the Valles Caldera, and its resources, requires a unique management program, dedicated to appropriate development and preservation under the principle of the highest and best use of the Ranch in the interest of the public. Title I of this legislation provides the framework necessary to fulfil that objective. It authorizes the acquisition of the Baca Ranch by the Forest Service. At the same time, it establishes a government-owned corporation, called the Valles Caldera Trust, whose sole responsibility is to ensure that the ranch is managed in a manner that will preserve its current unique character, and provide enumerable opportunities for the American people to enjoy its splendor. Most importantly to me, however, the legislation will allow for the ranch's continued operation as a working asset for the people of north-central New Mexico, without further drawing on the thinly-stretched resources of the federal land management agencies.

I would like to emphasize that both portions of this bill are milestones in federal land management. This legislation independently addresses the acquisition of this unique property for public use and enjoyment, while solving current land management problems related to surplus land disposal and the acquisition of inholdings from owners who truly want to sell their land.

Currently, approximately one-third of New Mexico's land is in federal ownership or under federal management. These public lands are an important resource that require our most thoughtful management. In order to better conserve existing national treasures for future use and enjoyment, we have devised a good plan to dispose of surplus land through sale or exchange into private, State, or local government ownership.

In many cases, it is just too costly to keep this unneeded land under federal ownership, and it can be more effectively managed in other hands. Title II of this bill, the Federal Land Transaction Facilitation Act, calls for the orderly disposition of surplus federal property on a state by state basis, and provides land managers with needed tools to address the problem created by ''inholdings'' within federally managed areas. There are currently more than 45 million acres of privately owned land trapped within the boundaries of Federal land management units, including national parks, national forests, national monuments, national wildlife refuges, and wilderness areas.

In other cases, however, landowners who want out have been waiting generations for the Federal Government to set aside funding and get around to acquiring their property. This legislation directs the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture to reach out to those property owners who want to sell their land. It also instructs the Departments to establish a priority for the acquisition of these inholdings based, in part, on how long the owner has been waiting to sell.

An issue related to the problem created by inholdings is the abundance of public domain land which the Bureau of Land Management has determined it no longer needs to fulfill its mission. Under the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, the BLM has identified an estimated 4 to 6 million acres of public domain lands for disposal.

Let me simply clarify that point—the BLM already has authority under an existing law, FLPMA, to exchange or sell lands out of Federal ownership. Through its public process for land use planning, when the agency has determined that certain lands would be more useful to the public under private or local governmental control, it is already authorized to dispose of these lands, either by sale or exchange.

The sale or exchange of this land would be beneficial to local communities, adjoining land owners, and federal land mangers, alike.

An orderly process for the efficient sale or exchange of land identified for disposal does not currently exist. The Federal Land Transaction Facilitation Act addresses this problem by providing that a portion of the proceeds generated from the sale of these lands will be used to fulfill all legal requirements for the transfer of these lands out of Federal ownership. The majority of the proceeds generated would be used to acquire inholdings from those who want to sell their land.

The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee will schedule hearings to address the many issues regarding Federal purchase of the Baca Ranch in the near future. Congress has tried to resolve the difficult challenges in acquiring this property before, and failed; cooperation among the parties may bring success this time around. I want to thank everyone who has helped in this 18-month-long effort. I believe that in the end, we will be able to stand together and tell the American people that we truly have accomplished two great and innovative things with this legislation.

Mr. President, I am confident that if we get an Interior appropriations bill, the money will be in it. Everyone should know that it is subject to two conditions: A full authorization bill being passed and signed and subject to the General Accounting Office reviewing the procedures for the appraisal of the property and assuring the Congress of what they have done, in a sense with the expertise that is consistent with what must be used in order to satisfy Congress that there is a fair purchase price involved in the agreement.

I yield the floor to my colleague, Senator BINGAMAN.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I thank my colleague and very much appreciate the leadership he has shown on this important issue as well. This is a truly bipartisan effort we have made on behalf of New Mexico. This is not just an issue of the 106th Congress. This is an issue that our Sate has been pursuing for many decades. Back in the early 1960s, one of our predecessors in the Senate, Senator Clinton Anderson, made a valiant effort to bring the Baca Ranch into Federal ownership so the public could enjoy it and so its preservation could be assured for future generations.

After 3 years of effort in that direction, he abandoned the effort because of the infighting that occurred among competing interests. Then, Mr. President, over two years ago I rose in this chamber to introduce a bill to authorize the acquisition of the Baca Location #1, a ranch which comprises about ninety percent of the magnificent Valles Caldera. Today I rise to cosponsor a bill with Sen. DOMENICI that will not only authorize purchase of the Baca Ranch, but also a unique method of management for this property.

A world renowned volcanic caldera sweeping approximately fifty miles in circumference, the Valles Caldera is the ecological heart of the Jemez Mountains. It's unparalleled vast upland meadows broken by forested volcanic domes and intertwined with 27 miles of winding trout streams, are home to a stunning variety of wildlife including: mountain lions, black bear, whitetail deer, redtail hawks, eagles, and wild turkey. It has also been the breeding ground for one of the largest elk herds in the lower forty-eight states.

There has been a desire on the part of the Dunigan family, the current owners of that land, to see that it go into public ownership, and the father of the of the current owners made that attempt before he died. They have recently decided they want to carry through with that wish of his and accordingly, as Senator DOMENICI indicated, the negotiations between the Dunigan family and the Federal Government have proceeded and now have come to a good resolution. This presents us with an incredible opportunity for the American people.

The potential of this land is enormous:

It could be used as a grassbank to allow ranchers to rest and rehabilitate hundreds of thousands of acres of public range land in New Mexico without having to lose production in the process;

It could provide incredible opportunities for scientific study and education, in the geophysical and biological sciences;

It currently is, and could continue to be, one of the premier hunting and fishing destinations in the country;

It's scenic value makes it an ideal location for the film industry. In fact it has often been used as a backdrop for movies, TV series, and commercials;

It presents amazing opportunities for outdoor recreation including, hiking, camping, horseback riding, cross-country skiing, and photography; and

As with many of the scenic wonders in my home state of New Mexico, there are places within the caldera that are of tremendous cultural significance to various Native American tribes in the area.

Clearly if this property were to be brought into public ownership it should be managed to preserve its incredible natural condition, while maintaining a balance with the various ways it could be used and enjoyed. The experiment called for in this bill sets out broad policy goals for the land (to preserve its natural treasures and to make it financially self-sustaining) and establishes a nine member board of trustees that shall set management policy for what would become the Valles Caldera Preserve. By requiring that each trustee have experience from differing but critical perspectives, this trust may be able to reach a balance that will meet the needs of the land and the public.

The nine members of this board would include:

(1) the Supervisor of the Santa Fe National Forest;

(2) the Superintendent of Bandelier National Monument;

(3) a person with expertise in range management and the livestock industry;

(4) a person with expertise in fish and wildlife management including game and non-game species;

(5) a person with expertise in sustainable forest management;

(6) an active participant in a conservation organization;

(7) a person with financial management and business expertise;

(8) a person with expertise in the cultural and natural history of the region; and finally;

(9) someone active in the State or local government in New Mexico familiar with the customs of the local area.

At least five of these trustees would be required to be residents of New Mexico. It would be an experiment, and would expire within twenty years unless it proves successful and is renewed by Congress.

A second part of this bill, not related to the management of the Valles Caldera Preserve, seeks to address the goal of the Federal land management agencies to consolidate their land holdings, by first helping to promote the sale of the widely scattered parcels of land that the Bureau of Land Management has designated ''suitable for disposal,'' and secondly by using the proceeds of those sales towards the acquisition of inholdings within our public lands, areas of critical environmental concern, and other lands of exceptional resource value. This program would be authorized for ten years.

Just as the Baca Ranch can be seen as a large inholding surrounded by federal land which is worthy of public ownership, there are many other inholdings in our national parks, forests, wildlife refuges and public lands, where private owners are willing and eager to sell to government. At the same time, there are some two million acres of public land that the BLM has determined are too remote, isolated, or otherwise situated to make management more of a burden than a benefit to the Federal tax payer.

Often these lands are small 20 and 40 acre parcels surrounded by, or forming checker boarded areas with, private or state land. Though consolidating these lands has long been a goal of Federal land managers, the costs of surveying the land for endangered species, archeological artifacts, and for the purpose of determining a fair market value has hampered these efforts. This bill would create a mechanism to accelerate this work.

Mr. President, this bill is important because it holds the real promise of bringing the entire Valles Caldera into public ownership after so many failures in the past. It represents a compromise which Sen. DOMENICI and I have worked on with the Administration, the House Members of the New Mexico delegation, and with some consultation with the majority staff of the Energy & and Natural Resources Committee. We have also received innumerable comments from various constituencies.

Like all negotiated legislation, each constituency and interest group would like to change a piece here or there. However, I believe it is overall a good bill which meets the broadest concerns raised by those constituencies and should be viewed as a whole rather than in pieces. My sincere hope is that we will be able to pass it substantially as it is early next session.

The other issue that Senator DOMENICI spoke to is the appropriating of funding for the purchase. I also am extremely pleased with that. I know the administration has felt strongly that we should try to get the full funding for the purchase of the ranch accomplished in this session of the 106th Congress before we adjourn. I know Senator DOMENICI has worked hard to accomplish that. I also worked with the Appropriations Committee members and the administration to full fund this purchase. I am very pleased to know that we are going to see that full appropriation at such time as we have an Interior appropriations bill signed into law.

This is an important effort for the State of New Mexico. I believe when the 106th Congress is finally completed, not the end of this week or next week but a year from now, when we look back and see what was accomplished in that 106th Congress that is important to the State of New Mexico and the people of New Mexico, this acquisition of the Baca Ranch will be at the top of the list.

I very much appreciate the good bipartisan effort that has gone into this.

By Mr. BOND:

S. 1893. A bill to amend the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act to prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from taking land into trust for Indian tribes for gaming purposes under certain conditions, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

GAMING CLARIFICATION ACT OF 1999

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, today I am introducing a Senate companion bill to legislation sponsored in the other body by the distinguished Representative from southwestern Missouri (Mr. BLUNT). This bill intends to clarify the application of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act, or IGRA, in Missouri.

Specifically, this bill would prevent Indian Tribes from setting up casino gambling operations in areas of Missouri where non-Indians currently are prohibited from gambling. This is vitally important, if for no other reason than to maintain harmony in these communities. It is also essential to preserve the family-friendly atmosphere that draws so many vacationers to these areas. Branson, Missouri, in particular, has attained national fame as an extraordinarily beautiful area, with fun activities and entertainment suitable for parents and children alike.

An invasion of gambling into this setting would wreck this tremendous asset. It would bring all the well-known pathologies and social problems that accompany gambling. I oppose introducing gambling into these areas and will do all I can to fight it. We must protect the family spirit that makes Branson a national destination for vacationers. We must do likewise for other Missouri communities that offer similar sanctuaries from the hyperactive stress of modern life, as well as great places for residents to raise children, build homes, and do business.

The bill I introduce today is very similar to one I offered in 1997. That bill would also have prevented Tribally owned casinos in areas of Missouri where non-Indian casinos are currently illegal. It became necessary when a Tribe in Oklahoma applied to put land in the small town of Seneca, Missouri into trust status for gambling purposes. They wanted to operate a casino where no one else could do so legally and to do so despite overwhelming community objection. Fortunately, the Interior Secretary indicated to me that he would not approve that application, and the Tribe ultimately withdrew its gambling application. Thus, the issue was satisfactorily resolved without legislation.

More recently, however, a flurry of applications has been filed to put Indian-owned land into trust for non-gambling activities. I am glad the Tribes are finding that non-gambling activities, as proposed uses for these lands, can be more beneficial and more friendly to their communities and neighbors. However, a great many of my constituents are concerned that these trust applications might make it easier to apply for gambling later.

They worry that some Tribes might be seeking to approve gambling casinos through the back door. This bill will eliminate that concern by clarifying the meaning of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act with respect to Missouri.

When the Congress adopted IGRA in 1988, it intended for a State's general policy toward gambling to be considered in evaluating applications by Indian Tribes to start casino operations. Drawing upon past court decisions in this area, the Congress provided that a Tribe might be eligible to conduct casino gambling on their lands in a State ''that permits such gambling for any purpose by any person, organization, or entity.'' Once a State decides to move away from a criminal/prohibitory stance toward gambling, and adopts instead a civil/regulatory stance, Tribes are to have the opportunity to engage in gambling in that State as well. To that end, they may ask the State to negotiate a compact to regulate those casinos.

Generally, this approach helps ensure public peace while also ensuring the Tribes get to participate in gambling on more-or-less the same basis as non-Indians in the State. If the people of a State, through their legislature or through direct legislation, decide to legalize casino gambling ''by any person, organization, or entity,'' they cannot simply exclude the Tribes in favor of whatever non-Indian gambling companies might have the inside track in the State government. The Tribes are to have the same opportunity as the non-Indian companies.

But, if the people of a State maintain a general prohibition on gambling—whether as an expression of moral opposition or for some other reason—the Tribes will also need to respect this public opinion just like everyone else. I believe this is the situation in Missouri, whose constitution includes just such a general prohibition on casino gambling, with an exception for casinos based on the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers.

Article III of the Missouri Constitution sets out the powers of the Missouri General Assembly. Section 39 of that article makes certain things expressly outside of the legislature's authority. This is where the State's general prohibition on gambling appears. ''The General Assembly shall not have power,'' it says, ''to authorize lotteries or gift enterprises for any purpose, and shall enact laws to prohibit the sale of lottery or gift enterprise tickets.'' It says prohibit, not regulate.

Gambling, in general, is still prohibited by State law. Under section 572.020 of the Missouri Revised Statutes, ''the crime of gambling'' is a class C misdemeanor, unless committed by a professional player, in which case the crime is a class D felony. This means the crime of gambling is punishable by fine of up to $300 in the case of a misdemeanor. A professional player may be fined up to $5,000 or twice the amount of any gain received, up to a limit of $25,000. These criminal offenses also carry potential prison sentences, of 15 days for a misdemeanor and up to 5 years for felony gambling.

The State constitution does not give the General Assembly authority to legalize these crimes. The power to legalize gambling was withheld from the General Assembly by the express terms of the constitution. Any change would require a constitutional amendment, ratified by the voters of Missouri.

The voters did exercise their authority to authorize very limited exceptions, without removing the general prohibition on legalized gambling. In the case of casino gambling, the voters authorized the General Assembly to legalize certain games only on excursion gambling boats and floating facilities docked along the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers. Again, the voters granted these limited exceptions without disturbing the general constitutional prohibition on gambling, which is a criminal offense elsewhere in the State.

The initiative that created this exception took this approach because many areas of Missouri have strong objections to gambling casinos. Particularly in southwest Missouri, many citizens hold strong moral objections to gambling. Many others simply fear that gambling would destroy the family atmosphere that makes the Branson area a desirable and unique vacation spot. Still others are concerned that gambling disproportionately preys on the hopes of the poor, making it a particularly regressive economic activity.

We can see this expression of the community's view in the votes that were cast on the Missouri and Mississippi riverboat casino initiative. In the November 1994 election, voters in Taney county (where Branson is located) voted against the casino initiative 73% to 27%. In Greene county (where southwest Missouri's largest metropolitan area of Springfield is located), 58% of voters opposed the riverboat casinos. Finally, in Newton county (the home of Seneca, Missouri, where a Tribe once sought to impose a casino on the local residents), 62% of voters opposed the constitutional amendment.

Knowing the strength of these communities' opinions on gambling in general, the sponsors of the initiative petition drive had no real alternative but to leave the general gambling prohibition intact while carving out a very narrow geographic exception for Missouri's two major rivers. Otherwise, the initiative would almost certainly have failed statewide as well. Therefore, the constitutional amendment reassured southwest Missourians that they likely would not feel the change directly—it would affect only the two rivers far away from them, and would not bring casinos into the family oriented Branson and Springfield areas. The general constitutional prohibition on gambling stayed in force.

The limited exception for riverboat casinos, therefore, did not change the State's posture on gambling from a criminal/prohibitory one to a civil/regulatory one. In areas such as the Branson, Missouri area, gambling is still a criminal offense. IGRA's requirement that the State negotiate to allow Tribally owned casinos is not triggered, since casino gambling in that area is not permitted by ''any person, organization, or entity.'' As I mentioned earlier, that's the language IGRA uses to trigger a State's obligation to negotiate with the Tribes to create a regulatory compact.

Tribes wanting to operate casinos on the Missouri or Mississippi Rivers might have a case under IGRA, since there are persons, organizations, or entities authorized to gamble there. But this is not true in Branson, Springfield, or other areas off the rivers where gambling is still prohibited and where the General Assembly lacks constitutional authority to legalize it even if it wanted to.

This view of IGRA is not undermined, as some claim, by the Mashantucket Pequot case decided in 1990. In that case, the Mashantucket Pequots sued Connecticut to force the State to negotiate a casino gambling compact because the State authorized ''Las Vegas Nights'' as a fundraising activity for certain nonprofit organizations. Connecticut had argued that the occasional Las Vegas Nights did not mean that the State had decriminalized gambling in general.

However, those nonprofits authorized to operate casinos, even on a very occasional basis, fall within the express language of ''any person, organization, or entity'' used in IGRA, which is what the Second Circuit Court of Appeals found. Allowing nonprofits to engage in some forms of casino gambling did move the State of Connecticut into a civil/regulatory stance on casino gambling. The State did not absolutely prohibit it; it regulated the type of organization permitted to engage in gambling. Thus, IGRA was triggered by the express language of the law.

This is completely different from the situation in Missouri, where all persons, organizations, and entities are flatly prohibited, by criminal law, from casino gambling anywhere but on the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers. The Mashantucket Pequot case does not apply to the Missouri situation. Geographic limitations, like in Missouri, were not at issue in that case.

Thus, the language of this bill does not really change the current policy of IGRA. It simply makes explicit what is already plainly implicit under current legislation and case law. It would take express notice of the provision in Missouri's constitution on gambling and recognize that Missouri still maintains a criminal/prohibitory stance toward gambling off the rivers.

Because some pro-gambling advocates are attempting to read the Mashantucket Pequot case too broadly, trying to make it apply to Missouri when it clearly does not, this bill is essential. In the past, a number of Tribes have tried to use that argument to try to set up casinos in Missouri—even in a small town like Seneca, nowhere near the Missouri or Mississippi Rivers. Because some people are trying to read into the Mashantucket Pequot case a view that is really not there, this bill writes into law the correct interpretation.

I appreciate the hard work my colleague in the other chamber did on this bill, and am glad to have the opportunity to resolve this issue once and for all.

By Mr. THOMAS (for himself and Mr. ENZI):

S. 1894. A bill to provide for the conveyance of certain land to Park County, Wyoming; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

NORTH CODY, WY LAND CONVEYANCE

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce a bill today to provide for the conveyance of economic development land for Park County, WY.

The management of our public lands and natural resources is often complicated and requires the coordination of many individuals to accomplish desired objectives. When western folks discuss Federal land issues, we do not often have an opportunity to identify proposals that capture and enjoy the support from a wide array of interests; however, the bill Senator ENZI and I are introducing today offers just such a unique prospect. Project coordinators and involved parties have spent a great deal of time incorporating the concerns of various individuals by presenting their plans to agency and congressional representatives.

This parcel of land was identified by the Bureau of Land Management and Bureau of Reclamation as an unsuitable area for public domain and the agencies have recommended that it be disposed of by the Federal Government. The Park County Commissioners subsequently approached the Wyoming Congressional Delegation about allowing the county to pursue economic development efforts that would be beneficial to the local town and surrounding communities. Specifically, this legislation is needed to allow the Federal Government to sell approximately 190 acres of land to Park County, WY for the appraised value of $240,000. The county commissioners intend to work with an economic development group to attract new businesses to the area and allow other companies to expand at an industrial park adjacent to the conveyance land.

Mr. President, this bill enjoys the support of many different groups including county government officials as well as the local community. This proposal will provide for the creation of a number of private sector jobs in a county that has 82 percent Federal land ownership. It is my hope that the Senate will seize this opportunity to allow a local community to improve their livelihoods and economic prospects.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1894

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONVEYANCE OF LAND TO PARK COUNTY, WYOMING.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the parcel of land described in subsection (d) has been withdrawn from the public domain for reclamation purposes and is managed by the Bureau of Reclamation;

(2) the land has been subject to a withdrawal review, a level I contaminant survey, and historical, cultural, and archaeological resource surveys by the Bureau of Reclamation;

(3) the Bureau of Land Management has conducted a cadastral survey of the land and has determined that the land is no longer suitable for return to the public domain; and

(4) the Bureau of Reclamation and the Bureau of Land Management concur in the recommendation of disposal of the land as described in the documents referred to in paragraph (2).

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this Act:

(1) COUNTY.—The term ''County'' means Park County, Wyoming.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(c) CONVEYANCE.—In consideration of payment of $240,000 to the Secretary by the County, the Secretary shall convey to the County all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the parcel of land described in subsection (d).

(d) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—The parcel of land described in this subsection is the parcel located in the County comprising 190.12 acres, the legal description of which is as follows:

Sixth Principal Meridian, Park County, Wyoming

T. 53 N., R. 101 W.	Acreage

(e) RESERVATION OF RIGHTS.—The instrument of conveyance under subsection (c) shall reserve all rights to locatable, salable, and leasable oil and gas reserves.

(f) LEASES, EASEMENTS, RIGHTS-OF-WAY, AND SPECIAL USE PERMITS.—The conveyance under subsection (c) shall be subject to any land use leases, easements, rights-of-way, and special use permits in existence as of the date of the conveyance.

(g) ENVIRONMENTAL LIABILITY.—

(1) LIABILITY OF THE FUTURE OWNERS.—

(A) FINDING.—Congress finds that—

(i) the United States has in good faith exercised due diligence in accordance with applicable laws (including regulations), in an effort to identify any environmental contamination on the parcel of land described in subsection (d); and

(ii) the parcel is free of any environmental contamination.

(B) RELEASE FROM LIABILITY.—The United States holds harmless and releases from all liability any future owners of the conveyed land for any violation of environmental law or other contamination problem arising from any action or inaction of any tenant of the land that vacates the lease before the date of the conveyance under subsection (c).

(2) LIABILITY OF TENANTS.—A tenant of the parcel of land described in subsection (d) on the date of the conveyance or thereafter shall be liable for any violation of environmental law or other contamination problem that results from any action or inaction of the tenant after the date of the conveyance.

(h) USE OF LAND.—The conveyance under subsection (c) shall be subject to the condition that the County—

(1) use the land for the promotion of economic development; or

(2) transfer the land to a local organization formed for the purpose of promoting economic development.

(i) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions in connection with the conveyance under subsection (c) as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States.

By Mr. LEAHY (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 1896. A bill to amend the Public Building Act of 1959 to give first priority to the location of Federal facilities in central business areas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

THE DOWNTOWN EQUITY ACT OF 1999

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined today by my good friend, the senior senator from Montana, Senator BAUCUS, in introducing the ''Downtown Equity Act of 1999.''

The location of federal buildings and facilities have a tremendous impact on local communities. We are introducing the ''Downtown Equity Act'' to ensure that the federal government is a good neighbor that promotes the vibrancy of communities throughout the country.

Guidance for federal agencies on the location of their facilities exists in two executive orders. Unfortunately, these directives are at times inconsistent with each other and have been used to support different goals. This became clear to me when I worked closely with the General Services Administration (GSA), the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) and the city of Burlington. In 1998, I called together a meeting with all these interested parties to discuss eligible locations for a new INS facility in downtown Burlington. Officials from the city cited one executive order about locating buildings in downtown areas while INS officials countered with another executive order that promotes the location of federal facilities in rural areas. Instead of complementing one another to promote a reasonable policy, the two executive orders are negating each other and clearly neither have enough teeth to result in the policy proclaimed in either order.

Mr. President, managing a city is a difficult enough task. Mayors and city managers across the country should not have to also wade through dueling executive orders when they share the same goals as the Administration to re-energize town centers. The federal government needs to set a clear policy on the location of federal buildings in downtown areas. Without legislation to clarify this policy, agencies make decisions about the location of buildings and operations that can undercut the viability of central business districts, encourage sprawl, degrade the environment, and have an adverse impact on historical economic development patterns. Federal facilities should be sited, designed, built and operated in ways that contribute to—not detract from—the economic well-being and character of our cities and towns. Federal facilities can have a tremendous impact and we need to make sure that location decisions do not erode the character and quality of life in our cities and towns. I want to prevent a repeat of the experiences in Vermont, and I know that Senator BAUCUS has many of the same concerns in Montana.

The Downtown Equity Act of 1999 clarifies the intention of these dueling executive orders by directing federal officials to give priority to locating federal facilities in central business areas. This bill does not pit urban areas versus rural areas, but instead promotes the siting of these facilities in downtown areas—urban or rural. By adopting this legislation, the Federal government can become a leader in the effort to limit sprawl and support the economic vitality of central business areas.

There is a fundamental problem with development that our bill also tries to address: it's more expensive to build and rent in a traditional downtown area than to build on an empty site outside of a business district. Downtown areas have great difficulty competing in the procurement process because of the higher costs generally associated with downtown areas. Sometimes, despite the best intentions of federal officials, sites with the lowest absolute cost are predisposed to win. This approach is too simplistic. Our ''Downtown Equity Act of 1999'' directs the General Services Administration to study the feasibility of establishing a system for giving equal consideration to both the absolute and adjusted costs of locating in urban and rural areas, and between projects inside and outside of central business areas. While the absolute cost of projects will always be important, a more balanced and robust consideration of the costs of a project is needed.

The benefits of limiting sprawl, supporting historic development patterns, and revitalizing our downtown central business areas can mitigate the higher costs associated with constructing, leasing, and operating Federal establishments inside central business areas. Unless the overriding mission of the agency or economic prudence absolutely dictate otherwise, location of Federal facilities should be supportive of local growth management plans for downtown central business areas.

When Federal landlords or tenants arrive in town, we have every right to expect that they will be good neighbors. Beyond that, the Federal government also needs to be a leader in the effort to limit sprawl and protect the environment and the character of our cities and towns. Livable and thriving central business districts can be a renewable resource, and the Federal government should be part of the solution, not part of the problem.

Senator BAUCUS and I look forward to working with our colleagues and with the Executive Branch to bring much needed reform to the decision-making process that governs the siting of Federal facilities. We all recognize that decisions to prevent or limit sprawl will always be made locally, but the Federal Government can do much to help our communities act on their decisions. And, the Federal Government must stop being an unwitting accomplice to sprawl by siting buildings outside of downtown areas.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, and a section-by-section summary of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1896

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Downtown Equity Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that locating Federal facilities in central business areas—

(1) strengthens the economic base of cities, towns, and rural communities of the United States and makes them attractive places to live and work;

(2) enhances livability by limiting sprawl and providing air quality and other environmental benefits; and

(3) supports historic development patterns.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to ensure that Federal agencies recognize the implications of the location of Federal facilities on the character, environment, economic development patterns, and infrastructure of communities;

(2) to ensure that the General Services Administration and other Federal agencies that make independent location decisions give first priority to locating Federal facilities in central business areas;

(3) to encourage preservation of historic buildings and stabilization of historic areas; and

(4) to direct the Administrator of General Services to study the feasibility of establishing a system for meaningful comparison of Federal facility procurement costs between central business areas and areas outside central business areas.

SEC. 3. LOCATION OF FEDERAL FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 U.S.C. 601 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 22. LOCATION OF FEDERAL FACILITIES.

''(a) PRIORITY FOR CENTRAL BUSINESS AREAS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2) and as otherwise provided by law, in locating (including relocating) Federal facilities, the head of each Federal agency shall give first priority to central business areas.

''(2) EXCEPTION.—The priority required under paragraph (1) may be waived if location in a central business area—

''(A) would materially compromise the mission of the agency; or

''(B) would not be economically prudent.

''(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—

''(1) ACTIONS BY ADMINISTRATOR.—The Administrator shall—

''(A) promulgate such regulations as are necessary to implement the requirements of subsection (a) with respect to locating Federal facilities—

''(i) in public buildings acquired under this Act; and

''(ii) in leased space acquired by the Administrator under section 210(h) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 490(h)); and

''(B) report annually to Congress—

''(i) on compliance with subsection (a) by the Administrator in carrying out—

''(I) public building location actions under this Act; and

''(II) lease procurement actions under section 210(h) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 490(h)); and

''(ii) on compliance with this section by Federal agencies—

''(I) in acting under delegations of authority under this Act; and

''(II) in the case of lease procurement actions, in using leasing authority delegated under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.).

''(2) ACTIONS BY FEDERAL AGENCIES.—Each Federal agency shall—

''(A) comply with the regulations promulgated by the Administrator under paragraph (1)(A); and

''(B) report annually to the Administrator concerning—

''(i) the actions of the Federal agency in locating public buildings under this Act; and

''(ii) lease procurement actions taken by the Federal agency using leasing authority delegated under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.).''.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Section 13 of the Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 U.S.C. 612) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(8) CENTRAL BUSINESS AREA.—The term 'central business area' means—

''(A) the centralized business area of a community, as determined by local officials; and

''(B) any area adjacent and similar in character to a centralized business area of a community, including any specific area that may be determined by local officials to be such an adjacent and similar area.

''(9) FEDERAL FACILITY.—The term 'Federal facility' means the site of a project to construct, alter, purchase, or acquire (including lease) a public building, or to lease office or any other type of space, under this Act or the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.).''.

SEC. 4. STUDY OF PROCUREMENT COST ASSESSMENT METHODS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the terms ''central business area'' and ''Federal facility'' have the meanings given the terms in section 13 of the Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 U.S.C. 612).

(b) STUDY.—Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Administrator of General Services shall conduct a study and report to Congress on the feasibility of establishing a system for—

(1) assessing and giving equal consideration to the absolute and adjusted comparable costs (as determined under paragraph (2)) of—

(A) locating Federal facilities in rural areas as compared to locating Federal facilities in urban areas;

(B) locating Federal facilities in central business areas of rural areas as compared to locating Federal facilities in rural areas outside central business areas; and

(C) locating Federal facilities in central business areas of urban areas as compared to locating Federal facilities in urban areas outside central business areas;

(2) for the purposes of paragraph (1), adjusting the absolute comparable costs referred to in that paragraph to correct for the inherent differences in property values between rural areas and urban areas; and

(3) assessing and giving consideration to the impacts on land use, air quality and other environmental factors, and to historic preservation, in the location of Federal facilities.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—In addition to amounts made available under any other law, there is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $200,000 for each of fiscal years 2001 and 2002.

SUMMARY OF THE DOWNTOWN EQUITY ACT OF 1999

The ''Downtown Equity Act of 1999'' clarifies a multitude of Federal laws and regulations governing the location of Federal office space and other facilities by requiring that first priority be given to central business areas. Currently, the location of federal offices and other facilities is governed by several different laws and executive orders, which often creates confusion and conflict. For instance, current law gives a strong preference to locating Federal facilities in rural areas, while an Executive Order (No. 12072) promotes the location of Federal facilities in central business areas. These conflicting policies can have serious adverse consequences to communities, such as promoting sprawl and contributing to the decline of downtown areas.

The ''Downtown Equity Act of 1999'' seeks to eliminate this confusion by establishing a clear, statutory preference for locating Federal facilities in central business areas, both in rural and urban areas. Thus, Federal facilities will help strengthen the economic base of cities, towns and rural communities and make them more attractive places to live and work. Locating Federal facilities in downtown areas will also support historic development patterns, limit sprawl, and have other important environmental benefits.

The bill also requires the General Services Administration (GSA) to study the feasibility of establishing a procurement assessment system which considers both the absolute and adjusted costs of locating Federal facilities between central business areas and outside those areas.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. Title.

Section 2. Finding and Purposes

Section 3. Amends the Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 USC 601 et seq.) to add a new section establishing a preference for locating Federal facilities in central business areas in both rural and urban areas. This preference could be waived if locating a facility in such area would either materially compromise the mission of the agency or would not be economically prudent. GSA is required to adopt rules to implement this provision and also to report annually to the Congress on the location of Federal agencies under this section. This section also defines ''central business area'' as the centralized business area determined by local officials.

Section 4. This section requires that within two years, the GSA conduct a study and report to Congress on the feasibility of establishing a system for comparing the absolute and adjusted costs of locating Federal facilities in rural areas as compared to urban areas and in central business areas as compared to outside central business areas. The bill authorizes a total of $400,000 for the study.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague from Vermont, Senator LEAHY in introducing the Downtown Equity Act of 1999. This bill will make the federal government a better partner with local officials when it comes to locating federal offices in a community. It will establish in statute a clear preference for federal offices to be located in the central business areas of a community. Why is this important?

We all know the many problems facing community leaders as they chart the future course of their cities and towns. They must balance development patterns, employment, historic preservation, city services, transportation, and many other factors to arrive at a plan that makes the most sense for them.

In many cases, the Federal government is a major source of employment and economic activity in these communities. That is particularly true in smaller cities and towns, where federal employees can make up a larger percentage of the employment base than in our large metropolitan areas.

But too often, local officials find themselves battling with federal agencies over where to locate, or relocate, Federal facilities. The desires of agencies to locate on the outskirts of a small town can conflict with the needs of the community to preserve a vital business center downtown.

I have seen firsthand some of these location battles in Montana. Communities such as Helena, Billings and Glasgow, have seen agencies threaten to move out of the downtown area, removing a linchpin of economic development that supports other local businesses. In another case, this time in Butte, an agency looked to abandon an historic building downtown in favor of a new site closer to the Interstate.

The impact on these communities from such actions can be devastating. In Helena, for example, the relocation of the federal building would have removed over 400 Federal workers from the area and dealt a major blow to plans to revive the downtown core, known as Last Chance Gulch. And in Glasgow, a small town even by Montana standards, the relocation from the central business area to a new site on the outskirts of town threatened the survival of other businesses downtown and contributed to sprawl. Yes, even in the Big Sky state, sprawl is a threat to the vitality of our communities and the beauty of our environment.

Many of these conflicts between communities and Federal agencies stems from the confusing, and sometimes conflicting, jumble of laws, executive orders, and regulations. It almost seems as if there is a provision to justify almost anything an agency wants to do. One law tells agencies to locate in rural areas. An executive order tells agencies to give priority to central business areas. No wonder agencies are confused and community leaders are angry.

Mr. President, that's not right. We should have a clear, simple to understand policy when it comes to location of Federal facilities. Furthermore, that policy should make it easier for the Federal government to help community leaders who seek to maintain the vitality of their downtown areas. And that is what our bill does.

First, as a matter of policy, it states that locating federal facilities in central business areas is good for the economy and the livability of communities.

But more importantly, the bill implements that policy by requiring that the head of each Federal agency give first priority to central business areas when locating, or relocating, Federal facilities. This requirement could be waived if it would materially compromise the mission of the agency or if it would not be economically prudent. But those would be exceptions to the general rule that downtown areas should be the preferred area for Federal offices. And the downtown areas will be determined by local officials, not Federal agencies.

This bill will be good for our communities. And it will be good for the Federal government.

In closing let me express my appreciation to my colleague from Vermont for all the work that he has put into this issue. His leadership has been instrumental in crafting this bill. I look forward to working with him to bring this bill through the Environment and Public Works Committee and before the Senate early next year.

By Mr. BIDEN:

S. 1897. A bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish an Office of Autoimmune Disease at the National Institutes of Health, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

THE NIH OFFICE OF AUTOIMMUNE DISEASES ACT OF 1999

● Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the NIH Office of Autoimmune Diseases Act of 1999. This legislation, which is very similar to a bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Waxman, would create an Office of Autoimmune Diseases as part of the Office of the Director of the National Institutes of Health. I would like to outline briefly why I feel that this office and this legislation are needed.

To understand autoimmune diseases, it is first necessary to talk about the body's immune system. The immune system is a collection of tissues which is designed to fend off any foreign invaders into our body. For example, we live in a world surrounded by microbes of various kinds, many of which would be harmful to us if they could set up shop in our bodies. However, the immune system recognizes that a foreign microbe has entered our body and it mobilizes a variety of defenses to expel this foreign invader.

The critical importance of the immune system can be easily seen when something goes wrong with it. For example, when a baby is born with a major defect in its immune system, it is extremely vulnerable to attacks by bacteria that a healthy baby would be able to fight off. Such immune-deficient babies need to be protected from their environment in order to preserve their lives. You may have seen the TV programs about such ''bubble babies'', who have to spend their entire lives in a protective plastic bubble or a spacesuit.

However, although the immune system is essential for human life, it sometimes can cause problems with our health. When someone gets a kidney transplant, for example, it is the immune system which tries to fight off this ''foreign invader'', a process called rejection. The survival of the transplant requires that the recipient be given treatment in order to suppress the immune system.

Occasionally, the body's immune system goes haywire and starts to attack the body's own tissues as if they were foreign invaders. This process is called autoimmunity, and diseases in which autoimmunity is thought to play an important role are called autoimmune diseases. The spectrum of human illnesses for which there is evidence of an autoimmune component is extremely broad, ranging from lupus to diabetes to multiple sclerosis. At the National Institutes of Health, these different diseases are often studied in completely different institutes: diabetes in the National Institute of Diabetes and Digestive and Kidney Diseases; lupus in the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases; multiple sclerosis in the National Institute of Neurological Disorders and Stroke; and so forth.

Despite being studied in different locations, these diseases all have one thing in common: abnormalities of the immune system that lead to an autoimmune process in which the body actually attacks itself. It is vital that researchers on one autoimmune disease understand what research advances are being made on other autoimmune diseases; the key to understanding the autoimmune process in multiple sclerosis might very well be uncovered by a researcher working on autoimmunity in diabetes.

This is where the need for an NIH Office of Autoimmune Diseases arises. Its purpose is to make sure that there is cooperation and coordination across scientific disciplines for all those working on the broad spectrum of autoimmune diseases. Researchers working on autoimmunity in one narrowly defined disease must be able to benefit from research advances in autoimmune research. The history of medicine is replete with examples where breakthroughs in one area were actually a direct consequence of advances in a completely unrelated field.

This bill sets up an Office of Autoimmune Diseases at NIH, along with a broadly representative coordinating committee to assist it. The director of the Office of Autoimmune Diseases will be responsible for setting an agenda for research and education on autoimmune diseases, for promoting cooperation and coordination among the disparate entities that are working on autoimmune diseases, for serving as principal advisor to HHS on autoimmune diseases, for husbanding resources for autoimmune disease research, and for producing reports to keep other scientists and the public informed about progress in autoimmune disease research.

Mr. President, I'd like to explain why I have a particular interest in the area of autoimmune diseases. A very close friend of mine in Delaware, Ms. Tia McDowell, is fighting valiantly against a chronic disease. At present, the treatments for this disease no longer seem to be working very well, so Tia's hope lies in new research advances. Although doctors are not sure what causes Tia's disease, they do think that autoimmunity plays an important part. For Tia, and for others with diseases where autoimmunity is important, I want to make sure that we are moving ahead with research in the most efficient manner possible, and I think that creation of an NIH Office of Autoimmune Diseases is one way to help this process along.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the NIH Office of Autoimmune Diseases Act of 1999 as something we in Congress can do to help our research scientists conquer this puzzling and pernicious group of diseases. I ask that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The bill follows:

S. 1897

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''NIH Office of Autoimmune Diseases Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF AUTOIMMUNE DISEASES AT NATIONAL INSTITUTES OF HEALTH.

Title IV of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 281 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 404D the following section:

''AUTOIMMUNE DISEASES

''SEC. 404E. (a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established within the Office of the Director of NIH an office to be known as the Office of Autoimmune Diseases (in this section referred to as the 'Office'), which shall be headed by a Director appointed by the Director of NIH.

''(b) DUTIES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Office, in consultation with the coordinating committee established under subsection (c), shall carry out the following:

''(A) The Director shall recommend an agenda for conducting and supporting research on autoimmune diseases through the national research institutes. The agenda shall provide for a broad range of research and education activities relating to biomedical, psychosocial, and rehabilitative issues, including studies of the disproportionate impact of such diseases on women.

''(B) The Director shall with respect to autoimmune diseases promote coordination and cooperation among the national research institutes and entities whose research is supported by such institutes.

''(C) The Director shall promote the appropriate allocation of the resources of the National Institutes of Health for conducting and supporting research on autoimmune diseases.

''(D) The Director shall annually prepare a report that describes the research and education activities on autoimmune diseases being conducted or supported through the national research institutes, and that identifies particular projects or types of projects that should in the future be conducted or supported by the national research institutes or other entities in the field of research on autoimmune diseases.

''(2) PRINCIPAL ADVISOR REGARDING AUTOIMMUNE DISEASES.—With respect to autoimmune diseases, the Director of the Office shall serve as the principal advisor to the Secretary, the Assistant Secretary for Health, and the Director of NIH, and shall provide advice to the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Commissioner of Food and Drugs, and other relevant agencies.

''(c) COORDINATING COMMITTEE.—The Director of NIH shall ensure that there is in operation a committee to assist the Director of the Office in carrying out subsection (b), that the committee is designated as the Autoimmune Diseases Coordinating Committee, and that, to the extent possible, such Coordinating Committee includes liaison members from other Federal health agencies, including the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Food and Drug Administration.

''(d) REPORT.—Not later than October 1, 2001, the Comptroller General shall prepare and submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report concerning the effectiveness of the Office in promoting advancements in research, diagnosis, treatment, and prevention related to autoimmune diseases.

''(e) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'autoimmune diseases' includes diseases or disorders in which autoimmunity is thought to play a significant pathogenetic role, as determined by the Secretary..

''(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $950,000 for fiscal year 2000, and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2001 and 2002.''.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 188

At the request of Mr. WYDEN, the name of the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 188, a bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to authorize the use of State revolving loan funds for construction of water conservation and quality improvements.

S. 505

At the request of Mr. GRASSLEY, the name of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. KERREY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 505, a bill to give gifted and talented students the opportunity to develop their capabilities.

S. 783

At the request of Mrs. FEINSTEIN, the name of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 783, a bill to limit access to body armor by violent felons and to facilitate the donation of Federal surplus body armor to State and local law enforcement agencies.

S. 964

At the request of Mr. DASCHLE, the name of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 964, a bill to provide for equitable compensation for the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, and for other purposes.

S. 1215

At the request of Mr. DODD, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1215, a bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to furnish headstones or markers for marked graves of, or to otherwise commemorate, certain individuals.

S. 1277

At the request of Mr. BAUCUS, the name of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. ASHCROFT] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1277, a bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to establish a new prospective payment system for Federally-qualified health centers and rural health clinics.

At the request of Mr. GRASSLEY, the name of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COVERDELL] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1277, supra.

S. 1294

At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the name of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1294, a bill to direct the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration to issue regulations to limit the number of pieces of carry-on baggage that a passenger may bring on an airplane.

S. 1332

At the request of Mr. BAYH, the names of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY], the Senator from New York [Mr. SCHUMER], the Senator from Washington [Mrs. MURRAY], the Senator from California [Mrs. BOXER], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. CONRAD], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. LINCOLN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. TORRICELLI], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. LEAHY], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG] were added as cosponsors of S. 1332, a bill to authorize the President to award a gold medal on behalf of Congress to Father Theodore M. Hesburg, in recognition of his outstanding and enduring contributions to civil rights, higher education, the Catholic Church, the Nation, and the global community.

S. 1333

At the request of Mr. WYDEN, the name of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1333, a bill to expand homeownership in the United States.

S. 1384

At the request of Mr. ABRAHAM, the name of the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1384, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for a national folic acid education program to prevent birth defects, and for other purposes.

S. 1464

At the request of Mr. HAGEL, the name of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1464, a bill to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to establish certain requirements regarding the Food Quality Protection Act of 1996, and for other purposes.

S. 1488

SENATE RESOLUTION 226—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING JAPANESE PARTICIPATION IN THE WORLD TRADE ORGANIZATION

Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. RES. 226

Whereas Japan is the world's second largest economy with exports and imports together equal to one-fifth of its gross domestic product;

Whereas Japan is the second largest trading partner of the United States and sends almost one-third of its exports to the United States;

Whereas prosperity and growth in Japan, one of the primary beneficiaries of the liberal international trading system, is dependent on the maintenance of open markets throughout the world;

Whereas prosperity in the Asian region and globally requires open markets in Japan;

Whereas Japan has a profound interest in ensuring that the World Trade Organization continues to thrive and develop, and that world markets are open on the basis of a rules-based system that is widely supported by governments, businesses, nongovernmental organizations, and average citizens throughout the world;

Whereas Japan's dependence on open markets requires Japan to take a leadership role, rather than a defensive posture, in the next round of multilateral trade negotiations;

Whereas support for free trade in the United States and in many other countries has become increasingly fragile;

Whereas the world's major trading nations, including Japan, have a special responsibility to take the measures necessary to strengthen a consensus for free trade;

Whereas Japan's importation of manufactured goods, as a share of its gross domestic product, is considerably lower than that of other industrialized nations and is one of the lowest of all nations reporting data to the World Bank;

Whereas Japan has one of the lowest levels of intra-industry trade in the industrialized world according to the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development;

Whereas even in the case of rice where some progress was made at the Uruguay Round, the Government of Japan agreed to a tariff-rate quota, yet set the over quota tariff rate at a level that is currently equivalent to approximately a 500 percent ad valorem duty, thus drastically reducing the possible market impact of the concession;

Whereas Japan is protecting its trade-distorting policies in the areas of agriculture, forestry, and fishing and is trying to shift the focus of the next round of multilateral trade negotiations away from concessions and liberalization of its trade-distorting policies in these areas;

Whereas there is a concern that in the previous rounds of multilateral trade negotiations, the Government of Japan has been able to minimize the commitments it made;

Whereas there is a concern that the Government of Japan may be able to minimize the actual implementation of commitments through formal government measures and informal government guidance to counter the effects of those commitments on liberalization;

Whereas reducing Japanese tariffs and eliminating traditional nontariff barriers appears to have less of an effect than expected on improving market access in Japan in many sectors because of the complex and opaque network of systemic barriers that continue to exist in much of Japan's economic system;

Whereas despite the fact that Japan is a full participant in the WTO Agreement on Government Procurement and appears to be making concessions equal in value to the concessions made by other parties, Japan has not opened the government procurement market to the degree expected by the United States and other trading partners;

Whereas because of the impediments in the Japanese government procurement market that were not addressed by the GATT and the WTO, the United States has had to negotiate bilateral government procurement agreements covering computers, telecommunications equipment, medical products, satellites, and supercomputers;

Whereas the Government of Japan has called for reopening the WTO Agreement on the Implementation of Article VI of the GATT 1994 (the Antidumping Agreement), and supports similar efforts by other nations, which would result in reducing the effectiveness of United States trade law and the ability of the United States to take action against the injurious and unfair trade practice of dumping;

Whereas the advanced tariff liberalization process would be further along but for the opposition of Japan at the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation forum; and

Whereas a focus on Japanese practices and commitments at the next round of multilateral trade negotiations is more important than ever because the trade laws of the United States, such as section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974, section 1377 of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, and title VII of the Omnibus Trade and Competitiveness Act of 1988, have been significantly weakened as a result of agreements concluded during the Uruguay Round: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the appropriate officials in the executive branch—

(1) should include, in the United States negotiating objectives for the next round of multilateral negotiations, specific expectations as to how the negotiations will result in changes in the Japanese market;

(2) should pay special attention to commitments required of the Government of Japan in the next round of negotiations and ensure that commercially meaningful Japanese concessions equivalent to concessions made by other major trading nations will lead to market change in Japan;

(3) should cooperate closely with other major trading nations to ensure that the next round of negotiations results in genuine change in Japan's markets.

(4) should consult closely with Congress throughout the next round of negotiations about the specific impact of the negotiations on Japan's markets, and should provide periodic reports, with full input from the private sector, about progress being made in addressing Japanese barriers within the negotiations;

(5) should devote the resources needed to analyze market barriers in Japan and to analyze how these market barriers can be addressed in the next round of negotiations; and

(6) should work closely with United States manufacturers, service providers, and nongovernmental organizations to develop the priority areas for focusing United States efforts with respect to Japan in the next round of negotiations and to determine the progress being made in meeting those priorities.

SENATE RESOLUTION 227—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE IN APPRECIATION OF THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE FOR EMPLOYER SUPPORT OF THE GUARD AND RESERVE

Mr. BOND (for himself, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. ROCKEFELLER) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services:

S. RES. 227

Whereas the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve (NCESGR) was established by Presidential proclamation issued in 1972;

Whereas national defense planners at that time, anticipating the end of the draft under the Military Selective Service Act, foresaw the potential that the Nation's reserve component forces would be used increasingly to meet national security requirements, that the operations of members' civilian employers would be disrupted by that development, that employers accustomed to National Guard and Reserve service being an alternative to compulsory active duty service would question the necessity for volunteer participation in the Nation's community-based defense forces, and that the employers' support for Guard and Reserve service would erode;

Whereas, to counteract those potential problems, the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve was chartered to develop public understanding of the National Guard and Reserve forces and to enlist the support of employers of members of the reserve components in the development of personnel policies and practices that encourage employee participation in National Guard and Reserve programs;

Whereas, for over 25 years, the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve has informed employers of the ever-increasing importance of the National Guard and Reserve, explaining to employers the necessity for, and the role of, these forces in national defense;

Whereas there are over 4,200 Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve (ESGR) volunteers from among the business, civic, and community leaders in committees in all 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam;

Whereas the ESGR volunteers carry out a variety of programs and services to inform communities and employers about the vital role of the National Guard and Reserve;

Whereas ESGR volunteers honor with suitable recognition the many employers who actively support employee participation in the National Guard and Reserve;

Whereas ESGR volunteers educate employers of members in the National Guard and Reserve and those employees about the rights and obligations regarding military leave that were established or reaffirmed by the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act of 1974;

Whereas, to underscore the important role of the National Guard and Reserve in our national defense, the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve developed the Statement of Support program under which employers of members of the reserve components are invited to declare their support for their employees' participation in the National Guard and Reserve;

Whereas the first statement of support under the program was signed by the Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer of General Motors in the Office of the Secretary of Defense on December 13, 1972;

Whereas the next day, President Richard Nixon signed a statement of support covering all Federal civilian employees and, since then, Presidents Ford, Carter, Reagan, Bush, and Clinton have all made the same commitment;

Whereas thousands of other employers nationwide have likewise signed statements of support for service of their employees in the reserve components;

Whereas nearly 50 percent of America's total military might is composed of National Guard and Reserve component members;

Whereas despite the ending of the Cold War in 1989, the military commitments of the United States have not diminished;

Whereas the Nation's reserve components are being called upon more than ever before to contribute to the protection of our national security interests and are critical contributors to that mission;

Whereas, during the Persian Gulf War in 1990 and 1991, more than 260,000 Reserves were called to active duty to support military operations in the Persian Gulf region;

Whereas National Guard and Reserve members contribute over 13,000,000 duty days yearly in support of military operations and exercises worldwide, which is a rate of duty that is 13 times greater than the rate of duty experienced during the Cold War; and

Whereas employers, public officials, military leaders, and military members rely on the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve to promote public and private understanding of the National Guard and Reserve in order to obtain the employer and community support that is necessary to ensure the availability and readiness of reserve component forces: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That—

(1) it is the sense of the Senate that the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve makes vital contributions to enabling the National Guard and Reserve to support the national security strategy while, at the same time, acting on behalf of the Nation's employers to ensure that their interests are represented with equity and fairness; and

(2) the Senate congratulates the National Committee for Employer Support of the Guard and Reserve, its staff, and volunteers for their commitment to our national defense, for their contribution of time and talent, and for maintaining the much needed support of employers and communities for the National Guard and Reserve.

SENATE RESOLUTION 228—MAKING CHANGES TO SENATE COMMITTEES FOR THE 106TH CONGRESS

Mr. LOTT (for himself and Mr. DASCHLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 228

Resolved, That notwithstanding the provisions of S. Res. 400 of the 95th Congress, or the provisions of rule XXV, the following changes shall be effective on those Senate committees listed below for the 106th Congress, or until their successors are appointed:

Committee on Ethics: Mr. Roberts (Chairman), Mr. Smith of New Hampshire, and Mr. Voinovich.

SENATE RESOLUTION 230—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE WITH RESPECT TO GOVERNMENT DISCRIMINATION IN GERMANY BASED ON RELIGION OR BELIEF

Mr. ENZI (for himself and Ms. LANDRIEU) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 230

Whereas government discrimination in Germany against individuals and groups based on religion or belief violates Germany's obligations under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Helsinki Accords, which provide that member states must ''recognize and respect the freedom of the individual to profess and practice alone or in community with others, religion or belief acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience'';

Whereas the 1993 through 1998 State Department Country Reports on Human Rights Practices in Germany have disclosed acts of Federal, State, and local government discrimination in Germany against members of minority religious groups, including Charismatic Christians, Muslims, Jehovah's Witnesses, and Scientologists;

Whereas State Department Human Rights Reports on Germany have also disclosed acts of government discrimination against United States citizens because of their religious beliefs;

Whereas State Department Human Rights Reports on Germany have disclosed discrimination based on religion or belief in Germany in such forms as exclusion from government employment and political parties; the use of ''sect-filters'' (required declarations that a person or company is not affiliated with a particular religious group) by government, businesses, sports clubs, and other organizations; government-approved boycotts and discrimination against businesses; and the prevention of artists from performing or displaying their works;

Whereas United Nations reports have disclosed discrimination based on religion or belief in Germany, and a 1997 report by the United Nations Special Rapporteur for Religious Intolerance concluded that the Government of Germany ''must implement a strategy to prevent intolerance in the field of religion and belief'';

Whereas the 1998 report of the State Department's Advisory Committee on Religious Freedom Abroad warned that unless the work of the German Government's Parliamentary Inquiry Commission on ''so-called sects and psycho-groups'', which investigated dozens of religious groups, including Mormons and other minority Christian groups, ''focuses [its] work on investigating illegal acts, [it] runs the risk of denying individuals the right to freedom of religion or belief'', and the Committee specifically reported that ''members of the Church of Scientology and of a Christian charismatic church have been subject to intense scrutiny by the Commission, and several members have suffered harassment, discrimination, and threats of violence''; and

Whereas in 1997, a United States immigration judge granted a German woman asylum in the United States, finding that she had a well-founded fear of persecution based on her religious beliefs if she returned to Germany: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) urges the Government of Germany to uphold its commitments to ''take effective measures to prevent and eliminate discrimination against individuals or communities on the grounds of religion or belief'' and ''foster a climate of mutual tolerance and respect between believers of different communities'', as required by the Organization on Security and Cooperation in Europe's Vienna Concluding Document of 1989;

(2) urges the Government of Germany to enter into a constructive dialogue with minority groups subject to government discrimination based on religion or belief;

(3) continues to hold the Government of Germany responsible for protecting the right of freedom of religion or belief of United States citizens who are living, performing, doing business, or traveling in Germany; and

(4) calls upon the President to assert the concern of the United States Government to the Government of Germany regarding government discrimination in Germany based on religion or belief.

● Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I rise to submit a resolution concerning religious discrimination in Germany with my colleague, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, Ms. LANDRIEU. The resolution urges the German government to eliminate religious discrimination within its country because I believe, as a matter of general government policy, no religion or belief should be discriminated against. Anytime the government collects or allows businesses to collect and use information that marks an individual as being different, it is discriminatory and it is wrong. This is a human rights issue. An individual or a group should be allowed to worship in private without public repercussions.

A letter sent to me from the Department of State in August, states ''Wherever it may occur, discrimination against an individual or group is a fundamental human rights violation, and the United States government is still very concerned about incidents of discrimination in Germany.'' The Department of State Human Rights Reports on Germany have disclosed discrimination based on religion or belief in Germany in such forms as: exclusion from government employment and political parties; the use of ''sect-filters'' (required declarations that a person or company is not affiliated with a particular religious group) by government, businesses, sport clubs, and other organizations; government-approved boycotts and discrimination against businesses; and, the prevention of artists from performing or displaying their works.

I also am aware of the possibilities of United States companies based in Germany being coerced by the German government to discriminate against American and other employees based on their beliefs. We have a number of German companies conducting business in the United States. I do not want to see these discriminatory practices imported to our country. This issue of government discrimination is not solely contained within the borders of Germany.

The resolution is simple and straightforward. It urges the German government to enter into a constructive dialogue with minority groups subject to government discrimination based on religion or belief. The resolution also calls upon the president to assert the United States' concern to Germany regarding government discrimination based on religion or belief.

If the goal of a world functioning under a flag of democratic freedom is to be realized, the leaders of the free world must set the example. Germany is a leader in the European and world communities. Germany also is a strong United States ally. It is my hope that the German government will allow its country men and women to be leaders of a free society where an individual's beliefs are the sole decision of the individual rather than a matter of state.

Mr. President, I would like to submit for the RECORD a letter I sent to the Department of State on July 16, 1999 as well as the Department of State's response to my letter.

The material follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, DC, July 16, 1999.

Hon. MARC GROSSMAN,
Assistant Secretary of State for European Affairs, State Department, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. GROSSMAN: Over the past six years there has been a steady increase in the number of religious freedom violations in Germany. These violations have been noted in the State Department Human Rights Country Reports on Germany and the 1998 report of the State Department Advisory Committee on Religious Freedom. They have also been a matter of concern to various human rights groups. All of these reports have described both government and private sector discrimination against individuals and groups, including American citizens, because of their religious beliefs.

Last November, several of my colleagues in the Senate and I wrote to Chancellor Schroeder to express our concerns about this discrimination and the need for dialogue between the German Government and representatives of various religious groups. When we finally received a reply to our inquiry from the German Foreign Office in March, it was accompanied with a copy of the ''Religious Freedom'' section of the 1998 State Department Human Rights Report on Germany with a note stating that the 1998 Report revised ''certain views found in former reports.'' We were quite disappointed that the Foreign Office reply largely ignored our concerns. While I do not share the German view that the 1998 Human Rights Report signaled that the State Department is no longer concerned with religious discrimination in Germany, I find the German Government's perception of the Report troubling.

One religious group in Germany that has been the subject of the State Department reports is the Christian Community in Cologne (CCK), an 1,100 member Church headed by an American, Pastor Terry Jones. The 1998 Report stated that virtually no incidents of harassment, discrimination, or death threats have been directed at CCK members since 1992. However, I have seen statements from Pastor Jones, along with other reports and news stories that indicate that the CCK has been the subject of discrimination since 1992. Tax difficulties aside, the CCK has been subject to harassment by government ''sect'' commissions, threats of violence, and members being denied jobs and child custody because of their Church affiliation. The sources of these reports include the 1998 Interim Report of the State Department Advisory Committee on Religious Freedom Abroad; an April 1998 CNN Worldview story; the testimony of a CCK representative at a September 1997 hearing before the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE); and a May 1997 Report from the British House of Lords. Also, in testimony before the CSCE in July 1998, a representative from the Center for the Study of New Religious Movements criticized Germany for police raids that have occurred against small, independent Pentacostal churches. The Universal Life Church has also suffered discrimination in Germany. Press reports indicate that members of this Christian Church lost their jobs, not because of any wrongdoing, but because of their commitment to their faith.

Another minority group that has been subject to significant discrimination in Germany is the Church of Scientology and its members. The documentation of discrimination against both Americans and Germans based solely on their Church membership seems irrefutable. I especially find the growing governmental use and sponsorship of ''sect-filters'' disturbing. Nonetheless, in spite of all this evidence and documentation, the German Government seems to believe the State Department has revised its views as to the existence of religious discrimination in their country. I have also seen media reports that characterized the 1998 Report as effectively ending earlier State Department criticism of Germany for its treatment of Scientologists.

I cannot believe these characterizations of the Human Rights Report are an accurate representation of the position of the State Department on these matters. Clearly, the matter of religious discrimination and persecution in Germany needs to be reviewed and the position of the State Department clarified. That review should include a thorough evaluation of the problem, the extent to which the German government is responsible for these actions, and a determination of the appropriate response for these actions, and a determination of the appropriate response of the United States Government to this serious situation.

As I mentioned earlier, the letter sent to Chancellor Schroeder by my Senate colleagues and I expressed the belief that an open and direct dialogue between the German Government and minority religious groups was sorely needed. In particular, I am aware that the State Department had undertaken efforts to establish such a dialogue between the German Government and the Church of Scientology. I applaud this effort. Unfortunately, I understand that the German Government has refused to enter into any such dialogue. Is the State Department considering any steps it can take to encourage such a discussion?

Given Germany's strong commitment to democracy, I am troubled by the continuing reports and the evidence of government sponsored discrimination in Germany against minority religious groups. For Germany to abide by its international treaty commitments it must respect the beliefs of all religious groups. At whatever level it occurs, it remains the responsibility of the German Federal Government to ensure that the entire country complies with its international human rights treaty obligations. This should especially be true when American citizens are involved.

While I commend the efforts of the State Department to address discrimination in Germany based on religion or belief, it is very important for your Human Rights Country Report on Germany to be clarified so that the position of the State Department on this issue is unmistakably clear. I hope to work with you to resolve these important issues and look forward to your reply to my letter at your earliest opportunity.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL B. ENZI,
U.S. Senator.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, August 25, 1999.

Hon. MICHAEL B. ENZI,
U.S. Senate.

DEAR SENATOR ENZI: Thank you for your July 16 letter regarding religious freedom violations in Germany and the State Department's 1998 Human Rights Report. I am responding on behalf of Assistant Secretary Grossman. Your letter raises several important issues concerning ongoing efforts at the State Department to work with German officials and affected minority groups to end discrimination in Germany based on religion or belief. Wherever it may occur, discrimination against an individual or group is a fundamental human rights violation, and the United States Government is still very concerned about incidents of discrimination in Germany. As the past six years of Human Rights Reports indicate, religious discrimination in Germany continues to take place and the Department of State is committed to addressing issues of religious intolerance.

We, too, were puzzled with characterizations of the 1998 Human Rights Report as ending criticism of Germany. While we would rather devote our time to working with the German government on ways to end discrimination in Germany based on religion or belief, it is also very important to express criticism and concern with ongoing German discriminatory actions and policies. This critical review is one of the primary purposes of the annual Human Rights Report. To interpret the 1998 Report's greater inclusion of German government statements attacking minority groups and rationalizing discriminatory acts and policies as State Department agreement with such statements is wrong.

Perception of the report aside, we are particularly concerned with growing use of sect filters in Germany which prevent a person from practicing his or her profession or participating in public and private fora, solely based on that person's religion or belief. This clearly discriminatory practice is being used by the Federal Ministry of Economics, state governments, private businesses and other organizations in Germany. We have discussed with German state and federal authorities the violation of individual rights posed by sect-filters and will continue our efforts to end the use of such filters.

On the subject of discrimination against the Evangelical churches in Germany, specifically the Christian Community in Cologne (CGK), U.S. Embassy personnel have met with two associate pastors of the CGK. We have been unable to meet with Pastor Jones, the leader of the church who testified before the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe in 1997 about discrimination. The two pastors interviewed did describe incidents of religious discrimination in child custody and employment situations. However, until we are able to verify these allegations of discrimination, the State Department is reluctant to include such examples in an official report.

Over the past year, State Department officials in Washington and Germany have undertaken a determined effort to bring together representatives of the Church of Scientology with representatives of the German Federal Government to open a dialogue on issues of concern. To our dismay, the German Government has refused to meet with Scientology representatives. Regardless of what the German Government thinks about the nature and philosophy of Scientology, refusal to enter into a constructive dialogue is troubling. We will continue to press the German Government to take this step.

As your letter correctly states, Germany is obligated by various international human rights treaties to respect the freedom of an individual to worship alone or in community with other religious or beliefs acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience. And no matter at what level discrimination occurs, it is the responsibility of the German Federal Government to ensure that the entire country complies with its international human rights treaty obligations. We look forward to working with you and other Members of Congress to that end in Germany.

I hope our response has addressed your concerns. Please do not hesitate to contact us if you have further questions about this or any other matter.

Sincerely,

BARBARA LARKIN,
Assistant Secretary, Legislative Affairs.●

PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGES

The following messages were received in the Senate on November 8, 1999:

CONTINUATION OF THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO IRAN—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 71

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

Section 202(d) of the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1622(d)) provides for the automatic termination of a national emergency unless, prior to the anniversary date of its declaration, the President publishes in the Federal Register and transmits to the Congress a notice stating that the emergency is to continue in effect beyond the anniversary date. In accordance with this provision, I have sent the enclosed notice, stating that the Iran emergency declared in 1979 is to continue in effect beyond November 14, 1999, to the Federal Register for publication. Similar notices have been sent annually to the Congress and published in the Federal Register since November 12, 1980. The most recent notice appeared in the Federal Register on November 12, 1998. This emergency is separate from that declared with respect to Iran on March 15, 1995, in Executive Order 12957.

The crisis between the United States and Iran that began in 1979 has not been fully resolved. The international tribunal established to adjudicate claims of the United States and U.S. nationals against Iran and of the Iranian government and Iranian nationals against the United States continues to function, and normalization of commercial and diplomatic relations between the United States and Iran has not been achieved. On March 15, 1995, I declared a separate national emergency with respect to Iran pursuant to the International Emergency Economic Powers Act and imposed separate sanctions. By Executive Order 12959 of May 6, 1995, these sanctions were significantly augmented, and by Executive Order 13059 of August 19, 1997, the sanctions imposed in 1995 were furthered clarified. In these circumstances, I have determined that it is necessary to maintain in force the broad authorities that are in place by virtue of the November 14, 1979, declaration of emergency, including the authority to block certain property of the Government of Iran, and which are needed in the process of implementing the January 1981 agreements with Iran.

PERIODIC REPORT ON THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY WITH RESPECT TO SUDAN—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 72

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

To the Congress of the United States:

As required by section 401(c) of the National Emergencies Act, 50 U.S.C. 1641(c) and section 204(c) of the International Emergency Economic Powers Act (IEEPA), 50 U.S.C. 1703(c), I transmit herewith a 6-month periodic report on the national emergency with respect to Sudan that was declared in Executive Order 13067 of November 3, 1997.

WILLIAM J. CLINTON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 5, 1999.

OMISSION FROM THE RECORD

The following measure did not appear in the RECORD on November 8, 1999. The permanent RECORD will be corrected to reflect the following:

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 71—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT MIAMI, FLORIDA, AND NOT A COMPETING FOREIGN CITY, SHOULD SERVE AS THE PERMANENT LOCATION FOR THE SECRETARY OF THE FREE TRADE AREA OF THE AMERICAS (FTAA) BEGINNING IN 2005

Mr. GRAHAM (for himself and Mr. MACK) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

S. CON. RES. 71

Whereas deliberations on establishing a ''Free Trade Area of the Americas'' (FTAA) will help facilitate greater cooperation and understanding on trade barrier throughout the Americas;

Whereas the trade minister of 34 countries of the Western Hemisphere agreed in 1998 to create a permanent Secretariat in order to support negotiation on establishing the FTAA;

Whereas the FTAA Secretariat will employ persons to provide logistical, administrative, archival, translation, publication, and distribution support for the negotiations;

Whereas the FTAA Secretariat will be funded by a combination of local resources and institutional resources from a tripartite committee consisting of the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), the Organization of American States (OAS), and the United Nations Economic Commission on Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC);

Whereas the temporary site of the FTAA Secretariat will be located in Miami, Florida, from 1999 until February 28, 2001, at which point the Secretariat will rotate to Panama City, Panama, until February 28, 2003, and then rotate to Mexico City, Mexico, until February 28, 2005;

Whereas by 2005 the FTAA Secretariat will have international institution status providing jobs and tremendous economic benefits to its host city;

Whereas a permanent site for the FTAA Secretariat after 2005 will likely be selected from among the 3 temporary host cities;

Whereas the city of Miami, Miami-Dade County, and the State of Florida have long served as the gateway for trade with the Caribbean and Latin America;

Whereas trade between the city of Miami, Florida, and the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean totaled $36,793,000,000 in 1998;

Whereas the Miami-Dade area and the State of Florida possess the necessary infrastructure, local resources, and culture necessary for the FTAA Secretariat's permanent site;

Whereas the United States possesses the world's largest economy and is the leading proponent of trade liberalization throughout the world; and

Whereas the city of Miami, Florida, the State of Florida, and the United States are uniquely situated among other competing locations to host the ''Brussels of the Western Hemisphere'': Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should direct the United States representative to the ''Free Trade Area of the Americas'' (FTAA) negotiations to use all available means in order to secure Miami, Florida, as the permanent site of the FTAA Secretariat after February 28, 2005.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE LATE JAMES E. WILLIAMS, WINNER OF THE MEDAL OF HONOR

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, ''Hero'' is a word that is inappropriately used with some frequency in this day and age. This is certainly unfortunate, for a true ''hero'' is not the person who caught the game winning pass, but is an individual who has distinguished themself through courage. No matter how diluted this term have become through informal and casual use, it remains simply the best way to describe James E. Williams.

There was a time not long ago when all Americans understood the importance of military service and the notion of sacrificing of one's self for the better of the nation. James Williams was one such man, an individual who was so anxious to render military service, he lied about his age in order to join the United States Navy in 1946. Over the course of his career, Mr. Williams would repeatedly demonstrate his fierce determination and bravery.

Our involvement in the conflict in Vietnam was still relatively small in 1966, but such was not the case for those who were working to topple the democratic government of the Republic of Vietnam. Communist forces were operating extensively throughout South Vietnam, terrorizing peasants, and fighting a low intenstity conflict against our forces and our allies. That the infiltration of the enemy into the Republic of Vietnam was largescale was proven on that day late in October of 1966 when Mr. Williams and eight other sailors operating on two different plastic river boats engaged in a three-hour firefight with enemy personnel. As a result of that action, more than 1,000 communist military personnel were killed in action, and almost seventy North Vietnamese boats were sunk or destroyed. The courage demonstrated by Mr. Williams in the face of overwhelming odds, and the effective attack he mounted, led to his being awarded the Medal of Honor for his actions. Only the citation from the Medal of Honor awarded Mr. Williams adequately describes his heroism, and it reads:

For conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty as a member of River Section 531 during combat operations on the Mekong River in the Republic of Vietnam. On 31 October 1966, Petty Officer Williams was serving as Boat Captain and Patrol Officer aboard River Patrol Boat (PBR) 105 accompanied by another patrol boat when the patrol was suddenly taken under fire by two enemy sampans. Petty Officer Williams immediately ordered the fire returned, killing the crew of one enemy boat and causing the other sampan to take refuge in a nearby river inlet. Pursuing the fleeing sampan, the U.S. patrol encountered a heavy volume of small arms fire from enemy forces, at close range, occupying well-concealed positions along the river bank. Maneuvering through this fire, the patrol confronted a numerically superior enemy force aboard two enemy junks and eight sampans augmented by heavy automatic weapons fire from ashore. In the savage battle that ensued, Petty Officer Williams, with utter disregard for his own safety, exposed himself to the withering hail of enemy fire to direct counterfire and inspire the actions of his patrol. Recognizing the overwhelming strength of the enemy force, Petty Officer Williams deployed his patrol to await the arrival of armed helicopters. In the course of this movement he discovered an even larger concentration of enemy boats. Not waiting for the arrival of the armed helicopters, he displayed great initiative and boldly led the patrol through the intense enemy fire and damaged or destroyed fifty enemy sampans and seven junks. This phase of the action completed, and with the arrival of the armed helicopters, Petty Officer Williams directed the attack on the remaining enemy force. Now virtually dark, and although Petty Officer Williams was aware that his boats would become even better targets, he ordered the patrol boats' search lights turned on to better illuminate the area and moved the patrol perilously close to shore to press the attack. Despite a waning supply of ammunition the patrol successfully engaged the enemy ashore and completed the rout of the enemy force. Under the leadership of Petty Officer Williams, who demonstrated unusual professional skill and indomitable courage throughout the three hour battle, the patrol accounted for the destruction or loss of sixty-five enemy boats and inflicted numerous casualties on the enemy personnel. His extraordinary heroism and exemplary fighting spirit in the face of grave risks inspired the efforts of his men to defeat a larger enemy force, and are in keeping with the finest traditions of the United States Naval Service.

By the time Mr. Williams retired in 1967, and having fought in two wars, he was the most decorated enlisted man in the history of the United States Navy. Anyone who looked at the medals adorning his dress uniform would immediately recognize James Williams as a hero by noting his three Purple Hearts; three Bronze Stars; the Vietnamese Cross of Gallantry; the Navy and Marine Corps Medal; two Silver Stars; the Navy Cross; and of course, the Medal of Honor.

Despite having served his nation commendably and heroically, James Williams still wanted to contribute to society and hoped to follow in the footsteps of his father as a lawman. In 1969, Mr. Williams was nominated as the United States Marshal for the District of South Carolina by President Richard M. Nixon, and he again distinguished himself as a no-nonsense law and order man, vital for a day and age when some people reveled in challenging the system and in seeking confrontation with authorities. I doubt that too many people were foolish to cross swords with James E. Williams, and his work as a law enforcement official helped keep South Carolina safe and peaceful.

In the years following his retirement from Federal service, Mr. Williams continued to contribute to the nation, but as a private citizen. He was very active in the ''Medal of Honor Society'', a private organization dedicated to promoting knowledge and education about America's highest award. He was also a member of the board of directors of the Patriot's Point Development Authority, which has created a military park in the Charleston area, and is also home to the above mentioned Medal of Honor Society.

Despite his heroism and his many high recognitions, James Williams was a down to earth individual. He refused offers to tell his story in print and on film, and he remained a plain talking, straight forward, good humored man to the day of his death. While Mr. Williams may no longer be among us, he has earned a legendary spot in Navy lore and the history of the United States, and he will always be remembered as the brave and selfless patriot he was.●

ON THE DEATH OF SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA MAYOR JOE SERNA

● Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to speak today about the untimely death of Sacramento Mayor Joe Serna. This past Sunday, November 7, 1999, the City of Sacramento and the State of California lost an inspirational public servant and a great statesman. The death of Mayor Serna represents a loss for all of those who had the honor to know him, and for the entire City of Sacramento.

Mayor Serna had a distinguished public career, culminating in the election as Mayor of our State's Capital City in 1992. He served his country and his community as an educator, Peace Corps worker and public servant. He was a man of compassionate spirit, dedicated ideals and principled acts.

Mayor Serna's accomplishments, both personally and professionally, are many. Here are a few highlights:

1966—Earned his Bachelor's degree in Social Science and Government at California State University, Sacramento.

1966—Earned his Master's degree in Political Science at University of California, Davis.

1966—Served in the Peace Corps in Guatemala.

1969—Joined the faculty at California State University, Sacramento.

1975—Served as Education Advisor to then-Lieutenant Governor Mervyn Dymally.

1981—Elected to the Sacramento City Council, where he would serve 11 years.

1991—Received the Distinguished Faculty Award.

1992—Elected as Mayor of Sacramento.

1995—Received the Economic Development Leadership Award by the National Council for Urban Economic Development.

1996—Reelected as Mayor of Sacramento.

1998—Led the effort for the redevelopment of downtown Sacramento.

1998—Received an honorary doctorate degree from Golden Gate University.

I have known Mayor Serna for many years, and he was a visionary for Sacramento and the region.

Mayor Serna led California's Capital City toward a more positive and prosperous direction. He was extremely dedicated to the economic revitalization and redevelopment of Sacramento. Under his leadership, the Sacramento City Council helped to revitalize the downtown community, the region's heart and center. He appointed the first Council of Economic Advisors to help frame the City's economic agenda. In addition, Mayor Serna assembled a negotiating team that preserved the Sacramento Kings, the region's National Basketball Association Team, when the King's owners threatened to move the team out of town.

Mayor Serna was not only an honorable mayor, he was also a role model to the Latino community and an inspiration to all Californians. He was the first Latino elected as mayor of one of California's major cities, exemplifying the success that one can attain through education, hard work, and commitment—regardless of ethnicity. I believe Mayor Serna transcended ethnic politics without every losing sight of his ethnic background and his humble beginnings.

Mayor Serna grew up working in the fields of San Joaquin County. In the early 1960's he was an activist with the United Farm Workers, fighting for farm workers and for disadvantaged people. He went on to earn his bachelor's degree in Social Science and his master's degree in Political Science. He later entered the Peace Corps to serve the people in Guatemala as a community-development volunteer. Mayor Serna went on to became a professor at California State University in Sacramento and then served his community as Mayor of the City of Sacramento.

Along the way, he helped to inspire a host of talented Latino elected officials at all levels of government. Community leaders such San Joaquin County Supervisor Steve Gutierrez, State Senator Deborah Ortiz, and Lieutenant Governor Cruz Bustamante attribute their participation in public service in part to the example and inspiration of Joe Serna.

As Supervisor Steve Gutierrez said, ''Mayor Serna went from being a farm worker to organizer to an educator to mayor of Sacramento. He was truly an exemplary public servant and leader.''

Most recently, I had the pleasure to meet with Mayor Serna in Sacramento just hours after a heinous shooting had occurred at a Jewish community center in Los Angeles. We had an opportunity to discuss at length the issue of hate crimes and other regional issues. Mayor Serna was passionate about his community and he deeply cared for its people. Even until his final days, he worked for a better life for his fellow citizens.

Joe Serna leaves a powerful legacy in many lives and a lasting vision for his beloved city of Sacramento. He was a dynamic leader, and we Californians were fortunate for his service. Mayor Serna will be sorely missed. My thoughts and prayers are with his wife, Isabel, the entire Serna family, and the community of Sacramento.●

TRIBUTE TO BOB GREENLEE

● Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize and congratulate Bob Greenlee on the occasion of his retirement from the Boulder City Council.

Bob and his wife Diane came to Colorado from Iowa in 1975 and used their savings to buy a small AM radio station in Boulder. Through their hard work and determination, they turned that small AM radio station into KBCO, one of the top radio stations in the State. In addition to their work in radio, they have also helped bring several successful businesses to their community, expanding nationwide and employing thousands of people across the country through their enterprises. As part of their overall business philosophy, Bob and Diane have helped many others achieve their entrepreneurial dreams by assisting them in business ventures and startup companies.

The Greenlee's have also been an integral part of the Boulder community through their philanthropic work. Together, they founded the Boulder County chapter of the ''I Have a Dream Foundation'' which assists underprivileged youth achieve their goal of a college education. Bob and Diane have also endowed their own family foundation to carry on their tradition of philanthropy in Colorado. Their work has helped thousands of people across Colorado in their desire to achieve the ''American dream.''

As the cornerstone of his community involvement, Bob served on the Boulder City Council for 16 years as the voice of common sense and reason. In 1997, Bob was selected on a unanimous vote by his fellow council members to serve as Boulder's mayor. As part of the city council, Bob's lasting legacy will be his thoughtful, reasoned voice in how a city should be operated. He views on frugality in the city budget and a common sense approach to city regulation will serve as an enduring reminder of his years of service to the community.

While he is retiring from City Council, Bob's interest in government has not ended. He currently serves as the chairman of the Republican Leadership Program. The program is aimed at teaching the fundamentals of our democracy and is used as a forum to discuss current issues that impact our everyday lives. His leadership has created one of the strongest programs of its kind in the country, and will serve to educate Coloradans on the need to be involved in the issues which face our state and our country.

Bob Greenlee has shown us all that the American dream can still be attained. He and Diane started by knowing that they could make a difference, and through their hard work and diligence, they were able to build their lives in order to serve others. People like Bob and Diane Greenlee were the cornerstone of our democracy and must be recognized for their contributions to our society.

Mr. President, it is an honor and a privilege to recognize Bob Greenlee on his outstanding career and community involvement. I would like to thank Bob and Diane for their service, and wish them both much success in the future.●

WORLD CHAMPIONS

● Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, on August 26, 1999, 13 young women, ages 15 and 16, put the First State on the map again by capturing the Senior League Softball World Series in Kalamazoo, Michigan.

This was a tremendous accomplishment for Delaware and for the country. The Stanton-Newport team completed an undefeated run through the double elimination tournament by winning a come-from-behind victory over a persistent and well seasoned team from the Philippines.

As one reporter put it, eight teams participated in the tournament, but ''only one will have its flag fly over the field for the next year.'' Proudly that will be the flag of the United States of America thanks to the team from the great State of Delaware.

The Stanton-Newport team is an outstanding example of the power of youth sports in America. As I have said many times in the past, young people need a hobby they love, at least one adult who supports them and a good many friends with similar interests. Organized sports provides this much and more.

In competitive sports young people learn responsibility, discipline, and the importance of cooperation and teamwork on and off the field. Later, these same young individuals will be able to apply their hard-earned lessons to everyday life.

The young women of Stanton-Newport epitomize the exceptional athletes and citizens from across the nation who are inspired on a daily basis by their committed parents and coaches.

I am proud to call this team a homegrown product and continue to salute their efforts on behalf of the First State and the rest of our nation. They are indeed World Champions.●

DR. EDWIN STRONG-LEGS RICHARDSON

● Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize the outstanding work and accomplishments of Dr. Edwin Strong-Legs Richardson, Penobscot Indian Psychologist and President of Kiyan Indian Consultant Group. He is also known as Song-gan-la Gan-Naw, which is Penobscot for Strong-Legs and Kiyan Nakicinjin, which is Sioux for Flying Defender.

Dr. Richardson's admirable work ethic began at the age of thirteen when he started supporting his family as a logger. He has long been a nationally and internationally renowned applied behavioral scientist, consultant, trainer, retired Army Officer, and Spiritual Leader. For over fifty years, Dr. Richardson has been an educator-trainer, including professional ski instructor, mountaineer, and military instructor. He was voted one of the top instructors at four different universities/colleges and number one at two institutions.

As a combat Infantryman, Dr. Richardson fought the Germans, Japanese, and Vietnamese and served as the Commanding Officer of a Psychiatric Detachment in the Koran War. During his service, he was awarded for bravery under fire by his enlisted men and also received a commendation from General Westmoreland for an emergency landing of an airplane.

Dr. Richardson earned a B.S. in Pre-Med from the University of New Hampshire and his Masters of Education in Physical and Mental Rehabilitation from Springfield College. He then went on to The Ohio State University to receive his Doctorate in Health Education and Counseling.

I commend Dr. Richardson in raising public awareness of cultural diversity through his teaching, television programs, and books he has authored. He is an outstanding model for not only the Native American communities, but for all communities. Please join me in recognizing Dr. Edwin Strong-Legs Richardson.●

TRIBUTE HONORING CHRISTINE RUSSELL

● Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Christine Russell, who last week left my staff after seven years as my legislative assistant and policy advisor on environmental, transportation and energy issues. She married Alex Wells on October 30th in South Carolina. She and her husband will be living in Harrisburg, PA.

As my primary staff member responsible for the Environment and Public Works Committee, which I now chair, she was one of my chief staff liaisons with New Hampshire municipalities in need of Federal assistance, and with the Federal and State agencies responsible for these important issues. Chris was always there for me, and for the people of New Hampshire. She will be terribly missed.

Christine came to my office from the National Association of Manufacturers a few years after I came to the Senate. She brought with her the skills to balance private sector and public sector concerns regarding environmental, energy and transportation issues. Skills which I found invaluable during her years in my office.

In addition to her outstanding policy skills, Chris provided a warm smile and enjoyable attitude to my Senate office. She was professional, intelligent, and articulate—but it was her enthusiasm and energy that was most infectious. Chris was dedicated to her job, the U.S. Senate, and the people of New Hampshire. Alex is a very fortunate man, indeed!

Chris, on behalf of the people of New Hampshire and my entire staff, best wishes in all of your future endeavors. You deserve the best that life has to offer.●

EVERGREEN CARPET RECYCLING PLANT

● Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support of private sector innovation to solve a public problem. My state is the site of a brand new, state of the art facility that will recycle carpets, chemically breaking them down to their virgin chemical components. Allied Signal and DSM are jointly opening the first-ever carpet recycling plant in Augusta, GA, on November 15. It's a fitting day for the opening of a carpet recycling plant since it is America Recycles Day 1999.

Carpets comprise of a significant portion of the Nation's landfills. Yet there are few programs at the state or local level targeted to redirecting carpets out of community landfills. The AlliedSignal-DSM facility, aptly named ''Evergreen,'' will ensure that each year over 200 million pounds of carpet never see a landfill. Now it may be hard to imagine 200 million pounds of carpet, so let me help you visualize it. If you had a 12 foot wide roll of carpeting you could lay it from New York to San Francisco and back again, and that would equal about 200 million pounds. And the Evergreen facility will save that much landfill space each year.

The carpeting that will be recycled in Augusta will not simply be broken down mechanically and remade into new carpets. Instead it will be depolymerized—broken down chemically into the individual chemical polymers that comprise the nylon fiber in the carpets. The primary chemical is caprolactum, but they can't produce enough at their facilities to meet the demands of their customers.

So they had a choice to make—either find another source of caprolactum or build new chemical plants that could be used to make caprolactum. With dedicated research engineers, they made several technological breakthroughs that enabled them to obtain caprolactum from used carpeting in a more economical fashion than to produce it at a new chemical plant. They can actually recycle old carpets into caprolactum more economically than they could produce it from scratch.

Avoiding the production of caprolatum in itself yields tremendous environmental benefits. To produce from scratch the amount of caprolactum that the Evergreen facility will generate would take more than 700 million barrels of oil a year, and 4 trillion Btus more in energy usage. That is enough energy to heat 100,000 homes a year. So it is not just landfill space that is saved under the Evergreen project.

AlliedSignal and DSM plan to market nylon 6 products made with caprolactum from the Evergreen facility to carpet manufacturers, auto makers and others to produce the highest quality nylon products. You will soon see Infinity Forever Renewable Nylon on products in early 2000.

I applaud the private sector initiatives that led to the evergreen project and I am particularly pleased that they have chosen the great state of Georgia in which to operate.●

TRIBUTE TO JAMES DUNCAN

● Mr. BURNS Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of James Duncan of Billings, Montana, a shining example of altruism and leadership. He is being awarded the 1999 Outstanding Fund Raising Executive Award by the National Society of Fund Raising Executives.

As president of the Deaconess Billings Clinic Foundation, James has helped increase the Foundation's assets and endowments by over 46 million within four years. However, Jim's efforts extend far beyond the reaches of his organization. He has worked with ZooMontana, was instrumental in the donation of $50,000 to Easter Seal, and donates his fund raising expertise free to rural communities across Montana.

Montana is lucky to have people like James Duncan. His dedication to this community serves as an example for all of us.●

TRIBUTE TO GORDON J. LINTON

● Mr. SARBANES. I rise today to pay tribute to a dedicated and effective leader of our Nation's transit program, Gordon J. Linton. Gordon recently resigned his post as the thirteenth head of the FTA to move on to other opportunities, and I would like to express my appreciation for the outstanding work that he has done.

During his six-year tenure as head of the Federal Transit Administration (FTA), Gordon Linton has proved to be one of the best and most accomplished Administrators. He spearheaded the FTA's Livable Communities Initiative which has demonstrated that transit can make a substantial contribution toward improving the quality of life in communities all across the Nation by improving the links between transportation and housing, schools, places of worship, employment and recreation. He worked tirelessly to expand citizen participation in the decision-making process to help make transit facilities and services more customer friendly and community-oriented. He played a key role in shaping the transit portion of the landmark Transportation Equity Act for the 21st Century—or TEA–21—which is providing record levels of funding for public transportation and established the innovative Access to Jobs program which is designed to ensure that people in transition from welfare to work have adequate transportation services.

I first came to know Gordon six years ago in July, when I chaired his nomination hearing in the Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee. It was clear that day, and evident throughout the past six years, that Gordon Linton was a passionate advocate for transit. He not only designed and directed over $37 billion in federal mass transit investments throughout the country—but never forgot that leadership begins by example and used public transportation himself to get to work and in traveling in communities around America. Mr. Linton came to Maryland on numerous occasions to support mass transit projects and improvements—projects such as the Baltimore Light Rail system; regional transit, such as the MARC commuter rail system; small town and rural systems to connect citizens in our rural areas to jobs, health care, education. He has done this in Maryland and he has done this in every state across the Nation.

Mr. Linton has exemplified a steadfast commitment to public service and public transportation. He is the longest-serving head of the Federal transit program since it was enacted in 1961. Before coming to Washington, Mr. Linton served as a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives in Pennsylvania where he was instrumental in passage of the Commonwealth's first dedicated source of funding for transit and Pennsylvania's seat belt legislation. I am pleased to say that through his work as a Pennsylvania legislator and through his sincere, skillful shepherding of the Federal transit assistance program, Mr. Linton has proven his commitment to improve mobility, invest in our future and make America more livable for all Americans.

Mr. President, I know that every one of us whose constituents have benefitted from Gordon J. Linton's leadership of our Federal Transit programs wish him well.●

TRIBUTE TO GARY W. PURYEAR

● Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to honor Gary W. Puryear of the 94th Regional Support Command, for his leadership and vision in creating one of the most comprehensive development and land exchange projects in support of the soldiers, sailors, and marines in the United States Armed Services.

Mr. Puryear established himself as a leader while developing a state-of-the-art home and training center for twenty-one units of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps Reserve in Manchester. He spearheaded this innovative program, assisting the Department of the Army in saving over $2.5 million dollars in repair and maintenance costs. His efforts also saved the Navy over $350,000 per year in lease costs, and fostered the expansion goals of both the Manchester Airport and Saint Anselm College.

Mr. Puryear also actively worked to publicize the Army Reserve's Modular Design System (MDS), highlighting its cost effectiveness and speed, and subsequently reaffirming the importance of pursuing a process of multiple and mutual success.

Mr. Puryear's efforts largely contributed to creating this state-of-the-art training center. As a result, 1,091 soldiers now occupy the center as a residence and a training site. The center itself indirectly helped expand the Manchester Airport as a vital shipping and transportation link by freeing up prime development space for airport related activities.

Gary Puryear has proven himself an innovative leader who is committed to the United States Armed Forces, and the community as a whole. He has assisted in saving the taxpayers thousands of dollars annually, enhancing the readiness of our armed forces, and solidifying a long-term military presence in Manchester and Londonderry. It is an honor to represent him in the United States Senate.●

TRIBUTE TO MARK ALDRICH, TRUSTED ADVISOR AND FRIEND

● Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Mark Aldrich on the occasion of his retirement, on November 30th, from the United States Senate after 20 years of service.

For the past nine years, Mark has served as my State Director, confidant and community leader. Mark also served my predecessor, Senator Gordon Humphrey, as a loyal and dedicated staff member for more than a decade.

Over the years, I have had the pleasure to travel thousands of miles with Mark, through the Great North Woods, the covered bridges of Orford and Cornish, and the scenic mountains of the Monadnock Region. Mark and I drove in his old Cadillac * * * sharing stories and helping the people of New Hampshire.

Together we worked to secure federal funding for the expansion of the Manchester Airport, the newly completed Reserve Center in Londonderry, the Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, the development of the Pease Air Force Base and so many other important projects that have helped to fuel the New Hampshire economy. Mark should take great pride in his many fine accomplishments, especially in promoting economic vitality in the North Country and throughout the state. I know that the many businesses and communities he helped will miss him, as I will.

Mark is the kind of leader that we all aspire to become. He mixed humor with guidance, making each of his fellow staff members feel comfortable while sharing his advice and expertise. He energized the office allowing for greater productivity and a fierce sense of loyalty.

As Mark embarks on this new journey, I wish he and Connie every happiness life has to offer. I know he will enjoy his leisure time with Jonathan exploring the trails of the White Mountains and I am sure his coaching skills will continue to flourish as he cheers on Molly and her teammates at Concord High. And the engagements with his band ''Souled Out'' will continue to experience success. I hope Mark will enjoy this poem by New Hampshire poet, Robert Frost.

The woods are lovely, dark and deep.
But I have promises to keep,
And miles to go before I sleep.
And miles to go before I sleep.

Mark, it has truly been an honor to call you my friend. It is a pleasure to represent you in the United States Senate.

I wish you God speed and good luck in your future endeavors.●

COMMEMORATING THE FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SHOOTING OF SAN FRANCISCO POLICE OFFICER JAMES GUELFF

● Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to San Francisco Police Officer James Guelff on the fifth anniversary of his death in the line of duty.

This coming Saturday, the City of San Francisco will honor Officer Guelff by having his name enshrined at the corner of Pine and Franklin in San Francisco where he was slain on November 13, 1994.

Responding to a distress call, Officer Guelff, stationed at Northern Police Station, reached the crime scene and was immediately fired upon by a suspect shielded by body armor and armed with an AK 223, an Uzi, two semi-automatic pistols, and thousands of rounds of ammunition. In an attempt to defend himself, Officer Guelff returned fire but his police issue revolver could not penetrate the gunman's kevlar vest and bulletproof helmet. Officer Guelff was killed under the barrage of the assailant's bullets as he attempted to reload his revolver.

Officer James Guelff bravely faced an assailant with defensive armor and firepower no police officer should ever confront. In response to his death, his relatives and fellow officers embarked on a national campaign to restrict felons' access to body armor.

This incident helped raise awareness of the unacceptable risks officers face on the street when they encounter gunmen with equal or better defensive protection. The bottom line is that criminals who use body armor have a deadly offensive weapon.

It is a tribute to the memory of Office James Guelff and a tribute to the persistence and dedication of his family and fellow officers that California passed legislation restricting the use of body armor by felons.

Earlier this year, I introduced the James Guelff Body Armor Act of 1999 to enact Federal regulations on body armor. First, the measure increases the penalties criminals receive if they commit a crime wearing body armor. Specifically, a violation will lead to an increase of two levels under the Federal sentencing guidelines. Second, it makes it unlawful for violent felons to purchase, use, or possess body armor.

This legislation is included in S. 254, the Juvenile Justice Crime bill, which is in its final negotiations in a joint House-Senate conference committee.

It is my hope that the Conference Committee will finish its job quickly so that we can provide a lasting tribute to Officer James Guelff. This legislation will better protect our police officers by making sure they are adequately supplied with body armor, and that hardened criminals are deterred from using body armor.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me on this special day in honoring Officer James Guelff and celebrating the life of a true American hero.●

HONORING ALASKA'S VETERANS OF UNDERAGE MILITARY SERVICE

● Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, earlier this year the Alaska Legislature passed a resolution honoring Alaska's Veterans of Underage Military Service. This is an important veterans organization in Alaska, and I would like to let the Senate know a little bit about it by submitting the text of the state resolution in the RECORD.

I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution follows:

RESOLUTION OF THE ALASKA LEGISLATURE HONORING ALASKA'S VETERANS OF UNDERAGE MILITARY SERVICE

The Twenty-first Alaska State Legislature is proud to commend Veterans of Underage Military Service and its members for their attempts to locate and assist all underage veterans of America's armed forces.

Throughout history, nations have called upon their youth to fight their wars, and it is inevitable that some men and women under the legal age, usually driven by strong patriotism, have enlisted in the armed forces. In some instances, these youth were discovered and separated from the service having already seen action. After being discharged from one branch of service for being underage, many promptly enlisted in another branch of the armed services.

The Twenty-first Alaska State Legislature recognizes these men and women who understood the importance of fighting for freedom and honors their valiant efforts as defenders of the United States of America during times of war and peril. The Veterans of Underage Military Service Veterans was formed in 1990 to help such individuals, who were frequently discharged from the service and stripped of their awards and their military benefits.

The goal of the Veterans of Underage Military Service organization is to contact all veterans who served in any branch of the United States Armed Forces when they were under legal age and to advise and assist them in obtaining a proper discharge and veterans' benefits. A secondary goal is to establish a historical record of underage veterans by publishing their names, deeds, and stories. The organization currently consists of more than 1,000 members nationwide who served in the United States Armed Forces before they were of legal age.

The Twenty-first Alaska State Legislature wishes to recognize Alaska's own members of the Veterans of Underage Military Service: Judd Clemens, Michael Mitchell, Gordon Severson, Gene Wheeler, Larry Connolly, Miles Pierce, Elsie Sexton, and Thor Weatherby.

We, the members of the Twenty-first Alaska State Legislature honor the Veterans of Underage Military Service. We commend them for their attempts to locate and assist all underage veterans of the United States Armed Forces and support their efforts to make ''whole'' these national heroes.●

TRIBUTE TO ANDY FRENCH, EDDIE WILSON, AND LIBBY O'FLAHERTY FOR THEIR HEROIC EFFORTS

● Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to honor three individuals who define heroic action and the selflessness of many of the citizens of the State of New Hampshire. While only teenagers, these three individuals acted with maturity and grace in saving the life of Carol Black of Newton, Massachusetts.

Andy French, Eddie Wilson, and Libby O'Flaherty, all of Gilford, New Hampshire, were enjoying a quiet afternoon on the lake when they spotted Carol Black. Upon seeing the body of the unconscious woman in the water of Lake Winnepesaukee, the three youths selflessly came to her aid. They did not hesitate before saving her, a testament to their individual honor.

Mr. President, in a society where we too often hear stories of youth violence, it is refreshing to hear of heroic deeds such as this. Too often, the actions of a few that have wandered from the fold overshadow those who have acted with continual kindness.

It is one of the deepest pleasures for me to be able to rise today to honor these three individuals from my home area. Their kindness and dedication sets a precedent for other youth to follow. It is an honor to represent them in the United States Senate.●

ADDRESS BY KING ABDULLAH OF JORDAN AT THE KENNEDY LIBRARY

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on October 14, the John F. Kennedy Presidential Library in Boston hosted a dinner in honor of King Abdullah II of Jordan.

In his remarks, King Abdullah spoke eloquently of the strong ties between the United States and Jordan, his vision for strengthening peace in the Middle East, and his hope of creating new opportunities for future generations in Jordan.

Like his father, King Hussein, King Abdullah cares deeply about the Jordanian people and stability in the region, and his comments are very inspiring. I believe that all of us who care about the future of the Middle East will be interested in his remarks, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

SPEECH BY HIS MAJESTY KING ABDULLAH II AT THE KENNEDY LIBRARY IN BOSTON, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1999

Senator Kennedy, Mrs. Kennedy, Mr. Manning, Ladies and gentlemen, allow me first to express my sincere gratitude for this beautiful evening which Rania and I shall cherish for the rest of our lives.

Senator, I would like to add my voice to all those who have paid tribute, over the years, to the Kennedy family, for the contribution that they have made to the improvement of human life and for the painful sacrifices that have made us all realize the value of true citizenship.

I say that Senator, because I also happen to belong to a family that has devoted itself since the turn of this century to the improvement of the life of the Arab people. Over the years, many sacrifices have been made to ensure that the freedom, liberty, and integrity of the Arab mind is sacrosanct, that the rights of the Arabs are not forgotten or betrayed and that their future is protected.

As I conclude my second working visit to the United States, I am very proud of the special relations that bind Jordan with your country. The foundations of these ties, so carefully laid by my late father have seen us making peace with our Israeli neighbors, and subsequently guarding its sustainability and continuity. Through our partnership with America, we have built a unique model in our region. It is a model of peace that is cemented by the respect of the principles of democracy, freedom of expression, political pluralism, free economic enterprise, and human dignity. It is being continually reinforced through our positive interaction with our neighbors.

Most importantly, it is the necessary requirement for successfully facing the challenges ahead which are numerous and quite complex. In my mind, the most daunting task that I have set myself to accomplish is to guarantee that our younger generation get an equal opportunity like others elsewhere in the world: An opportunity to be active participants in the shaping of their own destiny, one that will hopefully focus on technological advances in science, on being a part of the information technology revolution, and on being able to enjoy the best of education, medical care, and environmental standards.

These are big challenges that necessitate, first and foremost, that we rid ourselves of the dark past of war, conflict, and strife in our region, prior to getting ready to embark on a future course of promise, rewards, and accomplishments.

These challenges require more than ever that the partnership with the United States be solid, strong, and sustainable. The role that the United States has played in the making of peace in our region must be complemented with continued efforts designed to rehabilitate our region. If it is to effectively participate in the community of nations, not through conflict, but rather through a concrete realization of a new positive role.

All of you present here tonight can contribute to the making of a new region. We in Jordan will continue to provide the model, but we need your support and contribution.

I do not want to keep you any longer; suffice it to say that I am very grateful to all of you for your interest, your support, and your determination to help us attain a dream that befits the dawn of a new millennium.

Thank you again, and we hope to see you in the near future in our part of the world.●

TRIBUTE TO MAJOR CLINT CROSIER

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize Major Clinton E. Crosier, an Air Force Fellow on my staff, and commend his superior performance throughout this past year as a key member of my national security team.

Major Crosier has been on active duty since 1988. During his 11-year career he has served as an Executive Office and Operations Management Officer, during which time he deployed to Saudi Arabia during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. He has served as a Satellite Operations Flight Commander, overseeing the operations of part of the Air Force's multibillion dollar constellation of military communications satellites; and also as a Missile Operations Crew Commander and Flight Commander, supervising the training and certification of over 200 of the nuclear launch officers serving as the backbone of America's nuclear deterrent.

During his career, his outstanding performance and professionalism has been recognized by his selection as the 90th Missile Wing's Staff Officer of the Year; 28th Air Division's Company Grade Officer of the Year and Lance P. Sijan Leadership Award Winner; three-time selection as unit Company Grade Officer of the Year; Unit Evaluator of the Year; and Unit Flight Commander of the Year. Major Crosier is also a Distinguished Graduate of the Air Force's Operations Management Officer school and Squadron Officer School, and graduated first in his class during satellite operations training and missile operations training.

Upon arrival at the Pentagon just over a year ago, Major Crosier was tasked with building the Air Force's first ever Air Command and Staff College program for Congressional staff. This program, known as ACSC, is a 44-week graduate level program designed to provide mid-career officers with an in-depth understanding of the principles and application of air and space power. This was the first time in history this program had been offered to Congressional staff. In this capacity, Major Crosier was directly responsible for the graduation of 18 staff members from both the House and Senate in a ceremony last month over which the Secretary of the Air Force presided. During this ceremony, Secretary Peters heralded the Capitol Hill ACSC seminar Major Crosier built as a ''very important tool to cement the important partnership between the Air Force and the Congress . . . that will serve indefinitely as a bridge between our two great institutions.'' Additionally, Secretary Peters praised Major Crosier personally by describing his effort as an ''astronomical benefit'' to the Air Force.

Most recently, Major Crosier was one of only 10 officers in the entire Air Force selected for the prestigious Legislative Fellowship program, through which he came to work as a member of my personal staff. The Air Force's Legislative Fellowship program is designed to identify the Air Force's highest caliber performers through an extremely competitive selection process. These individuals are then provided an in-depth education in the legislative processes of Congress through a one-year assignment in a Member's office, to prepare them for future senior leadership positions in the Air Force. Throughout the past year, he has been an invaluable resource to me, and a credit to the United States Air Force.

Due to his vast experience in space and missile operations, Clint was able to provide me with expert assistance in my capacity as Chairman of the Strategic Force Subcommittee on Armed Services, providing technical expertise on a myriad of advanced space operations and missile defense programs. He quickly became an expert on dozens of programs critical to national security. Major Crosier also was responsible for performing topical research and preparing me for dozens of Armed Services Committee hearings, and provided a vital role on a number of wide ranging issues from the Department of Defense Authorization and Appropriations Bills to the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty and the Vieques Weapons Range.

Major Crosier has been an outstanding addition to my staff, and has served with the highest degree of integrity and distinction. His performance has earned my highest praise, and he has distinguished himself as one of the top military officers I have had the great privilege to know during 16 years in Congress. Major Crosier has demonstrated himself to be one of the Air Force's brightest future senior leaders. As Major Crosier departs the Senate to serve on the personal staff of the Secretary of the Air Force, I extend my sincerest appreciation for his valuable and professional service. I will not only miss Clint's knowledge and efficiency, I will also miss his enthusiasm. Clint is an honorable and dedicated individual. I wish he, his wife Shelle, and their children, all the best in future endeavors.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be read a third time and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 76) was read the third time and passed.

APPOINTMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, in accordance with 22 U.S.C. 1928a–1928d, as amended, appoints the following Senators as members of the Senate Delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly (NATO Parliamentary Assembly) during the First Session of the 106th Congress, to be held in Amsterdam, The Netherlands, November 11–15, 1999:

The Senator from Iowa (Mr. GRASSLEY),

The Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), and

The Senator from Hawaii (Mr. AKAKA).

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1999

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday, November 10. I further ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then resume on S. 625, the bankruptcy reform bill, under the previous order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. GORTON. For the information of all Senators, the Senate will resume consideration of the bankruptcy bill at 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday. Under the previous order, there will be up to 4 hours of debate on the Hatch amendment No. 2771 regarding drugs, with a vote to follow the use or yielding back of that time. The votes on the nomination of Carol Moseley-Braun and Linda Morgan will be stacked to follow the vote on the drug amendment. Thus, Senators can expect three back-to-back votes between 12 noon and 1 p.m. tomorrow. There are a number of amendments pending on the bankruptcy bill, and it is hoped that they can be disposed of in a timely fashion, along with any other amendments Senators intend to offer to this legislation. The Senate may also be ready to take action on the remaining appropriations bills during tomorrow's session of the Senate. Senators should adjust their schedules for the possibility of votes throughout the day and into the evening. The leadership appreciates the patience and cooperation of his colleagues as we attempt to complete the appropriations process prior to Veterans Day.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. GORTON. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 7:38 p.m., adjourned until Wednesday, November 10, 1999, at 9:30 a.m.

The Chair will alternate recognition between the parties, with each party limited to not to exceed 25 minutes, and each Member except the majority leader, the minority leader or the minority whip limited to not to exceed 5 minutes, but in no event shall debate continue beyond 9:50 a.m.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH) for 4 minutes.

WHAT IS THE WTO?

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, with all the talk about the meeting of the WTO in Seattle, it is worth answering the question, what is the WTO? The World Trade Organization, the Uruguay Round of the GATT, General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, is a broad-ranging set of international trade rules that, number one, imposes obligations on foreign countries that are beneficial to U.S. multinational companies and, number two, it imposes obligations on the Federal and State governments that place tight limitations on Congress and the State legislatures that are beneficial to foreign multinational companies.

The WTO makes the world the oyster of large multinational businesses, because the WTO takes away the inability of national governments to set the laws of their countries. National governments, including the United States, lose the ability to pass laws affecting the import of products that are dangerous or that are made where there are no worker protections, child labor prohibitions, minimum wage standards or where workers are deprived of the right to organize into unions and bargain collectively.

Even if the import of those products would put U.S. workers out of work or would endanger consumers or the environment, the WTO says no.

At the current time, there is a WTO panel hearing arguments against France's ban on asbestos, a proven carcinogen in humans and a substantial workplace danger.

According to the Congressional Research Service, legislation passed in the U.S. Congress to ban imports of products made with child labor, quote, would be inconsistent with GATT articles, unquote. In other words, the WTO would not permit Congress to ban products made with child labor.

So here is the imbalance: The WTO permits measures that make it easier for large companies to locate anywhere in the world but the WTO forbids a country from banning a product made with child labor.

What would happen if the U.S. passed a law that banned the import of products made with child labor? Any one of the 131 member countries could seek a tribunal in Geneva to overturn the U.S. law. Companies that profit from products made from child labor would be expected to lobby countries to bring such a case. It is possible that companies would be able to bring such a case themselves, without persuading a country government to do so, if the WTO is expanded some more. If a WTO panel of trade bureaucrats ruled that any child labor ban violated the WTO, the U.S. would have to repeal the law or pay damages.

According to the Congressional Research Service, that is just what the WTO tribunal would rule.

So when the World Trade agreement was negotiated, we gave away the United States' greatest negotiating leverage, access to the U.S. market, to improve the rights and living standards of workers in the U.S. and around the world. The U.S. has basically unilaterally ceded this.

In the next few weeks, trade ministers from many of the world's countries will be meeting in Seattle to discuss how to expand the WTO. The U.S. is sending many negotiators, but will they be bargaining for what we need? What we need, what the working people in the United States and overseas need, is to renegotiate the WTO before any expansion occurs. We need to place limitations on the WTO. We need to explicitly enable the United States and other countries to prohibit import of products made with child and forced labor.

We need to be able to use the leverage of access to the U.S. market and other markets to guarantee the rights of workers to organize into unions and bargain collectively; to be protected by workplace safety and right-to-know standards that are minimally equivalent to current U.S. standards; and to benefit from legal minimum wage levels.

We need the WTO to be limited to improve conditions for workers in the U.S. and around the world. American workers would benefit. They would have less reason to be pressured into abandoning efforts to improve wages and conditions by employer threats to move plants and equipment to the Third World.

SELLING ABORTED BABY PARTS, WHAT HAS THE UNITED STATES COME TO?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OSE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) is recognized during morning hour debates for 2 minutes.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of House Resolution 350, a resolution which addresses the horrible practice developing in America of trafficking in baby body parts for monetary reimbursement. Abortion clinics are selling dead, unborn babies, or parts of them, to middlemen. These middlemen, in turn, are selling them to researchers.

Mr. Speaker, just look at this blowup of this price list taken from this chilling magazine article from someone in this awful business. A liver, $150, but it can be gotten for $125 if it is from a younger baby, or one can get a 30 percent discount if it is significantly fragmented; a spleen, $75; pancreas, $100; a thymus, $100.

Look at this, a brain, $999. Notice they even use marketing techniques in this gruesome business, selling it for $1 less than a thousand dollars to make it, I guess, a more attractive purchase.

Again, if it is fragmented, what a terrible way to describe a baby's injured brain from abortion, one can get a 30 percent discount; almost like step right up, ladies and gentlemen. A baby's ear, $75; eyes, $75 for a pair, $40 for one; skin, $100; the spinal cord, $325.

Mr. Speaker, I wish this price list were a cruel Halloween hoax, but it is not. It is a price list for human body parts from aborted babies, in America. This is not Nazi, Germany.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this resolution calling for oversight hearings.

THE WTO NEEDS A MAJOR OVERHAUL, AND THE UNITED STATES HAS AN OPPORTUNITY TO DO IT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) is recognized during morning hour debates for 4 minutes.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH), who preceded me, talked a little bit about the upcoming meeting of the World Trade Organization, and I would like to follow up on that.

It was Renato Ruggiero, the former director general of the World Trade Organization, who said, and I quote, we are writing the Constitution of a new world government, end quote.

Well, they left out a few things when they wrote that new constitution. They left out consumer rights and protections. They left out labor rights. They left out environmental rights and protections.

The United States has a tremendous opportunity, in hosting the beginning of the next round of negotiations at the World Trade Organization, to initiate a major overhaul of this horribly flawed agreement and drag it kicking and screaming into at least the late 20th Century.

Labor rights, well there seems to be agreement on labor rights. The President has admitted that perhaps the nonbinding, face-saving, political buttcovering side agreements on labor and the environment, which were not binding, which helped push NAFTA through this organization here, the House of Representatives, gave enough people political cover, will not be enough in the future for trade agreements and, if called, he and the vice president, for labor agreements to be core labor protections, to be core to any future agreement, the only problem is, their employee, the special trade representative, Charlene Barshefsky, does not seem to share their views.

When pressed in a press conference last week to expand upon what is the United States talking about here, they cannot be serious about putting labor protections into an international trade agreement, by God, then what would capital do? How could it run around the world looking for the most exploited sources of labor?

She said, quote, this is not a negotiating group. It is an analytic working group designed to draw upon the expertise of other multilateral institutions in order to answer a series of analytic points.

Now, that does not sound an awful lot like labor protections. It does not sound like it will get us to the point made by the previous gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH), stopping trafficking in goods produced by forced child labor around the world. No, that is a little too far for the World Trade Organization, and if Ms. Barshefsky has her way, it will be too far for the United States of America to go. That is pathetic.

She goes on to say, the issue of sanctions is nowhere in this proposal and it is certainly not on the table, and then she goes on in another much longer quote I do not have time to give, to say that this analytical look at labor protections will lead everybody to the conclusion that the best way to bring up labor standards around the world is not to have any; sort of like the theory of the Republicans here in Congress. If we did not have a minimum wage the market would set one and it would be good for everybody.

Well, maybe not the people who earn the minimum wage or just above it, but it would be good for the employers.

The same thing with the World Trade Organization and Charlene Barshefsky. They want to say the market will bring about in the future some sort of labor protections without these horrible dictates.

In fact, they are undermining our own laws here in the United States with the World Trade Organization, a little secretive body of 3 people who are exempt from conflict of interest, exempt from public disclosure, make binding decisions on trade disputes.

The U.S. has lost a number of trade disputes on environmental issues over the last few years, but they have won one big one.

We are going to force the Europeans to take hormone-laced beef. By God, that is a big victory for the U.S. and we should have more of this. We do not want to reform this organization. We do not want transparency and doing away with conflict of interest rules. We do not want any system of juris prudence the American people can understand. We do not want to allow environmental groups or labor groups to intervene and mess up the decision-making process of the World Trade Organization.

We have a tremendous opportunity as the United States of America to lead, and maybe we have to get rid of Ms. Barshefsky to do that.

QUINCY LIBRARY GROUP AND FOREST HEALTH

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, we have a forest health crisis in this country and the Clinton-Gore administration's current do-nothing policies are utterly failing to address it. A government report released in April states that approximately 39 million acres of our western national forests are at extremely high risk of catastrophic fire.

Alarmingly, this same report indicates that the Forest Service has failed to advance a cohesive strategy to treat this 39 million acres at risk, despite the fact that the window of opportunity for taking effective management action is only about 10 to 25 years before catastrophic wild fires become widespread.

Last year, Congress passed historic legislation that was intended to provide the Forest Service a tool with which to proactively address and combat this forest health crisis.

The bipartisan Herger-Feinstein Quincy Library Group Forest Recovery Act, which passed last Congress by an overwhelming margin of 429-to-1, mandated a project to manage our forests for health and safety, while providing for a responsible, ecologically sound level of harvesting to benefit local economies.

The Forest Service was assigned the responsibility of carrying out this specific plan, but made several last minute additions to the environmental analysis that have drastically tilted the bipartisan balance that this Congress struck in the law and the Quincy Group struck in its plan.

These changes, based on a combination of bad science and special interest politics, will prevent treatment on almost all of the 2½ million acres to be protected from catastrophic fire under the original plan. The decision was made behind closed doors, without public input.

Mr. Speaker, the Forest Service has taken it upon itself to circumvent a law that this Congress passed almost unanimously. The Quincy plan presented us with an opportunity to proactively prevent the very type of catastrophic forest and wildland fires that have ripped through 5 counties in my district in Northern California in the past 8 weeks, tragically taking two human lives.

These fires have also burned more than 250,000 acres of public and private property, destroyed more than 100 homes, eliminated thousands of acres of wildlife habitat and various species of wildlife, and generated tons of smoke. In addition, the American taxpayers have paid close to $100 million to fight these fires.

However, the Forest Service has rejected this plan and has scaled it back to the point that it is almost meaningless, perhaps hoping the fire risks will somehow go away, despite the fact that the risk of catastrophic fire across the West is increasing.

The agency proposes to lock up our choked, fire-prone forests and allow prescribed fires to achieve its so-called forest management goals, even though this policy causes serious air pollution and poses a very real risk that a burn will get out of control, as it has on a number of occasions.

To add to this outrage, Mr. Speaker, the administration recently proposed to lock up an additional 40 to 50 million more acres of national forests, preventing the very management strategies that our fire experts are telling us we absolutely must take.

This attempt to shut down access to the public's forest lands is too much about what special interest groups demand and too little of what their own elected government and science recommends.

This Clinton-Gore administration has needlessly put our lives and property at risk in a selfish attempt to create an environmental legacy. The reality of our forest health crisis is that more, not less, of our forests must be available for pursuing forest management strategies.

We must begin to take proactive steps before catastrophic fires become more widespread. The forest service and this administration have refused to respond and have neglected congressional attempts to address the crisis. They appear ready to serve special interest environmental politics until well after the election.

Regrettably, forest fires are not that patient.

Mr. Speaker, our forests and our communities are at risk and we intend to do everything possible to hold this administration accountable for its negligence.

A LIVABLE COMMUNITY IS ONE WHERE FAMILIES ARE SAFE, HEALTHY AND ECONOMICALLY SECURE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, a livable community is one where families are safe, healthy and economically secure. While much attention is given to the damage that unplanned growth can have to the physical environment, the physical blight, traffic congestion, loss of open space, wildlife habitat, it is clear that a community that is not livable can also have direct impacts on the physical and psychological health of families as well.

Just this week, the South Coast Air Quality Management District in Southern California released a report documenting the danger to people breathing the toxic air that is concentrated near southern California's congested freeways. This danger has increased the risk of cancer. People today are increasingly concerned about the soaring rates of asthma among our children which clearly appears related to the toxins we are putting into the air.

Recently, there was an article that I found amusing in the Washington Post, about how some people really enjoy the real long commute. It helps them center themselves and prepare for a long day.

I suppose that may be true for some, but when the average American spends more than 50 work days a year trapped behind the wheel of a car, just getting to and from their occupation, and when we have lost 43 more hours in the last 5 years to commuting, there are direct implications. I would venture that for a much larger number the commute to work is not the highlight of their day.

The National Sleep Foundation has reported that the 158 hours added to the yearly work commutes since 1969 have been subtracted from the time many Americans sleep. Carol Rodriguez, director of the Institute of Stress Medicine in Norwalk, Connecticut, observed that people with lengthy commutes often exhibit signs of stress in the workplace.

Marriage and family counselors in the Bay Area see patients struggling with the increased demands and stress placed upon them from their longer work commutes. This struggle is manifesting itself in family problems and even divorce. It has been noted that divorce itself is no longer a reliever to the stress of long commutes and separation because often, after a family breaks up, the difficulties of two households in coordinating the needs of children and employment are usually greater in terms of time and miles driven to hold things together.

The job-related problems where employers increasingly, in congested communities, never seem to know when their employees are going to show up, seems tame by comparison.

One of the most interesting developments may be found in a report from the Center for Disease Control and prevention on increasing obesity rates in the United States. Rates have been increasing since 1991 all across America, but there was particular concern about an increase of over 101 percent in Georgia.

In 1991, when the study began, metropolitan Atlanta had one of the lowest obesity rates. What is the reason for the increase? Some blame the traditional southern diet, which it is true is often high in fat, but the South's diet is not that much different than the rest of the country today. In any case, it certainly does not explain why Georgia has the worst problem than the rest of the South.

It is interesting that the researcher placed part of the blame on the problems that metropolitan Atlanta is facing as the community has become less and less livable. The skyrocketing obesity rates coincide exactly with the explosion of unplanned growth around metropolitan Atlanta which some claim is the highest growth rate in history.

Dr. William Deats, one of the study's co-authors, points out that the time in the car encourages not just more fast food, it eats into the time for exercise. Others have noticed that Atlanta's unplanned growth has shortchanged the opportunities for outdoor exercise. It is not a walkable community. Sidewalks do not lead anywhere and even if people had the time and a place to exercise, the increasingly bad air makes the benefits of exercise problematic.

It is important for us to reflect on why the political landscape is being influenced by the discussion of livable communities and why it is such a major issue. It seems at some level the American public understands that their health, both emotional and physical, of the family, the ability to be fit, reduce stress, adequate sleep and for the family to live together is one of the first casualties if a community is not livable.

I strongly urge my colleagues to join with me in making sure that this session of Congress does its job for the Federal Government to be a better partner in maintaining and enhancing the livability of American communities.

REPUBLICANS ARE NOT ISOLATIONISTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) is recognized during morning hour debates for 5 minutes.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I have not participated in morning hour before but sometimes we hear things in the news that just cause us to be so upset we come to the floor, and that is what I am doing here today.

President Clinton, Mr. Speaker, made an address to Georgetown University yesterday and some people say it was an extension of an olive branch to Republicans who he had labeled as isolationists and who he criticized for partisanship when the other body refused to approve a comprehensive test ban treaty.

I welcome his initiative but I would like to set the record straight here today and raise a few questions that relate to some of my Democratic colleagues, too.

I have tried to provide bipartisan leadership in the House Committee on International Relations. Indeed the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BARRETT) and I come from the only state legislative body that is nonpartisan, our State legislature of Nebraska, so I find the degree of partisanship here in the Congress to be very unusual and not productive. However, I would have to say this, Mr. Speaker, to the President, when national security advisors and secretaries of defense of both parties from past administrations are critical of the proposed treaty and suggest that it should not be ratified in its current form, then I think it is inappropriate for this administration and for this President to label any opponents of the treaty as isolationists.

This use of the isolationist label contributes further to something that the National Journal perpetrated a few weeks ago when their cover story suggested that Republicans, particularly those in the House of Representatives, were isolationists.

I have to say to my colleagues, that yes, there are people that I suppose could properly be labeled isolationists on the Republican side of the aisle and some whose actions I certainly do not approve of in terms of their impact on foreign policy, but I would have to say also, Mr. Speaker, to the President and to the Administration, that when it comes to isolationism, he may look to his own party, particularly in the House.

It is, after all, Democrats who were only willing to give 20 percent of their votes to fast track authority for trade agreements to their own President. This is the first President, since we began the process of fast-track, since President Ford, who has been denied fast track authority to negotiate bilateral and multilateral trade agreements. Only 20 percent of the members on the Democratic side of the aisle were willing to support that. At least 80 percent on the Republican side were willing to vote for fast-track authority for President Clinton by whip counts conducted by the two respective parties.

I would also say this goes on top of the fact that the major opposition to the Africa trade bill and to the Caribbean trade bill came from the Democratic side of the aisle; there were more votes on the Republican side of the aisle for fast-track in both Houses.

I also think it is important that we look at what happened last April, when Premier Zhu Rongji came here from the People's Republic of China with a commercially viable trade agreement for accession to the WTO. Everyone was shocked with the fact that this Administration rejected it. As I understand it, all of the President's primary substantive advisors suggested he should seize the moment and agree to what was a much more beneficial agreement from the United States point of view than we had expected. His political advisors said, no, do not do this, Mr. President.

Now, there are many suggestions that this is because of the relationship and controversy related to alleged Chinese campaign contributions to the Clinton-Gore campaign, and also to the then recently completed Cox Committee report on Chinese espionage at some of our national laboratories.

Whatever the case, the impediment was not there for the President to approve accession arrangements with the Chinese for the WTO was not a Republican one.

Just a few minutes ago, one of our colleagues from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) suggesting his great concerns about the WTO and was very critical of his own Administration. I would say to the National Journal, when they do an article like that cover story on Republican isolationism perhaps they ought to be a little bit more careful that they are doing it competently and that they are not doing it with bias.

I was also very concerned, Mr. Speaker, when I saw some comments by National Security Advisor Sandy Berger when the conflict took place in East Timor. He suggested in a variety of ways, some things he has retracted, others he has not, that we, of course, could not be involved even in assisting the Australians in trying to keep peace in East Timor because, after all, it was not in the center of Europe.

Now, if that is not isolationism, at least it is Eurocentrism, and it is the kind of thing that bothers Asians and Pacific leaders and their citizens, and with good cause.

I urge my colleagues to take a look at the need to come back for bipartisanship in foreign policy and I urge the administration, Mr. Speaker, to be more careful that they do not alienate some of their best friends for a bipartisan foreign policy on the Republicans' side of the aisle in either House of Congress.

WTO IN SEATTLE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) is recognized during morning hour debates for 4 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, many of us have come to this floor of the House of Representatives today and on previous days for 5 minutes and 1 minutes in various speeches to talk about asking that the United States not support accession for China to the World Trade Organization. We are instead insisting that labor standards and environmental standards be applied to our trading partners, the same kind of environmental standards and labor standards that we follow in this country. If that makes us isolationists, as my friend, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) suggested earlier, then so be it. But the fact is that those of us that believe in the right kinds of labor standards and the right kinds of environmental standards around the world want to lift people up around the world, not continue this downward spiral on food safety and labor standard and environmental standards that our trading policy seems to move us towards.

Republican leadership last week wrote a letter to the administration demanding that our USTR, U.S. trade rep bureaucrats, do not include labor standards in any of the discussions at the World Trade Organization. The Republican leadership of the Committee on Ways and Means is insisting that the U.S. trade rep ensure that developing countries require that we protect property rights but not human rights, not labor standards, not environmental rights.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, Trade Ambassador Charlene Barshefsky, an unelected official who never seems to miss an opportunity to publicly diminish the importance of labor rights, was supposed to meet with some of us here in the House last night and explain whether or not the administration really plans to push for stronger worker environmental rights in Seattle.

What happened? Did we have a chance to talk about how Huffy Bicycle has closed its last American plant because it cannot compete with cheap imports from China, a place where trying to form an independent trade union will get one thrown in prison or even killed?

Did we have a chance to talk about some of the maquilladora factories in Mexico which dump their pollution into the same water that their workers have to drink?

Did we get a chance to talk about why armed guards will not permit independent monitors into the garment factories in El Salvador which ship millions of dollars worth of merchandise here every year?

No, we did not, and that is because Ambassador Barshefsky and a score of other American trade bureaucrats were heading off to the People's Republic of China to try to secure a last minute deal to get China into the World Trade Organization.

As we speak, U.S. trade bureaucrats are busy coddling the same gang of dictators that are busy arresting, torturing and even killing Chinese people that practice Falun Gong, which as far as I can tell is the same thing as torturing and killing Christians and Muslims and any other group of people that have spiritual beliefs in that country.

So instead of having a real dialogue on whether the Seattle ministerial will have any discussion about human rights, worker rights, human rights, instead of having a chance to hear exactly what is going to happen in Seattle, the administration wants to commit this country to a policy that will continue to hurt workers, a policy that continues the human rights abuses, child labor, slave labor, forced abortions, persecution of Christians and Muslims and Falun Gong and all kinds of religious minorities in China that will continue to allow that kind of policy to happen in China.

We can bet the farm on it. If the People's Republic of China accedes to the World Trade Organization, if this country's government supports China accession to the World Trade Organization, that is the last we will ever hear about human rights.

Do we really think a totalitarian government that performs forced abortions is ever going to protect labor rights? Do we believe that a totalitarian government which kills thousands of its own people in slave labor camps and then sells their organs is ever going to let the WTO implement any sort of framework to protect the rights of workers?

Mr. Speaker, we should stand strong against the accession of China to the WTO.

ANTIDUMPING AND ANTISUBSIDY PROVISIONS SHOULD NOT BE NEGOTIATED AWAY IN NEW ROUND OF WTO

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 19, 1999, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. VISCLOSKY) is recognized during morning hour debates for 4 minutes.

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to press my argument that as the new round of WTO negotiations begin in Seattle later this month, we should support the administration's position not to negotiate away the antidumping and antisubsidy provisions of our trade laws.

I would also ask that this House vote to support this position by supporting H. Res. 298.

Seattle is the follow-on to the Uruguay Round which was completed on April 15, 1994, and signed by ministers from over 125 countries. Part of this agreement included changes to the antidumping laws which had been included in GATT since its original inception in 1947. In fact, article 6 of the 1947 GATT states very clearly that the contracting parties recognize that dumping is to be condemned.

The scope of negotiations at the Seattle round discussions of the World Trade Organization were specified during the Uruguay Round. However, some countries now are seeking to circumvent the agreed list of negotiating topics and reopen the debate over the WTO's antidumping and antisubsidy rules.

Antidumping duties are assessed on imported merchandise that is sold at less than fair market value. Countervailing duties are assessed to reverse the effects of foreign government subsidies to manufacturers. Today, over 290 products from 59 countries have been found to have been traded in violation of these international standards.

The ability to impose binding tariffs and apply them equitably to all trading partners is the key to a smooth and liberal flow of trade. Many of my colleagues think that this is a steel issue. That could not be further from the truth. The experience of the U.S. cement industry indicates that the antidumping law can be an effective remedy for unfairly priced imports.

U.S. consumption of cement increased substantially during the 1983 to 1989 economic expansion as construction boomed. U.S. cement producers, however, were prevented from benefiting in this growing demand by a surge of low-priced imports in that 6-year period of time.

U.S. production capacity declined by 10 percent and the number of U.S. plants decreased from 142 to only 109.

Beginning in 1989, southern cement producers successfully prosecuted antidumping petitions against imports from several countries. The Commerce Department found dumping margins for imports from 58 to 64 percent. As a result of these measures, cement producers began their recovery process in our country.

Another example often cited is that of the U.S. semiconductor industry in 1986. After foreign dynamic random-access memory chips, DRAMs, were dumped in the United States for 2 years, 7 out of 9 U.S. companies ceased making these chips.

After those foreign firms dominated the world market, they raised the price of DRAMs. The subsequent use of U.S. antidumping laws contributed finally to the revival of the U.S. semiconductor industry, which in 1993 again held the number one position in the world.

Given the fact again that there are 230 cosponsors of House Resolution 298, I would renew my request to the House leaders that this measure be brought to the floor for a vote.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until 10 a.m.

Accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 38 minutes a.m.), the House stood in recess until 10 a.m.

□ 1000

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. OSE) at 10 a.m.

PRAYER

Rabbi Joel Tessler, Temple Beth Shalom, Potomac, Maryland, offered the following prayer:

In the Bible, the Prophet Billim is hired to curse the Jewish people, the chosen people of God. Try as he might, God would not place in him the spirit of condemnation and curse, but enveloped him in true understanding with purity and love.

Billim uttered these famous words which were said as a person enters the synagogue: ''How goodly are your homes of Jacob, your institutions of Israel?''

Why do we praise our homes when we enter the synagogue? The Lord taught Billim that our institutions are only as strong as our homes.

If the American family is under siege, is it any wonder that our schools are becoming battle zones for children and teachers?

Money alone cannot substitute for the foundation and grounding that parents, grandparents, and families provide. Every discussion in these halls must be judged with an eye on how goodly are our homes, the homes we help our citizens create.

Our institutions, whether schools or houses of worship, are only as strong as the families which make up this great land.

Today is the anniversary of Kristel Nacht, the night of the broken glass, when darkness descended upon Nazi Germany and thousands of synagogues were set on fire.

Our institutions and the future of our society depends on the families we help support. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DEUTSCH) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. DEUTSCH led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 348. An act to authorize the construction of a monument to honor those who have served the Nation's civil defense and emergency management programs.

H.R. 915. An act to authorize a cost of living adjustment in the pay of administrative law judges.

H.R. 3061. An act to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to extend for an additional 2 years the period for admission of an alien as a nonimmigrant under section 101(a)(15)(S) of such Act, and to authorize appropriations for the refuge assistance program under chapter 2 of title IV of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2724. An act to make technical corrections to the Water Resources Development Act of 1999.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed bills and concurrent resolutions of the following titles in which concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 923. An act to promote full equality at the United Nations for Israel.

S. 1398. An act to clarify certain boundaries on maps relating to the Coastal Barrier Resources System.

S. 1809. An act to improve service systems for individuals with developmental disabilities, and for other purposes.

S. Con. Res. 30. Concurrent resolution recognizing the sacrifice and dedication of members of America's nongovernmental organizations (NGO's) and private volunteer organizations (PVO's) throughout their history and specifically in answer to their courageous response to recent disasters in Central America and Kosovo.

S. Con. Res. 68. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of historic events in Central and Eastern Europe, particularly the Velvet Revolution in Czechoslovakia, and reaffirming the bonds of friendship and cooperation between the United States and the Czech and Slovak Republics.

WELCOMING RABBI JOEL TESSLER TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

(Mr. DEUTSCH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DEUTSCH. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce to the House Rabbi Tessler from Beth Shalom, Potomac, Maryland, who has really welcomed me into his community.

My family and I recently moved to Potomac and have found a community rabbi who has been there for 17 years and has made our home a home that we have been very lucky and blessed to be part of.

I wish him many, many years more in terms of striving to affect not just the area in suburban Washington but the entire country, in fact, the entire world.

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF FALL OF BERLIN WALL

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, 10 years ago, one of the most recognized symbols of the Cold War, the Berlin Wall, was leveled by the hammer of freedom. Today the entire free world commemorates the 10th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall.

On November 9, 1989, when President Ronald Reagan's belief of peace through strength prevailed as demonstrators from East Germany began to tear down the wall, thus signifying the beginning of the end of one of the most oppressive and vicious regimes in history.

While the final collapse of Communism in the former Soviet Union occurred shortly after President Reagan left office, history shows that it was his bold vision and courageous actions that led to this historic event.

Ten years later, the world can still hear the echoes of the cheers that erupted at the Brandenburg Gate when President Reagan called upon Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to tear down this wall.

Today we commemorate freedom and democracy throughout most of the world, and we also celebrate President Reagan's bold vision and courageous quest for freedom.

Mr. Speaker, as we continue our work in Congress, I urge all my colleagues to help celebrate the freedom and democracy that helps keep America strong.

CRIMINALS HAVE MORE RIGHTS THAN LAW-ABIDING CITIZENS

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, a Minnesota factory worker said, enough is enough. His cabin was ripped off three times. His neighbors' cabins continue to be ripped off. The police said they could do nothing.

So Lenny Miller booby-trapped his cabin and busted the burglar red-handed. And guess what? Some bust. Lenny Miller is going to jail with a $12,000 fine. And the burglar is getting free health care.

Beam me up. Something is wrong, Mr. Speaker, when Americans cannot protect their own property and when criminals have more rights than law-abiding citizens.

There is one bright side. I yield back the fact that in Wisconsin there will not be many cabins ripped off this year thanks to Lenny Miller.

TRIBUTE TO SERVICE OF SERGEANT RONALD D. BUSBY

(Ms. PRYCE of Ohio asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. PRYCE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the heroic service of Sergeant Ronald D. Busby.

From his hometown of Columbus, Ohio, Ronald answered the Vietnam War's call to arms by enlisting in the U.S. Army in 1967 at the age of 20. He quickly earned the rank of sergeant and began to distinguish himself for his acts of courage and leadership.

On the evening of August 8, 1968, Sergeant Busby led a night ambush patrol. For his actions that evening, he was awarded the Silver Star, Bronze Star, and Purple Heart.

Tragically, like so many of his fellow soldiers, Sergeant Busby was killed in action that fateful evening. He was three days shy of his 21st birthday.

I have heard the phrase ''All gave some, some gave all.'' For veterans like Sergeant Busby, those six words represent more than a phrase; they represent a legacy larger than the tallest mountain. His example lives on as a reminder that America will remain the land of the free only so long as it remains the home of the brave.

As we approach the final Veterans Day of the 20th century, let us remember Sergeant Busby and our countless veterans who served their country so faithfully for our freedoms.

TRIBUTE TO JANE SMALL, FOUNDER OF NATIONAL WOMEN'S POLITICAL CAUCUS

(Ms. WOOLSEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to Jane Small, one of the founding mothers of the National Women's Political Caucus. Jane recently passed away.

In 1971, Jane worked to found the NWPC to recruit and support women seeking elected office regardless of party affiliation.

During Jane's history, she guided the caucus through the ERA movement and the struggle to secure a woman's right for reproductive choice. As an inspired feminist and activist, Jane was a key player in electing numerous candidates across the Nation.

I know Jane particularly for her leadership in California politics. She served on both Governor Jerry Brown's and Governor Gray Davis' advisory committees on women's issues.

Jane was an activist. She was a leader. Women in the political arena live in her legacy. She will be forever missed.

PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHERS—AMERICA'S UNSUNG HEROES

(Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, public school teachers are America's unsung heroes. Day in and day out, they dedicate themselves to helping prepare our children for the future.

It is important to make sure our children's teachers have access to the training and tools they need to meet their commitment to students and parents.

But the Clinton-Gore administration disagrees. It wants the Federal Government to hire 100,000 teachers; but it puts hardly any emphasis on quality. That just does not cut it.

America's children do not just need teachers. They need good teachers. Many of the teachers out there are good, but many could be better and they deserve the chance to make themselves better.

Where new teachers are needed, new teachers should be hired. Where teacher quality is a greater concern, State and local initiatives like merit pay, teacher testing, tenure reform, and new opportunities for teacher development might be better uses of that money.

So let us give teachers the opportunity to be the best teachers they can be, and let us give America's children the best hope for a bright future.

AMERICA WANTS A CONGRESS THAT WORKS FOR THEM

(Mr. STUPAK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, this Republican-led Congress is a Congress of catchy slogans and gimmicks in trying to pass the appropriation bills, gimmicks like trying to create a 13th month for budget purposes, gimmicks like trying to declare everything an emergency, like the 2000 census, even though it has been in the Constitution for over 200 years.

Now their latest gimmick is a button to tell themselves to stop raiding the Social Security Trust Fund. Instead of gimmicks in raiding the Social Security Trust Fund to pay for the emergency spending, American people ask for things that cost very little and would improve their lives, like a patients' bill of rights so they and their doctors can make their medical decisions and not the HMO; like an increase in the minimum wage so everyone can enjoy our strong economy; like 100,000 more teachers so we can have smaller class sizes; and prescription drug coverage for seniors.

Mr. Speaker, let us work for the American people. Unfortunately, under the Republican-led Congress, it is always the same old story. Tax breaks for the rich and a tax on Government. America wants a Congress that works for them, like Democrats are fighting for.

CONGRATULATING CESAR ''EDDY'' BLASS

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, this morning I am delighted to congratulate Mr. Cesar ''Eddy'' Blass, who will celebrate 15 years as president of the American Peruvian Action Committee, APAC–USA.

Eddy has won the attention of his community with his service which has enabled him to contribute to our South Florida community. He is a dedicated, tireless advocate for the plight of the Peruvian Americans in their long-sought goals of residency and eventual U.S. citizenship.

Through his actions, Eddy has become a leader in the fight to unify Peruvian Americans throughout the United States; and, as a result of his extensive community service, he has received a host of awards, certificates, and recognition.

This Saturday APAC will commemorate its 15th anniversary and honor its president and founder, Cesar ''Eddy'' Blass. He has been an inspiration to the lives of his fellow countrymen, as well as for our entire South Florida community.

In honor of his 15th anniversary as president of the American Peruvian Action Committee, I ask my colleagues to join me today in paying tribute to Cesar ''Eddy'' Blass.

AMERICANS DESERVE TO HAVE ISSUES THEY CARE ABOUT MOST ADDRESSED

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today because this Republican Congress is failing American families.

The gentleman from Illinois (Speaker HASTERT) originally promised that the Republican-controlled Congress would finish work on the budget nearly 2 months ago. Yet, they continue to sit here and waste our time with political stunts.

The American people have become used to a Republican Congress that is no longer just a ''do nothing'' Congress, but a ''do the wrong thing'' Congress.

Americans deserve a budget; they deserve to have the issues they care about most addressed. There is positive legislation that our constituents are asking us to bring to the House floor. We could be saving Social Security, building new schools, reducing classroom size. We could be increasing the minimum wage so that workers can provide for their families. We could be ensuring patients' rights and putting the care back into health care. Instead, we are mired down in partisan rhetoric and debate.

Mr. Speaker, the people of southeast Texas and I have been waiting for over 5 weeks for the Republicans to finish the budget, but we cannot wait much longer. They need to quit stalling and together let us get the people's business done.

EDUCATION SPENDING BILL

(Mr. SCHAFFER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, there are few issues in America more important than education. And in fact, the White House and Congress really do not disagree on the amount of money that we ought to spend on schools in this year's appropriations process. But what is holding up the debate is the question of how to spend those dollars.

The Republican party clearly believes that governors and State legislators, school board members, and principals and superintendents ought to be free to spend the dollars that we are appropriating as they see fit. But the President has a different idea. He wants to tell States specifically how they must spend the money.

In some States, hiring more teachers makes sense. In other States, it might not. But here is the President's answer to the question put by a reporter: ''Mr. President, on the issue of funding for teachers, sir, you resent it when Congress tells you to spend money in ways which you do not deem appropriate. Why should a state governor who would like to spend that money differently feel any differently?''

The President's answer: ''Well, because it's not their money.''

When you have an attitude like that in Washington that the taxpayers' money belongs to Washington and not the taxpayers, it explains how the White House is willing to squander the American tax dollars in a way that neglects children and abandons our schools.

SAY YES TO AGENDA FOR AMERICAN FAMILIES

(Mr. ALLEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, in response to the previous speaker, I sat yesterday with the superintendent of schools in the city of Portland and members of the school committee in Portland, Maine; and they do not want block grants. They want class size reduction above all else.

Mr. Speaker, this session is winding down and the Republican Congress has a sorry record. We have not done very much this session, and much of what we have done has been done wrong.

Many Democrats worked hard to pass campaign finance reform with the help of some Republicans here, but the leadership has killed it. Democrats tried to make our schools safer by passing modest gun safety laws, but Republicans said no. Democrats have worked to make health care safer for patients by passing a patients' bill of rights, but Republicans said no.

Democrats in this administration tried to make the world safer by ratifying the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty. Republicans said no. Democrats have been working hard to get prescription drug legislation passed, but Republicans in the Committee on Ways and Means the other day said no.

Next year let us say yes to an agenda for American families. Let us say yes and get this agenda enacted.

AMERICAN FAMILIES DESERVE BETTER

(Ms. DELAURO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, the Republican majority has failed to act on the basic issues facing hard-working Americans. The Republican leadership started the year by trying to spend the surplus on an $800 billion tax break for the wealthiest Americans, and they did this despite the fact that we need to strengthen and protect Social Security and Medicare. Their current plan fails to extend the life of Social Security by even one day. It neglects the need for a Medicare prescription drug benefit and hurts every American family in some way.

The Republican leadership stifles common sense gun safety measures like child safety locks and background checks at gun shows, despite the fact that 13 children are killed every single day by guns. The Republican leadership is siding with the gun lobby and letting gaping loopholes remain open.

This Congress should not leave town before its work is done.

The Republican leadership should listen to the public, enact sensible gun safety laws, strengthen Social Security and Medicare, pass a prescription drug benefit bill and a minimum wage bill. Our families deserve better.

RESPONSIBILITY IN EDUCATION

(Mr. HAYWORTH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, we have all heard of the three Rs when it comes to education. Let me add a fourth R: responsibility, because responsibility is the key. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States, responding to the press when it comes to judicious spending of educational dollars said, and I quote, ''Well, because it is not their money.''

Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States and my colleagues on the other side of the aisle ought to understand both the arithmetic and the responsibility. My liberal friends want the money to be controlled by the educational bureaucrats in Washington. We in the common sense, conservative majority say the money should be spent at home, first and foremost by teachers in the classrooms, by superintendents in the districts, and yes, by governors in the States, along with the respective superintendents of public education. Because while education is a national priority, it ultimately is a local concern.

Mr. Speaker, the President and my liberal friends should join with us to make sure that local control and responsibility is paramount.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SHOULD ALLOW MICROSOFT TO CONTINUE TO INNOVATE FOR AMERICANS

(Mr. INSLEE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I am calling on the United States Justice Department to put away any dream of breaking up Microsoft. Microsoft and its employees should not be punished for being one of the most creative, dynamic teams of people in American economic history.

Mr. Speaker, many of the people who work at Microsoft live in my district, and I can say with confidence that they are undaunted by this struggle, they are focused, and I am confident that their team will continue to bring new products to the American people.

Mr. Speaker, the American consumer has benefited amazingly by the innovation that is taking place in this industry. Computers are more powerful, software is more powerful, and more people have access to the Internet every day.

There is competition in this industry, and if my colleagues do not believe me, look at the stock market where millions are putting their hard-earned dollars investing in Microsoft's competitors, and that is fine. But, Mr. Speaker, consumers are enjoying the benefits of a vigorous electronic industry.

The Federal Government should put away any scheme to dismember the most creative, the most dynamic industry in the history of the world.

SQUEEZING A NICKEL OUT OF FIVE DOLLARS

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, if a schoolboy gives his favorite teacher an apple, she will probably take a small bite out of it, something like that, just modest.

Now, if the taxpayer, his parents send the same apple in the form of tax dollars to the Federal Government, this is what they deem as their fair share, and that is the debate we are in today.

What we are asking is that the Department of Education, just like all the other Federal agencies, get $5 and squeeze a nickel out of it.

Now, I am a father of four. I have two teenagers and two who still love me. We have to sit around the kitchen table every night to come up with ways to save money. Mr. Speaker, if we can buy our gas for $1.07 a gallon, we go two more blocks so we do not have to pay $1.10. I do not buy new suits until they are on sale, and my colleagues might be thinking, well, I hope there is a sale coming up soon.

I do not get a steak when I go out to eat; I get chicken, and we do not buy Special K unless we get the 35 cents off coupon.

All we are asking of the Department of Education and all of the Federal bureaucracies in Washington is to find that little old nickel out of the $5 so that we can save Social Security.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE 106TH CONGRESS

(Ms. BERKLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks and include therein extraneous material.)

Ms. BERKLEY. Mr. Speaker, when I came to Capitol Hill 10 months ago to represent my hometown of Las Vegas, I made a promise to fight for the fastest growing senior population in the country and for all of the working families like mine that have moved to Las Vegas in search of a better life.

There are two pieces of unfinished business that are critical to my district, a patients' bill of rights and the prescription drug coverage for southern Nevada citizens.

Over and over again I hear from my constituents, from working parents worried about health care coverage for their families, from seniors having to choose between buying food and buying medicine. They need help and they do not care about Washington politics. The patients' bill of rights is a bipartisan issue because everybody should be able to determine the best course of medical treatment and consultation with their own doctor. If HMOs make decisions like doctors, they should be held legally accountable like a doctor.

We need to enact a bill that protects the patients' bill of rights, not the HMO's bottom line. We need to pass a bill to ensure prescription drug coverage for seniors. We did a cost survey and found that uninsured seniors in my district pay two, three, or four times the price that insured seniors pay for some of the most common prescription drugs. These drugs keep them alive, but financially it is killing them.

I stand up for all of the seniors in my district.

MORE UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE 106TH CONGRESS

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I counted down the hours that we had remaining in this session, and I asked the question of what we could do for our young people in providing them safe schools. And I ask now the question with maybe less than 24 hours in this session, at least as we know it, whether or not this Congress is going to be known as having done good or having harmed the American people.

The question is, are we going to pass what the American people have asked us to, which is a patients' bill of rights, so that we can stop once and for all drive-by emergency rooms, so that we can give women the right to have their OB-GYN as their primary provider, so that we can have second opinions, so that we can reestablish the patient-physician relationship. While all of our loved ones are under the care of a physician, how tragic it is for them to have to call for a procedure and someone at a phone who does not even know who they are says no, you cannot have it.

We need a patients' bill of rights.

I did a study in my district, and how unfortunate it is that my seniors are having to pay light bills and having to pay rent, but cannot buy their prescriptions, of having to cut their prescriptions in half. What a tragedy. Yes, Mr. Speaker, is it not unfortunate that we do not have real gun safety in America when 80 percent of the American people say we want reasonable gun safety and we want our children to be safe in schools.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF THE 106TH CONGRESS

(Mr. DREIER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I am really stunned to listen to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle talk about the fact that the 106 Congress has not accomplished much of anything. I guess that is sort of their message today. So it is incumbent upon us to point out, once again, the great accomplishments that we have made in this Congress.

At the beginning, Speaker HASTERT stood right here on the opening day and talked about the need to improve public education. We have done that by passing the Education Flexibility Act so that local school districts can make decisions as to how to best educate their children. We passed the Teacher Empowerment Act, which also moves further in that direction.

Tax relief for working families. We did it; we did it. People are taxed more than they ever have been since the Second World War, and the President unfortunately vetoed that measure and the Democrats on the other side of the aisle voted against it. We said that we wanted to save Social Security and Medicare, and we all know that we have locked up the Social Security Trust Fund for the future, going well beyond the 62 percent that the President advocated when he stood here in his State of the Union message.

And rebuilding our Nation's defense capability. We passed the National Missile Defense bill, which is very, very important to our national security, and the Defense appropriations bill. We have accomplished a lot in this 106th Congress, and do not forget it.

GOP BUDGET GIMMICKS

(Mr. CROWLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, as the GOP leadership in Congress struggles to complete its appropriations work, now a full 40 days past the end of the fiscal year, I thought it fitting to examine their record of Social Security budget gimmicks this year. There simply are not enough apples in this city to demonstrate adequately what the Republican Party is doing here. They simply take apples from one basket and, before they put it in the other, they take a couple of bites out of it and then they turn the apple around so Americans cannot see what they have done to that apple.

Recently the Republican majority in this chamber has gone around stating they are the only ones able to protect and strengthen Social Security. How come they elected their leader, a person who pledged, and I quote, ''to bite the bullet and phase Social Security out over a period of time.'' The fact is, Republicans have a history of voting against Social Security. In 1935, only one Republican, Frank Crowther of my own State of New York, had the courage to buck his party and vote against a Republican motion to recommit Title II to strike out old age and unemployment insurance provisions. It would have effectively killed Social Security as we know it today. Only one out of 96 Republicans had the courage to vote in favor of Social Security.

Mr. Speaker, I ask all of my colleagues to continue to support the Social Security system as we know it today.

INVESTMENTS IN EDUCATION FOR OUR CHILDREN

(Mr. WU asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I was at home at the Verboort Sausage Festival this past weekend. It is a wonderful community event. I had the privilege of sitting next to Don and Lois Tayler. Lois Tayler's grandfather owned 100 acres on part of which Findley Elementary School now sits. As Oregon pioneers, the Findleys understood the value of education. And Don and Lois, who are schoolteachers now, know that that school has 900 kids in it, but it was built for 700.

This Congress has the ability to help with that situation, with school modernization and class size reduction, and we should not go home until we get those jobs done to keep faith with people like the Findleys, like the Taylers, and other Oregonians who made investments in their day for their children. We should be making similar investments in our day for our children.

IN THE FIELD OF EDUCATION, ONE SIZE DOES NOT FIT ALL, AND QUALITY MATTERS

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, not everyone likes pickles on their hamburgers. For many years that preference meant a longer wait at McDonald's, because if you did not want what was already under the heat lamp, they had to do a specialty order. All those burgers under the heat lamp had pickles on them. But you did get a fresher burger.

People who like pickles on their hamburgers, on the other hand, usually did not have to wait. In fact the burgers were already waiting for them, so they were less fresh and lower quality.

All that has been changing. McDonald's restaurants now prepare your meals when you order them. This means you get exactly what you want. It is a fresher, higher quality product.

There are two simple truths inspiring the McDonald's reform: First, one size does not fit all. Second, quality matters.

Let us apply these simple truths to education reform. Instead of mandating new teachers, let us give the States and local communities the opportunity to ensure higher teacher quality and to spend that money on what they know will work in their schools, because one size does not fit all, and quality does matter.

PAYMENT OF U.N. ARREARS

(Mrs. LOWEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, the United States has earned the reputation as the United Nations' number one deadbeat. If my colleagues want to help restore our good name and regain our influence in the U.N., they need to join me today in supporting immediate and full repayment of our U.N. arrears.

This funding is critical to United States' foreign policy. It shows the international community that a commitment made by the United States means something. It gives the U.N. the resources it needs to carry on the important work it is doing around the globe.

The United States has a tremendous amount of influence within the U.N., but that level of influence decreases with every day that we do not pay our arrears. In fact, at the end of this year, we face the prospect of losing our vote in the General Assembly.

How can we expect the U.N. to continue to take our interests into account around the world? How can we expect them to fund the projects we support and to send peacekeeping troops to areas where we want to see more stability when we do not contribute? How do we expect to help to continue to reform the U.N. in a meaningful way if we do not pay our debt? Let us pay our dues now.

EDUCATION

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, this week as we get down to the wire on budget negotiations, I rise to speak on behalf of education, our children, and the classroom as the priority in this country.

More teachers is a great idea. I applaud it. However, more teachers may not be the immediate or only need in some of our school districts. Some schools may need better teacher quality, they may need teacher training, teacher improvement. Some may need books and equipment, supplies. The list goes on.

The funding levels that we have been discussing are not at odds here. This is a question of who knows best, Washington bureaucrats, or local teachers and principals in the local public school classroom.

The President's goal may be noble enough, but his means of achieving it are flawed. Who can argue with the fact that local control is the best means by which we can truly support our schools? Let us empower our students, our teachers, with the tools that they need to take our kids to the next step of the learning process. Let us give our local schools more flexibility, more local control when we send this money back to the classroom.

MAKING IN ORDER AT ANY TIME CONSIDERATION OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1555, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2000

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at any time to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 1555) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2000 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes; that all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration be waived, that the conference report be considered as read when called up, and that House Resolution 364 be laid upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OSE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

WAIVING CERTAIN ENROLLMENT REQUIREMENTS FOR THE REMAINDER OF THE FIRST SESSION OF THE 106TH CONGRESS

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 76) waiving certain enrollment requirements for the remainder of the first session of the 106th Congress with respect to any bill or joint resolution making general appropriations or continuing appropriations for fiscal year 2000, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) to explain to the House why we are considering this matter at this time.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from New York, for yielding.

I think all of my colleagues know that U.S. Code requires engrossed bills that passed both Houses to be printed on parchment in a manner determined by the Joint Committee on Printing. For large bills such as the appropriation measures that are still under debate and discussion, this requires many additional hours of time that may in fact be saved and allow us to complete our work sooner if this statute is set aside on a temporary basis.

As most of my colleagues know, this is typically done at the end of every session of Congress, and we can in fact finish our work in a more timely manner and deliver these bills more quickly to the White House for their signature.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 76

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of sections 106 and 107 of title 1, United States Code, are waived for the remainder of the first session of the One Hundred Sixth Congress with respect to the printing (on parchment or otherwise) of the enrollment of any bill or joint resolution making general appropriations or continuing appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2000. The enrollment of any such bill or joint resolution shall be in such form as the Committee on House Administration of the House of Representatives certifies to be a true enrollment.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, House Resolution 365 is laid on the table

There was no objection.

RECOGNIZING AND HONORING THE HEROIC EFFORTS OF THE AIR NATIONAL GUARD'S 109TH AIRLIFT WING AND ITS RESCUE OF DR. JERRI NIELSEN FROM THE SOUTH POLE

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be discharged from further consideration of the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 205) recognizing and honoring the heroic efforts of the Air National Guard's 109th Airlift Wing and its rescue of Dr. Jerri Nielsen from the South Pole, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, I rise simply to commend my colleague the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) for bringing my resolution to the floor, and to speak for a moment about its merits.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Jerri Nielsen was stationed at the South Pole during this past Antarctic winter, and by virtue of self-examination discovered a lump in her breast. She performed a biopsy. She concluded that she had breast cancer. She administered chemotherapy and tried as best she could to endure the Antarctic winter until a plane could come and rescue her and give her more comprehensive medical treatment.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to point out the heroism of those who went to rescue Dr. Nielsen. They are the members of the Air National Guard's 109th Airlift Wing, which is located in my congressional district in Glenville, New York. This mission departed the Samuel S. Stratton Air National Guard Base on October 6th, arrived at the South Pole on October 15th, traveled 11,410 nautical miles, and was led by Major George McAllister, Jr.

Mr. Speaker, this trip was historic in that Major McAllister and his crew became the first persons ever to land at the South Pole so soon after an antarctic winter. I know a little bit about the dangers faced by the members of the 109th, Mr. Speaker, because I have traveled with them both to the North Pole and to the South Pole. Of course, when I went with them, it was in the middle of the Antarctic summer, which is our winter. So when I was there in January of 1994 it was a balmy 40 degrees below zero. But in the Antarctic winter, the record low temperature is 128 degrees below zero. A complex piece of machinery like a C–130 cannot operate in that kind of temperature.

But Major McAllister and his crew went in as soon as possible, rescued Dr. Nielsen, and Dr. Nielsen is now receiving the treatment that she needs.

So on this particular occasion, I want to thank my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) for allowing us to consider this resolution, and I would like, Mr. Speaker, just to mention the names of those who comprised that lifesaving crew.

They are Pilot Major George R. McAllister, Jr.; Senior Mission Commander Colonel Marion G. Pritchard; Co-pilot Major David Koltermann; Navigator Lieutenant Colonel Brian M. Fennessy; Engineer Chief Master Sergeant Michael T. Cristiano; Loadmasters, Senior Master Sergeant Kurt A. Garrison and Technical Sergeant David M. Vesper; Flight Nurse Major Kimberly Terpening; and Medical Technicians Chief Master Sergeant Michael Casatelli and Master Sergeant Kelly McDowell.

Mr. Speaker, I thank all of my colleagues for this opportunity to salute these true American heroes, and I urge all of my colleagues to support this joint resolution.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCNULTY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCNULTY), for bringing this resolution.

As a former member of the New York Air National Guard, I have had an opportunity to look at our airlift units across the State. Time and time again they have been called for emergency or war, and have served gallantly, taking on the responsibilities that have been assigned them.

As the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCNULTY) has indicated, this has been a very difficult mission to rescue Dr. Nielsen, who is a native of New York, in the aspect of bringing her back from the South Pole. Those who followed this as the mission was planned and then executed, and the history of it after it was completed, clearly saw the risk and danger that the men and women found themselves in as they were deployed to the South Pole in such tough winter conditions.

As a matter of fact, the mission was postponed for months until the weather was at a point they could land on the South Pole.

So to the 109th Airlift Wing, our congratulations, and to our colleague for bringing it forward.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 205

Whereas the 109th Airlift Wing of the Air National Guard is based at Stratton Air National Guard Base in Glenville, New York;

Whereas the 109th was called upon by the United States Antarctic Program to undertake a medical evacuation mission to the South Pole to rescue Dr. Jerri Nielsen, a physician who diagnosed herself with breast cancer;

Whereas the 109th is the only unit in the world trained and equipped to attempt such a mission;

Whereas the 10 crew members were pilot Maj. George R. McAllister Jr., senior mission commander Col. Marion G. Pritchard, co-pilot Maj. David Koltermann, navigator Lt. Col. Bryan M. Fennessy, engineer Ch. M. Sgt. Michael T. Cristiano, loadmasters Sr. M. Sgt. Kurt A. Garrison and T. Sgt. David M. Vesper, flight nurse Maj. Kimberly Terpening, and medical technicians Ch. M. Sgt. Michael Casatelli and M. Sgt. Kelly McDowell;

Whereas the crew departed Stratton Air Base for McMurdo Station in Antarctica via Christchurch, New Zealand, on October 6, 1999;

Whereas on October 15, 1999, Aircraft No. 096 departed McMurdo for the South Pole, where the temperature was approximately −53 degrees Celsius;

Whereas Major McAllister piloted a 130,000 pound LC–130 Hercules cargo plane equipped with Teflon-coated skis to a safe landing on an icy runway with visibility barely above minimums established for safe operations;

Whereas less than 25 minutes later, following an emotional goodbye and brief medical evaluation, Dr. Nielsen and the crew headed back to McMurdo Station;

Whereas the mission lasted 9 days and covered 11,410 nautical miles; and

Whereas Major McAllister became the first person ever to land on a polar ice cap at this time of year: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That Congress recognizes and honors the crew of the Air National Guard's 109th Airlift Wing for its heroic efforts in rescuing Dr. Jerri Nielsen from the South Pole.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on a postponed question will be taken after debate has concluded on all motions to suspend the rules.

ELIM NATIVE CORPORATION LAND RESTORATION ACT

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3090) to amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act to restore certain lands to the Elim Native Corporation, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3090

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ELIM NATIVE CORPORATION LAND RESTORATION.

Section 19 of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1618) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(c)(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

''(A) approximately 350,000 acres of land were withdrawn by Executive Orders in 1917 for the use of the United States Bureau of Education and of the Natives of Indigenous Alaskan race;

''(B) these lands comprised the Norton Bay Reservation (later referred to as Norton Bay Native Reserve) and were set aside for the benefit of the Native inhabitants of the Eskimo Village of Elim, Alaska;

''(C) in 1929, 50,000 acres of land were deleted from the Norton Bay Reservation by Executive Order.

''(D) the lands were deleted from the Reservation for the benefit of others;

''(E) the deleted lands were not available to the Native inhabitants of Elim under subsection (b) of this section at the time of passage of this Act;

''(F) the deletion of these lands has been and continues to be a source of deep concern to the indigenous people of Elim; and

''(G) until this matter is dealt with, it will continue to be a source of great frustration and sense of loss among the shareholders of the Elim Native Corporation and their descendants.

''(2) WITHDRAWAL.—The lands depicted and designated 'Withdrawal Area' on the map dated October 19, 1999, along with their legal descriptions, on file with the Bureau of Land Management, and entitled 'Land Withdrawal Elim Native Corporation', are hereby withdrawn, subject to valid existing rights, from all forms of appropriation or disposition under the public land laws, including the mining and mineral leasing laws, for a period of 2 years from the date of enactment of this subsection, for selection by the Elim Native Corporation (hereinafter referred to as 'Elim').

''(3) AUTHORITY TO SELECT AND CONVEY.—Elim is authorized to select in accordance with the rules set out in this paragraph, 50,000 acres of land (hereinafter referred to as 'Conveyance Lands') within the boundary of the Withdrawal Area described in paragraph (2). The Secretary is authorized and directed to convey to Elim in fee the surface and subsurface estates to 50,000 acres of valid selections in the Withdrawal Area, subject to the covenants, reservations, terms and conditions and other provisions of this subsection.

''(A) Elim shall have 2 years from the date of the enactment of this subsection in which to file its selection of no more than 60,000 acres of land from the area described in paragraph (2). The selection application shall be filed with the Bureau of Land Management, Alaska State Office, shall describe a single tract adjacent to U.S. Survey No. 2548, Alaska, and shall be reasonably compact, contiguous, and in whole sections except when separated by unavailable land or when the remaining entitlement is less than a whole section. Elim shall prioritize its selections made pursuant to this subsection at the time such selections are filed, and such prioritization shall be irrevocable. Any lands selected shall remain withdrawn until conveyed or full entitlement has been achieved.

''(B) The selection filed by Elim pursuant to this subsection shall be subject to valid existing rights and may not supercede prior selections of the State of Alaska, any Native corporation, or valid entries of any private individual unless such selection or entry is relinquished, rejected, or abandoned prior to conveyance to Elim.

''(C) Upon receipt of the Conveyance Lands, Elim shall have all legal rights and privileges as landowner, subject only to the covenants, reservations, terms and conditions specified in this subsection.

''(D) Selection by Elim of lands under this subsection and final conveyance of those lands to Elim shall constitute full satisfaction of any claim of entitlement of Elim with respect to its land entitlement.

''(4) COVENANTS, RESERVATIONS, TERMS, AND CONDITIONS.—The covenants, reservations, terms and conditions set forth in this paragraph and in paragraphs (5) and (6) with respect to the Conveyance Lands shall run with the land and shall be incorporated into the interim conveyance, if any, and patent conveying the lands to Elim.

''(A) Consistent with paragraph (3)(C) and subject to the applicable covenants, reservations, terms, and conditions contained in this paragraph and paragraphs (5) and (6), Elim shall have all rights to the timber resources of the Conveyance Lands for any use including, but not limited to, construction of homes, cabins, for firewood and other domestic uses on any Elim lands: Provided, That cutting and removal of Merchantable Timber from the Conveyance Lands for sale shall not be permitted: Provided further, That Elim shall not construct roads and related infrastructure for the support of such cutting and removal of timber for sale or permit others to do so. 'Merchantable Timber' means timber that can be harvested and marketed by a prudent operator.

''(B) Public Land Order 5563 of December 16, 1975, which made hot or medicinal springs available to other Native Corporations for selection and conveyance, is hereby modified to the extent necessary to permit the selection by Elim of the lands heretofore encompassed in any withdrawal of hot or medicinal springs and is withdrawn pursuant to this subsection. The Secretary is authorized and directed to convey such selections of hot or medicinal springs (hereinafter referred to as 'hot springs') subject to applicable covenants, reservations, terms and conditions contained in paragraphs (5) and (6).

''(C) Should Elim select and have conveyed to it lands encompassing portions of the Tubutulik River or Clear Creek, or both, Elim shall not permit surface occupancy or knowingly permit any other activity on those portions of land lying within the bed of or within 300 feet of the ordinary high waterline of either or both of these water courses for purposes associated with mineral or other development or activity if they would cause or are likely to cause erosion or siltation of either water course to an extent that would significantly adversely impact water quality or fish habitat.

''(5) RIGHTS RETAINED BY THE U.S.—With respect to conveyances authorized in paragraph (3), the following rights are retained by the United States:

''(A) To enter upon the conveyance lands, after providing reasonable advance notice in writing to Elim and after providing Elim with an opportunity to have a representative present upon such entry, in order to achieve the purpose and enforce the terms of this paragraph and paragraphs (4) and (6).

''(B) To have, in addition to such rights held by Elim, all rights and remedies available against persons, jointly or severally, who cut or remove Merchantable Timber for sale.

''(C) In cooperation with Elim, the right, but not the obligation, to reforest in the event previously existing Merchantable Timber is destroyed by fire, wind, insects, disease, or other similar manmade or natural occurrence (excluding manmade occurrences resulting from the exercise by Elim of its lawful rights to use the Conveyance Lands).

''(D) The right of ingress and egress over easements under section 17(b) for the public to visit, for noncommercial purposes, hot springs located on the Conveyance Lands and to use any part of the hot springs that is not commercially developed.

''(E) The right to enter upon the lands containing hot springs for the purpose of conducting scientific research on such hot springs and to use the results of such research without compensation to Elim. Elim shall have an equal right to conduct research on the hot springs and to use the results of such research without compensation to the United States.

''(F) A covenant that commercial development of the hot springs by Elim or its successors, assigns, or grantees shall include the right to develop only a maximum of 15 percent of the hot springs and any land within 1/4 mile of the hot springs. Such commercial development shall not alter the natural hydrologic or thermal system associated with the hot springs. Not less than 85 percent of the lands within 1/4 mile of the hot springs shall be left in their natural state.

''(G) The right to exercise prosecutorial discretion in the enforcement of any covenant, reservation, term or condition shall not waive the right to enforce any covenant, reservation, term or condition.

''(6) GENERAL.—

''(A) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—The Secretary and Elim shall, acting in good faith, enter into a Memorandum of Understanding (hereinafter referred to as the 'MOU') to implement the provisions of this subsection. The MOU shall include among its provisions reasonable measures to protect plants and animals in the hot springs on the Conveyance Lands and on the land within ¼ mile of the hot springs. The parties shall agree to meet periodically to review the matters contained in the MOU and to exercise their right to amend, replace, or extend the MOU. Such reviews shall include the authority to relocate any of the easements set forth in subparagraph (D) if the parties deem it advisable.

''(B) INCORPORATION OF TERMS.—Elim shall incorporate the covenants, reservations, terms and conditions, in this subsection in any deed or other legal instrument by which it divests itself of any interest in all or a portion of the Conveyance Lands, including without limitation, a leasehold interest.

''(C) SECTION 17(b) EASEMENTS.—The Bureau of Land Management, in consultation with Elim, shall reserve in the conveyance to Elim easements to the United States pursuant to subsection 17(b) that are not in conflict with other easements specified in this paragraph.

''(D) OTHER EASEMENTS.—The Bureau of Land Management, in consultation with Elim, shall reserve easements which shall include the right of the public to enter upon and travel along the Tubutulik River and Clear Creek within the Conveyance Lands. Such easements shall also include easements for trails confined to foot travel along, and which may be established along each bank of, the Tubutulik River and Clear Creek. Such trails shall be 25 feet wide and upland of the ordinary high waterline of the water courses. The trails may deviate from the banks as necessary to go around man-made or natural obstructions or to portage around hazardous stretches of water. The easements shall also include one-acre sites along the water courses at reasonable intervals, selected in consultation with Elim, which may be used to launch or take out water craft from the water courses and to camp in nonpermanent structures for a period not to exceed 24 hours without the consent of Elim.

''(E) INHOLDERS.—The owners of lands held within the exterior boundaries of lands conveyed to Elim shall have all rights of ingress and egress to be vested in the inholder and the inholder's agents, employees, co-venturers, licensees, subsequent grantees, or invitees, and such easements shall be reserved in the conveyance to Elim. The inholder may not exercise the right of ingress and egress in a manner that may result in substantial damage to the surface of the lands or make any permanent improvements on Conveyance Lands without the prior consent of Elim.

''(F) IDITAROD TRAIL.—The Bureau of Land Management may reserve an easement for the Iditarod National Historic Trail in the conveyance to Elim.

''(7) IMPLEMENTATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to implement this subsection.''.

SEC. 2. COMMON STOCK TO ADOPTED-OUT DESCENDANTS.

Section 7(h)(1)(C)(iii) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1606(h)(1)(C)(iii)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: '', notwithstanding an adoption, relinquishment, or termination of parental rights that may have altered or severed the legal relationship between the gift donor and recipient''.

SEC. 3. DEFINITION OF SETTLEMENT TRUST.

Section 3(t)(2) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602(t)(2)) is amended by striking ''sole'' and all that follows through ''Stock'' and inserting ''benefit of shareholders, Natives, and descendants of Natives,''.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3090.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alaska?

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3090 is a bill that I introduced in consultation with the Alaska Federation of Natives and ongoing negotiations and redrafts with the Department of the Interior and the Elim Native Corporation.

Considerable time has been spent to resolve the Elim land provision, and I want to especially thank Cindy Alona, Marilyn Heiman, Paul Kirton, Kim Harb, and Chip Markell of the Department of the Interior, Roy Jones and Jeff Petrich, minority chief counsel and committee staff, for their commitment to resolve this important land issue for the Elim Native Corporation.

H.R. 3090 will authorize the Elim Native Corporation, a village corporation established under section 19(b) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, to select and have conveyed to it 50,000 acres of Federal land in an area north of the former Norton Bay Reservation.

This acreage will replace 50,000 acres deleted from the reservation in 1929 by executive order from the reservation established for the benefit and use of the people whose descendents are today the shareholders of the Native Village Corporation. This bill would also amend ANCSA to permit shareholder common stock to be transferred to adopted-out native children and descendents.

□ 1045

The last provision of the bill would amend the definition of ''settlement trust'' under ANCSA to permit Native Corporations to establish settlement trusts in which potential beneficiaries include shareholders, Natives and the descendants of Natives. Because ANCSA was enacted to benefit all Natives, this amendment is in keeping with that original intent of that legislation.

At the same time, the interests of the Alaska Native Corporation shareholders are protected because this option is available only to those corporations whose shareholders vote, by a majority of all outstanding voting shares, to benefit nonshareholders.

Mr. Speaker, I also wanted to voice the support of the State of Alaska for this bill. The State of Alaska could not submit anything in writing; however, have verbally supported this important bill for the people of Alaska.

The Coastal Coalition, a conservation group in Alaska, and Donald C. Mitchell, a noted ANCSA attorney, have both submitted letters in support of the bill. As my colleagues can see, we have a wide range of support for passage of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the passage of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this important legislation. It is long past time to right a wrong done 70 years ago. I am particularly pleased that we in this Congress can act to do that.

I have a longer statement which I would like entered in the RECORD, and I would just reflect in closing that it is always a good day when we can act to undo the wrongs done by a Republican President.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill. While Congress generally should be very cautious when amending the 1971 Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act to change land allocations, in the case of Elim Native Corporation there are unique circumstances and special equities which justify this legislation.

Without the knowledge or consent of the Eskimo village of Elim, President Hoover deleted 50,000 acres from the Norton Bay Reservation in 1929. Although the 1971 Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act provided for the conveyance of 300,000 acres to Elim Native Corporation, reflecting the boundaries of the Norton Bay Reservation as it existed at that time, the residents of Elim have long been seeking to have the deleted lands restored.

While the Department of the Interior has maintained that Elim does not have a legal entitlement to the additional 50,000 acres, it is my understanding that they, along with the State of Alaska, are now prepared to support this legislation as a matter of equity.

And there does appear to be substantial equities in this case. According to Don Mitchell, a historian and former counsel to the Alaska Federation of Natives, the deletion of 50,000 acres from the Norton Bay Reservation is ''one of the most grievous cases of social and economic injustice'' in Alaska history.

Because the original reservation lands are no longer available for selection, the bill provides for an alternative conveyance of 50,000 acres which are adjacent to the corporation's existing lands. As amended, the bill incorporates language which has been negotiated with the Department of the Interior and includes important conservation safeguards such as easements for public access, restrictions on commercial timber harvest, and nondevelopment buffers on river corridors.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss without recognizing the crucial role of Representative DON YOUNG in developing this legislation. The villagers of Elim have a strong champion as the Chairman of the Committee on Resources and without his dedication to their cause we would not be here on the House floor today.

I urge that my colleagues support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOBSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3090, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AQUATIC RESOURCES RESTORATION IN THE NORTHWEST AND CALIFORNIA

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1444) to authorize the Secretary of the Army to develop and implement projects for fish screens, fish passage devices, and other similar measures to mitigate adverse impacts associated with irrigation system water diversions by local governmental entities in the States of Oregon, Washington, Montana, and Idaho, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1444

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AQUATIC RESOURCES RESTORATION IN THE NORTHWEST AND IN CALIFORNIA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In cooperation with other Federal agencies, the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service and in consultation with the Bureau of Reclamation, may develop and implement projects for fish screens, fish passage devices, and related features agreed to by non-Federal interests, relevant Federal agencies, and affected States to mitigate adverse impacts to fisheries resulting from the construction and operation of water diversions by local governmental entities in the States of Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho, and California. Priority shall be given to any project that has a total cost of less than $2,500,000.

(b) GOALS.—The goals of the program under subsection (a) shall be—

(1) to decrease the incidence of juvenile and adult fish entering water supply systems; and

(2) to decrease fish mortality associated with the withdrawal of water for irrigation and other purposes without impairing the continued withdrawal of water for that purpose.

(c) PARTICIPATION BY NON-FEDERAL ENTITIES.—Non-Federal participation in the program under subsection (a) shall be voluntary. The Secretary shall take no action that would result in any non-Federal entity being held financially responsible for any action unless the entity applies to participate in the program.

(d) EVALUATION AND PRIORITIZATION OF PROJECTS.—Evaluation and prioritization of projects for development and implementation under this section shall be conducted on the basis of—

(1) assisting entities in their compliance with the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.);

(2) cost effectiveness;

(3) size of diversion;

(4) availability of other funding sources; and

(5) opportunity for biological benefit to be achieved with improved conditions.

(e) REQUIREMENTS.—A fish screen, fish passage device, or related feature shall not be eligible for funding under subsection (a) unless—

(1) it meets the requirements of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service or the National Marine Fisheries Service, as applicable, and any State requirements; and

(2) it is agreed to by all interested Federal and non-Federal entities.

(f) COST SHARING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—(A) Development and implementation of projects under this section on lands owned by the United States shall be at full Federal expense.

(B) The non-Federal share of the cost of development and implementation of any project under this section on lands that are not owned by the United States shall be 35 percent.

(2) IN-KIND CONTRIBUTIONS.—(A) For any project under this section on lands that are not owned by the United States, the non-Federal participants shall provide any lands, easements, rights-of-way, dredged material disposal areas, and relocations that are necessary for the project.

(B) The value of lands, easements, rights-of-way, dredged material disposal areas, and relocations provided under this paragraph for a project shall be credited toward the non-Federal share of the costs of the project under paragraph (1).

(3) OMRR&R.—(A) The non-Federal interests shall be responsible for all costs associated with operating, maintaining, repairing, rehabilitating, and replacing all projects carried out under this section on lands that are not owned by the United States.

(B) Costs associated with operating, maintaining, repairing, rehabilitating, and replacing all projects carried out under this section on lands owned by the United States shall be a Federal expense.

(g) CONSULTATION AND USE OF EXISTING DATA AND STUDIES.—In carrying out this section, the Secretary shall consult with other Federal, State, and local agencies and make maximum use of data and studies in existence on the date of enactment of this Act.

(h) LIMITATION ON ELIGIBILITY FOR FUNDING.—No project applicant pursuant to this section may obtain funds under this section if they are also receiving funds from another federally funded program for the same purpose.

(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $25,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—(A) Not more than ⅓ of the total amount of funds appropriated under this section may be used for projects in any single State.

(B) Not more than 6 percent of the amount of funds appropriated under this section for a fiscal year may be used for administration of this section.

(3) INTERIM REPORT.—Upon the expiration of the 3d fiscal year for which amounts are available to carry out this section, the Secretary of the Interior shall report to the Congress describing the accomplishments to date under this section and the projects that will be completed with amounts provided under this section for the 4th and 5th fiscal years for which such amounts are available.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON) and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1444, and to include extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1444, as amended by the Committee on Resources, will authorize the Secretary of Interior, working through the Fish and Wildlife Service and in consultation with the Bureau of Reclamation, to implement projects to construct fish screens, fish passage devices and other related measures to mitigate the effects of water diversions caused by irrigation systems.

The bill was introduced by my good friend, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WALDEN), both of whom are going to speak and explain the legislation. But I would like to commend them both for the hard work that they have put into this effort. Without them, surely the bill would not be here on the floor today.

Mr. Speaker, State and Federal law currently require the installation of fish screens on many irrigation diversions for agriculture to protect migrating juvenile salmon. While the Federal and State agencies responsible for managing the Columbia River system have worked diligently to install fish screens and fish passage devices, more work is urgently needed.

H.R. 1444 would allow State and Federal agencies to continue installing fish screens and fish passage devices. Furthermore, the Secretary will be required to consult with other Federal, State, and local agencies to make maximum use of data and studies in existence on the date of enactment of this act.

I believe this bill will help protect the salmon resources of the Pacific Northwest while allowing the agriculture industry to continue its operations. This is a noncontroversial bill and I hope everyone will support it.

Mr. Speaker, before I reserve the balance of my time, let me just make note that Marcia Stewart, who is here with us today, legislative assistant to the chief counsel, has done yeoman's work on this bill and has been a great help to all of us over the last several years since she has been with us. She came to us 6 years ago in 1993, and has been extremely successful. As a matter of fact, the last bill that she staffed for us here on the floor passed 412 to 0. So, Mr. Speaker, we are pleased that she has been with us and such a productive member of our staff and we will certainly miss her.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does have strong bipartisan support in both the House and the Senate. And shortly, we will hear from the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WALDEN), my colleague. He and I are the original cosponsors of this legislation in the House.

H.R. 1444 would set up a fish screen construction program for irrigation projects in Idaho, Washington, Montana, Oregon, and California.

This is a bill that is good news for salmon, other fish species which are on the verge of being endangered or threatened, and good news for local economies, for farmers, and good news for the Federal taxpayers.

It requires a local match share of 35 percent. But with the Federal Government investing these funds in the fish screens, ultimately we may avoid the endangerment of numerous species of fish and help promote the recovery of salmon. Today, many of these irrigation diversions are unscreened and salmon smolts do not do too well when they are pulled out of the main stem of the Columbia or one of its tributaries and deposited into an irrigation ditch or an irrigation project which does not return directly to the river or the tributary.

Mr. Speaker, this simple step will prevent that in the future. We should be screening all the diversions on fish-bearing rivers in the Northwest and into California because we are investing hundreds of millions, ultimately billions of dollars elsewhere to help recover these species. But for the lack of a few dollars being spent at each of these diversions on both Federal lands and private lands, many of those dollars are not being spent as effectively as they could.

So, this legislation is a win/win for both the fish and the farmers and the taxpayers, and I recommend it to my colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Hood River, Oregon (Mr. WALDEN).

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, it is sure nice to stand here today and recognize that we have built a partnership that will actually get things done, and I want to commend the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO), my colleague, for his work on this legislation and thank him for his involvement in this.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1444, a bill that will help protect the threatened and endangered salmon stocks on the West Coast while assisting the farmers who are voluntarily seeking measures to protect these stocks, albeit at great financial cost.

Under H.R. 1444, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service and the Bureau of Reclamation would be allowed to develop and implement projects for fish screens, fish passage devices, and other facilities in the States of Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho and California. These fish screens would prevent juvenile and adult salmon from passing through irrigation diversions and gaining access to ditches and water intake devices.

Mr. Speaker, presently, irrigation districts throughout the West are being mandated to comply with the Endangered Species Act. In order to comply with the ESA and other regulations, irrigation districts are required to construct these sophisticated devices to prevent salmon and other fish from gaining access to their ditches. The construction of these devices come at great expense to the farmers, without any return on their capital costs.

Under H.R. 1444, farmers would be allowed to enter into voluntary agreements with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service or the Bureau of Reclamation to share the costs of construction of these fish screen devices. Privately held lands and irrigation districts would have to put up 35 percent of the cost with the government paying the remainder.

The farmers in my district, including those belonging to the Lower Valley Ditch District in Wallowa County and Talent Irrigation District in Jackson County say this is exactly the type of assistance they need to help them be able to protect these salmon and other fish in the rivers and streams.

They are not looking for a way to avoid ESA; they are merely looking for an affordable way to provide the systems to help prevent the loss of fish.

This cost-share program gives our farmers in the West some assistance in building these environmentally friendly fish screening devices, while simultaneously easing the burden of taking affirmative, proactive actions. It is a win/win proposal for the fish and the farmers.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support passage of H.R. 1444, the DeFazio-Walden fish screen bill.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WALDEN) for his assistance in drafting and moving this bill through the House. As he pointed out, the need is great. In fact, numbers I have seen estimate that we could spend more than twice the amount of money allocated for these five states in Oregon alone to take care of this problem. So this is not an ultimate solution, but it is a down payment and something that will help us move along in protecting these fish in the Pacific Northwest and in northern California.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMPSON).

Mr. THOMPSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) for yielding me this time. He has been on the forefront leading this effort to help the salmon fisheries throughout the entire Pacific Northwest, and for that I am greatly appreciative.

Mr. Speaker, virtually every salmon stock in northern California has been added to the endangered species list. State and Federal regulations have cut fishing effort to an all-time low and this has had a devastating impact on the area that I represent in California, not just for the sport and the commercial fisheries, but for virtually every industry or every community of interest that has to operate in that part of these great United States.

Mr. Speaker, we need to do everything that we possibly can to help bring back the salmon stocks in the Pacific Northwest, and my district is no different. This is one very important step to be able to provide help for screening in regard to water diversions. It is going to help a great deal. It is not only going to help the coastal area that I represent, but the inland area as well.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) and ask all of my colleagues to vote in support of this measure.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMPSON). He has been a real force in helping to move this legislation forward, and particularly in making certain that his State and his district are included within the scope of the legislation. Without his perseverance, that would not have happened.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to thank a few staff who helped with the issue. Although this would seem kind of like a no-brainer since it is good for fish, the farmers, the economy and the Federal taxpayers, it was not easy working with the numerous agencies of jurisdiction and potential jurisdiction, and it took a while to wend our way through this maze. So Cynthia Suchman, Ben Grumbles, Bob Faber, Steve Lanich, and Kathie Eastman of my staff were all key with helping move this bill forward.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SAXTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 1444, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: ''A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to plan, design, and construct fish screens, fish passage devices, and related features to mitigate adverse impacts associated with irrigation system water diversions by local governmental entities in the States of Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho, and California.''.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMEMORATING THE ''I HAVE A DREAM'' SPEECH AT THE LINCOLN MEMORIAL

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2879) to provide for the placement at the Lincoln Memorial of a plaque commemorating the speech of Martin Luther King, Jr., known as the ''I Have A Dream'' speech.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2879

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ADDITION OF PLAQUE AT LINCOLN MEMORIAL COMMEMORATING MARTIN LUTHER KING, JUNIOR'S, I HAVE A DREAM SPEECH.

(a) PLACEMENT OF PLAQUE.—The Secretary of the Interior shall insert on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial in the District of Columbia a suitable plaque to commemorate the speech of Martin Luther King, Jr., known as the ''I Have A Dream'' speech. The plaque shall be placed at the location on the steps where Martin Luther King, Jr., delivered the speech on August 28, 1963.

(b) ACCEPTANCE OF CONTRIBUTIONS.—The Secretary of the Interior may accept contributions to help defray the cost of preparing the plaque and inserting the plaque on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial as required by subsection (a). Amounts received shall be credited to the appropriation supporting the maintenance and operation of the Lincoln Memorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOBSON). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) and the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN).

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2879, introduced by the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP).

H.R. 2879 would provide for the placement at the Lincoln Memorial of a plaque commemorating the speech of Martin Luther King, Jr., known as the ''I Have A Dream'' speech. The plaque would be placed in an appropriate location on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial where Dr. King delivered his famous civil rights speech on August 28, 1963.

This bill also directs the Secretary of the Interior to accept contributions to help offset any costs associated with the preparation and placement of the plaque.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill and has bipartisan support. I urge all my colleagues to support H.R. 2879.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2879 directs the Secretary of the Interior to insert on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial a plaque, a plaque that would commemorate the speech of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., known as the ''I Have A Dream'' speech.

Several years ago, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), who was present and was one of the speakers that famous day in 1963 along with Dr. King, was instrumental in a campaign by school children and others in establishing a permanent exhibit at the Lincoln Memorial commemorating the important civil rights events, including the ''I Have A Dream'' speech that occurred at the Memorial.

It is our understanding that H.R. 2879 is noncontroversial and that it is consistent with what has been done previously at the Memorial to commemorate similar events.

I strongly support passage of this legislation and this permanent commemoration of that historic speech in American history.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP), the author of this legislation.

Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Speaker, all of us are touched each year as we see how many Americans, particularly school children, come to Washington to, not just view the buildings, but to be inspired by our history and be inspired to become leaders themselves.

They move around this city, they come to this Capitol, they come to our memorials, and they are reminded as they stand in the places that previous leaders have stood, as they understand what role those leaders had in the history of this country.

I had a constituent that came to Washington in 1997, and he wrote me the most moving letter, and I would like to read a couple of paragraphs from that letter.

He said, ''My wife and I walked to the Lincoln Memorial where, at the steps of the Memorial to one of our Nation's greatest Presidents, Martin Luther King delivered the 'I Have A Dream' speech.

''I looked for the spot on which Martin Luther King stood when he spoke. I looked for a marker to remind me and others for a single moment on a hot August day, a descendant of a slave held the most prominent space in our Nation and delivered words that will always stay with that space. I could not find a marker or the words on that step.''

Later in his letter, he said that ''I saw a day when I would bring my yet unborn children to the spot where Martin Luther King spoke, and I could show them that marker and read them the words of his dream. I could tell them that this is still a Nation where a simple Kentucky farmer could rise to the heights of President, and the son of a slave could inspire future generations with the power of his words and his compassion.''

Mr. Speaker, it is hard to imagine that school children and Americans from all over this country could come and walk in this most important spot in this Capital, see where our leaders have changed the course of this country's history, and not have a recognition that, on that spot, on those steps was a place where Dr. Martin Luther King gave his ''I Had A Dream'' speech.

For many of these children, it might be the first time that they ever really would be called to understand what ''that place in history'' meant.

But for those of us that can remember the changes that went on between 1960 and 1965 and the role that Dr. Martin Luther King had in calling us forward to change the laws of this country and the practices that separated us so badly, it is important that all Americans recognize that spot and that leader and the difference that he made in this country.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no other requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Oregon for yielding me this time. I want to thank the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) for bringing this legislation along with the gentleman from Oregon before us.

It is fitting and appropriate that a plaque be placed near the statue of Lincoln near the Lincoln Memorial in honor of the speech ''I Have A Dream'' by Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. That speech was delivered on August 28, 1963, on a very hot summer day.

On that day, Martin Luther King, Jr., spoke from his soul. He spoke from his heart. He said, ''I have a dream that is deeply rooted in an American dream.'' I was there that day, 23 years old. When Martin Luther King, Jr., stood to speak, he was not just speaking for himself, he was speaking for all Americans, not just for those of us 36 years ago now, but he was speaking for ongoing generations.

So this plaque, ''I Have A Dream'' plaque, would inspire generations yet unborn, inspire young children, would help make us one Nation, one people, one family, the American family, the American community.

It is my hope that all of our colleagues would join in together and support this little piece of legislation, that it would serve as a footnote, but more than a footnote, it would serve as a page in the history of our long struggle toward creating a sense of community, the beloved community.

Mr. Speaker, I again want to thank these two wonderful men for bringing this legislation before us today.

Mrs. NORTHUP. Mr. Speaker, along with my earlier comments on the need for passage of H.R. 2879, I submit for the RECORD the letter I received from Thomas Williams who came up with the idea for the need of a marker on the Lincoln Memorial to commemorate the ''I have a Dream'' speech of Martin Luther King on August 28, 1963.

Beyond paying respect to Dr. King, this bill offers acknowledgment that our legislative system works as planned. For only in the United States can an idea of an interested individual result in good legislation, and I am hopeful—law. I thank Mr. Williams for his contribution to his country and to the future of our nation.

NOVEMBER 30, 1998.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE NORTHUP: In October of 1997 my wife and I visited Washington, D.C. The city, with its buildings, statues and monuments, was rich with symbolism. Despite the vastness of the space and the beauty of its design, what struck me most during the trip was a single man sitting on the steps of the Capitol. He sat there in plain view of the police with a sign indicating (if memory serves me) that he had fought in the Viet Nam war but was not now receiving veteran's benefits. The guard there indicated it wasn't true, but what struck me most was the fact that a single citizen could sit peacefully on the steps of the Capitol without being escorted away because he was unworthy of the space he selected to rest. There, literally on the threshold of our nation's most-powerful leaders, he sat. Other nations, I thought, might be embarrassed by the scene. Nevertheless, I somehow felt that I had witnessed—there on the steps—a living testament to our freedom and our greatness.

Later that day, my wife and I walked to the Lincoln Memorial where, at the steps of the memorial to one of our nation's greatest presidents, Martin Luther King delivered the ''I Have A Dream Speech''. I looked for the spot on which Martin Luther King stood when he spoke. I looked for a marker to remind me and others that—for a single moment on a hot August day—a descendent of a slave held the most prominent space in our nation and delivered words that will always stay with that space. I couldn't find a marker or the words on those steps.

Several months later at my home in Louisville, Kentucky, I attended a service at the Cathedral of the Assumption in which the Church celebrated a moment of personal revelation by Thomas Merton, the monk. Forty years earlier, when walking out of the Starks building on what was then 4th and Walnut, he realized in a profound way that we are all one. The Church celebrated the 40th anniversary of that event with a simple Mass and marker. To me, the service and the marker were both reminders that the ordinary space we sometimes occupy can become forever changed by the deeds of a person who stood there. I am confident it was no accident that the Church waited 40 years to commemorate the event.

My visit to Washington and my attendance at the Merton mass sparked a vision and a question in my mind. Wouldn't it be right to celebrate the 40th year of Martin Luther King's ''I Have a Dream'' speech with a ceremony and a marker at the footsteps of the Lincoln Memorial? The anticipation and planning of such an event might lead to collective good. In my mind's eye, I saw a day in which the ''I Have A Dream'' speech would be delivered again for those who have never heard it. I saw a day in which Martin Luther King might be remembered for the inspiration he provided to all of our citizens.

Looking even further into the future, I saw a day when I could bring my yet unborn children to that spot where Martin Luther King spoke and I could show them that marker and read them the words of his dream. I could tell him that this is still a nation where a simple Kentucky farmer could rise to the heights of President and a son of a slave could inspire future generations with the power of his words and his compassion.

My vision and these thoughts I share with you are personal—but far from novel. Perhaps something like this is already in the works and I am simply unaware. In any event, I am writing for some practical suggestions for bringing this vision to a reality.

Sincerely,

TOM WILLIAMS.

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2879.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2879 and add any extraneous material that they so desire.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

SENSE OF HOUSE REGARDING THE TRAFFICKING OF BABY PARTS

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 350) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives with respect to private companies involved in the trafficking of baby body parts for profit.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 350

Whereas the National Institutes of Health Revitalization Act of 1993 effectively lifted the ban on federally funded research involving the transplantation of baby body parts, and such Act made it a Federal felony for any person to knowingly, for ''valuable consideration,'' purchase or sell baby body parts (with a term of imprisonment of up to 10 years and with fines of up to $250,000 in the case of an individual and $500,000 in the case of an organization);

Whereas private companies have sought to meet the demand by both public and private research facilities by providing baby body parts;

Whereas the definition of ''valuable consideration'' under the National Institutes of Health Revitalization Act of 1993 does not include reasonable payments associated with the transportation, implantation, processing, preservation, quality control, or storage of baby body parts; and

Whereas private companies appear to believe that the definition of ''valuable consideration'' allows them to circumvent Federal law and avoid felony charges with impunity while trafficking in baby body parts for profit: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the Congress should exercise oversight responsibilities and conduct hearings, and take appropriate steps if necessary, concerning private companies that are involved in the trafficking of baby body parts for profit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) and the gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H. Res. 350 and to insert extraneous material on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H. Res. 350, a much-needed resolution which would bring greater attention to a sordid trade in the bodies of aborted babies. I salute the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) for working so diligently to bring this matter to the attention of the House.

I have a copy of a brochure from a company called Opening Lines recently of West Frankfurt, Illinois, which has now moved its base of operations to an undisclosed location. This brochure boasts, ''Our goal is to offer you and your staff the highest quality, most affordable, and freshest tissue, prepared to your specifications, and deliver it in the quantities you need when you need it.''

This company was founded, according to its brochure, ''in order to provide a convenient and efficient way for researchers to receive fetal tissue without a lot of bureaucracy.''

The brochure explains that, ''We have simplified the process for procuring fetal tissue. We do not require a copy of your IRB approval or summary of your research, and you are not required to cite Opening Lines of the source of tissue when you publish your work. We believe in word-of-mouth advertising. If you like our service, you will tell your colleagues.''

Mr. Speaker, Congress has spoken forcefully on the matter of selling aborted baby parts before. There is no question that it is illegal in the United States for any person to buy or sell fetal tissue effecting interstate commerce.

Yet, the documents we have here show very clearly that, if this is true, that anyone can buy whatever part of a dead baby may be decided. According to this brochure, it is $50 for ears, $150 for lungs and hearts, $325 for a spinal column, and a pair of eyes cost $50. But the buyer is offered a 40 percent discount for a single eye. Prices are in effect through December 31, 1999.

Mr. Speaker, companies like Opening Lines and their main competitor, the so-called Anatomic Gift Foundation, play a significant role in destroying the sanctity of innocent human life and apparently profit from this illicit activity even though it is illegal to buy and sell fetal tissue.

According to Opening Lines, ''Our daily average case volumes exceeds 1,500, and we serve clinics across the United States.''

How are they getting around the law? I think Congress and the American people deserve to know.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I know a lot of folks in this body, a lot of Members come down and speak so eloquently and passionately when it comes to such things as cruelty to animals, and in many ways they are justified in their eloquence and their beliefs. I would just hope that those same Members come down to this floor and speak as eloquently and passionately when it comes to the destruction and cruelty to innocent human beings.

I ask my colleagues to cast their votes in support of H. Res. 350 and ask that we work together to shed more light on this industry that has been operating in the shadows of darkness.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if my colleague from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) would be available to engage in a short colloquy with me.

Mr. Speaker, I just would like to try to clarify the intent behind this resolution before I make my statement. The reason is because, as I read the resolution, it says that it is a Federal crime for any person to knowingly for valuable consideration purchase or sell, quote, ''baby body parts,'' and then it goes on.

When I read this, I went and looked at the Federal statutes. I found no Federal statute which criminalizes specifically selling ''baby body parts.''

I was wondering if the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) was talking about either some insidious plot to take babies and kill them, and horribly, to sell the body parts; or if the gentleman was referring to the unlawful purchase of human organs as it would apply to minors, or, as I suspect from what the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) said, that the gentleman may be talking about the unlawful sale of organs or fetal tissues is prohibited by statute.

□ 1115

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. DEGETTE. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. TANCREDO. The answer to the gentlewoman's question is, it is the latter.

Ms. DEGETTE. So it is the intention to talk about the unlawful sale of organs or fetal tissue.

Mr. TANCREDO. That is correct.

Ms. DEGETTE. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for that clarification.

As I stated in the colloquy, any way we interpret this resolution, the unlawful sale of either children, of children's organs, or of fetal tissue would be illegal under Federal statutes. Murdering children would be illegal under 18 USC Section 1958(a) and, in fact, it would be a capital offense under Federal law. Unlawful purchase of human organs is also unlawful under 42 USC Section 274(e)(a), and, as noted by the gentleman from New York, it is also illegal to profit from the sale of organs or fetal tissues under 42 USC Section 289g-2(a). Those who partake in this illegal activity are subject to fines, 10 years in prison or both. And, obviously, it is a Federal crime to murder anybody, including babies or small children.

The reason I raise this issue in this way is because what we are discussing here today is a serious issue of medical ethics, and I think that it is incumbent upon all of us in Congress to make sure that proper protocols are being followed with respect to research and that no illegal activity is occurring. However, the use of inflammatory and imprecise language in resolutions such as this one does nothing to ensure that these laws are being enforced or that proper controls are in place. In fact, we do not even need to consider a resolution in Congress to request an oversight hearing.

If, indeed, illegal acts are occurring, then the oversight and investigation subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, of which I am a member and I believe the gentleman from New York is also a member, should investigate these acts and any violation of Federal law should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

When fetal research was legalized in 1993, in the NIH Revitalization Act, a portion of that legislation established the conditions under which federally-funded fetal tissue research can take place. This law provides that it should be unlawful for any person to knowingly acquire, receive, or otherwise transfer any human fetal tissue for valuable consideration. Specifically, it prohibits the purchase of human fetal tissue. It is interesting to note that a GAO report issued in 1997 determined that these requirements were in fact being met and no further complaints have been issued or detected, according to the NIH.

We called the company, Opening Lines, which the gentleman referred to in his opening statement, and we learned that they have closed their offices and could find no other evidence of them. However, as I noted a moment ago, if protocols are not being followed, and if, in fact, fetal tissue is being sold, then Congress should hold hearings, investigate this matter, and the perpetrators should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law.

But in establishing protocols and in thwarting illegal acts, we need to be mindful of the benefits that legitimate fetal tissue research has brought. Fetal tissue research has already resulted in significant advances in the treatment of Parkinson's Disease and even in more potential advances for Alzheimer's, diabetes, and many other serious medical conditions. There is a wide range of disorders and diseases that may benefit from fetal tissue transplantation research, including Alzheimer's disease, Huntington's disease, spinal cord injuries, leukemia, Down's syndrome, Tay-Sachs disease, hemophilia, epilepsy, cancer, and perhaps even brain damage caused by an accident or a stroke.

Scientists estimate that fetal tissue transplants could help approximately 1 million Parkinson's disease patients, 2.5 to 3 million people affected with Alzheimer's, 25,000 people suffering from Huntington's disease, 600,000 Type I diabetics, 400,000 stroke victims, and several hundred thousand persons who have suffered a spinal cord injury.

As the co-chair of the Congressional Diabetes Caucus and, more importantly, as the mother of a 5-year-old child who could benefit significantly from appropriate fetal tissue research, I want to ensure, and I know my colleagues want to ensure, that this critical research continues in an ethical manner so that we may find a cure for diabetes, Parkinson's disease, Alzheimer's disease, and these many, many other diseases in the near future.

Again, if there is illegal activity going on, we should fully investigate it. But let us not cloud this issue with hyperbole or inaccurate language. Let us make sure that all of the protocols are being followed and illegal activity is not going on.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds just to respond that if anybody wants to use inflammatory language, that is not our intent, but this, again, is the price list from Opening Lines: A brain is $999, a kidney is $125, eyes at 8 weeks are $50, 40 percent discount for a single eye. That is the issue before us, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO).

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, if I were to tell my colleagues that human bodies were being dissected and that the parts were being methodically catalogued, preserved and sold for profit, they might well recoil at such a picture. They might think I was referring to the grotesque deeds carried out in Communist China, where buyers can place orders for specific organs from bodies of certain blood types. Prisoners matching the specifications are then slaughtered and their organs harvested and sold. Or perhaps, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues might think I was detailing the actions of Nazis, when they found the market in human hair, skin, and bones to be lucrative, so they turned the concentration camps into profit centers.

It is, indeed, a tragic commentary on our times, Mr. Speaker, that I must tell my colleagues that it is not Communist China nor is it Nazi Germany to which I refer, it is contemporary America. The specific sites are not prisons or concentration camps, they are abortion clinics. Unfortunately, entrepreneurs appear to have found a profitable niche within the abortion industry and have begun to traffic in the body parts of aborted babies.

Now, this practice was outlawed by the passage of the Health Revitalization Act, to which my colleague has referred. However, some unscrupulous individuals have found that by simply calling a charge a fee-for-service, that they could possibly avoid persecution and prosecution and turn a tidy profit on the sale of body parts.

Mr. Speaker, on this poster we can see that the price list advertised by Opening Lines, one of the companies doing business in this area, and by the way it is true that one of their outlets has gone to ground since this all came to light, but there are other companies out there doing the same thing, clearly and unabashedly this sets out the specific price for each part. It is not I who stand here talking about baby body parts and offending the sensibilities of my colleagues; it is, of course, the organizations that are involved with selling them. What else would we call the liver, 8 weeks; the spleen, 8 weeks; the pancreas, 8 weeks; intestines; mesentery; kidney without adrenal or kidney with adrenal? You can get either one. What would my colleagues call that if it is not a baby body parts list?

This issue is not about fetal research. I knew that was going to be the issue my colleague and others would like to sort of cloud this thing with, fetal tissue research, the many benefits that may accrue from that. Anyone can stand up and say this resolution is about increasing the possibility for nuclear war. Anyone can say anything they want. The fact is, it is very clear it is a resolution simply calling for an investigation. If there are no problems, if in fact everybody is operating within the law, as my colleague suggests and hopes, then there is nothing to fear from investigation, and that is all this asks for. It is not legislation correcting or changing anything, but there is certainly evidence that something out there is wrong. Something is amiss. It is not going according to the way people who wrote the 1993 law wanted it to go.

This organization was even more exuberant in their advertising when they said, ''Our goal is to offer you and your staff the highest quality, most affordable, freshest tissue prepared to your specifications, delivered in the quantities you need and when you need it.'' Now, this is not my stuff, this is not something I am making up, this is from their brochure.

It is important at this point to cite the specific language of the Health Revitalization Act which says it is a Federal felony for any person to knowingly, for valuable consideration, purchase or sell human body parts, or fetal tissue, however one wants to put it. When I looked at this, it was body parts.

Mr. Speaker, how much more clearly could we have said it when we wrote the law? We evidently need to do more to get the point across that the trafficking in human body parts is disgusting, dangerous, and completely unacceptable in a society which presumes to call itself civilized. I, therefore, have introduced this resolution, which calls upon the Congress to hold hearings to determine the extent to which this practice is going on and, if necessary, if necessary and only if necessary, to take appropriate steps to end it.

Now, the last thing is this GAO report to which my colleague referred. The GAO study actually did come back and say it was not happening; it was not happening in three places, the Colorado Health Sciences Center, Mount Sinai, and the University of South Florida. And they were only looking at one specific aspect of this, they were not looking at private companies, they were not looking at pharmaceutical companies. So it is disingenuous, at least, to say this study sort of exonerates the industry. It was a very narrow study and in those three places it was not happening. In a lot of other places it is.

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY).

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H. Res. 350. When I heard from my staff last night that a resolution addressing illegal sale of fetal tissue would be offered on the floor today, my immediate reaction was if any illegality was taking place, it ought to be investigated immediately. Then I read the text of H.R. 350, with its use of terms like ''trafficking'' and ''baby body parts'', and I tried to call the company accused of wrongdoing, using the phone number listed in a Dear Colleague, and the number was not in service.

My colleagues, these are serious allegations and we ought to react to them responsibly. If there are legitimate complaints or evidence of illegality, Congress has the power to act. But instead of taking time on this floor, we could be working in committee conducting oversight of the National Institutes of Health, which is charged with protecting the integrity of federally funded research.

As the gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE), said, in 1997, as required by statute, the General Accounting Office investigated compliance with the detailed Federal regulations governing this research and the GAO found no evidence of wrongdoing or abuse. I would like to repeat that. The GAO found no evidence of wrongdoing or abuse.

And yesterday, the NIH confirmed the GAO conclusion, again stating that no complaints regarding fetal tissue research have been investigated by the National Institutes of Health's Office for Protection from Research Risks, and no compliance cases or institutional reports have been filed with the NIH since the GAO reported to Congress in March 1997. And the National Institutes of Health, my colleagues, has no record of any Member of Congress to date requesting a review or presenting any evidence of wrongdoing, despite the fact that the NIH is the agency charged with oversight of federally funded research. No Member of Congress has called the NIH or requested in writing any investigation.

Research involving fetal tissue is an integral part of the pioneering field of stem cell research which may offer millions of Americans, as the gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE) has said, suffering with diseases the opportunity to be cured. We should do everything we can to assure that this research proceeds in an ethical and cautious manner.

□ 1130

Allegations of wrongdoing, if substantiated, should be investigated, not, my colleagues, brought to the floor of the House to inflame. This resolution is not needed in order for oversight hearings to be held.

So why are we debating this on the House floor? Let us put aside the inflammatory words and work together with the NIH to get the facts. That is why I urge my colleagues to reject H. Res. 350.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. COBURN).

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot of truth to what the gentlewoman from New York said. However, there is an absence of appropriate timing with that. There is no question we are going to have an oversight hearing on this. There is no question we are going to do it. There is no question that they are violating the law and the intent and purposes of the law. We are going to do that.

But this needs to be inflamed, I say to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY), because this is exactly the slippery slope we said we would be going down.

Let me tell my colleagues what this process is creating. If I am in there to rent some space from their abortion clinic and I tell them that can I sell a brain for a thousand dollars, do my colleagues know what I am going to do if I am an abortionist? I am going to do an abortion now that is most important in saving the brain rather than in caring for that woman who is having a pregnancy terminated. Because money then becomes the driving object in my abortion, not in the care of the woman who has made a difficult decision and is giving up a life.

So now what we have had is we violate this law and the intent of it, although technically they may not be, but in fact their intent is to, we are inducing through the profit motive abortionists to put the life of their patient at risk for monetary gain, a fetal brain for a thousand bucks.

How abhorrent can we be? Why should we not be inflamed? Why should we not be agitated? Why should we not be angry, in fact, when this process is going on exactly in contraindication to what we said in the law? We should inflame this. Everyone in America should know that the value of life has just gotten less, not the value of the fetus, the value of the very woman undergoing abortion. Because now her life is going to be put at risk because somebody is going to try to capture a brain intact regardless if that is the best and safest indication for that woman.

So we do need to send the letters, and we are going to, from the Subcommittee on Health, I assure my colleagues. We are going to have an oversight. And we should as a body say, this is not right. This should stop. There are all sorts of unintended consequences occurring because this procedure is ongoing.

The reason the phone is disconnected is just like the phones were disconnected a month ago at another one of them, because when everybody finds out, they shut down and move somewhere else simply because they know it is not right, not right ethically, not right morally, and not right legally. So I am inflamed about it. I am upset about it. Because the purpose of the law, what their intent is, is to go completely around that.

I assure my colleagues that the Subcommittee on Health and the Oversight and Investigation Committee of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Commerce is going to look at every aspect of this. And we already know what the answers are. We have had good undercover investigative reporting that has shown us the answers. But we are going to allow the people to give us the opportunity to do that.

I hope, in our heart of hearts, that as we protect abortion in this country, the first thing we do is protect the women undergoing the abortion.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COBURN. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just clarify my position since the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. COBURN) was directing his comments to me. I certainly respect his views on any issue. But my position was that I would respectfully suggest that the order in this House of Representatives is to have a hearing, to do an investigation, and not come to conclusions with the purpose of inflaming on the floor. I am delighted that they are going to have an investigation.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, the purpose of the resolution is to raise the awareness of how foul, how dirty, how nasty, how abhorrent this is.

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2½ minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose this resolution. The proponents of this resolution are attempting to corrupt medical research with the politics of abortion. They are attempting to stall proper research to save lives to gain political advantage. I am not surprised, but I am disappointed.

The resolution is totally misleading, and that may in fact be its real purpose. Sale of body parts for profit, the resolution talks about. No one is going out selling body parts, arms, or legs for any purpose.

Researchers do use stem cells and tissue samples from the earlier stages of fetal development to promote research for the treatment of Alzheimer's disease and Parkinson's disease and diabetes and other serious medical conditions. This is potentially life-saving research that can save thousands and thousands of lives. It is intended to alleviate pain and suffering and to save lives.

But we do in the talk about that, we talk about selling body parts, which does not happen. We talk about having abortions to generate body parts, which does not happen. And again, I agree with the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY). This is backwards.

If the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. COBURN) thinks that some foul stuff, as he put it, is going on, that some foul deeds are being committed, have an oversight hearing, look into it, find out the facts first. Do not declare the facts first and then investigate. We do that too often in this House these days, and this is a prime example of it.

I do not think those foul things are happening. I think it is a concoction; I think it is propaganda to inflame debate to stop medical research into lifesaving techniques.

But if they are happening, let us find out; let us have a hearing. They will have a hearing. The gentleman says so. Fine. So why this resolution? This resolution is total demagoguery and ought to be rejected for the demagoguery it is. Let us have the hearings and find out the facts and then see what we ought to do, if anything.

Facts first. Action later. Demagoguery not at all.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in support of this resolution which says very simply that the House should hold hearings on the commercial trafficking in baby body parts.

Here is the issue in a nutshell. Based on reliable reports, abortion clinics are selling parts of babies, and the older the better, to middlemen. Those middlemen, in turn, sell them to researchers. This means more money for the abortion clinic. Instead of the problem of disposing of dead bodies, now abortion clinics have a lucrative means of getting rid of the ''unintended babies.'' This means money for the middlemen.

Just look at this price list that is duplicated, blown up from an article obtained from a national business which traffics in unborn baby body parts. Up here we see a liver, $150. But they can get it for $125 if it is from a younger baby, or they can get a 30 percent discount if it is ''significantly fragmented.'' A spleen is $75. Pancreas, $100. This is their document. A thymus, $100.

Look at this. A brain, $999. Notice they even use marketing techniques in this gruesome big business, selling it for one dollar less than a thousand dollars to make it, I guess, a more attractive purchase. And again, if it is fragmented, and what a terrible way to describe a baby's injured brain from an abortion, they can get a 30 percent discount. Almost like, step right up, ladies and gentlemen, do you want a baby's ear? Seventy-five dollars, $50 if a baby is less than 8 weeks old. How about eyes? A pair of eyes $75; $40 for one eye. Skin, a baby in a second trimester, $100. Spinal cord, $325.

Mr. Speaker, I wish this gruesome price list were a cruel Halloween hoax, but it is not. It is the price list for human body parts from aborted babies.

It is almost like the bureaucratization of the Nazi's final solution hammered out in conferences and committed to legal documents, except now it is in the form of capitalistic price lists organized for commerce, sanitized for the grim reality which it is.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw attention to the job of one young woman. Let us call her Kelly. Kelly's job at the abortion clinic was one of retrieving body parts from dead bodies for abortion and shipping them for profit to researchers who requested them. Here is her testimony. Kelly said: ''We had a contract with an abortion clinic that would allow us to go there on certain days. We would have a generated list of tissue that organizations were looking for. Then we would examine the patient charts.

''We only wanted the most perfect specimens that we could give. We were looking for eyes, livers, brains, thymuses, cardiac blood, cord, blood from liver, even blood from the limbs.''

Kelly quit her job one day when an abortion doctor came in and brought in two babies, two 5½-month-old twins still moving. She could not take it anymore.

It is time the Congress begin oversight hearings on this death-dealing business. We need to begin tracing this money trail. The bill before us today does nothing more than call for hearings. It does not call for the elimination of trafficking. It does not require women to sign a consent form before their babies are sold for parts. It does not even prohibit Planned Parenthood or commercial middlemen from profiting. All it does is call for hearings. Surely, no one could reasonably oppose a hearing.

Let me anticipate one line of protest. Some will say that medical progress requires that we turn tragedy into a blessing for the living. Well, they are right. We must do all we reasonably can to erase human suffering. But the key is responsibility. We have a responsibility to the sick, the disabled, the children, the elderly.

Who among us does not have a loved one who suffers from some disease or ailment? But do not be fooled between false choices between medical research and no medical research. We have other options other than buying and selling dead children's body parts.

I urge Members to support this resolution.

And that's the issue we focus on today—not research—but the buying and selling of baby body parts for profit, for financial remuneration.

We can, we must, and we will do more to ease human suffering. But not at the ghastly price paid in dissecting babies, pricing their body parts, and distributing marketing lists.

The Nazis killed their unwanted children under the guise of the ''Realm's Committee for Scientific Approach to Severe Illness Due to Heredity and Constitution.'' Transportation of the patients to killing centers was carried out by ''The Charitable Transport Company for the Sick.''

We should not join the Nazi's rationalization of unbounded research on the powerless to build a master race. No, we must not.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this common sense non-binding legislation to call for congressional hearings on this issue.

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, certainly no one in this chamber would ever advocate the improper sale of ''baby body parts'' or of ''fetal tissue.'' This is a very sensitive issue of medical ethics which is important for us to ensure is always being adhered to in the strictest way.

This issue, if there is an issue, even though no one has documented it, if there is an issue of improper sale of fetal tissue or of children or anything of that nature, the sponsor of the bill, the floor manager, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, any Member of this House could have requested NIH to investigate those allegations pursuant to the statute. That has never been done to date.

They could have brought this issue up during the NIH authorization hearings, which the Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction over. That has not been done. They could have requested an oversight investigations hearing into these very deeply troubling allegations. That has not been done.

After looking at what has not been done, it becomes clear that this practice of bringing this issue to the House floor to demagogue it is improper. We should go through the committee process and decide whether, in fact, these practices are occurring. And if they are, we should stop them immediately.

No one would favor the sale improperly of fetal tissue or any other kind of tissue. But let us call this what it is. If there is an issue, let us have a hearing, let us investigate it, let us prosecute anybody who is breaking the law.

That is what we should be doing, not standing here in November as the session is winding down and raising it on the floor for the first time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1145

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds. Again, as I stated at the outset, there are so many Members who rightfully and legitimately in their mind come to the floor to speak so passionately about saving the dolphins and saving the tigers and saving the whales. That may all be legitimate. I would just hope that they would feel the same way when it comes to the saving and sanctity of innocent human beings.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOBSON). The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 3¾ minutes.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise in very strong support of H. Res. 350 and urge swift and extensive oversight into the question of trafficking in the bodies of unborn babies killed by abortion. Mr. Speaker, the House has not addressed this issue since 1993, when the NIH Revitalization Act was passed by this body. At that time, many of us were deeply concerned, and expressed it on this floor, that research using the shattered bodies of aborted babies could quickly lead to a greater number of abortions, particularly if the demand for their body parts grew among researchers. Those concerns appear to have been well founded.

I want to thank the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) for offering this resolution and, as he pointed out earlier, it was a pro-life organization in Texas that compiled numerous documents about the horrific business of trafficking in baby body parts. The companies involved provide price lists for the individual parts. Let me read just some of those that are listed:

Liver, $150, but a 30 percent discount if significantly fragmented. Pancreas, under 8 weeks, $100. Ears, under 8 weeks, $75. Brain, under 8 weeks, $999, 30 percent discount if significantly fragmented. Intact trunk, with or without limbs, $500. Spinal column, $150. Skin, $100.

Mr. Speaker, this is almost too grotesque to imagine. Yet this is a real business and these are real babies, innocent children who have been deprived of their lives.

It is routine, Mr. Speaker, for pregnant women who are planning to abort their babies to be told that their children are nothing more than collections of cells or blobs of tissue. Yet these lists clearly give lie to that myth. Babies younger than 8 weeks have, as they point out on their price list, identifiable brains, livers, spleens, ears, and eyes, and they, as well as older babies, are being taken apart piece by piece, limb by limb, even skinned. Worst of all, there are profiteers waiting in the wings to make money from this tragedy by collecting and selling the pieces.

Among the questions that Congress must investigate, Mr. Speaker, is whether these private businesses are operating inside or outside the scope even of our current infirm law, and whether Federal law has the gaping loopholes that we suggested back in 1993 which allow these companies to claim significant payments for body parts as, quote, reasonable compensation for obtaining them.

We may also have to look at the clinics' financial interest, particularly where federally funded research is involved. When taxpayer funding of research using baby body parts was being defended 6 or more years ago, one thing that was said repeatedly was that these babies are already dead. The truth is, however, that they are not dead when a woman is asked to donate, and it may not even be true that the woman has decided to abort when she is presented with the prospect of handing over her baby's body parts for research purposes. And as we pointed out then, that may, among other factors, help tip the scale.

Mr. Speaker, many women are ambivalent about abortion, and the studies show that many are undecided even as they walk into the clinic doors. They hope to get objective counseling about their options, but abortion clinic employees, as we have known, are far from objective. Currently there is nothing in Federal law or regulations, and almost certainly nothing in the private sector, to prevent a so-called counselor from telling a woman who is undecided about abortion that if she decides to abort, some good can result if she donates her dead baby to research.

Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Colorado has pointed out to all of us, and again I want to salute him for bringing this to our attention, a woman who used to work for these middlemen has come forward to talk about their business arrangements with abortion clinics.

She has recounted that the abortion clinic would give her information on the women in the waiting room so that she could pick out the best candidates to fill their requests for organs and tissues, based on the women's medical history and stage or pregnancy. How farfetched is it to imagine that these women in particular were approached to get permission to dissect their babies bodies? The so-called safeguards in current law for federally funded research are inadequate in this area and need to be re-examined.

Mr. Speaker, the prospect of economic gain causes can poison even those practices established with the most benevolent intentions. Just yesterday there was a news story about concerns that have been raised over trafficking in human organs internationally for profit. A university professor who founded a group, Organs Watch, to investigate this, said ''In the organs trade business, abuses creep in before you know it.'' The same abuses should be expected in the baby parts business.

I would be astounded if any Member of this body objected to this resolution. If the laws we have, and the enforcement of them, are so great, then hearings will bring that out. But if they are inadequate or are being ignored, then Congress should be made aware of that as well.

Mr. Speaker, the barest minimum that we can do is to have a full scale investigation into this and go wherever the leads may take us to try to stop this heinous practice.

I urge my colleagues to join me in voting ''yes'' on this important resolution. Let's let some light shine on this grisly business.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, it's hard to escape the conclusion that this resolution—by its very name—is designed to attack and cast doubt on fetal tissue research.

First, let's be clear. The law that authorizes fetal tissue research, The NIH Revitalization Act of 1993, which I helped author, contains strong protections against the abuses alleged in this resolution. While we should be concerned if these protections are violated, this inflammatory resolution clearly means to whip up opposition to all fetal tissue research by substituting sound bites for facts. The facts are that fetal tissue research is subject to Federal, State and even local regulation. It is subject to informed consent. It is subject to audit by the Secretary of Health and Human Services. Violations of Federal protections are subject to criminal penalties.

Congress and the American public have already decided that fetal tissue research is both legal and ethical. It is crucial to women's health and reproductive research. It is enormously promising for Parkinson's disease, multiple sclerosis, Alzheimer's disease, Tay-Sachs disease and juvenile diabetes. It could help cure victims of stroke and brain cancer. We should always do appropriate oversight. But a resolution that talks about ''baby body parts'' is not the way to do it. This resolution uses rhetoric to conceal its attack on the hopes of Americans with Alzheimer's and MS. It resorts to linguistic tricks to mask its impact on American mothers seeking cures to genetic birth defects—mothers who could have healthier babies as a result of fetal tissue research.

I am very disappointed in the House. In the waning days of this Congress, we should be enacting the Patients Bill of Rights. We should be working on the Medicare drug benefit. But instead, once again, the House Republican leadership is kow-towing to its pro-life right-wing with misleading and sensationalist rhetoric.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 350.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONCURRING IN SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 2280, VETERANS BENEFITS IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1999, WITH AMENDMENTS

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 368) providing for the concurrence by the House with amendments in the amendment of the Senate to H.R. 2280.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. RES. 368

Resolved, That, upon the adoption of this resolution, the House shall be considered to have taken from the Speaker's table the bill H.R. 2280, with the Senate amendment thereto, and to have concurred in the Senate amendment with the following amendments:

(1) Amend the title so as to read: ''An Act to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide a cost-of-living adjustment in the rates of disability compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for survivors of such veterans.''.

(2) In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the Senate, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Veterans' Compensation Cost-of-Living Adjustment Act of 1999''.

(b) REFERENCES TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 2. DISABILITY COMPENSATION.

(3) by striking ''$182'' in subsection (c) and inserting ''$188''.

SEC. 7. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on December 1, 1999.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. STUMP) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EVANS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. STUMP).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a clean bill providing a cost-of-living adjustment to disabled veterans and surviving spouses. The other provisions in the House-passed bill are part of an ongoing conference between the House and the Senate and we hope to have a report on that by tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I salute the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. STUMP), the chairman of the committee, for his efforts to ensure a timely and accurate cost-of-living adjustment of 2.4 percent which will be provided to our Nation's service-connected disabled veterans and their dependents and survivors who are in receipt of compensation and DIC benefits. This increase in benefits will be reflected in payments beginning January, 2000. Mr. Speaker, this measure deserves the support of every Member of the House. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to thank the ranking member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs for all his work on this provision as well as the gentleman from New York (Mr. QUINN), the chairman of the subcommittee, and the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER), the ranking member, and urge all Members to support this COLA, cost-of-living increase, for our veterans.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY).

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Arizona for his hard work on this issue and obviously for recognition of all veterans. We are getting ready certainly to celebrate Veterans Day this year. I think it is incumbent upon us when we are considering the needs of the United States of America, we prioritize those that have fought valiantly for the freedoms that we all enjoy.

It is one of the unique things, having come to Congress and being able to speak on the floor and advocate for constituents from the 16th District, to realize many of those fundamental opportunities have been given to us because of the fight the veterans made in previous conflicts. I think it is incumbent especially as well to recognize that years and years ago I remember the veterans were told that they would have to wait for their cost-of-living, we have to make budgetary matters first and we have got to balance the books and do all these other things.

I think the gentleman from Arizona prioritizes the fact that veterans should not be treated any differently than any other citizen, that if there are cost-of-living benefits going to employees of the Federal Government, to Social Security recipients, that they should also be included for those disabled, those veterans and other groups.

I want to strongly urge obviously my colleagues' consideration of this measure but also once again to underscore the fact that very few of us would be able to speak freely in this Chamber had it not been for the valiant effort of men and women who have sacrificed, men and women who have gone to theaters around the globe to protect freedom here and abroad.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. STUMP) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, House Resolution 368.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REAUTHORIZING THE PRINTING OF CERTAIN PUBLICATIONS

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 221) authorizing printing of the brochures entitled ''How Our Laws Are Made'' and ''Our American Government'', the pocket version of the United States Constitution, and the document-sized, annotated version of the United States Constitution.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 221

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring),

SECTION 1. PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Each of the documents referred to in section 2 shall be printed as a House document, in a style and manner determined by the Joint Committee on Printing.

(b) ADDITIONAL COPIES FOR HOUSE AND SENATE.—There shall be printed for the use of the House of Representatives and the Senate an aggregate number of copies of the documents printed under subsection (a) not to exceed the lesser of—

(1) 2,200,000; or

(2) the maximum number of copies for which the aggregate printing cost does not exceed an amount established by the Joint Committee on Printing.

SEC. 2. DOCUMENTS DESCRIBED.

The documents referred to in this section are as follows:

(1) The 1999 revised edition of the brochure entitled ''How Our Laws Are Made''.

(2) The 1999 revised edition of the brochure entitled ''Our American Government''.

(3) The 20th edition of the pocket version of the United States Constitution.

(4) The 1999 edition of the document-sized, annotated version of the United States Constitution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA).

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today I come before the House to present this House Concurrent Resolution 221, which authorizes the printing of brochures entitled

''How Our Laws Are Made'' and ''Our American Government,'' the pocket version of the United States Constitution, and the document-sized annotated version of the United States Constitution.

Very often when I come to the floor, I always like to cite what I consider the most important document that rules the governance of our country and really sets forth the pattern of organization for the Congress. Our Constitution details those responsibilities under that great document, and it is important that our Committee on House Administration as one of its responsibilities in administering the House of Representatives makes certain that these publications be made available.

Each time we have young people visit the United States Capitol, I try to make pocket editions available to them so that they have a better understanding of how our government operates, what their responsibilities are under that great document as a citizen, and also how our government works. Most young people today do not have an awareness of the Constitution and basically how our government functions. That is unfortunate. Sometimes it is the failure of education. Not only do our schools and parents and communities have a responsibility but we as a Congress have that responsibility. And also it is important that the Committee on House Administration, charged with running the House of Representatives, insures that these important documents are published.

The last time two of these documents were printed was during the 102nd Congress. The other two were printed during the 105th Congress. The pamphlet-sized publication of the Constitution has a revision to the foreword by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), our distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. The Parliamentarian has also provided revisions to ''How Our Laws Are Made,'' and the Congressional Research Service has provided revision to the document ''Our American Government.''

I would also notify Members of the House, Mr. Speaker, that each Member and Senator will receive 1,000 copies of each of these publications and an opportunity to acquire additional copies. They will be made available at an additional cost to the Members, and can be distributed to their constituents.

These are important documents. It is an important responsibility of the House of Representatives to make certain again that our young people and our citizens have the basic tools and documents of government available to them, somewhat of a mundane responsibility but an important one that we are taking that up. I am pleased to take up this responsibility today on behalf of the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), who chairs the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1200

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution which, as the gentleman from Florida has so aptly pointed out, provides for authority to reprint four documents of particular interest. Those of us who have been around the Congress for most of our adult lives, either as students working here, as interns, or as Members and anything in between, know that although this seems like a mundane responsibility, authorizing the reprinting of four documents and the provision of copies to Members and to the public is a profound action.

It is profound because these documents are so profound. These documents have had a tremendous impact on not only the citizens of the United States, but, I would suggest, a great impact on all the world. I remember, as I am sure the gentleman from Florida remembers, when Vaclav Havel, the President of the Czech Republic, stood at the rostrum in front of the Speaker, and spoke about the emergence of Czechoslovakia from behind the Iron Curtain into freedom, both politically and economically, and democratically. He observed that two of the documents, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, impelled the movement in Czechoslovakia from behind the Iron Curtain. Havel spoke dramatically about human rights, political rights, civil rights, and economic rights.

It is critically important that every American student, every American adult be familiar with the source documents of our Nation which articulate our principles and outline how we accomplish democracy, how we debate and resolve differences of opinion, how we, as minority leader often observes, substitute debate on this floor for bullets on a battlefield.

Debate is, in fact, the substitute for violence; it is the way we in America have, since the Civil War resolved our differences without bloodshed. It is a lesson for all the world, but particularly a lesson for our own people. The reprinting of these documents will provide a ready supply for Members to distribute and for the public to access.

So I join the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) in supporting this very important resolution. I support him in his observations with reference to having available not only the pocket Constitution, but the annotated Constitution as well for the public and for Members so that we better understand the genius of our Founding Fathers and the contribution that American democracy makes to all the world.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

I am pleased to join with the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER), who is the ranking member on the Committee on House Administration to support this resolution, a simple task for the Congress this afternoon to print copies of the Constitution and some other documents and to be made available to the public and Members.

In closing, I heard the gentleman from Maryland comment about Vaclav Havel and his presentation before the Congress. I was a Member of Congress at the time, but I sat as a guest in the House gallery; and I will never forget that infamous commentary by Mr. Havel who said just days ago he had been incarcerated in a prison and now he was addressing Congress. That event was particularly meaningful to me because my grandfather came from Slovakia which was part of the Czechoslovak Republic in 1989 when thousands and thousands of people took to the street in the beginning of the Velvet Revolution, and as we pass this small housekeeping resolution here to make these copies of our precious democratic documents available, we remember and commemorate today the fall of the Berlin Wall and basically the fall of Communism.

It is through the documents that we are authorizing the publication of today that we have extended to the world our framework of government. These documents have been the cornerstone for providing a guide post for these people who have brought their nations out of the ages and decades and decades of darkness.

Last night I had the opportunity to attend a dinner with the Czech and Slovak prime ministers and their ambassadors here as they celebrated. They had met with the President and other officials celebrating the 10th anniversary of their having gained freedom. Again, those documents that we provided offered encouragement. Programs that the United States promotes such as this help extend democracy, promotes freedom and opportunities, and provide the framework of government outlined by the Constitution to others. Today we see those results and it does give us a great sense of satisfaction.

It gives me, in closing, a great sense of satisfaction to work in a bipartisan manner with the gentleman from Maryland and our chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), in asking the House of Representatives to pass this concurrent resolution of the House, House Concurrent Resolution 221 at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOBSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) that the House suspend the rules and agree to House concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 221.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1714, ELECTRONIC SIGNATURES IN GLOBAL AND NATIONAL COMMERCE ACT

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 366 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 366

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 1714) to facilitate the use of electronic records and signatures in interstate or foreign commerce. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committees on Commerce and the Judiciary now printed in the bill, it shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule an amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the Congressional Record and numbered 1. That amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. No amendment to that amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be in order except those printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Each amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may: (1) postpone until a time during further consideration in the Committee of the Whole a request for a recorded vote on any amendment; and (2) reduce to five minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on any postponed question that follows another electronic vote without intervening business, provided that the minimum time for electronic voting on the first in any series of questions shall be 15 minutes. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order as original text. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Dayton, Ohio (Mr. HALL), my very good friend; and pending that I yield myself such time as I may consume. All time that I will be yielding will be for debate purposes only.

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for the consideration of a bill, H.R. 1714, that is critically important to consumers in our 21st century information-age economy. It is also appropriate that we consider this legislation on the heels of last week's passage of S. 900, the Financial Services Modernization Act.

As significant as S. 900 is to bringing our financial services laws up to date with the realities of the current marketplace, H.R. 1714 will actually do more to empower consumers of financial products and other goods and services and establish the framework for competition in the emerging electronic marketplace. For this I applaud the efforts of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) to move this legislation forward.

This is a structured rule providing for 1 hour of general debate, divided equally between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce. The rule makes in order as an original bill for the purpose of amendment the amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and numbered 1. That amendment in the nature of a substitute is identical to the bill which on November 1 fell just three votes short of the two-thirds majority necessary for passage of a measure under suspension of the rules.

The rule provides for consideration of only the two amendments printed in the rules report, as the Clerk just gave us, which may be offered only in the order printed in the RECORD, may be offered only by the designated Member, shall be considered as read, shall not be divisible, and shall be debated for 30 minutes, equally divided and controlled by a proponent and an opponent.

The first amendment is the bipartisan Inslee-Eshoo-Smith–Dooley-Moran-Roukema amendment, which I urge my colleagues to support. It preserves all Federal and State consumer protection laws and actually creates new consumer rights in the area of electronic commerce.

The second is a gutting amendment offered by Representatives DINGELL, CONYERS, LAFALCE and GEPHARDT which, if adopted, will leave all consumers to ponder the question: Why did I just spend $1,200 on a computer? Now, think about it, Mr. Speaker. The scale of electronic commerce is undergoing dramatic change as a result of the Internet, networking and communications technology, and the expansion of computer memory and storage capabilities. Computer-to-computer communication is increasingly being used to initiate and execute a substantial and growing number of personal business and financial transactions.

Enactment of this E-SIGN bill will transform the way we work, the way we are educated, the way we contract for goods and services, and the way we are governed. It will make it easier for people using just a computer and a modem to pay their bills, apply for mortgages, trade securities and purchase goods and services without ever leaving the confines of their homes or offices.

But the consumer revolution that would be unleashed by this bill may never see the light of day if the Dingell-Gephardt amendment is adopted. So I am going to once again urge my colleagues to oppose that clearly anti-consumer amendment.

Mr. Speaker, my State of California is home to many of the companies that produce the technologies that are shaping the global electronic marketplace. In talking with business leaders in the fields of technology and finance, I am convinced that the promise of electronic commerce will never be fully realized without the establishment of a clear, uniform national framework governing both, and I emphasize both, digital signatures and records.

This is one of the most important economic challenges facing Congress, as our country transitions into our 21st century Information Age economy. With H.R. 1714, businesses and consumers can be confident that the transactions we engage in electronically are both safe and secure. This bill addresses this challenge in a way that ensures that competition and consumer choice remain the hallmarks of the emerging global electronic marketplace.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is one that is deserving of bipartisan support, as was evidenced in the suspension vote, although, as I said, we were just three votes short of what we needed to pass it. So I assume that the rule will sail right through and the bill, with only the amendment of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), will sail through, too.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues' support of both, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a restrictive rule which will allow for the consideration of H.R. 1714. As my colleague, the gentleman from California, has explained, this rule provides 1 hour of general debate, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce.

This restrictive rule will permit only two /AELDZ to the base text. No other amendments may be offered. Mr. Speaker, electronic commerce has become part of our life for millions of Americans who use the Internet to conduct business. Congress needs to update our laws so that buyers and sellers can take better advantage of the new technology. One such change is to give electronic signatures and contracts the same legal force as written signatures and contracts.

In concept, this change has broad support on both sides of the aisle and on both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue. This positive development would encourage electronic commercial activity and benefit both business and consumers.

Unfortunately, this bill goes beyond electronic signatures and contracts. It contains controversial provisions preempting State laws that require maintaining certain written records. It contains provisions opposed by consumer groups that would permit electronic notices and disclosures to be substituted for written notices. For these reasons, the bill failed to achieve the necessary two-thirds vote when it was considered earlier this month under suspension of the rules.

This restrictive rule we are now considering does make in order an amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), and the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), which will remove the controversial provisions of the bill and leave much needed language dealing with electronic signatures and contracts.

The rule also makes in order a bipartisan amendment that contains a number of consumer protections. The House is not served by rules which restrict the amendment process on legislation so important to the Nation's commerce. However, the two amendments which are made in order will give Members the opportunities to make meaningful changes to the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN).

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the rule makes in order the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), along with the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO), myself, and several other individuals, which strengthens and I believe solves the consumer protection issues that were of concern to some Members.

Specifically, on the third page of the amendment, and I will quote, the amendment would provide that ''Nothing in this Act affects the content or timing of any disclosure required to be provided to any consumer under any statute, regulation, or other rule of law.'' I think that is about as broad as we can get in terms of making sure that consumer protection statutes are undisturbed by this electronic signature act.

It is my understanding that the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is disposed to favor this amendment, and I think that shows the bipartisan effort that has been underway to make sure that this electronic signature act does become law. The other important provision of the bill guarantees the consumers the right to opt into electronic records, and really an astoundingly broad provision that allows the consumer to withdraw his or her consent at any time.

So I think this is a light touch in terms of regulation, but there is a need for consistency and a general scheme for electronic commerce, as we all know.

I am hopeful that Members will read the language of the Inslee amendment, along with the underlying bill, so they can assure themselves, as I have been assured, that this is a fair measure that will promote e-commerce and will do no harm to other important issues. Please do read the amendment, instead of just listening to the arguments.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say very briefly that this is a bill that clearly moves us forward and recognizes e-trade and so forth. With that, I would urge the Members to support the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter on H.R. 1714.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

ELECTRONIC SIGNATURES IN GLOBAL AND NATIONAL COMMERCE ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 366 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 1714.

□ 1226

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1714) to facilitate the use of electronic records and signatures in interstate or foreign commerce, with Mr. BONILLA in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY).

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, last Monday the Committee on Commerce brought H.R. 1714, the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act, to the floor under suspension of the rules.

Unfortunately, H.R. 1714 fell just four short votes of passage. The Clinton administration and minority leadership of this body mounted an intense lobbying campaign against the bill. We were proud of the number of votes that we were able to achieve in support of the bill, and we return to the House floor this week with the identical bill that was considered last Monday.

We remain confident that H.R. 1714 is strong legislation that helps to facilitate e-commerce in the new economy. This bill is perhaps the most important pro-technology vote that this Congress will take. It should not fall prey to partisan battles.

The Committee on Commerce unanimously, Mr. Chairman, unanimously voted this bill out of the committee this summer with support from both sides of the aisle. Since that time, we have worked closely with the minority leadership of the committee to craft the additional consumer protection provisions that appear in the bill considered last week and remain in the bill today.

We believe those negotiations to be fair and worthwhile, and were disappointed to learn for the first time on the floor last week that the minority did not feel the same. These important new provisions offer consumers strong protection in the electronic world. They require consumers to opt in if they wish to receive their documents in electronic form.

Let me repeat, nothing, nothing in this bill requires consumers to receive documents electronically against their wishes. Further, the bill requires that all consumers must receive important notices that may affect health or safety in the traditional paper form. This includes notices of such as the termination of utility service, cancellation of health benefits or life insurance, and foreclosure or eviction from a residence.

I would like to take this opportunity to rebut some of the charges and unfounded attacks that were made by my colleagues across the aisle when this bill was brought to the floor last week.

We heard that under H.R. 1714, consumers would be forced to accept electronic documents, even if the consumer did not have a computer or an e-mail account.

□ 1230

We also heard that 1714 will sweep away Federal and State consumer protection laws. These claims, Mr. Chairman, are completely false.

As I have said many times previously, consumers must have safety, security, and privacy on line or they will not accept this new technology. H.R. 1714 provides on-line consumers with a confident assurance that their on-line transactions will be secure and that they will continue to receive the same consumer protections as consumers purchasing a product at a local shopping mall.

We also heard, much to my surprise, claims that the process for considering H.R. 1714 was unfair. First, it was claimed that the bill had been substantially changed since the minority had last seen it. In fact, it was even charged that the consumer protections in the bill had been removed. This is simply untrue.

We provided the minority with a copy of the text of H.R. 1714 before it came to the floor, and with minor exceptions that strengthen consumer protections, it was identical to the bill that they had agreed to just days before. The only real change was that the minority leadership had called a meeting with a number of Committee on Commerce Democrats in which they were told to stop cooperating with the majority, so we had the instance of politics overriding substance.

Mr. Chairman, there were also charges that the bill was brought to the floor too quickly. Again, such a claim is false. H.R. 1714 was approved by the Committee on Commerce unanimously by voice vote on August 5. We filed our report on September 27. The bill was originally scheduled to come to the floor on October 18, but I asked it to be withdrawn so that we could continue to negotiate with the minority.

The bill brought to the floor on November 1 was the product of 2 weeks of negotiations with the minority. This can hardly be considered rushing legislation to the floor. Some have said that all that was needed was one more day of negotiations. To that I say we have given the minority 14 days of negotiations.

Any charges that the majority acted in bad faith are simply incorrect. I gave the minority every opportunity to provide input from before the bill was introduced to right up until the bill came to the floor. I think our negotiations were very successful. In fact, key consumer protections in the bill, Mr. Chairman, were the result of our negotiations with the minority.

Unfortunately, at the last minute the minority leadership decided they had to block this legislation. They had to keep Republicans from passing an important pro-technology bill that enjoys unanimous support, unanimous support in the technology community.

I would also like to touch on one more important consumer issue that has been little discussed until now. Electronic signature technologies provide consumers with much more assurance that their transactions and communications will take place in a safe, secure and private environment. The encryption capabilities that are used to protect such valuable signatures offer much greater protection than ever possible in the traditional paper world.

Electronic signatures provide a level of authentication that far surpasses the ink signature that has come to be the accepted standard. Moreover, H.R. 1714 makes it possible to have seamless and efficient processing of electronic signatures records. Electronic transactions have much less chance of human error, and provide for more reliable retention after the initial transaction takes place.

Critics have argued that this bill should not apply to records. In fact, they want to severely narrow the bill's scope to delete records. This would be a shame and I could not support it. Records are an important component in electronic commerce transactions. Consumers will benefit from the use of electronic records and we should provide the legal framework to allow their use and acceptance.

The world is moving towards a paperless society and we cannot sit back and ignore reality as some would like us to do. A proper course of action is to address records by adding appropriate consumer protections like we have done in H.R. 1714.

Mr. Chairman, the 105th Congress was credited with passing monumental legislation to help facilitate E-commerce. This vote is perhaps the most critical one that the 106th Congress will consider to continue the growth and success of the digital economy. If Members support the U.S. high-tech industry, they will vote ''yes'' on this bill. A vote in support of H.R. 1714 is a vote to support providing consumers with greater security in on-line transactions. It is a vote in support of allowing business to provide new and innovative services on line.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that an amendment will be offered today by a number of my colleagues, including the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN). This amendment further clarifies the important consumer protections that are included in this bill. I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) and his colleagues for their constructive work on this amendment and recognize that he and several other Members of his party have made valuable contributions to this process, instead of trying to undermine it.

Mr. Chairman, I will support this amendment and I ask that all Members of the House do the same. I urge my colleagues to rise above partisan politics and support H.R. 1714.

Mr. Chairman, in September, the Banking Committee raised with the Commerce Committee the need to make clear that the ''the autonomy of parties'' provision of the reported version of H.R. 1714 was not intended to limit the authority of the Federal banking agencies to impose and enforce minimum safety and soundness standards for the use of electronic signatures and records by entities they regulate. I want to assure the Banking Committee today that the language in Section 103(a)(4) of the modified text before us this afternoon was drafted so as to accommodate those concerns. Nothing in this bill should be interpreted to interfere with the authority of federal banking agencies to impose and enforce minimum safety and soundness standards for the use of electronic signatures and records by entities they regulate.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to express considerable affection and respect for the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), my good friend and the chairman of the committee. But I want to observe that he is in error on a number of important points.

First of all, we did have 2 weeks of negotiation and we were making good progress. Second of all, the gentleman from Virginia terminated the discussions and brought the bill to the floor without completing the negotiations. I would observe we were making good progress. I would observe we could have made further good progress and we could have a bill which could pass unanimously. Regrettably, we do not because there are important consumer protections which are missing from this bill.

The haste is charged up to partisanship. Well, that might perhaps tell more about the author of that statement than it does about anybody else. In point in fact, our concern here is protecting consumers and I will address that question as I go forward in my statement.

Mr. Chairman, I also would observe something else and that is that there is no magic to completing this legislation now, nor is there magic in completing it within 14 days. Completing legislation well in a fashion which serves the interests of all parties, those who would engage in electronic commerce and those who would be consumers and customers of those who engage in electronic commerce, is in the best traditions of this institution.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would observe something else. The future of the American economy depends upon our making this new form of conducting business a success, one which can be accepted by all and which can be regarded as being fair indeed to all. Unfortunately, the bill before us contains major flaws that harm consumers, and I regret that the gentleman from Virginia did not give us more time in which to complete those matters.

Regrettably, I therefore must oppose the bill in its current form. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) did work closely with the minority to correct some of the deficiencies. I regret, however, that gaps remain, some of which are indeed serious.

It is interesting to note that many of the companies recommending and representing the high-tech community do not oppose the consumer protections which we think should be included. Regrettably, a small but nevertheless important minority of business interests continues to oppose consumer protections in any form. Those are not, regrettably, people in the electronic commerce business. Those are simply people in the financial interests of this country which want to have it all their way, and I can sympathize with my friend from Virginia in dealing with such an obdurate lot.

An amendment today which will be offered will seek to improve the legislation, and I commend the authors of the legislation, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO), the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), and others. Unfortunately, the amendment would improve certain aspects of the bill but, unfortunately, it still falls short.

The Bliley bill, even with the Inslee amendment, would harm consumers in several ways. First, it would not require any notice, conspicuous or otherwise, that consumers are entitled to receive certain records in writing under existing law. Before choosing to receive these documents electronically, I believe consumers should be given specific notice as to what existing rights they are giving up. Regrettably, the Bliley bill leaves consumers in the dark on this matter.

Secondly, the opt-in provision as currently structured in the bill before us would allow all sorts of dissimilar records to be bundled together giving, at best, confusion to the consumers and would require them to essentially take an all-or-nothing approach in which records they agree to receive electronically.

Clearly, there are records and records, and clearly they should and can be easily treated differently by the consumers and the purchasers.

In effect, an on-line merchant could require consumers to take it or leave it, thereby defeating the will of the parties, and especially the consumers, to receive some records electronically, but not others that they would prefer to receive in a traditional form.

Finally, the bill would allow merchants to vitiate contracts entirely if consumers do not agree to opt in to receiving records electronically. That is not an option. In the law it is called a ''contract of adhesion'' and in a word it is a contract which is not equal and in which the parties are not equal parties to a contract.

Clearly, if we are seeking to improve the attitude of consumers and to earn their trust, this is not the way that the matter should be handled. The administration shares these concerns and strongly supports the substitute which I will offer today with the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE).

The administration has additional concerns, as do I, concerning the effect of this bill in on-line transactions. For these reasons I urge a ''no'' vote on H.R. 1714 and urge my colleagues to support the substitute which has been made in order by the Committee on Rules.

The substitute would take an important first step, fully recognizing the validity of electronic signatures in contract law. That is good. The legislation will give Congress the additional time to explore the effect on consumers of the new electronic contract laws to the myriad of important records and documents that accompany these agreements. It also would avoid stomping on the actions of legislatures in having created and in addressing contract problems, as they have traditionally done under the historic laws of the United States, wherein the matters of ordinary commerce are dealt with by the several States and dealt with well, indeed, under things like the Uniform Commercial Code.

Mr. Chairman, I see no reason for supplanting the knowledge, reason, and expertise and the traditions which have vested in the legislatures the ability to address these questions by adding a whole new array of changes which may or may not be in the consumers' interest and may not be in the interest of business in the United States and which clearly are opposed by consumer groups and by the administration.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield 15 minutes of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) to control as he sees fit.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN).

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), chairman of the Committee on Commerce, for yielding me this time. I particularly want to commend him for this legislative effort and, like him, I want to thank particularly the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO) of our committee who has done such great work over the years in helping to develop an electronic signature bill for the E-commerce age, and the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) and others for working with the chairman of the committee in offering a very helpful amendment that we are going to hear about later today.

Mr. Chairman, let me first say that this bill obviously has the support of an incredible array of business groups, including the United States Chamber, which is going to score this as one of our major votes this year because business sees this, of course, as a major step forward in the development of electronic commerce for our country and our country's economy.

But I want to speak more importantly about the impact of this E-SIGN bill on consumers. I think we all agree that consumers are the backbone of the electronic commerce model. If consumers do not feel comfortable, if they do not feel at ease with this new technology, then they are going to lose confidence in the growing electronic commerce of our country and the world, and that is certainly a result no one wants.

I understand, Mr. Chairman, that over 10 million Americans are going to join in the electronic commerce revolution this Christmas and make purchases for their Christmas gifts over the Internet.

□ 1245

But as more and more consumers come to use the Internet and the electronic commerce, this E–SIGN bill is going to become more and more important. This bill strikes, I think, the right balance. It recognizes that we are moving toward electronic transactions and then allows many types of transactions to take place over the Internet while, at the same time, it continues to provide the protections that consumers have been accustomed to in the world of paper and written checks and contracts, and in the analog world itself.

H.R. 1714, which I was very pleased to join the gentleman from Virginia

(Chairman BLILEY) in sponsoring in its onset, recognizes that there are important State and Federal laws that protect consumers today such as the requirement that consumers be provided copies of important documents such as warrants, notices, and disclosures.

This bill recognizes and retains these important consumer protection laws and develops a system whereby consumers can choose to accept electronic versions of the documents and then receive them electronically. Understand, consumers choose to do so.

It furthermore provides that consumers must separately and affirmatively opt in and consent to receiving important documents electronically and then must be assured that those documents can be retained for future use. That is why this bill has the right balance, good for business, good for consumers.

Let me say a word in opposition to the substitute that we will see. The substitute would apply only to contracts.

Let me give an example of what the substitute will miss. Today we spend almost $4 billion handling paper checks with an electronic commerce world; $4 billion could be saved for consumers if, in fact, we could literally bank electronically without the necessity of all this paper. Imagine all the weight this paper has in the transport industries as cargo on planes. If one eliminates all that paper in our lives and in the shipment and cargoes and transportation, those kind of savings are ours if we reject the substitute and stick with the main bill.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by thanking the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), dean of the House and the ranking member of the Committee on Commerce, for sharing the time in general debate with the Committee on the Judiciary that I represent on this side.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we all know there are millions of Internet users and millions of consumers, and that this number increases daily. It has been said here earlier, electronic commerce is the future of our economy. As more and more people buy and sell merchandise on-line, we find that e-commerce has made life easier for people as well as improved our overall economy by making shopping and other commercial transactions far more convenient.

I want to enact Federal legislation that would facilitate electronic signatures and make e-commerce more robust. We need to ensure that contracts are not denied validity that they otherwise would have simply because they are in electronic form or signed electronically.

Now, if the measure before us did this without doing violence to our most cherished and long-fought consumer protections, I would be supporting it without reservation. Now, especially with the recent decision in the Microsoft case, which suggests that a high-tech giant may not always be friendly to consumers, it makes it even more important than ever that consumers have confidence in the Internet and that they believe it is friendly and a friendly place to do business. This is critical to the future of this whole industry.

It is only when consumers have confidence in on-line transactions that it will become the vibrant marketplace that it can be. The high-tech community should not let itself be hijacked by security firms or banks or the insurance industry whose history with respect to consumers has not always been what we would wish it to be. The on-line community should be in the forefront of consumer protection. Instead, they are being dragged backwards by special interests.

That is where I hope that I may be able to be of some small help in this debate, because this measure, as it is written, goes far beyond the needs of the vast majority of on-line businesses. H.R. 1714 has become an 11th hour grab bag for our special interests to hurt consumers by undermining critical laws that require notice of rights and that prevent unscrupulous business people, of which, unfortunately, there are some, from cheating unsuspecting customers.

Because of the special interests overreaching, what started as an uncontroversial bill to validate electronic signatures and contracts has turned into a battle over the electronic records of every type imaginable. Let us try to rescue this measure from that kind of a result.

So for this reason, instead of considering a bill that should be a win-win situation, both for consumers and e-commerce, we are now being pressured into voting on a bill that pits the opportunities of one against the rights of the other.

It is, therefore, no surprise that the bill is opposed by our administration. It is opposed by consumer groups. It is opposed by the National Conference of State Legislatures and the United Automobile Workers and many others.

So what we have here is, unfortunately, a very good idea that has attached to it provisions that undermine consumer protection laws that would require notice, warranties, and disclosures to be in writing because it permits consumers to unwittingly click away many of these rights.

For example, critical notices regarding the cancellation or change in terms of insurance agreements or a change in the interest rate or the service or the change of a servicer of a mortgage, of recall notices, and other warranty information could be sent electronically or posted on a Web site regardless of whether the person owns a computer, which it may not come as news to you, many people do not, or whether the consumer has an e-mail account, which they may not, or whether they know how to navigate the World Wide Web even if they have the technology, some of which do not.

Furthermore, this measure stands for the proposition that the States somehow do not have the ability to enact their own electronic commerce laws or to reinstate many additional consumer protections.

So rather than respecting the tradition in our country of hundreds of years that reserves contract law to the States, the bill says that the States, that they may only reenact supplemental consumer legislation if it fits into a narrowly described category.

So far, thus, even if a State wanted to maintain its protections against fraudulent or deceptive practices and automobile sales, for example, the Federal Government would in effect tell the State that it cannot do so.

So for these and other reasons, we have created, along with the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and the other Members, a substitute that represents the bipartisan language agreed on by Members of the other body, Members, Senator ABRAHAM and Senator LEAHY, that satisfies the needs of the high-tech community which we laud without sacrificing consumers in the process.

So I urge that my colleagues reserve their support for this substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAVIS) in strong support of this legislation.

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation and also familiar with the need to provide legal certainty to electronic signatures and electronic records. That is why I eagerly cosponsored this legislation, because I think it is time for Congress to take positive, not regulatory, steps to help promote growth and development of electronic commerce.

Late last week, we were surprised by the minority leadership. They must have decided that appearing to oppose high-technology legislation was not the political stance, so they decided to introduce their own electronic signature bill, H.R. 3220, which we will be considering later today as a substitute amendment.

Unfortunately, that legislation falls way short of what is needed. The appearance of supporting technology legislation is not enough. There has to be substance behind that appearance. I believe that H.R. 3220 falls short.

Last week on the floor, I spoke at length about the important consumer protections contained in this legislation, H.R. 1714, and tried to rebut some of the claims that this was bad for consumers. I would like to briefly touch on some of those points.

First, consumers are absolutely free to choose or not to choose to enter into an electronic transaction. Nothing requires any party to use or accept electronic records or electronic signatures. The bill simply offers consumers the option to engage in electronic transactions. If a consumer does choose to conduct an on-line transaction, that consumer is protected by the underlying Federal or State laws governing that transaction.

If a law requires that a notice or a disclosure be made available in writing to a consumer, then those traditional writings must continue to be delivered to the consumer. Nothing in this bill, nothing, will nullify such existing State consumer protection laws.

Let me reiterate. Under H.R. 1714, consumers must be provided with important notices, disclosures, or other documents as they are entitled to receive under the current law.

Before a consumer can receive an electronic copy of an important document, such as a warranty or a disclosure, a consumer must separately and affirmatively consent to receive such a document electronically. That is, a consumer must specifically approve of receiving electronic documents and that portion of a contractor agreement telling a consumer what documents he or she will receive electronically.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation. The companies and manufacturers that use electronic technology, along with on-line users, need this legislation.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) has 15½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) has 7½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO).

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Michigan, the distinguished ranking member of the House Committee on Commerce, for granting me the 2 minutes, especially since we hold opposing views on this. But I sincerely appreciate it.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1714, and I urge my colleagues to do support its passage.

I would like to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), the distinguished chairman of the full committee, for his work on the legislation and for all of my colleagues for their interest in this very important public policy area.

As many of my colleagues know, I have a legislative history on the issue of electronic signatures in the Congress, having introduced the first piece of legislation addressing this issue in the last Congress and succeeding in passing it into law. That bill required Federal agencies to make government forms available on-line and accept a person's electronic signature on these forms.

In this Congress, I introduced a bill to expand the legality of electronic signatures to the private sector. Today, we are going to discuss a very important amendment to the bill of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), which I believe improves the bill as it relates to consumer protections.

The bill includes technical neutrality, and it grants to States who have not yet adopted legislation in this area this piece of legislation; and if they so wish to come up with more stringent legislation in a given period of time, they then can do so.

I believe that the Congress must ensure that no roadblocks exist which would stymie the growth of e-commerce. So I think the Congress must act to bridge the gap between now and the time when every State has passed an updated form of the Uniform State Law Code. The projections for the growth of e-commerce and its effect on our economy are just simply too overwhelming. Business to business e-commerce was nearly five times greater than e-commerce in the consumer market, reaching $43 billion just last year.

This bill ensures that our laws do not impede this staggering growth, and with the adoption of the amendment that we are going to discuss, and which I am proud to offer with my colleague, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), and several other Democrats, the bill takes a major step in guaranteeing that strong consumer protections can coexist with transactions in cyberspace. I think that we can do both, Mr. Chairman, and I am proud to support this bill, H.R. 1714, and urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY).

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1714.

Last Thursday, Mr. Chairman, the House passed legislation to modernize the laws that govern our financial services industry. The laws we changed were more than 60 years old and had been bypassed in recent years by the marketplace. Congress was in many ways just trying to catch up with what had already happened. The lessons we learned in that debate I think are quite clear. If Congress cannot respond quickly to the changes in the marketplace and update the applicable laws, the inevitable result will be more harm than good. The longer we wait to act, the more entrenched the various factions will become, making it more difficult for legislation with each passing day.

We do not need another web of inconsistent State laws and Federal regulations that will leave consumers and businesses guessing whether their contract is valid or not just because it was conducted on line. Let us understand that the world is changing and the Congress needs to change the laws to reflect those inevitable changes. Electronic commerce is growing exponentially and will continue to change the way we conduct our business. Given the opportunity before us to enhance electronic commerce in the same manner the marketplace has, it would be foolish to a large extent not to provide the legal certainty that will benefit consumers and facilitate commerce. Our laws need to keep up with the significant technological developments.

This bill, sponsored by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), is designed to bring legal certainty to electronic transactions. Legal certainty. The parties need to understand that when they sign that contract there is a legal binding obligation on both of them, and the handwritten signature more and more becomes less and less significant.

Mr. Chairman, this is another essential step necessary for our economy to take advantage of the efficiencies of electronic commerce. This is the same exact legislation most of us supported just last week. I will also be supporting the amendment by our friend, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), who will be offering that recordkeeping provision and clarifying the recordkeeping provisions of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is good public policy and it continues a strong tradition by the Committee on Commerce of enacting legislation that keeps up with the electronic marketplace that is changing so dramatically. I urge strong support of this legislation.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN), a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to appear today in favor of 1714, especially after the Inslee amendment is adopted. I would like to say that some of the tinge of rhetoric that approaches partisanship, I think, is unfortunate.

I am privileged to serve with the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member, who really has played such a leadership role in so many high-tech issues this year, including the patent reform bill and the Y2K reform bill. I mean we are here because we are dealing with difficult times, a transition from the analog world to the digital world, and I think that as we do that, we have to create a transition rule for the parts of the country that are not where Silicon Valley is yet.

In doing so, I think it is important that we establish some principles. I heard the distinguished Member from Michigan mention contracts of adhesion, and clearly contracts of adhesion violate contract law. I think it needs to be emphasized that nothing in this bill amends contract law other than the means of transmission. The medium for transmission does not change the substance of the law. A contract is a contract is a contract.

We recognize that because we are in a transition area there are certain things that are too high risk to have fully in electronic commerce in this transition period, including foreclosures of real property and the like, that are outlined in the bill of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), but it is important that we take a step forward to promote electronic commerce.

How do I do it? We bought our last car on line. And when I get the notices, I just click and file those notices under my commercial receipts file in my e-mail account. When I go to amazon.com, and they send me the notices of where my books are on the way, I file those in a pending file. Some day, all of us will do that.

For now, this bill, with the amendment, will allow all of America to move forward.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA), a distinguished member of the committee.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), for yielding me this time, and I compliment him for his efforts and his leadership.

The American people want action, they just do not want words. And when we add this to the Telecommunications Act of 1996, and as was mentioned earlier the Financial Modernization Act that was passed overwhelmingly by the House and Senate last week, I think the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) deserves a lot of credit from this Congress because, ultimately, it means good things for the American consumers, more jobs, and coming out on the side of growth, such as the case with the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act.

I rise today in support of H.R. 1714, the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act. As of today, the success of electronic commerce has led 44 States to enact laws to provide recognition for electronic signatures and records. However, all 44 statutes are different and many only recognize the use of electronic signatures and records in governmental transactions. In today's global economy, a certain level of uniformity is necessary in order to conduct the business over State and international borders. That is common sense.

While electronic commerce, in theory, represents the perfect model of interstate commerce, these many conflicting standards lead to legal uncertainty, to the point where it becomes impossible to effectively use electronic signatures in the digital arena.

H.R. 1714 creates a uniform nationwide legal standard for the use and acceptance of electronic signatures and electronic records in interstate commerce. It allows parties the freedom to set their own rules for using electronic signatures and electronic records in interstate commerce. Any contracts or agreements developed electronically by the agreeing parties have full legal effect.

H.R. 1714 furthermore recognizes the progress that States have already made in the area of electronic signatures and allows them to pass any statute that complies with the basic principles of this Federal bill.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important bill. It is common sense and it puts Congress on the side of facilitating and encouraging economic growth instead of standing in its way.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN).

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the entire body wholly supports and we want to use this opportunity to encourage the growth of the Internet and e-commerce, but moving to a digital world, moving to the world of the Internet, it does not follow that every principle of Federalism and every principle of consumer protection should be wiped out, obviated and extinguished in the name of advancing e-commerce and e-contracts and e-signatures.

Eliminating hard fought laws, both State and Federal, that make sure that a consumer has the information that they need to make informed decisions takes us back to the age of scams and frauds, but this time in the on-line environment. We have been so successful in developing a legal environment that gives consumers' rights and assures that outlaw merchants are dealt with, it is not necessary and it benefits no one for the Internet to become the place for unscrupulous businesses to flourish. My fear is that H.R. 1714, the underlying bill sponsored by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), would lead us down that path.

The high-tech industries are seeking an immediate Federal law validating electronic contract formation to help pave the way for the growth of electronic commerce until States can adopt a recently promulgated Uniform Electronic Transaction Act. We need to provide that help, but H.R. 1714 goes way, way beyond this need. It satisfies a much broader, much more controversial, long-range desire of financial services and insurance industries to accomplish the goal of the financial services.

H.R. 1714 seriously undercuts hard fought consumer protections as well as both Federal and State regulatory requirements. The bill threatens a State's ability to adopt a uniform State law with a permanent preemption provision.

The National Conference of State Legislatures, in their letter of November 1, opposes H.R. 1714, stating that the legislation will eviscerate consumer protections and impede the States' insurance securities and banking agencies in their regulatory oversight of the financial services industry. This from the State legislatures.

In a letter we received today, the National Consumers Law Center, the United Auto Workers, and the Consumers Union expressed their opposition for the underlying bill, and even with the Inslee amendment, and their support for the Dingell-Conyers-LaFalce-Gephardt substitute.

States and the Federal Government should have the opportunity to review their writing requirements and determine which can be done away with and which standards should apply in each specific situation where electronic records may be substituted. A reckless uninformed broad-brush approach, such as we see in H.R. 1714, is offensive to this notion. We cannot blindly wipe away State and Federal writing requirements and then provide a narrow patchwork of exceptions and opportunities for only States, not the Federal Government, not Federal regulatory agencies, to reestablish requirements where needed after some disastrous systemic failure.

The substitute amendment offered by the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and his colleagues, provides the needed uniformity as to contract formation. It gives the boost that is needed for e-commerce without interfering with existing laws that address writing requirements for important notices, disclosures, or retained records necessary for regulatory or supervisory government activities.

This amendment, the Dingell amendment, is the very same language as the bipartisan compromise reached by Mr. ABRAHAM and Mr. LEAHY in the Senate. If H.R. 1714 were to pass the House, it would never see the light of the day in the Senate, it would be vetoed by the administration, and it would mark us as supporting an anti-consumer bill.

I urge opposition to the bill and support for the Dingell-Conyers amendment.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Roanoke, Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE).

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I especially want to thank the gentleman from Virginia, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, for his leadership on this issue. He has been at the forefront of this issue throughout this Congress, and this is vitally important legislation that I urge my colleagues to support and to oppose any substitutes or any alternatives.

The previous gentleman made reference to protecting consumers. In my opinion, this legislation does more to help consumers in the transactions that they participate in than anything that we could do with relation to making sure that they get prompt and adequate disclosure about contracts they sign.

□ 1315

None of the current Federal or State laws are abrogated in terms of notices that go to consumers regarding particular transactions that they participate in. They simply will be allowed to receive those notices electronically now. And that has a number of very positive benefits.

First, it is faster. If there is a change in circumstances, if there is a problem with a product, a defect, they are going to get that notice much more quickly electronically than they will get it through the mail.

Secondly, it is cheaper. Some types of financial transactions are 100 times more costly to conduct in person than they are if they can conduct the transaction electronically. And if they are dealing with somebody on the other side of the country, the delay in being able to participate in that and close that contract, because we do not have a nationally recognized standard for accepting digital signatures, is very costly to consumers as well as to other people. Business people engage in business-to-business transactions, as well.

But probably the most important reason why this is more helpful to consumers than current law is that the information they get will be better; it will be more comprehensive.

If they have a notice about a particular disclosure that is required under the law for a real estate closing or a bank loan, whatever the case might be, and they do not understand a particular word in that notice, under electronically transmitted information, the bank or the other company providing the information can put a whole host of other information online. They can click on a particular word in that notice and get an explanation of it, a definition of the word, if they do not understand what it means in that particular context.

So from the standpoint of the consumer, this is vitally important.

Secondly, from the standpoint of uniformity, of having one national area of commerce to be able to conduct business across State lines without the difficulties that come from a morass of, a variety of different laws from different States, that is vitally important.

Now, instead of being only able to buy from people nearby them all governed by the same State law, people are now empowered to buy things by auction or other ways on-line from a whole host of different ways.

I urge Members to reach across the line. We have had some differences on this bill. Let us have a strong bipartisan vote. It had almost a two-thirds vote when it came up under suspension. Let us give it a majority here today.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Washington State (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1714 after completion of our amendment.

I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) for their guidance and longtime leadership on consumers issues. They have helped me craft this amendment in a way that I think will help consumers.

I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman BLILEY) for his courtesy in trying to put this together.

Mr. Chairman, I want to tell my colleagues that I believe we have a product, after completion of our amendment, that is pro-consumer. I will tell my colleagues two reasons. Number one, this is a consumer freedom bill. It gives consumers a new freedom and the freedom to be allowed to receive information and complete transactions electronically, a right, a freedom that will remain theirs and theirs alone. Only consumers will have the prerogative to decide whether or not transactions are electronic.

Secondly, Mr. Chairman, I want to make abundantly clear throughout this debate, nothing in my amendment or the bill, nothing, not one word, will remove one single consumer protection to receive a notice of any law in this country State, Federal, or municipal. Look at page 3 of our amendment. Nothing will remove the right to get this notice.

All it does is it changes from papyrus or lambskin to electronic at the consumer's request.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time do we have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) has 8 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) has 1½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO).

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill. I would have opposed the rule had I been here and requested a rollcall vote. The fact of the matter is, late in the session, first this is attempted to be passed on suspension of the rules. It has been a moving target for the last 3 weeks in terms of how this bill can be sold to the Members of this body.

I think any discussion or evaluation of this measure yields more and more problems that are inherent in the bill. The fundamental bill in terms of electronic signatures, as has been pointed out by some of my other colleagues, probably could have been passed with near unanimous support in this body.

The fact is that this bill does not just deal with electronic signature but goes on to invade a plethora of both State and national laws which are at the heart, basically, of financial transactions and consumer protection, which have received the deliberate judgment of this Congress for decades and, I trust, that of legislatures across this country.

It fundamentally invalidates any State law and a host of Federal laws that are inconsistent with the provisions of this bill. It permits consumers simply on the assumption that they understand what is in the disclosure documents and records to dispense with them and to receive them electronically.

I would just suggest that the efforts to date to try and repair this by virtue of accepting something like the Inslee amendment simply sugarcoats the end result. The end result will be the same.

I appreciate the effort of the gentleman to try and protect consumers. But, in the end, I think that that proposal may make something more palatable that is indigestible in terms of what goes down.

This bill fundamentally is an overreach. It sunsets all of these State laws with the right for States to come back and reenact them.

Well, we all know the host of special interest groups that are going to be there waiting to oppose that both at the Federal and State level such enactment. It just is breathtaking. And it is dumping and reneging on consumer laws that exist and protect individuals.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the amendment, and against the underlying legislation. While I favor an implementation of the use of electronic signatures, this measure sets a policy path of electronic commerce and computer dependence, and strips key federal and consumer safeguards and protections from transactions.

I have deep reservations about this legislation for reasons which I brought forth on the floor last week. One specific concern which I raised at that time was that H.R. 1714 completely undermines protections afforded by laws and regulations such as the Consumer Credit Protection Act, Truth in Saving, the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act and other key consumer laws such as the Magnuson Moss Act, which is the federal law requiring basic information about the extent and limitations of warranties to consumers.

I requested to offer an amendment last night at rules which would add these protections to the provisions excluded in the bill, so that these laws would not be overridden. Unfortunately, this amendment was not made in order by the Rules Committee. By preserving, not preempting the requirements of these laws that afford consumers key information at the right time before, during and after transactions are consummated, the Vento amendment would have assured that essential information required by federal laws and regulations would not be made electronically when a consumer might not have a computer, might have a broken computer or printer, might acquire a new e-mail address or service provider, or might not clearly understand the importance of notifications or disclosures that they assent to obtaining electronic electronically, never to read or know if they missed it. Without these protections, populations like our seniors who are already at a technological disadvantage will be rendered even more vulnerable.

I also offered an amendment which would have added a new section providing privacy protections to this legislation. This too was rejected by the Rules Committee. Digital signatures will make it easier for consumers to buy goods and services directly from the comfort of their own homes, and allows businesses an unprecedented opportunity to reach more customers. This expansion of e-Commerce, however, should not come at the expense of allowing for the misuse or exploitation of a wide range of consumer data. This amendment would have allowed consumers to regain some control over their own personal information without unnecessarily hindering Internet services which collect information for legitimate purposes, and replace the self regulated environment that is being promoted today—without standards or compliance and no enforcement. It is unworkable and unacceptable.

Specifically, my amendment would have disallowed any Internet service from passing on information to a third party unless clear and conspicuous notice is provided and consumers are allowed an opportunity to direct that the information not be shared. In addition, consumers would be able to require a copy of the information compiled about them at no charge, and allowed to review, verify or correct such data. Internet services would still be able to share information with their affiliates, allowing them to perform necessary transactional services and functions. Most importantly, this amendment would have ensured that those businesses which offer services or products over the Internet take affirmative responsibility to maintain the integrity of the information being accumulated.

Recently, the House included privacy provisions into the Financial Services Modernization legislation. This was a step forward in the arena of providing safeguards for consumer data. However, we are all well aware that concerns regarding the protection of consumer data go far beyond the realm of the financial world. It is important that we in Congress support a clear and consistent message when dealing with the issue of information collection and use. This amendment would expand privacy regulations to ensure that consumers as well as businesses are able to utilize technology to its fullest potential without infringing on the basic right to privacy.

Some of my other concerns have been addressed by the Dingell/Conyers/LaFalce/Gephardt amendment, which I have cosponsored. This substitute amendment recognizes that in order to be successful, e-Commerce can not pit high-tech business against consumers. Additionally, it deals with another problem which I raised last week, by not undermining State rights and judgment in dealing with issues such as what records must be retained in paper forms and when and how consumers must be notified about changing circumstances or enforcement of key contract terms. Additionally, it provides that a contract may not be denied legal effect or enforceability solely because an electronic signature or electronic record was used in its formation. These are common sense measures which ensure that consumers are not the unsuspecting victims in the excitement to embrace technological advances in commercial dealings.

In conclusion, I feel that the House should address the issue of electronic signatures in its totality, and H.R. 1714 fails to address several areas which should be further improved. The consequences of moving too quickly on the implementation of legislation which will expand e-Commerce can not be underestimated. The law of unintended consequences should be avoided by not over reaching with the underlying measure. With the vast potential that the Internet promises, it is vital that we consider the interests and needs of businesses, the industry and consumers equally, so that everyone can benefit from this venture.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot about the digital divide. And certainly one exists between those school systems and communities who can afford to be wired and those who cannot.

But there is also a digital divide in the Congress. It is between those who understand the new economy and what constructive role we can play in it and those who are afraid of it and feel the need to protect us from it.

The people who are using the Internet with their computers around the country tend to be more confident of themselves than we are of them and their ability to use the New Economy to their advantage. They, in many ways, are more knowledgeable than we are about the role that computers can play in making their lives easier and more productive. They certainly want to be empowered to have the choice of whether or not they will use their computer to maximum advantage because they are far more interested in opportunity than in security.

In fact, when they were recently asked in a survey what was more important to them, opportunity or security, they saw opportunity overwhelmingly as more important to them. They wanted to be able to protect themselves, certainly, but they feel empowered to do that on their own. .

The fact is that the consumers that will be affected by this bill will be empowered, will be advantaged by this legislation. It is not just companies who will be able to operate more efficiently. It is consumers who want the ability to use their computers, to use the Internet in the most efficient and effective and legal, manner possible.

The fact is that in this bill consumers who will be using e-commerce, digitized signatures, have the opportunity to affirmatively and separately consent prior to receiving their notices electronically. It ensures that existing consumer protection laws that are in place today are maintained. The fact is that we build upon the laws that exist today.

This is going to come. It can either come with the support, the encouragement, the empowerment by the Congress, or it can come despite the Congress. We ought to work for and with the new economy, not in opposition to its culture and its opportunities.

My comments are really directed to my own party because I know that the opposition is well intentioned; and it is thoughtful and it is knowledgeable. But it is wrong and shortsighted. The reality is that what we are debating is already happening today.

Digitized signatures work. People find them to be not only easier to use but, in fact, entirely consistent with the economy in which they are operating. This will show that the Congress can be ahead of the curve, that Congress can play a constructive role, that the Congress can be leading instead of impeding. Instead of always trying to play catch-up like we had to do with the Financial Services Modernization Act.

Look to the consumers who are using the Internet. They are asking for this ability to use digitized signatures. This is what the new economy is all about. This is why we are so prosperous. We ought to be part of this progress by contributing to it and certainly not oppose thoughtful legislation like this.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT).

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT), my colleague on the Committee on the Judiciary.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT) is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. DELAHUNT. Mr. Chairman, I thank both gentlemen for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, at our hearings on the Committee on the Judiciary, we were told that legislation was needed to ensure the validity of electronic agreements entered into by private parties until the States are able to adopt the uniform electronic transactions act. In other words, it was needed to fill the gap until the States could act.

That made sense. But then the bill was hijacked. Instead of filling the gap, it preempted the field; it prohibits the States from enacting the uniform law, as California has just recently already done, in a way that preserves consumer protections. It even prohibit the States from reenacting those protections to the extent that we supersede them.

Now, how do people who only yesterday were waving the banner of States' rights and espousing federalism defend a bill that sets aside the will of the States in such a cavalier fashion?

Well, we hear the term ''uniformity.'' Yet, if uniformity were all they were after, they would have been satisfied to let the bill sunset as the uniform act is adopted by each of the States over the coming months. And they did not. It is not in the bill.

What the proponents of the bill really want is to arrest the process, to prevent the States from preserving consumer protection laws, which they want to do away with. It is that simple. It is one thing to try to ensure the validity of electronic signatures. I support that effort, and I am sure if that was the import of the legislation it would pass unanimously in this body. But it is another attempt to use this legislation as an end run around State consumer protection legislation. That is what this bill is all about.

I urge adoption of the substitute and defeat of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill and in support of the Dingell-Conyers-LaFalce-Gephardt substitute.

What we have here, Mr. Chairman, is a case of legislative hijacking. A bill intended to enhance the ease and security of electronic transactions has been commandeered. By a financial services industry that sees an opportunity to sweep aside a generation of state laws. Laws that enshrine such familiar and fundamental concepts as proper notice. Full disclosure. Informed consent. Truth in lending. Fair credit practices.

These laws have helped ensure that the ordinary citizen will not be taken advantage of by powerful commercial interests who have all the leverage. Who hold all the cards. And in so doing, these laws have helped maintain a thriving economy that depends on consumer confidence.

That is supposedly what this bill is about. Consumer confidence in electronic transactions. Yet ironically, by undermining state protections, this bill will erode consumer confidence. Not enhance it. If this bill becomes law, consumers will have fewer rights. And they will be less certain what rights they retain. Hardly a recipe for consumer confidence.

At our hearings, we were told that federal legislation was needed to ensure the validity of electronic agreements entered into by private parties until the states are able to adopt, the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act. In other words, it was needed to fill the gap until the states could act.

But then the bill was hijacked. Instead of filling the gap, it preempts the field. It prohibits the states from enacting the uniform law—as California has recently done—in a way that preserves consumer protections. It even prohibits the states from RE-enacting those protections to the extent we supersede them.

How do people who only yesterday were waving the banner of ''states rights'' defend a bill that sets aside the will of the states in so cavalier a fashion?

They do so in the name of ''uniformity.'' yet it uniformity were all they were after, they would have been satisfied to let this bill sunset as the Uniform Act is adopted by each of the states over the coming months.

What the proponents of the bill really want is to arrest that process. To prevent the states from preserving consumer protection laws which they want to do away with. It is one thing to try to ensure the viability of electronic signatures, and I support that effort. But it is another to use this legislation as an ''end run'' around state consumer protection laws.

Apart from the policy considerations, it raises serious constitutional questions. Given the recent holdings of the Supreme Court regarding the limits of congressional power, I have serious doubts that we have the authority to preclude the states from re-enacting laws in an area of commercial activity that lies so squarely within their traditional sphere of competence.

We should do all we can to embrace and encourage the development of electronic commerce. But if that brave new digital world is to provide hospitable to human habitation, we must take with us the great advances in the law that have made this world habitable.

I am ready and willing to support a bill that does this, Mr. Chairman, but the current proposal falls too far short of the mark. That is why it is opposed by the Administration, and by every major consumer organization in the country.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the bill and support the substitute.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) has 5 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA).

□ 1330

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I will not take the entire 2 minutes. I had not anticipated speaking on behalf of the general debate, but I certainly do rise in strong support of this proposal.

I want to make it clear here that this is not anti-consumer, it is both pro-business and pro-consumer, it really does not denigrate or eliminate any consumer protections that are currently in law, and it goes beyond that. I particularly am a strong supporter of the Inslee amendment and would like to speak on that at the appropriate time.

I want to congratulate the chairman of the Committee on Commerce for his leadership here. This is excellent legislation. As a member of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services, I will look forward to continuing to work in the future on other aspects of e-commerce as it relates to more specific banking legislation.

I rise today in strong support of H.R. 1714, the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act.

The bill accomplishes the two major, and often conflicting, goals of being both Pro Business and Pro Consumer. As we have heard, millions of Americans are shopping via the Internet everyday. The growth in e-commerce is expected to explode in the next 2 years with U.S. Consumers spending billions on line by the year 2001. E-commerce is happening as we speak. We here in Congress should do everything we can to promote e-commerce. I believe H.R. 1714 strikes the right balance between encouraging the growth of e-commerce while including common sense consumer protections.

The bill is Pro Business because it ensures that Internet transactions have the same legal effect and recognition as paper transactions. This is accomplished by establishment of a federal law which recognizes e-signatures as having the same force and effect as an ink signature. In addition, required records and disclosures may be delivered electronically IF the Consumer ''opts in''.

The bill is Pro Consumer because it encourages the growth of e-commerce—which has led to lower prices, greater choice and round the clock availability. These developments are all Pro Consumer.

Later on we are going to consider the Inslee/Eshoo/Dooley/Moan/Roukema Amendment. This Amendment includes several provisions from H.R. 2626, the Electronic Disclosures Delivery Act of 1999, which I introduced on September 1st along with Mr. INSLEE and Mr. LAZIO. The Amendment is pro consumer because it provides the additional consumer protections such as (1) Customer ''opt in'' for electronic delivery specifically required, (2) clear requirements on review, retention and printing of documents and disclosures, (3) the ability of a Customer to ''opt out'' of electronic delivery at any time.

I thought these were good provisions when I introduced H.R. 2626. I thought they were good provisions when proposed before the Rules Committee, and that is why I cosponsored the Inslee Amendment. It clearly improves the Bill and we should approve the Inslee Amendment later on when we have the opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is an extremely good bill. I urge strong support for H.R. 1714.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, the issue here is a very simple one. It is not about whether the contract may be signed electronically. Everyone here is in agreement that that is a good thing. It is about the notices which follow after that, notices of waste on a real estate contract, notice of failure to comply with requirements for insurance, failures of the electronic media to deliver.

An interesting thing to note would be that this proposal is going to come just in time, if it is signed into law, for the year 2K bug to bite. The question that has to be asked is what happens if the Internet provider is down and the individual does not get the notice. What happens if on that particular day there is a virus that contaminates the operation of the recipient or the sender, so the recipient never gets it. Look at the wide array of notices which are extremely important and which are protected in a wide array of State laws, notices of nonpayment of taxes, notices which would vitiate a mortgage, entitle the mortgagor to cancel or to foreclose. Those are things which would hurt the mortgagee.

I would ask my colleagues to understand that what we are trying to do here is not to stop electronic commerce or the signing of contracts electronically but, rather, to assure that a wider array of judgments are available to the purchaser and that he may then insist that he get, for very good reason, certain kinds of notices which he might view as being important. The mortgagor or the seller or the vendor under the contract has every right to ask that individual if he will then change the contract to waive those rights. But we are trying to protect historic rights that have always belonged to purchasers under written contracts under the law of the several States.

I would give Members just one last quote. Under Statement of Administration Policy, the administration makes this statement, and Members should be aware that they are probably looking at a veto here:

''The administration believes that en bloc amendments fall short of eliminating serious defects in H.R. 1714. The Secretaries of Commerce, Housing and Urban Development, and the Treasury will recommend the President veto H.R. 1714 with the en bloc amendments. For the reasons explained below and in the enclosed Statement of Administration Policy, the administration would support adoption of the Gephardt-Dingell-LaFalce-Conyers substitute.''

Let us try to pass something which will make progress, something which will protect consumers, something which will move forward electronic commerce but not something which affords enormous operation to hurt innocent purchasers around this country.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

This has been an interesting debate. First of all let me say that this bill came out of the Committee on Commerce unanimously August 5. We have worked with the minority. It was originally scheduled for October 18 on the floor. They asked for further consideration. We pulled it. And we worked. Everything was all in agreement. And then last Friday, the White House comes down here and gets a meeting with the Democrat leadership and all of a sudden this becomes a terrible bill. Nothing could be further from the truth. This is a thing to prevent this legislation being adopted on Republicans' watch.

Let me give Members a list of the people who support this legislation:

IBM, Information Technology Association of America, Information Technology Industry Council, Microsoft, American Insurance Association, Alliance of American Insurers, American Council of Life Insurance, Council of Insurance Agents and Brokers, National Association of Mutual Insurance Companies, National Association of Surety Bond Producers, Reinsurance Association of America, Securities Industry Association, America Online, America Electronics Association, GTE, MCI WorldCom, Cable and Wireless, DLJ Direct, PanAm Sat, Telecommunications Industry Association, National Retail Federation, Charles Schwab, Fidelity, Ford Motor Credit, National Association of Manufacturers, AT&T, U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and the Chamber will score this bill; Investment Company Institute, Yahoo, Equifax, International Biometric Industry Association, Consumer Mortgage Coalition, Financial Services Roundtable, Sallie Mae, Apple Computer, Hewlett-Packard, American Bankers Association, Consumer Bankers Association, the New York Stock Exchange, Business Software Alliance.

This is a good bill. Nobody in this legislation is coerced to do anything. They have to agree. And, working with the minority, we say that if there is anything to do with eviction, foreclosure, that this is exempted, it is carved out of here, you cannot do it this way.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill. We had a great vote a week ago. Let us not go back on that. Let us move the legislation forward, go to conference with the Senate, and then send legislation to the President.

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to H.R. 1714, the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act.

No one can deny what an amazing effect the Internet and electronic commerce has had on national and global commerce. The Internet has allowed some businesses to flourish in a global marketplace in a way not possible by traditional means.

The remarkable opportunities which the Internet and electronic commerce provides needs to be protected by ensuring that electronic signatures and contracts are held as legally valid and binding. H.R. 1714, however, is not the best bill to accomplish this because it achieves the goal of validating electronic signatures and contracts at the expense of American consumers.

If H.R. 1714 becomes law, we can expect that many of our Nation's consumers will unknowingly ''click away'' their rights because this bill does not ensure that any and all notices to consumers about their rights and the consequences of electronically signing their names be either clear or conspicuous. This is fundamentally unfair to consumers, especially those who may not yet be familiar with the concepts of the Internet and electronic commerce.

I urge my colleagues to protect consumers and reject H.R. 1714.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). All time for general debate has expired.

In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committees on Commerce and the Judiciary now printed in the bill, it shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule an amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and numbered 1. That amendment shall be considered read.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 1714

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act''.

TITLE I—VALIDITY OF ELECTRONIC RECORDS AND SIGNATURES FOR COMMERCE

SEC. 101. GENERAL RULE OF VALIDITY.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—With respect to any contract, agreement, or record entered into or provided in, or affecting, interstate or foreign commerce, notwithstanding any statute, regulation, or other rule of law, the legal effect, validity, or enforceability of such contract, agreement, or record shall not be denied—

(1) on the ground that the contract, agreement, or record is not in writing if the contract, agreement, or record is an electronic record; or

(2) on the ground that the contract, agreement, or record is not signed or is not affirmed by a signature if the contract, agreement, or record is signed or affirmed by an electronic signature.

(b) AUTONOMY OF PARTIES IN COMMERCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—With respect to any contract, agreement, or record entered into or provided in, or affecting, interstate or foreign commerce—

(A) the parties to such contract, agreement, or record may establish procedures or requirements regarding the use and acceptance of electronic records and electronic signatures acceptable to such parties;

(B) the legal effect, validity, or enforceability of such contract, agreement, or record shall not be denied because of the type or method of electronic record or electronic signature selected by the parties in establishing such procedures or requirements; and

(C) nothing in this section requires any party to use or accept electronic records or electronic signatures.

(2) CONSENT TO ELECTRONIC RECORDS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a) and paragraph (1) of this subsection—

(A) if a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that a record be provided or made available to a consumer in writing, that requirement shall be satisfied by an electronic record if—

(i) the consumer has separately and affirmatively consented to the provision or availability of such record, or identified groups of records that include such record, as an electronic record; and

(ii) has not withdrawn such consent; and

(B) if such statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that a record be retained, that requirement shall be satisfied if such record complies with the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (c)(1).

(c) RETENTION OF CONTRACTS, AGREEMENTS, AND RECORDS.—

(1) ACCURACY AND ACCESSIBILITY.—If a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that a contract, agreement, or record be in writing or be retained, that requirement is met by retaining an electronic record of the information in the contract, agreement, or record that—

(A) accurately reflects the information set forth in the contract, agreement, or record after it was first generated in its final form as an electronic record; and

(B) remains accessible, for the period required by such statute, regulation, or rule of law, for later reference, transmission, and printing.

(2) EXCEPTION.—A requirement to retain a contract, agreement, or record in accordance with paragraph (1) does not apply to any information whose sole purpose is to enable the contract, agreement, or record to be sent, communicated, or received.

(3) ORIGINALS.—If a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires a contract, agreement, or record to be provided, available, or retained in its original form, or provides consequences if the contract, agreement, or record is not provided, available, or retained in its original form, that statute, regulation, or rule of law is satisfied by an electronic record that complies with paragraph (1).

(4) CHECKS.—If a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires the retention of a check, that requirement is satisfied by retention of an electronic record of all the information on the front and back of the check in accordance with paragraph (1).

SEC. 102. AUTHORITY TO ALTER OR SUPERSEDE GENERAL RULE.

(a) PROCEDURE TO ALTER OR SUPERSEDE.—Except as provided in subsection (b), a State statute, regulation, or other rule of law may modify, limit, or supersede the provisions of section 101 if such statute, regulation, or rule of law—

(1)(A) constitutes an enactment or adoption of the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act as reported to the State legislatures by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws; or

(B) specifies the alternative procedures or requirements for the use or acceptance (or both) of electronic records or electronic signatures to establish the legal effect, validity, or enforceability of contracts, agreements, or records; and

(2) if enacted or adopted after the date of enactment of this Act, makes specific reference to this Act.

(b) LIMITATIONS ON ALTERATION OR SUPERSESSION.—A State statute, regulation, or other rule of law (including an insurance statute, regulation, or other rule of law), regardless of its date of enactment or adoption, that modifies, limits, or supersedes section 101 shall not be effective to the extent that such statute, regulation, or rule—

(1) discriminates in favor of or against a specific technology, process, or technique of creating, storing, generating, receiving, communicating, or authenticating electronic records or electronic signatures;

(2) discriminates in favor of or against a specific type or size of entity engaged in the business of facilitating the use of electronic records or electronic signatures;

(3) is based on procedures or requirements that are not specific or that are not publicly available; or

(4) is otherwise inconsistent with the provisions of this title.

(c) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding subsection (b), a State may, by statute, regulation, or rule of law enacted or adopted after the date of enactment of this Act, require specific notices to be provided or made available in writing if such notices are necessary for the protection of the safety or health of an individual consumer. A consumer may not, pursuant to section 101(b)(2), consent to the provision or availability of such notice solely as an electronic record.

SEC. 103. SPECIFIC EXCLUSIONS.

(a) EXCEPTED REQUIREMENTS.—The provisions of section 101 shall not apply to a contract, agreement, or record to the extent it is governed by—

(1) a statute, regulation, or other rule of law governing the creation and execution of wills, codicils, or testamentary trusts;

(2) a statute, regulation, or other rule of law governing adoption, divorce, or other matters of family law;

(3) the Uniform Commercial Code, as in effect in any State, other than sections 1-107 and 1-206 and Articles 2 and 2A;

(4) any requirement by a Federal regulatory agency or self-regulatory organization that records be filed or maintained in a specified standard or standards (including a specified format or formats), except that nothing in this paragraph relieves any Federal regulatory agency of its obligations under the Government Paperwork Elimination Act (title XVII of Public Law 105–277);

(5) the Uniform Anatomical Gift Act; or

(6) the Uniform Health-Care Decisions Act.

(b) ADDITIONAL EXCEPTIONS.—The provisions of section 101 shall not apply to—

(1) any contract, agreement, or record entered into between a party and a State agency if the State agency is not acting as a market participant in or affecting interstate commerce;

(2) court orders or notices, or official court documents (including briefs, pleadings, and other writings) required to be executed in connection with court proceedings; or

(3) any notice concerning—

(A) the cancellation or termination of utility services (including water, heat, and power);

(B) default, acceleration, repossession, foreclosure, or eviction, or the right to cure, under a credit agreement secured by, or a rental agreement for, a primary residence of an individual; or

(C) the cancellation or termination of health insurance or benefits or life insurance benefits (excluding annuities).

SEC. 104. STUDY.

(a) FOLLOWUP STUDY.—Within 5 years after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce, acting through the Assistant Secretary for Communications and Information, shall conduct an inquiry regarding any State statutes, regulations, or other rules of law enacted or adopted after such date of enactment pursuant to section 102(a), and the extent to which such statutes, regulations, and rules comply with section 102(b).

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress regarding the results of such inquiry by the conclusion of such 5-year period.

SEC. 105. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title:

(1) ELECTRONIC RECORD.—The term ''electronic record'' means a writing, document, or other record created, stored, generated, received, or communicated by electronic means.

(2) ELECTRONIC SIGNATURE.—The term ''electronic signature'' means information or data in electronic form, attached to or logically associated with an electronic record, and executed or adopted by a person or an electronic agent of a person, with the intent to sign a contract, agreement, or record.

(3) ELECTRONIC.—The term ''electronic'' means of or relating to technology having electrical, digital, magnetic, optical, electromagnetic, or similar capabilities regardless of medium.

(4) ELECTRONIC AGENT.—The term ''electronic agent'' means a computer program or an electronic or other automated means used independently to initiate an action or respond to electronic records in whole or in part without review by an individual at the time of the action or response.

(5) RECORD.—The term ''record'' means information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perceivable form.

(6) FEDERAL REGULATORY AGENCY.—The term ''Federal regulatory agency' means an agency, as that term is defined in section 552(f) of title 5, United States Code, that is authorized by Federal law to impose requirements by rule, regulation, order, or other legal instrument.

(7) SELF-REGULATORY ORGANIZATION.—The term ''self-regulatory organization'' means an organization or entity that is not a Federal regulatory agency or a State, but that is under the supervision of a Federal regulatory agency and is authorized under Federal law to adopt and administer rules applicable to its members that are enforced by such organization or entity, by a Federal regulatory agency, or by another self-regulatory organization.

TITLE II—DEVELOPMENT AND ADOPTION OF ELECTRONIC SIGNATURE PRODUCTS AND SERVICES

SEC. 201. TREATMENT OF ELECTRONIC SIGNATURES IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE.

(a) INQUIRY REGARDING IMPEDIMENTS TO COMMERCE.—

(1) INQUIRIES REQUIRED.—Within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and biennially thereafter, the Secretary of Commerce, acting through the Assistant Secretary for Communications and Information, shall complete an inquiry to—

(A) identify any domestic and foreign impediments to commerce in electronic signature products and services and the manners in which and extent to which such impediments inhibit the development of interstate and foreign commerce;

(B) identify constraints imposed by foreign nations or international organizations that constitute barriers to providers of electronic signature products or services; and

(C) identify the degree to which other nations and international organizations are complying with the principles in subsection (b)(2).

(2) SUBMISSION.—The Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress regarding the results of each such inquiry within 90 days after the conclusion of such inquiry. Such report shall include a description of the actions taken by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (b) of this section.

(b) PROMOTION OF ELECTRONIC SIGNATURES.—

(1) REQUIRED ACTIONS.—The Secretary of Commerce, acting through the Assistant Secretary for Communications and Information, shall promote the acceptance and use, on an international basis, of electronic signatures in accordance with the principles specified in paragraph (2) and in a manner consistent with section 101 of this Act. The Secretary of Commerce shall take all actions necessary in a manner consistent with such principles to eliminate or reduce, to the maximum extent possible, the impediments to commerce in electronic signatures, including those identified in the inquiries under subsection (a) for the purpose of facilitating the development of interstate and foreign commerce.

(2) PRINCIPLES.—The principles specified in this paragraph are the following:

(A) Free markets and self-regulation, rather than government standard-setting or rules, should govern the development and use of electronic records and electronic signatures.

(B) Neutrality and nondiscrimination should be observed among providers of and technologies for electronic records and electronic signatures.

(C) Parties to a transaction should be permitted to establish requirements regarding the use of electronic records and electronic signatures acceptable to such parties.

(D) Parties to a transaction—

(i) should be permitted to determine the appropriate authentication technologies and implementation models for their transactions, with assurance that those technologies and implementation models will be recognized and enforced; and

(ii) should have the opportunity to prove in court or other proceedings that their authentication approaches and their transactions are valid.

(E) Electronic records and electronic signatures in a form acceptable to the parties should not be denied legal effect, validity, or enforceability on the ground that they are not in writing.

(F) De jure or de facto imposition of standards on private industry through foreign adoption of regulations or policies with respect to electronic records and electronic signatures should be avoided.

(G) Paper-based obstacles to electronic transactions should be removed.

(c) CONSULTATION.—In conducting the activities required by this section, the Secretary shall consult with users and providers of electronic signature products and services and other interested persons.

(d) PRIVACY.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to require the Secretary or the Assistant Secretary to take any action that would adversely affect the privacy of consumers.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section, the terms ''electronic record'' and ''electronic signature'' have the meanings provided in section 104 of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act.

TITLE III—USE OF ELECTRONIC RECORDS AND SIGNATURES UNDER FEDERAL SECURITIES LAW

SEC. 301. GENERAL VALIDITY OF ELECTRONIC RECORDS AND SIGNATURES.

Section 3 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (15 U.S.C. 78c) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(h) REFERENCES TO WRITTEN RECORDS AND SIGNATURES.—

''(1) GENERAL VALIDITY OF ELECTRONIC RECORDS AND SIGNATURES.—Except as otherwise provided in this subsection—

''(A) if a contract, agreement, or record (as defined in subsection (a)(37)) is required by the securities laws or any rule or regulation thereunder (including a rule or regulation of a self-regulatory organization), and is required by Federal or State statute, regulation, or other rule of law to be in writing, the legal effect, validity, or enforceability of such contract, agreement, or record shall not be denied on the ground that the contract, agreement, or record is not in writing if the contract, agreement, or record is an electronic record;

''(B) if a contract, agreement, or record is required by the securities laws or any rule or regulation thereunder (including a rule or regulation of a self-regulatory organization), and is required by Federal or State statute, regulation, or other rule of law to be signed, the legal effect, validity, or enforceability of such contract, agreement, or record shall not be denied on the ground that such contract, agreement, or record is not signed or is not affirmed by a signature if the contract, agreement, or record is signed or affirmed by an electronic signature; and

''(C) if a broker, dealer, transfer agent, investment adviser, or investment company enters into a contract or agreement with, or accepts a record from, a customer or other counterparty, such broker, dealer, transfer agent, investment adviser, or investment company may accept and rely upon an electronic signature on such contract, agreement, or record, and such electronic signature shall not be denied legal effect, validity, or enforceability because it is an electronic signature.

''(2) IMPLEMENTATION.—

''(A) REGULATIONS.—The Commission may prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection consistent with the public interest and the protection of investors.

''(B) NONDISCRIMINATION.—The regulations prescribed by the Commission under subparagraph (A) shall not—

''(i) discriminate in favor of or against a specific technology, method, or technique of creating, storing, generating, receiving, communicating, or authenticating electronic records or electronic signatures; or

''(ii) discriminate in favor of or against a specific type or size of entity engaged in the business of facilitating the use of electronic records or electronic signatures.

''(3) EXCEPTIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection—

''(A) the Commission, an appropriate regulatory agency, or a self-regulatory organization may require that records be filed or maintained in a specified standard or standards (including a specified format or formats) if the records are required to be submitted to the Commission, an appropriate regulatory agency, or a self-regulatory organization, respectively, or are required by the Commission, an appropriate regulatory agency, or a self-regulatory organization to be retained; and

''(B) the Commission may require that contracts, agreements, or records relating to purchases and sales, or establishing accounts for conducting purchases and sales, of penny stocks be manually signed, and may require such manual signatures with respect to transactions in similar securities if the Commission determines that such securities are susceptible to fraud and that such fraud would be deterred or prevented by requiring manual signatures.

''(4) RELATION TO OTHER LAW.—The provisions of this subsection apply in lieu of the provisions of title I of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act to a contract, agreement, or record (as defined in subsection (a)(37)) that is required by the securities laws.

''(5) SAVINGS PROVISION.—Nothing in this subsection applies to any rule or regulation under the securities laws (including a rule or regulation of a self-regulatory organization) that is in effect on the date of enactment of the Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act and that requires a contract, agreement, or record to be in writing, to be submitted or retained in original form, or to be in a specified standard or standards (including a specified format or formats).

''(6) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this subsection:

''(A) ELECTRONIC RECORD.—The term 'electronic record' means a writing, document, or other record created, stored, generated, received, or communicated by electronic means.

''(B) ELECTRONIC SIGNATURE.—The term ''electronic signature'' means information or data in electronic form, attached to or logically associated with an electronic record, and executed or adopted by a person or an electronic agent of a person, with the intent to sign a contract, agreement, or record.

''(C) ELECTRONIC.—The term 'electronic' means of or relating to technology having electrical, digital, magnetic, optical, electromagnetic, or similar capabilities regardless of medium.''.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. No amendment to that amendment shall be in order except those printed in House Report 106–462. Each amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered read, debatable for the time specified in the report, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for a division of the question.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may postpone a request for a recorded vote on any amendment and may reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the time for voting on any postponed question that immediately follows another vote, provided that the time for voting on the first question shall be a minimum of 15 minutes.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 1 printed in House Report 106–462.

AMENDMENT NO. 1 OFFERED BY MR. INSLEE

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 1 offered by Mr. INSLEE:

In section 101(b), strike paragraph (2) and insert the following:

(2) CONSENT TO ELECTRONIC RECORDS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a) and paragraph (1) of this subsection—

(A) if a statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that a record be provided or made available to a consumer in writing, that requirement shall be satisfied by an electronic record if—

(i) the consumer has affirmatively consented, by means of a consent that is conspicuous and visually separate from other terms, to the provision or availability (whichever is required) of such record (or identified groups of records that include such record) as an electronic record, and has not withdrawn such consent;

(ii) prior to consenting, the consumer is provided with a statement of the hardware and software requirements for access to and retention of electronic records; and

(iii) the consumer affirmatively acknowledges, by means of an acknowledgement that is conspicuous and visually separate from other terms, that—

(I) the consumer has an obligation to notify the provider of electronic records of any change in the consumer's electronic mail address or other location to which the electronic records may be provided; and

(II) if the consumer withdraws consent, the consumer has the obligation to notify the provider of electronic records of the electronic mail address or other location to which the records may be provided; and

(B) the record is capable of review, retention, and printing by the recipient if accessed using the hardware and software specified in the statement under subparagraph (A)(ii) at the time of the consumer's consent; and

(C) if such statute, regulation, or other rule of law requires that a record be retained, that requirement shall be satisfied if such record complies with the requirements of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (c)(1).

At the end of section 101, add the following new subsections:

(d) ABILITY TO CONTEST SIGNATURES AND CHARGES.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit or otherwise affect the rights of any person to assert that an electronic signature is a forgery, is used without authority, or otherwise is invalid for reasons that would invalidate the effect of a signature in written form. The use or acceptance of an electronic record or electronic signature by a consumer shall not constitute a waiver of any substantive protections afforded consumers under the Consumer Credit Protection Act.

(e) SCOPE.—This Act is intended to clarify the legal status of electronic records and electronic signatures in the context of writing and signing requirements imposed by law. Nothing in this Act affects the content or timing of any disclosure required to be provided to any consumer under any statute, regulation, or other rule of law.

In section 102(c), strike ''safety or health of an individual consumer'' and insert ''public health or safety of consumers''.

In section 104, add at the end the following new subsection:

(c) ADDITIONAL STUDY OF DELIVERY.—Within 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Commerce shall conduct an inquiry regarding the effectiveness of the delivery of electronic records to consumers using electronic mail as compared with delivery of written records via the United States Postal Service and private express mail services. The Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress regarding the results of such inquiry by the conclusion of such 18-month period.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 366, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) each will control 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell Members what our goal was in drafting this amendment. Our goal basically is to assure an American's right to make the decision by themselves based on the information they have to receive information electronically and to form contracts electronically.

Our goal is based on the proposition something like this: If you read the Declaration of Independence, it reads just as well electronically as it does on a piece of paper. And when you receive information in an on-line transaction, if you want to purchase insurance, a car, a book, the information you are going to receive reads just as well electronically. Therefore, we have crafted an amendment that would assure that every consumer has a new right, and, that is, the right to decide they want to receive information electronically.

I want to point out several things about it. Number one, it makes sure that this is a decision made and has to be made affirmatively by an American. They have to affirmatively take an action to disclose they want to do business electronically. Number two, and very importantly, this makes very clear that any requirement of any government in America to give any notice will still exist after the passage of this bill if this amendment prevails.

I want to read the applicable section. It reads:

Nothing in this Act affects the content or timing of any disclosure required to be provided to any consumer under any statute, regulation, or other rule of law.

I read this because I have heard many other Members suggest that somehow consumers will lose the right to receive notifications. This is inaccurate. This amendment will assure that every notification a person is entitled to receive, they will still be entitled to receive.

Third, it makes abundantly clear, we added a provision that consumers have to be notified what hardware and software they need to receive this information so that they are not acting blindly. We have heard suggestions that somehow electronic commerce is inefficient, ineffective. I think we have to realize sometimes the mail gets eaten by the dog as well, or misplaced, and, in fact, if consumers want to do business electronically, they should be entitled to do so.

We have also, fifth, provided that the credit card rules, the limitations of liability, still apply in this context, if somebody steals your identity essentially.

And, sixth, we provide, and I think this is very important because I have heard some misinformation on the floor already in this regard. Where the law requires provision of a notice, where a business has to provide notice to a consumer, they will still be required to provide notice, not simply post it on a website.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN).

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Chairman, when do you have information? Ten years ago, I was in local government and we organized our court files electronically and allowed the sheriff to access those court files for jail management. I remember going over to talk to the then sheriff who had deputies handwriting the information down on pieces of paper off the screen.

I asked, ''Why are you doing this?'' He said, ''So we'll really have the information.''

Do you have the information when it is on the screen, on your hard drive, in your head, or when it is on a piece of paper? The answer is, in all of those cases. We are not changing any consumer law at all with this bill and with this amendment. What we are doing is allowing for the free flow of information on the Internet, so that we can have electronic commerce, so that information in the Information Age can flow.

I have heard many expressions really of anxiety by Members about the Information Age and the concept that you have information when it is electronic. Let me assure my colleagues that you do and consumers will be fully protected under the amendment.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I want to start off by commending my friends that are with the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) on his amendment. This is an important step forward. The problem is, it is still a half a loaf, and I appreciate the Democrats that are trying to improve it.

This amendment makes minor improvements in the underlying bill but, indeed, it makes it worse in several respects. That is why it is quite clear why financial services, industries and banks are supporting it and consumer groups are opposing it.

Here is why it is a backward step. It leaves to the courts to determine who bears the burden when an electronic disclosure notice is not received.

□ 1345

The bill does that. The Inslee amendment puts the burden squarely on the consumer's shoulders.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1714, the Bliley bill leaves it to the courts; the Inslee amendment leaves it to the consumer the responsibility of creating an affirmative obligation to notify a provider of a change of e-mail address.

Now, in addition, this will not be corrected by the Inslee amendment. No requirement that the consumer be told what legal rights he is waiving or to what types of records that is the notices, disclosures and statements, that the waiver applies to. Because both the bill and the amendment permit a consumer to waive writing requirements for groups, ''groups of records,'' and there is no requirement that the record be similar or relate to the same transaction. The consumer can, without any prior knowledge, waive all the future notices with one click.

This, I say to my colleagues, is the substance of what leads me to regretfully not be able to support the Inslee amendment. It does help in some respects, but in other respects, it is worse. For that reason I would urge that we think very carefully about this so-called improvement.

The amendment improves the opt-in by requiring it to be conspicuous and visually separate. But there is still no requirement that the consumer be told what legal rights he or she is waiving or what types of notices and disclosures the waiver applies to.

The Inslee amendment narrows the States' ability to reenact supplemental protective legislation for their citizens. This is not good. For that reason I ask that my colleagues critically evaluate this supposed improvement in the bill.

While I appreciate the efforts of my fellow Democrats to improve H.R. 1714, this amendment is merely an industry-drafted cosmetic fix that makes only minor improvements to the underlying bill, and indeed, makes it worse in several respects. Furthermore, it leaves unaddressed many fundamental problems of H.R. 1714.

It is therefore no surprise—and is quite telling, in fact—that this amendment is supported by the banks and financial services industries, but is opposed by the consumer groups.

The Inslee amendment is a step backwards for consumers in many ways. Unlike H.R. 1714, which leaves it to the courts to determine who bears the burden when an electronic disclosure or notice is not received, the Inslee amendment puts the burden squarely on consumers' shoulders by creating an affirmative obligation for consumers to notify a provider of a change of email address. The U.S. Postal Service has standardized procedures for address changes, forwarding mail, and returning mail to the sender that currently are not present in the on-line world. Without these real-world ''back-up'' mechanisms, this amendment simply creates a defense for merchant in cyberspace that it would not have in the physical world.

The Inslee amendment also is a step backward from H.R. 1714 because it takes away the requirement that when a contract is required by law to be in writing, the electronic record of the contract must: (1) accurately set forth the information in contract after it was first generated, and (2) remain accessible for later reference, transmission and printing. Under the amendment, these standards apply only where a law requires a record to be retained. This significantly undercuts the reach of H.R. 1714.

In addition, the Inslee amendment narrows the states' ability to reenact supplemental protective legislation for their citizens. Instead of allowing the states to enact laws for the safety or health of an individual consumer, the amendment permits the states to legislate only where it is necessary for the protection of ''public health or safety of consumers.'' Thus, if certain notices and disclosures are not for the benefit of the public health or safety and only benefit individual consumers—such as notices to individuals about changes in their insurance policies, or a specific consumer's late payment on his utilities—the state cannot enact or reenact supplemental laws for this purpose.

Furthermore, the Inslee amendment leaves in place many of the most troubling aspects of H.R. 1714. For instance, although the amendment improves the opt-in by making requiring it to be ''conspicuous'' and ''visually separate,'' there is still no requirement that the consumer be told what legal rights she is waiving or what types of notices and disclosures the waiver applies to. In addition, the consumer can still waive ''groups of records'' with one click, regardless of whether or not they are related to each other or if they are similar in nature.

The Inslee amendment also maintains the bill's broad preemption of state laws. In order for a state to avoid preemption by the federal statute, the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act, or UETA, must be consistent with the electronic contracts and records provisions of this bill. This does not give the states sufficient flexibility to exempt necessary state writing requirements. Ironically, even if a state adopted UETA without excepting any of its laws. The state would still be preempted by the federal law, because UETA does not provide for an opt-in, and that would make the state law inconsistent with—and therefore preempted by—the federal law.

Another flaw with the Inslee amendment is that it does not address the regulatory and supervisory problems with H.R. 1714. Under this amendment, regulated industries such as the banking and insurance industries would still be relieved from their legal requirements to maintain paper records. How can a state insurance regulator determine if an insurance company is properly capitalized, or if it has the proper reinsurance it cannot access the company's electronic records, or if the regulator can not require that the company keep its records in a tamper-proof format?

I understand my colleagues' desire to improve H.R. 1714—because it needs much improvement. But the Inslee amendment just scratches the surface of what's needed to make the necessary improvements in H.R. 1714. Indeed, the amendment makes the bill worse in several respects.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I would note that that click will waive no rights; it will simply indicate that notifications will be coming electronically rather than writing them in. A click will waive no rights under this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute and 40 seconds to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO).

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) for yielding me this time.

I am very proud to be offering this amendment with him and several of my Democratic colleagues as well as the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA).

First, let me just stipulate that there is not any mandate in this amendment that says to the consumers of America that they have to go on-line and use digital signatures. There is not a mandate. This is all about choices, but it does add the protections to the consumer if they so choose to exercise this.

This amendment that we bring before my colleagues today I believe cures some of the criticisms, many of the criticisms of the underlying bill. Quite simply, it ensures that consumers who choose to receive electronic records from their banks, their mortgage companies, or their on-line trading brokers will make this decision knowingly. The amendment gives consumers the ability to opt in to receive electronic records and requires that the consent be conspicuous and visually separate from other terms. In other words, consumers must agree to a statement that they will accept the records electronically. This statement cannot be buried in a morass of terms and conditions. It must be clear and separate.

Additionally and importantly, this amendment requires that prior to consenting, consumers must be provided with an explanation of how to access and retain electronic records. This is important because if a consumer cannot review, retain, and print an electronic record, that record is not considered valid.

I am very proud of this amendment. I believe that it makes the bill totally acceptable. This should not be a partisan issue. We should come together from both sides of the aisle, because it protects consumers and it allows electronic commerce to go forward. I urge support of this amendment.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, I think that almost everyone would favor the purposes of the primary bill before us today, and it is possible to achieve a good bill and a bipartisan bill. And, on the Senate side, Senator ABRAHAM, a Republican, Senator WYDEN, a Democrat, Senator LEAHY, a Democrat, and the administration have gotten together and basically they have come together in support of a good bill, and that is what the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and I are going to offer as a substitute.

The gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO) are attempting to deal with the Bliley bill, which the administration strongly opposes and said they would veto with an amendment. I know they are good faith, but I point out that the National Consumer Law Center, the Consumer Federation of America, the United Auto Workers, the Consumers Union, the U.S. Public Interest Research Groups, and the National Consumers League have drafted a letter today which they have sent out to each of us which says, ''The Inslee-Eshoo amendment is a cosmetic attempt to make a dangerous bill appear more palatable. Further, this amendment will make it more difficult for consumers to assert their rights under existing consumer protection laws.''

So this is cosmetically attractive, but dangerous because of that very fact.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from California (Mr. DOOLEY).

Mr. DOOLEY of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the underlying bill and also in strong support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE), myself and a number of our colleagues.

This legislation is a step forward to trying to ensure that consumers and businesses have a better ability to conduct commerce over the Internet. This amendment that we are supporting today provides for added consumer protections. It ensures that every consumer will have to opt in in order to participate. It ensures that consumers will have to acknowledge the conditions of a contract. It also provides assurances that a consumer will have to acknowledge that they will have to notify the business or the entity that they might be doing business with if they change their e-mail.

This is not any different than what one would have to do with one's address at one's home if one is going to relocate.

Now, if we want to have people to have the benefits that the Internet can provide and e-commerce can provide, we have to understand that we are dealing with a different medium, and this amendment goes a long way to ensuring that consumers will have those protections, that they will have the notifications that are important for them to understand their responsibilities and obligations.

Mr. Chairman, I heard some folks earlier today talking in opposition to the underlying bill, but there are a lot of people out there that do not have a computer; there are a lot of people out there that do not have an e-mail address; there are a lot of people out there that do not know how to navigate the Web. Well, if we use that as a standard to preclude us from moving forward with digital signature, we are never going to get there. But we also have assured that any consumer that might not have a computer, that does not have e-mail, that they do not have to opt in to participate in a digital signature. We provide the consumer protections. This amendment is a good amendment; the underlying bill deserves passage.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN), a distinguished member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. While it makes some improvements in some parts of the base bill, it also in some areas actually goes backward. But I think the broader point is the point I would like to speak to.

We seem to be talking just totally by each other. No one here is opposed to the concept that we need to legislate a digital signature law so that people in places where there is now an obligation to enter into a writing-in contract can enter into a contract electronically and bind themselves to that through digital signatures along the standards of the bill. There is no dispute about that.

I hear my friend from Virginia speak in exciting and provocative terms about the new economy, the new elite, people who want the opportunity, they are governed by potentials and not their fears, and I say yes. But it is not a requirement to be an advocate of the new economy or to be a new Democrat to think that there are some people who will be caught in the transition and that maybe, where the Comptroller of the Currency decides that a particular bank should have a backup set of records in writing because that might be the only place they can go to determine whether reserves are being kept adequately, or whether in a particular situation involving changes in an insurance policy, let us just validate that for this particular type of consumer whose, perhaps, adult children signed them on to the insurance policy electronically, we should validate it by the written contract, that we are going to just trample over these people in the name of doing something new and exciting.

Mr. Chairman, I do not have the arrogance to say that every single law that says that without regard to whom the consumer is, what the State of their mentality is, that we are going to wipe out some considered judgment by a regulator or by a State legislator, by a Federal legislator that in all circumstances, that is preempted.

The gentleman from Washington says his amendment waives no rights, but it does waive one right. By conscious decision, hopefully of a sophisticated and educated consumer, it waives the right to have the disclosures, the changes, the notices in writing. That is indisputable. His amendment waives that right. In most cases, that will be great. There might be a few cases where it is not great, and it is in those cases that I say let us be a little careful about just wiping out all of these laws.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 seconds to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN).

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to point out that there is no waiver of notice in writing. All we are talking about is transmission of that writing and whether the writing is received electronically or on a piece of paper, it is in writing in both cases.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Inslee amendment and in support of the underlying bill.

Everyone says we all agree, we are going to have digital signature, it is just a matter of the details. Unfortunately, the details that are being presented by the opponents of the Inslee amendment and of the Dingell amendment are such that one would, in practical effect, not be able to do digital signature. If, first of all, one does not have uniformity and one is doing something across State lines and one has 50 or maybe even 100 different rules and regulations for how it is going to be done, it makes it very, very difficult to do business in the electronic commerce world. That is what the Dingell amendment would do. That creates a huge problem for the bill.

Second of all, it requires that paper be done in addition to the digital signature. Well, if we are going to have to do a paper contract, what is the advantage of doing a digital contract? One merely has to duplicate oneself. Those two provisions basically mean that what the opponents of the Inslee amendment are doing is creating a situation where digital signature will not be a choice that any logical businessman will make. That is why we have to oppose it.

Two final points. Consumer protection is clearly protected in this bill. The sentence says this law changes in no way one's contractual protections under consumer protection laws. We are simply doing it digitally instead of by paper. We have the same protections.

Lastly, this well, if one goes on a computer it could get lost, the computer could blow up; paper notices get lost all of the time. If one moves and the notice is required to go by mail, many times these notices do not arrive. Whether it is paper or digital, there are challenges in making sure that all of the notices get there. I strongly submit that those challenges are no greater with digital signature than they are with paper, and we are stuck in a lost mindset here thinking that somehow, if it is not paper, it is not real. If we do not do this right, we will not have digital signature. The Inslee amendment does it right. Support it.

□ 1400

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. VENTO).

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I rise in opposition to the amendment, Mr. Chairman. I recognize that there is an effort here to make this, as I said, palatable, but it remains indigestible. What we are doing here is we are force-feeding the States, force-feeding consumers this particular format in terms of how transactions and record will be eliminated.

Someone says, the electronic signatures, we are all for it, we can permit that, but we need this because we need to eliminate or give the possibility for people to accept notices and disclosures electronically, that is the only thing. But the heart and soul of most consumer laws are the absolute disclosure provisions. So once we go down this path, we have, for all intents and purposes, circumvented many of the consumer laws of the Federal and many at the State level.

This is not transactions initiated over the Internet, this could be someone at the door that we open the possibility of fraud and abuse to here, because someone at the door, when we get a cooling off period for not purchasing, we would sign it away. There is no assurance that they have Internet; electronic computer equipment or service. It is only one-third of the homes in this Nation have Internet, so these are not even just transactions. We open up that possibility.

We have tried mightily in terms of this particular provision, but we have gone one step forward and two back. The rule of holes is that when you are in a hole and you want to get out, quit digging, but this amendment digs in more. It tries to legitimatize what is inappropriate in this bill.

The fact of the matter is, look at where the consumer is. They are buying a home, they are buying a car. They are blinded by the fact of that new shiny Chevrolet or that wonderful new home that they are going to get. They are signing a whole bundle of papers. In the process of doing it, they sign the copy, disclosure and notification away with no assurance, and all the responsibility put back on the individual consumer on something that may be the most important transaction they make.

This vitiates the truth-in-lending, the real estate State Sales Practices Act. The Federal regulators are already working on the issue of electronic commerce and attempting to interface the rules and e-commerce. Instead of doing something for the consumer, they are taking away the options they have today.

Members are saying that the price of being active in this electronic signature bill and this electronic Internet world is that we are going to deny some of the rights people have today. We basically say, we will let you give up your rights. We should not do that, and we should know that individuals do not have fully informed consent, the mechanics, workers, blue collar workers or others getting minimum wage. They are not sitting in the halls of this Congress, they are not out there walking around in the lobbies, they need our help. Ironically this legislation protects the sophisticated financial institutions and Federal regulators.

We ought to be doing something for the consumer, like providing favorable options for them on privacy in the Internet. We are not doing for them what we did in the Financial Modernization Act. We are doing more harm in this act, with this particular provision and certainly the underlying measure.

When we talk about the provision in the financial modernization, we had balance in that bill. There is no balance in this bill. This policy in this bill is not necessary. These provisions on records are not necessary to make the electronic signature legitimate. We are undercutting consumer law. There is a bandwagon effect here in terms of the special interests that have annealed themselves to this popular electronic signature legislation in order to circumvent the very real decades of consumer law that have protected and serve the consumers and the people we represent. Vote ''no'' on this bill.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from the Garden State, New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA).

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I have to say, as a member of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services, I rise in strong support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE). I would like to identify myself as a cosponsor of that amendment.

I would also like to take exception to some of the loose rhetoric that I have heard on the floor today, and would like to speak to the specifics.

It seems to me that Congress and the regulators are overdue in playing a leadership role in updating many of the consumer protection laws to reflect the new technologies in electronic commerce that we see out there. This bill and this amendment takes a giant step toward that protection. It does not diminish in any way, as far as I can tell, the protections that consumers already have.

I want to be specific. The amendment is pro-consumer because it provides the additional consumer protections such as a clear, number one, customer opt-in for electronic delivery specifically is required, an opt-in. There are clear requirements on review, retention, and printing of documents and disclosures. Three, the ability of a customer to opt out is there for any customer at any time for the electronic delivery system.

I think that this is, as I said, not only a giant step, but it is also clearly defined, and I dismiss any of the loose rhetoric that acts as though we are taking something away. We are really building not only a firm foundation, but a giant step for consumers in this new electronic age.

Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor, I rise today in strong support of the Inslee/Eshoo/Dooley/Moran/Roukema amendment. It is both Pro Business and Pro Consumer. It is common sense and will improve the bill.

Millions of consumers today routinely conduct business over the Internet, buying and selling a myriad of products and services from companies large and small, near and far. Many of these consumers engage in financial transactions—investing in stocks and bonds, checking account balances, transferring funds, applying for credit cards, and paying bills without leaving their homes. This explosion of online financial services offers great benefits. Nonetheless, the ability to offer many financial services, particularly loans and mortgages, would be enhanced if the banking laws were amended to clarify the rules governing the electronic delivery of financial services.

H.R. 1714 and the Inslee Amendment will clarify that electronic delivery of required consumer disclosures over the Internet is permissible as long as there are certain safeguards for consumers. This bill does not lessen the rights of consumers to receive required disclosures. In addition, it does not affect the content of any disclosure, including the timing, format and information to be provided. Furthermore, consumers would control which information could be sent to them electronically.

This legislation will assist the growth of online financial transactions and at the same time provide consumer protections. Online disclosures will provide consumers with a number of benefits:

Convenience and time-saving—Consumers can conduct transactions virtually anywhere and at any time, 7-days-a-week, 24-hours-a-day.

User friendly information—Legalistic jargon in on-line disclosure forms can be linked to plain-English definitions, making them much more readable and understandable. Consumers can electronically search documents rather than reading through reams of paper.

Enhanced services for under-served communities—Rural and urban communities will have enhanced access to financial services, even where brick and mortar branches are not available. In areas where residents cannot afford computers, libraries and schools provide on-line access.

Reduced cost—Electronic delivery of disclosures will cost less than providing the same information on paper or paying employees to handle face-to-face disclosures, Competition should encourage business to pass on those savings to consumers.

E-commerce is here. U.S. citizens are spending billions of dollars each year on-line. Congress and the regulators must play a leadership role in updating many of the consumer protection laws to reflect new technologies and establish a coherent legislative framework for the delivery of financial services through electronic commerce. This bill and this amendment takes a giant step toward that protection.

The Inslee/Eshoo/Dooley/Moran/Roukema Amendment includes several provisions from H.R. 2626, the Electronic Disclosures Delivery Act of 1999, which I introduced on September 1st along with Mr. INSLEE and Mr. LAZIO. The Amendment is pro consumer because it provides the additional consumer protections such as clear (1) Customer "opt in" for electronic delivery specifically required, (2) clear requirements on review, retention and printing of documents and disclosures, (3) the ability of a Customer to "opt out" of electronic delivery at any time.

I thought these were good provisions when I introduced H.R. 2626 with Mr. LAZIO and Mr. INSLEE. I thought they were good provisions when proposed before the Rules Committee, and that is why I cosponsored the Inslee Amendment. I believe the Inslee/Roukema Amendment protects consumers in a rational clearly defined common sense manner. It clearly improves the bill.

We should approve the Amendment and we should approve H.R. 1714.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 second to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE).

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the gentlewoman from New Jersey would answer why the chairperson of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions has had no hearings on the bill that she introduced, and dealing with the impact of this bill and her bill on the consumer protection laws?

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFALCE. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I will tell the gentleman exactly why; we got a little directed and focused on financial modernization.

Mr. LAFALCE. The gentlewoman was too busy to have hearings on these consumer protections.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I was the author of the financial privacy and financial modernization. I find this completely consistent.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am also an original sponsor of this amendment because it clarifies the consumer protections in H.R. 1714. I have been wanting to respond to my friend, the gentleman from California, not because I take issue with his characterization of my remarks as New Democrat in nature, but because he said that I am supporting this bill because it is new and exciting.

That is not why I am supporting this bill. It is because it is responsible and needed. The fact is that this bill provides a consistent and predictable national framework of rules governing the use of electronic signatures. This bill is needed. This bill was and is bipartisan. When the final vote is taken, it will be apparent that it is bipartisan. In fact the vote will be lopsided because it provides consumers and companies doing business on the Internet the legal certainty they need for electronic signatures, until all 50 States pass their own legislation on the legality of electronic signatures.

This amendment is important because it clarifies the consumer protections that were originally inlcuded in this bill. It makes it clear, as the prior speakers have said, that consumers are not required to use or accept electronic records or electronic signatures. There has to be mutual consent, and it expands the bill's requirement that consumers be able to receive and retain electronic records.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment is important because it says that opportunity for consent must be conspicuous and visually separate from all the other terms.

In addition, the consumer must be provided with an explanation of how to access and retain electronic records. Records will be received, retained, and printed. The fact is that consumers are going to be protected, but most importantly, they are going to have a choice. Today they do not have that uniformity, that predictability that comes with uniform national standards.

The Internet is national in nature. Our constituents need this legislation. Make it bipartisan and make it an expression of our unequivocal support for this productive, prosperous new economy.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the dean of the House and the ranking member of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I thank my good friend for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I want to try and make clear what is at stake here.

There is no objection, I think, on the floor on the part of anyone, my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan, myself, or anybody else, to whether or not the contract is signed electronically. The question relates to notice of later events under that contract which can severely impact the purchaser, such as things which would trigger foreclosure of a mortgage on a house or an automobile, failure to keep up insurance, failure to prevent waste, failure to make payments.

It could happen for many reasons, such as year 2K. It could happen because of the situation which might occur, a hard drive might crash, or there might be any one of a number of other events, including a failure of the Internet provider or something of that sort, or the matter would just get lost in cyberspace.

There is nothing in anything that we are talking about here that would preclude an individual from giving up some right and waiving his right to that notice. But as an attorney of longstanding and as one who has dealt with foreclosures and the hardship that those kinds of events trigger, I think it is important to see to it that some who might not be as smart as some of the Internet whizzes and the computer whizzes and jocks that we have has the capability of protecting himself, because we are talking about things such as the purchase of stock, mortgages on homes, automobile purchases, major purchases of equipment, and things of that kind which could incur enormous obligations on the part of the purchaser.

I propose to support the amendment. It improves the bill. It does not improve the bill by addressing the fundamental, basic question of whether the consumer gets the necessary notices that are required by a long history of State law to apprise him that he is in danger under the contract of losing money or rights.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I would just like to specifically note that the underlying bill excludes from its ambit notices of foreclosure, of acceleration of default on the home. Those are specifically excepted and should not be an issue.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. INSLEE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am not talking about notices of foreclosure, I am talking about notices that would trigger foreclosure, notice that the insurance has not been paid, that damage was being committed on the property, that a public nuisance is being committed on the property, or even a notice that the individual has failed to make a payment, which will trigger foreclosure.

Those are the kinds of notices that I am talking about, and they can severely, adversely impact the party.

Mr. INSLEE. Reclaiming my time, those will be given. Those notices will be given. In every case, the consumers electronically, if they want it electronically, and on paper if they want it on paper, those notices shall be given.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY).

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's amendment improves the bill. I support it.

I would also like to point out, as was mentioned in the earlier debate, that what happens if the Y2K problem happens or the computer breaks down, the bill requires that a record sent be able to be retainable, printable, and transferrable. If the Internet is down this standard is not met, and thus, a consumer would not be liable.

I fully support this amendment. I urge its adoption, and I urge adoption of the underlying bill.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), a distinguished member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding time to me.

I thank the Members for their good intentions behind this effort. I happen to be a supporter of electronic commerce. I wish we could have done this in a bipartisan way.

Mr. Chairman, I do rise to support the incremental change that the Inslee amendment makes. It does not answer my concerns, however. I do believe that it is important for the consumers to conspicuously be able to opt in to give consent to know whether or not their business is going to be done in an electronic form, but I think what my good friends are missing and the reason I support the substitute is they are missing the fact that although we can lay out the long list of supporters of this bill, the responsibility of this Congress is to ensure that those voices which cannot be heard, those people needing to have information about the drugs they get out of the Food and Drug Administration, those young couples who are buying homes, still need to have the ability to understand the documents that they are utilizing.

Under the underlying bill, creditors could condition credit on a consumer's consent to receive all disclosures electronically. I do want us to all be hooked up to the Internet, but unfortunately, even as we go into the 21st century, all Americans are not. Can Members imagine being denied credit because they refuse or do not understand that they need to be hooked up to the Internet? Even in credit transactions involving the mortgage, people would have that problem.

Consider the FDA's responsibility to provide people with information about drugs, and those drugs that would conflict with others. Now we have the obligation of written information. Just imagine that that information will now be on the web page, and they leave people to their own devices, and they say, forget about the written materials, just go to the web page that most of those who are in certain levels in our country do not have.

□ 1415

The substitute, however, would sunset when a state enacted a uniform electronic transactions act which would provide for protections for our consumers.

The substitute also does not affect Federal laws or regulations, but instead gives Federal agencies 6 months to conduct a careful study of barriers to electronic transactions under Federal laws or regulations. The substitute also represents the E-commerce bill that is the most likely to be enacted into law, because it is a combination of Democrats and Republicans, House Members and Senate Members, who have come together.

Mr. Chairman, we are not against electronic commerce. I think that is the point that should be made. I have friends on the other side that I agree with, and friends over here that I agree with. But what my voice must be for are those individuals who do not know the Internet, who do not have access to computers, who are intimidated by some large business telling them they can not get credit or that home that they have been dreaming of because they will not consent to have their business done in an electronic process.

Mr. Chairman, let us make it a bipartisan bill and support the substitute and do the right thing for the American people.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH).

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) for his amendment in terms of clarifying. But one thing we should not be confused about, this Congress nor government should stand in the way of what has been remarkable progress here at end of the 20th century moving into the 21st century. It has done an enormous amount of good for families, not just in America but across the globe. Let us clarify this but not hesitate to invest and have confidence in those people who are really moving us forward and empowering people.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 418, noes 2, not voting 13, as follows:

Mr. KUCINICH and Mr. WATT of North Carolina changed their vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated against:

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 577, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). It is now in order to consider amendment No. 2 printed in House Report 106–462.

AMENDMENT NO. 2 IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. DINGELL

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

Amendment No. 2 in the nature of a substitute offered by Mr. DINGELL:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Millennium Digital Commerce Act''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The growth of electronic commerce and electronic government transactions represent a powerful force for economic growth, consumer choice, improved civic participation and wealth creation.

(2) The promotion of growth in private sector electronic commerce through Federal legislation is in the national interest because that market is globally important to the United States.

(3) A consistent legal foundation, across multiple jurisdictions, for electronic commerce will promote the growth of such transactions, and that such a foundation should be based upon a simple, technology neutral, nonregulatory, and market-based approach.

(4) The Nation and the world stand at the beginning of a large scale transition to an information society which will require innovative legal and policy approaches, and therefore, States can serve the national interest by continuing their proven role as laboratories of innovation for quickly evolving areas of public policy, provided that States also adopt a consistent, reasonable national baseline to eliminate obsolete barriers to electronic commerce such as undue paper and pen requirements, and further, that any such innovation should not unduly burden inter-jurisdictional commerce.

(5) To the extent State laws or regulations do not provide a consistent, reasonable national baseline or in fact create an undue burden to interstate commerce in the important burgeoning area of electronic commerce, the national interest is best served by Federal preemption to the extent necessary to provide such consistent, reasonable national baseline or eliminate said burden, but that absent such lack of a consistent, reasonable national baseline or such undue burdens, the best legal system for electronic commerce will result from continuing experimentation by individual jurisdictions.

(6) With due regard to the fundamental need for a consistent national baseline, each jurisdiction that enacts such laws should have the right to determine the need for any exceptions to protect consumers and maintain consistency with existing related bodies of law within a particular jurisdiction.

(7) Industry has developed several electronic signature technologies for use in electronic transactions, and the public policies of the United States should serve to promote a dynamic marketplace within which these technologies can compete. Consistent with this Act, States should permit the use and development of any authentication technologies that are appropriate as practicable as between private parties and in use with State agencies.

SEC. 3. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to permit and encourage the continued expansion of electronic commerce through the operation of free market forces rather than proscriptive governmental mandates and regulations;

(2) to promote public confidence in the validity, integrity and reliability of electronic commerce and online government under Federal law;

(3) to facilitate and promote electronic commerce by clarifying the legal status of electronic records and electronic signatures in the context of contract formation;

(4) to facilitate the ability of private parties engaged in interstate transactions to agree among themselves on the appropriate electronic signature technologies for their transactions; and

(5) to promote the development of a consistent national legal infrastructure necessary to support of electronic commerce at the Federal and State levels within areas of jurisdiction.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) ELECTRONIC.—The term ''electronic'' means relating to technology having electrical, digital, magnetic, wireless, optical, electromagnetic, or similar capabilities.

(2) ELECTRONIC AGENT.—The term ''electronic agent'' means a computer program or an electronic or other automated means used to initiate an action or respond to electronic records or performances in whole or in part without review by an individual at the time of the action or response.

(3) ELECTRONIC RECORD.—The term ''electronic record'' means a record created, generated, sent, communicated, received, or stored by electronic means.

(4) ELECTRONIC SIGNATURE.—The term ''electronic signature'' means an electronic sound, symbol, or process attached to or logically associated with a record and executed or adopted by a person with the intent to sign the record.

(5) GOVERNMENTAL AGENCY.—The term ''governmental agency'' means an executive, legislative, or judicial agency, department, board, commission, authority, or institution of the Federal Government or of a State or of any county, municipality, or other political subdivision of a State.

(6) RECORD.—The term ''record'' means information that is inscribed on a tangible medium or that is stored in an electronic or other medium and is retrievable in perceivable form.

(7) TRANSACTION.—The term ''transaction'' means an action or set of actions relating to the conduct of commerce, between 2 or more persons, neither of which is the United States Government, a State, or an agency, department, board, commission, authority, or institution of the United States Government or of a State.

(8) UNIFORM ELECTRONIC TRANSACTIONS ACT.—The term ''Uniform Electronic Transactions Act'' means the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act as provided to State legislatures by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Law in the form or any substantially similar variation.

SEC. 5. INTERSTATE CONTRACT CERTAINTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In any commercial transaction affecting interstate commerce, a contract may not be denied legal effect or enforceability solely because an electronic signature or electronic record was used in its formation.

(b) METHODS.—Parties to a transaction are permitted to determine the appropriate electronic signature technologies for their transaction, and the means of implementing such technologies.

(c) PRESENTATION OF CONTRACTS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), if a law requires that a contract be in writing, the legal effect or enforceability of an electronic record of such contract shall be denied under such law, unless it is delivered to all parties to such contract in a form that—

(1) can be retained by the parties for later reference; and

(2) can be used to prove the terms of the agreement.

(d) SPECIFIC EXCLUSIONS.—The provisions of this section shall not apply to a statute, regulation, or other rule of law governing any of the following:

(1) The Uniform Commercial Code, as in effect in a State, other than section 1–107 and 1–206, article 2, and article 2A.

(2) Premarital agreements, marriage, adoption, divorce or other matters of family law.

(3) Documents of title which are filed of record with a governmental unit until such time that a State or subdivision thereof chooses to accept filings electronically.

(4) Residential landlord-tenant relationships.

(5) The Uniform Health-Care Decisions Act as in effect in a State.

(e) ELECTRONIC AGENTS.—A contract relating to a commercial transaction affecting interstate commerce may not be denied legal effect or enforceability solely because its formation involved—

(1) the interaction of electronic agents of the parties; or

(2) the interaction of an electronic agent of a party and an individual who acts on that individual's own behalf or as an agent, for another person.

(f) INSURANCE.—It is the specific intent of the Congress that this section apply to the business of insurance.

(g) APPLICATION IN UETA STATES.—This section does not apply in any State in which the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act is in effect.

SEC. 6. PRINCIPLES GOVERNING THE USE OF ELECTRONIC SIGNATURES IN INTERNATIONAL TRANSACTIONS.

To the extent practicable, the Federal Government shall observe the following principles in an international context to enable commercial electronic transaction:

(1) Remove paper-based obstacles to electronic transactions by adopting relevant principles from the Model Law on Electronic Commerce adopted in 1996 by the United Nations Commission on International Trade Law (UNCITRAL).

(2) Permit parties to a transaction to determine the appropriate authentication technologies and implementation models for their transactions, with assurance that those technologies and implementation models will be recognized and enforced.

(3) Permit parties to a transaction to have the opportunity to prove in court or other proceedings that their authentication approaches and their transactions are valid.

(4) Take a nondiscriminatory approach to electronic signatures and authentication methods from other jurisdictions.

SEC. 7. STUDY OF LEGAL AND REGULATORY BARRIERS TO ELECTRONIC COMMERCE.

(a) BARRIERS.—Each Federal agency shall, not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, provide a report to the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and the Secretary of Commerce identifying any provision of law administered by such agency, or any regulations issued by such agency and in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, that may impose a barrier to electronic transactions, or otherwise to the conduct of commerce online or by electronic means. Such barriers include, but are not limited to, barriers imposed by a law or regulation directly or indirectly requiring that signatures, or records of transactions, be accomplished or retained in other than electronic form. In its report, each agency shall identify the barriers among those identified whose removal would require legislative action, and shall indicate agency plans to undertake regulatory action to remove such barriers among those identified as are caused by regulations issued by the agency.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Secretary of Commerce, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, shall, within 18 months after the date of enactment of this Act, and after the consultation required by subsection (c) of this section, report to the Congress concerning—

(1) legislation needed to remove barriers to electronic transactions or otherwise to the conduct of commerce online or by electronic means; and

(2) actions being taken by the Executive Branch and individual Federal agencies to remove such barriers as are caused by agency regulations or policies.

(c) CONSULTATION.—In preparing the report required by this section, the Secretary of Commerce shall consult with the General Services Administration, the National Archives and Records Administration, and the Attorney General concerning matters involving the authenticity of records, their storage and retention, and their usability for law enforcement purposes.

(d) INCLUDE FINDINGS IF NO RECOMMENDATIONS.—If the report required by this section omits recommendations for actions needed to fully remove identified barriers to electronic transactions or to online or electronic commerce, it shall include a finding or findings, including substantial reasons therefore, that such removal is impracticable or would be inconsistent with the implementation or enforcement of applicable laws.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 366, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and a Member opposed each will control 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL).

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, my old dad taught me to measure twice and cut once. He said that that was better carpentry, and he was right.

□ 1445

This amendment is essentially a bipartisan agreement reached in the Senate between Senators ABRAHAM and LEAHY. It is supported by the administration and it does not bear with it the threat of veto of the legislation without this amendment. It recognizes the validity of electronic signatures and contracts. It stays out of the more complicated questions and controversy associated with electronic records attendant on those contracts. It also avoids the problem of telling the contracting parties exactly what they do.

Here is what the substitute does do. It says a contract may not be denied legal effect or enforceability solely because of electronic signature or an electronic record was used in the formation. It allows parties to the transaction to determine appropriate electronic signature technologies for their transaction. It protects parties by requiring that the electronic record be delivered in the form that can be retained by the parties for later reference, and it can be used to prove the terms of the agreement. It sets forth principles to guide the Federal Government in expanding the use of electronic signatures in international transactions. It requires the Federal Government to study legal and regulatory barriers to electronic contracts.

Now, here is what it does not do. It does not hurt the ability of States to establish safeguards, such as consumer protection laws for electronic commerce. It does not wipe out the ability of Federal regulators to eliminate abuses that may occur when electronic records are used. It does not wipe out State laws and regulations on the maintenance of records critical to protection of individual rights and claims. It does not preempt State and Federal records signature requirements, including those in tax laws and regulatory statutes.

We do not need to sacrifice consumer protections to facilitate electronic commerce. The concerns that I pointed out earlier are avoided. Electronic commerce will go forward, the parties will define the terms under which they will function, State laws will be protected, consumers will be protected, and entrepreneurs on the Internet will also be protected. And consumers will know that they have the means to protect themselves on terms of contracts in which they enter.

Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to how much time I have consumed?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) has used 2½ minutes and will have 12½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) seek the time in opposition?

Mr. BLILEY. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5½ minutes, and I rise in opposition to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE).

Just last week the House leadership and the administration pulled out all the stops to defeat H.R. 1714 when it was considered under suspension. In spite of their opposition, we fell just a few votes shy of a two-thirds majority. Just this past week an amazing conversion has taken place. Not only has the majority leadership stopped opposing electronic signature legislation, but it now supports the concept of providing legal validity to electronic signatures, and even went so far as to introduce a bill, H.R. 3220.

I commend my colleagues for their conversion and for recognizing the importance of this Congress approving electronic signature legislation. Unfortunately, their amendment, as the old saying goes, is a day late and a dollar short. The amendment only provides for electronic signatures on contracts and is, thus, substantially narrower than 1714. The amendment does not provide for the use or acceptance of electronic records, such as warranties, notices of or disclosures in electronic form.

The offerers of this amendment have leveled charges that the inclusion of records in H.R. 1714 would bring harm to consumers. Such a charge is completely false. H.R. 1714 contains important provisions protecting consumers who choose to accept an electronic document. This makes H.R. 1714 a broader bill, covering a wide range of electronic commerce transactions. Indeed, we just passed an amendment to improve this bill dealing with records by a vote of 418 to 2. Why would we want to strike the provision now?

Coupled with the records provision in H.R. 1714 are key consumer protections. In short, the key consumer protections are an opt-in system for consumers who want to accept electronic documents; standards to ensure that electronic documents are accurate and can be printed for use for future reference, and a requirement that key notices, such as termination of a utility service, cancellation of health insurance or life insurance, and foreclosure or eviction must still be delivered in writing.

The amendment before us also fails to address the need for uniformity in electronic signature laws. Currently, Mr. Chairman, 44 States have enacted some sort of electronic signature law. However, all 44 are different and many are inconsistent. With such a patchwork of differing laws, electronic commerce is nearly impossible. This amendment will only perpetuate that patchwork of laws by allowing States to enact any law, any law, regulating electronic signatures, no matter how nonuniform or how inconsistent with the laws of other States.

In contrast, H.R. 1714 allows States to enact a uniform electronic signature law provided that it meets minimum standards consistent with promoting electronic commerce. Two of the key principles are that State laws must be technology neutral and that States cannot limit the offering of electronic signature services to specific types of businesses. H.R. 1714 will encourage States to enact uniform laws while ensuring that States do not inhibit interstate commerce.

In addition, the amendment does not fully address the concerns I have about the use and acceptance of electronic signatures internationally. As other speakers have pointed out, some nations have enacted or are proposing electronic signature legislation that would be harmful to American interests. Title II of H.R. 1714 provides guidance to the Secretary of Commerce to work against any barriers to promote American principles in this area.

I would also like to point out that H.R. 1714 has been the subject of long and substantial negotiations with the minority. Prior to its consideration at the subcommittee and full committee level, we engaged in lengthy negotiations with the minority. The substitute amendments offered in committee by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), and myself contain important provisions that enjoyed bipartisan support. In fact, H.R. 1714 was approved through two subcommittees and the full committee by a voice vote.

We are also hearing that we should support this amendment because it is identical to the compromise legislation that has been agreed to in the other body. First, if such a compromise has been reached, it certainly has not been cleared for floor consideration. I think it is premature to refer to this as the so-called compromise until it is voted on and approved by the full committee of the other body.

Second, I am surprised to hear my colleagues say that we should merely accept the work of the other body without thoroughly considering this issue in the House. We should not blindly accept any legislation merely because the other body has supposedly reached a compromise on the text of a bill.

I am pleased to see that many of my colleagues from across the aisle have seen the light and decided to support rather than oppose electronic signature legislation. Unfortunately, their amendment falls far short of what is needed to promote electronic commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE).

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe there is a representative in this body who does not favor electronic signatures. That is not the issue before us. The issue before us is should we pass Federal legislation that, A, preempts consumer rights; and, B, preempts States rights. I think the answer to that is no.

So there is another question. Why not this substitute? Why not this substitute that the administration favors, that is the agreed-upon compromise at least between Senator ABRAHAM, the chairman of the relevant Judiciary Subcommittee in the Senate, and Senator WYDEN and Senator LEAHY?

With respect to consumer rights, every consumer group believes that we must pass this substitute in order to keep the consumer protections that are presently in existing law. Industry, the Microsofts, the Yahoos of this world, would embrace the substitute if it were to be before the President for his signature. It is just that if they can get a better bill that preempts consumer rights, why not?

I remember when I first studied law, the Uniform Commercial Code was to be adopted by the States. Nobody suggested that because contracts are interstate in nature there should be a Federal law preempting the ability of States to adopt the Uniform Commercial Code sometime, with a little change here or a little change there, and that is how it has evolved.

The present bill that is before us would preempt any State law unless it is fully consistent with the Federal bill. In other words, it preempts it totally. The substitute would pass this legislation, protect the consumer, but also protect the abilities to enact consumer protections that might be even greater. I think that is something we want to preserve.

We will get the signature of the President on the substitute. It is probably going to be the virtual identical bill that passes the Senate. Why not vote for this substitute, get a law, and get the law passed immediately?

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON).

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute. I do not support the substitute because it fails to simplify, clarify, and modernize the law governing electronic commerce. It fails to promote uniformity of law among the States, and it fails to advance American interests worldwide by promoting a uniform legal regime addressing the use of electronic and similar technological means of effecting and performing commercial and governmental transactions.

The substitute will not accomplish what should be the basic objective of any legislation on this subject; that is, bringing legal certainty to electronic transactions in commerce. The substitute fails in this regard because, instead of promoting uniformity of law among the States, it will lead to the balkanization of applicable law. This will lead to greater uncertainty.

Balkanization will occur because, even with its most narrow scope, the substitute does not apply to States where the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act, UETA, is adopted in whole or any substantially similar variation. Between Section 3(b)(5) of UETA, which permits a State to exclude any of its laws from the application of UETA, and the substitute's substantially similar variation language, a State is completely free to institute its own electronic commerce laws regardless of such laws' effect on interstate commerce.

That is exactly what happened in California, the first State to adopt UETA. Relying on Section 3(b)(5) of the UETA, better known in some circles UETA's black hole, California excluded many laws from the application of UETA's principles. Those laws include most sections of the following California codes: Uniform Commercial Code, the Business and Professions Code, the Civil Code, the Financial Code, the Insurance Code, Public Utilities Code, and the Vehicle Code.

If every State was to take California's approach, the effect would be to further remove legal certainty. Rather, 50 separate legal regimes may arise governing electronic transactions in commerce. This outcome is counterproductive and unacceptable. I therefore urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to vote ''no'' on the substitute.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

My colleagues, this substitute is just what we need. It has come not a moment too soon, because I think we can now bring a marriage to the rights of consumers and the high-tech necessities of e-signature. It satisfies the need of the high-tech community by recognizing the validity of the electronic signatures in contracts, but it does not go as far as the base bill in getting into the controversial issue of other electronic records that might arise from electronic contract formation.

□ 1500

In other words, this steers a midcourse. It has a counterpart in the United States Senate. And it also has the assurance that the President will sign it into law.

So I am asking my colleagues, please, if we are supporting e-signatures and want to move high tech forward, here is the substitute that we can do this by.

The substitute deals only with the formation of electronic contracts and not other types of records. It does not undermine the important consumer protection laws. For example, regulations implementing the Truth in Lending Act require creditors to provide consumers with periodic statements that include information essential to a consumer in managing a credit card account.

Now, this cannot be accomplished unless we have the substitute. Creditors could request on a consumer's consent to receive all disclosures electronically under H.R. 1714. That is exactly what we are trying to make the distinction between the substitute and the base bill. Please support this substitute.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN).

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time. I rise in opposition to this substitute.

Mr. Chairman, members of the committee, the substitute, if adopted, will rob this body of one of its rare opportunities to do good not only by our generation of Americans but by generations yet unborn.

We are about to enter a new millennium that, in large measure, is going to be governed by the enormous possibilities of not only the current Internet as we know it but as broadband, high-speed, always-on, always-available, supercontent-rich, broadband Internet services that are going to merge with television and provide us with new means of communicating and entertaining ourselves and indeed conducting electronic commerce across the span of the globe. It is going to make a smaller world and make possible enormous opportunity for citizens of this country and citizens of the word.

But in order for that to flourish, the legal rules that are to govern electronic commerce ought to be made clear. The bill does that.

The problem with the substitute is that it limits the bill only to those matters dealing with the formation of an electronic contract.

Now, in the earlier discussions, I tried to point out to my colleagues that many things that happen in electronic commerce do not involve the formation of a contract. The best example is when we write a check and that check has to be physically delivered by the bank to the bank of the recipient to whom we are sending the money. Just the physical transfer of all those checks, all that paperwork, costs consumers in America $4 billion a year just moving that paper around.

The substitute would do nothing to provide for digital signature in the electronic commerce of transferring money around in the form of payments and checks.

I urge that this substitute be defeated and we stick with the main body of the bill.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER), a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment and the substitute being offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and others. I would appeal to my colleagues on perhaps a different level than this issue has been debated for some time.

We still have relatively small numbers of American citizens participating in Internet commerce, but that number continues to rise almost exponentially each year. And the reason for that rise in participation in the Internet commerce world is people are developing more confidence. Each time they go make a purchase and they get their product and their credit card number is not stolen and their information not shopped around, people are more likely to come back in future years to partake in that activity again.

That is why it is so absolutely important during this period when Internet commerce is growing that we do everything we can to reassure consumers and reassure those in the States that when they pass laws that they are going to be protected. The substitute adheres to the most stringent consumer protection while still allowing digital signatures.

For those of my colleagues who are like me who on some level do believe that the banking community and the insurance and financial services community should have easier access to this world, I believe we have to do this in a thoughtful way while preserving consumers' rights and, of course, while preserving the rights of States and localities to do what they need to do to reassure those who do partake in the Internet commerce that they will be safe in doing so.

The substitute does that. It does not jeopardize the basic things that the sponsor of the bill would like to do. I urge a yes vote on the substitute.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY).

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute offered by my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL).

As I said in my statement in supporting the underlying bill, we will do irreparable harm to the future of electronic commerce if we are unable to provide the basis for uniformity and legal certainty. And, indeed, that is really what this legislation is all about.

Those of us who study law understood that the Uniform Commercial Code really for the first time turned loose this great engine of economic opportunity and contracts throughout our 50 States when we had some degree of certainty when we are dealing with the Uniform Commercial Code.

In many ways, this legislation sponsored by our good friend, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, is a natural consequence of following along with the Uniform Commercial Code, but we are doing it as it relates to electronic commerce. Electronic commerce is that natural consequence of what we are doing. So, essentially, that is really what this bill is all about.

The substitute amendment only provides legal certainty if the transaction was conducted as a result of a contract. And indeed, a lot of commerce takes place without formal contracts. And that is what really this legislation is all about.

This substitute, I would tell my good friend from Michigan, is over regulatory, it is industrial policy legislation that is contrary to what electronic commerce is really all about.

Mr. Chairman, the substitute amendment is simply a failure in regards to trusting people who are becoming more and more sophisticated in dealing with electronic commerce and more and more feeling comfortable with what is happening out there in the marketplace. This would be a huge step backwards in the name of consumer protection, when in fact it is quite the opposite and trusts government and trusts regulations and trusts bureaucrats far more than we trust the consumer in making these very important decisions in the marketplace.

So, for that reason, I would ask the substitute be defeated.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE).

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) made reference to the Uniform Commercial Code bringing uniformity. I point out that it was not by Federal legislation; it was by the adoption of the individual States. We retain States' rights.

There is such a thing as the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act. The National Conference of State Legislators wants the individual States to adopt that.

Now the issue is not whether we should adopt UETA on a Federal level, because we are not doing that. We are adopting it with some changes here, some changes there. What changes are we making? Those that don't benefit the consumers.

We are also saying to the States that they can pass whatever law they want, but it cannot in any way be inconsistent with what we pass, which is not the UETA.

Support the substitute. Defeat the main bill. Because if it goes before the President for his signature as it is before the House right now, it will be vetoed. The substitute will be signed.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, this bill in its original form passed from the Committee on Commerce unanimously. Now, what happened between now and then is really very interesting. The bill has been changed. The Members on the minority side consulted extensively with our good friend, the chairman of the committee, and we were negotiating with him; and there were a number of agreements made to change the bill to make it still more acceptable and more workable.

But then something funny happened on the way to the floor. The distinguished gentleman from Virginia, or somebody else, all of a sudden decided they are going to put the bill on the floor, and they decided they were going to terminate the negotiations without any notice to the minority.

They then took the step of making some significant changes in the bill. It is not the bill that came out of the Committee on Commerce to which the minority objects. We will be happy to vote for that right this minute. But what we are confronted with here is the unfortunate situation where our dear friends on the majority side have changed the bill with no notice, and it is quite different than the original bill.

Now, what is the basic objection to the bill? Let us try and understand to what does the minority really object.

The minority objects not to the idea that we should authorize under law a uniform system of recognizing the electronic signature of contracts. What is objected to here is something quite different, and that is that all of the matters which are associated with the contract and with contracting are with one swoop of the pen or one click of the computer changed so that they immediately go into force and that no right on the part of the individual who contracts remains intact after the original electronic signature has taken place.

Now, what can happen? A number of matters of notice come electronically. They are not in hard copy and in writing. The right of the contracting parties to say but certain other things have to be under signature and on paper in the conventional fashion as required by existing State law and by even things going back to common law and ordinary business practices and transactions are no longer permitted. Those are done once they have made the initial electronic contracts by a further electronic transaction.

Now, what is wrong with that? First of all, the hard drive may crash. Second of all, the Y2K bug may strike. Third of all, these notices may get lost in cyberspace. The individual may do a bad job of notifying the other party of an address change. Or the computer may crash. Or any of many things may transpire. The parties cannot even agree to these questions amongst themselves. That is wrong.

If we want to go forward, let us proceed and go forward on the bill that was adopted by the Committee on Commerce. Let us adopt this, which allows everything that the original legislation would have done and which was supported by both sides, majority and minority. Let us proceed in that fashion.

I see no benefit to moving forward with a bill which is so strongly objected to, which is not in the Senate language, and which is threatened with a veto by the President.

All I am suggesting is that they listen to the words of my old dad. When we are going to make this size of massive change, do it sensibly. Know what we are accomplishing. As my dad used to warn me when I was doing carpentry, he would say, ''Measure twice. Cut once. Be careful.''

That is what I am suggesting to this body. Measure twice. Cut once. Adopt the amendment. Get the bill signed. And then let us proceed forward to such other matters as may be required.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) has 3½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. PICKERING).

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute. Again, with great respect to the ranking member from the other side, I rise in opposition.

I do so because the substitute fails in its own objective of eliminating barriers to electronic commerce by recognizing the validity of electronic signatures and contracts.

The fact is that the substitute does very little to remove barriers that result from the legal uncertainty associated with electronic signatures and contracts.

Actually, the substitute further exacerbates the uncertainty associated with the legal effect and enforceability of electronic mediums such as electronic contracts, agreements, signatures, and records.

□ 1515

Under the substitute, electronic signatures and records will enjoy legal effect and enforceability only if they are used in the formation of an electronic contract. Thus, an electronic signature or record is not accorded legal validity unless used in the context of contract formation. The net positive effect of the substitute on e-commerce is minimal at best. Moreover, as the substitute enables a State to exclude any of its laws from the application of the substitute's rule, even that minimal positive effect is at risk of further diminishment. Still another disconcerting fact is that permitting a State to exclude any or all of its laws, the substitute actually undermines the growth of electronic commerce by exacerbating uncertainty by codifying that uncertainty in Federal law.

The simple fact is that the substitute fails to facilitate and promote electronic commerce by validating and authorizing the use of electronic contracts, agreements, records and signatures. And resultantly, it fails to promote public confidence in the validity, integrity and reliability of electronic commerce. H.R. 3220 may actually hinder the development of legal and business infrastructure necessary to implement electronic commerce and therefore retard growth in e-commerce.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the underlying bill and in opposition to the substitute.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I have here a Floor Alert from the National Conference of State Legislatures, Office of State-Federal Relations, in which they point out that the substitute offered by my friends and colleagues and me will accomplish the purposes of ensuring the proper recognition of electronic signatures without trampling on the rights of consumers and without engaging in the completion of legislation which will be opposed and vetoed by the administration.

Our proposal here is fair. There is no significant trampling on State laws. There is a piece of legislation which will be accepted by the administration and which will protect the rights of consumers. Messages which would be transported in cyberspace and perhaps lost to the detriment of consumers who might find as a result of that foreclosures of mortgages and other hurtful actions by the seller will not be occurring.

I think this is a sensible way to proceed. Let us know what we are doing. We embarked upon this process in the idea that we would have a bill which would approve electronic signatures. The original committee bill did that. Declarations were festooned upon the committee bill. This amendment gives all of the rights to the parties that they want. An individual to that contract may waive contract rights to carry the matter more far and further forward, but this proposal that we confront and seek to amend will impose upon innocent persons conditions which will only be understood by lawyers and experts in electronic matters.

Be fair to your constituents and to the people. Allow them to proceed slowly into the time of cyberspace. Do not put them at risk because all of a sudden they are going to find to their vast surprise, somewhere hidden in a contract which they had signed electronically are a waiver of a whole plethora of rights that are very important to them.

Accept the amendment. Vote for it. And in failing that, reject the bill. It is not in the interests of your constituents.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I again rise in opposition to this amendment. Records are important to add to this, it is voluntary, and we have been into that over and over.

In addition to that, what this amendment would do would be to allow States to enact any kind of legislation they want on this subject, and 44 States have already acted. There is a wide variety of difference between the 44 States. The one thing about electronic commerce, it is certainly interstate commerce and that has always been reserved to the Congress.

I would hope that we would reject this amendment and adopt the underlying bill. I would like to point out that the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) is a cosponsor of H.R. 2626, a bill that allows electronic delivery of consumer disclosures under a variety of banking laws, including the Truth-in-Lending Act, the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, the Fair Credit Reporting Act, the Real Estate Settlement Act, and yet we have the gentleman opposing the inclusion of records in H.R. 1714. Passing strange.

I urge the defeat of this amendment and the adoption of the underlying bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 126, noes 278, not voting 29, as follows:

Messrs. REGULA, WEYGAND, GEJDENSON, SCHAFFER, SHOWS, and HEFLEY, Mrs. CHENOWETH-

HAGE, and Mrs. THURMAN changed their vote from ''aye'' to ''no.''

Mr. WEXLER and Mr. SPRATT changed their vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained for rollcall vote 578. Had I been present, I would had voted "yes" on rollcall vote number 578.

Stated against:

Mr. ROGAN. Mr. Chairman, on rollcall No. 578, I was attending the Little Rock Nine Congressional Medal of Honor Ceremony at the White House. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD) having assumed the chair, Mr. LATOURETTE, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 1714) to facilitate the use of electronic records and signatures in interstate or foreign commerce, pursuant to House Resolution 366, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on passage of the bill are postponed until later today.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1555, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2000

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the unanimous consent agreement of earlier today, I call up the conference report on the House bill (H.R. 1555) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2000 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of Friday, November 5, 1999, at page H. 11630).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) and the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS).

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I obviously rise in strong support of the conference report to accompany H.R. 1555, the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000.

Mr. Speaker, in H.R. 1555 we begin the funding for the intelligence community of the next millennium. That, Mr. Speaker, is a most useful perspective for what we have tried to do in our conference report. How can we adapt the tools and skills of the Cold War to meet the challenges of the 21st century? These are new times. We need new ways to approach them.

Underlying that question is how, and in some cases whether, we plan to meet those challenges. How we define our interests, Mr. Speaker, will depend on how we define ourselves. What kind of country will we be in the next century? In 2020, when my grandchildren are grown, what will the American flag mean to them and to people around the world?

In the classified schedule of authorizations in our conference report, we frame a preliminary answer to these questions. In that report, Mr. Speaker, we bring forward the basic tools and skills of the Cold War to bear on the new threats of the next century: the international drug cartels that bring poison into our cities, the elusive conspiracies that put the pieces of nuclear weapons into the hands of rogue leaders, and the shadowy networks that want to bomb our buildings overseas and here at home.

We will also need to use these tools and skills to meet new and unanticipated challenges that will arise in the coming years. Synthetic pharmaceuticals, genetic terrorists? I cannot know what threats will face my grandchildren in the year 2020 as Americans, but I can tell the Members what intelligence tools and skills will be necessary to meet those threats.

That is our job. We may not know the who, In other words, but we clearly know the how. We have learned that, and now we have to provide for it. In our conference report, Mr. Speaker, we continue to focus on this, how we will meet the threats and the challenges of the future, which is indeed upon us.

We will need more human intelligence or HUMINT, as we call it. Over the past year we have had to understand and to act upon crises in Belgrade, Nairobi, Dar es Salaam, East Timor, southern Colombia, and a whole host of other hard-to-pronounce places. In each case, policymakers need more HUMINT on the plans and the intentions of the rogue leaders, dissidents, terrorists, guerillas, and traffickers involved in these crises.

Where will the crises of the year 2000 arise, Kabul, Kinshasa, Lagos? I do not know, but they will be out there, and wherever they do arise our policymakers will need intelligence officers on the ground to collect HUMINT on the plans and intentions of those involved.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, our conference report continues the rebuilding of our HUMINT capabilities around the world. No surprises is the right way to go.

We will continue to need signals intelligence, or SIGINT, as it is called. As in the past, our ability to collect SIGINT has helped to protect our shores from cocaine and our citizens from terrorists. That ability, however, is threatened in a fundamental way by digital technologies.

□ 1600

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, our conference report continues the recapitalization of our SIGINT capability. This is a huge undertaking and an extraordinarily significant one.

We must improve the processing of imagery intelligence, or IMINT as it is called. Our ability to collect imagery has accelerated at lightning speed, but our ability to process imagery remains at a crawl. Collection and processing, however, are two halves of one whole. They must work together.

At present, the combination of collection and processing and imagery is a Ferrari welded to a Ford Falcon. That combination simply will not drive our IMINT capability in 2020. And for that reason, Mr. Speaker, our conference report challenges the Intelligence Community to invest more in its ability to process imagery. It does no good to have the pictures if we do not have analysts to review them.

We must rebuild our covert action capability. The rise of rogue leaders and regional conflicts has demonstrated once again that the President must have an option between the use of F–16s and doing nothing. The President must have, whenever appropriate, the ability to influence an adversary through the various forms of covert action, properly oversighted, of course.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, our conference report provides additional funding for development of the Intelligence Community's covert action capabilities.

Rebuilding and refining our HUMINT, our SIGINT, our IMINT, and our covert action capabilities are central to the conference report accompanying H.R. 1555. In addition, we address legislatively a number of specific issues that have arisen with regard to the use and the oversight of these capabilities.

In section 309 of our conference report, we direct the National Security Agency, the NSA, to report in detail on the legal standards that it employs for the interception of communications. I can report, notwithstanding this provision, that the committee has substantial insight into the action of the NSA and the guidance of its legal staff. I have thus far no reason to believe that the NSA is not scrupulous in following the Constitution and the laws conducting its SIGINT mission. However, our job is oversight and we take it seriously.

In section 311 of our conference report, we require that the Director of Central Intelligence report to Congress on any involvement of U.S. intelligence agencies in the abuses of the Pinochet regime in Chile. In response to public and Congressional interest, I have introduced legislation with Senator MOYNIHAN that would coordinate and expedite the gathering and dissemination of such information. The story of U.S. intelligence in Chile, whether good or bad, inspiring or embarrassing, is part of American history. Such stories should, to the extent possible, be provided to the American people. I am hopeful that Senator MOYNIHAN and I have introduced the means to make that happen, and I believe we have.

Finally, in title VIII of our conference report, we provide the President with an important new tool against the menace of foreign drug lords who poison our cities. In title VIII, called ''The Foreign Narcotics Kingpin Designation Act,'' the President and the Secretary of Treasury may publicly identify foreign drug lords and block their transactions and assets. Title VIII extends an executive order against Colombian drug lords to include all foreign drug lords. It provides the President with a new way to use intelligence in the war on drugs. It is long overdue. It is a tried and tested measure. It works and we need to use it.

Mr. Speaker, only through a cooperative, bipartisan effort could our committee have addressed so wide a range of authorizations and legislative provisions in this conference report, and also, incidentally, with such a good professional staff as we have.

The ideas and counsel of the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON), our ranking member, form a major part of this report. It draws as well on the considerable expertise of the Democratic staff of this committee. And I am pleased to say our committee in my view works on a very close, bipartisan, cooperative basis and the results of that are evident to all.

Our work together on this conference report is a part of an annual demonstration that partisanship, like beepers and cell phones, actually get checked at the outer door of our committee before Members can come into our committee's spaces.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of a strong bipartisan conference report that provides funding and direction for the Intelligence Community of the next millennium. It also provides legislation that addresses oversight issues and expands the use of intelligence in the war on drugs. I urge Members to support this conference.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the conference report. First of all, let me congratulate the gentleman from Florida (Chairman GOSS), the chairman of our committee, because I think many times not only I, but the staff and other Members thought that we would never reach the floor today. It was due to his diligence and the staff's diligence that we are here today with what I think is a fine conference report.

I also would like to thank John Millis and his staff and Mike Sheehy, our minority counsel, and our staff for working in a very cooperative manner. There is one gentleman on the majority staff who is not present today and that is Tim Sample. That is because his father, Robert Sample, passed away recently. But Tim has done an outstanding job for us, and I know the House extends its sympathy to Tim Sample and his family.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to make special mention of two issues addressed in the conference report. Recently, the National Reconnaissance Office announced the award of a contract to produce the next generation of imagery satellites. These devices will vastly increase the amount of imagery which can be collected. Collection, however, is not the only element in the production of imagery intelligence. Equally important are the elements of tasking, processing, exploitation and dissemination, known collectively as TPED.

Mr. Speaker, to shortchange TPED is to guarantee that the benefit of investments in collection systems will never be fully realized. The imbalance between TPED and collection is now at a critical stage, not because its consequences will be felt in the next month, but because there is no evidence that the executive branch is serious about addressing it adequately in the next few budget submissions.

The conferees agreed to report language which I think is strong and makes clear if the administration cannot budget appropriately for TPED, the scale of the collection system should be modified. There is adequate time in which to assess the resolve of the executive branch on this matter, but in my judgment we are long past the point where we can merely exhort the leadership in the defense and intelligence agencies to bring collection and TPED into balance. The report language is intended to be helpful, but there should be no mistaking the frustration of the conferees with past efforts to achieve realistic budget submissions on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, last week the House adopted overwhelmingly the so-called drug kingpin legislation which would be used to identify foreign individuals and entities that play a significant role in international narcotics trafficking. The bill also provides for the blocking of access to the assets in the United States of those individuals and entities, as well as the assets of those who assist or provide financial or technical support to them.

That legislation is contained in this conference report in place of an amendment on the same issue which had been adopted during the consideration of the intelligence authorization bill in the Senate.

During the debate in the House on the drug kingpin measure, concerns were raised about the impact the bill could have on the property of United States persons who might have a business relationship with an individual or entity identified as a significant narcotics trafficker, even if the relationship was not directly related to the trafficking activities. Similar concerns may be raised today. Some have asserted that the bill would preclude judicial review of an action to block access to the assets of a United States person. I would be extremely concerned by that result.

Others contend that the Administrative Procedures Act and the Federal court system would be available to a United States person who desires to challenge an asset-blocking action under the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees did not intend to create a situation in which the ability of a United States person to challenge an asset-blocking action under the bill would be less than the ability of a foreign person. To ensure that an unintended consequence did not result in this area, the conferees agreed to include a provision which would establish a commission to examine the judicial review questions raised by the drug kingpin measure and report its findings to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, Committee on the Judiciary, and the Committee on International Relations.

If the commission concludes that due process concerns raised about this legislation are legitimate, I expect that the Congress will take prompt and immediate action.

Mr. Speaker, intelligence programs play an important role in our national security. The conference report strengthens many of those programs and I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM), a distinguished member of the committee, a chairman of one of our subcommittees, the Subcommittee on Human Intelligence, Analysis and Counterintelligence, a Member who has distinguished himself as leading in the efforts in the war on terrorism.

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to take the time at this moment to support this bill. I join in supporting H.R. 1555. The bill is a good one. It reflects a great deal of work by Members and the staffs of the two committees of jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Intelligence, Analysis and Counterintelligence, I am especially glad to report the committee's mark has addressed a wide range of pressing requirements in each of the subcommittee's areas of responsibility. The bill continues the committee's multiyear effort to rebuild our Nation's human intelligence capabilities, as the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) has remarked earlier. These have been depleted over the years and are now being rebuilt, as they have been over the last several years, and this bill adds enormously to that.

The bill also includes much-needed support for both the intelligence and law enforcement communities to beef up our counterintelligence programs in a responsible and carefully targeted effort. I am equally pleased that this legislation provides resources for improving our analytical efforts towards emerging threats in such diverse environments as Colombia, North Korea and the former Soviet Union.

Among the most significant provisions in the conference report is title VIII, otherwise known as The Foreign Narcotics Kingpins Designation Act. The House considered and approved this legislation just last week as a stand-alone measure. I am happy to report that the House's action was instrumental in persuading the Senate to incorporate the House-passed kingpins language as a part of this conference report.

Based on the success of President Clinton's 1995 executive order targeting the finances of the Cali Cartel kingpins, I strongly believe that the enactment of this legislation will permit our Nation to fight the war against major narcotics traffickers smarter and with greater precision.

The kingpins legislation gives the President additional legal and financial tools to go after the world's most significant drug kingpins. By building on the legal and administrative precedents established during the 4-year development of the Colombia-focused program, the cosponsors and the administration sought to ensure sufficient legal protection for the innocent, while intensifying the pressure on foreign persons and foreign businesses involved in large-scale narcotics trafficking and money laundering activities.

This mechanism is intended to respond to the emerging threat posed by these global criminals and their organizations. Based on the success obtained to date against the Colombians, it is my expectation that this policy tool could be used with equal success against drug lords based in Southeast and Southwest Asia, Europe, the Former Soviet Union, and elsewhere in Latin America. To ensure that the new tool is properly funded and staffed, I would urge the administration provide the necessary personnel and resources within its fiscal year 2001 budget submissions to the Treasury Department's Office of Foreign Assets Control and to the relevant units of the Intelligence Community.

Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that by going after the assets of these kingpins in the United States, we have a great opportunity to destroy the cartels in ways we otherwise would not, and this is the strongest tool to date.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the Intelligence authorization conference report before us today, and I urge all of my colleagues to do so.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCCOLLUM. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM) stated a moment ago that in title VIII of the bill, the rights of innocent persons are protected——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The time of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM) has expired.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SISISKY).

Mr. SISISKY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference agreement on H.R. 1555, the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000. First, let me take this opportunity to congratulate the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), for his efforts in producing a bipartisan bill that addresses the intelligence needs of policymakers and our military.

Additionally, praise must also be extended to the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON), our ranking Democratic member, for his work in helping to craft this important piece of legislation and for his leadership on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is very consistent with the requests submitted by the President. In several areas, the committee recommends modest increases in the request. The committee has recommended additional funding for intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance airborne platforms that were so important during Operation Allied Force and continue to be critical in the Balkans, Korea and for counterdrug activities.

During Operation Allied Force, we had no ground forces deployed to drive the Serbs into the open, so intelligence surveillance and reconnaissance airborne platforms provided the eyes and ears for our commanders, air crews and targeteers.

□ 1615

Without these platforms, we would have had little success against mobile targets. These platforms provided unprecedented levels of information to our warfighters.

This funding is critical. The military services have not provided sufficient funding for these very high-demand, low-density assets. For a small campaign like Allied Force, the European Command found it necessary, not only to dedicate all their intelligence, surveillance, and reconnaissance airborne platforms, leaving forces in Bosnia and Saudi Arabia vulnerable, but platforms had to also be borrowed from other theaters.

Operation Allied Force proved the value of our investment in unmanned aerial vehicles or UAV's. The Army Hunter unmanned aerial vehicle was flown aggressively and successfully during the air campaign and UAV's are essential for peacekeeping operations in the U.S. sector of Kosovo today. The bill rightly contains increased funding for unmanned aerial vehicles.

The committee strongly believes that it is not enough to just develop intelligence collection platforms; a corresponding investment must be made in the people and the systems that task, process, exploit, and disseminate what is collected.

Collection systems are costly enough, but will be of little value if the data cannot be immediately analyzed and disseminated to support rapid retargeting or other time-critical activities. The committee has put a tough provision in the conference report to address this issue and expects the administration to remedy imbalances in the imagery architecture.

Mr. Speaker, this bill would provide the funds that are needed to sustain our efforts to combat terrorism, narcotics trafficking, and weapons proliferation. I am pleased to support the bill. I urge my colleagues to support it as well.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS), the vice chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, and there be no daylight between us, appropriator of the committee who has done a marvelous job of making sure the authorization and the appropriations match up, and I offer my congratulations to him.

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida (Chairman GOSS) very much for his remarks as well as his time.

Mr. Speaker, in the years I have served in the Congress, I hold in the highest regard the work that I have done with the Members of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence in the House and in the other body as well. But, particularly, I want to express my appreciation to the gentleman from Florida (Chairman GOSS) as well as to the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) and their very fine staffs for the conference report they have developed this year.

I also want to extend my appreciation for their patience with me as I have gone about learning the work that swirls around the Subcommittee on Defense of the Committee on Appropriations this year. I have not been available as nearly as much as I would have liked, but their patience is much appreciated as well as their help.

I want to spend a few minutes discussing what I view perhaps is the most important action taken in this conference report. It should come as no surprise to anyone who follows unclassified discussions of our intelligence capabilities that we are at the beginning of building a space-borne imagery intelligence capability that is meant to take us through the next several decades.

This capability, usually known as FIA for the term ''future imagery architecture,'' will be an incredible improvement over what we can now do. The satellites promise to deliver many times the data at a much-reduced interval between pictures. It has the potential to revolutionize the way we employ our military. It can also greatly complicate the lives of those terrorists, drug lords, and weapons proliferators who threaten our national security. For this reason, Congress has been supportive of FIA.

FIA, to be carried out over the next decade or so, will be the most expensive program in the history of the intelligence community. Over the last 2 years, Congress has imposed spending caps on the program to make sure its costs will not overwhelm the limited money that is available for our intelligence work.

Despite this imposition of those spending caps, there remain severe problems with FIA. We on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence are gravely concerned that the program as currently planned has the potential of being the biggest white elephant in U.S. intelligence history.

Now, why would I suggest that? Well, why? Because there is, effectively, no money budgeted now to task the satellites, process the digital data they collect, exploit the information coming from the data, and then disseminate the information to the national policymaker, the President perhaps, the analysts, or the military unit that needs the information. The best that we can do is hope, in the current circumstances.

Let me say that, for 4 years, Congress has warned that the intelligence and the defense communities must keep up to the need to fund the activities to step up to that need to fund these activities to make the system useful. The tasking, the processing, exploitation and dissemination, what we call TPED, has got to have that fundamental support.

We have been told do not worry, we will take care of it. All the while, we get candid comments from the executive branch that, in reality, there is no plan to fund TPED and not even an understanding of how we ought to go about it.

In this bill, Congress has told the administration enough is enough. We have said that, unless there is a plan implemented that will process the satellite data that FIA will collect, we will not buy the satellite system as currently proposed. In English, it does not do any good to take pictures that no one will ever see.

We are hopeful the administration will step up to the challenge, that the military services who are to be the principal beneficiaries will step up and help pay for the bill, and that the intelligence community will also help by finding priorities that it, too, can set aside for a while. If not, they must next year join with us to rethink this hugely expensive program so as to downsize it and somehow find other savings in its development that will allow us to fund the TPED functions without which FIA will be worthless.

This has been a difficult matter, and I am proud of how the members of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligences have dealt with this head on. We are all advocates of a strong intelligence community, but such advocacy must be guided by good sense, good judgment, and a jealous protection of taxpayers' dollars. It is time to pay the bill for taking the intelligence community into the new millennium.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), who is the ranking member on the Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to serve as the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Tactical and Technical Intelligence. This subcommittee oversees intelligence collected by technical means, such as satellites and airplanes and ships.

During debate on this bill in the House, I urged my colleagues to support the legislation; and I applauded the gentleman from Florida (Chairman GOSS) for his respect of the views of the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON), the ranking member, and of all of the Democrats on the committee. I commended as well the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), chairman of the Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence.

I believe that this conference report deserves the same endorsement from the House. It is consistent with the administration's request. It is fair, and it will enhance our nation's security.

I want to point out to my colleagues that this conference report is the only authorization for those intelligence activities of a distinctly national character. The intelligence activities that are unique to the Department of Defense are conferenced with the armed services committees, and the authorization of those activities appears in both the National Defense Authorization Act and the Intelligence Authorization Act. These DoD-unique intelligence activities make up a large fraction of the nation's overall intelligence budget.

This conference report would add about 1 percent to the President's request for national intelligence activities. As with the House version of the bill, there would be modest increases in the budgets for activities centered in the National Security Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, and the Central Intelligence Agency, and somewhat less money for the National Reconnaissance Office, which manages the acquisition of our intelligence satellites.

I am pleased that we have fully funded the major satellite acquisition programs, including the new future imagery architecture, or FIA. These new imagery satellites will greatly increase the volume of imagery we can collect, as well as provide for more frequent coverage of targets, which together will address deficiencies identified in Operation Desert Storm and more recent conflicts.

However, these enhanced collection capabilities will not count for much unless we also invest in the means to exploit and disseminate the imagery on the ground. On this score, executive branch planning has been extremely poor. The conference report would require a reduction in planned collection capabilities unless substantial improvements are planned for exploitation and dissemination.

I would also like to call attention to significant problems at the National Security Agency. The NSA is facing tremendous challenges coping with the explosive development of commercial communications and computer technology. As the new NSA director has pointed out, while the new technology is providing incredible benefits to our Nation's security and economy, it is taxing in the extreme to those charged with intercepting the communications of hostile powers and drug lords. At the same time, NSA has not demonstrated much prowess in coping with the challenge.

The new director of NSA, I believe, grasps the seriousness of the situation. I hope that we have made progress in focusing the attention of the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Central Intelligence on this critical issue.

Fixing NSA's internal problems is only half the answer. A sustained funding increase of some magnitude will also probably be necessary, and there are no obvious candidates yet for offsetting cuts. Action, however, is imperative since the nation cannot navigate with an impaired sense of hearing.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, this is a responsible bill that will enhance our nation's security. It supports our military forces and our efforts to combat terrorism, narcotics trafficking, and weapons proliferation. I am pleased to endorse it, and I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support it as well.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, might I make an inquiry of how much time remains on both sides.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) has 15 minutes remaining. The gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) has 17½ minutes remaining.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), chairman of the Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence, the former governor of Delaware, who is going to tell us about that subcommittee.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Florida, the chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, for yielding to me, and I thank him for the tremendous work that he does for this country, something that is probably not recognized by many people any place in the country other than people in the intelligence community because of the closed nature of what we do.

The gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) also is a superb individual in that committee who has helped so much with the intelligence responsibilities of the country.

I would like to also thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) who just spoke, who is the ranking member on the subcommittee which I do chair, which is the Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence.

I also rise in full support of this conference report for the fiscal year 2000 intelligence authorization.

As chair of the Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence, I would like to highlight a few major points of committee emphasis over the past year in areas of technical and tactical intelligence.

We spent a great deal of time investigating the Chinese embassy bombing. As a subcommittee, we looked at satellite launch failures and intelligence support for military operations. There has been considerable emphasis on the requirements for future satellites and on associated production issues, and a lot of investigation and questions focused on revitalization of our Signals Intelligence capability at the National Security Agency.

I am keenly aware of the vital contributions of space-based assets to the United States national security, and there clearly is a future. From diplomacy to precision strikes, our assets in space are essential for confident planning and execution of policy. Continuity in satellite operations hinges on another critical program, space launch.

Therefore, the large number of recent launch failures became an issue of intense concern for me personally. Several ongoing investigations are examining reasons for the failures. There is no doubt that the issue is being taken seriously and that very competent government and industry personnel are working to identify and to resolve problems.

□ 1630

However, because the cost of each failure can be so enormous, we must strive for the right balance of independent assessments. The committee will continue to scrutinize the launch issues and exercise its oversight duties. Depending on the results of ongoing studies, I am considering a legislative provision mandating review by an independent panel.

In our hearings on support for the military, a predominant theme was the continued imbalance between collection and other intelligence assets. For years, the committee has stressed the need for better planning and financing of intelligence processing, analysis and dissemination. This year we are insisting that our future imagery satellite capabilities be at least roughly balanced with ground capabilities.

Signals intelligence has also suffered from gaps in what we call ''end to end'' capability, as well as from enormous leaps in target technology. For several years, the committee has insisted that changes are needed at the National Security Agency in order to modernize our SIGINT capabilities and improve efficiency.

The committee is most gratified that the new director of NSA, Lieutenant General Mike Hayden, agreed to conduct unrestrained studies of the need for reform, using both an internal and an external team. These studies were just completed. Both endorsed previous committee findings identifying systemic obstacles to efficiency and change. The difficult part, sorting and implementing solutions proposed by the teams, soon begins. General Hayden has our strong support for decisive action that will, by nature, be controversial.

We will not rest easy until SIGINT is once again healthy.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), a very valuable member of our committee.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California for yielding me this time, and I also want to thank him and the chairman for their patience, their insight and their help to a new member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence for the past 11 months.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to note the importance of a strong and effective intelligence community. Dating back over 220 years, certainly General George Washington started our intelligence community with the help of such brave patriots as Nathan Hale, who we lost in the first intelligence operation when he was hung by the British. That history and that importance continues as an important thread through the United States efforts in our military history and in our history to be effective in gleaning information from around the world.

If my colleagues read the report, it is equally important, if not even more important today, to have a cost effective and efficacious intelligence community. We deal with such issues as direct cooperation with our military in conflict. Nothing is more important than getting that information in a very timely methodology to our troops in battle.

We have in this report international narcotics trafficking. Very important for the security of our young people. We have counterintelligence and antiterrorism efforts. Very important for the security of our country. Anti-proliferation of nuclear weapons, where we work very closely with the intelligence community. And a fourth area, cyber warfare, where other countries can either organize or hack into our defense capabilities or our business capabilities, something that we need to look at in even more important and focused ways. So for these reasons I think it is even more important for the intelligence community to be more effective in what they do.

The 1996 report on the Roles and Capability of the Intelligence Community, Preparing for the 21st Century, issued by Harold Brown and Warren Rudman, pointed out four areas that we need to improve in, and I strongly encourage the intelligence community, with the help of our chairman and our ranking member and our bipartisan work, to get better in their cost effectiveness. We had a terrible mistake in the bombing in Kosovo of the Chinese embassy. That is not an issue of money, that is an issue of doing the basic job of mapping.

Secondly, the coordination between the intelligence agencies. We need integrated capabilities.

Thirdly, we need to improve the capabilities of the intelligence estimates. They were not particularly accurate in making and measuring the breakup of the former Soviet Union.

And, fourthly, making sure we have a balance between the human intelligence and the satellite intelligence. Both are very important for our national security. I hope we can balance these efforts in the coming year and have a budget that reflects cost effectiveness.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, it has been said that truth is the first casualty in war. It is also true that constitutional liberty can be a casualty of war. Certainly when it comes to the so-called war on drugs, we are very casual about sacrificing our liberties.

Title VIII of this bill, the Foreign Narcotics Kingpin Designation Act, empowers the President to designate people as ''significant foreign narcotics traffickers.'' Once designated, all property in the United States of such a person is seized. Any American who does any business with him can be jailed for 10 years and fined $10 million. All this without any criteria for such designation in the bill. All this without any evidence being necessary. No notice, no hearing, no opportunity to be heard, no protection for the innocent, and no judicial review.

Even the Anti-terrorism Act of 1996 allows a group designated by the person as a foreign terrorist organization the right to challenge the designation in court. But not this bill. No judicial review. The President is given the powers of a pre-Magna Carta King of England to accuse and find guilty with no due process, no process at all, and no appeal.

In 1951, the Supreme Court, in the case of Joint Anti-Fascist Committee vs. McGrath, said that the Fifth Amendment due process clause barred the government from condemning organizations as Communists without giving them notice and opportunity to be heard in their own defense. This title gives no notice, no opportunity to be heard, and no appeal. It is clearly unconstitutional and grossly subversive of the liberty for which this country stands and which we are sworn to uphold.

It is a travesty that this very important and very dangerous title was rushed through this House without any hearings and without any committee review. This title alone richly merits the defeat of the entire conference report, and I will urge my colleagues to vote against the report because of this title.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire about the remaining balances of time for both sides?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) has 11½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) has 12½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his leadership, as well as for the leadership of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS).

One of the provisions of the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2000 which I have been most interested in is an amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY) during floor consideration of this bill. The Hinchey amendment required the Director of Central Intelligence to produce a report on the activities of the officers, covert agents, and employees of the intelligence community with respect to the Pinochet regime in Chile.

The Hinchey amendment was somewhat controversial. It was very controversial in fact. It was argued that the search for documents related to human rights violations in Chile directed by the National Security Council was sufficient and nothing further was needed. The issue of cost was also raised, as was the question of how much time should be allotted for the DCI to produce an adequate report on the subject.

Others of us argued that a report was needed on U.S. intelligence activities in Chile with respect to the assassination of President Allende, the accession of General Pinochet, and the violations of human rights committed by officers and agents of Pinochet. Indeed, such a report is long overdue.

An authoritative report from the DCI submitted to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Appropriations on the role of the CIA and other elements of the intelligence community will put into context the information that is now being reviewed, declassified, and released under the direction of the National Security Council. I believe this report should make clear exactly what, if anything, the CIA was doing in concert with General Pinochet and his supporters before and during the Pinochet regime.

Mr. Speaker, I would have preferred to have had a report produced within 4 or 6 months of enactment of this bill, but I am grateful to the chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), and our distinguished ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON), for their leadership. We were able to agree that the report be produced in no later than 270 days after enactment and not a year from now, as some would have preferred. I commend the gentlemen for including this in the legislation.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY).

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I also want to commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON), and also my good friend, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), for their hard work in forging this legislation.

The conference report includes my amendment, which was adopted by the House on a voice vote back in May, requiring the CIA to report to Congress on its activities in Chile during the early 1970s. It is time that the Central Intelligence Agency accounted for its role in the military coup that toppled the democratically elected government of Salvador Allende and led to his death. The American people need to know how our government supported the rise of Augusto Pinochet, a ruthless dictator who systematically murdered and tortured his enemies.

General Pinochet has been under house arrest in London for the past year awaiting trial in Spain for his crimes against humanity. The British courts recently upheld the Spanish judge's petition to extradite him.

Last year, the National Security Agency directed the CIA and other government departments and agencies to disclose relevant information regarding Pinochet's military coup and subsequent crimes against humanity. The CIA has not yet complied with this order and has released only a handful of documents to this date. My amendment will ensure that the CIA releases these documents and accounts for its activities during this dark period in Chile's history.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the willingness of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) to work with me on this issue, and I thank him very much for that. I also thank our ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON), and also the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) for their strong and effective advocacy on behalf of my amendment. I know full well that our success would not have been possible had it not been for their diligence, attention and good work.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Nevada (Mr. GIBBONS), a decorated colleague and member of our committee from somewhere west of the Mississippi, who has been invaluable in advising me on military equipment, Air Force needs, and other needs of that ilk, and who adds a great deal of value to the committee.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report for the intelligence authorization bill, and I want to thank my friend from Florida, somewhere east of the Mississippi, and the chairman of the committee for yielding me this time.

This past year, Mr. Speaker, has been a challenging one for the intelligence community, particularly in the area of support for our military operations. The United States launched a heavy 4-day offensive against Iraq in the late time frame of December 1998 and fought a war over Kosovo and Serbia earlier this year, all this while our pilots are enforcing the no-fly zones over Iraq. Meanwhile, crises or potential crises in other parts of the world, like the Taiwan Strait, Korea, Indonesia, India and Pakistan, and the Caucasus keep our military on a high state of alert.

Ten years today after the fall of the Berlin Wall I think it is safe to say, Mr. Speaker, that the post-Cold War honeymoon is over. With the men and women of our armed forces deployed across the world, it is especially important that we meet the pressing need for intelligence, surveillance and reconnaissance, or ISR, to support their missions and provide for their protection.

For several years, members of the intelligence community have recognized that American ISR resources and personnel are stretched thin, and we have searched for ways to address these shortfalls. This year, airborne ISR was one of the committee's very top priorities, and I believe this conference report reflects that. Mr. Speaker, while we have not solved all the ISR problems, this bill takes concrete steps toward providing the accurate, timely intelligence and warnings necessary to save American lives and win the battles on the ground and in the air.

□ 1645

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this conference report.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I again want to urge adoption of this report. I think it is a fine work product. The gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER) raises an issue of due process. It is my feeling, Mr. Speaker, although there is some controversy, that there is nothing in this bill that abrogates existing rights of U.S. persons to address their grievance either through the Administrative Procedure Act or ultimately in a Federal district court.

But just in case there is a question on that, and there is, we have provided in this conference report a commission to examine that issue. As I indicated in my opening comments, I hope the commission would act expeditiously on this matter. I think that is sufficient to cover that issue.

Once again, I would like to thank the chairman of the committee for his cooperation and all the members of the committee for their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) very much for his hard work and close teamwork and the great spirit of bipartisanship and concern for our country and its national security that he brings himself and his members and, in fact, all our members to the committee.

I am exceedingly proud of our committee. I am very proud of the membership. The value added of each and every Member brings to the committee a wide variety of view and opinion across the country of the gentleman from Nevada (Mr. GIBBONS), who just spoke who represents vast areas of countryside, and others who represent more concentrated, consolidated urban areas.

We have what I think is a very balanced perspective of the United States of America and its national security needs. But behind as good a membership team as that, I would say we have the finest professional staff on the Hill. I would measure them against any other professional staff. I take great pride in them. And again, I do not make distinctions about party affiliation.

Mr. Millis, our chief of staff, does an excellent job, as does Mike Shehy. Both of them I treat as co-equals in running the affairs of the committee. Pat Murray, our general counsel. We have had an expression today of sympathy that is both personal and collective from all of us to our budget cruncher, Tim Sample. But for all those names I just mentioned, there are other members of the committee that have equally pulled the oars just as well in their own area of expertise and deserve to be recognized and thanked by all of America for the work they do.

I think that the points that needed to come out other than the basic themes that we have made clear in this authorization process, which I point out are exactly in line with the appropriations process, and have gone through a very arduous conference process with our colleagues in the other body, we have covered the ground that we needed to cover; and I think we covered it very well.

We certainly have taken into consideration what our other colleagues who are not on the committee have brought forward during this long, deliberative process this year since the authorization bill began, as we have heard in some of the testimonies from the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY). And there are many other Members who have brought matters forward, I think the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS), and the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BARR). Several come to mind.

We have tried to accommodate in every way their concerns. We may not have done it in exactly the way they asked, but they have gotten consideration and I think a reasonable result out of this.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER) has expressed concern about our title XIII. I would point out that our title XIII, as the gentleman from California (Mr. DIXON) just pointed out, basically is the same as what this House has passed recently on a vote of 385–26. The language is virtually the same. But in an abundance of caution and fair play and deliberation to make sure that we have got it right, we have gone forward with the idea of a panel to review the situation just to be extra sure because these are important rights we are talking about.

I think it is that kind of fair play and that kind of reasonableness in dealing with legitimate concerns that this committee needs to be attentive to, and I think we have passed that test. I stand forth here today to ask every Member of this House to proudly support this piece of legislation. I believe it is worthy of their vote.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I have deep concerns about the amount and use of the funds authorized by H.R. 1555, the Intelligence Authorization bill for fiscal year 2000. However, I am especially gratified that the Conference Committee included Section 313, "Reaffirmation of Longstanding Prohibition Against-Drug Trafficking by Employees of the Intelligence Community," in the conference report.

Section 313 clearly states that the employees of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and other intelligence agencies are prohibited from participating in drug trafficking activities. Drug trafficking is clearly defined to include the manufacture, purchase, sale, transport or distribution of illegal drugs. Section 313 also requires CIA employees to report known or suspected drug trafficking activities to the appropriate authorities. Section 313 is based on an amendment that I offered during floor consideration of H.R. 1555. The House adopted my amendment by voice vote on May 13, 1999.

Most Americans would assume that the CIA would never traffic in illegal drugs and would take all necessary actions to prosecute known drug traffickers. History, however, has proven that this is not the case.

For 13 years, the CIA and the Department of Justice followed a Memorandum of Understanding that explicitly exempted the CIA from requirements to report drug trafficking by CIA assets, agents, and contractors to federal law enforcement agencies. This allowed some of the biggest drug lords in the world to operate without fear that their activities would be reported to the Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) or any other law enforcement authorities. This remarkable—and secret—agreement was in force from February 1982 until August of 1995.

For the past three years, I have been investigating the allegations of drug trafficking by the Nicaraguan Contras during the 1980's. My investigation has led me to the conclusion that U.S. intelligence agencies knew about drug trafficking by the Contras in South Central Los Angeles and throughout the United States and chose to continue to support the Contras without taking any action to stop the drug trafficking.

Even more remarkable is the fact that there is evidence that the CIA has actually participated in drug trafficking activities. In the late 1980's, the CIA began to develop intelligence on the Colombian drug cartels. To infiltrate the cartels, the CIA arranged an undercover drug-smuggling operation with the Venezuelan National Guard. More than one and one-half tons of cocaine were smuggled from Colombia into Venezuela and then stored at a CIA-financed Counternarcotics Intelligence Center in Venezuela.

In certain circumstances, the DEA arranges "controlled shipments" of illegal drugs, in which the drugs are allowed to enter the United States and then tracked to their destination and seized. However, in this case, the CIA was more interested in keeping the drug lords happy than confiscating the drugs and prosecuting the traffickers. The CIA asked the DEA for permission to "let the dope walk," that is allow the drugs to be sold on our nation's streets. The DEA refused, but the CIA ushered the drugs into the United States anyway.

On November 19, 1990, a shipment of 800 pounds of cocaine was seized by the U.S. Customs Service at the Miami International Airport. Customs traced the cocaine back to the Venezuelan National Guard and the CIA. Unfortunately, we may never know precisely how much cocaine entered the United States through the CIA's pipeline or how much eventually reached our nation's streets. No one at the CIA was ever charged.

The inclusion of Section 313 in H.R. 1555 sends a clear message to our nation's intelligence community: intelligence employees, agents and assets are not above the law. The CIA should be working to stop the harmful trafficking in illegal drugs that is destroying our communities. It should not be assisting the drug traffickers.

I appreciate the support of my colleagues on this important issue and I especially appreciate the willingness of the conferees to include Section 313 in the conference report for H.R. 1555.

Despite the inclusion of Section 313, I am deeply concerned about the amount and use of the funds authorized by H.R. 1555. The United States government spends tremendous amounts of money on covert activities, espionage and other intelligence activities with little congressional oversight and without the knowledge or support of the American people. Spending on intelligence activities should be decreased considerably and congressional oversight over intelligence agencies must be improved. Furthermore, I cannot in good conscience support an intelligence authorization bill as long as the total amount of funds spent on intelligence activities remains classified and unknown to the people we are elected to represent.

I therefore must urge my colleagues to oppose H.R. 1555.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H.R. 1555.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Messrs. PAYNE, BROWN of Ohio, BARRETT of Wisconsin, SERRANO, LEVIN, WAXMAN, and Ms. KILPATRICK changed their vote from ''aye'' to ''no.''

Messrs. BILIRAKIS, GEORGE MILLER of California, and WYNN changed their vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Lundegran, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2454. An act to assure the long-term conservation of mid-continent light geese and the biological diversity of the ecosystem upon which many North American migratory birds depend, by directing the Secretary of the Interior to implement rules to reduce the overabundant population of mid-continent light geese.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 578, I was unavoidably detained because of a celebration honoring the Little Rock Nine sponsored by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. THOMPSON). If I had been here, I would have voted ''aye'' for the substitute Dingell amendment.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each further motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on postponed questions will be taken after debate is concluded on other motions to suspend the rules.

SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING FREEDOM DAY

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 223) expressing the sense of the Congress regarding Freedom Day.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 223

Whereas on November 9, 1989, the Berlin Wall was torn down by those whom it had imprisoned;

Whereas the fall of the Berlin Wall has become the preeminent symbol of the end of the Cold War;

Whereas the Cold War, at its essence, was a struggle for human freedom;

Whereas the end of the Cold War was brought about in large measure by the dedication, sacrifice, and discipline of Americans and many other peoples around the world united in their opposition to Soviet Communism;

Whereas freedom's victory in the Cold War against Soviet Communism is the crowning achievement of the free world's long 20th century struggle against totalitarianism; and

Whereas it is highly appropriate to remind Americans, particularly those in their formal educational years, that America paid the price and bore the burden to ensure the survival of liberty on this planet: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) a Freedom Day should be celebrated each year in the United States; and

(2) the United States should join with other nations, specifically including those which liberated themselves to help end the Cold War, to establish a global holiday called Freedom Day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be associated with this worthy initiative, H. Con. Res. 223 by the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), which recognizes this important 10th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall.

The Berlin landmark was the most infamous symbol of the Cold War in Europe. It ran like a scar across one of Europe's grandest cities that had enjoyed a reputation for openness, for cultural innovation and flair. Tragically, that wall carved Berlin into two separate cities, its western half, a beacon of hope and freedom; its eastern half, a gray manifestation of Communist tyranny.

It is important that we recall the reasons that the regime of East Germany finally felt compelled to erect that wall, not to keep people out of the Communist ''paradise,'' but to keep people in, to prevent them voting with their feet. Tragically, too many people died when they refused to let the wall impede them in their quest for freedom.

Ten years ago today, the Wall fell. The weight of the Communist system became too much for it to sustain. At that moment, the wisdom of President Ronald Reagan, when he appealed two years earlier to Gorbachev to ''tear down this wall'' and other leaders of the West, that led to the collapse of Communism in Europe was ratified.

It is hoped that our government will enlist all of the nations that benefited from Communism's demise to establish this date as Freedom Day. We owe that to the thousands of men and women in this Nation and in other nations who sacrificed everything to make freedom in Europe a reality.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this measure.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) be entitled to control the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

I want to commend my friend and colleague, the gentleman from the New York (Mr. GILMAN) and my friend and colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. COX), for bringing this measure before the House. Of course, I rise in strong support of this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, some of us lived through this period from the establishment of the Berlin Wall to its collapse, and these two bookends, in a sense, cover basically the period of the Cold War.

I think it is instructive to begin our discussion of this issue by recognizing that the Berlin Wall is probably the only wall ever built in history not to keep the enemy out, but to see to it that the people behind the wall do not escape. The collapse of the Wall symbolized the collapse of the Soviet empire, and it indicated the end of the Third World War, which the West won without firing a single shot.

What is most remarkable about our victory, Mr. Speaker, is that it was a fully bipartisan victory. It began with the farsighted visionary and pragmatic measures of a Democratic President, Harry Truman; and it concluded during the powerful leadership of President Ronald Reagan who did, in fact, call to have the Wall removed. And from Truman to Reagan, this remarkable era represented one of the most impressive bipartisan periods of foreign policy in the history of the United States.

But it was not only our victory. It was the victory of our allies across Europe who joined together in NATO, the most impressive defensive military alliance the world had ever seen, to resist Soviet and Communist expansion, and it was the victory of the countless heroes behind the Iron Curtain who gave their lives so that others might live in freedom and democracy.

Usually, suspension bills can be easily handled with 40 minutes of discussion and debate. This topic would require 40 hours to begin to pay proper tribute to the countless men and women in this country and abroad who fought for the cause of freedom and whom we honor by establishing a day of freedom, a global holiday on November 9.

Let me just single out a few people who deserve special recognition. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Berlin Wall would still stand, the Soviet Union would still be in existence if it had not been for the farsighted and courageous leadership of Mr. Gorbachev in recognizing that the Soviet Union had lost the Cold War, that to continue the suppression of tens of millions of people by military force was doomed to defeat and was counterproductive. He deserves full credit along with the others I mentioned and countless others whom we do not have time to discuss this afternoon. But without Mikail Gorbachev's recognition that Russia and the Soviet Union must move along different lines, we would not be here celebrating Freedom Day, November 9.

□ 1730

We need to pay tribute to the freedom fighters in Hungary in 1956, who, against overwhelming odds, demonstrated their commitment to freedom. We are here to pay tribute to the people who led the Prague Spring of 1968, when for the first time there was a determined effort to put an end to Communist dictatorship in the Czechoslovak Republic.

We are here to pay tribute to individual men and women throughout the countries behind the Iron Curtain who, with their dedication and devotion to freedom, have made this day possible. We are here to pay tribute to the dissidents and refusniks in the Soviet Union who, under unbearably impossible conditions, persevered in their dedication to democratic principles.

From the walled cities of Europe to the Great Wall of China, walls have always kept the enemy out. The Berlin Wall, and we celebrate its collapse 10 years ago today, the Berlin Wall was built to keep people in, to prevent them from escaping.

We have succeeded in making Europe whole, free, democratic, and at peace. While the task is certainly not completed, as the events in Yugoslavia in the last few years so clearly demonstrate, we have come a long way in creating a stable and peaceful Europe, prepared to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

In paying tribute to Republican leaders and Democratic leaders, as well known as presidents and as unknown as ordinary people, who believed that people on both sides of the Iron Curtain were yearning to live in freedom and dignity and peace, we are paying tribute to the finest traditions of western civilization.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS).

Mr. Speaker, it is very important that Congress take time, as we are doing just now, to recognize what is truly important and transcendent and what, on the other hand, is perhaps urgent, perhaps requiring us to devote our time because it is our work-a-day business here, but not nearly so important in the lives of American citizens and citizens around the world as what we are doing here today, remembering, in part, and looking forward, even more importantly, in greater part. So that by remembering, we will always be free.

It was, as the preceding speakers have pointed out, 10 years ago to the day that the Berlin Wall was taken down. It did not fall, it was taken down by the people imprisoned behind it, with the help of people around the world.

In this Chamber, as I have pointed out on many occasions to visitors to the Capitol from California and elsewhere, we have only two paintings. They have been part of the furnishings of the House Chamber for some time.

One of them is an American, the father of our country, George Washington. The other is a foreigner, a Frenchman, the Marquis de Lafayette, who serves, I believe, as a reminder to us that our democracy would not be here without foreign assistance.

The people of Central Europe and the people of Russia and the former captive nations waged their own struggle against Soviet communism, but they would not be free today without help from others, including, in major part, the people of the United States of America.

We will never know how many people perished behind the Iron Curtain, but estimates are 70 million souls lost their lives to communism. The Berlin Wall, which was a 13-foot high structure of concrete and tangled barbed wire, stretched for 103 miles and symbolized the difference between freedom and totalitarianism, the difference between democracy and free enterprise that we enjoyed on our side of the Berlin Wall, and communism, Soviet-style, East German style, that people were required to live under on the other side.

Mr. Speaker, this 13-foot high 103-mile wall topped with barbed wire symbolized the great abiding differences between the two chief systems of the world, communism and its antonym, freedom. The Berlin Wall was called by Germans ''the wall of shame,'' and indeed, 77 Germans lost their lives trying to get out. They were murdered trying to make their way to the light of freedom in the West.

There are many red letter dates in the history of the Cold War that in victory was symbolized by the fall of the Berlin Wall. In 1948, Harry Truman ordered the Berlin Airlift, ensuring that the people of West Berlin would resist the Stalinist siege. In 1991, 2 years after the collapse of the Berlin Wall, the Soviet Union collapsed.

There is another red letter date in this history. It is the future date when the last Communist tyrants in Beijing, Hanoi, Pyongyang, Belgrade, and Havana are off the world's stage. But that fight remains for us today.

The most memorable date of all that we commemorate now is that date exactly 10 years ago, November 9, 1989, when the Berlin Wall came tumbling down. I was in Berlin 10 years ago and watched this process of physical dismantlement, and what an amazing metaphor, and actually stepped through a hole in the Berlin Wall.

In 1977, more than a decade earlier, the former Governor of California, later to become the President of the United States, talked to a man who would one day become his national security adviser, and it was Ronald Reagan conversing with Richard Allen.

He told Richard Allen, history records, ''My idea of American policy toward the Soviet Union is simple. It is this: We win and they lose.'' That approach, begun by Harry Truman, carried throughout the rest of the 20th century until the collapse of the Berlin Wall in 1989, at the conclusion of the Reagan presidency and the beginning of the Bush administration, was a visible, tangible symbol and representation of American resolve to win that fight, and it was a war.

When President Reagan took office, the Soviet Union had already invaded Afghanistan, the communists had declared martial law in Poland, and the United States responded with strength. We imposed sanctions on the regime in Poland, and indeed, on the entire Warsaw Pact and Russia, cutting back on technology, never granting them most-favored-nation trade status.

In 1983, NATO showed its solidarity, showed that it would not be divided by Soviet designs, when, against massive popular protests in the United Kingdom and in Germany, Prime Minister Thatcher and Chancellor Helmut Kohl agreed to accept the deployment of intermediate range missiles on their territory deployed by the United States.

Three years later at Iceland, at Reykjavik, when I was working for President Reagan in the White House, President Reagan told his counterpart, Mr. Gorbachev, that the strategic defense initiative, the right and the obligation of the West to defend itself, would not be set aside. There would not be an arms control agreement that would have the direct consequence of permitting the Soviet military comfort and continued life.

That same year President Reagan agreed to provide shoulder-fired Stinger missiles to the rebels in Afghanistan, fighting the Red Army. It was thought at the time that no one could defeat the Red Army, but just a few years later that is exactly what happened, and another big chunk of the Soviet empire fell apart.

When one recounts the popular movements and the life-threatening risks that were taken in order to defeat Soviet communism, one recalls Charter 77 in Czechoslavakia and the leadership of such men and women as Vaclav Havel. We remember the Solidarity movement in Poland, and the leadership of such extraordinary people as Lech Walesa. We remember people like Vytautas Landsbergis and the Sajudis movement in Lithuania.

It was my opportunity to travel to those countries to meet with those people; to meet, indeed, with a man who eventually would become the President of Hungary, Arpad Goncz. We have to recall that it was Hungary that accepted the refugees through the Berlin Wall that began to, more than anything, strike at the very foundations of the wall itself and everything that it stood for, ultimately the collapse of the Soviet Union.

We, with this House concurrent resolution, are working with our colleagues in the other body to do more than just speak today on the 10th anniversary so that we in this body will pay due attention to an important milestone in the history of freedom and the advance of freedom around the world. We are also asking our government to work with governments around the world to establish a freedom day that will perennially recognize the victory of the free world over communism in the Cold War, and remind us that freedom requires us to be ever vigilant.

There are a number of Members who wish to speak on this resolution. I wish to recognize Members not in this body who are responsible for advancing this legislation. Specifically, I would like to recognize Ben Wattenburg with the American Enterprise Institute, a veteran of the administrations of Presidents Johnson, Reagan, and Bush, who has written amply on this topic, and I think done as much as any single individual to move us to this action.

I would also like to point out that the Senate majority leader strongly supports this legislation, as does Senator LIEBERMAN, who will be moving the companion in the other body.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but comment on the many things that come back to memory, listening to my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. COX).

The distinguished Democratic leader, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT) and I were at the wall as it was destroyed physically, and it was our great pleasure to participate in the physical destruction of the Berlin Wall, which clearly is one of the highlights of my life, and I am sure that of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT).

Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to yield 4 minutes to my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), one of the most preeminent defenders of human rights and freedom in this body, for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise as a proud supporter of this resolution, which commemorates the 10-year anniversary of one of the most astounding historical events of the 20th century, the fall of the Berlin Wall and the collapse of communism throughout Central Europe.

□ 1745

What started out as a trickle, Solidarity's victories in Poland during June of 1989, Hungary opening up its border with Austria later that summer, led to a deluge of East Germans flooding across the Berlin Wall. And a few weeks after that, the Velvet Revolution in Czechoslovakia took place. And no one could predict these events and no one knew how to react to these events.

One of my most cherished possessions that I still keep here in Washington with me on my desk is this chunk of the Berlin Wall. It still has graffiti painted on it. Coincidentally, it is shaped like the State of Wisconsin. But it is a chunk that I personally whacked out of the Berlin Wall on October 3, 1990, during the reunification celebration when I was over there as a student traveling throughout Central Europe.

This came at a crucial time in my life, Mr. Speaker. As a third year law student, I was watching these historical events unfold with rapt attention like the rest of the world was, but I was feeling a little bit disillusioned, and a little bit cynical about our own political process here in this country. So I decided a few months after the revolution had taken place to travel through Central Europe to visit the European capitals, live out of a backpack, survive on cheese and bread during that time and see firsthand these remarkable changes taking place.

I met when I was traveling through there the real heroes in my mind of the revolutions and the changes that took place. They were students such as myself about my age who had literally, on the front lines of the demonstrations, literally looking down the barrel of communist guns and facing Soviet tanks, not knowing whether they were going to succeed or whether this was going to turn into a massacre. They knew their countries' individual histories. 1968, Prague Spring. 1956, Hungary when the communist authorities did in fact crack down. And as history later showed during the Velvet Revolution, the Politburo voted 5 to 4 not to use force to bring down the demonstrations. One vote could have made all the difference in Prague during that fall of 1989.

Mr. Speaker, I asked many of these students what they remembered most about those demonstrations and the events and they said two things: How terribly cold it was as they were maintaining candlelight vigils all night long, and the fear that they felt, again not knowing whether or not the military was going to open fire on them. But perhaps the most important wall that fell in that region to make this all possible was not even visible. It was the wall of fear that fell. And we cannot overestimate the role that fear does play in any totalitarian or authoritarian regime to keep them in power.

But this was made possible because Mikhail Gorbachev, as the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) already indicated, changed the dynamics in the region by denouncing the use of force in order to keep communist governments in power; by pursuing his policies of glasnost and perestroika, the general opening of information and ideas in these regions. It diminished the fear and empowered people to have the courage to demand change.

Perhaps it is the greatest magnificent irony that one of the most oppressive communist regimes in that area, Czechoslovakia, would later be led by former poets and playwrights. Vaclav Havel, the first democratically elected President in Czechoslovakia, was a former playwright himself. The first democratically elected president since Masaryk and Edvard Benes just before the Second World War.

He was the founder of Charter 77, the moral blueprint for change in the area, and also founded the Civic Forum that gave the people in Czechoslovakia the political alternative to the communist regime, but not before he was imprisoned on four separate occasions. In fact, during one of those imprisonments he was on his deathbed, literally. The communist authorities did not want a martyr on their hands, so they went to him and said, ''Listen, the people who give out the Obie Award will allow you to direct your own play in New York and get proper medical attention.'' And he said, ''I just have one question. If I go, will you allow me back in?'' And they could not give that assurance and so he refused. The rest, as we say, is now history.

But in conclusion, I just want to pay a special tribute and wish a special happy 10-year anniversary to those students who really were on the front lines and showed through their courage that there are causes and ideals greater than one's self that are worth risking everything for. So on this day, my thoughts and my memories go to many of those students who I personally had a chance to meet and who inspired me to get involved in public service when I did return to the United States.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPENCE), chairman of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, it is entirely proper that we observe this anniversary of the wall coming down in Berlin and the later end of the Cold War. I think it is appropriate too that we reflect on how this came about.

Mr. Speaker, the Cold War took up a large space in our history of this country. We faced many hardships during this war. But the policy that made the end of the Cold War come to an end is something that we should reflect on and learn a lesson from.

We fought communism all over the world. We helped other people to fight communism. We engaged in something people criticized us for: An arms race. An arms race. The arms race was a big part of the policy that allowed us to win that war.

A strategic defense initiative by President Reagan, something we have been working on ever since that time, played a big part in that policy and the end of that Cold War.

In essence, the communists could not keep up with our free market economy and the freedoms we have in this country. They could not keep up, and so the war came to an end, the Cold War.

But my concern today is that we have not learned from that experience. There are many lessons to be learned from it. We have not learned from it. We have made the same mistakes we made after every conflict we have ever been involved in. We have cut back too much, and the result is that we are not prepared today adequately to defend this country against all of the threats we have today with us.

Mr. Speaker, mark my word, we are living in a very dangerous world today. As a matter of fact, it is more dangerous than during the Cold War because we still have the Cold War threats of nuclear warfare plus now we have threats of weapons of mass destruction. And I might point out that we are unprepared to defend against either. Intercontinental ballistic missiles and nuclear warfare and theater missile defenses against theater missiles and all the weapons of mass destruction.

A new study is out showing that in the future, this country will be subject to attack on American soil and Americans will die in large numbers on American soil. We have had other places to fight in the past, and we face this kind of a future and, Mr. Speaker, if we do not return to the Reagan policy of peace through strength, we will not be able to face this kind of a threat in the future.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCNULTY), my friend and colleague. He has been an indefatigable fighter on behalf of freedom during his service in this body.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) for yielding me this time, and I thank both of my friends from California for bringing this resolution to the floor. I strongly support it.

Mr. Speaker, 1989 was a wondrous year to be alive, and the events which we celebrate actually started in Poland. After many years of struggle during which Lech Walesa and his followers spent their time under martial law, house arrest, or actually in jail, democracy prevailed in the great nation of Poland.

And then, as others have said, the movement quickly spread throughout Eastern Europe. I will never forget as long as I live the specter of Erich Honecker, then the leader of East Germany, standing up before the world and making this pronouncement: ''This is where it stops. It shall not happen here,'' meaning the democracy movement.

Within weeks of his making that statement, he was no longer the leader of East Germany. He was replaced by Egon Krenz, who decided to adopt the ''moderate hard line,'' which roughly translated meant they were going to try to appease the democracy movement but preserve the communist system. He too was quickly dispatched, and we know the rest of the story.

Mr. Speaker, I was at The Berlin Wall when the people were out there with their hammers and chisels tearing it down piece by piece. You can imagine how I felt, this child of the Cold War, brought up in Green Island, New York, population 2,500, taught by the good sisters of St. Joseph who had a monthly drill where we were required to drop to the floor, get under our desks and prepare for the air raids by our totalitarian enemies. And that had an impact on me, Mr. Speaker. One day I would be thinking about my hopes and dreams and aspirations and how I wanted to be like my father and go into public service, and the next day we would have one of these drills and I was scared. It had a tremendous impact on me to think that some world leader somewhere could make a decision which would end humankind as we knew it.

Mr. Speaker, I am grateful that I have lived to see the day when my four daughters and my three grandchildren and young people all over the world can look forward to growing up in a more peaceful world.

As I was standing at the Berlin Wall watching it being torn down, I knew I was present for a great moment in history. I felt like the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND). I wanted some commemoration of that. I noticed as people were chipping away at the wall and the pieces were falling they would catch them and put them in their pockets as little mementos. And I said to myself, I think I would like to do that. Already, capitalism being in evidence, there were vendors out there selling pieces of the Berlin Wall. Ever the skeptic, I said ''how do I know that those pieces came off the wall?'' So I looked around and capitalism being further in evidence, there was a guy walking back and forth with hammers and chisels renting them out. So I went over with my military escort who spoke German and we made a deal and I paid some money and I grabbed a hammer and chisel and did what the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) did. I chipped away at that wall and helped tear it down and brought back some of those pieces to give them to veterans of our Armed Forces who I knew would cherish them.

I later went through Checkpoint Charlie, or the remnants of it, and talked to people in East Berlin and was just totally amazed by what they were telling me about what was happening. I came back to the other side. I was to be briefed by our commanding general, and before he could say anything to me I started talking and I could not stop talking about how excited I was at what I had just heard and witnessed. He just said to me: ''MIKE, I wish you were with me the first day they opened up free access through Checkpoint Charlie. They had a ceremony and everybody was lined up on our side and as the people came through from East Berlin, they were very polite to the politicians and other diplomats that were in the line. But they saw my uniform and they came to me and one after another, they told me, 'You tell your government, but particularly you tell your soldiers, how grateful we are for their vigilance through the years.

Had it not been for their vigilance, we would not be enjoying this new freedom today.' ''

Mr. Speaker, at that moment in my life I was never more proud to be an American.

□ 1800

So, to me, Mr. Speaker, it is no coincidence that Freedom Day is so close to Veterans' Day. We should remember what happened after those events, too, namely the breakup of the Soviet Union into individual democratic republics. I was in one of them on their Independence Day: Armenia. What a great thrill it was to be with them the day after their referendum as they danced and sang—(the gentleman from New York spoke in Armenian), long live free and independent Armenia.

Let us remember all that, but especially let us remember the soldiers who are responsible for the freedom that is enjoyed now by hundreds of millions of people around the world who had been denied it all their lives.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time is remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman from California (Mr. COX) has 4 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, we have only four speakers remaining. I ask unanimous consent that each side be given 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WICKER).

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Speaker, I regret that there is not more time to discuss a very important and historical day, the 10th anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall. Like the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCNULTY), I am a member of that baby boom generation who remembers Khrushchev pounding his shoe, fallout shelters, and all of the images of the Cold War. We wondered if Eastern Europe would ever be free and if international Communism would ever be ended.

So I am pleased to take part in this debate today. We have already heard the names of a number of individuals who have participated over time in bringing about the end of European Communism.

The gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) mentioned President Truman and President Reagan. Certainly we should not forget that there were even members of the Reagan administration who, during that time, were worried about President Reagan using terms such as ''evil empire'' or saying, ''Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this wall.'' They urged him not to do so, but thank goodness President Reagan was strong and was one of those people who enabled us to be having this celebration today.

I want to take just a moment to honor the name of another anti-Communist hero, Whittaker Chambers. I have just been reading the book, Witness, the autobiography of this courageous individual who had the fortitude to come forward, to name names, to risk his family, his finances, his future, and even his freedom to say that there were Communists in our own Federal Government and to play a crucial role in the fight against international Communist tyranny.

I think, while we are celebrating the 10th anniversary of the falling of the Wall, we should also remember the name of Whittaker Chambers, and I honor his memory today.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM).

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, those two words, Cold War, are chilling to the millions of people that never knew freedom before the Wall fell. Many U.S. citizens have never known a socialist or Communist regime, although many Americans gave their lives and efforts to remove just a small symbol and a barrier to that freedom.

I would like to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) and the gentleman from California (Mr. COX). I want to thank them deeply for the men and the women that they spoke about that fought for this challenge. But I would say to my friends that these same men and women would challenge us to continue the fight for an invisible, but a real wall to freedom of a socialist and Communist ideology that enslaves freedom itself.

The former Soviet Union and China, in my opinion, are bitter enemies of the United States. Does that mean we need not engage them? No. Firm diplomacy, fair trade, not just trade, and even a big stick at times. But peace through strength is a hollow cry for many of those that brought down the Wall. For those that are aware of our military today know that that Wall would not fall under peace through strength with our military.

It is a challenge that all of us in this House, both Republicans and Democrats and Independents, should fight for on a very bipartisan basis.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) if he would agree to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT).

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT).

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), the ranking member, for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, words have meaning. Ideas matter. Actions have consequences. About the time the solidarity movement began to take root in Poland, the Roman Catholic Cardinals sort of shocked the world, and they elected a Roman Catholic Cardinal from Poland to become the new Pope.

As the solidarity movement gained strength, there was fear that the Soviets would actually send military forces to bring down that movement in Poland. The new Pope sent word to the Soviets that, if the Soviets invaded his native Poland, he would be there to meet them. Words have meaning.

Then later, our President Reagan went to Europe; and against the advice of some of his advisors, he used those very harsh words, he talked about that evil empire; and he talked about the ash heap of history. Words have meaning.

Then later, when President Reagan went to Berlin and he said, ''Mr. Gorbachev, if you mean what you say about Glasnost and Perestroika,'' he said, ''Mr. Gorbachev, come to Berlin and tear down this Wall.'' Now, those words were barely reported here in the Western press, but they thundered across Eastern Europe. Those words alone began to build up the momentum in Eastern Europe.

So we can celebrate today the 10-year anniversary and, in some respects, the anniversary of the real victory of all of those veterans we sent to Europe. But back in World War II, we sent 16½ million people to fight that war. They came back, and it was not really concluded because half of Europe was still enslaved.

This is a great victory for all Americans. It is a great victory for the people of the world. I am delighted we are moving forward with this resolution.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, with the agreement of the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), I ask him to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MILLER).

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MILLER).

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this is a special occasion today for us to be here on the 10th anniversary of the collapse of the Berlin Wall because it symbolizes a victory in the Cold War which dominated us in this 20th century, for the second half of the 20th century.

Some of the kids are now learning in the history books what so many of us lived through back in the 1950s and 1960s and 1970s and 1980s.

It is very special to celebrate, but also to say thanks to the millions of Americans and millions around the world that helped fight for freedom and democracy against the Communist evil empire, as President Reagan used to call it.

Unlike victories in World War II and World War I where we had a signing, this was a gradual victory; and it is not totally over because we still have Communist dictators in the world in North Korea and Cuba.

But the thing is we have a victory that we need to celebrate and to say thanks. That is why this today is a special occasion. Those photographs in the paper of President Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev and Helmut Kohl over in Berlin brings back vividly the sacrifice that was made. So thanks to everyone that contributed to this great great victory.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), a distinguished leader in the Congressional Human Rights Caucus who has for years advanced the cause of freedom, to conclude the debate on this legislation.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I saw the Berlin Wall the first time in 1982. It was moving. I am honored to have this opportunity in support of this resolution to have the 10th anniversary but also for Freedom Day.

People say the Berlin Wall fell down. The Berlin Wall did not fall down. The Berlin Wall was pushed down. Ronald Reagan pushed the Berlin Wall down when he gave the evil empire speech. The Pope helped push the Wall down. Lane Kirkland of the AFL–CIO when he gave money to Lech Walesa and solidarity helped push the Wall down. Natan Shiransky, when he got out of gulag 35 and a Russian said walk straight across the bridge, zigzagged back and forth against the bridge in defiance of the Soviet Union. Natan Shiransky helped push the Wall down. Elena Bonner helped push the Wall down. Zacharov helped push the Wall down.

Whittaker Chambers, the gentleman from Mississippi, when Whittaker Chambers wrote in the book Witness, he said, ''When I left the Communist party, I believed that I was leaving the winning side and joining the losing side, and nothing I saw has made me think that I was wrong.'' Whittaker Chambers was wrong on this point, and Ronald Reagan was right on this point. In fairness to Members on both sides of the aisle in strong support of anti-Communism was right.

Lastly, in honor of Colonel Nicholson who was the last member of the military. It was a military designated in West Berlin who was killed by the Soviets in East Berlin. We honor him with this resolution.

I want my children to remember. I want my grandchildren to remember. I want everyone to remember. The Berlin Wall did not fall. These people pushed it down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) has 1½ minutes remaining.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding this debate, we need to remind ourselves that, as we rejoice in the 10th anniversary of the collapse of the symbol of tyranny, the Berlin Wall, that the battle is not yet fully won. There are dictators in Tehran. There are dictators in Baghdad. There are dictators in North Korea. There are dictators in Belgrade.

Our job will not be finished until every single man, woman, and child on the face of this planet will be able to practice his religion, speak his mind, be able to travel freely, be able to join associations of his own choosing, political parties or otherwise.

We have come a long way. The Soviet Union is nothing but a bad memory. But dictatorial regimes still exist. Freedom Day, as we will celebrate it, will not be fully a reality until in every single country, from the Taliban-controlled Afghanistan to the Milosevic-controlled Yugoslavia, will be able to live and breathe freely. We hope that this body will then again proclaim freedom and Freedom Day on November 9 for all the inhabitants of this planet.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WICKER).

Mr. WICKER. Mr. Speaker, this morning, a very thoughtful editorial on this subject appeared in my hometown newspaper, the Northeast Mississippi Daily Journal.

Mr. Speaker, I insert that editorial for the RECORD as follows:

[From the Daily Journal, Nov. 9, 1999]

A PEACEFUL REVOLUTION THAT OPENED THE BERLIN WALL MUST BE SUSTAINED

The fortified portion of it was 26 miles long. It stood up to 15 feet high in spots. It was topped with barbed wire and an assortment of other obstacles.

Anyone brave or foolish enough to try to scale it had to get by electronic alarms, mines, trenches and, of course, armed guards. One hundred seventy people died trying.

The Berlin Wall became the most dramatic symbol of the Cold War, a stark and striking reminder of the tyranny of communism. The government of East Germany had to wall in its own people, so oppressive was the environment on its side of the wall and so compelling were the freedoms enjoyed on the other.

Ten years ago today the wall fell, in a figurative sense. Its fortified passages were opened and traffic allowed to flow freely between East and West Berlin. Within a year East and West Germany were unified. By 1992 the wall was physically dismantled.

Who can forget that amazing period in Eastern Europe as communist governments one after the other fell, virtually bloodlessly, the victims of a new yearning in their people and an old rottenness in their core. The world drew inspiration from the young protesters defiantly perched on the wall, smashing away pieces of it, mocking its pretense to control over their lives.

The fall of the wall and the unification of East and West Germany were events that virtually no one predicted would occur so rapidly and with so little violence. These and corresponding events in Eastern Europe, beginning with the Solidarity movement in Poland in the early 1980s, exposed the great vulnerability of communism or any oppressive system when strong people unite against it.

Today communism, while not completely dead, is completely discredited. Even China's leadership has been forced to modify its formerly orthodox communist economy in order to survive, though political repression is still a fact of life in that last communist power.

Ten years after the fall of the Berlin Wall, and eight years after the complete disintegration of the Soviet Union and the Soviet bloc, the world is a safer place.

And yet. . . .

Lurking beneath the evolving democratic processes in former communist countries are the forces of reaction, remnants of the old guard or those nostalgic for its return. The transition to democratic governments and free markets in Russia and Eastern Europe has hardly been smooth; one crisis after another has marked the effort by formerly communist countries to make up for decades of failed economic, social and political policies. There are those exploiting the inevitable discontent.

The United States has a vested interest in seeing that those countries who threw off the shackles of communism and brought a thaw to the nearly half-century of Cold War succeed. We have preached the gospel of free markets and free political systems, and we must maintain our determination to assist them in working through the pains of transition that can seem worse to some than the stability of the old system.

The United States probably kept Western Europe from eventually succumbing to communism by rebuilding its cities and economies with the Marshall Plan after World War II. We are not in a position nor is there the need to proceed with a program of that magnitude today.

But aid and assistance, government to government and citizen to citizen, from the U.S. to formerly communist countries, as well as active diplomatic efforts to achieve the stability for freedom to flourish, are vital to our national interests.

Some would say it's time for the United States to withdraw, to give up its role as a leader of the free world, to worry only about internal concerns. That would be to dishonor the sacrifices already made by Americans: remembered Thursday, Veterans Day and the courage of those who fought to overcome tyranny in their own lands.

The Berlin Wall, and all it represented, failed 10 years ago today. What followed must succeed, and we must be willing to help it happen.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD an article written by Ben Wattenberg of the American Enterprise Institute, who first proposed the idea of a Freedom Day in December 1991. I am proud that we are finally moving forward with this idea, and I thank him for his commitment to ensuring that future generations recognize the important sacrifices made by those who fought for freedom against the evils of communism.

[From the Washington Times, November 4, 1999]

MOVING FORWARD WITH FREEDOM DAY

(By Ben Wattenberg)

Ten years ago, on Nov. 9, 1989, the Berlin Wall was battered down by the people it had imprisoned. The event is regarded as the moment the Cold War ended. For Americans without sentient memories of World War II, the end of the Cold War has been the most momentous historical event of their lifetimes, and so it will likely remain.

Long yearned for, the end of the Cold War has more than lived up to expectations: Democracy is on the march globally, defense budgets are proportionately down, market economies are beginning to flourish most everywhere, everyday people are benefiting each and every day.

The end of the Cold War actually was a process, not an event. By early 1989, Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev had pulled his troops from Afghanistan, whipped. Poles elected a non-communist government; the Soviets did nothing. Hungary, Czechoslovakia, East Germany and later Bulgaria installed non-communist governments. It was called ''the velvet revolution,'' with only Romania the exception; Nicolae Ceausescu and his empress were executed.

For almost two years, the U.S.S.R. remained a one-party communist state, gradually eroding. Hard-liners attempted to resist the slow motion dis-memberment. On Aug. 19, 1991, Boris Yeltsin stood on a tank to resist a hard-line coup. The hammer-and-sickle came down; the Russian tricolor went up. Other Soviet republics declared independence, including the big guy on the block, Ukraine.

U.S. diplomats did not ''gloat'' about it. The sovereign state of Russia would be unstable enough without the United States rubbing it in.

On Dec. 4, 1991, I proposed in a column that a new national holiday be established to commemorate the end the Cold War. I asked readers to participate in a contest to: 1. Name it; 2. pick a date; and 3. propose a method of celebration.

Several hundred submissions came in. Some of the most imaginative entries for a name were: ''Defrost Day,'' ''Thaw Day,'' ''Ronald Reagan Day,'' ''Gorbachev Day,'' ''Borscht Day,'' ''Peace Through Strength Day'' ''E Day'' (which would stand for ''Evil Empire Ends Day''), ''E2D2'' (''Evil Empire Death Day''), ''Jericho Day'' ''Pax Americana Day'' and ''Kerensky Future Freedom Day'' (recalling that Mr. Yeltsin was not the first pro-democratic leader of Russia).

Scores of respondents offered ''Liberty Day,'' ''Democracy Day,'' and mostly, ''Freedom Day.'' In June of 1992, I publicly proclaimed ''Freedom Day'' the winner.

One suggestion for the date of the new holiday was June 5, for Adam Smith's birthday. But the most votes went for Nov. 9, the day the wall fell. So today I proclaim that date Freedom Day.

There were ideas about how to celebrate and commemorate Freedom Day: Build a sibling sculpture to the Statue of Liberty; eat potatoes, the universal food; build a tunnel to Russia across the Bering Strait; thank God for peace; welcome immigrants; mediate; issue a U.N. stamp; build ice sculptures; send money to feed Russians; and do something you can't do in an unfree country—make a public speech, see a dirty movie, celebrate a religion, travel across a border.

I propose that discussion on the matter of how to celebrate be put on hold until we get the holiday established.

How? Because all the major presidential candidates participate in the Cold War, they should endorse the holiday. Legislators ought to push for it. Anyone who worked in defense industry, or paid federal taxes from 1945 to 1989, ought to support it. President Clinton ought to go to the Reagan Library to endorse it.

I met with Mark Burman of the Reagan Presidential Foundation. He says they are on board for a campaign. The other great presidential libraries—Truman, Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon, Ford and Carter—should join in.

So should anyone concerned with the teaching of American history. The holiday will remind American children that their recent ancestors preserved freedom. The Cold War generation may not be ''the greatest'' but they did their job—victory without a major hot war.

Americans can only create an American holiday. But we ought to invite all other countries to join in, Russia first. The citizens of Russia won the Cold War as surely as we did. If I were a Chinese dissident I'd promote the idea; it might give their leaders a clue.

If you like the idea, or have ideas, you may e-mail me at Watmail@aol.com. I'll pass the correspondence along to the appropriate persons, as soon as I figure out who they are.

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Tenth Anniversary of the fall of the Berlin Wall. Perhaps no act in the latter half of this century better represents the human quest for freedom and dignity. Perhaps no barrier more aptly symbolized the moral bankruptcy of an entire political movement—a movement that subjected its citizens to forcible detention.

As President Kennedy noted during his famous speech in West Berlin in 1963, the Wall was erected to keep its citizens within. As we all knew, the Wall was fundamentally flawed and had to come down. Its dismantling foreshadowed the collapse of the Soviet Union and communist domination of Eastern Europe. Who would have thought that less than 10 years later three former members of the Warsaw pact would become members of NATO? Who would have predicted that NATO would survive as an engine of security and democracy-building in Europe?

When I was appointed to the Helsinki Commission in 1985, there were serious questions in the United States about the viability of the Helsinki process. Had the process emphasized security at the expense of human rights? Was it perhaps time to reconsider the process in the absence of tangible progress on human rights questions?

Today, we celebrate the freedom yielded by our steadfast commitment to the process and by our demand that the former Soviet bloc countries adhere and implement the human rights standards enshrined by the Accords. The fall of the Berlin Wall transformed the world and demonstrated unreservedly the dignity of man as fundamental to democracy. The Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) took a stand—that human dignity, tolerance and mutual respect would be the standards for all the nations of Europe as we entered in 1990s.

Almost immediately, the fall of the Wall ushered in new members to the OSCE—Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia and Albania. All were freed from the shackles of Soviet domination, and began to express a desire to join the Helsinki process.

Why would they want to join when in effect we had won? Because the Helsinki process could serve as a source of values and act as an agent of conflict resolution. It provided participating States with a blueprint by which to guide them away from the legacy of the past. But most importantly it reminded members—old and new—of their responsibilities to their own citizens and to each other.

This lesson would be sorely tested in the years following the Wall's fall with the dismemberment of Yugoslavia, the genocide of Bosnia, the economic collapse of Albania and the emergence of new threats to the citizens of Russia. The emphasis on rule of law in the Helsinki process would become even more relevant for all of Europe.

One year after the fall of the Wall, at the OSCE Paris Summit, former political prisoners like Vaclav Havel and Lech Walesa, who had fought for the rights espoused at Helsinki in 1975, led their countries to the table and recommitted themselves and their governments to the principles of human rights, security and economic cooperation that are the foundation of the Final Act. Today, 54 nations of Europe, the Caucasus and Central Asia are committed to the Helsinki process as participating States of the OSCE.

Mr. Speaker, as we reflect on this anniversary we understand that the countries and peoples of the region are still in transition and will be for decades to come. Great strides have been made by many former communist countries in building democratic societies and market economies. Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic are our NATO allies and are actively pursuing admission to the European Union. Other central and eastern European countries are taking steps to join NATO and the EU. Yet, progress has been uneven and much remains to be done.

It is critical that the United States remain engaged with the peoples and governments of Europe and the countries which emerged from the former Soviet Union, especially Russia, during this difficult period. I agree with President Clinton when he said that we must ''reaffirm our determination to finish the job—to complete a Europe whole, free, democratic, and at peace, for the first time in all of history.'' It is in our strategic and national interest to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 223.

The question was taken.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1554, INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY AND COMMUNICATIONS OMNIBUS REFORM ACT OF 1999

Mr. TAUZIN (during debate on H. Con. Res. 223) submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 1554) to amend the provisions of title 17, United States Code, and the Communications Act of 1934, relating to copyright licensing and carriage of broadcast signals by satellite:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 106–464)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1554), to amend the provisions of title 17, United States Code, and the Communications Act of 1934, relating to copyright licensing and carriage of broadcast signals by satellite, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Intellectual Property and Communications Omnibus Reform Act of 1999''.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of this Act is as follows:

TITLE I—SATELLITE HOME VIEWER IMPROVEMENT

SEC. 1001. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act of 1999''.

SEC. 1002. LIMITATIONS ON EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS; SECONDARY TRANSMISSIONS BY SATELLITE CARRIERS WITHIN LOCAL MARKETS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 1 of title 17, United States Code, is amended by adding after section 121 the following new section:

''§ 122. Limitations on exclusive rights; secondary transmissions by satellite carriers within local markets

''(a) SECONDARY TRANSMISSIONS OF TELEVISION BROADCAST STATIONS BY SATELLITE CARRIERS.—A secondary transmission of a performance or display of a work embodied in a primary transmission of a television broadcast station into the station's local market shall be subject to statutory licensing under this section if—

''(1) the secondary transmission is made by a satellite carrier to the public;

''(2) with regard to secondary transmissions, the satellite carrier is in compliance with the rules, regulations, or authorizations of the Federal Communications Commission governing the carriage of television broadcast station signals; and

''(3) the satellite carrier makes a direct or indirect charge for the secondary transmission to—

''(A) each subscriber receiving the secondary transmission; or

''(B) a distributor that has contracted with the satellite carrier for direct or indirect delivery of the secondary transmission to the public.

''(b) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—

''(1) INITIAL LISTS.—A satellite carrier that makes secondary transmissions of a primary transmission made by a network station under subsection (a) shall, within 90 days after commencing such secondary transmissions, submit to the network that owns or is affiliated with the network station a list identifying (by name in alphabetical order and street address, including county and zip code) all subscribers to which the satellite carrier makes secondary transmissions of that primary transmission under subsection (a).

''(2) SUBSEQUENT LISTS.—After the list is submitted under paragraph (1), the satellite carrier shall, on the 15th of each month, submit to the network a list identifying (by name in alphabetical order and street address, including county and zip code) any subscribers who have been added or dropped as subscribers since the last submission under this subsection.

''(3) USE OF SUBSCRIBER INFORMATION.—Subscriber information submitted by a satellite carrier under this subsection may be used only for the purposes of monitoring compliance by the satellite carrier with this section.

''(4) REQUIREMENTS OF NETWORKS.—The submission requirements of this subsection shall apply to a satellite carrier only if the network to which the submissions are to be made places on file with the Register of Copyrights a document identifying the name and address of the person to whom such submissions are to be made. The Register of Copyrights shall maintain for public inspection a file of all such documents.

''(c) NO ROYALTY FEE REQUIRED.—A satellite carrier whose secondary transmissions are subject to statutory licensing under subsection (a) shall have no royalty obligation for such secondary transmissions.

''(d) NONCOMPLIANCE WITH REPORTING AND REGULATORY REQUIREMENTS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), the willful or repeated secondary transmission to the public by a satellite carrier into the local market of a television broadcast station of a primary transmission embodying a performance or display of a work made by that television broadcast station is actionable as an act of infringement under section 501, and is fully subject to the remedies provided under sections 502 through 506 and 509, if the satellite carrier has not complied with the reporting requirements of subsection (b) or with the rules, regulations, and authorizations of the Federal Communications Commission concerning the carriage of television broadcast signals.

''(e) WILLFUL ALTERATIONS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), the secondary transmission to the public by a satellite carrier into the local market of a television broadcast station of a performance or display of a work embodied in a primary transmission made by that television broadcast station is actionable as an act of infringement under section 501, and is fully subject to the remedies provided by sections 502 through 506 and sections 509 and 510, if the content of the particular program in which the performance or display is embodied, or any commercial advertising or station announcement transmitted by the primary transmitter during, or immediately before or after, the transmission of such program, is in any way willfully altered by the satellite carrier through changes, deletions, or additions, or is combined with programming from any other broadcast signal.

''(f) VIOLATION OF TERRITORIAL RESTRICTIONS ON STATUTORY LICENSE FOR TELEVISION BROADCAST STATIONS.—

''(1) INDIVIDUAL VIOLATIONS.—The willful or repeated secondary transmission to the public by a satellite carrier of a primary transmission embodying a performance or display of a work made by a television broadcast station to a subscriber who does not reside in that station's local market, and is not subject to statutory licensing under section 119 or a private licensing agreement, is actionable as an act of infringement under section 501 and is fully subject to the remedies provided by sections 502 through 506 and 509, except that—

''(A) no damages shall be awarded for such act of infringement if the satellite carrier took corrective action by promptly withdrawing service from the ineligible subscriber; and

''(B) any statutory damages shall not exceed $5 for such subscriber for each month during which the violation occurred.

''(2) PATTERN OF VIOLATIONS.—If a satellite carrier engages in a willful or repeated pattern or practice of secondarily transmitting to the public a primary transmission embodying a performance or display of a work made by a television broadcast station to subscribers who do not reside in that station's local market, and are not subject to statutory licensing under section 119 or a private licensing agreement, then in addition to the remedies under paragraph (1)—

''(A) if the pattern or practice has been carried out on a substantially nationwide basis, the court—

''(i) shall order a permanent injunction barring the secondary transmission by the satellite carrier of the primary transmissions of that television broadcast station (and if such television broadcast station is a network station, all other television broadcast stations affiliated with such network); and

''(ii) may order statutory damages not exceeding $250,000 for each 6-month period during which the pattern or practice was carried out; and

''(B) if the pattern or practice has been carried out on a local or regional basis with respect to more than 1 television broadcast station, the court—

''(i) shall order a permanent injunction barring the secondary transmission in that locality or region by the satellite carrier of the primary transmissions of any television broadcast station; and

''(ii) may order statutory damages not exceeding $250,000 for each 6-month period during which the pattern or practice was carried out.

''(g) BURDEN OF PROOF.—In any action brought under subsection (f), the satellite carrier shall have the burden of proving that its secondary transmission of a primary transmission by a television broadcast station is made only to subscribers located within that station's local market or subscribers being served in compliance with section 119 or a private licensing agreement.

''(h) GEOGRAPHIC LIMITATIONS ON SECONDARY TRANSMISSIONS.—The statutory license created by this section shall apply to secondary transmissions to locations in the United States.

''(i) EXCLUSIVITY WITH RESPECT TO SECONDARY TRANSMISSIONS OF BROADCAST STATIONS BY SATELLITE TO MEMBERS OF THE PUBLIC.—No provision of section 111 or any other law (other than this section and section 119) shall be construed to contain any authorization, exemption, or license through which secondary transmissions by satellite carriers of programming contained in a primary transmission made by a television broadcast station may be made without obtaining the consent of the copyright owner.

''(j) DEFINITIONS.—In this section—

''(1) DISTRIBUTOR.—The term 'distributor' means an entity which contracts to distribute secondary transmissions from a satellite carrier and, either as a single channel or in a package with other programming, provides the secondary transmission either directly to individual subscribers or indirectly through other program distribution entities.

''(2) LOCAL MARKET.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'local market', in the case of both commercial and noncommercial television broadcast stations, means the designated market area in which a station is located, and—

''(i) in the case of a commercial television broadcast station, all commercial television broadcast stations licensed to a community within the same designated market area are within the same local market; and

''(ii) in the case of a noncommercial educational television broadcast station, the market includes any station that is licensed to a community within the same designated market area as the noncommercial educational television broadcast station.

''(B) COUNTY OF LICENSE.—In addition to the area described in subparagraph (A), a station's local market includes the county in which the station's community of license is located.

''(C) DESIGNATED MARKET AREA.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'designated market area' means a designated market area, as determined by Nielsen Media Research and published in the 1999–2000 Nielsen Station Index Directory and Nielsen Station Index United States Television Household Estimates or any successor publication.

''(3) NETWORK STATION; SATELLITE CARRIER; SECONDARY TRANSMISSION.—The terms 'network station', 'satellite carrier' and 'secondary transmission' have the meanings given such terms under section 119(d).

''(4) SUBSCRIBER.—The term 'subscriber' means a person who receives a secondary transmission service from a satellite carrier and pays a fee for the service, directly or indirectly, to the satellite carrier or to a distributor.

''(5) TELEVISION BROADCAST STATION.—The term 'television broadcast station'—

''(A) means an over-the-air, commercial or noncommercial television broadcast station licensed by the Federal Communications Commission under subpart E of part 73 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations, except that such term does not include a low-power or translator television station; and

''(B) includes a television broadcast station licensed by an appropriate governmental authority of Canada or Mexico if the station broadcasts primarily in the English language and is a network station as defined in section 119(d)(2)(A).''.

(b) INFRINGEMENT OF COPYRIGHT.—Section 501 of title 17, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(f)(1) With respect to any secondary transmission that is made by a satellite carrier of a performance or display of a work embodied in a primary transmission and is actionable as an act of infringement under section 122, a television broadcast station holding a copyright or other license to transmit or perform the same version of that work shall, for purposes of subsection (b) of this section, be treated as a legal or beneficial owner if such secondary transmission occurs within the local market of that station.

''(2) A television broadcast station may file a civil action against any satellite carrier that has refused to carry television broadcast signals, as required under section 122(a)(2), to enforce that television broadcast station's rights under section 338(a) of the Communications Act of 1934.''.

(c) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections for chapter 1 of title 17, United States Code, is amended by adding after the item relating to section 121 the following:

''122. Limitations on exclusive rights; secondary transmissions by satellite carriers within local market.''.

SEC. 1003. EXTENSION OF EFFECT OF AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 119 OF TITLE 17, UNITED STATES CODE.

Section 4(a) of the Satellite Home Viewer Act of 1994 (17 U.S.C. 119 note; Public Law 103–369; 108 Stat. 3481) is amended by striking ''December 31, 1999'' and inserting ''December 31, 2004''.

SEC. 1004. COMPUTATION OF ROYALTY FEES FOR SATELLITE CARRIERS.

Section 119(c) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(4) REDUCTION.—

''(A) SUPERSTATION.—The rate of the royalty fee in effect on January 1, 1998, payable in each case under subsection (b)(1)(B)(i) shall be reduced by 30 percent.

''(B) NETWORK AND PUBLIC BROADCASTING SATELLITE FEED.—The rate of the royalty fee in effect on January 1, 1998, payable under subsection (b)(1)(B)(ii) shall be reduced by 45 percent.

''(5) PUBLIC BROADCASTING SERVICE AS AGENT.—For purposes of section 802, with respect to royalty fees paid by satellite carriers for retransmitting the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed, the Public Broadcasting Service shall be the agent for all public television copyright claimants and all Public Broadcasting Service member stations.''.

SEC. 1005. DISTANT SIGNAL ELIGIBILITY FOR CONSUMERS.

(a) UNSERVED HOUSEHOLD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 119(d) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by striking paragraph (10) and inserting the following:

''(10) UNSERVED HOUSEHOLD.—The term 'unserved household', with respect to a particular television network, means a household that—

''(A) cannot receive, through the use of a conventional, stationary, outdoor rooftop receiving antenna, an over-the-air signal of a primary network station affiliated with that network of Grade B intensity as defined by the Federal Communications Commission under section 73.683(a) of title 47 of the Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on January 1, 1999;

''(B) is subject to a waiver granted under regulations established under section 339(c)(2) of the Communications Act of 1934;

''(C) is a subscriber to whom subsection (e) applies;

''(D) is a subscriber to whom subsection (a)(11) applies; or

''(E) is a subscriber to whom the exemption under subsection (a)(2)(B)(iii) applies.''.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 119(a)(2)(B) of title 17, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(B) SECONDARY TRANSMISSIONS TO UNSERVED HOUSEHOLDS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The statutory license provided for in subparagraph (A) shall be limited to secondary transmissions of the signals of no more than 2 network stations in a single day for each television network to persons who reside in unserved households.

''(ii) ACCURATE DETERMINATIONS OF ELIGIBILITY.—

''(I) ACCURATE PREDICTIVE MODEL.—In determining presumptively whether a person resides in an unserved household under subsection (d)(10)(A), a court shall rely on the Individual Location Longley-Rice model set forth by the Federal Communications Commission in Docket No. 98–201, as that model may be amended by the Commission over time under section 339(c)(3) of the Communications Act of 1934 to increase the accuracy of that model.

''(II) ACCURATE MEASUREMENTS.—For purposes of site measurements to determine whether a person resides in an unserved household under subsection (d)(10)(A), a court shall rely on section 339(c)(4) of the Communications Act of 1934.

''(iii) C-BAND EXEMPTION TO UNSERVED HOUSEHOLDS.—

''(I) IN GENERAL.—The limitations of clause (i) shall not apply to any secondary transmissions by C-band services of network stations that a subscriber to C-band service received before any termination of such secondary transmissions before October 31, 1999.

''(II) DEFINITION.—In this clause the term 'C-band service' means a service that is licensed by the Federal Communications Commission and operates in the Fixed Satellite Service under part 25 of title 47 of the Code of Federal Regulations.''.

(b) EXCEPTION TO LIMITATION ON SECONDARY TRANSMISSIONS.—Section 119(a)(5) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(E) EXCEPTION.—The secondary transmission by a satellite carrier of a performance or display of a work embodied in a primary transmission made by a network station to subscribers who do not reside in unserved households shall not be an act of infringement if—

''(i) the station on May 1, 1991, was retransmitted by a satellite carrier and was not on that date owned or operated by or affiliated with a television network that offered interconnected program service on a regular basis for 15 or more hours per week to at least 25 affiliated television licensees in 10 or more States;

''(ii) as of July 1, 1998, such station was retransmitted by a satellite carrier under the statutory license of this section; and

''(iii) the station is not owned or operated by or affiliated with a television network that, as of January 1, 1995, offered interconnected program service on a regular basis for 15 or more hours per week to at least 25 affiliated television licensees in 10 or more States.''.

(c) MORATORIUM ON COPYRIGHT LIABILITY.—Section 119(e) of title 17, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(e) MORATORIUM ON COPYRIGHT LIABILITY.—Until December 31, 2004, a subscriber who does not receive a signal of grade A intensity (as defined in the regulations of the Federal Communications Commission under section 73.683(a) of title 47 of the Code of Federal Regulations, as in effect on January 1, 1999, or predicted by the Federal Communications Commission using the Individual Location Longley-Rice methodology described by the Federal Communications Commission in Docket 98–201) of a local network television broadcast station shall remain eligible to receive signals of network stations affiliated with the same network, if that subscriber had satellite service of such network signal terminated after July 11, 1998, and before October 31, 1999, as required by this section, or received such service on October 31, 1999.''.

(d) RECREATIONAL VEHICLE AND COMMERCIAL TRUCK EXEMPTION.—Section 119(a) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(11) SERVICE TO RECREATIONAL VEHICLES AND COMMERCIAL TRUCKS.—

''(A) EXEMPTION.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of this subsection, and subject to clauses (ii) and (iii), the term 'unserved household' shall include—

''(I) recreational vehicles as defined in regulations of the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development under section 3282.8 of title 24 of the Code of Federal Regulations; and

''(II) commercial trucks that qualify as commercial motor vehicles under regulations of the Secretary of Transportation under section 383.5 of title 49 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

''(ii) LIMITATION.—Clause (i) shall apply only to a recreational vehicle or commercial truck if any satellite carrier that proposes to make a secondary transmission of a network station to the operator of such a recreational vehicle or commercial truck complies with the documentation requirements under subparagraphs (B) and (C).

''(iii) EXCLUSION.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the terms 'recreational vehicle' and 'commercial truck' shall not include any fixed dwelling, whether a mobile home or otherwise.

''(B) DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENTS.—A recreational vehicle or commercial truck shall be deemed to be an unserved household beginning 10 days after the relevant satellite carrier provides to the network that owns or is affiliated with the network station that will be secondarily transmitted to the recreational vehicle or commercial truck the following documents:

''(i) DECLARATION.—A signed declaration by the operator of the recreational vehicle or commercial truck that the satellite dish is permanently attached to the recreational vehicle or commercial truck, and will not be used to receive satellite programming at any fixed dwelling.

''(ii) REGISTRATION.—In the case of a recreational vehicle, a copy of the current State vehicle registration for the recreational vehicle.

''(iii) REGISTRATION AND LICENSE.—In the case of a commercial truck, a copy of—

''(I) the current State vehicle registration for the truck; and

''(II) a copy of a valid, current commercial driver's license, as defined in regulations of the Secretary of Transportation under section 383 of title 49 of the Code of Federal Regulations, issued to the operator.

''(C) UPDATED DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENTS.—If a satellite carrier wishes to continue to make secondary transmissions to a recreational vehicle or commercial truck for more than a 2-year period, that carrier shall provide each network, upon request, with updated documentation in the form described under subparagraph (B) during the 90 days before expiration of that 2-year period.''.

(e) EXCEPTION TO SATELLITE CARRIER DEFINITION.—Section 119(d)(6) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the period '', or provides a digital online communication service''.

(f) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 119(d)(11) of title 17, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(11) LOCAL MARKET.—The term 'local market' has the meaning given such term under section 122(j).''.

SEC. 1006. PUBLIC BROADCASTING SERVICE SATELLITE FEED.

(a) SECONDARY TRANSMISSIONS.—Section 119(a)(1) of title 17, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking the paragraph heading and inserting ''(1) SUPERSTATIONS AND PBS SATELLITE FEED.—'';

(2) by inserting ''or by the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed'' after ''superstation''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following: ''In the case of the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed, the statutory license shall be effective until January 1, 2002.''.

(b) ROYALTY FEES.—Section 119(b)(1)(B)(iii) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by inserting ''or the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed'' after ''network station''.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—Section 119(d) of title 17, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by amending paragraph (9) to read as follows:

''(9) SUPERSTATION.—The term 'superstation'—

''(A) means a television broadcast station, other than a network station, licensed by the Federal Communications Commission that is secondarily transmitted by a satellite carrier; and

''(B) except for purposes of computing the royalty fee, includes the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed.''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(12) PUBLIC BROADCASTING SERVICE SATELLITE FEED.—The term 'Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed' means the national satellite feed distributed and designated for purposes of this section by the Public Broadcasting Service consisting of educational and informational programming intended for private home viewing, to which the Public Broadcasting Service holds national terrestrial broadcast rights.''.

SEC. 1007. APPLICATION OF FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION REGULATIONS.

Section 119(a) of title 17, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting ''with regard to secondary transmissions the satellite carrier is in compliance with the rules, regulations, or authorizations of the Federal Communications Commission governing the carriage of television broadcast station signals,'' after ''satellite carrier to the public for private home viewing,'';

(2) in paragraph (2), by inserting ''with regard to secondary transmissions the satellite carrier is in compliance with the rules, regulations, or authorizations of the Federal Communications Commission governing the carriage of television broadcast station signals,'' after ''satellite carrier to the public for private home viewing,''; and

(3) by adding at the end of such subsection (as amended by section 1005(e) of this Act) the following new paragraph:

''(12) STATUTORY LICENSE CONTINGENT ON COMPLIANCE WITH FCC RULES AND REMEDIAL STEPS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the willful or repeated secondary transmission to the public by a satellite carrier of a primary transmission embodying a performance or display of a work made by a broadcast station licensed by the Federal Communications Commission is actionable as an act of infringement under section 501, and is fully subject to the remedies provided by sections 502 through 506 and 509, if, at the time of such transmission, the satellite carrier is not in compliance with the rules, regulations, and authorizations of the Federal Communications Commission concerning the carriage of television broadcast station signals.''.

SEC. 1008. RULES FOR SATELLITE CARRIERS RETRANSMITTING TELEVISION BROADCAST SIGNALS.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934.—Title III of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended by inserting after section 337 (47 U.S.C. 337) the following new sections:

''SEC. 338. CARRIAGE OF LOCAL TELEVISION SIGNALS BY SATELLITE CARRIERS.

''(a) CARRIAGE OBLIGATIONS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the limitations of paragraph (2), each satellite carrier providing, under section 122 of title 17, United States Code, secondary transmissions to subscribers located within the local market of a television broadcast station of a primary transmission made by that station shall carry upon request the signals of all television broadcast stations located within that local market, subject to section 325(b).

''(2) REMEDIES FOR FAILURE TO CARRY.—The remedies for any failure to meet the obligations under this subsection shall be available exclusively under section 501(f) of title 17, United States Code.

''(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—No satellite carrier shall be required to carry local television broadcast stations under paragraph (1) until January 1, 2002.

''(b) GOOD SIGNAL REQUIRED.—

''(1) COSTS.—A television broadcast station asserting its right to carriage under subsection (a) shall be required to bear the costs associated with delivering a good quality signal to the designated local receive facility of the satellite carrier or to another facility that is acceptable to at least one-half the stations asserting the right to carriage in the local market.

''(2) REGULATIONS.—The regulations issued under subsection (g) shall set forth the obligations necessary to carry out this subsection.

''(c) DUPLICATION NOT REQUIRED.—

''(1) COMMERCIAL STATIONS.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), a satellite carrier shall not be required to carry upon request the signal of any local commercial television broadcast station that substantially duplicates the signal of another local commercial television broadcast station which is secondarily transmitted by the satellite carrier within the same local market, or to carry upon request the signals of more than 1 local commercial television broadcast station in a single local market that is affiliated with a particular television network unless such stations are licensed to communities in different States.

''(2) NONCOMMERCIAL STATIONS.—The Commission shall prescribe regulations limiting the carriage requirements under subsection (a) of satellite carriers with respect to the carriage of multiple local noncommercial television broadcast stations. To the extent possible, such regulations shall provide the same degree of carriage by satellite carriers of such multiple stations as is provided by cable systems under section 615.

''(d) CHANNEL POSITIONING.—No satellite carrier shall be required to provide the signal of a local television broadcast station to subscribers in that station's local market on any particular channel number or to provide the signals in any particular order, except that the satellite carrier shall retransmit the signal of the local television broadcast stations to subscribers in the stations' local market on contiguous channels and provide access to such station's signals at a nondiscriminatory price and in a nondiscriminatory manner on any navigational device, on-screen program guide, or menu.

''(e) COMPENSATION FOR CARRIAGE.—A satellite carrier shall not accept or request monetary payment or other valuable consideration in exchange either for carriage of local television broadcast stations in fulfillment of the requirements of this section or for channel positioning rights provided to such stations under this section, except that any such station may be required to bear the costs associated with delivering a good quality signal to the local receive facility of the satellite carrier.

''(f) REMEDIES.—

''(1) COMPLAINTS BY BROADCAST STATIONS.—Whenever a local television broadcast station believes that a satellite carrier has failed to meet its obligations under subsections (b) through (e) of this section, such station shall notify the carrier, in writing, of the alleged failure and identify its reasons for believing that the satellite carrier failed to comply with such obligations. The satellite carrier shall, within 30 days after such written notification, respond in writing to such notification and comply with such obligations or state its reasons for believing that it is in compliance with such obligations. A local television broadcast station that disputes a response by a satellite carrier that it is in compliance with such obligations may obtain review of such denial or response by filing a complaint with the Commission. Such complaint shall allege the manner in which such satellite carrier has failed to meet its obligations and the basis for such allegations.

''(2) OPPORTUNITY TO RESPOND.—The Commission shall afford the satellite carrier against which a complaint is filed under paragraph (1) an opportunity to present data and arguments to establish that there has been no failure to meet its obligations under this section.

''(3) REMEDIAL ACTIONS; DISMISSAL.—Within 120 days after the date a complaint is filed under paragraph (1), the Commission shall determine whether the satellite carrier has met its obligations under subsections (b) through (e). If the Commission determines that the satellite carrier has failed to meet such obligations, the Commission shall order the satellite carrier to take appropriate remedial action. If the Commission determines that the satellite carrier has fully met the requirements of such subsections, the Commission shall dismiss the complaint.

''(g) REGULATIONS BY COMMISSION.—Within 1 year after the date of enactment of this section, the Commission shall issue regulations implementing this section following a rulemaking proceeding. The regulations prescribed under this section shall include requirements on satellite carriers that are comparable to the requirements on cable operators under sections 614(b) (3) and (4) and 615(g)(1) and (2).

''(h) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

''(1) DISTRIBUTOR.—The term 'distributor' means an entity which contracts to distribute secondary transmissions from a satellite carrier and, either as a single channel or in a package with other programming, provides the secondary transmission either directly to individual subscribers or indirectly through other program distribution entities.

''(2) LOCAL RECEIVE FACILITY.—The term 'local receive facility' means the reception point in each local market which a satellite carrier designates for delivery of the signal of the station for purposes of retransmission.

''(3) LOCAL MARKET.—The term 'local market' has the meaning given that term under section 122(j) of title 17, United States Code.

''(4) SATELLITE CARRIER.—The term 'satellite carrier' has the meaning given such term under section 119(d) of title 17, United States Code.

''(5) SECONDARY TRANSMISSION.—The term 'secondary transmission' has the meaning given such term in section 119(d) of title 17, United States Code.

''(6) SUBSCRIBER.—The term 'subscriber' has the meaning given that term under section 122(j) of title 17, United States Code.

''(7) TELEVISION BROADCAST STATION.—The term 'television broadcast station' has the meaning given such term in section 325(b)(7).

''SEC. 339. CARRIAGE OF DISTANT TELEVISION STATIONS BY SATELLITE CARRIERS.

''(a) PROVISIONS RELATING TO CARRIAGE OF DISTANT SIGNALS.—

''(1) CARRIAGE PERMITTED.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to section 119 of title 17, United States Code, any satellite carrier shall be permitted to provide the signals of no more than 2 network stations in a single day for each television network to any household not located within the local markets of those network stations.

''(B) ADDITIONAL SERVICE.—In addition to signals provided under subparagraph (A), any satellite carrier may also provide service under the statutory license of section 122 of title 17, United States Code, to the local market within which such household is located. The service provided under section 122 of such title may be in addition to the 2 signals provided under section 119 of such title.

''(2) PENALTY FOR VIOLATION.—Any satellite carrier that knowingly and willfully provides the signals of television stations to subscribers in violation of this subsection shall be liable for a forfeiture penalty under section 503 in the amount of $50,000 for each violation or each day of a continuing violation.

''(b) EXTENSION OF NETWORK NONDUPLICATION, SYNDICATED EXCLUSIVITY, AND SPORTS BLACKOUT TO SATELLITE RETRANSMISSION.—

''(1) EXTENSION OF PROTECTIONS.—Within 45 days after the date of enactment of the Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act of 1999, the Commission shall commence a single rulemaking proceeding to establish regulations that—

''(A) apply network nonduplication protection (47 C.F.R. 76.92) syndicated exclusivity protection (47 C.F.R. 76.151), and sports blackout protection (47 C.F.R. 76.67) to the retransmission of the signals of nationally distributed superstations by satellite carriers to subscribers; and

''(B) to the extent technically feasible and not economically prohibitive, apply sports blackout protection (47 C.F.R. 76.67) to the retransmission of the signals of network stations by satellite carriers to subscribers.

''(2) DEADLINE FOR ACTION.—The Commission shall complete all actions necessary to prescribe regulations required by this section so that the regulations shall become effective within 1 year after such date of enactment.

''(c) ELIGIBILITY FOR RETRANSMISSION.—

''(1) SIGNAL STANDARD FOR SATELLITE CARRIER PURPOSES.—For the purposes of identifying an unserved household under section 119(d)(10) of title 17, United States Code, within 1 year after the date of enactment of the Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act of 1999, the Commission shall conclude an inquiry to evaluate all possible standards and factors for determining eligibility for retransmissions of the signals of network stations, and, if appropriate—

''(A) recommend modifications to the Grade B intensity standard for analog signals set forth in section 73.683(a) of its regulations (47 C.F.R. 73.683(a)), or recommend alternative standards or factors for purposes of determining such eligibility; and

''(B) make a further recommendation relating to an appropriate standard for digital signals.

''(2) WAIVERS.—A subscriber who is denied the retransmission of a signal of a network station under section 119 of title 17, United States Code, may request a waiver from such denial by submitting a request, through such subscriber's satellite carrier, to the network station asserting that the retransmission is prohibited. The network station shall accept or reject a subscriber's request for a waiver within 30 days after receipt of the request. The subscriber shall be permitted to receive such retransmission under section 119(d)(10)(B) of title 17, United States Code, if such station agrees to the waiver request and files with the satellite carrier a written waiver with respect to that subscriber allowing the subscriber to receive such retransmission. If a television network station fails to accept or reject a subscriber's request for a waiver within the 30-day period after receipt of the request, that station shall be deemed to agree to the waiver request and have filed such written waiver.

''(3) ESTABLISHMENT OF IMPROVED PREDICTIVE MODEL REQUIRED.—Within 180 days after the date of enactment of the Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act of 1999, the Commission shall take all actions necessary, including any reconsideration, to develop and prescribe by rule a point-to-point predictive model for reliably and presumptively determining the ability of individual locations to receive signals in accordance with the signal intensity standard in effect under section 119(d)(10)(A) of title 17, United States Code. In prescribing such model, the Commission shall rely on the Individual Location Longley-Rice model set forth by the Federal Communications Commission in Docket 98–201 and ensure that such model takes into account terrain, building structures, and other land cover variations. The Commission shall establish procedures for the continued refinement in the application of the model by the use of additional data as it becomes available.

''(4) OBJECTIVE VERIFICATION.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—If a subscriber's request for a waiver under paragraph (2) is rejected and the subscriber submits to the subscriber's satellite carrier a request for a test verifying the subscriber's inability to receive a signal that meets the signal intensity standard in effect under section 119(d)(10)(A) of title 17, United States Code, the satellite carrier and the network station or stations asserting that the retransmission is prohibited with respect to that subscriber shall select a qualified and independent person to conduct a test in accordance with section 73.686(d) of its regulations (47 C.F.R. 73.686(d)), or any successor regulation. Such test shall be conducted within 30 days after the date the subscriber submits a request for the test. If the written findings and conclusions of a test conducted in accordance with such section (or any successor regulation) demonstrate that the subscriber does not receive a signal that meets or exceeds the signal intensity standard in effect under section 119(d)(10)(A) of title 17, United States Code, the subscriber shall not be denied the retransmission of a signal of a network station under section 119 of title 17, United States Code.

''(B) DESIGNATION OF TESTER AND ALLOCATION OF COSTS.—If the satellite carrier and the network station or stations asserting that the retransmission is prohibited are unable to agree on such a person to conduct the test, the person shall be designated by an independent and neutral entity designated by the Commission by rule. Unless the satellite carrier and the network station or stations otherwise agree, the costs of conducting the test under this paragraph shall be borne by the satellite carrier, if the station's signal meets or exceeds the signal intensity standard in effect under section 119(d)(10)(A) of title 17, United States Code, or by the network station, if its signal fails to meet or exceed such standard.

''(C) AVOIDANCE OF UNDUE BURDEN.— Commission regulations prescribed under this paragraph shall seek to avoid any undue burden on any party.

''(d) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section:

''(1) LOCAL MARKET.—The term 'local market' has the meaning given that term under section 122(j) of title 17, United States Code.

''(2) NATIONALLY DISTRIBUTED SUPERSTATION.—The term 'nationally distributed superstation' means a television broadcast station, licensed by the Commission, that—

''(A) is not owned or operated by or affiliated with a television network that, as of January 1, 1995, offered interconnected program service on a regular basis for 15 or more hours per week to at least 25 affiliated television licensees in 10 or more States;

''(B) on May 1, 1991, was retransmitted by a satellite carrier and was not a network station at that time; and

''(C) was, as of July 1, 1998, retransmitted by a satellite carrier under the statutory license of section 119 of title 17, United States Code.

''(3) NETWORK STATION.—The term 'network station' has the meaning given such term under section 119(d) of title 17, United States Code.

''(4) SATELLITE CARRIER.—The term 'satellite carrier' has the meaning given such term under section 119(d) of title 17, United States Code.

''(5) TELEVISION NETWORK.—The term 'television network' means a television network in the United States which offers an interconnected program service on a regular basis for 15 or more hours per week to at least 25 affiliated broadcast stations in 10 or more States.''.

(b) NETWORK STATION DEFINITION.—Section 119(d)(2) of title 17, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B) by striking the period and inserting a semicolon; and

(2) by adding after subparagraph (B) the following:

''except that the term does not include the signal of the Alaska Rural Communications Service, or any successor entity to that service.''.

SEC. 1009. RETRANSMISSION CONSENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 325(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 325(b)) is amended—

(1) by amending paragraphs (1) and (2) to read as follows:

''(b)(1) No cable system or other multichannel video programming distributor shall retransmit the signal of a broadcasting station, or any part thereof, except—

''(A) with the express authority of the originating station;

''(B) under section 614, in the case of a station electing, in accordance with this subsection, to assert the right to carriage under such section; or

''(C) under section 338, in the case of a station electing, in accordance with this subsection, to assert the right to carriage under such section.

''(2) This subsection shall not apply—

''(A) to retransmission of the signal of a noncommercial television broadcast station;

''(B) to retransmission of the signal of a television broadcast station outside the station's local market by a satellite carrier directly to its subscribers, if—

''(i) such station was a superstation on May 1, 1991;

''(ii) as of July 1, 1998, such station was retransmitted by a satellite carrier under the statutory license of section 119 of title 17, United States Code; and

''(iii) the satellite carrier complies with any network nonduplication, syndicated exclusivity, and sports blackout rules adopted by the Commission under section 339(b) of this Act;

''(C) until December 31, 2004, to retransmission of the signals of network stations directly to a home satellite antenna, if the subscriber receiving the signal—

''(i) is located in an area outside the local market of such stations; and

''(ii) resides in an unserved household;

''(D) to retransmission by a cable operator or other multichannel video provider, other than a satellite carrier, of the signal of a television broadcast station outside the station's local market if such signal was obtained from a satellite carrier and—

''(i) the originating station was a superstation on May 1, 1991; and

''(ii) as of July 1, 1998, such station was retransmitted by a satellite carrier under the statutory license of section 119 of title 17, United States Code; or

''(E) during the 6-month period beginning on the date of enactment of the Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act of 1999, to the retransmission of the signal of a television broadcast station within the station's local market by a satellite carrier directly to its subscribers under the statutory license of section 122 of title 17, United States Code.

For purposes of this paragraph, the terms 'satellite carrier' and 'superstation' have the meanings given those terms, respectively, in section 119(d) of title 17, United States Code, as in effect on the date of enactment of the Cable Television Consumer Protection and Competition Act of 1992, the term 'unserved household' has the meaning given that term under section 119(d) of such title, and the term 'local market' has the meaning given that term in section 122(j) of such title.'';

(2) by adding at the end of paragraph (3) the following new subparagraph:

''(C) Within 45 days after the date of enactment of the Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act of 1999, the Commission shall commence a rulemaking proceeding to revise the regulations governing the exercise by television broadcast stations of the right to grant retransmission consent under this subsection, and such other regulations as are necessary to administer the limitations contained in paragraph (2). The Commission shall complete all actions necessary to prescribe such regulations within 1 year after such date of enactment. Such regulations shall—

''(i) establish election time periods that correspond with those regulations adopted under subparagraph (B) of this paragraph; and

''(ii) until January 1, 2006, prohibit a television broadcast station that provides retransmission consent from engaging in exclusive contracts for carriage or failing to negotiate in good faith, and it shall not be a failure to negotiate in good faith if the television broadcast station enters into retransmission consent agreements containing different terms and conditions, including price terms, with different multichannel video programming distributors if such different terms and conditions are based on competitive marketplace considerations.'';

(3) in paragraph (4), by adding at the end the following new sentence: ''If an originating television station elects under paragraph (3)(C) to exercise its right to grant retransmission consent under this subsection with respect to a satellite carrier, section 338 shall not apply to the carriage of the signal of such station by such satellite carrier.'';

(4) in paragraph (5), by striking ''614 or 615'' and inserting ''338, 614, or 615''; and

(5) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(7) For purposes of this subsection, the term—

''(A) 'network station' has the meaning given such term under section 119(d) of title 17, United States Code; and

''(B) 'television broadcast station' means an over-the-air commercial or noncommercial television broadcast station licensed by the Commission under subpart E of part 73 of title 47, Code of Federal Regulations, except that such term does not include a low-power or translator television station.''.

(b) ENFORCEMENT PROVISIONS FOR CONSENT FOR RETRANSMISSIONS.—Section 325 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 325) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(e) ENFORCEMENT PROCEEDINGS AGAINST SATELLITE CARRIERS CONCERNING RETRANSMISSIONS OF TELEVISION BROADCAST STATIONS IN THE RESPECTIVE LOCAL MARKETS OF SUCH CARRIERS.—

''(1) COMPLAINTS BY TELEVISION BROADCAST STATIONS.—If after the expiration of the 6-month period described under subsection (b)(2)(E) a television broadcast station believes that a satellite carrier has retransmitted its signal to any person in the local market of such station in violation of subsection (b)(1), the station may file with the Commission a complaint providing—

''(A) the name, address, and call letters of the station;

''(B) the name and address of the satellite carrier;

''(C) the dates on which the alleged retransmission occurred;

''(D) the street address of at least 1 person in the local market of the station to whom the alleged retransmission was made;

''(E) a statement that the retransmission was not expressly authorized by the television broadcast station; and

''(F) the name and address of counsel for the station.

''(2) SERVICE OF COMPLAINTS ON SATELLITE CARRIERS.—For purposes of any proceeding under this subsection, any satellite carrier that retransmits the signal of any broadcast station shall be deemed to designate the Secretary of the Commission as its agent for service of process. A television broadcast station may serve a satellite carrier with a complaint concerning an alleged violation of subsection (b)(1) through retransmission of a station within the local market of such station by filing the original and 2 copies of the complaint with the Secretary of the Commission and serving a copy of the complaint on the satellite carrier by means of 2 commonly used overnight delivery services, each addressed to the chief executive officer of the satellite carrier at its principal place of business, and each marked 'URGENT LITIGATION MATTER' on the outer packaging. Service shall be deemed complete 1 business day after a copy of the complaint is provided to the delivery services for overnight delivery. On receipt of a complaint filed by a television broadcast station under this subsection, the Secretary of the Commission shall send the original complaint by United States mail, postage prepaid, receipt requested, addressed to the chief executive officer of the satellite carrier at its principal place of business.

''(3) ANSWERS BY SATELLITE CARRIERS.—Within 5 business days after the date of service, the satellite carrier shall file an answer with the Commission and shall serve the answer by a commonly used overnight delivery service and by United States mail, on the counsel designated in the complaint at the address listed for such counsel in the complaint.

''(4) DEFENSES.—

''(A) EXCLUSIVE DEFENSES.—The defenses under this paragraph are the exclusive defenses available to a satellite carrier against which a complaint under this subsection is filed.

''(B) DEFENSES.—The defenses referred to under subparagraph (A) are the defenses that—
