Research on the brain has shown that the years between birth and six are critical for future success in school, at work, and in society. I believe that education provides the cornerstone from which all other things become possible. Our Nation's first educational goal is that all children should begin school ready to learn. In order to achieve that goal, parents and caretakers need support and assistance to better ensure that they have the tools necessary to incorporate early childhood learning into the daily lives of our Nation's children. Senator STEVENS offered an amendment that was adopted by unanimous consent that provided mandatory funding for this program. This funding was rejected in conference and is not contained within this budget resolution.

Senator KENNEDY and I offered an amendment that provided for a $400 increase in the maximum Pell Grant. These funds make it possible for millions of students to attend college each year. Again, this funding was rejected in conference and is not contained within this resolution.

Prosperity also dictates that we redouble our efforts to protect society's most vulnerable. Unfortunately, this budget does not go far enough to provide drugs to seniors who need them now. I agree with Vermonters who tell me that prescription drug costs are too high, and that it doesn't make sense for Medicare to cover hospital charges, but not cover the drugs that could keep beneficiaries out of the hospital.

Let me be clear, Mr. President, I believe that we need Medicare reform that includes a broad prescription drug benefit. But even if we are not able to enact Medicare reform this year, I believe we need to provide sufficient funds now, in this budget, that will provide relief to Medicare beneficiaries that need help the most—those low-income seniors whose income is high enough that they don't qualify for Medicaid, but still do not have enough income to afford the prescription drugs that they need.

Mr. President, I am very disappointed with the prescription drug provision in this Budget Resolution. I supported the approach of Senator SNOWE's amendment in the Budget Committee that would have provided $40 billion for prescription drugs for Medicare beneficiaries even if Congress is unable to enact Medicare reform. We should not let Congress' inability to enact broad Medicare reform stand in the way of providing seniors with the medicines that they need to live longer, healthier lives.

I am further dismayed that this budget resolution does not fulfill our Nation's commitment to its veterans. Years of underfunding coupled with spiraling health care costs have left the veterans health care system struggling to provide the quality care that veterans expect and deserve. This trend must be stopped and reversed. We owe it to future generations to keep federal spending under control. But we must first recognize the prior claim of veterans who have already given of themselves and who expect to receive the medical care and benefits they were promised.

This budget, like all budgets passed by Congress, is an expression of political intent, priorities, and a starting point for bargaining. Much work remains to be done to pass the 13 appropriations bills that actually fund the government. In areas where I disagree with the budget resolution, I plan to work hard with appropriators to adjust spending levels and turn this budget into reality.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, the Budget Resolution before us is a responsible budget framework. Senator DOMENICI has done a superb job in helping to craft this budget on the Senate side, and he deserves our praise. This budget resolution balances the important goals of debt reduction, tax relief, and prudent spending levels.

Most importantly, the budget will fully protect Social Security now and in the future. This represents a sea change in the way business is done in Washington. When I came to Washington, Congress routinely spent money out of the Social Security trust fund. This resolution ends the raid on Social Security, and does so in two ways.

First, the budget is based on the premise that Social Security funds will not be used to pay for additional deficit spending or tax relief. Second, as part of this budget's commitment to protect the entire Social Security surplus, Senator DOMENICI included a point of order against any budget that spends money out of the Social Security surplus. This rule is the same as the one I proposed last year, and that was included in the FY 2000 budget.

As a result of this hard-fought fiscal discipline, this budget will retire $1.1 trillion in publicly held debt over 5 years, and approximately $170 billion next year. If we continue upon the path laid out by this budget, we will completely eliminate the publicly-held debt over the next 13 years.

We have already made great progress in this regard. When this budget is enacted, we will have reduced the national debt by $533 billion over the past three years.

I was particularly pleased that the Senate unanimously accepted my amendment objecting to the President's plan to have the government invest Social Security surpluses in the stock market. This risky scheme would have put both Social Security and the stock market at risk.

In addition to responsibly paying off our publicly-held debt, this budget allows for approximately $150 billion in tax relief over 5 years, including $13 billion in FY 2001. These actions include significant marriage penalty relief, which already has passed the House, and is working its way through the Senate. In fact, during the debate on the Budget Resolution, the Senate passed the Hutchison-Ashcroft amendment calling for marriage penalty relief 99–1.

In addition to providing a judicious mix of tax relief, debt reduction, and Social Security protection, the FY 2001 Budget Resolution also includes responsible spending levels. This budget, which is a balanced budget for the third year in a row, calls for approximately $600.5 billion in discretionary spending.

This budget will fully fund Medicare, rejecting President Clinton's Medicare cuts of $14 billion over 5 years. In addition, Congress' spending plan calls for a $40 billion reserve fund to pay for Medicare reform and Medicare prescription drugs.

As I said, this budget focuses spending towards our national priorities, including a $4.5 billion increase in education spending in FY 2001, and $5.5 billion in agriculture spending in FY 2000. The FY 2001 budget also increases funding for domestic priorities such as Head Start; embassy security; the National Science Foundation; the National Institutes of Health; the Park Service; and highways and airports.

Of course, this budget isn't perfect. I was disappointed that the Senate did not adopt the effort to protect the Medicare surplus with my Medicare lockbox amendment. This amendment, which would have extended the protections that now apply to Social Security to the Medicare Part A Hospital Insurance trust, did not overcome a point of order in the Senate.

Despite this setback, I am pleased with the overall package agreed to by Congress. It meets the vital national needs of protecting Social Security, reducing debt, cutting taxes, and funding our domestic priorities. I plan to vote for the FY 2001 Budget Resolution.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the budget resolution conference report. This budget before us today continues the momentum we started last year to provide additional funding for defense in an effort to correct the most critical readiness, modernization, and recruiting and retention problems in our military.

I thank the Majority Leader, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee and his staff and the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee and his staff, for working with me to provide the additional $4.0 billion in much-needed funding for the Department of Defense, the reserve for military retiree healthcare, and the important language necessary to allow the military thrift savings plan to become a reality. I also recognize members of my own committee staff—Les Brownlee, Staff Director, Judy Ansley, our Deputy Staff Director, and especially Larry Lanzillotta, our Budget Chief—whose expertise in budgeting matters is invaluable not only to the Armed Services Committee, but to the entire Senate as well.

The funds which have been added in this Budget Resolution for defense are absolutely critical in providing readiness, modernization funding, and the personnel incentives necessary to reverse the negative trends in recruiting and retention. The increase of $4.0 billion will allow us to bring defense spending to a more appropriate level and address some of the urgent unfunded requirements of the military chiefs. For too many years, the size of our defense budget has been based on constrained funding, not on the threats facing our country or the military strategy necessary to meet those threats. This budget will go a long way in allowing us to ensure the safety and security of our people by maintaining a strong and capable military.

Making the Thrift Savings Plan available to military personnel comes at a critical time for the military services. Participation in a thrift savings account will encourage personal savings and enhance the retirement income for service members, who currently do not have access to a 401(k) savings plan. When the TSP program is implemented, military personnel will be able to join federal workers in a savings program that will enhance the value of their retirement system and permit them to improve their quality of life. The Service Chiefs have indicated that this plan, combined with the pay raise, the repeal of the Redux retirement system, and the increased bonuses in the FY 2000 Defense Authorization Act, will reduce the hemorrhage of trained and experienced military personnel we are now experiencing.

The Secretary of Defense, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs, and the Service Chiefs have all said that fulfilling our commitment for healthcare to our military retirees should be among the highest priorities for this year. I believe there is overwhelming support in the Senate to correct many of the shortfalls in the military healthcare system for our service members, their families, and our military retirees. It is critical that we enact the important initiatives contained in the bipartisan healthcare legislation introduced by the leadership of the Senate and the leadership of the Armed Services Committee earlier this year. This budget resolution makes it possible to fund these important health care initiatives for our military retirees.

I want to again express my appreciation to the distinguished Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Senator STEVENS, and the Chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, and also their highly professional staff members for assisting us in securing these much-needed funds in support of a stronger national defense.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, once again, I am trying hard to accommodate Senators. I will not use more of our time if they want to give back. I have one Senator who has not spoken. I yield 5 minutes to Senator SNOWE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in support of the conference report on the fiscal year 2001 budget resolution and to highlight a reserve fund that Senator DOMENICI has been referring to with respect to a new prescription drug benefit.

In advance, I would like to thank the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee for his unwavering commitment to a balanced budget and fiscally responsible decisionmaking over the years. Thanks to his leadership and efforts, the turbulent waves of annual deficits and mounting debt have certainly been calmed. And if we adhere to the principles as contained in this year's budget resolution, and retain these principles in the years to come, clearly, we will have provided security for many generations.

The conference report we are now considering not only maintains fiscal discipline but it also ensures that critical priorities are protected in fiscal year 2001 and beyond, which is the purpose of the balanced budget: to be able to provide a constraint on Federal spending but at the same time determine how best to invest in the future.

I commend the chairman of the Budget Committee for having taken the step last year to protect every dollar that belongs to the Social Security trust fund and devoting it solely to reducing the publicly held debt. Ultimately, this commitment and this conference report will ensure that we reduce the publicly-held debt by approximately $1 trillion over the next 5 years and eliminate it entirely by the year 2013. Clearly, it is a paradigm shift, not only with respect to the fact we are no longer using surpluses that belong to Social Security, but also the fact that we are able to reduce the publicly held debt and make a commitment to protecting Social Security.

The second issue in this budget that is critically important is that we are making investments where we should be making investments for the future—in education, health care, child care, and defense. In addition, this budget provides modest tax relief. The American people do deserve tax relief, given the burdens they have faced over the years to achieve debt reduction, and the constraints we have had to adhere to over this last decade. Certainly they deserve to have a piece of that pie through the elimination of the marriage tax penalty, through a deduction for college tuition expenses and a credit for the interest paid on student loans. Those are the priorities that could be accommodated in this conference report that the American people deserve. I think they are the right priorities.

Third, as the chairman of the committee has indicated, we have now included and have taken a giant step forward in ensuring our Nation's seniors have a prescription drug benefit program. Senator WYDEN, Senator SMITH, and I offered an amendment in the committee that would have laid out a bifurcated approach that would provide a down-payment of $20 billion for a new benefit in the first 3 years, and $20 billion in years 2004 and 2005 contingent on Congress moving forward on Medicare reform. Of importance, the initial down-payment of $20 billion would allow us to move forward in creating a new benefit this year with or without Medicare reform—and that structure has been retained in this conference report.

We also included a date certain by which the Senate Finance Committee would be required to report a new prescription drug benefit bill. If that date was not met, we would be able to proceed with the stand-alone prescription drug benefit on the floor. That time certain was dropped.

But the fact of the matter is, the conference report retains the reserve fund language, and we still have the ability to create a stand-alone prescription drug benefit this year. As a result, the Senate Finance Committee still has $20 billion available to develop a prescription drug benefit program for our Nation's seniors that is not contingent on Medicare reform or other legislation—and an additional $20 billion will be made available if they proceed with broader Medicare reform.

Accordingly, I thank Chairman DOMENICI for his efforts in ensuring that provision would be included in the conference report. The significance of it is twofold. One is that we have $20 billion that would be immediately available for such a benefit. As a result, this reserve fund gives us the opening we need to consider and pass a prescription drug benefit program this year. Furthermore, it not only provides a downpayment for such a benefit over the next 5 years, but it also provides an additional $20 billion if we move forward reach a consensus on Medicare reform. This total allotment of $40 billion over the coming five years is more than was contained in the Chairman's mark, and even more than was provided in the President's own budget proposal for a prescription drug benefit.

There are no caveats, there are no conditions. The Senate Finance Committee has the ability to proceed with a comprehensive Medicare reform package. But in the event they cannot grapple with this issue, if they fail to reach a consensus and Congress fails to reach a consensus, we can proceed and enact a prescription drug benefit program.

So the overall structure of this fund is the same as it was when we offered it as an amendment during the markup, as it was supported unanimously by Republicans and Democrats on the Budget Committee. As a result, it provides the Finance Committee with both the means and the motivation to act on this legislation in a timely manner.

In conclusion, I again applaud the efforts of the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, for preserving the essential structure of this reserve fund which enables the Senate and the Congress to create a prescription drug benefit in a timely fashion. I congratulate him because this is a significant step forward and gives us the opportunity, for the first time in a very long time, to enact this very significant and critical benefit for our Nation's seniors.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I will propound a unanimous consent request. It is cleared on the other side.

I ask unanimous consent vote on adoption of the budget conference report occur no later than 6:30 p.m. this evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair and Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I conclude my remarks, regretfully noting we are leaving without passing the juvenile justice bill conference report, without adopting sensible gun control legislation, missing the opportunity, I think, to do what the American people want us to do.

I have long been a supporter of effective gun controls, working hard for the Brady bill and for the assault weapons ban while I was in the other body. But I have been galvanized to an even more concerted effort by an event that took place very recently in Providence. This, I think, is an example of the gun violence we face.

Two young men were horsing around wrestling. One got offended by the other one. Unfortunately, this happened in a neighborhood, like so many neighborhoods, where it is easier to get a gun than it is to get a library book. Someone in the crowd had a handgun. In an act of absolute recklessness, one young man fired at the other young man, critically wounding him in the head. That young man, the shooter, was so distraught that he rushed off and took his own life. That is the face of gun violence in too many places in America today.

We can do something about it. We should do something about it. We should not leave until we do something about it. Regretfully, we are leaving but we are coming back, I hope, with a renewed commitment to ensure we will, in fact, pass the provisions in the juvenile justice committee report.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from New Jersey, who has particularly championed the legislation to close the gun show loophole.

I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Rhode Island for the work he has done on trying to limit the damage from gun violence in this country. He reminded us it is time. We are days away from April 20, the anniversary of the terrible tragedy at Columbine. We are days away. That means in this full year that passed, we could not find time to get on with doing our best to control gun violence by examining what the possibilities are, by closing the gun show loophole, by making sure those who are going to apply for gun ownership were fit to do it.

Here is a picture of a fellow who is on the FBI Ten Most Wanted Fugitives list. He could walk up to an unlicensed dealer in a gun show and purchase all the guns the money in his pocket can buy. We ought not permit that. The American people do not want us to permit that.

Mr. President, we are closing the debate now. I congratulate my friend and colleague from New Mexico for his ardent work on getting this done. They have a majority, and the one thing we know about our democratic system is if a majority has been sent here by the American people, we have to acknowledge that, and they have the choice of a majority. I wish we had the majority, and we would be kinder and gentler, although I am not sure everybody would agree with that.

That is the die as it was cast. It was cast by a majority. In the process, I see substantial loopholes in this budget conference report. It proposes deep cuts in programs such as education and health care, law enforcement, veterans benefits, and environmental protection. Also, based on just the most simple arithmetic, it is going to raid the Social Security surplus, regarding which so many of us have taken an oath: Touch not a hair on yon gray Social Security head. Here we are, preparing to violate it, even as we present a program for the fiscal year 2001.

They did purport—and I am not talking about as a deception; I am talking about it as an analysis of the arithmetic, the mathematics as it is there—that prescription drugs were going to be taken care of.

I read from the conference committee report under the heading of prescription drugs. It says: Whenever the Committee on Finance in the Senate reports a bill, a joint resolution or conference report thereon submitted which improves access to prescription drugs for Medicare beneficiaries. It does not say we are going to develop a program that is going to make prescription drugs more available, cheaper, et cetera. It does not talk about that. It says access. Maybe it means the Government is going to produce lists of places where one can buy drugs off the Internet cheaper. Maybe access means if you visit country X, Y, or Z, you will be able to buy prescription drugs cheaper.

Access is a broad term. It does not say anything about having to get it done, but it does say in the tax section that the Finance Committee must reconcile. That means they have to produce a sufficient amount of funding for tax breaks for whomever it affects, and this is going to be principally the wealthy.

We leave the prescription drug section and go to the Medicare reform on page 48. It says: Whenever the Committee on Finance in the Senate—they are the people who can do it; we cannot do it in the Budget Committee—whenever the Finance Committee reports a bill, joint resolution, or conference report thereon submitted which improves the solvency of the Medicare program without the use of new subsidies from the general fund—to me that says we are going to dip into the Medicare trust fund in order to reform Medicare.

If that is reform, Heaven protect us, keep us from the kind of reform that says we will have to take funds from cuts in the Medicare trust fund.

Mr. President, in conclusion, this is my last attempt to work on the Federal budget. As disappointed as I am with the outcome, I am pleased to say I very comfortably and very forthrightly worked with Senator DOMENICI. He is a distinguished Senator. He knows his subjects, oh, so well. I will miss the chance for the fray, but also the chance for the pleasant contact we have had through this experience.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield back his time?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I yield back my time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am going to respond to the Senator for 1 minute, and then I will have remarks about the Senator from New Jersey and our relationship.

I say to the distinguished Senator who spoke about the National Institutes of Health and what we are going to do and not going to do, everybody should know when and by whom the NIH increased in the most dramatic manner in its history.

In the last 3 years, when Republicans controlled both Houses, we increased the National Institutes of Health—cancer, AIDS, all those diseases—let me give the numbers to my colleagues. Since 1998, NIH has increased 40 percent: In 1998, $13.7 billion; in 1999, it was $15.6 billion. That is a 14-percent increase. In 2000, it went up 13.8 percent, one of the largest domestic program increases in this whole budget. In 2001, this conference report, NIH funding is going to $19.3 billion. That is an increase of 8 percent. We are doing pretty well trying to find cures for serious ailments, thanks to the Republicans who in conference and elsewhere pushed so hard for it.

I ask that it be in order to ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, when Senator LAUTENBERG of New Jersey came to this committee, I do not know if he was like me, but I never thought I would be ranking member, much less chairman. I am not sure he had a plan to be ranking member, especially when he had to put up with me.

It has been not only a joy, in terms of getting our committee work done, but it has been healthy from the standpoint of adversaries who believe strongly about their position but understand the other fellow can have a different opinion and it is all right, they are OK. That is how I feel about him. He has different views than I, but he brought a lot of stability to this committee. The minority ought to be very grateful for the way he handled matters. They all had a chance to contribute.

Today is his last effort on the floor of the Senate as ranking member. I thank him. I hope the whole Senate understands what he has done.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, if I may take 1 minute from the time remaining of the Senator from Rhode Island. I yielded back all my time.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD documents prepared by OMB that explain the impact as they see it.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POTENTIAL IMPACT IN FY 2001 OF THE BUDGET RESOLUTION CONFERENCE REPORT

The following programmatic impact statements illustrate reductions (by function) to the FY 2001 Budget request contained in the Budget Resolution Conference Report.

EDUCATION, TRAINING, EMPLOYMENT, AND SOCIAL SERVICES

Class Size. The Conference Report appears to freeze the Class Size Reduction program at the FY 2000 level and would therefore prevent the hiring of the third group of teachers meant to reduce class size in grades 1–3, to a nationwide average of 18 students per class. Twenty thousand new teachers could not be hired.

21st Century Community Learning Centers. The Conference Report could cut $547 million from the President's request, denying approximately 1.6 million school age children in over 6,000 new centers access to before- and after-school and summer programs in safe, drug-free environments.

School Construction. The Budget Resolution Conference Report could eliminate $1.3 billion in loan subsidies and grants to repair 5,000 public schools.

Small, safe, and drug-free schools. The Conference Report could prevent 400 additional high schools from developing schools-within-schools and career academies that could create smaller, safer learning environments for students. It could also severely compromise the President's proposed 40-community expansion of the popular interagency Safe Schools/Healthy Students initiative, which supports comprehensive, community-wide approaches to drug and violence prevention, and eliminate Project SERV, an initiative to provide emergency assistance to schools affected by serious violence or other traumatic incidents.

Funding for the Dislocated Worker program would be cut by about $213 million, denying training, job search assistance, and support services to approximately 118,000 dislocated workers.

Adult training services for over 45,000 of the 380,000 adults who would otherwise be served in FY 2000 would be eliminated.

Funding for the Youth Activities Formula Grant program would be cut by about $123 million, denying 73,000 low-income youth summer jobs and training opportunities.

The Community Service Employment for Older Americans program would be cut by about $57 million. About 12,000 low-income older Americans would lose their part-time jobs.

The budget resolution would cut the Job Corps program by $163 million—preventing Job Corps from opening the final two centers of the recent four center expansion and possibly resulting in the closure of 8–11 additional Job Corps Centers, denying job training opportunities to over 5,000 disadvantaged youth.

Funding for the Youth Opportunity Grants program would be cut by $45 million, denying over 10,000 youth in high-poverty communities access to education, training, and employment assistance.

A $845 million cut to the President's request would force Head Start to provide services to approximately 70,000 fewer children in FY 2001 than would otherwise be served.

The 12-percent cut to the Administration on Aging assumed in the Budget Resolution would result in 20 million fewer home-delivered meals to ill and disabled seniors than would otherwise be served.

COMMUNITY AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

The final Budget Resolution reduces funding for Community and Regional Development below last year's level and is a decrease of approximately $3 billion from the President's budget. Given the competing demands within this program category, this funding level would almost certainly result in no increase in the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program, and would probably end up reducing CDBG funding by eight percent below the President's budget level. This would reduce local communities support of housing activities, including a loss of more than 28,000 people from benefiting from programs providing housing rehabilitation, construction, and homebuyer assistance, and 6,900 fewer jobs being created using CDBG assistance for economic development. The resolution funding level would seriously impair the ability of the New Markets initiatives to provide businesses with funding and assistance, which they would use to invest in low income neighborhoods around the country.

The Conference Report's funding level would seriously impair the ability of the New Markets initiatives to provide businesses with funding and assistance, which they would use to invest in low-income neighborhoods around the country.

FEMA Emergency Funding. Contingent emergency appropriations provide a means to make emergency disaster response funding available to handle the disaster activity that is expected to occur, based on recent experience. By stripping out contingent emergency funding from the President's budget request, the Budget Resolution makes it more difficult for the President to release appropriate funding as quickly as possible to enable Federal agencies to respond rapidly when a disaster strikes. Postponing consideration of contingent emergency appropriations until disasters strike could lead to circumstances in which disaster victims are left without shelter and communities are left without critical clean up and rebuilding assistance for days, weeks, and sometimes even months.

Super-Majority for FEMA Emergencies. Requiring a super-majority of the Senate for an emergency appropriation would make it much more difficult for the Federal Government to respond quickly and appropriately to disasters. A super-majority requirement could lead to some circumstances in which disaster victims are left without Federal disaster assistance for lengthy periods—and perhaps even some cases in which disaster victims will not receive the assistance they need.

INCOME SECURITY

The Budget Resolution explicitly states its intention to provide funding for the renewal of all expiring Section 8 housing contracts. However, the large and competing demands on Income Security activities assumed in the Budget Resolution indicate that full renewal funding cannot be achieved within the resolution's functional total. As a result, the resolution would necessitate significant cuts in housing renewals from the President's request of $13 billion. The resolution would also eliminate the Administration's efforts to assist more needy families with 120,000 new incremental housing vouchers. The deletion of new housing assistance would come at a time when a record 5.4 million low-income households in this country have worst-case housing needs—defined as spending over 50 percent of their income in rent or living in substandard housing.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

International Organizations and Peacekeeping Accounts. A 17-percent reduction to funds for the international organizations and peacekeeping accounts would prevent the United States from making its full assessed payments to the UN and other international organizations that directly promote vital U.S. interests. This would substantially increase U.S. arrears to the UN and jeopardize the negotiations for reforms that would lead to the payment of approximately $800 million in arrears. This cut would also cripple continuing and critical new peacekeeping missions seeking to redress the instability and suffering caused by conflicts in East Timor, Kosovo, and Africa.

African Development Foundation (ADF) and Inter-American Foundation (IAF). The abolition of ADF and IAF would eliminate the only U.S. Government institutions that work exclusively with local, grassroots organizations in Africa and Latin America to expand economic opportunities and develop basic democratic values and institutions.

SCIENCE AND SPACE

Reduced Support for Basic Research. A reduction of about $365 million to NSF would result in almost 14,000 fewer researchers, educators, and students receiving NSF support—affecting the high-tech workforce and well-trained students needed for the Nation's future. A reduction of this magnitude would result in over 3,000 fewer awards for state-of-the-art research and education activities.

NATURAL RESOURCES

The Budget Resolution would cut farm loan programs at the USDA, resulting in 800 fewer loans to American farmers and ranchers.

EPA's Superfund program would be cut by $69 million. This would eliminate funding for all 15 new federally-led cleanups and five ongoing federally-led cleanups in FY 2001, needlessly jeopardizing public health for citizens living near affected sites and making it more difficult to meet the 900-site cleanup goal in 2002.

The cut to EPA's Enforcement Program assumed by the Budget Resolution would significantly hamper the environmental cop on the beat, jeopardizing our ability to assure adequate protection of public health and the environment. Nearly, 1,000 fewer inspections could contribute to a higher non-compliance rate and an increase in pollution.

The reduction assumed by the Budget Resolution to the Children's Health Initiative would impair efforts to train health care workers on the environmental control of asthma; limit outreach programs to children, parents, and care-givers on avoidance of second-hand smoke and other indoor allergens; and, hinder critical research into the role that pesticides and chemicals may play in the onset of asthma. In addition, EPA's lead program, which focuses on enforcing lead regulations and community-based programs that are aimed at reducing children's exposure to lead, would be curtailed.

The Budget Resolution reduces most Interior Department and Forest Service programs by six percent below the President's request. Such a reduction would hinder Wildland fire suppression and protection programs, delay or limit the construction and rehabilitation of needed visitor facilities, and diminish the ability to oversee coalmining operations and the ability to assist States and Tribes in cleanup of almost 9,000 acres of abandoned mine lands.

HEALTH

Funding for the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) could be cut by over $191 million. Such a reduction would result in extended product review times for new vaccines, new food additives, and complex emerging medical technology, making it difficult for the FDA to meet congressionally-mandated performance levels. This reduction would also impede FDA's efforts to ensure the safety of the Nation's food supply and would strain the agency's ability to respond to outbreaks of food borne illness.

Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration funding would be reduced by $305 million, which would deny treatment to roughly 66,000 people who receive mental health and substance abuse services.

TRANSPORTATION

A reduction of four percent, or $21 million, below the President's request of $521 million for Amtrak would jeopardize Amtrak's ability to achieve self-sufficiency. The recently announced route expansions would be postponed, and the frequency and level of service on Amtrak's remaining trains reduced. This will further reduce revenues, leading to additional service reductions.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

The Budget Resolution rejects the President's $1.335 billion request for the 21st Century Policing Initiative (COPS). It does not appear to provide any funds for the hiring of additional police officers, or for community crime prevention programs, and it is well below the President's request for law enforcement technology and gun prosecution. Without continued funding for the COPS hiring program, it will be impossible to meet the President's goal of funding up to 150,000 additional officers by 2005.

GENERAL GOVERNMENT

IRS. The Budget Resolution assumes cuts in the IRS's resources by $1.2 billion below the President's Budget—nearly $0.8 billion below the level needed to maintain current operations. The IRS would lose 12,000 workers needed to provide service to taxpayers and to ensure that the tax laws are enforced fairly. IRS modernization efforts mandated by the 1998 Restructuring and Reform Act would be halted. Instead of the improvements in performance proposed in the President's budget, audit rates—which have already fallen by half over the past decade—would drop to unacceptable levels. Taxpayers would face greater frustration, and the Treasury would lose billions of dollars in enforcement revenue. Such a dramatic cut in both compliance efforts and taxpayer service would put at risk the voluntary compliance system, which collects over $1.7 trillion in revenue each year.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I thank Senator DOMENICI. I thank staff in the person of Bill Hoagland and Bruce King on my side.

I yield the floor.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) is necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?—

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 48, as follows:

[Rollcall Vote No. 85 Leg.]

NOT VOTING—2

Moynihan	Roth

The conference report was agreed to.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, and the ranking member, Senator LAUTENBERG, for their work on the budget resolution, and for the way they have handled it throughout the process.

CRIME VICTIMS RIGHTS

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to S.J. Res. 3, regarding the rights of crime victims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LEAHY. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. President, I notice that the adjournment order has already been adopted. Respectfully, I do not believe that there is any intention of completing this matter today, tomorrow, or even next week. We have just barely filed a committee report.

This is a constitutional amendment. I think we ought, at least, to make sure Senators know that this is going to be the next matter coming up and that they have a chance to consider the report and the proposal. A constitutional amendment should not be rushed through this way, with all due respect. So I will object.

I will be happy to work with the distinguished majority leader, who has the added problems of having to make sure that the Senate does its work at the appropriate time. I will be happy to work with him on schedules and everything else on this, but because it is a constitutional amendment, I think we should treat it with more care and not just zing it off like this. We should have a real debate. I am not going to stop it from coming forward. I only want to make sure that everyone knows about it, that everyone has a chance to debate it and that everyone has the opportunity to offer amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES TO PROTECT THE RIGHTS OF CRIME VICTIMS—MOTION TO PROCEED

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I move to proceed to S.J. Res. 3 and send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to Calendar No. 299, S.J. Res. 3, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims:

Trent Lott, Jon Kyl, Judd Gregg, Wayne Allard, Robert Smith of New Hampshire, Richard Shelby, Gordon Smith of Oregon, Bill Frist, Mike DeWine, Ben Nighthorse Campbell, Jim Bunning, Chuck Grassley, Rod Grams, Connie Mack, Craig Thomas, and Jesse Helms.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, this cloture vote will occur on the motion to proceed on Tuesday, April 25.

I ask unanimous consent that the vote occur at 2:15 p.m. and that the mandatory quorum under rule XXII be waived, and I withdraw the motion to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, negotiations are still ongoing with respect to the pending marriage tax penalty legislation. However, a resolution to the issue has not been worked out yet. It looks as if we are not going to be able to get it before the recess.

I call for the regular order with respect to H.R. 6 and send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on the pending amendment to Calendar No. 437, H.R. 6, the Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act of 2000:

Trent Lott, Kay Bailey Hutchison, Tim Hutchinson, Chuck Hagel, Larry E. Craig, Phil Gramm, Jesse Helms, Strom Thurmond, Rod Grams, Sam Brownback, Pat Roberts, Judd Gregg, Wayne Allard, Richard Shelby, Gordon Smith of Oregon, and Bill Frist.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this cloture vote occur immediately following the vote scheduled at 12:15 on Tuesday, April 25, and the mandatory quorum under rule XXII be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, the vote will occur at approximately 2:25 p.m., or after the 2:15 vote.

On Tuesday, it is my hope that Members will allow me to vitiate the cloture vote and enter into a reasonable agreement that would allow swifter passage of the bill. Of course, I would like to continue to see if we can get agreement on alternatives or relevant amendments.

On yesterday, part of our problem in getting an agreement worked out was we didn't get the chance to even look at the amendments before the end of the day. But I am still hopeful we are going to be able to come up with something that would allow us to get an agreement and vitiate this cloture vote.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE GAS TAX

Mr. REID. Mr. President, before the majority leader leaves, I say respectfully that we appreciate his efforts to try to move legislation along. But I just want to make sure the record is clear. We were generous in offering the majority the opportunity to review our amendments. There is no requirement, of course, that we do so.

I also say to the leader that I think if we had started the marriage penalty legislation Monday or Tuesday of this week, we would be finished with it by now.

There may have been a lot of amendments offered, but the way we used to do things around here, we had lots and lots of amendments. In fact, there were a number of occasions when we had well over 100 amendments without any restriction of who offered them or what the subject matter was. And we completed the legislation.

I believe and predict if we go right to work on the marriage penalty legislation on the Tuesday when we return, we will complete it within 2 or 3 days, at the very most; maybe even in 2 days.

I think the majority leader should allow us—I say this not in a pejorative way; we don't need to be allowed in the true sense of the word—to have the Senate work its will the way we have done it for a couple hundred years. I think he would be surprised at how much legislation we could move.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, it is my hope that over the next week or early the next week, I will be able to propose a list of amendments. I suggest that would be kind of in the realm of what we can agree to.

We have been looking at these various amendments. Some of them are clearly not going to be acceptable, and they probably could be easily tabled. Even though they are not relevant, some of them are meritorious. Our concern is, they have not been considered by the appropriate committee, whether it is Finance, or Agriculture. We are hesitant to have a vote on these and try to get Members to vote against them when, in fact, they may eventually want to be for them in a different forum.

I have an idea of how we might be able to work something out on this. I will have a suggestion on that before we come back a week from Tuesday.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I say to my friend I very much appreciate that. But I remind the Senator that the underlying bill skipped the committee process and came directly to the floor. I believe we should do as much as we can in the committee process. But the bill before us didn't get a vote in committee.

Mr. LOTT. The marriage tax penalty bill was considered by the Finance Committee, and we had amendments, including an alternative that was offered and seriously considered. The Moynihan alternative amendment has a lot of credibility to it.

Mr. REID. I apologize to the Senator. Maybe he didn't understand me. I didn't speak properly. What I should have said is, the legislation we spent a lot of time on this week—namely, the gas tax proposal—avoided the committee process.

Mr. LOTT. You are right on that one, and it didn't pass either.

I yield the floor.

WORST TERRORIST ACT

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, in December 1988, a few days before Christmas, a terrorist bomb exploded on Pan Am flight #103 over Scotland. 270 people died—murdered is the more fitting word—including 189 Americans. It was one of the worst terrorist attacks in history.

Next month, two Libyan suspects are scheduled to go on trial in the Netherlands for the bombing. These two Libyans are believed to have planted the bomb, but there is widespread belief that the Libyan government ordered the attack.

Though the United Nations has suspended sanctions on Libya since Qadhafi saw fit to turn over the two suspects in the Pan Am 103 bombing, Libya has by no means been restored to the status of a civilized nation. Libya is a rogue nation that has been an avowed enemy of the United States for three decades. (''The time has come for us to deal America a strong slap on it's cool arrogant face,'' Qadhafi said in 1973—at the same time he ''nationalized'' all foreign oil concessions in his country. ''Nationalized'' in this instance is a dressed-up word for outright thievery.)

So it is Qadhafi's regime that stands accused of the deliberate murder of American servicemen in the 1986 La Belle discotheque bombing. The same regime whose top officials have been convicted, in absentia, by French courts for bombing a French jetliner, killing 171 people, including seven Americans. The same regime that ordered the murder of 189 Americans on Pan Am Flight 103—Americans from 22 states: New York, New Jersey, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Vermont, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Maryland, North Dakota, California, New Hampshire, Colorado, West Virginia, Texas, Florida, Virginia, Kansas, Arkansas, Rhode Island, and Washington D.C. Nearly half of America's states lost one or more residents to the Libyan terrorists in that 1988 bombing of Pan Am 103 over Scotland.

The mothers and fathers, husbands and wives, and all those children of the Pan Am 103 victims will never forget the horror but, unfortunately, the U.S. foreign policy establishment appears less concerned with that history, hence the recent U.S. decision to ''review'' the ban on American citizens' travel to Libya.

Mr. President, this resolution should remind the Administration of the heinous crimes committed by the Libyan regime. It identifies Libya's continued refusal to accept responsibility for its role in these acts. It calls on President Clinton to consult with Congress on policy toward Libya—consultations that would include disclosing United Nations documents containing assurances to the Qadhafi regime that it would not be destabilized as a result of the trial in The Hague.

Most importantly, this resolution would emphasize the Sense of the Senate that all U.S. restrictions on Libya, including the travel ban, should remain in place until all cases of Libyan terrorism against Americans have been resolved, and until the Libyan government cooperates in bringing the murderers to justice.

A clear signal is needed to Qadhafi, and, apparently, to the Clinton Administration—that the United States will not stand idly by when our citizens are murdered.

If and when Libya apologizes and begins to make amends to all Americans, then perhaps there can be talks. Not before.

THE NEED FOR FUNDAMENTAL TAX REFORM

Mr. GORTON. Every April, Americans are reintroduced to the beauty of Spring by blooming tulips, green lawns, and the 5.5 million word federal income tax code.

As every citizen wrestles with the complexity and incomprehensibility of the mammoth tax code to file his or her return by the April 15th (April 17th this year) annual deadline, there is virtually universal agreement that change is desperately needed. I believe that amending the tax code is not enough. I believe that we must scrap the entire tax code—it is too complicated, too burdensome, too unfair.

How complicated is the tax code? Here are some illustrative facts and figures. The current federal income tax system was born in 1913 as a law under 100 pages in length. The original 1040 form covered two pages, front and back. This included instructions. Today, the 1040 form has 76 pages of instructions alone. The most basic tax form today, the EZ1040, has 33 pages of instructions.

The annotated tax code fills 14 volumes of some 11,700 pages, and it takes an additional 19 volumes totaling another almost 11,750 pages to contain the regulations governing the code. To implement the code, the Internal Revenue Service prints over 400 forms and more than 100 pamphlets with instructions on how to complete these forms.

We need to focus our attention in Congress on developing a new tax system, and we need the President to support changing the current tax code, instead of defending it from reform. Fundamental reform of the tax code is my number one tax priority and I believe a new federal tax system must be based on four principles: fairness, simplicity, uniformity and consistency.

My support for tax reform should not be interpreted as opposition to providing tax relief to American families and working individuals who are sending more of their paycheck to the federal government in taxes than at almost any point in our nation's history. I absolutely support allowing people to keep more of the money they earned, and am pleased that the budget resolution adopted by Congress allows for a responsible reduction in taxes of $150 billion over the next 5 years, rather than the $13 billion tax increase for next year that the Clinton-Gore Administration proposed in their budget. The budget plan will allow Congress to consider several tax relief measures that not only reduce the tax burden on Americans, but also make the tax code simpler and more fair.

Congress has already passed legislation to repeal the Social Security Earnings Limit that penalized working seniors one dollar of Social Security benefits for every $3 they earn over the limit of $17,000. Congress is engaged in a debate to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. Eliminating the estate, or death, tax is not only a priority of mine and many in Congress, it is a priority for small business owners and family farmers whose very existence is threatened by this disgraceful tax.

Americans deserve a tax code they can understand and predict. About the only thing Americans can predict about the current tax code is that every April they will likely be sending a big check off to Uncle Sam, and about the only thing they understand is that the IRS will find them if they do not. This must change and it is why I am working for a new tax system that is fair, simple, uniform and consistent. A new code based on these four principles will free Americans from suffering through the forms and tax tables of April tax season, and allow them to enjoy the blossoms and sunshine of the April Spring season.

SOUTHEASTERN EUROPE: OBSERVATIONS AND OUTLOOK

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, when the bombing ceased, and Serbian military forces withdrew from the Kosovo province, most Americans believed that the end of the air war meant the end of the United States' involvement in the Balkans. Such a misconception is due primarily to the fact that the political and military situation in the Balkans, as well as U.S. foreign policy towards the region, remains largely unknown to the vast majority of Americans.

Because of my belief that the Balkan region is key to our strategic interests in Europe, earlier this year, I traveled to the Republic of Croatia, the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, Kosovo and Brussels, Belgium in order to examine the humanitarian, economic, political and security situation in Southeastern Europe. Today, I would like to take this opportunity to share some of my observations with my colleagues and the American people.

Before I proceed further, I would like to publicly thank U.S. Ambassador to Croatia, William Montgomery, U.S. Ambassador to Macedonia, Michael Einik, Chief of the U.S. Mission to Kosovo, Larry Rossin, U.S. Ambassador to NATO, Sandy Vershbow and U.S. Ambassador to the EU, Richard Morningstar. They are fine representatives of our nation, and they are doing an outstanding job to help bring peace and stability to this sensitive part of the world.

I would also like to thank our U.S. embassy staff in Croatia, Macedonia, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) and the European Union (EU). In addition, I would like to thank the personnel who comprise the U.S. Mission in Kosovo, the Department of State, the Department of Defense, and the U.S. Army—especially Colonel Timothy Peterson, who accompanied me on this trip and also provided his valuable insight and expertise on the region.

I would further like to thank Senator FRED THOMPSON, my chairman on the Governmental Affairs Committee, for giving me the opportunity and the Committee authorization to take this trip.

Finally, I would like to thank our men and women in uniform who provided such invaluable assistance during my travels in the region. They have my gratitude, and I believe the gratitude of our nation should go out to our peacekeeping force in Kosovo. We have a tremendous team working on our behalf in the region, and all Americans should be proud of their tireless efforts to help promote peace and protect the interests of the United States in southeastern Europe.

Mr. President, one of the more encouraging developments I observed in my trip to the Balkans was a new positive spirit that seems to be emerging in a number of nations in the region.

In my visit to Croatia, I had the opportunity to meet with the newly-elected president of Croatia, Stipe Mesic.

President Mesic is a bright, engaging, well-spoken gentleman with a tremendous understanding of the varied and complex issues facing his country. More importantly, he has a clear concept—supported by his electorate—of the direction his country should take for the future.

President Mesic is pleased that the region finally seems to have abandoned the two terrible ideas that have caused so much bloodshed over the last decade—the dream of a ''Greater Serbia'' and the dream of a ''Greater Croatia.'' In an indication of his commitment to ending these disastrous notions, he expressed to me his support for sending individuals responsible for war crimes that have taken place over the last decade to the International Criminal Tribunal for prosecution.

He is also committed to fully returning to Croatia those refugees who were displaced after conflict swept the nation in the 1990's. He understands that a functional economy, the establishment of private property rights and the rule of law are key to the return of these refugees.

President Mesic appeared to understand that the future of southeastern Europe is linked to minority rights and that redrawing international boundaries along ethnic lines is fundamentally unworkable—we need only witness the ongoing debacle in Bosnia for such an example. With this realization on the need to consider minority rights, he plans on appealing to the best instincts in his people to put aside ethnic hatred, so that they and their nation may move ahead. He has stated that he looks forward to serving as the President of all of the Croatian people, regardless of their ethnicity. If lines are not going to be redrawn, then a major hurdle to domestic peace in Croatia will have been removed.

It is my understanding that Prime Minister Racan, who I did not have the opportunity to meet since he was out of the country during my visit, seems committed to these principles as well. I'm also encouraged that Parliamentary President Zlatko Tomcic, Deputy Parliamentary President Zdravko Tomac, Serbian Member of Parliament Milan Djukic and Serbian Democratic Forum President Veljko Dzakula—all of whom I met in Croatia—appear to be supportive.

I was also pleased to meet with Macedonia's President Boris Trajkovski, the Macedonian Prime Minister, Ljubco Georgievski, and Arben Xhaferi, the leader of Macedonia's ethnic Albanian community. They seem to have been able to successfully bridge the domestic ethnic problems that have been at the heart of the various conflicts that have decimated southeastern Europe over the last ten years.

As many of my colleagues may recall, Macedonia was seen as another potential flashpoint during the course of the Kosovo bombing campaign as the Macedonian people became polarized either in favor, or against, NATO's actions. This possibility seems to have been successfully averted because Macedonians do not generally possess the same kind of ethnic hatreds towards their minority community that have plagued other nations in the region.

Domestic peace and stability has been achieved in Macedonia by appealing to the best instincts in people, rather than the worst. The elected leadership has made it clear that the ethnic Albanian community, which makes up roughly 25% to 30% of the population, is an integral and respected component of society. Because of this, minority rights are, by and large, protected, and the rule of law is, for the most part, very well respected. The importance of these trends cannot be understated.

I was particularly interested to hear President Trajkovski discuss the amazing recovery of Macedonia's economy. When the nation separated from the FRY in 1991, Macedonia's per capita income immediately started sliding downward, dropping 40 percent. This decline was clearly exacerbated by the Kosovo bombing campaign.

Nevertheless, in recent months, the economy has staged a dramatic turnaround because of stable and progressive leadership, market reforms and economic activity as a result of Macedonia's serving as a staging point for KFOR. Macedonia is beginning the slow process of returning to its pre-independence level of economic activity. More importantly, the EU, as a part of its new focus on the Balkans region, has established a relationship with Macedonia intended to lead to its eventual membership in the European Union, a commitment that had never been made before the Kosovo war. Given my belief that integration of the nations of the region into the broader European community is essential to long-term peace and stability, this is a dramatic development.

At the headquarters of the United Nations Mission in Kosovo (UNMIK) in Pristina, Kosovo, I had the opportunity to sit down and meet with several key leaders of the Kosovo Albanian community and representatives on the Interim Administrative Council—Dr. Ibrahim Rugova, Mr. Hashim Thaci and Dr. Rexhep Qosja. This was an extraordinary meeting given the historical animosity between these leaders.

All three leaders made a very clear promise to me that they were committed to a multi-ethnic, democratic Kosovo, one that would respect the rights of all ethnic minorities. I was heartened to hear these comments. This commitment could serve as the basis for long-term peace and stability in Kosovo.

In response, I said that they could go down in history as truly great men were they to make this commitment a reality. I explained that the historic cycle of revenge in Kosovo must end and minority rights must be respected—including the sanctity of churches and monasteries. This would be the key to the future of Kosovo.

I traveled to Brussels to make my feelings known to the leadership of the European Union (EU) regarding their lack of leadership and commitment to the problems facing southeastern Europe. I met with U.S. Ambassador to the EU, Richard Morningstar and U.S. Ambassador to NATO, Alexander Vershbow and with other leaders of NATO and the EU. I was pleasantly surprised to learn that the Europeans basically ''get it.'' That is, they understand that unless the Balkan region is fully integrated into the broader European community, the region will ''Balkanize Europe.'' This is the same message I have been saying for months. I was pleased to see the Europeans taking the necessary steps that will eventually include the nations of the region in the EU and NATO.

I think it is important to highlight the level of support the Europeans are providing the region. They have budgeted six billion euros (basically $6 billion) over the next six years to help bring Romania and Bulgaria into the EU. They have also prepared to provide 5.5 billion euros (again, roughly $5.5 billion) over the same time period to implement the three initiatives of the Stability Pact—democratization, security, and regional infrastructure development.

Of the total financial support committed to Kosovo by the international community, including humanitarian, development, economic recovery and reconstruction assistance, the EU has pledged 35.5 percent. The U.S. has pledged 15.4 percent.

Of the total amount pledged for the operations of UNMIK, the EU has pledged 41.4 percent, the U.S. 13.2 percent.

I ask unanimous consent that a document detailing these burden-sharing numbers be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. VOINOVICH. We need to understand that while the Europeans are handling the bulk of the spending in the region, we must also be willing to come to the table to provide leadership. The importance of the United States to provide leadership was underscored by members of NATO and the EU, particularly those countries benefitting from the Stability Pact.

One of the highlights of my trip was the opportunity I had to spend time with our troops in Macedonia and Kosovo. There are few things that make me more proud of being an American than seeing the pride, professionalism, sense of duty and commitment in the faces of our young people in uniform.

I was especially happy to spend time with the 321st Psychological Operations Company, Task Force Falcon, which was deployed from Ohio and stationed at Camp Bondsteel in Kosovo. It gave me the chance to interact with these fine men and women from Ohio and hear their views on their mission in Kosovo. It also gave me the opportunity to visit with my friend, Major Wendell Bugg, whom I've known since my days as Governor. He is with the 321st and is doing a wonderful job. It was great to see him and get reacquainted.

And, Mr. President, I can't forget the unsung heroes of Kosovo—the men and women of the various humanitarian missions. I had the opportunity to meet with representatives from all of the major humanitarian aid organizations involved in Kosovo and Macedonia. I truly admire the service these people provide their fellow man. They are on the front lines daily, helping people, making a difference. To all of them I say, keep up the good work. Their efforts are key to stability in southeastern Europe and in responding to basic human needs.

While I encountered many encouraging prospects for regional peace and prosperity during my trip, I also identified a number of challenges the region and the international community are facing.

While there is ample reason to be optimistic about the future of Croatia under the leadership of President Mesic and Prime Minister Racan, there are also reasons to be concerned. The Croatian economy has been struggling for years. Unemployment and inflation rates are high. The country is deep in debt internationally. Many skilled, well-educated young people have left the country for better job prospects elsewhere. This has effectively created a ''brain drain,'' which, unless it is stemmed, will have a negative impact for decades. For Croatia to continue on its new path, away from its nationalist past, the economy must improve. If a solid market economy cannot take hold, there is a very real possibility that the Croatian people will grow impatient with President Mesic and Prime Minister Racan and seek to replace them; possibly with individuals who would rule the country under nationalist communist ideology.

The other problem facing the Croatian economy is in the area of refugee returns. As my colleagues may know, the majority of the civilians forced out of their homes during the conflicts of the early 1990's still have not returned to their homes. Even as President Mesic works to implement his campaign commitment to create a legal environment where minority rights are protected, people will not return to their homes—if their home still exists—if there is no work for them when they return. Thus, Croatia's struggling economy does impact and will continue to impact the entire region.

Current trends in Macedonia suggest the existence of an extremist element within the ethnic Albanian community. These individuals are willing to resort to violence in order to destabilize the sitting democratically-elected government of Macedonia, and put in its place a government run by Albanians, for Albanians. These extremists are beginning to make their presence felt with the government in Macedonia. It will take a tremendous commitment on the part of the current government to maintain a democratic, multi-ethnic form of government in Macedonia in the face of this threat.

A major impediment to peace and prosperity in southeastern Europe is the rise in organized crime. There have been a number of recent reports indicating that the Balkans region is being used more and more frequently as a transshipment point for illegal narcotics and arms. These reports were echoed by nearly everyone I spoke with on the trip. With this illicit trade comes violence, corruption, a lack of foreign investment and general societal havoc. As the nations of the region work to establish the rule of law, a functional judicial system and prosperous economies, I believe America and European nations must offer their crime-fighting expertise in order to help the Balkan nations shape their own future and steer clear from the menace of organized crime.

A tremendous concern that Dr. Bernard Kouchner, civilian head of the UNMIK operation, brought to the forefront was that the international community must be more active in their dispersal of aid-money pledged to the region, and in particular, the EU needed to be a more active participant in this area. Indeed, the EU has only dispersed 13.3 percent of the money they have pledged to UNMIK thus far. The EU has a number of strong arguments to explain their delay, including the nature of their fiscal cycle, the various mechanisms in place to prevent fraud and abuse, the unwieldy nature of the body, etc. Regardless, the fact is that the money has to be put on the table. As I mentioned before, the U.S. is doing its fair share given the role we played during the course of the bombing campaign. Now is the time for the Europeans to do theirs.

Throughout my trip to the Balkans, all signs pointed to the fact that the Stability Pact was not being implemented to the benefit of the region.

I believe that the Stability Pact represents one of the few good things that resulted from the Kosovo bombing campaign. Under the Stability Pact, the Europeans, with the leadership of the Germans and the French, agreed to work towards the gradual integration of the nations of southeastern Europe into the broader European community. In practice, this means EU and NATO membership. In exchange, the nations of the Balkan region must agree to put aside the ethnic divisions and nationalism that has caused so much death and destruction in recent years. This compact, if implemented, would be a gigantic leap forward.

Unfortunately, so far, not much has happened with the Pact. Meetings and conferences between government bureaucrats have been held. There have been a lot of speeches, studies, conversations, debates, and the like, but nothing has really happened ''on the ground'' in the region. I believe the Pact must move ahead with infrastructure projects that benefit the economies of the region. Start building bridges. Start cleaning the Danube River. Start building ''Corridor Eight,'' which will create an East-West railway/roadway travel corridor to stimulate commerce. Just start doing something!

I am somewhat heartened by the results of the Stability Pact conference in Brussels 2 weeks ago. There, 4 dozen countries and 3 dozen organizations pledged 2.4 billion Euros to fully-finance a 1.8 billion Euro ''Quick Start'' package of regional economic development and infrastructure projects and initiatives in southeast Europe over the next twelve months. I believe this commitment represents one of the first positive steps that has been taken since the end of the air war towards restoring peace and stability to the region.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert into the RECORD at the end of my remarks a statement that was made by the Honorable Nadezhda Mihailova, Foreign Minister of the Republic of Bulgaria, regarding Bulgaria's perspective on southeastern Europe prior to the Stability Pact Conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 2.)

Mr. VOINOVICH. The deeds of the Kosovar Albanians are not matching the rhetoric of the Albanian leadership. As recent press reports have made clear, NATO is facing another potential crisis in Kosovo. Extremist members of the ethnic Albanian community—some have argued under the direction of Hashim Thaci—have refused to put down their arms, put aside their desire for revenge against the Serbs, and work towards peace. Rather, they are intent on pushing the Serbs, with bombings, assassinations, threats, etc. to force a response from Slobodan Milosevic in Belgrade. Today, Kosovo Serbs are being killed, their monasteries are being burned, and they are afraid to leave their homes. This is not KFOR's fault. This is not UNMIK's fault. Radical elements within the Kosovo Albanian community are responsible for continued attacks against the dwindling Serb community in Kosovo. I am concerned that many in the Kosovo Albanian community want to force another confrontation between NATO and Milosevic so Kosovo can finally be rid of the Serb community and establish itself as an independent nation.

Let me be clear. The same group our State Department once called a terrorist organization—the KLA—whom we embraced as our friends and allies when NATO was bombing, are again becoming terrorists. They are working against the healing of Kosovo. Our message must be clear to Thaci, Rugova, Qosja and their Kosovo Albanian followers—stop this violence against the Serb community or the U.S. will pull out our troops. I said this directly to Thaci, Rugova and Qosja when I met them. As much as I want southeast Europe, including Kosovo and Serbia, to be integrated into the European community, I will work against it if the cycle of violence continues. The Kosovo Albanians have a historic opportunity to choose between two very different paths for the future—integration or continued isolation. The choice is theirs to make and the world will be watching.

Let me now turn to the Kosovo Serbs. They have suffered a great deal since the end of the Kosovo bombing campaign at the hands of certain elements within the Albanian community seeking revenge. However, the Kosovo Serbs' continued refusal to participate in UNMIK's Interim Administrative Council is unacceptable. I took the same message I made to the Albanians to the Serbs—stop the cycle of violence and move ahead towards reconciliation.

Decisions are going to be made regarding the future of Kosovo with or without Serbian participation. It is in their best interest to become involved. I am somewhat heartened that Bishop Artemjie's visit to the U.S. has prompted some progress towards getting the Kosovo Serbs to participate in the Interim Administrative Council. I understand that as a result of his visit, discussions are taking place that would allow the development of several media outlets within Kosovo. I am hopeful that this will serve as the impetus to get the Serb community in Kosovo involved in the Interim Administrative Council. It will require diligence and co-operation on a multi-ethnic approach, but I believe it will ultimately serve to draw the whole of Kosovo society together and stop the killing and violence and fear for life, limb and property that permeates the minority community in Kosovo.

Meanwhile, NATO continues to struggle with Milosevic's meddling hands in Kosovo. He has a group of extremist Kosovo Serbs, mainly situated around Mitrovica, agitating the situation in Kosovo whenever possible in an effort to encourage NATO to pack up and go home. He must not succeed. NATO must stand strong and refuse to accept any more provocations. They should seize illegal weapons and jail law-breakers and agitators. NATO forces should take the enemies of peace off the streets and shut-down the extremists of both sides. Defusing the situation will lower tensions and allow the mainstream people of Kosovo to move forward with their future.

Last month, I introduced S. Res. 272 which I believe effectively addresses this issue, and many more. On Milosevic, the Resolution makes it clear that he continues to be the heart of the problem in the region. In order to encourage democratic change, the Resolution:

Expresses the readiness of the Senate, once there is a democratic government in Serbia, to review conditions for Serbia's full reintegration into the international community;

Expresses its readiness to assist a future democratic government in Serbia to build a democratic, peaceful, and prosperous society, based on the same principle of respect for international obligations, as set out by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the United Nations, which guide the relations of the United States with other countries in southeastern Europe; and

Calls upon the United States and other Western democracies to publicly announce and demonstrate to the Serbian people the magnitude of assistance they could expect after democratization.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of S. Res. 272 be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 3.)

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, the NATO KFOR troops are in Kosovo to provide a secure environment for all citizens while civic institutions develop. The UNMIK structure, which I will address momentarily, has been charged with this civic development—this nation building. One of the key elements in this process is the establishment of a functional judicial system, including a functional police force. It is hoped that once properly trained, this police force will eventually take the responsibility for domestic law enforcement from the KFOR troops.

The international community has promised to supply 4,433 police for this UN force in Kosovo. Our European friends have committed the bulk of this total. However, only 2,359 police are in place in Kosovo. This is appalling.

As a rule, our European allies have national police systems rather than state or provincial police forces like we do in the U.S. This matters because it gives the national governments—governments that have promised to put their police in Kosovo to serve in the UN body—the ability to simply direct redeployments to meet their commitments. This lack of will and action is truly appalling. To provide context, I think it is important to note that we have had to recruit the American men and women serving with the UN in Kosovo from our state and local police departments. The best information I have shows that we have put 481 people, out of our total commitment of 550, in place in Kosovo. If we can meet our promises through recruitment, surely our European friends can meet theirs through directives.

This all matters because the sooner the UN police force and a judicial system is operational in Kosovo, the sooner our troops can come home.

One of the issues hardly considered when NATO became involved in Kosovo was the development of an end game. Well, now we know why. We are, in fact, building a nation. I understand no one is willing to say this publicly but we need to be truthful: the international community—using UNMIK as its tool on the ground—is building a new nation in Kosovo. It's all-encompassing. From schools, to roads, to power grids, to taxation, to local elections, to municipal councils, to the judicial system—it is all now our responsibility because we won the war.

In conclusion, I would like to address those cynics who believe we should immediately pull out of Kosovo and the Balkans because they believe we will never successfully bring about peace in the region. These cynics often point to the historical hatred between the ethnic groups in the region as an indication that NATO and the UN are doomed to fail. I disagree. We can make a difference and history supports my view.

Consider the centuries of animosity and hatred between the nations of western Europe. Few would have thought that the bitter adversaries at the heart of two world wars last century could be looking to a new century where borders are crossed without passports, where there is freedom of labor movement, and where there is no military presence on the borders. It happened because the nations of western Europe were willing to put aside centuries of hatred, revenge and ethnic prejudice and break the cycle of violence. If it could happen there, it can happen in southeast Europe.

One of the Beatitudes states that ''blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God'' (Matthew 5:9). With these words in mind, our efforts must be redoubled so that we may help bring peace, stability and prosperity to southeastern Europe.

STATEMENT OF HON. NADEZHDA MIHAILOVA, FOREIGN MINISTER OF THE REPUBLIC OF BULGARIA

As the United States discusses assistance to Southeastern Europe prior to the Stability Pact financing conference in Brussels on March 29–30, 2000, I believe it is important to provide you with the Bulgarian perspective.

Before I speak to the contributions Bulgaria will make to peace and security in Southeast Europe, let me tell you a little about the distance Bulgaria has traveled since 1989.

In 1989, Bulgaria shared the plight of all the former Warsaw Pact countries. My generation inherited a country without democratic institutions, without the basic mechanisms of a market economy, and without a balance of political power based on trust between the citizens of Bulgaria and their government. Indeed, we had only two assets that proved to be of value: Bulgaria's 1300-year history as a state deeply involved in the history of Europe and a highly self-confident and self-reliant population.

Many of those who were committed to rebuilding a Bulgarian democracy, myself included, spent the early years of the 1990's in Europe and the United States refining our political thinking. I myself benefited from the National Endowment for Democracy (NED) established by Congress to fan the flames of freedom and in 1991–92, I specialized in foreign policy and public relations in the US Congress and Harvard University.

By 1996 Peter Stoyanov was elected President. Bulgaria had begun to turn the corner in its transition to a market economy and the election of Prime Minister Kostov and his Government gave a strong impetus to this process. A new generation of Bulgarians was ready to begin our drive for full integration (actually re-integration) into the institutions of the Euro-Atlantic community.

In the few short years in which I have been fortunate to serve as Foreign Minister, Bulgaria has been identified as one of the most qualified candidates under consideration for NATO membership. We have been invited by the European Union to begin accession negotiations on full membership and we allied ourselves with other democracies in resisting the depredations of Milosevic during the Kosovo War. Today, the values of freedom and democracy and the commitment to Euro-Atlantic cooperation form the foundation of our foreign policy. Our country is firmly dedicated to progressive but prompt integration into the European community.

I can state with considerable pride that Bulgaria has made great progress in the establishment of a robust and permanent pluralistic democracy and in building the structures to support a modern market economy. On the political side, we have reestablished institutions that guarantee democracy, the rule of law, human rights, and ensure respect for and protection of minorities. On the economic side, Bulgaria has concentrated its efforts on the consolidation of market reforms, the acceleration of privatization, and the juridical measures a functioning market economy requires to operate openly and transparently.

These reforms have already produced significant improvement in the macroeconomic situation in Bulgaria. In 1998, we had a remarkably low annual inflation rate of 1%, after a horrible 578.6% in 1997. In 1999, the inflation rate increased to 6.2% mainly due to the obstruction of the Danube River, which damaged our trade relations with Europe. In 1998–99 our budget deficit was almost zero and we achieved a 3% growth in GDP. Additionally, the government maintains a high-level of hard currency reserves accounting for more than 30% of GDP.

We have completed the difficult task of liquidating state enterprises and banks undergoing losses. Privatization of Bulgaria's largest companies is nearly complete. My country has also begun to apply the rules of the European Monetary Union and the use of the Euro-currency. The European Union accession process will provide the Bulgarian economy a further impetus for development. The full introduction of European rules and practices in this rapidly growing emerging market should make Bulgaria very attractive for foreign investment. At the same time, by expanding its borders to include Bulgaria, the EU will come closer to regions, rich in natural resources and of great economic potential, with which Bulgaria has traditional economic ties.

In the foreign policy arena, Bulgaria has clearly and consistently defined its strategic goals. NATO membership, accession to the European Union, and dedication to lasting political stabilization for Southeastern Europe. After years of political legal, social and economic reform, our country began official negotiations with the EU last month. Full membership into the European Union is a strategic goal that enjoys wide support throughout Bulgarian society. The long cherished aspirations of the Bulgarian people for sharing the identity and the political future of a united Europe will be substantially advanced by our accession in the EU. But this step alone is insufficient.

Bulgaria's aspiration to join the European Union and NATO are motivated not only by its own economic interests and security reasons, but also by the desire to help strengthen the Euro-Atlantic community by promoting democracy throughout all the nations of Southeast Europe. Thus, Bulgaria's long-term foreign policy interests can only be served by joining with its neighbors in the effort to consolidate regional stability and security.

We believe that a safe and prosperous home can be built only in a safe and prosperous neighborhood.

Thus, only primary foreign policy goals in Southeast Europe are to:

Develop bilateral relations with all countries of the region based on a shared commitment to democratic values and human rights;

Mobilize and accelerate regional economic development through joint infrastructure projects, trade and investment encouragement, etc.;

Expand the scope of arms control, and support other measures for strengthening confidence and security;

Implement bilateral and multilateral measures for restricting new security risks, including regional programs aimed at combating transborder crime;

Play an active role in implementing the goals of the Stability Pact for Southeastern Europe.

A defining principle of Bulgaria's foreign policy with its neighbors has been to address and resolve contentious issues in pursuit of balanced bilateral relations. This bold approach has recently led to the resolution of some of the region's diplomatic divisions. Successes include re-opening relations between Bulgaria and the Republic of Macedonia (Bulgaria strongly supports Macedonia and as you know, was the first country in the world to recognize Macedonia) and the resolution of all disputed issues and development of equally friendly relations with Greece and Turkey. In addition, just last month, Bulgaria and Romania reached agreement on building a second bridge on the Danube River between Vidin and Kalafat. This agreement, I would argue, highlights the important strategic role Bulgaria can play in the context of regional political and economic stabilization as well as promoting the integration of Southeast Europe into the Euro-Atlantic community.

As an illustration of our efforts to enhance regional cooperation, Prime Minister Ivan Kostov organized a meeting in January with the Prime Ministers of the countries bordering the Former Republic of Yugoslavia. The basic goal of this meeting was to encourage broad discussion on how to pursue joint stabilization efforts. We also sought to send a clear message to the international community reflecting the view of these Southeastern European leaders.

Only a few weeks ago the first trilateral meeting of the foreign ministers of Bulgaria, Turkey and Greece took place that was generally estimated as a new step in building new patterns of relations in the region.

In addition, last month, Bulgaria joined six other nations in signing a 21-point charter to further democratic and economic development in the region. We pledged to support good neighborly relations, stability, security, and cooperation in Southeast Europe.

The United States does not need to be reminded that without Hungary, Romania, Greece, Turkey and Bulgaria working together, the containment of Serbian aggression and the eventual democratization of all of the Balkans will be impossible.

President Clinton's visit to Sofia last year and numerous conversations I have had with Lord Robertson and General Clark, serve to reinforce the role Bulgaria has played in developing and promoting multilateral cooperation in Southeast Europe and in standing firm with NATO during the Kosovo crisis. It is because of our past contributions and the pivotal role we can play in the region that the Bulgarian city of Plovdiv was chosen as the headquarters of the newly established Multinational Peace-keeping Forces in Southeast Europe.

Events in Serbia and Kosovo last year, however, adversely affected the economics of the region. We suffered direct losses in trade as a result of transportation difficulties and foreign investment in Bulgaria declined because the neighborhood was, and still is to some degree, perceived as unsafe and unreliable for foreign investors.

Bulgaria's view for the future of Southeast Europe is for the region to transform into a source of economic growth and an active link between Western Europe and the adjacent area to the northeast and southeast, whose strategic importance will continue to increase in this century. This vision is based, among other things, on the understanding that the region has an important place in the overall geopolitical architecture of Europe.

The present level of interdependence among countries and the status of Southeast Europe's political and economic development directly impacts the entire European continent. In addition, security and stability in the region represents an important element of the European security architecture, and therefore is of strategic importance to the US.

That is precisely the reason why we are strongly encouraged by the growing involvement of the Euro-Atlantic community with the issues expressed in the Stability Pact promotion of security, democracy and economic development in the Balkans. This engagement marks the beginning of an approach that is fundamentally different from the past. It does not mean temporary crisis-management measures, but rather a move beyond this to a comprehensive effort to find a common concept for development of the region and its full integration into the Euro-Atlantic community.

Now is the time—nearly one year after the crisis in Kosovo—to turn the financial commitments made by the European Union into reality. We seek the support and leadership of the international community, and particularly the United States to transform the Stability Pact's long-term vision for ''integrating the Balkans into Europe'' into a concrete policy, with structured benchmarks backed by financial resources. The goal should not only be to neutralize the immediate consequences of the Kosovo crisis, but also to find solutions to the problems of economic development in the region as a whole. Cooperation and full integration of the region with a prospering and democratic Europe can be achieved only through integration on all fronts—political, economic, and financial. However, it is impossible to expect quick developments if no money comes to the region. We believe that funds should be devoted to long-term regional goals like transportation routes, infrastructure development, and improving specific institutions that can facilitate the links between the countries, such as customs operations, drug control and combating corruption.

Our key priorities for Stability Pact assistance include:

1. Construction of the Trans-European Transport Corridor #4. This project will connect Central Europe with Bulgaria and Macedonia and includes construction of a second bridge over the Danube at Vidin-Calafat. The bridge will replace the ferry, decreasing travel time and eliminating the need to load and unload cargo. The project also includes construction of road and railway approaches, as well as border and customs infrastructure. The budget for the bridge is estimated to be US $177 million. Included in this cost are road connections to the bridge from Romania and Bulgaria. The project is expected to take 3½ years.

2. Construction of a regional section of Trans-European Transport Corridor #8. This project, estimated at US$10 million, involves construction of a 2.5-km railway connecting Gyueshevo, Bulgaria with the Macedonian border. This project will greatly improve the capacity of Trans-European Corridor #8. Project coordinators can make use of the partially installed track, and will need to construct a ballast prism, lay additional rails, complete and install electrification of a 500-meter tunnel, and improve border railway station and facilities. US $1.1 million has already been invested to modernize Gyueshevo station, which started in the second quarter of 1998.

Completion of a new railroad between Beliakovitsa, Macedonia and the Bulgarian border is critical for effective functioning of the transportation corridor and requires an additional investment of US $220 million.

Reconstruction of the railway track between Radomir and Gyueshevo in Bulgaria is also necessary. This project includes laying electrical lines on 88 km of railway to increase maximum train speed from 65–75 to 160 km/h. It will cost US $93 million and is expected to take three years.

3. Pipeline for light fuels. US $40 million is needed to construct a 110-km pipeline from Thtiman, Bulgaria to Koumanova, Macedonia. This project also includes construction of petrol depot in Kriva Palanka or Koumanova.

4. Increased electrification of the railway between Karnobat and Sindel, Bulgaria. This project includes reconstruction and expansion of electrification along an existing 123-km railway line in order to increase transmission capacity and allow a maximum speed of 130 km/hr. Estimated cost of this project is US $125 million, of which US $38 million has already been spent. Additional funds would allow the project, part of Transport Corridor #8, to continue immediately.

5. Construction of an Information Center for Democratic Development for Southeastern Europe. The Center will contribute to the development and strengthening of democracy in the region by deepening the process of reform and building an atmosphere of confidence and understanding. It will also help prevent new crises and conflicts in the region. The center will be directly involved in the process of Yugoslavia's democratization, as well as the search for solutions to the lasting political and economic effects of the Kosovo crisis. Active NGO participation from the region will be key to realization of the Center's potential.

I cannot state strongly enough how critical U.S. leadership is at this time to ensure that the Stability Pact goals turn into action. U.S. Congressional commitment, along with a renewed commitment by the Administration, to support and encourage Europe to honor her financial commitments is vital to the success of the Stability Pact. Continued U.S. assistance through OPIC, EXIM and TDA is also crucial for stimulating foreign investment increased trade and implementation of infrastructure projects.

Finally, I would like to express my personal gratitude and that of the Republic of Bulgaria to the United States and particularly the U.S. Congress, for providing essential economic, political, and military assistance to Bulgaria and the other Balkan nations throughout the Kosovo conflict and beyond. The active support of the United states continues to be the indispensable condition for economic recovery of Southeast Europe and the completion of its long journey towards democracy. I cannot tell you how important it is for the United States to remain committed to your allies in this critical and dynamic region of the Euro-Atlantic community.

Thank you.

S. RES. 272

Whereas the North Atlantic Treaty Organization's (NATO's) March 24, 1999 through June 10, 1999 bombing of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia focused the attention of the international community on southeastern Europe;

Whereas the international community, in particular the United States and the European Union, made a commitment at the conclusion of the bombing campaign to integrate southeastern Europe into the broader European community;

Whereas there is an historic opportunity for the international community to help the people of southeastern Europe break the cycle of violence, retribution, and revenge and move towards respect for minority rights, establishment of the rule of law, and the further development of democratic governments;

Whereas the Stability Pact was established in July 1999 with the goal of promoting cooperation among the countries of southeastern Europe, with a focus on long-term political stability and peace, security, democratization, and economic reconstruction and development;

Whereas the effective implementation of the Stability Pact is important to the long-term peace and stability in the region;

Whereas the people and Government of the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia have a positive record of respect for minority rights, the rule of law, and democratic traditions since independence;

Whereas the people of Croatia have recently elected leaders that respect minority rights, the rule of law, and democratic traditions;

Whereas positive developments in the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia and the Republic of Croatia will clearly indicate to the people of Serbia that economic progress and integration into the international community is only possible if Milosevic is removed from power; and

Whereas the Republic of Slovenia continues to serve as a model for the region as it moves closer to European Union and NATO membership: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) welcomes the tide of democratic change in southeastern Europe, particularly the free and fair elections in Croatia, and the regional cooperation taking place under the umbrella of the Stability Pact;

(2) recognizes that in this trend, the regime of Slobodan Milosevic is ever more an anomaly, the only government in the region not democratically elected, and an obstacle to peace and neighborly relations in the region;

(3) expresses its sense that the United States cannot have normal relations with Belgrade as long as the Milosevic regime is in power;

(4) views Slobodan Milosevic as a brutal indicted war criminal, responsible for immeasurable bloodshed, ethnic hatred, and human rights abuses in southeastern Europe in recent years;

(5) considers international sanctions an essential tool to isolate the Milosevic regime and promote democracy, and urges the Administration to intensify, focus, and expand those sanctions that most effectively target the regime and its key supporters;

(6) supports strongly the efforts of the Serbian people to establish a democratic government and endorses their call for early, free, and fair elections;

(7) looks forward to establishing a normal relationship with a new democratic government in Serbia, which will permit an end to Belgrade's isolation and the opportunity to restore the historically friendly relations between the Serbian and American people;

(8) expresses the readiness of the Senate, once there is a democratic government in Serbia, to review conditions for Serbia's full reintegration into the international community;

(9) expresses its readiness to assist a future democratic government in Serbia to build a democratic, peaceful, and prosperous society, based on the same principle of respect for international obligations, as set out by the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE) and the United Nations, which guide the relations of the United States with other countries in southeastern Europe;

(10) calls upon the United States and other Western democracies to publicly announce and demonstrate to the Serbian people the magnitude of assistance they could expect after democratization; and

(11) recognizes the progress in democratic and market reform made by Montenegro, which can serve as a model for Serbia, and urges a peaceful resolution of political differences over the abrogation of Montenegro's rights under the federal constitution.

THE JUVENILE JUSTICE CONFERENCE

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am disappointed that the majority continues to refuse to reconvene the conference on juvenile justice legislation.

This Congress has kept the country waiting far too long for action on juvenile justice legislation and sensible gun safety laws. We are fast approaching the first-year anniversary of the shooting at Columbine High School in Littleton, Colorado. Next Thursday will sadly mark one year since fourteen students and a teacher lost their lives in that tragedy on April 20, 1999.

It has been 11 months since the Senate passed the Hatch-Leahy juvenile justice bill by an overwhelming vote of 73–25. Our bipartisan bill includes modest yet effective gun safety provisions. It has been 10 months since the House of Representatives passed its own juvenile crime bill on June 17, 1999. It has been 9 months since the House and Senate juvenile justice conference met for the first—and only—time on August 5, 1999, less than 24 hours before the Congress adjourned for its long August recess.

Senate and House Democrats have been ready for months to reconvene the juvenile justice conference and work with Republicans to craft an effective juvenile justice conference report that includes reasonable gun safety provisions, but the majority refuses to act. Indeed, on October 20, 1999, all the House and Senate Democratic conferees wrote to Senator HATCH, the Chairman of the juvenile justice conference, and Congressman HYDE, the Chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to reconvene the conference immediately. This week, Congressman HYDE joined our call for the juvenile justice conference to meet as soon as possible in a letter to Senator HATCH, which was also signed by Congressman CONYERS.

Every parent, teacher and student in this country is concerned about school violence over the last two years and worried about when the next shooting may occur. They only hope it does not happen at their school or involve their children.

We all recognize that there is no single cause and no single legislative solution that will cure the ill of youth violence in our schools or in our streets. But we have an opportunity before us to do our part. We should seize this opportunity to act on balanced, effective juvenile justice legislation, and measures to keep guns out of the hands of children and away from criminals.

It is ironic that the Senate will be in recess next week on the anniversary of the Columbine tragedy. In fact, the Senate has been in recess more than in session since the one ceremonial meeting of the juvenile crime conference committee. I hope we get to work soon and finish what we started in the juvenile justice conference. It is well past the time for Congress to act.

I ask unanimous consent that this Hyde-Conyers letter of April 11, 2000 be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, April 11, 2000.

Hon. ORRIN G. HATCH,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN HATCH: We write to request a juvenile justice conference meeting as soon as possible.

As you are aware, in the last two months, we have witnessed a succession of gun violence tragedies. We have been shocked by a six-year-old shooting a six-year-old in Mount Morris Township, Michigan. We have seen a nursing home held hostage and a mass shooting in Pittsburgh. In February, Memphis firefighters responding to a call were shot and killed by a disturbed man. It is clear that the Nation would like Congress to respond.

We know that there is not complete agreement on all of the issues before the Conference. We also recognize the need for compromise. We have already agreed in principle to proposed language to reduce the waiting period to 24 hours in most cases, but are still trying to resolve appropriate "safety hatch" exceptions.

We have pledged to each other to begin anew negotiations. We believe, however, that beginning the work of the Conference will play a constructive role in the necessary process of narrowing our differences.

We appreciate your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

HENRY J. HYDE,
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee.
JOHN CONYERS, JR.,
Ranking Member, House Judiciary Committee.

SECTION 415 PENSION REFORM NEEDED

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, during this week prior to the April deadline for filing income tax returns with the Internal Revenue Service, Congress often focuses on the high tax burden shouldered by American families and the need for tax reform. Fundamental reform is my top tax legislative priority. I believe the entire confusing and incomprehensible tax code should be scrapped and replaced with a system that is fair, simple, uniform and consistent. Until such fundamental reform can take place, I will continue to work in support of tax reform measures that correct unfair aspects of the existing tax code mess.

One section of the code that I believe needs to be changed and changed soon is Section 415. Section 415 of the tax code was enacted in 1974 for the purpose of limiting the pensions of corporate executives. Section 415 no longer impacts corporate executives, but it does unfairly impact middle income workers who are prevented from collecting the full pensions they earned and deserve from their multi-employer plan. This is as simple as the tax code keeping workers from being able to collect their own money. I believe this injustice should be corrected, and I have cosponsored legislation, Senate bill 1209, that will restore fairness to this section of the tax code.

The Senate version of the 1999 tax relief bill included the fix to Section 415. I am pleased that the Senate joined me in recognizing the absolute need to correct Section 415 and to stop unfairly punishing workers by blocking access to their hard-earned pensions, though I am disappointed that this change did not become law last year. It was, however, an important step towards achieving reform. As the nation focuses on tax season, I reaffirm my dedication to fighting to pass legislation to bring fairness to Section 415 of the tax code and ensure our nation's workers collect what they have rightfully earned.

U.S.S. "J. WILLIAM DITTER"

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, in honor of their reunion to be held this month, I am pleased to call the Senate's attention to honor the crew of U.S.S. J. William Ditter who served during World War II.

I commend the dedication and courage of that crew of the minelayer named in honor of former Pennsylvania Congressman J. William Ditter.

Born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on September 5, 1888, J. William Ditter received his law degree from Temple University in 1913 and was admitted to the bar the same year. As a school teacher and baseball coach at Northeast High School from 1912 until 1925, one of Coach Ditter's team members was Jimmy Dykes, who later went on to become Connie Mack's star third baseman during the Philadelphia Athletics' glory years in the nineteen-thirties. Less famous, but equally important were the hundreds of young men and women who studied at Northeast High under "Doc" Ditter's tutelage. They constantly sought his advice and retained their affection for him in the years that followed.

In 1925, Mr. Ditter moved to Montgomery County, where he practiced law and became an active member of his church and community. In 1932, Montgomery County was made a separate Congressional district and Mr. Ditter was elected to serve as its first Representative.

As a member of the House of Representatives, he quickly became known for his tireless work, dedication to our country, and consummate skill in debate. Congressman Ditter took a prominent role in defeating President Franklin Roosevelt's efforts to pack the Supreme Court in order to insure that New Deal legislation would not be declared unconstitutional. As the Ranking Member of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Naval Affairs, he led the fight to establish a two-ocean Navy. The success of the Navy in World War II, including the ship which was named after him, was due in part to the leadership and dedication of Congressman J. William Ditter.

In recognition of his leadership, Bill Ditter was selected to be the Chairman of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee, a post he held until his death in 1943. While in Congress, Mr. Ditter explained his positions on public affairs by writing a weekly newspaper column, Trend of Events. During his years in Congress, he was much in demand as a public speaker, not only in Montgomery County but throughout the state and nation.

Congressman Ditter's political career was cut short by his untimely death in a Navy plane crash near Columbia, Pennsylvania. He was returning from Boston where he had been on a trip to participate in the commissioning of the Navy's new carrier, U.S.S. Wasp. Among the many dignitaries who attended his funeral were former President Herbert C. Hoover, a close, personal friend and my colleague Senator MCCAIN's grandfather Admiral John S. McCain, Sr., Commander of Carrier Task Force 38. Congressman Ditter was buried with military honors at Whitemarsh Memorial Cemetery. In light of his distinguished service to our nation, the Navy named a destroyer-mine layer in his honor, U.S.S. J. William Ditter (DM 31).

U.S.S. J. William Ditter was a fitting tribute to Congressman Ditter. The Sumner class destroyer, which was converted to a high speed mine layer, was christened by Mrs. J. William Ditter on July 4, 1944. It was commissioned on October 28, 1944, and served as a unit of Division 9, Mine Squadron 3. Congressman Ditter's dedication and service to his country was mirrored by the actions of the men on U.S.S. J. William Ditter. The ''Fighting J. Willy'', as the crew called the mine layer, destroyed many Japanese suicide aircraft and boats during its years of service.

The end of April marks the fifty-fifth anniversary of the brave actions of the crew in the early days of the operations in Okinawa. U.S.S. J. William Ditter greatly contributed to the success of the first landings on April 1, 1945 by escorting transport ships carrying American invasion forces.

On April 12, U.S.S. J. William Ditter joined the radar picket line to protect ships against attacking Japanese aircraft. On April 26, U.S.S. J. William Ditter drove off an attacking enemy aircraft, and on April 27, the crew helped to down two enemy aircraft. On April 28, the crew shot down an attacking suicide aircraft and combined its fire with another ship in order to shoot down two other hostile aircraft. On April 29, the crew detected and attacked an enemy submarine.

By May 28, 1945, U.S.S. J. William Ditter had shot down eight Japanese aircraft and assisted in destroying three others. On June 6, 1945, in the radar picket line of Task Force 51.5 patrolling southeast of Nakagusukua Wan, U.S.S. J. William Ditter shot down four. However, one suicide plane hit U.S.S. J. William Ditter, inflicting heavy damage and numerous casualties. Ten men were killed and twenty-seven were wounded on that fateful day.

Although the ship was repaired enough to make it home to the United States, it was decommissioned and struck from the Navy's fleet when the war ended. Despite the short term of service, U.S.S. J. William Ditter had a distinguished war record, keeping in honor with the person for whom the ship was named—Congressman J. William Ditter.

The crew deserves special recognition for their service, and I am pleased to be able to commend them on the floor of the United States Senate. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the list of the names of the crew members who served on U.S.S. J. William Ditter.

As an addendum, I think it is appropriate to note the distinguished public service of Congressman Ditter's son, J. William Ditter, Jr., who is a judge on the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania where I knew him as a practicing attorney in that court.

There being no objections, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ELIAN GONZALEZ

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I want to take this occasion to say something about the Elian Gonzalez case. I have not spoken formerly in the Senate about it, but it has been addressed by several of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle. For me, it is simple because it is not about politics; it is about the heart; it is about family.

Some may call me old fashioned. I think kids belong with their parents—I have always believed that—unless there is some reason a child should not be with the parent, if the child has a bad parent. There is no proof of that in any way, or suggestion of that, except at the last minute the relatives who are caring for Elian, now, have made these charges.

It seems as if every time the father comes closer, he becomes a worse person. First, he was wonderful. They said, he is wonderful but he doesn't care about his son; he is not here. Now he is here, and they still will not turn the child over.

I have a little grandson. He is about a year younger than Elian, so I am pretty familiar with kids that age because I have watched him so closely. They are babies; they really are. They are little children. They are babies. They are impressionable. That is why it is so important to treat them well and to not use them for any purpose—let them be children.

I have to say unequivocally as a grandmother, not as a Senator, I believe it is very harmful for a child to be exposed to screaming adults outside of his home, day in and day out, shouting things. There is something wrong with that. It is harmful to a child.

I also want to point out there is room for politics over the Cuba issue. Of course there is. But it is not around this case. It should not be around this case, either by those in this country who want to make it a political issue, or Fidel Castro, who may well want to do that if and when Elian is back. That would be deplorable.

We have to treat this child gently. We have to reunite this child with his living parent. I just would like to make a plea to those who do not want to do that and who have said that to get Elian with his father is going to take people coming to the door, that they will not relinquish this child except if there is force used, that is not the way we do things in this country.

This is a country of peaceful laws. That is why we have courts. That is why people have to obey court orders. We have laws. We cannot, because we disagree with them—God knows, every one of us disagree with jury verdicts; we disagree with laws; we disagree with decisions. The beauty of our Nation is that we are a country of laws. We must make it clear those laws should be obeyed. We ought to do it in the best interests of this child, which means gently and peacefully.

REMEMBRANCE OF THE KATYN FOREST MASSACRE

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, I rise today to remind my fellow Americans of a horrific tragedy which occurred in Poland six decades ago. April 13 serves as a day of remembrance of this terrible massacre.

On September 1, 1939, Germany invaded Poland to begin World War II. Two weeks later, in accordance with the secret Ribbentrop-Molotov Pact, the Soviet Union invaded Poland from the East and completed the partition of this nation. The Soviet invasion lasted eleven days and resulted in the forced deportation of 1.5 million Poles to Russian labor camps. Of those 1.5 million, approximately 15,000 Polish military officers disappeared under mysterious circumstances. On June 22, 1941, tensions between Germany and the Soviet Union exploded as the German army stormed into Soviet territory. It would take nearly two years before the German army would uncover evidence relating to the 15,000 Polish officers who had disappeared in 1940.

In 1943, German forces near Smolensk, in western Russia, investigated reports they heard from Russian civilians to the effect that a large number of prisoners had been murdered by the Soviet secret police in the area nearly three years earlier. The German investigators were led by local Russians to a series of mounds in a wooded area about 10 miles west of Smolensk. On April 13, 1943, German officials made a gruesome discovery as they uncovered buried corpses. They found numerous victims, each with hands bound behind their backs and a bullet hole in the base of their skulls. Over the course of the next month, the Germans exhumed more than 4500 corpses. Unable to continue to dig through Katyn Forest, Germany requested the assistance of the International Red Cross and representatives of neutral countries to determine the circumstances surrounding the execution and burial of these 4500 Polish officers.

After examining the bodies, these representatives reported to the appropriate authorities their conclusion that the men buried in Katyn Forest were those of Polish military officers, along with a number of civilian cultural leaders, business leaders, and intellectuals—scientists, writers, and poets—who had been in the portion of Poland occupied by the Soviet Union in September 1939. The Soviet Union vehemently denied the allegations of responsibility. Once the Soviet Union had reclaimed Katyn Forest, a pro-Soviet investigation of the Katyn Forest Massacre determined that the Polish officers and leaders had been massacred by the German army. It would take another 45 years before the truth of the massacre would finally be acknowledged by the leaders of the Soviet Union.

Aside from United States congressional hearings held in Britain, Italy, Germany and the United States in the early 1950s, the Katyn Forest Massacre was largely forgotten by the international community. But the truth of Katyn Forest remained vivid for the Polish nation. Polish nationals were determined to discover the truth. These individuals wanted justice for the fallen comrades.

After the publication of an account of the Massacre by a Soviet historian in 1990, Polish President Wojciech Jaruzelski quickly arranged a series of meetings with Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev and other Soviet officials in an attempt to finally bring a conclusion to the Katyn conspiracy. On April 13, 1990, the day after President Jaruzelski's final meeting with Mikhail Gorbachev, the Soviet news agency published a statement of acknowledgment on behalf of the Soviet government for summary execution of 15,000 Polish officers in the Katyn Forest during late April and early May of 1940. The statement claimed that the NKVD, the Soviet secret police, followed the orders of their chief, Lavrenti P. Beria, and massacred these 15,000 Polish captives.

We must never forget the crime against humanity which was carried out in this rural section of Poland. As our nation looks towards the 21st Century and the promising future, we must always remember the sacrifices of brave and gallant men in the defense of their nation and their heritage which have helping the world achieve greater freedom and democracy. April 13 should always be remembered not as a day in which hope briefly dimmed when these brave men were executed but a day in which freedom triumphed and shown brightly after decades of silence.

FEDERAL COMMITMENT TO EDUCATION

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, last week the Senate passed the FY 2001 Budget Resolution. I would be remiss if, upon reflection, I did not take this opportunity to talk about the federal commitment to education in my state of Utah.

In my state of Utah, education consistently ranks as one of the highest priorities for Utahns. During this year's session of the Utah legislature, Utah reaffirmed its commitment to improving education, reducing class size and paying dedicated teachers a salary commensurate with their efforts and qualifications.

Utah takes its commitment to education funding very seriously. During the 1995–96 school year, education expenditures in Utah amounted to $92 per $1000 of personal income. The national average was $62 per $1000. In other words, Mr. President, Utah's education expenditure relative to total personal income is nearly 50 percent more than the national average. It is the third highest in the nation.

In education expenditures as a percent of total direct state and local government expenditures, Utah ranks 2nd in the nation. Utah's expenditure for education was 41.5 percent of the total amount spent for government. The national average is 33.5 percent.

Mr. President, no one can tell me that Utahns are not serious about funding education. And these efforts have garnered results. Utah's scores on ACT tests are equal to or better than the national average in English, math, reading and science. Utah ranks 1st in the nation in Advanced Placement tests taken and passed.

Still, even with these efforts, Utah remains 1st the nation in terms of class size and last in per-pupil expenditure. This is due to Utah's unique demographic. Utah families are, on average, larger than any other state. Utah has the highest birth rate in the nation.

While it is true that these factors contribute to the allocation of federal education funds, most notably the Title I funds, the Clinton administration has done very little to help Utah. Indeed, many of the proposals in the administration budget would be detrimental to education efforts underway in Utah.

Among other things, this administration has consistently cut funding for Impact Aid. Impact Aid is a vital program for Utah because it helps make up for the lost property tax revenue in school districts where there is a significant federal presence. Since half of our state is federally owned or controlled, that means our schools would suffer even greater financial difficulties without Impact Aid. I appreciate that this Budget Resolution rejects the 15 percent cut requested by the Clinton administration.

Indeed, in addition to support for Impact Aid, there is much to applaud in this Budget Resolution relative to education. It assumes an increase of more than $600 million over the administration's request. Over $11 billion will be dedicated to funding the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act. This will greatly assist Utah fund the education of students with special needs.

Moreover, because the federal government will be contributing more toward the costs of special education, fulfilling more of its promise to fund 40 percent of the cost for educating students with disabilities, the state will be able to use its own resources to address state and local priorities such as lowering class size, improve facilities, increasing teachers' pay, upgrading instructional equipment and textbooks, or offering enrichment programs.

Finally, this administration has never recommended funding for the Education Finance Incentive Grant program which, instead of a per-pupil expenditure as a proxy for a state's commitment to education, uses a combination of a state's effort to fund education and a state's willingness to more equitably distribute resources among a state's economically diverse school districts. As I have noted, Utah allocates a significant amount of state revenue to education, demonstrating our state's effort. Utah also has in place an ''equity program'' for assisting schools with smaller tax bases. Nationally, we ought to be encouraging states to make such effort, and we ought to be rewarding states that do. This is an important program that deserves a consistent funding stream, and I will be addressing this issue in the context of the reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act.

In the area of higher education, this Budget Resolution rejects the administration's proposal to require guaranty agencies, which finance guaranteed student loans (GSLs), to pay accelerated and increased funds from their federal reserves. This would be especially devastating to Utah's Higher Education Assistance Authority (UHEAA). Utah has one of the lowest average incomes in the nation; and, therefore, Utah students who are not reliant on their parents for financial assistance rely instead on assistance from UHEAA.

During past assessments, because UHEAA had maintained one of highest guarantee program reserves ratios, Utah had to return one of the highest percentages of current reserves to the federal government. Under the administration's proposal, these cuts would have been deepened, and I am grateful to the Budget committee for rejecting them.

In closing, I would like to commend the tireless hard work of the Chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI. His dedication to sound fiscal policy and appropriate spending priorities are laudable. I also thank the Senate leadership for their efforts on moving this process along. I look forward to the enactment of this Budget Resolution. I thank the chair and yield the floor.

PASSAGE OF S. 376 ''ORBIT''

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to support the conference report on satellite reform. As a co-sponsor of the original bill, I believe this bi-partisan legislation will encourage more competition in the satellite communications market. This will benefit American consumers and workers. It will also make America more competitive in the global satellite market.

The Open-market Reorganization for the Betterment of International Telecommunications Act (ORBIT bill) will benefit our nation in a number of ways. First, the bill allows Lockheed Martin to acquire 100% of COMSAT Corporation by removing a number of old and outdated regulatory barriers. This is great news for these two outstanding Maryland companies and their employees. The merger will encourage growth and economic competition in one of the most dynamic sectors of our economy—the global satellite market. It means jobs today and jobs tomorrow—both in Maryland and throughout our nation. I look forward to Lockheed Martin and COMSAT completing their merger without any further delay.

Second, this legislation encourages the privatization of INTELSAT, an inter-governmental organization, by including the leverage necessary to ensure that INTELSAT's privatization will conclude in a timely and pro-competitive manner.

Third, the conference agreement also reaffirms the ability of carriers to obtain Level III direct access. Level III direct access allows customers to enter into contractual agreements with INTELSAT to order, receive and pay for INTELSAT space segment capacity at the same rate that INTELSAT charges its signatories. This means that users of INTELSAT services will be able to purchase services directly from INTELSAT without going through COMSAT.

Fourth, the bill does not remove the current prohibition on Level IV direct access until after INTELSAT privatizes. Allowing Level IV access before privatization would have unfairly and unjustly permitted COMSAT's competitors to buy all of COMSAT's investment in INTELSAT below market value which would have weakened the value of this international asset. This would have significantly diminished the value of the Lockheed-COMSAT transaction.

I commend my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in the Senate and in the House for passing S. 376 and commend the President for signing this important legislation into law.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, April 24 marks the 85th anniversary of the beginning of one of the most tragic events in history, the Armenian Genocide. In 1915, the Ottoman Turkish Government embarked on a brutal policy of ethnic extermination. Over the next eight years, 1.5 million Armenians were killed, and more than half a million were forced from their homeland into exile.

In the years since then, the Armenian diaspora has thrived in the United States and in many other countries, bringing extraordinary vitality and achievement to communities across America and throughout the world. The Armenian Assembly of America, the Armenian National Committee of America, and other distinguished groups deserve great credit for their impressive work in maintaining the proud history and heritage of the Armenian people, and guaranteeing that the Armenian Genocide will never be forgotten.

One of the enduring achievements of the survivors of the Genocide and their descendants has been to keep its tragic memory alive, in spite of continuing efforts by those who refuse to acknowledge the atrocities that took place. In Massachusetts, the curriculum of every public school now includes human rights and genocide, and the Armenian Genocide is part of that curriculum.

As this new century unfolds, it is time for all governments, political leaders and peoples everywhere to recognize the Armenian Genocide. These annual commemorations are an effective way to pay tribute to the courage and suffering and triumph of the Armenian people, and to ensure that such atrocities will never happen again to any people on earth.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, each year on April 24, we pause to remember the tragedy of the Armenian Genocide. On that date in 1915, more than two hundred Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were arrested in Constantinople (now Istanbul) and killed, marking the beginning of an organized campaign to eliminate the Armenian presence from the Ottoman Empire. This brutal campaign would result in the massacre of a million and a half Armenian men, women, and children.

Thousands of Armenians were subjected to torture, deportation, slavery, and murder. More than five hundred thousand were removed from their homes and sent on forced death marches through the deserts of Syria. This dark time is among the saddest chapters in human history.

But Armenians are strong people, and their dream of freedom did not die. More than seventy years after the genocide, the new Republic of Armenia was born as the Soviet Union crumbled. Today, we pay tribute to the courage and strength of a people who would not know defeat.

Yet independence has not meant an end to their struggle. There are still those who question the reality of the Armenian slaughter, who have failed to recognize its very existence. We must not allow the horror of the Armenian genocide to be either dismissed or denied.

Genocide is the worst of all crimes against humanity. As we try to learn from the recent genocidal conflicts in Kosovo and Rwanda and prevent future atrocities, it is especially important to remember those who lost their lives in the first genocide of the twentieth century. We must never forget the victims of the Armenian genocide.

A MODERN DAY TRAGEDY

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I come to the floor of the Senate today to tell a story—a modern day tragedy about a mother, Elizabeth, who so loved her son, Elian, that she tried to bring him to the shores of the United States of America from Cuba—to the shores of freedom. Had she succeeded, she would have joined her family members already in the United States: her cousin who arrived only last year; her son's great uncle and his family who have been in the United States for many years; and another cousin who has been here for over fifteen years. She would have been reunited with many other relatives who must today remain anonymous for fear of retribution by Castro against those still trapped in Cuba. Instead, she met with tragedy in the Florida straits. Elizabeth died. Her five-year-old son survived.

Let me be a little more specific. On November 21, 1999, a group of 14 Cuban citizens boarded a boat bound for the United States and the shores of freedom. The motor failed shortly after departing and the group was forced to return to Cuba. Think of the anxiety at this moment, having to return after risking everything. The anticipation. The disappointment. The fear.

When the boat returned to Cuba, one of the other female passengers, Arianne Horta, placed her young daughter back on the shore of Cuba. She then wanted to make sure that Elizabeth was positive in her decision to take Elian. And despite the fact that Elian had a father in Cuba, Elizabeth brought her son back on the boat to set sail for the second time that night—seeking freedom on the shores of America.

If you are interested in what Elian's mother really wanted, think about the act of choosing to keep her son on the boat, while Arianne took her child off the boat. This is as clear a message as a mother can send that she wanted freedom for her child. She wanted freedom despite the risks involved, despite a failed attempt to flee hours earlier, and despite the fact that the father remained in Cuba.

Think about that moment of choice for Elizabeth—put my son on the beach and he can live with his father, or keep him with me so we could have the hope of freedom. It is clear to me that she valued freedom above everything. Now think—if that was you, and you died, would you want the child returned to Cuba?

Think of yourself in Nazi Germany. A mother successfully smuggles a child out, but dies in the process at the hands of the Nazis. The father, probably under duress, demands the return of his child. Would we contemplate returning him? Would we return a child under the same circumstances to Saddam Hussein's Iraq? If a mother and child were scaling the Berlin wall and the mother was shot, but the child was pushed over—would we send the child back? Absolutely not.

On the night of November 21, this group of Cuban nationals repaired their boat and set sail a second time. On the following night, the boat capsized. The survivors clung to anything that would float and hung on for dear life. After a day struggling for her life, Elizabeth died. But before she passed on, she told a fellow passenger who did survive, Nivaldo Fernandez, to make sure that Elian touches land, to make sure he touches dry land.

As many of my colleagues know well, if a Cuban refugee reaches American soil they will not be sent back to Cuba. Every Cuban knows that reaching ''dry land'' means they will be free from Castro's iron fist. Elizabeth's dying wish was for her Elian to reach dry land. There can be no doubt about what she wanted for her son.

Mr. President, I come to the floor today with great disappointment—disappointment in this Administration and disappointment in the Attorney General. Elian Gonzalez's mother's death will be in vain and this little boy's struggle for freedom, his struggle to live in America, simply is being dismissed if the boy's best interests and the family's legal rights are not considered.

Many will say that this is a simple decision, the INS and the Department of Justice should merely reunite a father with the son he loves. I think all of us recognize the intense and profound bond between parent and child. It is to be respected and cherished. It is a natural instinct to want to reunite parent and child. But these are by no means ordinary circumstances. I ask the American people to look beyond the headlines, to understand the intense pressure this father is under. It is unlike anything you or I will ever experience in a free America. I have no doubt the father loves his little boy. But how many of us have stopped and thought about why this father did not come to his son the day he was found, exhausted and dehydrated having survived a treacherous trip at sea. Consider why he has not come for almost 5 months to support his son, hug his son, comfort his son. Again, I would suspect it is not out of lack of concern for his boy. I would suspect it is because Castro would not let him.

Is it possible the father wants the boy to remain with his family in Miami and live in freedom? My understanding is that the father knew Elian and his mother were coming to this country and even told other family members that he would get to America if he ''had to do so in a bowl.''

I can't imagine anyone disagrees with the notion that Castro controls the father's words and actions through duress—through intimidation. The fact is that none of us knows the true wishes of this father. Castro has used this father and son to manipulate both Cuba and the United States.

Today, the United States is not about to reunite a boy and his father, instead we are about to reunite a child and his dictator. And we are doing so against his mother's wishes. We may be doing so against his father's wishes, as well.

Last week, a spokesman of the Cuban embassy stated ''Elian Gonzalez is a possession of the Cuban Government.'' In Castro's Cuba, the state always has the last word in how a child is raised—it does not matter if a parent disagrees. According to Cuban law, any parent who questions the regime or takes any action deemed to run contrary to the revolution's goals could be imprisoned or executed.

Let me quote a former Cuban Government official from a recent Washington Post op-ed.

> Within Cuba, the return of Elian will not be seen as an act of justice by the U.S. government, but rather as yet another victory for the bully-boy tactics of Fidel Castro. This is why the dictator is trying to recover Elian—to convert him into a different kind of symbol—a symbol of the Revolution—even though for that to happen, Elian would have to renounce his mother, the family in Miami that took care of him and even in fact, his father, Juan Miguel. Because upon returning to Cuba, he will not belong to his family. He will be another son of the Revolution.

If Cuba were a free country, this situation would have been easily resolved. But Cuba is not free, it is a police state. In fact, Article 8 of Cuba's Code for Children and Youth states: ''Society and the State work for the efficient protection of youths against all influences contrary to their communist formation.''

Make no mistake, in Cuba, Elian will not have a normal childhood.

In Cuba, Elian will be allowed to live with his father until he is eleven; thereafter he will be sent to work in a farm-labor camp for 45 to 60 days per year.

In Cuba, Elian will face compulsory military service until he is 27.

In Cuba, Elian will be indoctrinated in the glories of ''the revolution'' and taught to regard any Cubans who reject Castroism—including his dead mother—as counterrevolutionaries and traitors.

In Cuba, Elian will be allowed to attend college only if his ''political attitude and social conduct'' satisfy the regime in Havana.

Returning Elian to Cuba means returning him to Fidel Castro. When I was a child, my parents had the last word in my upbringing. In Cuba, Castro's wishes carry the day—he can override any parent. Be assured Castro will begin his manipulation of Elian from the day of his return. I can see the images now—parades and banners, welcoming home the young defender of the ''Communist Revolution.'' Elian may remain closer to Fidel than any other child may be forced to suffer. The boy may get better treatment as a result, but this will be only on the surface. This innocent child will be captive—a prisoner in his own homeland. The regime cannot afford for this boy to return to Cuba only to renounce Castro's ways. Elian will be treated, not as a child, but as an opportunity to exploit. His home, his education, his father's salary, everything, will be provided as Fidel dictates. The pathetic efforts of a desperate tyrant to legitimize his method of oppression will make Elian a test. My colleagues, he is a child. Instead of Fidel's cruelties, he needs compassion.

There is a reason Elian's mother and countless others have risked everything and have given their lives in the hope that their children will taste freedom. And while Elian's mother's voice cannot be heard now, her actions were loud and clear.

I would not be so angry if we were truly reuniting a parent and child. But if we return Elian, the United States will be caving to the demands of the last tyrant in the Western Hemisphere and will be sending a six-year-old boy to a place that Human Rights Watch states has a ''highly developed machinery of repression.'' And the United States will be doing this without providing basic civil rights to Elian—without permitting his legal options to play out.

Instead, our Government is short circuiting justice for political expediency and we will have to live with that.

The outrage and fury I feel toward the administration, the Department of Justice and the INS for the manner in which they have handled the Elian Gonzalez case is overwhelming.

The United States is a Nation committed to the principles of freedom, justice, democracy and respect for human dignity. We are a nation built upon a rich diversity of heritage. We celebrate the uniqueness of our roots, family traditions and cultural experiences. And while this rich diversity is the strength of our great country, we, as Americans, share a common bond that is even stronger. That common bond is our precious freedom. Freedom to pursue our dreams, freedom to raise our children, freedom to speak our minds, and freedom from a government that dictates what we say, where we should live, and what we will become.

These principles strengthen our democracy, our nation. These principles are what continue to draw people to America's shores. Our democracy is designed to preserve and protect the rights of the weak and the strong. Our judicial system is designed to promote access to justice for all Americans. But what we have seen in the past several weeks from our own Justice Department in its' handling of the Elian Gonzalez case shakes the very foundation of our American principles.

Instead of defending these principles, this Administration has intimidated Elian's American family with the sheer weight, power, and force of the United States Government. This Administration has chosen to grind down this family's emotions and trample on the family's rights. In the process, the best interests of this boy have been undeniably neglected and his mother's wishes ignored. This Administration's treatment of a young child has evolved into an exercise of cruel and unusual punishment to preserve a pre-determined outcome and to placate an old and bitter dictator.

The United States is a free country. We have a Bill or Rights, a code of laws, and a separation of powers which guarantees no administration shall be able to sidestep the law. We are a country in which the judicial system should be permitted to work without presidential influence for political expediency—and certainly without bringing the mighty weight and power of the government down on the weakest of all people—a child.

But, in the last four months, this administration, our United States Government, has overstepped its bounds. Mr. President, I am disillusioned by the present status of this struggle for freedom. Disillusioned that these calls to honor freedom have fallen on deaf ears. But, then I think of the Cuban parents who so loved their children that they sent them unaccompanied to the United States in the 1960's in what became known as ''Operation Pedro Pan.'' Fourteen thousand and eighty-four children were sent away from the clutches of Castro by their loving parents to go to America to live in freedom. These parents willingly sent their children in order to escape Castro—in order to escape oppression. Many, if not most, of these children had no family in the United States. But they were sent to the United States with their parents wish for freedom—freedom at all costs.

We know Elian's mother sought freedom for her son—and she paid the ultimate price. We know many in Elian's family had already come to the United States; some recently, some long ago. But we have taken the sad, sad action of assuming a man whose very life and that of his family, depends upon the goodwill of a tyrant, has the ability to speak freely. What a tragedy that this man cannot speak openly and freely about his true desire. What a sad day in the history of the United States of America.

Our founding principle—our Declaration of Independence—declares, ''we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.'' We, the inheritors of this legacy, must not force people into tyranny.

I appeal to the President and the Attorney General to resolve this in such a manner that Elian's struggle and his mother's tragic death will not have been in vain. Perhaps we, the United States of America, will realize that if we don't, we are making a tragic mistake in the handling of this case. It is not too late, though, to do the right thing for this little boy. I call on the President of the United States and the Attorney General once again, to consider what is in the little boy's best interest.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I was listening to Senator MACK. And I really wish all Americans could hear his concerns and message because I don't think the message he is sending today is getting out to people. I really believe most people think this is just a technical issue, it is automatic, it is what ought to happen.

I think what the Senator from Florida shared with us indicates that this is not an ordinary situation. It is very unordinary. Cuba is not an ordinary country. It is a very unordinary country, in the manner and in the ways the Senator from Florida described it, and more.

I thank him for coming here and asking the President and the Attorney General in a senatorial way—he made no threats, and there were no connotations in his voice. He clearly said, I ask that you consider the other side of this coin.

I thank him for that.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I listened carefully to the Senator from Florida. But I am reminded, it is a pathetic thing. It is pathetic to see this child twisted and turned and seduced, if I may say—something that goes far beyond the capacity of a 6-year-old child to analyze and describe in appropriate terms.

But I say this: My sympathy goes out to the family in Miami that has been attached. But I also know this is a place where we often preach family values, family control, no interference by government, to remind everyone that this is a country of laws. If we subvert the law simply because there is pressure coming from one corner or another, what kind of message does it send to the millions of people who would crowd our shores and want to be here? It would say, well, we discriminate because we have louder voices in one place than we have in another.

Again, I think we have to remember that this country is founded on the principle of being a nation of laws, and one can challenge and go to court.

But to say, no, we are not going to obey the law, I don't think, frankly, does the cause of our country or the cause of this little boy, in the final analysis, any value.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, there was an interest here, certainly. There are some who have discriminated against one group or another, who have not spoken out for one group and have spoken out for another.

In my career representing the State of Florida and the Senate, I have spoken out for every group looking for honest and fair treatment, whether they be Cuban, whether they be Nicaraguan, or whether they be Haitian. I have done that. I am proud that I have done that. Some of those positions have not been particularly popular in my State. But I have always taken that position.

Again, I think the right thing to do is to ask a very simple question: What is in the boy's best interest?

Mr. LAUTENBERG. In all due respect, I say this to my friend from Florida for whom I have a great deal of respect and admiration. Reunification of families is something we wrestle with here all the time—people pleading to allow a relative to join a family that has been here for years. And we say: No, the law doesn't permit it, the rules don't permit it. So we say: Sorry, we can't do that.

I get lots of pleas in my office—I am sure every Senator does—saying: Let my mother come from country X, Y, or Z, or otherwise, and let us join together.

I say once again, if we forget we are a nation of laws, then all of us—the people in this room and the people throughout the country—ought to be bound by the same rules and the same laws. We cannot make the kind of exception that looks as if it is responding to particular pressure in a particular moment.

RESOLUTION ON METHAMPHETAMINE CLEAN UP FUNDS

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, today I rise in support of Senator GRASSLEY's Sense of the Senate Resolution urging President Clinton to see to it that the Department of Justice reprograms $10,000,000 in recovery funds within the Community Oriented Policing Service (COPS) so the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) can continue to reimburse state and local law enforcement officials in the proper removal and disposal of hazardous materials recovered from clandestine methamphetamine laboratories.

Mr. President, Wyoming is one of a number of states that has experienced an astronomic increase in methamphetamine production, trafficking and use. In fact, during fiscal year 1998, of all cases prosecuted by the U.S. Attorney's office in Wyoming, 45% were drug cases and of that nearly 75% were methamphetamine related.

When law enforcement officials bust a methamphetamine laboratory not only do they have to prosecute the individuals involved but they must also dispose of the highly toxic chemicals that were used to produce this illegal drug. It is estimated that it costs between $3,000 and $100,000 for the safe clean up of methamphetamine labs. It is very important to see to it that methamphetamine labs are properly handled because six pounds of toxic waste are produced for every pound of methamphetamine manufactured.

Wyoming's law enforcement officials rely exclusively on the funds that the DEA provides to state and local law enforcement officials for the clean up of methamphetamine labs. Because of this growing problem, the allocated funds the DEA uses to reimburse state and local law enforcement officials ran out last month. As a result, numerous towns and communities across the country are no longer able to rely on the DEA for much needed funding.

Mr. President, it is my hope that President Clinton will see to it that the Justice Department approves this reprogramming of funds so law enforcement officials across the country can continue to fight the growing problem of methamphetamine production.

NATIONAL ORGAN AND TISSUE DONOR AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today to draw attention to the critical issue of organ and tissue donation, particularly with the upcoming National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week (April 16th-22nd) upon us. Although many of us will be back in our home states next week, we must remember to spread the word about the need for donation whenever we have the chance.

National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week was first designated by Congress in 1983 and proclaimed by the President annually since then to raise awareness of the significant need for organ and tissue donation and to encourage all Americans to share their decision to donate with their families so their wishes can be honored. Last year, for example, the Transplant Recipients International Organization's Chicago chapter reached thousands of people through its donation displays at City Hall and other public buildings. In addition, many groups sponsored donor recognition ceremonies, remembrance services, and other events to honor the generous and caring individuals and families who have given the gift of life.

Today, nearly 70,000 men, women, and children are waiting for an organ transplant and the list is growing longer. Each day about 57 people are given the gift of life through the generosity of organ and tissue donations, but another 16 people on the waiting list die because the need for donations greatly exceeds the supply available. Additionally, the need for a more diverse donor pool, including a variety of racial and ethnic minorities, will also continue to grow in the coming years. All anyone needs to do is this: say yes to organ and tissue donation on a donor card or driver's license and discuss your decision with your family members so they know your wishes. Transplantation does save lives, but only if all of us help as we strive toward a fair, equitable and accountable system of organ and tissue donation and transplantation.

Last session, the Give Thanks, Give Life resolution that I sponsored with my distinguished colleagues, Senator FRIST, Senator DEWINE, Senator KENNEDY and Senator LEVIN and others was passed in the Senate. This legislation, which has the support of numerous national organ and tissue donation organizations, designates Thanksgiving of 2000 as a day for families to discuss organ and tissue donation with each other since the final decision to share the gift of life is almost always made by a loved one's family. This week, I also introduced the Comprehensive Immunosuppressive Drug Coverage for Transplant Patients Act of 2000, which sets up a new policy stating that all Medicare beneficiaries who have received a transplant and need immunosuppressive drugs to prevent rejection of their transplant will be covered for as long as anti-rejection drugs are needed.

There are many stories that touch the heart on this compelling issue, but I'll share just one. Kelly Therese Nachreiner was a bright, artistic teenager in the class of 2002. At 16, she went with her mother, Mary, to get her temporary driver's license. At that time, Mary pointed out the donation question on the form for her license to Kelly, having no idea how her daughter would respond to this serious issue. Kelly quickly responded, "Well, of course, Mom, I mean if somebody can live after me . . . if I'm dead why does it matter? Why do I want to keep those organs? If I can save somebody else's life, why wouldn't I?" Just one month later, her unselfish decision would save the lives of three people after she died as the result of an automobile accident. Kelly not only saved those three lives, she also brought a spotlight to the issue of organ and tissue donation awareness, which can potentially save thousands more.

Mr. President, all of us would want to save somebody else's life if we could. Let us continue to work together throughout National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week and beyond, to promote organ and tissue donation wherever we can.

ANNIVERSARY OF THE COLUMBINE HIGH SCHOOL TRAGEDY

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, next Thursday, April 20th, marks an important date in the hearts of the families of those killed inside Columbine High School, and for those who survived the horrible events on that infamous day one year ago. Indeed, this day is important for everyone whose lives were touched by those tragic events.

I can think of no greater burden for a parent than to have to bury one of his or her children. That burden is only magnified when a loved one is taken with such unimaginable and unspeakable violence.

A year is not enough time to heal the scars created on that day; not for the families of those taken, not for the children who were spared, not for the community of Littleton, Colorado, and not for our nation.

While the events of that fateful day shall always be with us, so too is the memory of those slain and the strength of spirit they and their families have given to all of us. Like the Columbine flower which returns every Spring from under the darkness of winter, so too has a sense of community blossomed in Littleton and throughout the State of Colorado in response to the horror of that day.

As a step toward healing, many groups, individuals, and entities from both Colorado and our nation have worked to honor those who have died and to memorialize their passing in an appropriate and meaningful manner.

In seems especially fitting that today I recognize with honor the parents and the families of those killed and wounded in the school that day who are working to raise money to replace the library at Columbine High School, the scene of much of the violence that occurred last April 20.

They have, to date, received pledges for nearly all of the estimated $3 million it will take to replace the library at Columbine High School. Other pending pledges could bring them close to the full amount they need to replace this scene of horror with one of hope. This is just one outstanding example of a community pulling together in a grassroots effort to lift itself up free of governmental intervention and regulation. I would encourage every American capable of sharing to help all of the families whose lives were abruptly and forever changed by the events at Columbine in whatever way they can.

Mr. President, there is good and evil present among us in human nature. We never know when we will be faced with either. I pray no family has ever to face the sadness and grief visited on the victims and the families of those in Columbine High School one year ago today. I also pray that peace comes to all of our families through the gentle spirit of all the victims taken from us in Columbine High School, and those who will live with the pain caused that day. That spirit lives on in all of us and has been best described by the students and community of Littleton who proudly proclaim: ''We are Columbine.''

CARHART V. STENBERG

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, on April 25, 2000 the United States Supreme Court will hear arguments in the Carhart v. Stenberg case. As a lifelong Nebraskan, I have received several requests to take a prominent public position with regard to this case, including a request that I file an amicus brief, also known as a ''friend of the court'' brief in this case. I am honored by these requests, but remain determined not to become officially involved in this case before the Supreme Court. I have come to believe that active involvement in matters before the courts, particularly the U.S. Supreme Court, would be an ineffective use of the power of the Senate office which I hold in trust for all Nebraskans.

However, I do not want my silence and absence from these amicus briefs to be mistaken for something that it is not. Because I have had several opportunities as a Nebraska Senator to debate this issue, and because this landmark case before the Supreme Court affects Nebraskans directly, I feel compelled to explain to Nebraskans my thoughts on this important issue.

On September 24, 1999, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld a Nebraska district court decision that a Nebraska statute banning a medical procedure commonly known as ''partial-birth abortion'' is unconstitutional. The appellate court sustained the decision on the grounds that the Nebraska law creates an undue burden on women seeking abortions.

It is my sincere belief that the Eight Circuit's decision should be sustained. In sum, the law adopted by the State of Nebraska (LB 23, June 9, 1997) is too vague to be enforced without placing an undue burden on a woman making this difficult choice. The Supreme Court should uphold the Eighth Circuit's decision because this law bans procedures commonly used for second trimester abortions and will affect any Nebraska doctor who performs either the D&E (dilation and evacuation) or D&X (dilation and extraction) procedure. This statute makes the act of performing legal medical procedures a Class III felony (up to 20 years in jail) and subjects a participating physician to the loss of his or her license.

Each year, five thousand women in Nebraska, with the help and counsel of their loved ones, their doctors and their clergy, face the very difficult decision to end a pregnancy. None of us believe that they make their decision lightly. They are guided by their moral beliefs and by the previous decisions of the Supreme Court giving elected State and Federal officials a legal foundation upon which to effectuate, and in some cases limit, the scope of their choices.

The central problem with the Nebraska law is that legislators made no attempt to abide by previous Court decisions. Called the ''Partial Birth Abortion Ban'' by its sponsors, the bill has been inaccurately characterized as ''banning certain late term abortions.'' In reality, the bill does not concern itself with late term abortions—neither curbing them nor banning them—which the Court gives lawmakers the capacity to do. Instead the bill seeks to ban a medical procedure used to end a pregnancy without reference to when that procedure is used. Moreover, it bans a medical intervention that is very difficult to define with the precision needed under law to give both doctors and those who enforce the law the guidance they need.

Given this uncertainty, the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals found that LB 23 was unconstitutional. Writing for the majority, former Chief Judge Richard Arnold explained that it created an undue burden on women because, in many instances, it would ban the most common and safest procedure for second-trimester abortions. The Court pointed out that the term ''partial birth abortion'' has ''no fixed medical or legal content'' and that the Nebraska statute is too broad.

Most second and third-term abortions occur in situations where a woman would have preferred, indeed desperately wanted, to carry the baby full term. The doctor made a recommendation based upon a threat to the life and health of the mother if the pregnancy were to continue. A law like Nebraska's would make doctors who perform this procedure liable for prosecution, with penalties that include loss of their license to practice medicine and time in jail. The threat of these penalties could result in physicians choosing not to treat women with a history of high-risk pregnancies.

We are wrong to presume that women no longer die during child birth or abortion. Medical science has reduced but not eliminated the risk associated with either. We must not deny women their ability to freely choose to undergo an abortion, or the access to physician care necessary to ensure their safety.

Freedom of choice in reproductive decision-making is a constitutional guarantee established by this Court with limitations. Nebraska's law fundamentally ignores the limitations allowed and not allowed by the Court's previous decisions. If it is sustained, it will imperil the safety and well-being of women throughout our state. We cannot allow misinformation to obscure the broad consensus in America that women must decide for themselves how best to live their lives. Moreover, it is equally important that no one be denied the safe and appropriate medical treatment necessary to make a reproductive decision which this law would do.

It is my hope that this statement will help Nebraskans better understand my position on this very important matter.

PIPELINE SAFETY

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I would like to share with my colleagues some recent developments on the pipeline safety legislation I introduced two months ago. I'm pleased to report that in the past week, we've made a lot of progress.

About 10 months have passed since a gasoline pipeline in Bellingham, Washington ruptured—spilling more than 275,000 gallons of gasoline. That pipeline disaster killed three young people, and left thousands of people in my state wondering about the safety of the pipelines near their homes.

We can't undo what happened in Bellingham—it will never be the same. But we can make sure that what happened in Bellingham doesn't happen anywhere else.

There are 2.2 million miles of pipelines running across the country—bringing us the energy we need to fuel our cars and heat our homes. They run near our schools, houses and communities. We have a responsibility to make sure these pipelines are safe. And it is clear that the current laws are not sufficient.

That's why I introduced my pipeline safety bill back in January. Since that time, I have been meeting with the Administration, with Senators, safety officials, citizen groups, and industry representatives.

This week, I spoke at a national conference on pipeline safety here in Washington, D.C. It was hosted by the National Pipeline Reform Coalition, SAFE Bellingham, and the Cascade Columbia Alliance.

I can tell you that people all across the country are following this issue closely, they understand the problem, and they are calling for action.

I want to be clear. We cannot wait any longer—and we can certainly not let this year pass without improving our nation's inadequate pipeline safety laws.

The danger posed by aging, corroded pipelines is not going away. In fact, it's getting worse.

Since 1986, there have been more than 5,700 pipeline accidents, 325 deaths, 1,500 injuries. More than $850 million in environmental damage. On average there is 1 pipeline accident every day, and 6 million hazardous gallons are spilled every year.

In the two months since I introduced my pipeline safety bill, at least 20 states—almost half of the country—have experienced pipeline accidents. Let me repeat that. In just two months, 20 more states have had pipeline accidents.

Just last week there was a major pipeline spill in Maryland. The clock is ticking, and the list of affected communities is growing.

Back home in Washington state, there is a great deal of impatience that Congress has not acted on pipeline safety measures. This editorial by the Bellingham Herald—from April 5th—gives you a good sense of how many of my constituents feel.

It's titled, Wake Up, Pipeline Bill Is On The Way. It's addressed to Congress, and it says, in part:

> Don't know if you had a chance to look at our pipeline bill, but we're sending you a message. We want you to hear us loud and clear.

And later it says:

> * * * even though what happened in Bellingham could happen in any one of your home states, we feel you aren't giving this issue much attention.

As this editorial says—these accidents can happen in any of our states. I don't want another community to go through what the people of Bellingham, Washington have gone through. We can make pipelines safer today.

My bill addresses five key areas of pipeline safety: My bill will expand state authority over pipeline safety. My bill will improve inspection and prevention practices. My bill will invest in new safety technology. My bill will expand the public's right to know about problems with pipelines. Finally, my bill will increase funding to improve pipeline safety by providing funds for new state and federal pipeline safety programs.

I'm proud to say that we are making progress. And I want to share with you some recent developments.

Yesterday, Senator MCCAIN announced that he has scheduled a hearing on pipeline safety for May 11, and he has committed to marking up a pipeline safety bill by the end of May. He also introduced his own pipeline safety bill.

As you may recall, in February, I sent a letter to Senator MCCAIN asking for a hearing. Last week, I spoke with him in person about it, and he pledged to work with me on this issue. As he told me, "this is the right thing to do."

I would like to commend Senator MCCAIN for moving the process forward. I would also like to share with the Senate the important work done by the parents of the young people who were killed in the Bellingham explosion, especially Mr. Frank King. On Tuesday, Mr. King met with Senator MCCAIN's staff, and in bringing his own personal story to the Senate—he has helped move this legislation forward.

I'm pleased today to become the Democratic sponsor of Senator MCCAIN's bill. This bill contains many of the elements of the legislation I introduced back in January. The bill also includes some of the good elements of the Administration's proposal, which was introduced this week.

Senator MCCAIN, as chairman of the Commerce Committee, has done a service to our nation and the state of Washington by providing his leadership on this important topic.

During the committee process, I hope we can all work together in a bipartisan manner to make the McCain-Murray bill even more effective at improving pipeline safety. There is still a long way to go, and I look forward to working with Senator MCCAIN on this important issue.

Another step forward took place this week, when the Clinton/Gore Administration sent its pipeline safety proposal to Congress. Working with us, the Administration has crafted a proposal which includes many of my priorities: It places a clear value on the importance of safety. It strengthens community "right to know" provisions. It improves inspection standards. It invests in research and development for inspection devices. And it increases penalties for safety violations.

This proposal is a good first step, and now we will work to improve it. Clearly, there are some differences on the partnership with states provisions and other areas, and I will be working to strengthen them within the legislative process. I should add that the Administration's bill has been introduced in the Senate by Senators HOLLINGS and SARBANES, and in the House by Representatives SHUSTER, OBERSTAR, FRANKS, and WISE.

I want to commend the Vice President, who learned about this issue when he was in Washington state. He recognized the importance of pipeline safety, and he has been working to prompt the Administration to act quickly. I also appreciate the work Transportation Secretary Rodney Slater has done. Shortly after the explosion, he stationed a pipeline inspector in Washington state.

So clearly we are making some progress, but there is still much more to do. Unfortunately, the Senate leadership has not expressed a lot of interest in pipeline safety.

I recently received a note from the majority leader's office—listing almost 50 bills that he has deemed "Legislative Calendar Items" which he hopes to consider prior to the August recess. Pipeline safety was not on his list. Now, I know priority lists are flexible, and I hope we can get a pipeline safety bill through the committee and onto the Senate floor for consideration before August.

We need to pass a pipeline safety bill, and we need to do it now. I again ask my colleagues to stand with the thousands of people who have been adversely affected by pipeline disasters and pass a bill that will make sure no other community has to suffer from another pipeline disaster.

We have a strong pipeline safety bill. We have Administration support. And we have a commitment from the Commerce Committee leadership to pass legislation this year.

This is our chance for safer pipelines, for safer communities, and for peace of mind. We have a bill. It's up to this Congress, this year to make sure this opportunity doesn't pass us by.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Wednesday, April 12, 2000, the Federal debt stood at $5,764,655,944,486.86 (Five trillion, seven hundred sixty-four billion, six hundred fifty-five million, nine hundred forty-four thousand, four hundred eighty-six dollars and eighty-six cents).

One year ago, April 12, 1999, the Federal debt stood at $5,663,867,000,000 (Five trillion, six hundred sixty-three billion, eight hundred sixty-seven million).

Five years ago, April 12, 1995, the Federal debt stood at $4,874,101,000,000 (Four trillion, eight hundred seventy-four billion, one hundred one million).

Ten years ago, April 12, 1990, the Federal debt stood at $3,087,071,000,000 (Three trillion, eighty-seven billion, seventy-one million).

Fifteen years ago, April 12, 1985, the Federal debt stood at $1,729,937,000,000 (One trillion, seven hundred twenty-nine billion, nine hundred thirty-seven million) which reflects a debt increase of more than $4 trillion—$4,034,718,944,486.86 (Four trillion, thirty-four billion, seven hundred eighteen million, nine hundred forty-four thousand, four hundred eighty-six dollars and eighty-six cents) during the past 15 years.

THE OCCASION OF THE BICENTENNIAL OF THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, as Chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, it is my great pleasure to congratulate the Library of Congress, and Dr. Billington, the Librarian on the occasion of the Library's Bicentennial. The Library is America's oldest Federal cultural institution, and was established on April 24, 1800. It houses the largest and most extensive collection in history, and is one of the nation's assets. Congress is very proud of the Library, and the role it plays in ensuring free public access to information. As we move forward into the new millennium, efforts are underway to enhance public access to the collections of the Library through the National Digital Library.

The Library has planned a wonderful day of activities on Monday, April 24, in honor of Thomas Jefferson's birthday. It was Thomas Jefferson's collection of 6,487 books that first began the Library's collections. The events include the issuance of the first bimetallic commemorative coin, and a postage stamp featuring a color photograph of the interior dome and several of the arched windows in the Jefferson building. At noon there will be a birthday party and concert outside on the East Lawn of the Capitol.

I ask unanimous consent that the following message from the Librarian of Congress, and press announcements of the exhibits and events associated with the Bicentennial of the Library be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION—A MESSAGE FROM THE LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS, MARCH 2000

The Library of Congress—America's national library and oldest federal cultural institution—will celebrate its Bicentennial in the year 2000. We want to make our 200th birthday a national celebration of the important role that libraries play in our democratic society. Our goal is to inspire creativity in the century ahead by stimulating greater use of the Library of Congress and libraries across the country.

The centerpiece of this effort is an unprecedented project called ''Local Legacies,'' an attempt to celebrate and share with the nation the grassroots creativity of every part of America. The Library of Congress will ask each Member of Congress to lead an effort to find or create documentation for at least one significant cultural event or tradition that has been important to or representative of your district or state as we reach the end of this century. Selections from each documentation project will be forwarded to the Library and added to the rich collections of our American Folklife Center's Archive of Folk Culture to provide a rich cross section of the grassroots creativity of America that will be preserved and shared with future generations.

We also plan to digitize selections and share them electronically, free of charge over the Internet, through our National Digital Library Program. All participants and each Member of Congress will be credited with helping locate a distinctive contribution from his or her district or state. This is an especially exciting and historic initiative because we hope to receive and celebrate the widest possible range of contributions, including video, sound, print, manuscript and electronic formats.

Several other bicentennial activities embrace the broadest participation of all Americans and encourage an understanding of the creative roles that libraries play in modern society and in social scholarly discourse. Included among them are symposia such as ''Frontiers of the Mind in the 21st Century,'' which brought together distinguished scholars who examined the exciting horizons for knowledge in the century ahead in a symposium held in June and now available on the Library's Web site (www.loc.gov). Poet Laureate Robert Pinsky's ''Favorite Poem'' program will create audio and video archives of Americans of all ages and backgrounds reading their favorite poems. Two commemorative coins and a stamp will be issued in honor of the Library's 200th birthday, April 24, 2000. Also on that day, the Library will launch a new education Web site for families that will complement our widely acclaimed American Memory site for students and teachers. Another special initiative, ''Gifts to the Nation,'' will encourage benefactors to bring rare and important acquisitions to the national collection in the Library of Congress.

I invite you to learn more about our Bicentennial, and I encourage you to participate in the programs and activities marking our 200th birthday. As you reflect on our nation's accomplishments as we near the end of the century, you may recall the Jeffersonian principle upon which the Library of Congress was built—that free access to information and knowledge is one of the cornerstones of democracy.

JAMES H. BILLINGTON,
The Librarian of Congress.

BICENTENNIAL CELEBRATION ANNOUNCED

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS TO OFFER NEW WEB SITE, STAMP, COINS, EXHIBITS AND CONCERT

General Colin Powell, Katharine Graham, Isaac Stern, William Styron, David Copperfield, John Kenneth Galbraith, Jeanne Kirkpatrick, Maurice Sendak, Bobby Short, and Big Bird are among those who will be honored as ''Living Legends'' during a daylong National Bicentennial Birthday Party and Concert celebrating the 200th anniversary of the founding of the Library of Congress on Monday, April 24, beginning at 9:30 a.m. The Library of Congress is America's oldest federal cultural institution and the largest library in the world.

Other events on April 24 include:

First-day ceremonies for a new Library of Congress postage stamp and commemorative coins

Launch of a new Web site for young people and their families

Unveiling of a national public service advertising campaign in partnership with the Ad Council

Free performances and concert celebrating American music, history and culture and recognizing the contribution of the ''Living Legends''

Opening of a major exhibition on Thomas Jefferson and another on ''The Wizard of Oz''

Key press dates prior to April are:

Press Briefing, 10 a.m., Friday, April 14, National Press Club, 529 14th Street NW

Bicentennial press briefing with Librarian of Congress James H. Billington on the Library's efforts to address the digital divide. He will also announce the final details of the April 24 celebration, the new books just published on the Library of Congress, and the full list of the ''Living Legends'' whose creativity the Library is honoring in its Bicentennial year.

Exhibits Preview and Light Lunch, 11 a.m.–1:30 p.m., Thursday, April 20, LJ 119, Thomas Jefferson Building

Members of the press are invited to preview two new exhibitions created for the Library's Bicentennial: ''Thomas Jefferson'' and ''The Wizard of Oz: An American Fairy Tale.''

The Jefferson exhibition includes the display of Jefferson's library. It marks the first time since 1815 that the public will be able to view Jefferson's library, the seed from which the collections of the Library of Congress grew, in his original order. The books have been reassembled after a worldwide search to locate matching volumes, identical to those that were destroyed in a fire in 1851. Numerous additional personal items will be displayed exploring the contradictions and complexities of Jefferson the man, the myth, and the model, including materials relating to the Hemings family, the founding of the United States and the earliest known draft of the Declaration of Independence in Jefferson's own hand.

''The Wizard of Oz: An American Fairy Tale'' brings together approximately 100 items relating to this children's classic, including play scripts, rare books, photographs, costumes, drawings, film clips, dolls, games and toys. A pair of the ruby slippers (size 5B) worn by Judy Garland in the 1939 film will be displayed, along with the scarecrow costume worn by Ray Bolger, the mane and beard worn by Bert Lahr as the Cowardly Lion, a full Munchkin costume and an Emerald City townsman's coat.

Curators will provide press tours of the two exhibitions.

Celebration, All day, Monday, April 24, Thomas Jefferson Building

Congress James Billington will be joined by "Living Legends" and Big Bird and Maria of "Sesame Street" in blowing out the candles on a large birthday cake in the shape of the Thomas Jefferson Building.

6:30 p.m.—Great Hall: Remarks by David McCullough and Librarian of Congress James H. Billington and opening reception for "Thomas Jefferson" exhibition. By invitation only; open to press to cover.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS CELEBRATES BICENTENNIAL WITH MAJOR EXHIBITION ON THOMAS JEFFERSON

JEFFERSON'S LIBRARY REASSEMBLED FOR FIRST TIME SINCE 1815

The keystone for the Bicentennial celebrations of the Library of Congress is an exhibition about the Library's very own "founding father," Thomas Jefferson, whose personal library of 6,487 books was the seed from which the nation's library grew. Congress purchased Jefferson's library after its own collections, housed in the U.S. Capitol, were burned by the British in 1814.

That library—the original volumes that came to Washington in carts from Monticello—will be a major feature of the "Thomas Jefferson" exhibition. Because of an 1851 fire in the Library, many of those original books had been lost. Spurred by a very generous donation of Jerry and Gene Jones, as a Bicentennial "Gift to the Nation," the Library has been reassembling copies of the same editions of the works that Jefferson held. The reconstituted Jefferson's library should be more than 90 percent complete by April 24.

The display of Jefferson's library as part of this exhibition will be the first time ever that the public will be able to view Jefferson's library. It is also the first time that the volumes have been assembled in one place in the original order that Jefferson himself devised since the collection came to Washington in 1815. Visitors to the exhibition will be able to tell which volumes were owned by Jefferson and sold to Congress in 1815, which were recently identified and pulled from the Library's general collections, which have been recently purchased, and which are still missing.

"Thomas Jefferson" will be on view in the Northwest Gallery and Pavilion of the Thomas Jefferson Building, 10 First Street S.E., from April 24 through October 31. Hours for the exhibition are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday–Saturday.

Items from the exhibition are available on the Library's Web site at www.loc.gov, and by April 24 the Library's entire collection of Jefferson Papers (more than 25,000 items) will be accessible on-line.

Thomas Jefferson—founding father, farmer, architect, inventor, slaveholder, book collector, scholar, diplomat and third president of the United States—was a complex figure who contributed immeasurably to the creation of the new republicanism in America. Wherever Anglo-American culture has shaped political and intellectual developments, Jefferson is almost inevitably part of the mix. Drawing on the extraordinary written legacy of Thomas Jefferson that is held in the Library's collections, the exhibition traces Jefferson's development from his earliest days in Virginia to an ever-expanding realm of influence in republican Virginia, the American Revolutionary government, the creation of the American nation, the revolution in individual rights in America and the world, the revolution in France, and the burgeoning republican revolutionary movement throughout the world. Items borrowed from other institutions contribute to the exhibition's attempt to offer viewers a fully rounded portrait of the nation's third president.

The exhibition focuses on the complexities and contradictions of Thomas Jefferson, the man, the myth, the model. He was simultaneously an unquenchable idealist and a third-headed realist. He deplored inequality among men, but owned slaves, supported servitude, and relegated women to a secondary role. He supported freedom of the press until his own foibles and politics became the focus. He was a firm believer in the separation of church and state, but he was often accused of being anti-Christian. He expounded the virtues of public education, ensured that his own daughters were well educated, and founded a public university at Charlottesville, but he assumed that access to higher education would be strictly limited. His life embodies the public and private struggles of life in a democratic republic.

Some 150 items in the eight sections will illustrate and provide a context for the life and character of Thomas Jefferson. The final and ninth section will be the reassembled "Jefferson Library." Visitors to the exhibition will see such items as the only surviving fragment of the earliest known draft of the Declaration of Independence as well as the desk on which he composed the Declaration; Martha Jefferson's thread case; Jefferson's instructions to Lewis and Clark; political cartoons of the day lampooning Jefferson; and the last letter that Thomas Jefferson wrote to the mayor of the city of Washington just 10 days before he died, espousing his vision of the Declaration of Independence and the American nation as signals of the blessings of self-government to an ever-evolving world.

"Life and Labor at Monticello" examines how Jefferson's family, his era, education, role as plantation master and slaveholder, and his love and use of books influenced his character and the formation of his ideas on individual and institutional rights and limits. Items include:

Thomas Jefferson's Memorandum Book, 1773, where he kept detailed records on his expenditures including the purchase of slaves;

Plantation account books kept by Jefferson's wife and then his granddaughter, recording purchases made from Monticello slaves, especially the Hemings family, for vegetables and fowl from the slave families' own flocks and gardens;

The 1873 memoir by Madison Hemings published in the Pike County (Ohio) Republican, who testified that his mother, Sally Hemings, gave birth to five children "and Jefferson was the father of them all." Historical evidence, both circumstantial and direct, documentary and oral, along with DNA testing in 1998, substantiates Hemings' assertion;

Letters Jefferson exchanged in 1791 with Benjamin Banneker, a free black living in Maryland, in which Jefferson praised Banneker's mathematical accomplishment ("no body wishes more than I do to see such proofs as you exhibit, that nature has given to our black brethren, talents equal to those of the other colors of men * * *") as well as with Abbé Henri Gregoire in 1809 trying to explain why he asserted the inferiority of African Americans in his Notes on the State of Virginia published in 1785; and

Letter written by Thomas Jefferson to John Adams in 1815 in which he says, "I cannot live without books, but fewer will suffice where amusement, and not use, is the only future object."

The exhibition continues by demonstrating the expanding influence of Jefferson on American life and his interest in creating a culture based on republican principles—first in his own state of Virginia, then on the federal scene with his drafting of the Declaration of Independence and his election to the presidency in 1800. On view are:

One of the nation's greatest treasures—Jefferson's "original Rough draught" of the Declaration of Independence. The "Rough draught" is the final draft presented by Jefferson to his fellow committee members and indicates changes made by John Adams and Benjamin Franklin;

Fragment of the earliest known draft of the Declaration of Independence in Jefferson's hand;

An 1806 document in President Jefferson's hand calling upon Congress to end the practice of importing slaves as soon as permitted by the U.S. Constitution in 1808; and Notes on the State of Virginia, 1785, the only book ever published by Thomas Jefferson.

"The West" explores Thomas Jefferson's persistent fascination with the vast part of the continent that lay beyond Virginia—an area he never saw—and his conviction that the new nation had to expand westward in order to survive. A highlight is Jefferson's instructions to the explorers Meriwether Lewis and William Clark before they set out to map and explore the Western territories with their Corps of Discovery in 1803. Visitors can also see a Nicholas King manuscript map documenting the Lewis and Clark expedition that is annotated by Lewis with information from fur traders and Native Americans.

The influence of Jefferson's republican ideas were felt far beyond America, especially in France, his first experience on the world stage beyond America. He became an ardent supporter of the French revolution and often consulted with Lafayette during the drafting of the French Declaration of the Rights of Man. In a July 9, 1789, letter to Jefferson, Lafayette asked him for his "observations" on "my bill of rights" before presenting it to the National Assembly. On view in the exhibition is a manuscript copy of the French Declaration written in a clerical hand, with emendations in the hand of Thomas Jefferson. Also in the exhibition is the 1789 passport that Thomas Jefferson used upon his return from France, signed by King Louis XVI.

The exhibition concludes with "Epitaph: Take Care of Me," which reviews Jefferson's own evaluation of the meaning of his life and his thoughts about how he would be viewed by history. Key items here are: A sketch and wording for Jefferson's tombstone, in his own hand; A letter explaining his position on slavery, written just six weeks before his death; A letter to Jefferson from his granddaughter, Ellen Randolph Coolidge, despairing of the "canker of slavery" that oppresses the Southern states; and A newspaper account of the sale of Jefferson's slaves by his heirs in order to pay off estate debts.

A volume accompanying the exhibition, Thomas Jefferson: Genius of Liberty, includes an introduction by Garry Wills and essays by Jefferson scholars Pauline Maier, Charles A. Miller, Annette Gordon-Reed, Peter S. Onuf and Joseph J. Ellis. Published by Viking Studio, the hardcover volume is highly illustrated with mostly color images and sells for $35. It is available in major bookstores and from the Library's Sales Shops; order with major credit card by calling (202) 707–0204.

COMMEMORATIVE COINS AND STAMP ISSUES FOR THE NATION

The Bicentennial of the Library of Congress presents a unique opportunity for commemorative items. Commemorative coins and a commemorative stamp for the Library's Bicentennial will be issued on April 24, the Library's 200th birthday.

The Citizens Commemorative Coin Advisory Committee recommended enactment of legislation to mint a commemorative coin to honor the Library of Congress's Bicentennial. As one of only two commemorative coins to be issued in 2000, this is an extraordinary honor for the Library. The Library's coin will be the nation's first bimetallic coin (gold and platinum) and the first commemorative with the new millennium date.

The minting of commemorative coins requires passage of legislation by both chambers of the U.S. Congress. The coin bill (H.R. 3790) was passed by the House of Representatives on August 4, 1998, and by the Senate on October 6. President Clinton signed the bill into law as P.L. 105–268 on October 19, 1998. The design of the commemorative coins by sculptors and engravers at the Philadelphia Mint is under way.

The Citizens' Stamp Advisory Committee, a group of independent citizens appointed by the Postmaster General to review the more than 40,000 suggestions for stamp subjects received by the U.S. Postal Service annually, recommended a commemorative stamp for issuance in honor of the Library's birthday. Ethel Kessler, the designer of the breast cancer stamp, designed the Library's Bicentennial commemorative stamp, which features a photograph by Michael Freeman of the interior dome and several of the arched windows in the main Reading Room in the 1897 Thomas Jefferson Building.

The stamp will be issued on April 24, 2000, during a ceremony to be held in the Jefferson Building in Washington. From April 25 through May 31, state and local libraries across the country will hold issuance ceremonies to celebrate the Library's birthday and to applaud the important role of libraries throughout the United States.

How You Can Participate: If your library or other institution would like to sponsor a second-day-issue event, contact Kathy Woodrell in the Bicentennial Program Office at (800) 707–7145 or kwoo@loc.gov.

THE LOCAL LEGACIES

The Local Legacies project is an opportunity for citizens to participate in the Library of Congress's Bicentennial Program. Working through their U.S. senator or representative and with hometown libraries, folklife organizations and other local cultural institutions, Americans everywhere have been participating in an unprecedented effort to document the cultural heritage of communities throughout the nation.

What is a local legacy?

It is a traditional activity or event that merits being documented for future generations. A Local Legacy might include the music, crafts or food customs that represent traditional life. Examples of defining or signature events include a rodeo, powwow, auction, market-day celebration, parade, procession or festival. Local Legacies might also include the artistry of individuals performing traditional music or dance, or working at crafts or trades. From zydeco music to decoy carving, rodeos to dogsled races, parades to food festivals, the Local Legacies project is reaching into every corner of the nation to document America's folk heritage.

More than 1,000 Local Legacies projects, which were selected by members of Congress in every state and the District of Columbia, celebrate the nation's diversity as a source of its strength and vitality. As a whole, the projects will serve as a snapshot of everyday life in America at the turn of the 21st century and will be preserved in the Library's Folklife Center and made available for study by others.

On May 23, the Library of Congress will celebrate these cultural and historical contributions to the Bicentennial with participants and their Congressional representatives. Selections from the Local Legacies projects will be digitized and shared electronically over the Internet at www.loc.gov, where Americans for generations to come will be able to learn about their cultural heritage.

A NEW COLLECTION OF AMERICA'S FAVORITE POEMS

Poet Laureate of the United States Robert Pinsky launched the Favorite Poem Project with poetry readings in New York, Washington, Boston, St. Louis and Los Angeles in April 1998, during National Poetry Month. A part of the Library of Congress Bicentennial celebration, the Project has created audio and video archives of Americans of all ages, backgrounds and walks of life reciting their favorite poems. At the heart of this initiative is Mr. Pinsky's belief that poetry is meant to be read aloud.

''The archives will be a record at the end of the millennium of what we choose and what we do with our voices and faces, when asked to say aloud a poem that we love,'' said Mr. Pinsky, appointed Poet Laureate in 1997 by Librarian of Congress James H. Billington. Mr. Pinsky is serving an unprecedented third term as Poet Laureate.

The two long-term goals of the Favorite Poem Project are to promote the reading and appreciation of poetry and encourage the teaching of poetry in schools nationwide. Collaborating with Mr. Pinsky are the New England Foundation for the Arts, which administers the program, the Library of Congress, which is the home of the Poet Laureate, and Boston University.

The Project aims to record up to 1,000 Americans saying poems that they love. Mr. Pinsky will deliver the first 50 audio and video segments to the Library of Congress as part of a Library-sponsored poetry symposium scheduled for April 3–4, 2000. The audio and video tapes will become a permanent part of the Library's Archive of Recorded Poetry and Literature. ''This will be a gift to the nation's future: an archive that may come to represent, in a form both individual and public, the collective cultural consciousness of the American people at the turn of the century,'' said Mr. Pinsky, a professor of English and creative writing at Boston University.

For information on the Favorite Poem Project, visit the Project's Web site at www.bu.edu/favoritepoem/.

NEW RADIO SERIES TO AIR FOR LIBRARY OF CONGRESS BICENTENNIAL

''Favorite Poets.'' a series of four one-hour programs of American poets interviewed by Grace Cavalieri, will air on public radio during National Poetry Month, April 2000, In Washington, D.C., the series will be heard on WPFW–FM on Sundays at 9 p.m. on April 16 and 23. (Check listings for local dates and times.)

Guests on the series are U.S. Poet Laureate Robert Pinsky, former Poet Laureate Rita Dove, and Pulitzer Prize winners Louise Glück and W.S. Merwin. The poets, recorded at the Library of Congress, honor the Library's Bicentennial celebration on April 24, as well as National Poetry Month.

Each program presents the poets reading their work, a discussion of the writing process, and a portrait of the poet through conversation and interview, with an entertaining look at the personal and poetic lives of each of these literary figures. The poetry archives at the Library are among the largest and most comprehensive in the world.

Grace Cavalieri, host of the series, is a familiar voice on public radio, having presented more than 2,000 poets through her program ''The Poet and the Poem'' on WPFW–FM from 1977 to 1997. She has had 11 books of poetry published, and a number of her plays have been produced throughout the country and Off-Broadway. She has received the Allen Ginsberg Award for Poetry, the Pen Syndicated Prize for Fiction, and the Silver Medal from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting for ''entertainment and innovation in radio.''

''Favorite Poets'' will be distributed nationally via NPR satellite, Interested listeners should contact their local public radio stations for times and dates of airing. The program is a Bicentennial project of the Library of Congress with funding provided by the Madison Council, the Library's private sector advisory group.

For more information on the 200th birthday celebrations of the Library of Congress, call (202) 707–2000 or visit the Library's Web site at www.loc.gov.

NEW BOOK CELEBRATES 200-YEAR HISTORY OF THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

America's Library: The Story of the Library of Congress, 1800–2000 by James Conaway will be published in April by the Library of Congress in cooperation with Yale University Press. The publication is one of several planned to celebrate the Library's Bicentennial on April 24, 2000.

The Library was founded in 1800 with the primary mission of serving the research needs of the United States Congress. During the past two centuries the collections have evolved into the largest repository of knowledge in the world and are accessible to all Americans. The Library maintains a collection of nearly 119 million books, maps, manuscripts, photographs, motion pictures, sound recordings and digital materials in some 460 languages.

''In America's Library, James Conaway invites you to learn the story of this great and complex institution, during its two centuries of development, as the men and women within its walls collect, preserve, and make useful the heritage it holds,'' said Librarian of Congress James H. Billington. ''Its collections represent and celebrate the many and varied ways that one generation has informed another.''

This lively account of the Library of Congress is filled with an immense cast of characters ranging from presidents, poets, journalists, and members of Congress to collectors, artists, curators, and eccentrics. The author focuses the Library's 200 year history on the 13 men who have been appointed by presidents to lead the Library of Congress. He investigates how the Librarians' experiences and contributions, as well as the Library's collections, have reflected political and intellectual developments in the United States. Each Librarian confronted great challenges: the entire Library collection was lost when the British burned the Capitol in 1814, and rebuilt a year later with Thomas Jefferson's personal library; in the 1940s, a backlog of 1.5 million objects waited to be cataloged; the gigantic task of replacing the card catalog with a computerized system was undertaken in the 1980s. In the 1990s, the current Librarian, Dr. Billington, has expanded the reach of the institution nationwide through the National Digital Library Program (www.loc.gov). The Library's widely acclaimed Web site is one of the most heavily used in the federal government.

Yet each Librarian also enjoyed the excitement of acquiring unique treasures—from Walt Whitman's walking stick to the papers of the Wright brothers, from the Civil War photographs of Mathew Brady to the archives of Leonard Bernstein. The thrill of using these collections in the Library's Thomas Jefferson building is conveyed in the book's introduction, ''One Writer's Library,'' by biographer Edmund Morris:

''Those lights, those glowing rectangles and portholes, are windows into the central repository of our nation's cultural intelligence: a cerebellum, a sanctum of free thought forever energized by the spirit of Thomas Jefferson.''

Conaway is the author of eight books, including The Smithsonian: 150 Years of Adventure, Discovery and Wonder, copublished by Smithsonian Books and Alfred A. Knopf in connection with the Smithsonian's 150th anniversary celebration in 1996. He is the former Washington editor of Harper's and has written for many publications: Civilization, The Atlantic Monthly, The New York Times Magazine, National Geographic, and Preservation.

America's Library—a 256-page, hardbound book—is available for $39.95 in major bookstores and from the Library of Congress Sales Shops (Credit card orders: 202–707–0204).

THE WIZARD OF OZ IS SALUTED IN LIBRARY OF CONGRESS BICENTENNIAL EXHIBITION

The ''yellow brick road'' leads to the Library of Congress on April 21 with the opening of an exhibition marking the 100th anniversary of one of America's most beloved stories, The Wonderful Wizard of Oz. The Library's Copyright Office registered this work by L. Frank Baum in 1900, and it has gone on to become one of the most profitable and well-known copyright ever issued.

Since its publication, the book has outsold all other children's books in numerous editions. It has also inspired a long series of sequels, stage plays and musicals, movies and television shows, biographics of Baum, scholarly studies of the significance of the book and film, advertisements, toys, games and all sorts of Oz-related products.

Drawing on the Library's unparalleled collection of books, posters, films, sheet music, manuscripts and sound recordings, ''The Wizard of Oz: An American Fairy Tale'' examines the creation of this timeless American classic and traces its rapid and enduring success and its impact on American popular culture. It can be seen in the South Gallery of the Great Hall of the Thomas Jefferson Building from April 21 through September 23. Hours for the exhibition are 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Monday-Saturday.

Approximately 100 items in a variety of formats will be on view from the Library's collections, including play scripts, rare books, photographs, posters, drawings, manuscripts, maps, sheet music and film, as well as three-dimensional objects such as figurines, dolls, games and toys. The Library will supplement its own large holdings with items borrowed from other museums, libraries and private collectors.

Of particular interest to visitors of the exhibition will be items related to the classic 1939 film ''The Wizard of Oz,'' including a pair of the ruby slippers (size 5B) worn by Judy Garland as Dorothy; the sacrecrow costume worn by Ray Bolger; the mane and beard worn by Bert Lahr as the Cowardly Lion; a Munchkin costume; and an Emerald City townsman's coat. These are supplemented with publicity shots and photographs taken on the set of the film, related sheet music, recordings, magazine advertisements, posters and lobby cards, from the Library's own collections. Clips from other Oz films—from early silents to ''The Wiz''—will be shown on a video kiosk.

L. Frank Baum's ability to make fantastic circumstances seem plausble, combined with illustrator W.W. Denslow's striking color plates and line drawings, produced a volume that was innovative both in style and presentation. The first edition of the book, along with the original copyright application handwritten by Baum, will be on display along with six of the black-and-white Denslow illustrations for the book. Some of Baum's pre-Oz books will be shown, along with a selection of other books set in the ''Land of Oz'' authored by Baum.

Children especially will be fascinated with the selection of Oz-related souvenirs and novelties including plates, figurines, games, greeting cards, Christmas ornaments, music boxes, paper dolls and coloring books.

For nearly 130 years, the Copyright Office in the Library of Congress has served as America's ''national registry for creative works.'' The 1870 law that centralized the copyright function in the Library of Congress—and set up the copyright deposit system that systematically brings two copies of every item registered for copyright to the Library—helped to create the unequaled national collections that form the core of today's Library of Congress.

Through the copyright records, one can trace the career of Frank Baum, America's great fantasist, who lived from 1856 to 1919, beginning with the 1882 copyright registration for Baum's first theatrical venture, Maid of Arran, to the publication of the last book in his Oz series, Glinda of Oz, published in 1920.

NEW BOOK FEATURES THE ARCHITECTURE OF THE LIBRARY'S THOMAS JEFFERSON BUILDING

The Library of Congress: An Architectural Alphabet will be published in April by the Library of Congress in cooperation with Pomegranate Press. The publication is one of several planned to celebrate the Library's Bicentennial on April 24, 2000.

Across the street from the United States Capitol in Washington, D.C., stands the first of the three Library of Congress buildings. The Thomas Jefferson Building, completed in 1897 and named for the president in 1980, is a landmark in the nation's capital as well as one of the country's great architectural treasures.

''At the heart of all our efforts stands the Jefferson Building, a heroic structure that is at once celebratory, inspirational, and educational,'' said Librarian of Congress James H. Billington. ''Few places represent human aspiration in such dramatic fashion.''

The Library of Congress: An Architectural Alphabet opens doors into many of the extraordinary spaces and features that rest within the 600,000 square feet enclosed by the building's historic walls. The book offers an illustrated tour of the Library's art, architecture, and sculpture, created by some 50 artists and artisans. From A (for arch) to Z (for zigzag), it explores the Jefferson Building's unusual architectural details—egg-and-dart molding, helixes, jambs, pilasters, quoins, spandrels, tripods, vaults, and even an X-motif printer's mark. Illustrations and descriptions are joined by a colorful alphabet drawn from the Library's collection of rare books and manuscripts.

Visitors must allot many hours to see all of this landmark's 409,000 cubic feet of granite, 22 million red bricks, 500,000 enameled bricks, 2,165 windows, 15 varieties of marble, untold numbers of classical columns, and millions of items. Compact in a 9-by-9-inch format, the Architectural Alphabet is a wonderful place to start.

The Library of Congress: An Architectural Alphabet—a 64-page, hardbound book, with 29 color photographs—will be available for $17.95 in major bookstores and from the Library of Congress Sales Shops (Credit card orders: 202–707–0204).

GIFTS TO THE NATION

NATIONAL COLLECTIONS, ENDOWED CHAIRS, ENDOWED CURATORSHIPS AND NATIONAL FOCAL POINTS OF SCHOLARSHIP

The Library of Congress occupies a unique place in American civilization. For nearly 200 years, the Library has collected and preserved our national cultural heritage. The collection of nearly 119 million items housed in the Library represents America's ''creative legacy,'' and ranges from books, maps and manuscripts to photographs, motion pictures and music. Copyright deposits have been a major source for the Library's collections, yet the Library has also received a significant portion of its unparalleled collections as special gifts from donors, collectors and Americans who aspire to preserve our national heritage for generations to come.

Without the generosity of such benefactors, the Library would not have the diaries of Orville and Wilbur Wright, the music of George and Ira Gershwin and Leonard Bernstein, the outstanding Stern Collection of Abraham Lincoln materials, the Rosenwald Collection of rare illustrated books from as far back as the 15th century, or its largest manuscript collection—from the NAACP.

The Library has identified additional materials that, because of their significance to American life and learning, belong in the national library, where they will be preserved and made available for future generations of Americans. Gifts to the Nation is an opportunity to support the acquisition of these important cultural legacies.

A very special undertaking is the effort to rebuild the original core of the Library—Thomas Jefferson's vast and diverse personal collection—which he sold to Congress after the British burned the U.S. Capitol, including the Library of Congress, in 1814. Tragically, in 1851, nearly two-thirds of Jefferson's library was destroyed in another Capitol fire. Jefferson believed that there was ''no subject to which a member of Congress may not have the occasion to refer,'' and reconstructing his wide-ranging collection, the scope of which is reflected in the current Library of Congress holdings, will provide new insights into the mind of one of our nation's greatest thinkers and reinforce the Jeffersonian principle upon which the Library of Congress was built—that free access of information and knowledge is one of the cornerstones of democracy.

To enhance the research opportunities at the Library, the Bicentennial celebration also includes giving opportunities for Endowed Chairs, Endowed Curatorships and National Focal Points of Scholarship. Support of these programs will ensure that experts from diverse fields of study use and write about the Library's collections as well as provide advice on collection policies for future acquisitions.

How You Can Participate: If you would like to support Gifts to the Nation, contact Winston Tabb, Associate Librarian for Library Services, at (202) 707–6240 (wtab@loc.gov), or Norma Baker, Director of the Development Office, at (202) 707–2777.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

HONORING GEORGIA'S VIETNAM VETERANS

• Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, as we approach the 25th Anniversary of the end of the Vietnam War, I rise today to pay tribute to those in my home state who answered the call of duty and were part of this great conflict.

The Vietnam War took place over the course of seventeen years, from the first formal American involvement in 1958 to the fall of the South Vietnamese government in 1975. Perhaps no other conflict in American history presented greater challenges to those who fought. A forbidding climate, combined with a tenacious opponent and attempts by some back home to undermine our effort, conspired to present our troops with near-impossible challenges.

My home state has a fine military tradition forged over the last 225 years. This legacy was upheld with honor throughout the Vietnam conflict. All told, Georgia sent 228,000 of its finest men and women to serve during the war. 1,584 were killed in action, and 8,534 were wounded. Twenty-one were held as prisoners of war, and to this day, thirty-nine remain missing in action. Youth from places like Snellville and Americus were thrown into an environment that was both unknown and very deadly. To say they did their duty well and with honor would be an understatement.

To honor its Vietnam veterans, my state dedicated a three-figure statue on Veterans' Day, 1988. In 1997 the Georgia Vietnam Wall was dedicated, listing the names of the 1,584 Georgians who died in the war.

Earlier this year the Georgia General Assembly passed a resolution commending Vietnam veterans and their families for their outstanding service to Georgia, America, southeast Asia, and the world. In addition, the General Assembly recognized that these brave troops did not lose the war, but rather that they simply were not allowed to win, and that their duty was just and honorable. I could not agree more.

Georgians have long recognized that freedom is not free and that we must always honor those who were willing to give their lives for it. As this era in our nation's history fades ever farther into the past, it is our duty to ensure that the people of all ages recognize and honor those who fought for the freedom they enjoy today. More so than winning or losing, the soldiers of the Vietnam war proved through their sweat and blood that we are willing to fight to defend the freedom we cherish and enjoy, no matter what the circumstances.

Mr. President, my state will observe the 25th Anniversary of the end of the Vietnam War on May 5–7, 2000. I encourage all Americans to take time during these dates to honor and remember those who served in Vietnam and the name of freedom.•

INVITING THE NATION TO SAIL BOSTON 2000

• Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I rise today to extend an invitation to the nation to join Massachusetts and the City of Boston in celebrating the gathering of tall ships for Sail Boston 2000.

The tall ships represent a nautical history that stretches across the globe. The International Sail Training Association, jointly with the American Sail Training Association, is organizing the Tall Ships 2000 Race. I am proud to say that Boston Harbor has been granted the opportunity to be the only official United States Race Port.

Beginning in April 2000, two races will start from Southampton and Genoa, finishing in Cadiz. The second leg will be a transatlantic race to Bermuda, and from there, the fleet heads north to Boston. This journey will replicate the routes taken by mariners and explorers over the last five centuries.

On July 11th, 2000, the Tall Ships will parade into Boston Harbor, and they will be led by the oldest ship in the U.S. Navy; America's Old Ironsides; the U.S.S. Constitution. This national treasure was originally built in Boston between 1794 and 1797, and was charged with the task of defending a young American nation. This ship, the oldest commissioned warship in the world, set to sea in 1798, and in July 1999, the U.S.S. Constitution operated under her own sail for the first time in 116 years.

This international fleet will be one of the finest gatherings of tall ships. Among the Sail Boston 2000 fleet are historic ships such as: Mir of Russia; Concordia of Canada; Juan Sebastian De Elcano of Spain; Pogoria of Poland; and the Amerigo Vespucci of Italy.

Massachusetts and the historic Boston Harbor, which offers the perfect setting for this occasion, will open itself up to visitors from around the world, and over six million spectators are expected to visit us and enjoy the festivities. The history that the Tall Ships represent belongs to all of us, and it is my hope that visitors from every state in the nation will take the opportunity to visit Massachusetts and participate in this historic celebration.•

NATIONAL PARK WEEK

• Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to speak for a few minutes about National Park Week and the value of National Parks to our nation's citizens.

As families and individuals throughout our nation know, America's national parks are the envy of the world and considered by many to be our national treasures. In our nation's parks, wildlife flourish, scenic beauty remains abundant, and families escape the pressures of everyday life. Our parks are truly one of our nation's best investments—an investment that will provide generations of Americans with the same recreational and educational opportunities we now enjoy.

President Clinton has designated April 17–23, 2000, as National Park Week. The National Park Service now estimates that over 285 million Americans visit our 378 national parks every year. At each site, visitors find themselves confronted with important moments in our nation's history, wonderful natural scenic sites, and cultural treasures which remind us of our distinguished, and sometimes difficult, past. Our parks, in many ways, are a microcosm of our nation and of ourselves, and they continue to document for future generations those qualities about America which must be preserved for eternity.

In the 105th Congress, I was proud that Congress took a significant step forward in updating the management of our Nation's parks and improving visitor services by passing the "Vision 2020 National Park System Restoration Act," a bill I cosponsored. The Vision 2020 Bill, authored by Senator CRAIG THOMAS of Wyoming, is a commonsense approach to improving both the management and facilities of national parks by bringing everyone to the table and seeking consensus. The passage of the Vision 2020 bill was an important first step toward bringing accountability to park management, addressing the tremendous backlog of park projects, and improving visitor services.

I was also proud to obtain $2 million in last year's appropriations bills for the National Park Service's portion of the Mississippi River National Center in Minnesota's new Science Museum. The exhibit will include information on the importance of the Mississippi River to Minnesota's array of interests. This is a partnership between the Park Service and the Science Museum that will give Minnesotans a greater appreciation for all aspects of recreation and commerce on the Mississippi River.

My home state of Minnesota is home to five units of the National Park Service. They are Voyageurs National Park, which on April 8 celebrated its 25th anniversary, Pipestone National Monument, Grand Portage National Monument, the Mississippi National River and Recreation Area, and the Saint Croix National Riverway. I've urged Minnesotans to visit these sites during this week and to gain a greater appreciation for opportunities they offer.

Mr. President, our parks remain one of America's most important legacies for future generations and a constant reminder of the progress, splendor, and triumphs of our past.●

PROFESSOR ROBERT KERN

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to Robert Kern, a longtime professor at the University of New Mexico where he is head of the European section of the history department. With a Ph.D. from the University of Chicago, Dr. Kern's studies, teachings, and writings are centered on Iberian history, and the history of labor in various societies. In nearly 35 years of teaching at UNM, he has earned a well-deserved reputation as a thoughtful professor and a distinguished writer.

Believing that teaching is just about the noblest profession anyone can undertake, and coming from a family of teachers myself, I admire more than I can say what Professor Kern has done in this career. As a father, I admire more than I can say the fine job he did raising his sons, one of whom, Josh, worked on my staff for several years. The love, care, and attention Robert Kern gave his boys is reflected in their own lives and I suspect that of all of his achievements in a life well-lived, they are his pride and joy.●

COMMEMORATING THE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF VIETNAM VETERANS OF AMERICA'S FIRST CHAPTER IN RUTLAND, VERMONT

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President. Two years ago, I stood before you as the proud sponsor of a resolution commemorating the 20th anniversary of the Vietnam Veterans of America (VVA). Today I am here to honor the 20th anniversary of VVA's first chapter—born and raised in my home town of Rutland, Vermont.

Twenty years ago, Vietnam Veterans were suffering under the wave of anti-Vietnam sentiment that had swept the nation. Little recognition was given to their sacrifices during the war. And in fact, there was even a great deal of official denial about the extent of the price that had been paid by these veterans, both physical and emotional. It would be years before Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder would be a recognized condition for many veterans and years before the Federal Government would admit that use of Agent Orange had left a terrible legacy of continued suffering for our veterans. The founders of the VVA felt that they must have an organization to speak directly to those needs. The outpouring of enthusiasm from the veterans themselves demonstrated the depth of these feelings.

In 1979, during a trip to Vermont, VVA founder Bobby Muller met Don Bodette. Don supported the notion of an organization of and for Vietnam era veterans, but felt that it would only be truly successful if they mobilized locally and established chapters. The power of Don's logic and commitment persuaded Bobby Muller to adopt his model. On April 13, 1980, VVA Chapter One was established in Rutland, Vermont. Taking up the challenge, Don was joined by Jake Jacobsen, Albert and Mary Trombley, Mike Dodge, Dennis Ross and Mark Truhan, to name a few. Today, April 13, 2000, VVA Chapter One has 120 members hailing from 19 states and 3 other countries.

I would like to add my voice to the multitudes both in and outside of Vermont who are celebrating this auspicious anniversary. I join in recognizing the tremendous work done by the VVA, both in Vermont and nationally. As a Vietnam era veteran myself, we all owe a debt of gratitude to VVA Chapter One's farsighted founders and the committed members who have followed their lead. Happy 20th Birthday, Chapter One! May you have many more!●

THE 30TH ANNIVERSARY OF GREEN UP DAY

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, nearly 30 years ago, my predecessor, the late Senator George D. Aiken, rose to report to the Senate on a new Vermont initiative called "Green Up Day." He described an effort, then in its second year, in which thousands of Vermont citizen volunteers of all ages combed the streets, highways, back roads, and village greens to pick up litter and beautify their state.

Another distinguished colleague of mine, Senator Robert Stafford, kept these same Vermonters' thoughts in mind when he courageously led this Senate in the fight to build strong national environmental policies—including Superfund—to protect public health, air, water, and land.

The very first Green Up Day was a simple initiative born on April 18 of 1970—a few days before the first Earth Day. Today it is an annual Vermont tradition. On May 6, 2000, thousands of Vermonters will celebrate the official 30th anniversary of "Green Up Day" just as they have for so many years—by picking up trash bags and devoting their day to the beautification and clean up of our Green Mountain State.

Over the years, one organization, Vermont Green Up, has diligently coordinated volunteers and spread the ideas of Green Up Day. Vermont Green Up has sponsored annual poster contests for students, cleaned up several illegal dumps, and helped other states—and even other countries—organize their own "Green Up" efforts.

In fact, my own daughter, Alicia, thought so much of Vermont Green Up that she served as their Executive Director for a few years. Alicia had the pleasure of serving in that position with Bob Stafford on the board. She also made sure her father was out picking up trash with her on Green Up Day!

I congratulate Vermont Green Up, the financial sponsors supporting Green Up Day, and the thousands of Green Up Day volunteers. These are the people who continue to make the first Saturday in May an extraordinary day for Vermont's environment. The fact that we are now celebrating the 30th anniversary of Green Up Day is a testament to these Vermonters untiring dedication to the environment of our Green Mountain State.●

CALHOUN COUNTY CELEBRATES CHARACTER EDUCATION AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize a very special event taking place next week in the State of Michigan. The city of Battle Creek and the greater Calhoun County are officially recognizing April 17–21, 2000, as Character Education Awareness Week. Character Unlimited, a group which works to raise awareness of the importance of good character and to train others to integrate character development in their organizations and areas of influence, and the Battle Creek Chamber of Commerce are cosponsors of the event.

Four goals have been set for the week: first, to inform the public about character education initiatives throughout Calhoun County; second, to raise awareness and interest in the importance of mentoring and role modeling; third, to address youth about the importance of character based decision making and non-violent conflict resolution; and, finally, to raise community awareness of Character Unlimited and the work of the organization.

Increasingly, the notion of character has found a place in the national dialogue, particularly in this, an election year. What is getting lost in the debate, I feel, is a look at where character comes from, how it is developed within children and adults alike, and the role communities can play in developing character within their youth. Good character is not innate, Mr. President, it requires conscientious education, effort and role-modeling.

While it goes without saying that parents hold the most important role in this process, they are not the only cog in the wheel. Schools, youth organizations, churches, synagogues, temples, civic organizations, even governmental organizations, all of these groups have the opportunity to set positive examples for children, and in doing so provide them with a clear-cut example of what is right and what is wrong. More than this, though, for they also have the ability to teach them how to appropriately fight for what is right and against what is wrong. This is positive character development, and it is within all of our grasps.

Mr. President, good character in an individual is not automatic, but it is always attainable. What it requires is hard work by many people. The more positive influences our communities are able to have available to children, the more children we will see developing a strong sense of character. Continuing to use basic common sense as a guide, I think it is easy to imagine what kind of a positive effect this will have on our communities.

Mr. President, I am truly excited about what is happening in Calhoun County April 17–21, 2000. I thank Character Unlimited and the Battle Creek Chamber of Commerce for sponsoring Character Education Awareness Week. Also, I would like to recognize Mr. Erv Brinker, Chairman of Character Unlimited, and Ms. Pat Maliszewski, Program Director, whose hard work have been essential in making this event possible. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I hope that Character Education Awareness Week is a huge success.●

CELEBRATION OF CHOL CHNAM, CAMBODIAN NEW YEAR

● Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise today to join Cambodian-Americans in celebration of the Cambodian New Year, Chol Chnam, one of the major celebrations of the Cambodian culture. Over the next three days there will be gatherings across the United States to celebrate the beginning of the Year of the Dragon. I take this opportunity to wish all of these people a very happy New Year.

The Cambodian New Year represents more than just a renewal of the calendar and traditional end of the harvest, it is also a celebration of faith. Entry into the New Year, or Maha Sangkrant, is marked by the sounding of a bell. With the sounding, it is believed that the New Angel arrives. Throughout the day people participate in ceremonies and bring food to the Buddhist monks and religious leaders. The second day of celebration, or Vana Bat, is a time to show consideration for others. Gifts are given to parents, grandparents and teachers as a show of respect and charity is offered to the less fortunate. The third day, or Loeng Sak, includes more religious ceremonies and rituals to bring good luck and happiness to families.

In my home state of Rhode Island there are numerous businesses owned by Cambodian-American families, most of them in the capital city Providence. These establishments contribute much to the local economy.

The Cambodian New Year is an appropriate time to remind all Americans why we must support the political and economic stabilization of Cambodia. As the nation continues to recover from three decades of civil conflict, including the atrocities committed by the Khmer Rouge, it is critical that the United States and international community aid the Cambodian people in their efforts to build a lasting democracy.

Therefore, on this day marking the beginning of Chol Chnam, I encourage all U.S. citizens to join in the spirit of this special holiday.●

COMMENDATION FOR DR. JAMES BROWNFOX JONES, ESQ.

● Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, I take this opportunity today to call my colleagues' attention to the extraordinary efforts of Dr. James Brownfox Jones who has made countless contributions to his profession and to the community at large. Recently, Dr. Jones was selected as an inductee in the Washington D.C. Hall of Fame in the area of education. Dr. Jones' selection to the Hall of Fame is a testament to his dependable and consistent standard of excellence as an educator and participant in his community. His career reflects his respect and affection for the young people who are our future leaders. And, his record reflects his predominate concern for the more vulnerable youth in this city.

Dr. Jones has distinguished himself in the District of Columbia as an educator and community activist with the mission of helping young people reach their full potential At the Washington School of Psychiatry, Dr. Jones developed and operated an experimental educational program designed to address the educational needs of ''hard core'' juvenile delinquents. And, as a public school teacher, he developed a unique program for special education students.

With a distinguished career spanning more than 30 years, Dr. Jones assisted the mayor in initiating a wide range of innovative programs for the children and youth of the city. These included a mobile recreation wagon, a hot lunch program, a neighborhood youth corps, and the building of go-kart tracks on lots left vacant by the 1968 riots.

Since 1983, Dr. Jones has designed and operated an Independent Living Program for abused and neglected youth in foster care in the District of Columbia. As part of this program, he has sent over 250 young people to college.

Education is a top priority for this Congress, and for me personally. I have served as a tutor and my wife Linda has dedicated her career to teaching in public schools. Both of us have always been strong supporters of public education. It is with that background that I want to express my support for the work of Dr. Jones and to congratulate him on his selection for the Washington, DC Hall of Fame.

Thank you, Mr. President.●

RECOGNIZING THE HERMANN MONUMENT

● Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I come to the Senate floor today to recognize the numerous contributions that millions German-Americans have made to the United States, and introduce a resolution to designate the Hermann Monument in New Ulm, Minnesota, a national monument.

German-Americans have been an integral part of American history, shaping our artistic, cultural, military and political foundations. Friedrich Muhlenbert, the first Speaker of the House of Representatives, baseball great Babe Ruth, and artist Oscar Hammerstein are just three out of millions of German-Americans who have contributed to the creation of a diverse American culture. Today, German-Americans compose nearly 25% of the American population, making them the largest ethnic group in the United States. Despite this vast number of German-Americans and the significant impact they have had on all facets of American life, unfortunately there is no nationally recognized symbol honoring German-Americans.

The Hermann Monument provides us with an opportunity as a nation to recognize the contributions of German-Americans, past and present. The monument is a unique copper statue of Hermann the Cheruscan, created in 1889 as a tribute to the struggle and triumph of German immigrants who came to the United States. The Hermann monument has become a symbol of unity and endurance to all American-Germans. It appropriately stands tall over New Ulm, Minnesota, a city where nearly 75 percent of the population is of German heritage.

Designating the Hermann Monument as a National German American Monument will re-enforce the important contributions that millions of German-Americans have made to our nation. It is with this goal that I introduce this resolution, and urge my colleagues to support it.●

EXCELLENCE IN EDUCATION AWARDS PROGRAM

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize the exceptional work of seventeen students who are being honored on April 18, 2000, at the ''Excellence in Education'' Awards Program. Each year, the Auburn Hills Chamber of Commerce recognizes a group of students whose ability and enthusiasm have not only proved to be outstanding, but also, I am told, has managed to please their teachers on a daily basis.

The purpose of the event is to provide these students with a job-shadowing experience in the field of their interest. For one day, the students work with local professionals in their chosen field, providing them with an unforgettable, and also inspirational, experience. Over the years, the chosen fields have ranged from medical specialties, to creative and performing arts, to business, to technology, and many more.

Mr. President, I applaud the following seventeen students for their outstanding efforts, and thank the Auburn Hills Chamber of Commerce for not only recognizing them, but encouraging them to continue their enthusiastic approach to education: Jeff Austin, Letrice Hudson, Elias Numan, Bryan Phillips, Heather Zygmontowicz, Tenealle Tenwolde, Collin Lasko, Lyndsay McGarry, Kyle Morrison, Brandon See, Jamiecee Baker, Deitra Officer, Ty Bleuenstein, Monique Bramlett, Cristal Moore, Pakou Ly, and Kenneth Venable. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate them on their participation in the ''Excellence in Education'' Awards Program.●

A TRIBUTE TO THE UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA WOMEN'S HOCKEY TEAM

● Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I proudly rise today to pay tribute to the University of Minnesota women's hockey team on their recent national championship victory. This is truly an accomplishment of which all Minnesotans can be proud.

In only its third season, the Golden Gopher program has become a national powerhouse. In 1998, the Gopher's inaugural year, the team finished fourth in the nation. Last year, they crept closer to the national title with a third-place finish. This season's 32–6–1 record was the best in the nation.

Under the leadership of coach Laura Halldorson, the Gopher women defeated instate rival University of Minnesota-Duluth in the semifinals, 3–2, after being down 2–0. This come-from-behind victory gave the Golden Gophers a berth in the American Women's College Hockey Alliance National Championship game versus top-seeded Brown University.

The March 25 championship game at Boston's Matthews Arena proved to be a tough-fought contest. The Gopher women fell behind by a score of 1–0 in the first period, but once again made a strong comeback. Led by goalie Erica Killewald's 34 stopped shots, in the Gophers held off Brown for a 4–2 victory.

While this incredible season was clearly the result of phenomenal teamwork, there are individual efforts that should be recognized. Gopher goalie Erica Killewald's spectacular performance earned her the tournament MVP honors. Also awarded all-tournament honors were Nadine Muzerall, Winny Brodt and Courtney Kennedy.

As the popularity of women's hockey spreads throughout the nation, Minnesotans have embraced the sport—and their Golden Gophers. Now the program is poised to lead the charge towards greater advancements in women's athletics. I commend the women's dedication and relentless hard work. With only one graduating senior on this year's Gopher squad, I am hopeful for many more national championships.●

WITTMAN FAMILY WINS MILLENNIUM FARM/RANCH FAMILY AWARD

● Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, I rise today to bring your attention to the recent accomplishment of the Wittman family from my home state of Idaho. Today, they will be receiving the Millennium Farm/Ranch Family Award for agricultural and forestry stewardship. I know you join Idaho and myself in extending to the Wittman family congratulations on this achievement.

The Wittman family has worked their land near Lapwai, Idaho since the early 1920's. They have used that knowledge to give us an on the ground perspective when we have written farm policy. Most recently, their views helped shape the reforms made to the crop insurance program.

Wittman Farms is a fourth-generation family farm operation using sound conservation and stewardship practices. In 1988, the family joined forces with the nearby Valley Boys and Girls Clubs to build ''Camp Wittman,'' a totally solar-powered destination where students and educators can share in a hands-on environmental experience to learn farming practices in the mountain meadow environment of the Palouse.

The Wittman Family has given to our youth, our educators, our local and national governments, and broken ground for more than just the purposes of next year's crop.

In these tough times for farmers, agriculture needs leaders who indeed look to the future while learning from the past. I am proud to honor the Wittman family as Millennium Farm/Ranch Family Award winners and proud to call them fellow Idahoans.

It is indeed my pleasure as an Idaho Senator to honor the Wittman family as agriculture pioneers for Idaho—and to thank them for contributing so much to our next millennium in Agriculture. I know you and my colleagues in the Senate join me in offering our congratulations to the Wittman family.

Thank you, Mr. President.●

TRIBUTE TO DOVEY J. ROUNDTREE

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the American Bar Association Commission on Women in the Profession announced in February the winners of the 2000 Margaret Brent Women Lawyers of Achievement Awards.

Among those worthy recipients was Dovey J. Roundtree, General Counsel for the National Council of Negro Women, whom I have been privileged to know for many years.

As a former law clerk to Federal Circuit Judge Prettyman, then as an Assistant United States Attorney, followed by private practice in the greater metropolitan area of Washington, DC, I came to know and admire the professional achievements of Attorney Roundtree.

She is most deserving of this recognition for her tireless efforts to help others.

The award Mrs. Roundtree has earned is named for the first woman lawyer in America, Margaret Brent. She arrived in the Colonies in 1638, and was involved in 124 court cases over the course of eight years, winning every case. In 1648, she formally demanded the right to vote in the Maryland Assembly, but her petition was denied by the Governor.

These awards were established in 1991 to honor outstanding women lawyers who have achieved professional excellence in their area of specialty and have actively worked to help other women lawyers.

Attorney Roundtree and her work have been admired for more than three decades. She has been a leading civil rights lawyer, an Army veteran, an ordained minister and a resident of Spotsylvania.

She is a founding partner of the Washington, DC, law firm of Roundtree, Knox, Hunter and Parker, and she served for 35 years as General Counsel to the National Council of Negro Women and as special consultant for legal affairs to the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

Mrs. Roundtree attend Howard University Law School on the GI Bill and went on to break legal ground in both civil and criminal law. Her 1955 bus desegregation victory before the Interstate Commerce Commission, Sarah Keys versus Carolina Coach Company, was critically important in the legal battle for civil rights.

She was the first black woman admitted to the Bar Association of the District of Columbia and actively recruited other black women attorneys.

Dovey J. Roundtree is most deserving of this award.●

NATIONAL D.O. DAY

● Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, today, Thursday, April 13, is National D.O.

Day. I therefore want to take this opportunity to recognize the 45,000 osteopathic physicians (D.O.s) across the country for their contributions to the American healthcare system. For more than a century, D.O.s have made a difference in the lives and health of Americans everywhere. They have treated presidents and Olympic athletes. They have helped to keep children well and have contributed to the fight against AIDS. Today, members of the osteopathic medical profession serve as U.S. Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs, the chief medical officer for the U.S. Coast Guard, and the Surgeon General of the U.S. Army.

As fully licensed physicians able to prescribe medication and perform surgery, D.O.s are committed to serving the health needs of rural and underserved communities. They make up 15 percent of the total physician population in towns of 10,000 or less. In addition, 64 percent of D.O.s practice in the primary care areas of medicine, fulfilling a need for more primary care physicians in an era marked by the growth of managed care. Their contributions have been particularly important in rural states like Maine.

More than 100 million patient visits are made each year to D.O.s. D.O.s approach their patients as ''whole people.'' They don't just treat a specific illness or injury. D.O.s take into account home and work environments, as well as lifestyle, when assessing overall health. This approach provides Americans with high quality healthcare—patients seen as people, not just an illness or injury.

From the state-of-the-art healthcare facility in a major city to a clinic in a rural Maine community, D.O.s continue to practice the kind of medicine that Andrew Taylor Still envisioned over 100 years ago when he founded the profession.

It was my pleasure to meet today with two representatives of the osteopathic medical profession visiting our Capitol from Maine. The University of New England, College of Osteopathic Medicine (UNECOM), in Biddeford, is the only medical school in my home state. To the more than 400 osteopathic physicians in Maine, the approximately 1,100 graduates of UNECOM, and the 45,000 D.O.s represented by the American Osteopathic Association—congratulations on your contributions to the good health of the American people. I look forward to working with you to further our mutual goal of improving our nation's health care.●

MR. AND MRS. ROBERT VANMETER'S 50TH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Robert VanMeter, who on April 22, 2000, will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary. The couple was married at a simple ceremony on a Friday evening by a clergyman named Grover W. Cleveland. Since that evening, the two have shared the highs and lows of life together, lending support and comfort to the other whenever there has been need.

Mr. Robert VanMeter served in the 82d Airborne in Italy. He loved his job, and was particularly fond of taking pictures of his jumps. Mrs. JoAnn VanMeter stayed at home, raising their four children. She baked everything from hamburger buns to apple pie. The children never knew what ''store-bought'' bread and pastries were until they were teenagers and Mrs. VanMeter returned to work.

Thirty-nine years ago, Mr. VanMeter completed the house that the couple lives in to this day. It took him two years to build, in part because of his refusal to allow anyone to help him with any part of the process, including the electrical and plumbing.

Mr. and Mrs. VanMeter have five grandchildren, ages 12–25. As they did their own children, they continue to show a patience and loyalty to them. They instill into their grandchildren the same principles they passed to their children: hard work, patience, and a willingness to try new things.

Mr. President, on this special occasion, I congratulate Mr. and Mrs. VanMeter. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I wish them a happy 50th wedding anniversary, and best of luck in the future.●

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, for the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report favorably nomination lists which were printed in the RECORD of the dates indicated, and ask unanimous consent, to save the expense of reprinting on the Executive Calendar, that these nominations lie at the Secretary's desk for the information of Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Foreign Service nominations beginning Mattie R. Sharpless and ending Howard R.

Wetzel , which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 24, 2000.

Foreign Service nominations beginning Nancy M. McKay and ending Nancy Morgan Serpa , which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 24, 2000.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. ASHCROFT (for himself, Mr. BOND, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. WARNER, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 2416. A bill to designate the Federal building located at 2201 C Street, Northwest, in the District of Columbia, which serves as headquarters for the Department of State, as the ''Harry S. Truman Federal Building''; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. CRAPO (for himself and Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire):

S. 2417. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to increase funding for State nonpoint source pollution control programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. CAMPBELL:

S. 2418. A bill to prohibit commercial air tour operations over the Black Canyon National Park; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. JOHNSON (for himself and Ms. COLLINS):

S. 2419. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for the annual determination of the rate of the basic benefit of active duty educational assistance under the Montgomery GI Bill, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Ms. COLLINS, and Mr. CLELAND):

S. 2420. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide for the establishment of a program under which long-term care insurance is made available to Federal employees, members of the uniformed services, and civilian and military retirees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. KENNEDY):

S. 2421. A bill to direct the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study of the suitability and feasibility of establishing an Upper Housatonic Valley National Heritage Area in Connecticut and Massachusetts; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. CONRAD:

S. 2422. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide tax incentives for farm relief and economic development, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. DURBIN:

S. 2423. A bill to provide Federal Perkins Loan cancellation for public defenders; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

By Mr. BREAUX:

S. 2424. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to extend and expand the enhanced deduction for charitable contributions of computers to provide greater public access to computers, including access by the poor; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SMITH of Oregon (for himself and Mr. WYDEN):

S. 2425. A bill to authorize the Bureau of Reclamation to participate in the planning, design, and construction of the Bend Feed Canal Pipeline Project, Oregon, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

S. 2426. A bill to suspend temporarily the duty on n-Heptanoic acid; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

S. 2427. A bill to suspend temporarily the duty on Undecylenic acid; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. THOMPSON:

S. 2428. A bill to suspend temporarily the duty on n-Heptaldehyde; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. DODD, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 2429. A bill to amend the Energy Conservation and Production Act to make changes in the Weatherization Assistance Program for Low-Income Persons; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 2430. A bill to combat computer hacking through enhanced law enforcement and to protect the privacy and constitutional rights of Americans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SANTORUM:

S. 2431. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow a credit against income tax for expenses incurred in teleworking; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SMITH of Oregon (for himself and Mr. WYDEN):

S. 2432. A bill to permit the catcher vessel HAZEL LORRAINE to conduct commercial fishing activities; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Mr. BREAUX):

S. 2433. A bill to establish the Red River National Wildlife Refuge; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. L. Chafee (for himself, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. SARBANES, and Mr. BURNS):

S. 2434. A bill to provide that amounts allotted to a State under section 2401 of the Social Security Act for each of fiscal years 1998 and 1999 shall remain available through fiscal year 2002; to the Committee on Finance.

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. DEWINE, and Mr. DODD):

S. 2435. A bill to amend part B of title IV of the Social Security Act to create a grant program to promote joint activities among Federal, State, and local public child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. ABRAHAM:

S. 2436. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to repeal the targeted area limitation on the expense deduction for environmental remediation costs and to extend the termination date of such deduction; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS) (by request):

S. 2437. A bill to provide for the conservation and development of water and related resources, to authorize the Secretary of the Army to construct various projects for improvements to rivers and harbors of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself, Mrs. MURRAY, and Mr. GORTON):

S. 2438. A bill to provide for enhanced safety, public awareness, and environmental protection in pipeline transportation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 2439. A bill to authorize the appropriation of funds for the construction of the Southeastern Alaska Intertie system, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mrs. HUTCHISON (for herself, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. GORTON, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, and Mr. BRYAN):

S. 2440. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, to improve airport security; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. BOND (for himself and Mrs. LINCOLN):

S. 2441. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to establish a program for fisheries habitat protection, restoration, and enhancement, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mrs. MURRAY:

S. 2442. A bill to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to provide long-term, low-interest loans to apple growers; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. REED, and Mrs. MURRAY):

S. 2443. A bill to increase immunization funding and provide for immunization infrastructure and delivery activities; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself and Mr. REED):

S. 2444. A bill to amend title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, the Public Health Service Act, and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to require comprehensive health insurance coverage for childhood immunization; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

By Mr. ROBB (for himself, Mr. EDWARDS, and Ms. LANDRIEU):

S. 2445. A bill to provide community-based economic development assistance for trade-affected communities; to the Committee on Finance.

By Ms. LANDRIEU:

S. 2446. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide assistance to homeowners and small businesses to repair Formosan termite damage; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. WELLSTONE (for himself, Mr. DASCHLE, and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 2447. A bill to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make competitive grants to establish National Centers for Distance Working to provide assistance to individuals in rural communities to support the use of teleworking in information technology fields; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

By Mr. HATCH (for himself and Mr. SCHUMER):

S. 2448. A bill to enhance the protections of the Internet and the critical infrastructure of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROWNBACK:

S. 2449. A bill to combat trafficking of persons, especially into the sex trade, slavery, and slavery-like conditions, in the United States and countries around the world through prevention, prosecution, and enforcement against traffickers, and through protection and assistance to victims of trafficking; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. HUTCHINSON (for himself and Mr. BROWNBACK):

S. 2450. A bill to terminate the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mrs. HUTCHISON:

S. 2451. A bill to increase criminal penalties for computer crimes, establish a National Commission on Cybersecurity, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COVERDELL:

S. 2452. A bill to reduce the reading deficit in the United States by applying the findings of scientific research in reading instruction to all students who are learning to read the English language and to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to improve literacy through family literacy projects and to reauthorize the inexpensive book distribution program; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

By Mr. BROWNBACK (for himself, Mr. ABRAHAM, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. ALLARD, Mr. ASHCROFT, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. BUNNING, Mr. BURNS, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. L. CHAFEE, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. COVERDELL, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. DODD, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. ENZI, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. FRIST, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. GRAMS, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. GREGG, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mrs. HUTCHISON, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. KERREY, Mr. KERRY, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MACK, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. MCCONNELL, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. ROBERTS, Mr. ROTH, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. SESSIONS, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. SMITH OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Mr. SMITH OF OREGON, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. VOINOVICH, and Mr. WARNER):

S. 2453. A bill to authorize the President to award a gold medal on behalf of Congress to Pope John Paul II in recognition of his outstanding and enduring contributions to humanity, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. BURNS (for himself and Mr. BREAUX):

S. 2454. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to authorize low-power television stations to provide digital data services to subscribers; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. ASHCROFT:

S.J. Res. 45. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to allow the States to limit the period of time United States Senators and Representatives may serve; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. HUTCHINSON (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. FRIST, and Mr. THOMPSON):

S. Res. 291. A resolution expressing the sense of the Senate regarding the reprogramming of funds for the Drug Enforcement Administration for fiscal year 2000 in order to assist State and local efforts to clean up methamphetamine laboratories; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CLELAND (for himself, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BOND, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. BRYAN, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. KERRY, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mrs. MURRAY, Mrs. LINCOLN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. ROBB, Mr. COCHRAN, and Mr. DURBIN):

S. Res. 292. A resolution recognizing the 20th century as the ''Century of Women in the United States''; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DASCHLE (for himself, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. REID, Mr. HARKIN, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. KERREY, Mr. KOHL, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. ROBB, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. REED, and Mrs. BOXER):

S. Res. 293. A resolution encouraging all residents of the United States to complete their census forms to ensure the most accurate enumeration of the population possible; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. SCHUMER (for himself, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. DODD, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. FEINGOLD):

S. Con. Res. 104. A concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress regarding the ongoing prosecution of 13 members of Iran's Jewish community; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. ABRAHAM:

S. Con. Res. 105. A concurrent resolution designating April 13, 2000, as a day of remembrance of the victims of the Katyn Forest massacre; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GRAMS (for himself and Mr. WELLSTONE):

S. Con. Res. 106. A concurrent resolution recognizing the Hermann Monument and Hermann Heights Park in New Ulm, Minnesota, as a national symbol of the contributions of Americans of German heritage; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. AKAKA (for himself, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. KERRY, Mr. ROTH, and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. Con. Res. 107. A concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress concerning support for the Sixth Nonproliferation Treaty Review Conference; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. ASHCROFT (for himself, Mr. BOND, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. WARNER, and Mr. MOYNIHAN):

S. 2416. A bill to designate the Federal building located at 2201 C Street, Northwest, in the District of Columbia, which serves as headquarters for the Department of State, as the ''Harry S. Truman Federal Building''; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

LEGISLATION TO RENAME THE STATE DEPARTMENT AFTER PRESIDENT HARRY S. TRUMAN

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, it is my great privilege to introduce a bill today, along with Senators BOND, WARNER, DEWINE, and MOYNIHAN, that will name the State Department's Headquarters in Washington, D.C., the ''Harry S. Truman Federal Building.'' I truly appreciate the support of these distinguished colleagues and Secretary Albright to see this idea become a reality.

Born in Lamar, Missouri, Harry S. Truman was a farmer, a national guardsman, a World War I veteran, a local postmaster, a road overseer, and a small business owner before turning to politics. Through these experiences, he gained the courage, honesty, and dedication to freedom required of a greater leader. Truman went on to become one of the most influential Presidents of the modern era. His leadership and character, especially in the area of foreign policy, have earned him well-deserved praise and respect throughout the world.

He established the Marshall Plan—creating a politically and economically stable Western Europe. President Truman was instrumental in creating the North Atlantic Treaty Organization which kept Soviet aggression at bay in Western Europe. He worked to contain the further spread of communism in Berlin, Greece, Turkey, and Korea. Clearly, President Truman was the architect of the strategy that won the Cold War and is a prime reason the United States is currently the world's sole superpower.

Mr. President, the State Department should be named after a true leader in foreign policy—and President Harry S. Truman is the clear choice. And through this choice, I hope the United States will continue President Truman's principled foreign policy as seen in his 1949 Presidential Inaugural Address:

> Events have brought our American democracy to new influence and new responsibilities. They will test our courage, our devotion to duty, and our concept of liberty. But I say to all men, what we have achieved in liberty, we will surpass in greater liberty. Steadfast in our faith in the Almighty, we will advance toward a world where man's freedom is secure. To that end we will devote our strength, our resources, and our firmness of resolve. With God's help, the future of mankind will be assured in a world of justice, harmony, and peace.

• Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, it gives me great pleasure to join my colleagues—Senators ASHCROFT, WARNER, BOND, and DEWINE—in this effort to name the State Department building after our 33rd President, Harry S. Truman. It could be named for none other.

Harry S. Truman was, perhaps, the most unlikely of the Presidents. A failed haberdasher, as he would say, without a college degree. It seems somewhat paradoxical that this common man, who modeled himself along the lines of the fabled Cincinnatus—returning to the field after rising to meet his country's needs—would leave so much behind.

Put simply, President Truman's foreign affairs accomplishments saved the world from the chaos that followed the destruction of Europe in the Second World War, and enabled the ultimate defeat of totalitarianism. To list a few: the Berlin Airlift, the Marshall Plan, aid to Greece and Turkey, NATO, and the establishment of the United Nations—the vision of his only rival President Woodrow Wilson.

His greatness was not readily accepted while he served, or shortly thereafter. But over time, Harry S. Truman has been reevaluated through such scholarly biographies as those by David McCullough and Alonzo L. Hamby. This son of Independence, Missouri, would surely have rejected the high praise that his name now generates, but he would certainly concur in the appreciation of the enduring success of the policies and institutions he created. McCullough's ''Truman'' contains this reflection:

> I suppose that history will remember my term in office as the years when the Cold War began to overshadow our lives.
> I have had hardly a day in office that has not been dominated by this all-embracing struggle. . . . And always in the background there has been the atomic bomb. But when history says that my term of office saw the beginning of the Cold War, it will also say that in those eight years we have set the course that can win it. . . .

Mr. President, few could dispute those sentiments.●

By Mr. CRAPO (for himself and Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire):

S. 2417. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to increase funding for State nonpoint source pollution control programs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

WATER POLLUTION PROGRAM ENHANCEMENTS ACT OF 2000

Mr. CRAPO. I am pleased to introduce today, with my colleague Senator SMITH of New Hampshire and Senator GORDON SMITH of Oregon, the ''Water Pollution Program Enhancements Act of 2000'' in response to a fast track rulemaking process undertaken by the Environmental Protection Agency with respect to the total maximum daily load, or TMDL, and National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System, NPDES, permit programs under the Clean Water Act. The concerns over this rule are far too great and EPA is moving far too quickly for Congress to stand aside and allow this regulation to move ahead. My disagreement with the proposed rule is not its basic objective, which is aimed at cleaning up our Nation's waters—but the hurried approach EPA has elected to take, and their refusal to address the very numerous, very real concerns of states, cities, and stakeholders.

Huge strides have been made in cleaning up our nation's waters since the Clean Water Act was passed in 1972, particularly in the area of point source pollutants. But clearly, our work is not finished in trying to make our lakes, rivers and streams ''fishable and swimmable.'' More must be done to improve water quality, and more must especially be done to provide additional resources to address nonpoint source pollution, which, so far, has not received anywhere near the kind of funding that has been focused on discharges from point sources.

In the past month and a half, we have held two hearings on the Environmental Protection Agency's proposed rule with respect to total maximum daily loads and the NPDES permit programs. The same subject has been examined in four other Congressional hearings by three separate committees. What we have collectively learned in these hearings about EPA's proposed rule is nothing short of alarming. States have responded with universal concern to this proposed rule that saddles them with enormous regulatory burdens and exorbitant costs in carrying out their water quality management programs. Not only is this proposed onerous and costly to implement, but States have testified that it is not likely to improve water quality, and, in fact, may have a detrimental effect on States with existing programs that have proven to be successful.

We would prefer not to be introducing this bill today. We have been holding hearings. I have been communicating with EPA—as have dozens of other Members of Congress expressing their grave concern with the proposed rule. We would prefer that Congress be working through these very important and challenging issues in collaboration with EPA. But holding hearings and attempting to work with EPA to resolve issues of concern, or urging them to take a more thoughtful, even-handed approach is no longer a reasonable course of action when the EPA steadfastly continues to insist on fast tracking a rule that has been the subject of such widespread concern and criticism.

When EPA issued this proposed regulation last August, we were all surprised at the boldness of the agency to publish the rule:

During the Congressional recess; and Provide only a 60-day comment period on such as massive and complex rulemaking.

Not only did the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Environment and Public Works Committee request an extension of the comment period, but Congress was actually forced to enact legislation to compel EPA to listen. The EPA was forced to extend its comment period. EPA received more than 30,000 public comments on the proposed rule, and, as I said earlier, this rule has been the subject of six Congressional hearings.

To date, I do not see any evidence that EPA is listening. As recently as last week, EPA communicated that it had negotiated a 60-day OMB review—what is usually at least a 90-day review on major rulemaking efforts—and that it intends to finalize the rule by June 30.

The intransigence of the EPA is both unexplainable and unacceptable. If EPA is serious about ramming this regulation through by June 30, it is our intention to send them a loud message—Congress insists instead that they take a deep breath with respect to this rule.

The bill Senator SMITH and I are introducing today—the Water Pollution Program Enhancements Act—takes important steps toward achieving additional reductions in water pollution now, and providing the science necessary for better implementation of the TMDL program in the future.

In the hearings I held, witnesses raised three main concerns with respect to the proposed rule. They cited:

States' lack of reliable data for developing their 303(d) list of impaired waters;

The scarce public resources available for addressing nonpoint pollution in particular; and EPA's overreach of its statutory authority under the Clean Water Act in controlling water quality management programs administered by States.

This bill addresses those three issues without amending current law or regulation.

The Water Pollution Program Enhancement Act authorizes significantly increased funding for sections 106 and 319 under the Clean Water Act. Funding under section 106 would be made available to the States and specifically directed to:

Collect reliable monitoring data;

Improve their lists of impaired waters;

Prepare TMDLs; and Develop watershed management strategies.

Of the $500 million available for implementation of section 319, $200 million is required to be made available by the States for grants to private landowners to carry out projects that will improve water quality. These funds are specifically being made available to farmers, ranches, family forestland managers and others, to conduct activities on their lands that contribute to cleaning up rivers, lakes and streams.

These significant increases in funding will achieve on-the-ground results and have a very real effect in improving our nation's water quality.

Second, the bill directs the Environmental Protection Agency to contract with the National Academy of Sciences to prepare a report on:

The quality of the science used to develop and implement TMDLs;

The costs associated with implementing TMDLs; and

The availability of alternative programs or mechanisms to reduce the discharge of pollutants from point sources and nonpoint source pollution.

If there is one message I have heard loud and clear, it is that we lack basic and necessary data about TMDLs and how to implement the TMDL program that achieves the goal of improving water quality, provides States flexibility in administering their programs, and is cost effective. It is irresponsible of EPA to push ahead in finalizing this regulation when we do not have the answers to such basic questions about this program.

Third, the bill provides for innovation and collaboration by establishing a pilot program in which five states are selected to implement a three-year program that examines alternative strategies and incentives to reduce the discharge of pollutants and TMDLs. This pilot program will provide us with valuable information about how we might think outside the box to solve our water quality problems.

Finally, this legislation requires EPA to postpone its rulemaking and review the National Academy of Sciences study before publishing its final rule on the TMDL program. Despite EPA's assertions to the contrary, we know that the proposed rule would have enormous implications for States, cities and stakeholders. It is absolutely critical that we know more about the science of TMDLs before finalizing this rule, and EPA has given Congress no other choice but to compel them to do so. Congress has an obligation to intercede and resolve these issues crucial to the health of our people and our environment.

I urge my colleagues to join me in cleaning up our nation's waters through the reasonable and balanced provisions included in the Water Pollution Program Enhancements Act of 2000.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce today with my colleague from Idaho, Senator MIKE CRAPO, the ''Water Pollution Program Enhancements Act of 2000.'' I believe this bill will significantly improve water quality and, over the long term, reform the way the Environmental Protection Agency and the States implement the Total Maximum Daily Load, TMDL, program for impaired waters.

I emphasize at the outset that I strongly support the goals of the Clean Water Act. I believe all Americans should be able to enjoy clean water to drink, and that our rivers and lakes should be ''fishable'' and ''swimmable.'' And we have made substantial progress over the past 25 years since the Clean Water Act was enacted in cleaning up our nations rivers, lakes and streams. According to EPA, 60–70 percent of our nation's waters are now safe for fishing and swimming. Certainly, there's more work to be done. How we control runoff from agricultural and urban areas, and forests—so-called nonpoint source pollution—is our challenge for the future.

I also support the original concept underlying the TMDL program of helping ensure that water quality standards are met on all of our nation's rivers and streams and lakes. However, I believe that there may be other tools to help us achieve those laudable goals; TMDLs are not the only answer. We should be looking to the States for alternative, innovative solutions, particularly in the area of controlling nonpoint source pollution. And I believe that if we look, we will find that the States have better, more cost effective solutions to improving water quality. Is there a role for the Federal Government in addressing nonpoint source pollution? Absolutely. The Federal Government—EPA—should work in partnership with States and the private sector to achieve our shared goal of fishable and swimmable water.

EPA's approach to solving the nation's remaining water quality issues, however, continues to be based on more ''top-down'' regulations from Washington, D.C.; more confrontration, instead of collaboration; and more interference with State programs. We are taking the step of introducing this legislation today because EPA has made it clear that it plans to expedite the process for finalizing two controversial rules that it proposed last August that would make a number of significant changes to the existing programs to control the discharge of pollutants and to improve water quality. The first rule would significantly expand the requirements for establishing the total amount of pollutants that can be discharged to a waterbody—so-called ''total maximum daily loads.'' The second rule would expand EPA's authority to revoke or reissue state-issued permits under the Clean Water Act to implement the new TMDL requirements. The combined effect of these rules would be to dramatically expand EPA's authority over issues that have traditionally been within the jurisdiction of the States, such as farming, ranching and logging operations, and additionally to give EPA a potential new role in local land management use decisions.

I have serious concerns about the substance of these rules. But I am also deeply troubled by the process that EPA has adopted here. It began last summer when EPA initially proposed the rules. At that time, it stated that it would only accept public comments on the proposed rules for 60 days. Such a short period of time for public review was obviously inadequate given the length of the proposed rules and their complexity. Congress intervened and EPA was ultimately compelled to extend the comment deadline for an additional 90 days.

Even before the comment period had closed, however, EPA indicated that nothing would stop it from pushing the proposed rules through the process as quickly as possible. Over the past month, EPA has announced its plans to issue final rules before the end of June in spite of the fact that it received over 30,000 comments in February, at least 27,000 of which were critical of the rule, and can hardly have had an opportunity to give these comments serious consideration. There have been at least six hearings on the proposed rules in both the House and Senate in which serious concerns were raised about: the legality and practicality of the rules; the lack of reliable science underlying the existing TMDL program, not to mention any proposed expansion; the potential impact on successful State programs; the burdens that an expanded TMDL program would impose on individual landowners and small businesses; and the lack of a completed cost assessment of the proposed rules.

Senator CRAPO has held two hearings so far on EPA's proposed TMDL rules. Through that process, and in many meetings with stakeholders, I have heard about all of the problems with EPA's proposed rules—the lack of science, the overly broad scope, practical problems in implementing the rule, trampling of state programs, and the cost. Let me detail just a few of the comments that I heard.

On the question of the science underlying the TMDL program, GAO recently issued a report, and provided testimony on the basis of the report, that States do not have the data they need to accurately assess the pollution problems in their waters and further, do not have the data they need to develop TMDLs. In his statement to Senator CRAPO's subcommittee, Peter Guerrero noted specifically that the ''ability [of the States] to develop TMDLs is limited by a number of factors. . . . [S]hortages in funding and staff [were cited] as the major limitation to carrying out [the States'] responsibilities, including developing TMDLs. In addition, states reported that they need additional analytical methods and technical assistance to develop TMDLs for the more complex, nonpoint sources of pollution.'' He went on to state that only three states have the data they need to identify nonpoint sources of pollution, and only three States have the majority of the data they need to develop TMDLs for nonpoint sources. To me, this information from GAO sends a clear signal that TMDLs are not the answer for nonpoint source pollution. The science just isn't there.

We also heard from a variety of businesses and landowners who told us of other substantive problems with EPA's proposed rules. For example, Tom Thomson, a certified Tree Farmer from my home State of New Hampshire and the owner of the Outstanding Northeastern Tree Farm of 1997, testified that EPA's proposal to regulate tree farming as a point source and impose TMDLs would just make it harder to do the job of improving water quality. He explained that through aggressive, private and voluntary stewardship, private woodlot owners all over the country are doing a good job to address water quality issues related to forestry. Compliance rates now approach 90 percent in many of the States where forestry best management practices, BMPs, are in place. Total river and stream miles impaired due to silviculture declined 20 percent just between 1994 and 1996. The number of miles deemed to have ''major impairment'' from silviculture fell 83 percent. In 1996, EPA dropped silviculture from its list of 7 leading sources of river and stream impairment. That same year, silviculture contributed only 7 percent of total stream impairment. In Tom's word's this seems to be a classic case of ''if it ain't broke, don't fix it.'' In this case, it would seem clear that water quality issues related to forestry are being addressed and progress is being made through State BMP programs and other voluntary, non-regulatory measures undertaken by landowners.

To his credit, EPA Assistant Administrator for the Office of Water, Chuck Fox, has recognized that the proposed rule caused confusion and does have many problems. I met with Mr. Fox last week and was pleased to learn from him that EPA has heard at least some of the concerns that were raised and is ready to make some changes to their rule. He indicated that in any final rule, EPA would ''drop threatened waters; allow more flexibility in setting priorities; drop the offset requirements for new pollution; and revise the approach for forest pollution.''

Some of the changes may be significant and that's good news, but as always, ''the devil is in the details.'' I am still concerned that many of the major problems have not been addressed. I also wonder why, if EPA is willing to acknowledge that many of the concepts included in the proposed rule were indeed flawed, it hasn't been willing to withdraw the August draft and reissue a new proposed rule that reflects its current thoughts. Surely doing that and seeking public comment on a revised rule would result in a better, more informed end product. It would almost certainly enhance public confidence in EPA's process. However, EPA has consistently declined to consider this approach.

In my opinion, EPA simply hasn't done the work that must be done to justify and explain the rule to the public. States and the regulated community deserve to have their comments and concerns considered seriously by EPA, as well as to have an opportunity to review and provide comment on the cost assessment in the context of the proposed rule. Now apparently, EPA may be making significant changes that will never have been subject to public comment. In its desire to rush to judgment on a final rule, EPA is effectively neutering the role of public participation in the rulemaking process.

Therefore, Senator CRAPO and I have drafted legislation that will address several of the key problems with EPA's proposed rules and, in addition, defer any further EPA action on the rules until the National Academy of Sciences has conducted a study of the scientific issues underlying the development and implementation of the TMDL program.

Senator CRAPO and I are taking the first step to not only address some of the problems raised by EPA's proposed rules, but also to improve water quality on the ground right now.

Our bill will do three fundamental things. First, it significantly increases federal funding to $750 million for States to implement programs to address nonpoint source pollution, to assess the quality of their rivers and streams, and to collect the data they need to develop better TMDLs. This will represent a significant increase from current funding levels for Fiscal Year 2000 of $155 million for nonpoint source programs under section 106 and section 319 of the Clean Water Act. More money now will enable landowners, businesses, and States to do things now on the ground to improve water quality—things like putting in buffer strips and water retention ponds. With this approach, we won't have to wait 10 or 15 years for EPA to impose new regulatory requirements on landowners after a lengthy and onerous TMDL process.

Second, the bill directs the National Academy of Sciences to conduct a study on the science used to develop TMDLs and make recommendations about how to improve it. The NAS will also evaluate existing State programs to look at what works, particularly for nonpoint sources. Better science will make for better TMDLs.

Third, it includes a pilot program for EPA to compare different State approaches to improving water quality. TMDLs should not be the only tool that we rely on to meet our water quality goals; they may be appropriate and effective for a chemical company, but not for a farmer or woodlot owner. There are better solutions out there, particularly to deal with the problems associated with nonpoint source pollution. For example, States are using their own authority and incentive-based programs under the Safe Drinking Water Act and the farm bill to work together with farmers, ranchers, loggers and their cities to substantially reduce runoff.

The bottom line is that States, public utilities, landowners, and businesses now are spending billions of dollars to improve water quality. If we are going to ask them to spend billions more—and we are—Congress and EPA have a responsibility to make sure that the programs we create are based on good, reliable science, and make the best use of limited resources.

Again, it's not a question of challenging the goals of the Clean Water Act; it's a question of seeking the best way to achieve them.

The bill also includes a provision to defer the finalization of EPA's proposed TMDL and related permit rules. We're serious when we say that we want EPA to base its regulations on good science. And we're serious when we say that we want EPA to respect the role of the States in solving the problem of nonpoint source pollution. That's why the bill provides for the National Academy of Sciences to look into those issues. We believe that EPA also should welcome the NAS Study and look forward to the opportunity to use that Study to improve its rule. Therefore, the bill directs EPA to review the NAS Study and take into consideration the recommendations of the National Academy of Sciences before it finalizes any new TMDL rule. We believe that in the long run, waiting 18 months for the NAS analysis will only improve the rule and increase public confidence in it.

Mr. President, I know our critics will charge that we are undermining the Clean Water Act. They could not be more wrong. This legislation will enhance the Clean Water Act. By seeking better science and increasing needed Federal funding, this bill will strengthen programs on the ground that work—programs that improve water quality and help us achieve the fundamental goals of fishable and swimmable waters.

I commend Senator CRAPO for his leadership on this issue. I believe that in crafting this legislation, he is taking an important step in the right direction. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

By Mr. CAMPBELL:

S. 2418. A bill to prohibit commercial air tour operations over the Black Canyon National Park; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

BLACK CANYON OF THE GUNNISON NATIONAL PARK COMMERCIAL OVERFLIGHTS BAN ACT

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation that would prohibit commercial tour overflight operators from flying in and over the Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park. The Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park, our nation's 55th and newest national park is a breathtaking canyon of diverse magnitude, which is why I worked for over 13 years to get it dedicated as a national park.

I cannot imagine having the many visitors who tour my home state to view Colorado's newest national park enjoying the sound of airplanes or helicopters buzzing overhead while they are trying to listen to the flowing river at the bottom of the canyon. Because of the deep, narrow nature of the canyon, rescue and recovery operations for aircraft that experience problems would be extremely difficult, dangerous and costly.

My bill would amend the FAA reauthorization act of 2000 and would only restrict overflights on the Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park. I worked with my friend and colleague Senator ALLARD for over five years in support of his effort to get commercial overflights banned over the Rocky Mountain National Park. Similar action by Congress is now necessary for the Black Canyon of the Gunnison.

I believe National Park visitors seek peacefulness when they visit a national park and my legislation would help provide that. We contacted the Superintendent of the Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park and he informed us that currently no commercial overflights are taking place, but there may have been flights in the past.

My bill would amend already existing law and would not negatively affect the operation of emergency, military and commercial high-level airlines or private planes.

The Denver Post recently published an editorial supporting Congressional action on the issue of aircraft noise, citing how such operations would create noise which would echo terribly off the walls of the Canyon. As a member of the National Park and Historic Preservation Subcommittee, I have confronted these types of issues in the past and know how important it is for the visitors to our national parks to have everlasting and fond memories when they take the time and effort to visit the natural wonders we are blessed with in this country.

I ask unanimous consent that the Denver Post editorial and the bill be printed in the RECORD. And, I ask my colleagues to support this needed legislation.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2418

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROHIBITION ON CERTAIN COMMERCIAL AIR TOUR OPERATIONS.

Section 806 of the National Parks Air Tour Management Act of 2000 is amended by inserting ''or the Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park'' after ''Rocky Mountain National Park''.

KEEP PLANES OUT OF PARKS

April 10—It took five years, but the wonderful quiet over Rocky Mountain National Park has been permanently preserved. However, the state's congressional delegation should take steps to protect other national parks in Colorado from being pestered by the constant drone of low-flying planes and the thunderous whapping of helicopter blades. Of particular concern is the Black Canyon of the Gunnison.

Aircraft noise has become a huge problem in some national parks, such as the Grand Canyon.

So, when a helicopter tour company wanted to start scenic flights over Rocky Mountain National Park in the mid-1990s, Estes Park residents became alarmed.

A temporary ban on commercial flights over the park was put in place, thanks to efforts by then-U.S. Rep. Wayne Allard, a Republican who at the time represented the district that includes Estes Park; then-U.S. Rep. David Skaggs, a Democrat who at the time represented the district that includes Boulder County, where part of the park is located; and then-U.S. Transportation Secretary Federico Peña, a former Denver mayor.

But the ban wasn't really a done deal until this week. Allard, now a U.S. senator, amended the Federal Aviation Administration's authorization bill to include a permanent ban on aircraft tours over Rocky Mountain National Park. U.S. Rep. Bob Schaffer, another Republican who now represents Colorado's Fourth Congressional District, co-sponsored a similar amendment on the House side.

Unfortunately, their work may not yet be finished. In the last several months, some outdoor recreation groups have raised worries that commercial flights could become a problem over the Black Canyon of the Gunnison National Park. That prospect could make it impossible for visitors to enjoy standing on the rim and listening to the Gunnison River roar thousands of feet below. Aircraft noise would echo terribly off the rock walls, and the narrow canyon could present safety problems.

The use of commercial aircraft is justifiable in a few national parks. In Alaska, for example, airplanes are needed to reach parts of Denali National Park, including the main climbing route on Mount McKinley.

But in the national parks in Colorado, commercial tour flights simply aren't appropriate. The state's congressional delegation should continue to work on the issue.

By Mr. JOHNSON (for himself and Ms. COLLINS):

S. 2419. A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide for the annual determination of the rate of the basic benefit of active duty educational assistance under the Montgomery GI Bill, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

VETERANS' HIGHER EDUCATION OPPORTUNITIES ACT

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Veterans Higher Education Opportunities Act. I am pleased to be joined by the distinguished Senator COLLINS of Maine in bringing this important issue to the Senate floor today.

The 1944 GI Bill of Rights is one of the most important pieces of legislation ever passed by Congress. No program has been more successful in increasing educational opportunities for our country's veterans while also providing a valuable incentive for the best and brightest to make a career out of military service. This bill has allowed eight million veterans to finish high school and 2.3 million service members to attend college.

Unfortunately, without this update the current GI Bill can no longer deliver these results and fails in its promise to recruits and service members. The legislation that Senator COLLINS and I are introducing today will take an important first step in modernizing the GI Bill.

Over 96% of recruits currently sign up for the Montgomery GI Bill and pay $1,200 out of their first year's pay to guarantee eligibility. But only one-half of these military personnel use any of the current Montgomery GI Bill benefits. This is evidence that the current GI Bill simply does not meet their needs.

GI Bill benefits have not kept pace with increased costs of education. During the 1995–96 school year, the basic benefit paid under the Montgomery GI Bill offset only 36% of average total education costs.

There is wide consensus among national higher education and veterans associations that at a minimum, the GI Bill should pay the costs of attending the average four-year public institution as a commuter student. The current Montgomery GI Bill benefit pays only 55% of that cost.

My legislation creates that benchmark by indexing the GI Bill to the costs of attending the average four-year public institution as a commuter student. For example, those costs for the 1999–2000 academic year were $8,774. The Veterans Higher Education Opportunities Act would thereby require 36 monthly stipends of $975 for a total GI Bill benefit of $35,100. This benchmark cost will be updated annually by the College Board in order for the GI Bill to keep pace.

I am pleased that my legislation has the bipartisan support of Senator COLLINS and the overwhelming support of the Partnership for Veterans' Education. This organization includes over 45 veterans groups and higher education organizations including the VFW, the American Council on Education, the Non Commissioned Officers Association, the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, and the Retired Enlisted Association.

Several proposals have been introduced in the House that would address the shortfalls of the current GI Bill, and I look forward to working with members of the House and my colleagues in the Senate on this important issue.

As the parent of a son who served as a peacekeeper in Bosnia and who is currently deployed in Kosovo, these military ''quality of life'' challenges are particularly apparent to me. Making the GI Bill pay for viable educational opportunity makes as much sense today as it did following World War II. The very modest cost of improving the GI Bill will result in net gains to our military and our society.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2419

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Veterans' Higher Education Opportunities Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. ANNUAL DETERMINATION OF BASIC BENEFIT OF ACTIVE DUTY EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE UNDER THE MONTGOMERY GI BILL.

(a) BASIC BENEFIT.—Section 3015 of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(1), by striking ''of $528 (as increased from time to time under subsection (g))'' and inserting ''equal to the average monthly costs of tuition and expenses for commuter students at public institutions of higher education that award baccalaureate degrees (as determined under subsection (g))''; and

(2) in subsection (b)(1) by striking ''of $429 (as increased from time to time under subsection (g))'' and inserting ''equal to 75 percent of the average monthly costs of tuition and expenses for commuter students at public institutions of higher education that award baccalaureate degrees (as determined under subsection (g))''.

(b) DETERMINATION OF AVERAGE MONTHLY COSTS.—Subsection (g) of that section is amended to read as follows:

''(g)(1) Not later than September 30 each year, the Secretary shall determine the average monthly costs of tuition and expenses for commuter students at public institutions of higher education that award baccalaureate degrees for purposes of subsections (a)(1) and (b)(1) for the succeeding fiscal year. The Secretary shall determine such costs utilizing information obtained from the College Board or information provided annually by the College Board in its annual survey of institutions of higher education.

''(2) In determining the costs of tuition and expenses under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall take into account the following:

''(A) Tuition and fees.

''(B) The cost of books and supplies.

''(C) The cost of board.

''(D) Transportation costs.

''(E) Other nonfixed educational expenses.

''(3) A determination made under paragraph (1) in a year shall take effect on October 1 of that year and apply with respect to basic educational assistance allowances payable under this section for the fiscal year beginning in that year.

''(4) Not later than September 30 each year, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the average monthly costs of tuition and expenses as determined under paragraph (1) in that year.

''(5) For purposes of this section, the term 'institution of higher education' has the meaning given that term in section 101 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1001).''.

(c) STYLISTIC AMENDMENT.—Subsection (b) of that section is further amended in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by striking ''as provided in the succeeding subsections of this section'' and inserting ''as otherwise provided in this section''.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 2000.

(2) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall make the determination required by subsection (g) of section 3015 of title 38, United States Code (as amended by subsection (b) of this section), and such determination shall go into effect, for fiscal year 2001.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I am delighted to join with my friend and colleague, Senator JOHNSON, in introducing the Veterans' Higher Education Opportunities Act of 2000. This legislation will provide our veterans with expanded educational opportunities at a reasonable cost. Endorsed by the 47-member Partnership for Veterans Education, our legislation provides a new model for today's GI bill that is logical, fair, and worthy of a nation that values both higher education and our veterans.

The original GI bill was enacted in 1944. As a result of this initiative, 7.8 million World War II veterans were able to take advantage of postservice education and training opportunities, including more than 2 million veterans who went on to college. My own father was among those veterans who served bravely in World War II and then came back home to resume his education with assistance from the GI bill.

Since that time, various incarnations of the G.I. Bill have continued to assist millions of veterans in taking advantage of the educational opportunities they put on hold in order to serve their country. New laws were enacted to provide educational assistance to those who served in Korea and Vietnam, as well as to those who served during the period in-between. Since the change to an all-volunteer service, additional adjustments to these programs were made, leading up to the enactment of the Montgomery G.I. Bill in 1985.

The value of the educational benefit assistance provided by the Montgomery G.I. Bill, however, has greatly eroded over time due to inflation and the escalating cost of higher education. Military recruiters indicate that the program's benefits no longer serve as a strong incentive to join the military; nor do they serve as a retention tool valuable enough to persuade men and women to stay in the military and defer the full or part-time pursuit of their higher education until a later date. Perhaps most important, the program is losing its value as an instrument for readjustment into civilian life after military service.

This point really hit home for me when I recently met with representatives of the Maine State Approving Agency (SAA) for Veterans Education Programs. They told me of the ever increasing difficulties that service members are having in using the G.I. Bill's benefits for education and training.

For example, the Maine representatives told me that the majority of today's veterans are married and have children. Yet, the Montgomery G.I. Bill often does not cover the cost of tuition to attend a public institution, let alone the other costs associated with the pursuit of higher education and those required to help support a family.

In fact, in constant dollars, with one exception, the current G.I. Bill provides the lowest level of assistance ever to those who served in the defense of our country. The basic benefit program of the Vietnam Era G.I. Bill provided $493 per month in 1981 to a veteran with a spouse and two children. Twenty years later, a veteran in identical circumstances receives only $43 more, a mere 8% increase over a time period when inflation has nearly doubled, and a dollar buys only half of what it once purchased.

To address these problems, we are offering a modern version of the Montgomery G.I. Bill. This new model establishes a sensible, easily understood benchmark for G.I. Bill benefits. The benchmark sets G.I. Bill benefits at ''the average monthly costs of tuition and expenses for commuter students at public institutions of higher education that award baccalaureate degrees.'' This commonsense provision would serve as the foundation upon which future education stipends for all veterans would be based and would set benefits at a level sufficient to provide veterans the education promised to them at recruitment.

The current G.I. Bill now provides nine monthly $536 stipends per year for four years. The total benefit is $19,296. Under the new benchmark established by this legislation, the monthly stipend for this academic year would be $975, producing a new total benefit of $35,100 for the four academic years.

Mr. President, today's G.I. Bill is woefully under-funded and does not provide the financial support necessary for our veterans to meet their educational goals. The legislation that we are proposing would fulfill the promise made to our nation's veterans, help with recruiting and retention of men and women in our military, and reflect current costs of higher education. Now is the time to enact these modest improvements to the basic benefit program of the Montgomery G.I. Bill.

I urge all members of the Senate to join Senator JOHNSON and myself in support of the Veterans' Higher Education Opportunities Act.

By Mr. GRASSLEY (for himself, Ms. MIKULSKI, Ms. COLLINS, and Mr. CLELAND):

S. 2420. A bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to provide for the establishment of a program under which long-term care insurance is made available to Federal employees, members of the uniformed services, and civilian and military retirees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

LONG-TERM CARE SECURITY ACT

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2420

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Long-Term Care Security Act''.

SEC. 2. LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart G of part III of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''CHAPTER 90—LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE

''Sec.
''9001. Definitions.
''9002. Availability of insurance.
''9003. Contracting authority.
''9004. Financing.
''9005. Preemption.
''9006. Studies, reports, and audits.
''9007. Jurisdiction of courts.
''9008. Administrative functions.
''9009. Cost accounting standards.

''§ 9001. Definitions

For purposes of this chapter:

''(1) EMPLOYEE.—The term 'employee' means—

''(A) an employee as defined by section 8901(1); and

''(B) an individual described in section 2105(e);

but does not include an individual employed by the government of the District of Columbia.

''(2) ANNUITANT.—The term 'annuitant' has the meaning such term would have under paragraph (3) of section 8901 if, for purposes of such paragraph, the term 'employee' were considered to have the meaning given to it under paragraph (1) of this subsection.

''(3) MEMBER OF THE UNIFORMED SERVICES.—The term 'member of the uniformed services' means a member of the uniformed services, other than a retired member of the uniformed services.

''(4) RETIRED MEMBER OF THE UNIFORMED SERVICES.—The term 'retired member of the uniformed services' means a member or former member of the uniformed services entitled to retired or retainer pay.

''(5) QUALIFIED RELATIVE.—The term 'qualified relative' means each of the following:

''(A) The spouse of an individual described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4).

''(B) A parent, stepparent, or parent-in-law of an individual described in paragraph (1) or (3).

''(C) A child (including an adopted child, a stepchild, or, to the extent the Office of Personnel Management by regulation provided, a foster child) of an individual described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4), if such child is at least 18 years of age.

''(D) An individual having such other relationship to an individual described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) as the Office may by regulation prescribe.

''(6) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'eligible individual' refers to an individual described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), (4), or (5).

''(7) QUALIFIED CARRIER.—The term 'qualified carrier' means an insurance company (or consortium of insurance companies) that is licensed to issue long-term care insurance in all States, taking any subsidiaries of such a company into account (and, in the case of a consortium, considering the member companies and any subsidiaries thereof, collectively).

''(8) STATE.—The term 'State' includes the District of Columbia.

''(9) QUALIFIED LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE CONTRACT.—The term 'qualified long-term care insurance contract' has the meaning given such term by section 7702B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

''(10) APPROPRIATE SECRETARY.—The term 'appropriate Secretary' means—

''(A) except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the Secretary of Defense;

''(B) with respect to the Coast Guard when it is not operating as a service of the Navy, the Secretary of Transportation;

''(C) with respect to the commissioned corps of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the Secretary of Commerce; and

''(D) with respect to the commissioned corps of the Public Health Service, the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

''§ 9002. Availability of insurance

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Office of Personnel Management shall establish and, in consultation with the appropriate Secretaries, administer a program through which an individual described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), (4), or (5) of section 9001 may obtain long-term care insurance coverage under this chapter for such individual.

''(b) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—Long-term care insurance may not be offered under this chapter unless—

''(1) the only coverage provided is under qualified long-term care insurance contracts; and

''(2) each insurance contract under which any such coverage is provided is issued by a qualified carrier.

''(c) DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENT.—As a condition for obtaining long-term care insurance coverage under this chapter based on one's status as a qualified relative, an applicant shall provide documentation to demonstrate the relationship, as prescribed by the Office.

''(d) UNDERWRITING STANDARDS.—

''(1) DISQUALIFYING CONDITION.—Nothing in this chapter shall be considered to require that long-term care insurance coverage be made available in the case of any individual who would be eligible for benefits immediately.

''(2) SPOUSAL PARITY.—For the purpose of underwriting standards, a spouse of an individual described in paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) of section 9001 shall, as nearly as practicable, be treated like that individual.

''(3) GUARANTEED ISSUE.—Nothing in this chapter shall be considered to require that long-term care insurance coverage be guaranteed to an eligible individual.

''(4) REQUIREMENT THAT CONTRACT BE FULLY INSURED.—In addition to the requirements otherwise applicable under section 9001(9), in order to be considered a qualified long-term care insurance contract for purposes of this chapter, a contract must be fully insured, whether through reinsurance with other companies or otherwise.

''(5) HIGHER STANDARDS ALLOWABLE.—Nothing in this chapter shall, in the case of an individual applying for long-term care insurance coverage under this chapter after the expiration of such individual's first opportunity to enroll, preclude the application of underwriting standards more stringent than those that would have applied if that opportunity had not yet expired.

''(e) GUARANTEED RENEWABILITY.—The benefits and coverage made available to eligible individuals under any insurance contract under this chapter shall be guaranteed renewable (as defined by section 7A(2) of the model regulations described in section 7702B(g)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986), including the right to have insurance remain in effect so long as premiums continue to be timely made. However, the authority to revise premiums under this chapter shall be available only on a class basis and only to the extent otherwise allowable under section 9003(b).

''§ 9003. Contracting authority

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Office of Personnel Management shall, without regard to section 5 of title 41 or any other statute requiring competitive bidding, contract with 1 or more qualified carriers for a policy or policies of long-term care insurance. The Office shall ensure that each resulting contract (hereinafter in this chapter referred to as a 'master contract') is awarded on the basis of contractor qualifications, price, and reasonable competition.

''(b) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Each master contract under this chapter shall contain—

''(A) a detailed statement of the benefits offered (including any maximums, limitations, exclusions, and other definitions of benefits);

''(B) the premiums charged (including any limitations or other conditions on their subsequent adjustment);

''(C) the terms of the enrollment period; and

''(D) such other terms and conditions as may be mutually agreed to by the Office and the carrier involved, consistent with the requirements of this chapter.

''(2) PREMIUMS.—Premiums charged under each master contract entered into under this section shall reasonably and equitably reflect the cost of the benefits provided, as determined by the Office. The premiums shall not be adjusted during the term of the contract unless mutually agreed to by the Office and the carrier.

''(3) NONRENEWABILITY.—Master contracts under this chapter may not be made automatically renewable.

''(c) PAYMENT OF REQUIRED BENEFITS; DISPUTE RESOLUTION.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Each master contract under this chapter shall require the carrier to agree—

''(A) to provide payments or benefits to an eligible individual if such individual is entitled thereto under the terms of the contract; and

''(B) with respect to disputes regarding claims for payments or benefits under the terms of the contract—

''(i) to establish internal procedures designed to expeditiously resolve such disputes; and

''(ii) to establish, for disputes not resolved through procedures under clause (i), procedures for 1 or more alternative means of dispute resolution involving independent third-party review under appropriate circumstances by entities mutually acceptable to the Office and the carrier.

''(2) ELIGIBILITY.—A carrier's determination as to whether or not a particular individual is eligible to obtain long-term care insurance coverage under this chapter shall be subject to review only to the extent and in the manner provided in the applicable master contract.

''(3) OTHER CLAIMS.—For purposes of applying the Contract Disputes Act of 1978 to disputes arising under this chapter between a carrier and the Office—

''(A) the agency board having jurisdiction to decide an appeal relative to such a dispute shall be such board of contract appeals as the Director of the Office of Personnel Management shall specify in writing (after appropriate arrangements, as described in section 8(c) of such Act); and

''(B) the district courts of the United States shall have original jurisdiction, concurrent with the United States Court of Federal Claims, of any action described in section 10(a)(1) of such Act relative to such a dispute.

''(4) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this chapter shall be considered to grant authority for the Office or a third-party reviewer to change the terms of any contract under this chapter.

''(d) DURATION.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Each master contract under this chapter shall be for a term of 7 years, unless terminated earlier by the Office in accordance with the terms of such contract. However, the rights and responsibilities of the enrolled individual, the insurer, and the Office (or duly designated third-party administrator) under such contract shall continue with respect to such individual until the termination of coverage of the enrolled individual or the effective date of a successor contract thereto.

''(2) EXCEPTION.—

''(A) SHORTER DURATION.—In the case of a master contract entered into before the end of the period described in subparagraph (B), paragraph (1) shall be applied by substituting 'ending on the last day of the 7-year period described in paragraph (2)(B)' for 'of 7 years'.

''(B) DEFINITION.—The period described in this subparagraph is the 7-year period beginning on the earliest date as of which any long-term care insurance coverage under this chapter becomes effective.

''(3) CONGRESSIONAL NOTIFICATION.—No later than 180 days after receiving the second report required under section 9006(c), the President (or his designee) shall submit to the Committees on Government Reform and on Armed Services of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Governmental Affairs and on Armed Services of the Senate, a written recommendation as to whether the program under this chapter should be continued without modification, terminated, or restructured. During the 180-day period following the date on which the President (or his designee) submits the recommendation required under the preceding sentence, the Office of Personnel Management may not take any steps to rebid or otherwise contract for any coverage to be available at any time following the expiration of the 7-year period described in paragraph (2)(B).

''(4) FULL PORTABILITY.—Each master contract under this chapter shall include such provisions as may be necessary to ensure that, once an individual becomes duly enrolled, long-term care insurance coverage obtained by such individual pursuant to that enrollment shall not be terminated due to any change in status (such as separation from Government service or the uniformed services) or ceasing to meet the requirements for being considered a qualified relative (whether as a result of dissolution of marriage or otherwise).

''§ 9004. Financing

''(a) IN GENERAL.—Each eligible individual obtaining long-term care insurance coverage under this chapter shall be responsible for 100 percent of the premiums for such coverage.

''(b) WITHHOLDINGS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount necessary to pay the premiums for enrollment may—

''(A) in the case of an employee, be withheld from the pay of such employee;

''(B) in the case of an annuitant, be withheld from the annuity of such annuitant;

''(C) in the case of a member of the uniformed services described in section 9001(3), be withheld from the basic pay of such member; and

''(D) in the case of a retired member of the uniformed services described in section 9001(4), be withheld from the retired pay or retainer pay payable to such member.

''(2) VOLUNTARY WITHHOLDINGS FOR QUALIFIED RELATIVES.—Withholdings to pay the premiums for enrollment of a qualified relative may, upon election of the appropriate eligible individual (described in section 9001(1)–(4)), be withheld under paragraph (1) to the same extent and in the same manner as if enrollment were for such individual.

''(c) DIRECT PAYMENTS.—All amounts withheld under this section shall be paid directly to the carrier.

''(d) OTHER FORMS OF PAYMENT.—Any enrollee who does not elect to have premiums withheld under subsection (b) or whose pay, annuity, or retired or retainer pay (as referred to in subsection (b)(1)) is insufficient to cover the withholding required for enrollment (or who is not receiving any regular amounts from the Government, as referred to in subsection (b)(1), from which any such withholdings may be made, and whose premiums are not otherwise being provided for under subsection (b)(2)) shall pay an amount equal to the full amount of those charges directly to the carrier.

''(e) SEPARATE ACCOUNTING REQUIREMENT.—Each carrier participating under this chapter shall maintain records that permit it to account for all amounts received under this chapter (including investment earnings on those amounts) separate and apart from all other funds.

''(f) REIMBURSEMENTS.—

''(1) REASONABLE INITIAL COSTS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Employees' Life Insurance Fund is available, without fiscal year limitation, for reasonable expenses incurred by the Office of Personnel Management in administering this chapter before the start of the 7-year period described in section 9003(d)(2)(B), including reasonable implementation costs.

''(B) REIMBURSEMENT REQUIREMENT.—Such Fund shall be reimbursed, before the end of the first year of that 7-year period, for all amounts obligated or expended under subparagraph (A) (including lost investment income). Such reimbursement shall be made by carriers, on a pro rata basis, in accordance with appropriate provisions which shall be included in master contracts under this chapter.

''(2) SUBSEQUENT COSTS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—There is hereby established in the Employees' Life Insurance Fund a Long-Term Care Administrative Account, which shall be available to the Office, without fiscal year limitation, to defray reasonable expenses incurred by the Office in administering this chapter after the start of the 7-year period described in section 9003(d)(2)(B).

''(B) REIMBURSEMENT REQUIREMENT.—Each master contract under this chapter shall include appropriate provisions under which the carrier involved shall, during each year, make such periodic contributions to the Long-Term Care Administrative Account as necessary to ensure that the reasonable anticipated expenses of the Office in administering this chapter during such year (adjusted to reconcile for any earlier overestimates or underestimates under this subparagraph) are defrayed.

''§ 9005. Preemption

''The terms of any contract under this chapter which relate to the nature, provision, or extent of coverage or benefits (including payments with respect to benefits) shall supersede and preempt any State or local law, or any regulation issued thereunder, which relates to long-term care insurance or contracts.

''§ 9006. Studies, reports, and audits

''(a) PROVISIONS RELATING TO CARRIERS.—Each master contract under this chapter shall contain provisions requiring the carrier—

''(1) to furnish such reasonable reports as the Office of Personnel Management determines to be necessary to enable it to carry out its functions under this chapter; and

''(2) to permit the Office and representatives of the General Accounting Office to examine such records of the carrier as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this chapter.

''(b) PROVISIONS RELATING TO FEDERAL AGENCIES.—Each Federal agency shall keep such records, make such certifications, and furnish the Office, the carrier, or both, with such information and reports as the Office may require.

''(c) REPORTS BY THE GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE.—The General Accounting Office shall prepare and submit to the President, the Office of Personnel Management, and each House of Congress, before the end of the third and fifth years during which the program under this chapter is in effect, a written report evaluating such program. Each such report shall include an analysis of the competitiveness of the program, as compared to both group and individual coverage generally available to individuals in the private insurance market. The Office shall cooperate with the General Accounting Office to provide periodic evaluations of the program.

''§ 9007. Jurisdiction of courts

''The district courts of the United States have original jurisdiction of a civil action or claim described in paragraph (1) or (2) of section 9003(c), after such administrative remedies as required under such paragraph (1) or (2) (as applicable) have been exhausted, but only to the extent judicial review is not precluded by any dispute resolution or other remedy under this chapter.

''§ 9008. Administrative functions

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Office of Personnel Management shall prescribe regulations necessary to carry out this chapter.

''(b) ENROLLMENT PERIODS.—The Office shall provide for periodic coordinated enrollment, promotion, and education efforts in consultation with the carriers.

''(c) CONSULTATION.—Any regulations necessary to effect the application and operation of this chapter with respect to an eligible individual described in paragraph (3) or

(4) of section 9001, or a qualified relative thereof, shall be prescribed by the Office in consultation with the appropriate Secretary.

''(d) INFORMED DECISIONMAKING.—The Office shall ensure that each eligible individual applying for long-term care insurance under this chapter is furnished the information necessary to enable that individual to evaluate the advantages and disadvantages of obtaining long-term care insurance under this chapter, including the following:

''(1) The principal long-term care benefits and coverage available under this chapter, and how those benefits and coverage compare to the range of long-term care benefits and coverage otherwise generally available.

''(2) Representative examples of the cost of long-term care, and the sufficiency of the benefits available under this chapter relative to those costs. The information under this paragraph shall also include—

''(A) the projected effect of inflation on the value of those benefits; and

''(B) a comparison of the inflation-adjusted value of those benefits to the projected future costs of long-term care.

''(3) Any rights individuals under this chapter may have to cancel coverage, and to receive a total or partial refund of premiums. The information under this paragraph shall also include—

''(A) the projected number or percentage of individuals likely to fail to maintain their coverage (determined based on lapse rates experienced under similar group long-term care insurance programs and, when available, this chapter); and

''(B)(i) a summary description of how and when premiums for long-term care insurance under this chapter may be raised;

''(ii) the premium history during the last 10 years for each qualified carrier offering long-term care insurance under this chapter; and

''(iii) if cost increases are anticipated, the projected premiums for a typical insured individual at various ages.

''(4) The advantages and disadvantages of long-term care insurance generally, relative to other means of accumulating or otherwise acquiring the assets that may be needed to meet the costs of long-term care, such as through tax-qualified retirement programs or other investment vehicles.

''§ 9009. Cost accounting standards

''The cost accounting standards issued pursuant to section 26(f) of the Office of Federal Procurement Policy Act (41 U.S.C. 422(f)) shall not apply with respect to a long-term care insurance contract under this chapter.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for part III of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end of subpart G the following:

''90. Long-Term Care Insurance ... 9001.''.

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The Office of Personnel Management shall take such measures as may be necessary to ensure that long-term care insurance coverage under title 5, United States Code, as amended by this Act, may be obtained in time to take effect not later than the first day of the first applicable pay period of the first fiscal year which begins after the end of the 18-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. CONRAD:

S. 2422. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide tax incentives for farm relief and economic development, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

FARM RELIEF AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 2000

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Farm Relief and Economic Development Act of 2000. We have farmers who are in the deepest trouble they have been in in 50 years: the lowest prices in 50 years, a series of natural disasters in many parts of the country, and an economic environment in which our major competitors are outgunning us 60 to 1 in agricultural export support, by 10 to 1 in internal support. The result is tens of thousands of farm families are faced with failure unless we respond.

The Department of Agriculture has told us that farm income will drop $8 billion if we fail to act. As part of an overall response, today I am introducing legislation that I term the ''Farm Relief and Economic Development Act of 2000.'' There is no question in my mind that the best action Congress could take on farm policy would be to rewrite the farm bill. But that is unlikely to happen this year.

There are parts of the Internal Revenue Code that create unnecessary problems for farmers that we can address. The essential elements of this bill are provisions to address farm and ranch risk management accounts. This proposal would allow farmers to make contributions to tax-deferred accounts, which would be known as farm and ranch risk management accounts. Those accounts would provide farmers with a valuable new tool for managing money in a way that best benefits each farmer's own operations.

The second key element of this legislation is clarifying the self-employment tax that applies to farm lease income. A farm landlord should be treated no differently than small business operators and other commercial landlords when it comes to cash rent income.

As a result of a 1996 Tax Court decision, the IRS has now expanded the reach of the self-employment tax to include all farm landlords, whether or not they are active participants in the farming activity. My proposal would restore the pre-1996 status quo, turning back this unilateral action by the IRS. My proposal also includes language to clarify the Conservation Reserve Program payments are not subject to the self-employment tax. Again, we have an interpretation by the Internal Revenue Service that we think is badly flawed and ought to be reversed.

This legislation provides capital gains relief on the sale of farm residences and farmland. Farm families frequently cannot take full advantage of the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption that we provide nonfarm residents. That is because the IRS separates the value of a farmer's house from the contiguous land. The value of the home often turns out to be negligible because the IRS often judges homes located far out in the country to have very little value. In fact, it is often the case it has very little in the way of market value when it is detached from the land that surrounds that farmstead. My proposal would allow the exclusion of $500,000 that we currently allow homeowners to be applied to the sale of a farmer's home and up to 160 acres of surrounding farmland.

The next element of my legislation is Aggie bonds. Finding ways to encourage people to start farming is not easy. Aggie bonds are helping by reducing the cost of credit and stimulating investment in agriculture. This proposal would exclude Aggie bonds from the State volume cap. It would not change the loan limit, nor would it affect any additional limitations or qualifications imposed by the 16 States which participate in the program.

My proposal provides capital gains tax relief for farmers leaving farming. The farmer who decides to leave under enormous financial pressure today often finds the IRS waiting with its hand out. When property is sold at auction in order to satisfy debt, the farmers will often realize a very significant capital gain, even though they really have losses because the value of the property has gone up while the debt may have gone up even more dramatically. This proposal would provide a once-in-a-lifetime capital gains exclusion for farmers who decide or are pressured to leave agriculture.

Next, this proposal addresses net operating losses of farmers. My proposal would lengthen the carryback period for net operating losses for farmers to 10 years. Because of the volatility in the income of farmers, we believe it makes sense to allow them a net operating loss over an extended period.

Next, this proposal I am offering today deals with estate valuation. We have the special use valuation, in order to help farmers keep their farms intact. The definitions that trigger the recapture, unfortunately, are too rigid. If the farm can remain a going concern by renting some portion of it to other family members, I believe the family should be able to still enjoy the benefits of special use valuation. My proposal would provide that an heir could rent the family farm to family members for the purpose of farming without triggering the recapture provisions.

Next, my proposal deals with farmer cooperatives. This proposal would provide cooperatives with the same declaratory relief procedures available to other tax-exempt entities when their tax-exempt status is denied.

Finally, my proposal deals with income averaging for farmers and the alternative minimum tax. Because of interaction between the income averaging provisions of the code and the alternative minimum tax, some farmers who elect to take advantage of income averaging are finding themselves subject to alternative minimum tax. That was never intended. This outcome should be changed so farmers receive the full benefit of income averaging. This proposal would provide that a farmer who elects income averaging would not then face an increase in AMT liability.

With that, Mr. President, I send the bill to the desk and ask for its referral. I hope colleagues will support this legislation.

By Mr. DURBIN:

S. 2423. A bill to provide Federal Perkins Loan cancellation for public defenders; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

FEDERAL PERKINS LOAN CANCELLATION FOR PUBLIC DEFENDERS

• Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation with Senators FEINSTEIN, DODD, WELLSTONE, and BINGAMAN to include full-time public defense attorneys in the Federal Perkins Loan forgiveness program for law enforcement officers. This amendment will provide parity to public defense attorneys and uphold the goals set forth by the Supreme Court to equalize access to legal resources. Representative TOM CAMPBELL of California will be introducing a similar bill in the House.

Under section 465(a)(2)(F) of the Higher Education Act of 1965, a borrower with a loan made under the Federal Perkins Loan Program is eligible to have the loan canceled for serving full-time as a law enforcement officer or corrections officer in a local, State, or Federal law enforcement or corrections agency. While the rules governing borrower eligibility for law enforcement cancellation have been interpreted by the Department of Education to include prosecuting attorneys, public defenders have been excluded from the loan forgiveness program. This policy must be amended.

Like prosecutors, public defense attorneys play an integral role in our adversarial process. This judicial process is the most effective means of getting at truth and rendering justice. The United States Supreme Court in a series of cases has recognized the importance of the right to counsel in implementing the Sixth Amendment's guarantee of a fair trial and the Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause requiring counsel to be appointed for all persons accused of offenses in which there is a possibility of a jail term being imposed.

Absent adequate counsel for all parties, there is a danger that the outcome may be determined not by who has the most convincing case but by who has the most resources. The Court rightly addressed this possible miscarriage of justice by requiring counsel to be appointed for the accused. Public defenders fill this Court mandated role by representing the interests of criminally accused indigent persons. They give indigent defendants sufficient resources to present an adequate defense, so that the public goal of truth and justice will govern the outcome.

The Department of Education's interpretation of the statute to exclude public defenders from the loan forgiveness program undermines the goals set forth by the Supreme Court to equalize access to legal resources. It creates an obvious disparity of resources between public defenders and prosecutors by encouraging talented individuals to pursue public service as prosecutors but not as defenders. The criminal justice system works best when both sides are adequately represented. The public interest is served when indigent defendants have access to talented defenders. One of the ways to facilitate this goal is by granting loan cancellation benefits to defense attorneys.

Moreover, public defense attorneys meet all the eligibility requirements of the loan forgiveness program as set forth in current federal regulations. They belong to publicly funded public defender agencies and they are sworn officers of the court whose principal responsibilities are unique to the criminal justice system and are essential in the performance of the agencies' primary mission. In addition, like prosecuting attorneys, public defenders are law enforcement officers dedicated to upholding, protecting, and enforcing our laws. Without public defense attorneys, the adversarial process of our criminal justice system could not operate.

I urge my colleagues to join me, Senator FEINSTEIN, Senator DODD, Senator WELLSTONE, Senator BINGAMAN, and Representative CAMPBELL in supporting the goal of equalized access to legal resources, as set forth in the Constitution and elucidated by the Supreme Court, by providing parity to public defenders and allowing them to join prosecutors in receiving loan cancellation benefits.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2423

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FEDERAL PERKINS LOAN CANCELLATION FOR PUBLIC DEFENDERS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Department of Education has issued clarifications that prosecuting attorneys are among the class of law enforcement officers eligible for benefits under the Federal Perkins Loan cancellation program.

(2) Like prosecutors, public defenders also meet all the eligibility requirements of the Federal Perkins Loan cancellation program as set forth in Federal regulations.

(3) Public defenders are law enforcement officers who play an integral role in our Nation's adversarial legal process. Public defenders fill the Supreme Court mandated role requiring that counsel be appointed for the accused, by representing the interests of criminally accused indigent persons.

(4) In order to encourage highly qualified attorneys to serve as public defenders, public defenders should be included with prosecutors among the class of law enforcement officers eligible to receive benefits under the Federal Perkins Loan cancellation program.

(b) AMENDMENT.—Section 465(a)(2)(F) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1087ee(a)(2)(F)) is amended by inserting '', or as a full-time public defender for service to local, State, or Federal governments (directly or by a contract with a private, nonprofit organization)'' after ''agencies''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to—

(1) loans made under this part, whether made before, on, or after the date of enactment of this Act; and

(2) service as a public defender that is provided on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the refunding of any repayment of a loan.•

By Mr. JEFFORDS (for himself, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. DODD, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. LIEBERMAN):

S. 2429. A bill to amend the Energy Conservation and Production Act to make changes in the Weatherization Assistance Program for Low-Income Persons; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

WEATHERIZATION IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2000

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Weatherization Improvement Act of 2000.

As this past winter has demonstrated, cold temperatures and high fuel costs can result in severe hardship for many of our low-income households, particularly those with children, elderly, and disabled members. Preventative energy efficiency measures are vital to ensure that low-income consumers spend less money keeping their families warm on cold winter nights. It is estimated that investments in Weatherization can save a typical household $193 in annual gas energy costs. While improving energy efficiency through work such as airsealing and insulation work is an admirable goal, the Weatherization Assistance Program also has become an important tool in addressing the health and safely of our low-income families.

The Weatherization Improvement Act of 2000 seeks to further this commitment. The legislation will amend the average per dwelling unit cost to incorporate intensive costs, such as costs of furnace or cooling replacements, reducing the administrative burden of tracking these costs separately; increase the average cost per home, beginning this year, to $2,500 (up from $2,032 for 1999); and eliminate the statutory requirement that at least 40 percent of funds be spent on materials.

These changes are necessary to improve the effectiveness of the Weatherization, and are long overdue.

Lastly, the legislation repeals the 25 percent state matching requirement for the Weatherization Assistance Program set to begin in FY2001, which was included in the FY2000 Interior Appropriations legislation. While many states, utilities, and private organizations have leveraged large amounts of money in support of the Weatherization Assistance Program, not every state is in the same financial situation. There needs to be national commitment to energy efficiency for low income Americans and affordable housing. This is part of that commitment.

By Mr. LEAHY:

S. 2430. A bill to combat computer hacking through enhanced law enforcement and to protect the privacy and constitutional rights of Americans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INTERNET SECURITY ACT OF 2000

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, as we head into the twenty-first century, computer-related crime is one of the greatest challenges facing law enforcement. Many of our critical infrastructures and our government depend upon the reliability and security of complex computer systems. We need to make sure that these essential systems are protected from all forms of attack. The legislation I am introducing today will help law enforcement investigate and prosecute those who jeopardize the integrity of our computer systems and the Internet.

Whether we work in the private sector or in government, we negotiate daily through a variety of security checkpoints designed to protect ourselves from being victimized by crime or targeted by terrorists. For instance, congressional buildings like this one use cement pillars placed at entrances, photo identification cards, metal detectors, x-ray scanners, and security guards to protect the physical space. These security steps and others have become ubiquitous in the private sector as well.

Yet all these physical barriers can be circumvented using the wires that run into every building to support the computers and computer networks that are the mainstay of how we communicate and do business. This plain fact was amply demonstrated by the recent hacker attacks on E-Trade, ZDNet, Datek, Yahoo, eBay, Amazon.com and other Internet sites. These attacks raise serious questions about Internet security—questions that we need to answer to ensure the long-term stability of electronic commerce. More importantly, a well-focused and more malign cyber-attack on computer networks that support telecommunications, transportation, water supply, banking, electrical power and other critical infrastructure systems could wreak havoc on our national economy or even jeopardize our national defense. We have learned that even law enforcement is not immune. Just recently we learned of a denial of service attack successfully perpetrated against a FBI web site, shutting down that site for several hours.

The cybercrime problem is growing. The reports of the CERT Coordination Center (formerly called the "Computer Emergency Response Team"), which was established in 1988 to help the Internet community detect and resolve computer security incidents, provide chilling statistics on the vulnerabilities of the Internet and the scope of the problem. Over the last decade, the number of reported computer security incidents grew from 6 in 1988 to more than 8,000 in 1999. But that alone does not reveal the scope of the problem. According to CERT's most recent annual report, more than four million computer hosts were affected by the computer security incidents in 1999 alone by damaging computer viruses, with names like "Melissa," "Chernobyl," "ExploreZip," and by the other ways that remote intruders have found to exploit system vulnerabilities. Even before the recent headline-grabbing "denial-of-service" attacks, CERT documented that such incidents "grew at rate around 50% per year" which was "greater than the rate of growth of Internet hosts."

CERT has tracked recent trends in severe hacking incidents on the Internet and made the following observations, First, hacking techniques are getting more sophisticated. That means law enforcement is going to have to get smarter too, and we need to give them the resources to do this. Second, hackers have "become increasingly difficult to locate and identify." These criminals are operating in many different locations and are using techniques that allow them to operate in "nearly total obscurity."

We have been aware of the vulnerabilities to terrorist attacks of our computer networks for more than a decade. It became clear to me, when I chaired a series of hearings in 1988 and 1989 by the Subcommittee on Technology and the Law in the Senate Judiciary Committee on the subject of high-tech terrorism and the threat of computer viruses, that merely "hardening" our physical space from potential attack would only prompt committed criminals and terrorists to switch tactics and use new technologies to reach vulnerable softer targets, such as our computer systems and other critical infrastructures. The government has a responsibility to work with those in the private sector to assess those vulnerabilities and defend them. That means making sure our law enforcement agencies have the tools they need, but also that the government does not stand in the way of smart technical solutions to defend our computer systems.

Targeting cybercrime with up-to-date criminal laws and tougher law enforcement is only part of the solution. While criminal penalties may deter some computer criminals, these laws usually come into play too late, after the crime has been committed and the injury inflicted. We should keep in mind the adage that the best defense is a good offense. Americans and American firms must be encouraged to take preventive measures to protect their computer information and systems. Just recently, internet providers and companies such as Yahoo! and Amazon.com Inc., and computer hardware companies such a Cisco Systems Inc., proved successful at stemming attacks within hours thereby limiting losses.

That is why, for years, I have advocated and sponsored legislation to encourage the widespread use of strong encryption. Encryption is an important tool in our arsenal to protect the security of our computer information and networks. The Administration made enormous progress earlier this year when it issued new regulations relaxing export controls on strong encryption. Of course, encryption technology cannot be the sole source of protection for our critical computer networks and computer-based infrastructure, but we need to make sure the government is encouraging—and not restraining—the use of strong encryption and other technical solutions to protecting our computer systems.

Congress has responded again and again to help our law enforcement agencies keep up with the challenges of new crimes being executed over computer networks. In 1984, we passed the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, and its amendments, to criminalize conduct when carried out by means of unauthorized access to a computer. In 1986, we passed the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (ECPA), which I was proud to sponsor, to criminalize tampering with electronic mail systems and remote data processing systems and to protect the privacy of computer users. In the 104th Congress, Senators KYL, GRASSLEY, and I worked together to enact the National Information Infrastructure Protection Act to increase protection under federal criminal law for both government and private computers, and to address an emerging problem of computer-age blackmail in which a criminal threatens to harm or shut down a computer system unless their extortion demands are met.

In this Congress, I have introduced a bill with Senator DEWINE, the Computer Crime Enforcement Act, S. 1314, to set up a $25 million grant program within the U.S. Department of Justice for states to tap for improved education, training, enforcement and prosecution of computer crimes. All 50 states have now enacted tough computer crime control laws. These state laws establish a firm groundwork for electronic commerce and Internet security. Unfortunately, too many state and local law enforcement agencies are struggling to afford the high cost of training and equipment necessary for effective enforcement of their state computer crime statutes. Our legislation, the Computer Crime Enforcement Act, would help state and local law enforcement join the fight to combat the worsening threats we face from computer crime.

Computer crime is a problem nationwide and in Vermont. I recently released a survey on computer crime in Vermont. My office surveyed 54 law enforcement agencies in Vermont—43 police departments and 11 State's attorney offices—on their experience investigating and prosecuting computer crimes. The survey found that more than half of these Vermont law enforcement agencies encounter computer crime, with many police departments and state's attorney offices handling 2 to 5 computer crimes per month.

Despite this documented need, far too many law enforcement agencies in Vermont cannot afford the cost of policing against computer crimes. Indeed, my survey found that 98% of the responding Vermont law enforcement agencies do not have funds dedicated for use in computer crime enforcement.

My survey also found that few law enforcement officers in Vermont are properly trained in investigating computer crimes and analyzing cyber-evidence. According to my survey, 83% of responding law enforcement agencies in Vermont do not employ officers properly trained in computer crime investigative techniques. Moreover, my survey found that 52% of the law enforcement agencies that handle one or more computer crimes per month cited their lack of training as a problem encountered during investigations. Proper training is critical to ensuring success in the fight against computer crime.

This bill will help our computer crime laws up to date as an important backstop and deterrent. I believe that our current computer crime laws can be enhanced and that the time to act is now. We should pass legislation designed to improve our law enforcement efforts while at the same time protecting the privacy rights of American citizens.

The bill I offer today will make it more efficient for law enforcement to use tools that are already available—such as pen registers and trap and trace devices—to track down computer criminals expeditiously. It will ensure that law enforcement can investigate and prosecute hacker attacks even when perpetrators use foreign-based computers to facilitate their crimes. It will implement criminal forfeiture provisions to ensure that cybercriminals are forced to relinquish the tools of their trade upon conviction. It will also close a current loophole in our wiretap laws that prevents a law enforcement officer from monitoring an innocent-host computer with the consent of the computer's owner and without a wiretap order to track down the source of denial-of-service attacks. Finally, this legislation will assist state and local police departments in their parallel efforts to combat cybercrime, in recognition of the fact that this fight is not just at the federal level.

The key provisions of the bill are:

Jurisdictional and Definitional Changes to the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act: The Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, 18 U.S.C. §1030, is the primary federal criminal statute prohibiting computer frauds and hacking. This bill would amend the statute to clarify the appropriate scope of federal jurisdiction. First, the bill adds a broad definition of ''loss'' to the definitional section. Calculation of loss is important both in determining whether the $5,000 jurisdictional hurdle in the statute is met, and, at sentencing, in calculating the appropriate guideline range and restitution amount.

Second, the bill amends the definition of ''protected computer,'' to expressly include qualified computers even when they are physically located outside of the United States. This clarification will preserve the ability of the United States to assist in international hacking cases. A ''Sense of Congress'' provision specifies that federal jurisdiction is justified by the ''interconnected and interdependent nature of computers used in interstate or foreign commerce.''

Finally, the bill expands the jurisdiction of the United States Secret Service to encompass investigations of all violations of 18 U.S.C. §1030. Prior to the 1996 amendments to the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, the Secret Service was authorized to investigate any and all violations of section 1030, pursuant to an agreement between the Secretary of Treasury and the Attorney General. The 1996 amendments, however, concentrated Secret Service jurisdiction on certain specified subsections of section 1030. The current amendment would return full jurisdiction to the Secret Service and would allow the Justice and Treasury Departments to decide on the appropriate work-sharing balance between the two.

Elimination of Mandatory Minimum Sentence for Certain Violations of Computer Fraud and Abuse Act: Currently, a directive to the Sentencing Commission requires that all violations, including misdemeanor violations, of certain provisions of the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act be punished with a term of imprisonment of at least six months. The bill would change this directive to the Sentencing Commission so that no such mandatory minimum would be required.

Additional Criminal Forfeiture Provisions: The bill adds a criminal forfeiture provision to the Computer Fraud and Abuse Act, requiring forfeiture of physical property used in or to facilitate the offense as well as property derived from proceeds of the offense. It also supplements the current forfeiture provision in 18 U.S.C. 2318, which prohibits trafficking in, among other things, counterfeit computer program documentation and packaging, to require the forfeiture of replicators and other devices used in the production of such counterfeit items.

Pen Registers and Trap and Trace Devices: The bill makes it easier for law enforcement to use these investigative techniques in the area of cybercrime, and institutes corresponding privacy protections. On the law enforcement side, the bill gives nationwide effect to pen register and trap and trace orders obtained by Government attorneys, thus obviating the need to obtain identical orders in multiple federal jurisdictions. It also clarifies that such devices can be used on all electronic communication lines, not just telephone lines. On the privacy side, the bill provides for greater judicial review of applications for pen registers and trap and trace devices and institutes a minimization requirement for the use of such devices. The bill also amends the reporting requirements for applications for such devices by specifying the information to be reported.

Denial of Service Investigations: Currently, a person whose computer is accessed by a hacker as a means for the hacker to reach a third computer cannot simply consent to law enforcement monitoring of his computer. Instead, because this person is not technically a party to the communication, law enforcement needs wiretap authorization under Title III to conduct such monitoring. The bill will close this loophole by explicitly permitting such monitoring without a wiretap if prior consent is obtained from the person whose computer is being hacked through and used to send ''harmful interference to a lawfully operating computer system.''

Encryption Reporting: The bill directs the Attorney General to report the number of wiretap orders in which encryption was encountered and whether such encryption precluded law enforcement from obtaining the plaintext of intercepted communications.

State and Local Computer Crime Enforcement: The bill directs the Office of Federal Programs to make grants to assist State and local law enforcement in the investigation and prosecution of computer crime.

Legislation must be balanced to protect our privacy and other constitutional rights. I am a strong proponent of the Internet and a defender of our constitutional rights to speak freely and to keep private our confidential affairs from either private sector snoops or unreasonable government searches. These principles can be respected at the same time we hold accountable those malicious mischief makers and digital graffiti sprayers, who use computers to damage or destroy the property of others. I have seen Congress react reflexively in the past to address concerns over anti-social behavior on the Internet with legislative proposals that would do more harm than good. A good example of this is the Communications Decency Act, which the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional. We must make sure that our legislative efforts are precisely targeted on stopping destructive acts and that we avoid scattershot proposals that would threaten, rather than foster, electronic commerce and sacrifice, rather than promote, our constitutional rights.

Technology has ushered in a new age filled with unlimited potential for commerce and communications. But the Internet age has also ushered in new challenges for federal, state and local law enforcement officials. Congress and the Administration need to work together to meet these new challenges while preserving the benefits of our new era. The legislation I offer today is a step in that direction.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2430

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Internet Security Act of 2000".

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO THE COMPUTER FRAUD AND ABUSE ACT.

Section 1030 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) in paragraph (5)—

(i) by inserting "(i)" after "(A)" and redesignating subparagraphs (B) and (C) as clauses (ii) and (iii), respectively;

(ii) in subparagraph (A)(iii), as redesignated, by adding "and" at the end; and

(iii) by adding at the end the following:

"(B) the conduct described in clause (i), (ii), or (iii) of subparagraph (A)—

"(i) caused loss aggregating at least $5,000 in value during a 1-year period to 1 or more individuals;

"(ii) modified or impaired, or potentially modified or impaired, the medical examination, diagnosis, treatment, or care of 1 or more individuals;

"(iii) caused physical injury to any person; or

"(iv) threatened public health or safety;"; and

(B) in paragraph (6), by adding "or" at the end;

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) in paragraph (2)—

(i) in subparagraph (A), by striking "and" at the end; and

(ii) in subparagraph (B), by inserting "or an attempted offense" after "in the case of an offense"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following:

"(4) forfeiture to the United States in accordance with subsection (i) of the interest of the offender in—

"(A) any personal property used or intended to be used to commit or to facilitate the commission of the offense; and

"(B) any property, real or personal, that constitutes or that is derived from proceeds traceable to any violation of this section.";

(3) in subsection (d)—

(A) by striking "subsections (a)(2)(A), (a)(2)(B), (a)(3), (a)(4), (a)(5), and (a)(6) of"; and

(B) by striking "which shall be entered into by" and inserting "between";

(4) in subsection (e)—

(A) in paragraph (2)(B), by inserting ", including computers located outside the United States" before the semicolon;

(B) in paragraph (4), by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon;

(C) in paragraph (7), by striking "and" at the end;

(D) in paragraph (8), by striking ", that" and all that follows through "; and" and inserting a semicolon;

(E) in paragraph (9), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(F) by adding at the end the following:

"(10) the term 'loss' includes—

"(A) the reasonable costs to any victim of—

"(i) responding to the offense;

"(ii) conducting a damage assessment; and

"(iii) restoring the system and data to their condition prior to the offense; and

"(B) any lost revenue or costs incurred by the victim as a result of interruption of service.";

(5) in subsection (g), by striking "Damages for violations involving damage as defined in subsection (c)(8)(A)" and inserting "losses specified in subsection (a)(5)(B)(i)"; and

(6) by adding at the end the following:

"(i) PROVISIONS GOVERNING FORFEITURE.—Property subject to forfeiture under this section, any seizure and disposition thereof, and any administrative or judicial proceeding in relation thereto, shall be governed by subsection (c) and subsections (e) through (p) of section 413 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 853).".

SEC. 3. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) acts that damage or attempt to damage computers used in the delivery of critical infrastructure services such as telecommunications, energy, transportation, banking and financial services, and emergency and government services pose a serious threat to public health and safety and cause or have the potential to cause losses to victims that include costs of responding to offenses, conducting damage assessments, and restoring systems and data to their condition prior to the offense, as well as lost revenue and costs incurred as a result of interruptions of service; and

(2) the Federal Government should have jurisdiction to investigate acts affecting protected computers, as defined in section 1030(e)(2)(B) of title 18, United States Code, as amended by this Act, even if the effects of such acts occur wholly outside the United States, as in such instances a sufficient Federal nexus is conferred through the interconnected and interdependent nature of computers used in interstate or foreign commerce or communication.

SEC. 4. MODIFICATION OF SENTENCING COMMISSION DIRECTIVE.

Pursuant to its authority under section 994(p) of title 28, United States Code, the United States Sentencing Commission shall amend the Federal sentencing guidelines to ensure that any individual convicted of a violation of paragraph (4) or (5) of section 1030(a) of title 18, United States Code, can be subjected to appropriate penalties, without regard to any mandatory minimum term of imprisonment.

SEC. 5. FORFEITURE OF DEVICES USED IN COMPUTER SOFTWARE COUNTERFEITING.

Section 2318(d) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" before "When";

(2) inserting ", and any replicator or other device or thing used to copy or produce the computer program or other item to which the counterfeit label was affixed, or was intended to be affixed" before the period; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(2) The forfeiture of property under this section, including any seizure and disposition of the property, and any related judicial or administrative proceeding, shall be governed by the provisions of section 413 (other than subsection (d) of that section) of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 853).".

SEC. 6. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Section 492 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "or 1720," and inserting ", 1720, or 2318".

SEC. 7. PEN REGISTERS AND TRAP AND TRACE DEVICES.

Section 3123 of title 18, United States Code is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (a) and inserting the following:

"(a) ISSUANCE OF ORDER.—

"(1) REQUESTS FROM ATTORNEYS FOR THE GOVERNMENT.—Upon an application made under section 3122(a)(1), the court may enter an ex parte order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device if the court finds, based on the certification by the attorney for the Government, that the information likely to be obtained by such installation and use is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation. Such order shall apply to any entity providing wire or electronic communication service in the United States whose assistance is necessary to effectuate the order.

"(2) REQUESTS FROM STATE INVESTIGATIVE OR LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS.—Upon an application made under section 3122(a)(2), the court may enter an ex parte order authorizing the installation and use of a pen register or a trap and trace device within the jurisdiction of the court, if the court finds, based on the certification by the State law enforcement or investigative officer, that the information likely to be obtained by such installation and use is relevant to an ongoing criminal investigation."; and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) in paragraph (1)—

(i) in subparagraph (C), by inserting "authorized under subsection (a)(2)" after "in the case of a trap and trace device"; and

(ii) in subparagraph (D), by striking "and" at the end;

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

"(3) shall direct that the use of the pen register or trap and trace device be conducted in such a way as to minimize the recording or decoding of any electronic or other impulses that are not related to the dialing and signaling information utilized in processing by the service provider upon whom the order is served.''.

SEC. 8. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO PEN REGISTER AND TRAP AND TRACE PROVISIONS.

(a) ISSUANCE OF AN ORDER.—Section 3123 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by inserting ''or other facility'' after ''line'' each place that term appears;

(2) by inserting ''or applied'' after ''attached'' each place that term appears;

(3) in subsection (b)(1)(C), by inserting ''or other identifier'' after ''the number''; and

(4) in subsection (d)(2), by striking ''who has been ordered by the court'' and inserting ''who is obligated by the order''.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—Section 3127 of title 18, United States Code is amended—

(1) by striking paragraph (3) and inserting the following:

''(3) the term 'pen register'—

''(A) means a device or process that records or decodes electronic or other impulses that identify the telephone numbers or electronic address dialed or otherwise transmitted by an instrument or facility from which a wire or electronic communication is transmitted and used for purposes of identifying the destination or termination of such communication by the service provider upon which the order is served; and

''(B) does not include any device or process used by a provider or customer of a wire or electronic communication service for billing, or recording as an incident to billing, for communications services provided by such provider or any device or process by a provider or customer of a wire communication service for cost accounting or other like purposes in the ordinary course of its business;''; and

(2) in paragraph (4)—

(A) by inserting ''or process'' after ''means a device'';

(B) by inserting ''or other identifier'' after ''number''; and

(C) by striking ''or device'' and inserting ''or other facility''.

SEC. 9. PEN REGISTER AND TRAP AND TRACE REPORTS.

Section 3126 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: '', which report shall include information concerning—

''(1) the period of interceptions authorized by the order, and the number and duration of any extensions of the order;

''(2) the offense specified in the order or application, or extension of an order;

''(3) the number of investigations involved;

''(4) the number and nature of the facilities affected; and

''(5) the identity, including district, of the applying investigative or law enforcement agency making the application and the person authorizing the order''.

SEC. 10. ENHANCED DENIAL OF SERVICE INVESTIGATIONS.

Section 2511(2)(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(c)(i) It shall not be unlawful under this chapter for a person acting under color of law to intercept a wire, oral, or electronic communication, if such person is a party to the communication or 1 of the parties to the communication has given prior consent to such interception.

''(ii) It shall not be unlawful under this chapter for a person acting under color of law to intercept a wire or electronic communication, if—

''(I) the transmission of the wire or electronic communication is causing harmful interference to a lawfully operating computer system;

''(II) any person who is not a provider of service to the public and who is authorized to use the facility from which the wire or electronic communication is to be intercepted has given prior consent to the interception; and

''(III) the interception is conducted only to the extent necessary to identify the source of the harmful interference described in subclause (I).''.

SEC. 11. ENCRYPTION REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.

Section 2519(2)(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking ''and (iv)'' and inserting ''(iv) the number of orders in which encryption was encountered and whether such encryption prevented law enforcement from obtaining the plain text of communications intercepted pursuant to such order, and (v)''.

SEC. 12. STATE AND LOCAL COMPUTER CRIME ENFORCEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the availability of amounts provided in advance in appropriations Acts, the Assistant Attorney General for the Office of Justice Programs of the Department of Justice shall make a grant to each State, which shall be used by the State, in conjunction with units of local government, State and local courts, other States, or combinations thereof, to—

(1) assist State and local law enforcement in enforcing State and local criminal laws relating to computer crime;

(2) assist State and local law enforcement in educating the public to prevent and identify computer crime;

(3) assist in educating and training State and local law enforcement officers and prosecutors to conduct investigations and forensic analyses of evidence and prosecutions of computer crime;

(4) assist State and local law enforcement officers and prosecutors in acquiring computer and other equipment to conduct investigations and forensic analysis of evidence of computer crimes; and

(5) facilitate and promote the sharing of Federal law enforcement expertise and information about the investigation, analysis, and prosecution of computer crimes with State and local law enforcement officers and prosecutors, including the use of multijurisdictional task forces.

(b) USE OF GRANT AMOUNTS.—Grants under this section may be used to establish and develop programs to—

(1) assist State and local law enforcement agencies in enforcing State and local criminal laws relating to computer crime;

(2) assist State and local law enforcement agencies in educating the public to prevent and identify computer crime;

(3) educate and train State and local law enforcement officers and prosecutors to conduct investigations and forensic analyses of evidence and prosecutions of computer crime;

(4) assist State and local law enforcement officers and prosecutors in acquiring computer and other equipment to conduct investigations and forensic analysis of evidence of computer crimes; and

(5) facilitate and promote the sharing of Federal law enforcement expertise and information about the investigation, analysis, and prosecution of computer crimes with State and local law enforcement officers and prosecutors, including the use of multijurisdictional task forces.

(c) ASSURANCES.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, a State shall provide assurances to the Attorney General that the State—

(1) has in effect laws that penalize computer crime, such as penal laws prohibiting—

(A) fraudulent schemes executed by means of a computer system or network;

(B) the unlawful damaging, destroying, altering, deleting, removing of computer software, or data contained in a computer, computer system, computer program, or computer network; or

(C) the unlawful interference with the operation of or denial of access to a computer, computer program, computer system, or computer network;

(2) an assessment of the State and local resource needs, including criminal justice resources being devoted to the investigation and enforcement of computer crime laws; and

(3) a plan for coordinating the programs funded under this section with other federally funded technical assistant and training programs, including directly funded local programs such as the Local Law Enforcement Block Grant program (described under the heading ''Violent Crime Reduction Programs, State and Local Law Enforcement Assistance'' of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1998 (Public Law 105–119)).

(d) MATCHING FUNDS.—The Federal share of a grant received under this section may not exceed 90 percent of the total cost of a program or proposal funded under this section unless the Attorney General waives, wholly or in part, the requirements of this subsection.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $25,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2000 through 2003.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—Of the amount made available to carry out this section in any fiscal year not more than 3 percent may be used by the Attorney General for salaries and administrative expenses.

(3) MINIMUM AMOUNT.—Unless all eligible applications submitted by any State or units of local government within a State for a grant under this section have been funded, the State, together with grantees within the State (other than Indian tribes), shall be allocated in each fiscal year under this section not less than 0.75 percent of the total amount appropriated in the fiscal year for grants pursuant to this section, except that the United States Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, and the Northern Mariana Islands each shall be allocated 0.25 percent.

(f) GRANTS TO INDIAN TRIBES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the Attorney General may use amounts made available under this section to make grants to Indian tribes for use in accordance with this section.

By Mr. SANTORUM:

S. 2431. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow a credit against income tax for expenses incurred in teleworking; to the Committee on Finance.

TELEWORK TAX INCENTIVE ACT

• Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, today, I rise to introduce legislation that would help people who ''telework'' or work from home, to receive a tax credit. Teleworkers are people who work a few days a week on-line from home by using computers and other information technology tools. Nearly 20 million Americans telework today, and according to experts, 40 percent of the nation's jobs are compatible with telework. At one national telecommunications company, nearly 25 percent of its workforce works from home at least one day a week. The company found positive results in the way of fewer days of sick leave, better retention, and higher productivity.

I am introducing the Telework Tax Incentive Act to provide a $500 tax credit for telework. The purpose of my legislation is to provide an incentive to encourage more employers to consider telework for their employees. Telework should be a regular part of the 21st century workplace. The best part of telework is that it improves the quality of life for all. Telework also reduces traffic congestion and air pollution. It reduces gas consumption and our dependency on foreign oil. Telework is good for families—working parents have flexibility to meet everyday demands. Telework provides people with disabilities greater job opportunities. Telework helps fill our nation's labor market shortage. It can also be a good option for retirees choosing to work part-time.

Last fall, a task force on telework initiated by Governor James Gilmore of Virginia made a number of recommendations to increase and promote telework. One recommendation was to establish a tax credit toward the purchase and installation of electronic and computer equipment that allow an employee to telework. For example, the cost of a computer, fax machine, modem, phone, printer, software, copier, and other expenses necessary to enable telework could count toward a tax credit, provided the person worked at home a minimum number of days per year.

My legislation would provide a $500 tax credit "for expenses paid or incurred under a teleworking arrangement for furnishings and electronic information equipment which are used to enable an individual to telework." An employee must telework a minimum of 75 days per year to qualify for the tax credit. Both the employer and employee are eligible for the tax credit, but the tax credit goes to whomever absorbs the expense for setting up the at-home worksite.

I am pleased to work with Congressman FRANK WOLF who has introduced identical legislation in the House of Representatives, H.R. 3819. A number of groups have already endorsed the Telework Tax Incentive Act including the International Telework Association and Council (ITAC), Covad Communications, National Town Builders Association, Litton Industries, Orbital Sciences Corporation, Consumer Electronic Association, Capnet, BTG Corporation, Electonic Industries Alliance, Telecommunications Industry Association, American Automobile Association Mid-Atlantic, Dimensions International Inc., Capunet, TManage, Science Applications International Corporation, AT&T, Northern Virginia Technology Council, Computer Associates Incorporated, and Dyn Corp.

On October 9, 1999, legislation which I introduced last year in coordination with Representative FRANK WOLF from Virginia was signed into law by the President as part of the annual Department of Transportation appropriations bill for Fiscal Year 2000. S. 1521, the National Telecommuting and Air Quality Act, created a pilot program to study the feasibility of providing incentives for companies to allow their employees to telework in five major metropolitan areas including Philadelphia, Washington, D.C., and Los Angeles. Houston and Chicago have been added as well. I am pleased that the Philadelphia Area Design Team has been progressing well with its responsibility of examining the application of these incentives to the greater Philadelphia metropolitan area. I am excited that this opportunity continues to help to get the word out about the benefits of telecommuting for many employees and employers.

Telecommuting improves air quality by reducing pollutants, provides employees and families flexibility, reduces traffic congestion, and increases productivity and retention rates for businesses while reducing their overhead costs. It's a growing opportunity and option which we should all include in our effort to maintain and improve quality of life issues in Pennsylvania and around the nation. According to statistics available from 1996, the Greater Philadelphia area ranked number 10 in the country for annual person-hours of delay due to traffic congestion. Because of this reality, all options including telecommuting should be pursued to address this challenge.

The 1999 Telework America National Telework Survey, conducted by Joan H. Pratt Associates, found that today's 19.6 million teleworkers typically work 9 days per month at home at home with an average of 3 hours per week during normal business hours. In this study, teleworkers or telecommuters are defined overall as employees or independent contractors who work at least one day per month at home. These research findings impact the bottom line for employers and employees. Teleworkers seek a blend of job-related and personal benefits to enable them to better handle their work and life responsibilities. For employers, savings just from less absenteeism and increased employee retention total more than $10,000 per teleworker per year. Thus an organization with 100 employees, 20 of whom telework, could potentially realize a savings of $200,000 annually, or more, when productivity gains are added.

Work is something you do, not someplace you go. There is nothing magical about strapping ourselves into a car and driving sometimes up to an hour and a half, arriving at a workplace and sitting before a computer, when we can access the same information from a computer in our homes. Wouldn't it be great if we could replace the evening rush hour commute with time spent with the family, or coaching little league or other important quality of life matters?

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to consider cosponsoring this legislation which promotes telework and helps encourage additional employee choices for the workplace.●

By Mr. SMITH of Oregon (for himself and Mr. WYDEN):

S. 2432. A bill to permit the catcher vessel Hazel Lorraine to conduct commercial fishing activities; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

ELIGIBILITY OF THE FISHING VESSEL HAZEL LORRAINE UNDER THE AMERICAN FISHERIES ACT

● Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, today I am introducing, with my colleague from Oregon, legislation which will correct an oversight in the American Fisheries Act of 1998. Some of my colleagues will recall that the American Fisheries Act was passed as part of the Omnibus Appropriations Act in the closing days of the 105th Congress.

Let me speak briefly first to the American Fisheries Act, or AFA, itself. The AFA was a major revision of management policies for the valuable Bering Sea pollock fishery, raising domestic vessel ownership standards, while bringing greater stability to the pollock fishery by allowing fishers and processors to engage in limited cooperatives. Months of intense negotiations between interested congressional offices and a number of Alaskan and West Coast fishing interests resulted in the compromise that was passed into law.

Oregon certainly does not have as great an interest in the Bering Sea pollock fishery as other states do. Nevertheless, Oregon-based vessels do participate in this and other distant-water fisheries. Many of these vessel owner-operators pioneered the development of the Alaskan pollock fishery during the Americanization of the Exclusive Economic Zone in the 1980s. The American Fisheries Act was supposed to allow these, and other fishing vessels with substantial history, to stay in the fishery while excluding new or speculative entrants. The language used in the AFA to achieve this purpose requires that qualified vessels must have delivered at least 250 metric tons of pollock in 1996, 1997, or an eight month period in 1998, to the shore-based processing plants that compose the "inshore sector" of the Bering Sea pollock fishery. Alternatively, the AFA requires vessels to have delivered at least 250 metric tons of pollock in 1997 and have had at least 75 percent of their catch delivered to the ''offshore sector'' of factory trawlers in order to qualify for that sector of the Bering Sea pollock fishery.

While it was thought that this qualification language in the American Fisheries Act would carry over all vessels with a substantial history in the fishery, this has turned out not to be the case. An Oregon-based vessel named the Hazel Lorraine—a vessel with years of Bering Sea pollock landings on record—has found itself locked out of both the inshore and offshore sectors of the Bering Sea pollock fishery due to the way the qualifications are worded in the AFA. On the one hand, the Hazel Lorraine does not qualify for the inshore sector. The fact that the then-Tyson Seafood plant in Kodiak was destroyed by a fire in 1997 also impacted the Hazel Lorraine's deliveries during this period. On the other hand, the Hazel Lorraine does not qualify for the offshore sector either—also as a direct result of the Tyson fire. In short, the Hazel Lorraine does not meet the AFA requirements for either the inshore or offshore sector for Bering Sea pollock despite a substantial record of deliveries in the fishery that stretches back more than fifteen years.

Ironically, the owners of the Hazel Lorraine actively supported the American Fisheries Act as it had first been introduced in the 105th Congress. However the bill changed dramatically during a series of backroom negotiations before being tucked into an omnibus appropriations package. The AFA that actually passed the Congress differed substantially from the drafts that had been widely circulated in the fishing industry earlier that year.

Nevertheless, the fact remains that the Hazel Lorraine is recognized in the North Pacific as a vessel that can legitimately claim a long history in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. It would be a terrible mistake if the Congress were to allow this vessel to continue to be shut out of its historic fishery. A number of industry leaders and associations, such as United Catcher Boats and the Midwater Trawlers Cooperative, have also recognized this and have stated their support for restoring the right of the Hazel Lorraine to fish in this pollock fishery.

Over the course of the past year, Senator WYDEN and I have discussed this issue with our colleagues, and have come to the conclusion that the best course of action is to introduce authorizing legislation that would clearly place the Hazel Lorraine among those vessels eligible to participate in the inshore sector of the Bering Sea pollock fishery. This legislation will do just that. I think my colleagues will find that those in the North Pacific fisheries who know the circumstances surrounding the Hazel Lorraine will be supportive of this legislation. I look forward to working with members of the Commerce Committee to bring this issue to a resolution during this session of the Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2432

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. TREATMENT OF VESSEL AS AN ELIGIBLE VESSEL.

Notwithstanding paragraphs (1) through (3) of section 208(a) of the American Fisheries Act (title II of division C of the Omnibus Consolidated and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1999 (Public Law 105–277; 112 Stat. 2681–624)), the catcher vessel HAZEL LORRAINE (United States Official Number 592211) shall be considered to be a vessel that is eligible to harvest the directed fishing allowance under section 206(b)(1) of that Act pursuant to a Federal fishing permit in the same manner as, and subject to the same requirements and limitations on that harvesting as apply to, catcher vessels that are eligible to harvest that directed fishing allowance under section 208(a) of that Act.●

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Mr. BREAUX):

S. 2433. A bill to establish the Red River National Wildlife Refuge; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

RED RIVER NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE ACT

● Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, today I rise, along with the senior Senator from Louisiana, to introduce legislation which would establish the Red River National Wildlife Refuge. Congressman MCCREARY is introducing identical legislation in the House of Representatives. Mr. President, the Red River Valley located along the Red River Waterway in Caddo, Bossier, Red River, Natchitoches and Desoto parishes in Louisiana is of critical importance to over 350 species of birds, aquatic life and a wide array of other species associated with river basin ecosystems. It represents a historic migration corridor for migratory birds funneling through the mid-continent from as far north as the Arctic Circle and as far south as South America. The Red River Valley also represents the most degraded watershed in Louisiana. The bottomland hardwood forests of the Red River Valley have been almost totally cleared. Reforestation and restoration of native habitat will benefit a host of species.

There are no significant public sanctuaries for over 300 river miles on this important migration corridor, and no significant Federal, State or private wildlife sanctuaries along the Red River north from Alexandria, Louisiana to the Arkansas-Louisiana state boundary. The Red River Valley offers extraordinary recreational, research and educational opportunities for students, scientists, bird watchers, wildlife observers, hunters, anglers, trappers, hikers and nature photographers.

The bill Senator BREAUX and I are introducing today would: restore and preserve native Red River ecosystems; provide habitat for migratory birds; maximize fisheries on the Red River and its tributaries, natural lakes and man-made reservoirs; provide habitat for and population management of native plants and resident animals including restoration of extirpated species; provide technical assistance to private land owners in the restoration of their lands for the benefit of fish and wildlife and provide the public with opportunities for hunting, angling, trapping, photographing wildlife, hiking, bird watching and other outdoor recreational and educational activities.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2433

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Red River National Wildlife Refuge Act''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) The area of Louisiana known as the Red River Valley, located along the Red River Waterway in Caddo, Bossier, Red River, Natchitoches, and DeSoto Parishes, is of critical importance to over 350 species of birds (including migratory and resident waterfowl, shore birds, and neotropical migratory birds), aquatic life, and a wide array of other species associated with river basin ecosystems.

(2) The bottomland hardwood forests of the Red River Valley have been almost totally cleared. Reforestation and restoration of native habitat will benefit a host of species.

(3) The Red River Valley is part of a major continental migration corridor for migratory birds funneling through the mid continent from as far north as the Arctic Circle and as far south as South America.

(4) There are no significant public sanctuaries for over 300 river miles on this important migration corridor, and no significant Federal, State, or private wildlife sanctuaries along the Red River north of Alexandria, Louisiana.

(5) Completion of the lock and dam system associated with the Red River Waterway project up to Shreveport, Louisiana, has enhanced opportunities for management of fish and wildlife.

(6) The Red River Valley offers extraordinary recreational, research, and educational opportunities for students, scientists, bird watchers, wildlife observers, hunters, anglers, trappers, hikers, and nature photographers.

(7) The Red River Valley is an internationally significant environmental resource that has been neglected and requires active restoration and management to protect and enhance the value of the region as a habitat for fish and wildlife.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT AND PURPOSES OF REFUGE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish as a national wildlife refuge the lands, waters, and interests therein acquired under section 5, at such time as the Secretary determines that sufficient property has been acquired under that section to constitute an area that can be effectively managed as a national wildlife refuge for the purposes set forth in subsection (b) of this section. The national wildlife refuge so established shall be known as the ''Red River National Wildlife Refuge''.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of the Refuge are the following:

(1) To restore and preserve native Red River ecosystems.

(2) To provide habitat for migratory birds.

(3) To maximize fisheries on the Red River and its tributaries, natural lakes, and manmade reservoirs.

(4) To provide habitat for and population management of native plants and resident animals (including restoration of extirpated species).

(5) To provide technical assistance to private land owners in the restoration of their lands for the benefit of fish and wildlife.

(6) To provide the public with opportunities for hunting, angling, trapping, photographing wildlife, hiking, bird watching, and other outdoor recreational and educational activities.

(7) To achieve the purposes under this subsection without violating section 6.

(c) NOTICE OF ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall publish a notice of the establishment of the Refuge—

(1) in the Federal Register; and

(2) in publications of local circulation in the vicinity of the Refuge.

SEC. 4. ADMINISTRATION OF REFUGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall administer all lands, waters, and interests therein acquired under section 5 in accordance with—

(1) the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 (16 U.S.C. 668dd et seq) and the Act of September 28, 1962 (76 Stat. 653; 16 U.S.C. 460k et seq; commonly known as the Refuge Recreation Act);

(2) the purposes of the Refuge set forth in section 3(b); and

(3) the management plan issued under subsection (b).

(b) MANAGEMENT PLAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall issue a management plan for the Refuge.

(2) CONTENTS.—The management plan shall include provisions that provide for the following:

(A) Planning and design of trails and access points.

(B) Planning of wildlife and habitat restoration, including reforestation.

(C) Permanent exhibits and facilities and regular educational programs throughout the Refuge.

(3) PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide an opportunity for public participation in developing the management plan.

(B) LOCAL VIEWS.—The Secretary shall give special consideration to views by local public and private entities and individuals in developing the management plan.

(c) WILDLIFE INTERPRETATION AND EDUCATION CENTER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall construct, administer, and maintain, at an appropriate site within the Refuge, a wildlife interpretation and education center.

(2) PURPOSES.—The center shall be designed and operated—

(A) to promote environmental education; and

(B) to provide an opportunity for the study and enjoyment of wildlife in its natural habitat.

SEC. 5. ACQUISITION OF LANDS, WATERS, AND INTERESTS THEREIN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall seek to acquire up to 50,000 acres of land, water, or interests therein (including permanent conservation easements or servitudes) within the boundaries designated under subsection (c). All lands, waters, and interests acquired under this subsection shall be part of the Refuge.

(b) METHOD OF ACQUISITION.—The Secretary may acquire an interest in land or water for inclusion in the Refuge only by donation, exchange, or purchase from a willing seller.

(c) DESIGNATION OF BOUNDARIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall—

(A) consult with appropriate State and local officials, private conservation organizations, and other interested parties (including the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries, the Louisiana Department of Transportation and Development, the Red River Waterway Commission, and the Northwest Louisiana Council of Governments), regarding the designation of appropriate boundaries for the Refuge within the selection area;

(B) designate boundaries of the Refuge that are within the selection area and adequate for fulfilling the purposes of the Refuge set forth in section 3(b); and

(C) prepare a detailed map entitled ''Red River National Wildlife Refuge'' depicting the boundaries of the Refuge designated under subparagraph (B).

(2) SELECTION AREA.—For purposes of this subsection, the selection area consists of Caddo, Bossier, Red River, DeSoto, and Natchitoches Parishes, Louisiana.

(3) AVAILABILITY OF MAP; NOTICE.—The Secretary shall—

(A) keep the map prepared under paragraph (1) on file and available for public inspection at offices of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service of the District of Columbia and Louisiana; and

(B) publish in the Federal Register a notice of that availability.

(d) BOUNDARY REVISIONS.—The Secretary may make such minor revisions in the boundaries designated under subsection (c) as may be appropriate to achieve the purposes of the Refuge under section 3(b) or to facilitate the acquisition of property for the Refuge.

SEC. 6. CONTINUED PUBLIC SERVICES.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed as prohibiting or preventing, and the Secretary shall not for purposes of the Refuge prohibit or prevent—

(1) the continuation or development of commercial or recreational navigation on the Red River Waterway;

(2) necessary construction, operation, or maintenance activities associated with the Red River Waterway project;

(3) the construction, improvement, or expansion of public port or recreational facilities on the Red River Waterway; or

(4) the construction, improvement, or replacement of railroads or interstate highways within the selection area (designated in section 5(c)(2)), or bridges that cross the Red River.

SEC. 7. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

SEC. 8. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this Act:

(1) REFUGE.—The term ''Refuge'' means the Red River National Wildlife Refuge established under section 3.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.●

S. 2434. A bill to provide that amounts allotted to a State under section 2401 of the Social Security Act for each of fiscal years 1998 and 1999 shall remain available through fiscal year 2002; to the Committee on Finance.

STATE CHILDREN'S HEALTH INSURANCE PROGRAM (SCHIP) PRESERVATION ACT OF 2000

● Mr. L. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined today by Senators BRYAN, THOMPSON, and SARBANES in introducing the State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP) Preservation Act of 2000.

This legislation addresses what I believe to be an unintended consequence of the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (BBA), which created the State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP) to provide health insurance coverage to millions of our nation's uninsured children. Specifically, the BBA called for states to enroll 2.5 million uninsured children in SCHIP within three years of enactment of the bill. According to the Health Care Financing Administration, states enrolled 1.98 million children in SCHIP in 1999. While this represents an increase in states' enrollment efforts, we need to ensure that the federal government is financially committed to this program, and thus to providing health insurance to our nation's children.

SCHIP was designed to allow states to spend each year's allotment over a three-year period; if a state began its program in 1998, it has until the end of 2000 to spend its 1998 allotment. The legislation we are introducing today will extend this year's looming deadline through the end of Fiscal Year 2002, thus allowing states to keep their unexpended SCHIP allotments for up to a total of five years. Many states have had difficulties conducting outreach and enrolling SCHIP-eligible children. We must not penalize states that need more time to identify and enroll children in this important program.

Without this bill, the result—whether intended or unintended—would be a potential reduction of up to $4 billion for children's health programs throughout the country. A reduction of this magnitude would undermine many critical programs that provide quality health coverage to needy children. It may also inhibit the ability of states to provide services for children already enrolled in SCHIP, as well as encouraging some states to scale back on outreach and enrollment efforts. For example, under current statute, Rhode Island will lose approximately $8 million annually starting in Fiscal Year 2001. This loss will undermine the efforts of the state to target and enroll every child who is eligible for SCHIP in Rhode Island. Reductions in SCHIP allotments to states will mean that SCHIP-eligible children who are not yet enrolled in the program may continue to go without health insurance.

Data from the U.S. Census Bureau shows that the number of children without health insurance increased from 9.8 million children in 1995 to 11.1 million children in 1998. This increase in the uninsured rate occurred in spite of the enactment of SCHIP in 1997. We must not allow this trend to continue. States need to be able to tap into their unexpended SCHIP funds to continue their outreach and enrollment efforts. At a time when our nation's uninsured rate continues to climb above 44 million, it makes little sense to be reducing these much needed SCHIP payments to states that are desperately trying to reach out to and enroll these vulnerable and needy children.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation, and ask unanimous consent that the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2434

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP) Preservation Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. AVAILABILITY OF FISCAL YEAR 1998 AND FISCAL YEAR 1999 ALLOTMENTS UNDER SCHIP.

Notwithstanding subsection (e) of section 2104 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1397dd), amounts allotted to a State under that section for each of fiscal years 1998 and 1999 shall remain available through September 30, 2002.●

● Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I am very pleased to join Senators LINCOLN CHAFEE, PAUL SARBANES, and FRED THOMPSON as an original cosponsor of the State Children's Health Insurance Program Preservation Act of 2000, and I thank Senator CHAFEE for his leadership on this bill.

This important legislation provides that Federal funds allotted to States under the state children's health insurance program for each of fiscal years 1998 and 1999 will remain available to the states through fiscal year 2002.

The enactment of the 1997 Balanced Budget Act's state children's health insurance program (CHIP was a seminal event in addressing the problem of uninsured children in this nation. The $24 billion funding reflected the seriousness of the national commitment to ensuring children will have access to health care services. It provided my state of Nevada and the nation with an incredible opportunity to address a most stubborn problem—the increasing number of children who have no health care insurance.

States were provided three options to provide child health care services through the federal funding allotments: to expand Medicaid coverage under enhanced Medicaid matching rates; to create or expand separate child health insurance programs; or to use a combination of the two. All options, rightly I believe, require the States to spend some of their own funds as a condition of participating in the program.

The choices states face under the CHIP program reflect the flexibility they wanted to tailor these programs, within federal guidelines, to the specific needs of each state to reduce the number of uninsured children.

Nevada's CHIP program—''Nevada CheckUp''—was approved by HCFA in August 1998 and began operating in October 1998. The program is separate from the Medicaid program, but the two are coordinated in the application process to ensure those children eligible for Medicaid are enrolled in that program. The Nevada CheckUp program covers applicants up to 200% of the federal poverty level, and children up to age 18.

Since its October 1998 beginning, Nevada CheckUp has enrolled over 9,000 children, representing almost 60% of the anticipated total eligible children. But there are approximately 6,000 children in Nevada who thus remain uninsured, who need health care coverage, and who must be found and covered. We can and must do better.

It took the state some time to develop its program, create a state plan, get state and federal approval, hire and train the staff and begin the marketing outreach and enrollment activities. In the one and one-half years the program has been operating, the state has learned what has worked successfully, and what has not worked. They are in the process of developing a new marketing plan, which will allow us to reach more uninsured Nevada children. The new proposal will use more media and broadcast tools to target the low income population.

The CHIP program is still in its infancy, and states are still learning how best to develop programs to provide children with much-needed health insurance. I am hopeful as this program matures, we will see a most successful effort to cover our nation's children, and ensure their health care needs are met into the next century.

Allow the states to keep their federal allotment for an additional two years should provide Nevada, and other States, the opportunity to reach the total number of eligible children, and increase the number of children with health insurance.

I sincerely hope Nevada will find the means to make its full match, so our state can draw 100 percent of its available federal funds. Wise use of these Federal funds, with a continued commitment to our children, and with a 100-percent effort by our state will get the job done. Our children simply deserve no less than a fully-funded effort.●

S. 2435. A bill to amend part B of title IV of the Social Security Act to crate a grant program to promote joint activities among Federal, State, and local public child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies; to the Committee on Finance.

CHILD PROTECTION/ALCOHOL AND DRUG PARTNERSHIP ACT

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the ''Child Protection/Alcohol and Drug Partnership Act.'' I am pleased to be joined by my good friends, Senators ROCKEFELLER, DEWINE, and DODD on this exciting new proposal. Mr. President, this bill is an enormously important piece of legislation. It provides the means for states to support some of our most vulnerable families—families who are struggling with alcohol and drug abuse, and the children who are being raised in these abusive homes.

It is obvious, both anecdotally and statistically, that child welfare is significantly impacted by parental substance abuse. And it makes a lot of sense to fund state programs to address these two issues in tandem. The real question in designing and supporting child welfare programs is how can we—public policy makers, government officials, welfare agencies—honestly expect to improve child welfare without appropriately and adequately addressing the root problems affecting these children's lives?

We know that substance abuse is the primary ingredient in child abuse and neglect. Most studies find that between one-third and two-thirds—and some say as high as 80 percent to 90 percent—of children in the child welfare system come from families where parental substance abuse is a contributing factor.

The Child Protection/Alcohol and Drug Partnership Act of 2000 creates a new five-year $1.9 billion state block grant program to address the connection between substance abuse and child welfare. Payments would be made to promote joint activities among federal, state, and local public child welfare and alcohol and drug prevention and treatment agencies. Our underlying belief, and the point of this bill, is to encourage existing agencies to work together to keep children safe.

HHS will award grants to States and Indian tribes to encourage programs for families who are known to the child welfare system and have alcohol and drug abuse problems. These grants will forge new and necessary partnerships between the child protection agencies and the alcohol and drug prevention and treatment agencies in States so they will work together to provide services for this unique population. The program is designed to increase the capacity of both the child welfare and alcohol and drug systems to comprehensively address the needs of these families to improve child safety, family stability, and permanence, and to promote recovery from alcohol and drug problems.

Statistics paint an unhappy picture for children of substance abusing parents: a 1998 report by the National Committee to Prevent Child Abuse found that 36 states reported that parental substance abuse and poverty are the top two problems exhibited by families reported for child maltreatment. And a 1997 survey conducted by the Child Welfare League of America found that at least 52 percent of placements into out-of-home care were due in part to parental substance abuse.

Children whose parents abuse alcohol and other drugs are almost three times likelier to be abused and more than four times likelier to be neglected than children of parents who are not substance abusers. Children in alcohol-abusing families were nearly four times more likely to be maltreated overall, almost five times more likely to be physically neglected, and 10 times more likely to be emotionally neglected than children in families without alcohol problems.

A 1994 study published in the American Journal of Public Health found that children prenatally exposed to substances have been found to be two to three times more likely to be abused than non-exposed children. And as many as 80 percent of prenatally drug exposed infants will come to the attention of child welfare before their first birthday. Abused and neglected children under age six face the risk of more severe damage than older children because their brains and neurological systems are still developing.

Unfortunately, child welfare agencies estimate that only a third of the 67 percent of the parents who need drug or alcohol prevention and treatment services actually get help today.

Mr. President, this bill is about preventing problems. Senators ROCKEFELLER, DEWINE, DODD, and I know that what is most important here is the safety and well-being of America's children. We expect much of our youth because they are the future of our nation. In turn, we must be willing to give them the support they need to learn and grow, so that they can lead healthy and productive lives.

In 1997 Congress passed the Adoption and Safe Families Act, authored by the late Senator John CHAFEE. The 1997 Adoption law promotes safety, stability, and permanence for all abused and neglected children and requires timely decision-making in all proceedings to determine whether children can safely return home, or whether they should be moved to permanent, adoptive homes. Specifically, the law requires a State to ensure that services are provided to the families of children who are at risk, so that children can remain safely with their families or return home after being in foster care.

The bill we are introducing today identifies a very specific area in which families and children need services—substance abuse. And it will ensure that states have the funding necessary to provide services as required under the Adoption and Safe Families Act.

I encourage my colleagues to take a serious look at our bill, to think seriously about the future for kids in their states, and to work with us in passing this very important piece of legislation. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2435

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Child Protection/Alcohol and Drug Partnership Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. CHILD PROTECTION/ALCOHOL AND DRUG PARTNERSHIPS FOR CHILDREN.

Part B of title IV of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 620 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"Subpart 3—Child Protection/Alcohol and Drug Partnerships For Children

"SEC. 440. DEFINITIONS.

''In this subpart:

''(1) ALASKA NATIVE ORGANIZATION.—The term 'Alaska Native Organization' means any organized group of Alaska Natives eligible to operate a Federal program under the Indian Self-Determination Act (25 U.S.C. 450f et seq.) or such group's designee.

''(2) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'administrative costs' means the costs for the general administration of administrative activities, including contract costs and all overhead costs.

''(B) EXCLUSION.—Such term does not include the direct costs of providing services and costs related to case management, training, technical assistance, evaluation, establishment, and operation of information systems, and such other similar costs that are also an integral part of service delivery.

''(3) ELIGIBLE STATE.—The term 'eligible State' means a State that submits a joint application from the State agencies that—

''(A) includes a plan that meets the requirements of section 442; and

''(B) is approved by the Secretary for a 5-year period after consultation with the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families and the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration.

''(4) INDIAN TRIBE.—The term 'Indian tribe' means any Indian tribe, band, Nation or other organized group or community of Indians, including any Alaska Native Organization, that is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

''(5) STATE.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'State' means each of the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and the territories described in subparagraph (B).

''(B) TERRITORIES.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The territories described in this subparagraph are Puerto Rico, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

''(ii) AUTHORITY TO MODIFY REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary may modify the requirements of this subpart with respect to a territory described in clause (i) to the extent necessary to allow such a territory to conduct activities through funds provided under a grant made under this subpart.

''(6) STATE AGENCIES.—The term 'State agencies' means the State child welfare agency and the unit of State government responsible for the administration of the substance abuse prevention and treatment block grant provided under subpart II of part B of title XIX of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x–21 et seq.).

''(7) TRIBAL ORGANIZATION.—The term 'tribal organization' means the recognized governing body of an Indian tribe.

"SEC. 441. GRANTS TO PROMOTE CHILD PROTECTION/ALCOHOL AND DRUG PARTNERSHIPS FOR CHILDREN.

''(a) AUTHORITY TO AWARD GRANTS.—The Secretary may award grants to eligible States and directly to Indian tribes in accordance with the requirements of this subpart for the purpose of promoting joint activities among Federal, State, and local public child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies (and among child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies that are providing services to children in Indian tribes) that focus on families with alcohol or drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system and are designed to—

''(1) increase the capacity of both the child welfare system and the alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment system to address comprehensively and in a timely manner the needs of such families to improve child safety, family stability, and permanence; and

''(2) promote recovery from alcohol and drug abuse problems.

''(b) NOTIFICATION.—Not later than 60 days after the date a joint application is submitted by the State agencies or an application is submitted by an Indian tribe, the Secretary shall notify a State or Indian tribe that the application has been approved or disapproved.

"SEC. 442. PLAN REQUIREMENTS.

''(a) CONTENTS.—Subject to subsection (c), the plan shall contain the following:

''(1) A detailed description of how the State agencies will work jointly to implement a range of activities to meet the alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment needs of families who come to the attention of the child welfare system and to promote child safety, permanence, and family stability.

''(2) An assurance that the heads of the State agencies shall jointly administer the grant program funded under this subpart and a description of how they will do so.

''(3) A description of the nature and extent of the problem of alcohol and drug abuse among families who come to the attention of the child welfare system in the State, and of any plans being implemented to further identify and assess the extent of the problem.

''(4) A description of any joint activities already being undertaken by the State agencies in the State on behalf of families with alcohol and drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system (including any existing data on the impact of such joint activities) such as activities relating to—

''(A) the appropriate screening and assessment of cases;

''(B) consultation on cases involving alcohol and drug abuse;

''(C) arrangements for addressing confidentiality and sharing of information;

''(D) cross training of staff;

''(E) co-location of services;

''(F) support for comprehensive treatment programs for parents and their children; and

''(G) establishing priority of child welfare families for assessment or treatment.

''(5)(A) A description of the joint activities to be funded in whole or in part with the funds provided under the grant, including the sequencing of the activities proposed to be conducted under the 5-year funding cycle and the goals to be achieved during such funding cycle. The activities and goals shall be designed to improve the capacity of the State agencies to work jointly to improve child safety, family stability, and permanence for children whose families come to the attention of the child welfare system and to promote their parents' recovery from alcohol and drug abuse.

''(B) The description shall include a statement as to why the State agencies chose the specified activities and goals.

''(6) A description as to whether and how the joint activities described in paragraph (5), and other related activities funded with Federal funds, will address some or all of the following practices and procedures:

''(A) Practices and procedures designed to appropriately—

''(i) identify alcohol and drug treatment needs;

''(ii) assess such needs;

''(iii) assess risks to the safety of a child and the need for permanency with respect to the placement of a child;

''(iv) enroll families in appropriate services and treatment in their communities; and

''(v) regularly assess the progress of families receiving such treatment.

''(B) Practices and procedures designed to provide comprehensive and timely individualized alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment services for families who come to the attention of the child welfare system that include a range of options that are available, accessible, and appropriate, and that may include the following components:

''(i) Preventive and early intervention services for children of parents with alcohol and drug abuse problems that integrate alcohol and drug abuse prevention services with mental health and domestic violence services, and that recognize the mental, emotional, and developmental problems the children may experience.

''(ii) Prevention and early intervention services for parents at risk for alcohol and drug abuse problems.

''(iii) Comprehensive home-based, outpatient, and residential treatment options.

''(iv) After-care support (both formal and informal) for families in recovery that promotes child safety and family stability.

''(v) Services and supports that focus on parents, parents with their children, parents' children, other family members, and parent-child interaction.

''(C) Elimination of existing barriers to treatment and to child safety and permanence, such as difficulties in sharing information among agencies and differences between the values and treatment protocols of the different agencies.

''(D) Effective engagement and retention strategies.

''(E) Pre-service and in-service joint training of management and staff of child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies, and, where appropriate, judges and other court staff, to—

''(i) increase such individuals' awareness and understanding of alcohol and drug abuse and related child abuse and neglect;

''(ii) more accurately identify and screen alcohol and drug abuse and child abuse in families;

''(iii) improve assessment skills of both child abuse and alcohol and drug abuse staff, including skills to assess risk to children's safety;

''(iv) increase staff knowledge of the services and resources that are available in such individuals' communities and appropriate for such families; and

''(v) increase awareness of the importance of permanence for children and the timelines for decisionmaking regarding permanence in the child welfare system.

''(F) Progress in enhancing the abilities of the State agencies to improve the data systems of such agencies in order to monitor the progress of families, evaluate service and treatment outcomes, and determine which approaches and activities are most effective.

''(G) Evaluation strategies to demonstrate the effectiveness of treatment and identify the aspects of treatment that have the greatest impact on families in different circumstances.

''(H) Training and technical assistance to increase the capacity within the State to carry out 1 or more of the activities described in this paragraph or related activities that are designed to expand prevention and treatment services for, and staff training to assist families with alcohol and drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system.

''(7) A description of the jurisdictions in the State (including whether such jurisdictions are urban, suburban, or rural) where the joint activities will be provided, and the plans for expanding such activities to other parts of the State during the 5-year funding cycle.

''(8) A description of the methods to be used in measuring progress toward the goals identified under paragraph (5), including how the State agencies will jointly measure their performance in accordance with section 445, and how remaining barriers to meeting the needs of families with alcohol or drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system will be assessed.

''(9) A description of what input was obtained in the development of the plan and the joint application from each of the following groups of individuals, and the manner in which each will continue to be involved in the proposed joint activities:

''(A) Staff who provide alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment and related services to families who come to the attention of the child welfare system.

''(B) Advocates for children and parents who come to the attention of the child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment systems.

''(C) Consumers of both child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment services.

''(D) Direct service staff and supervisors from public and private child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies.

''(E) Judges and court staff.

''(F) Representatives of the State agencies and private providers providing health, mental health, domestic violence, housing, education, and employment services.

''(G) A representative of the State agency in charge of administering the temporary assistance to needy families program funded under part A of this title.

''(10) An assurance of the coordination, to the extent feasible and appropriate, of the activities funded under a grant made under this subpart with the services or benefits provided under other Federal or federally assisted programs that serve families with alcohol and drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system, including health, mental health, domestic violence, housing, and employment programs, the temporary assistance to needy families program funded under part A of this title, other child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment programs, and the courts.

''(11) An assurance that not more than 10 percent of expenditures under the plan for any fiscal year shall be for administrative costs.

''(12) An assurance that alcohol and drug treatment services provided at least in part with funds provided under a grant made under this subpart shall be licensed, certified, or otherwise approved by the appropriate State alcohol and drug abuse agencies, or in the case of an Indian tribe, by a State alcohol and drug abuse agency, the Indian Health Service, or other designated licensing agency.

''(13) An assurance that Federal funds provided to the State under a grant made under this subpart will not be used to supplant Federal or non-Federal funds for services and activities provided as of the date of the submission of the plan that assist families with alcohol and drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system.

''(b) AMENDMENTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—An eligible State or Indian tribe may amend, in whole or in part, its plan at any time through transmittal of a plan amendment.

''(2) 60-DAY APPROVAL DEADLINE.—A plan amendment is considered approved unless the Secretary notifies an eligible State or Indian tribe in writing, within 60 days after receipt of the amendment, that the amendment is disapproved (and the reasons for disapproval) or that specified additional information is needed.

''(c) REQUIREMENTS FOR APPLICATIONS BY INDIAN TRIBES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to be eligible for a grant made under this subpart, an Indian tribe shall—

''(A) submit a plan to the Secretary that describes—

''(i) the activities the tribe will undertake with both child welfare and alcohol and drug agencies that serve the tribe's children to address the needs of families who come to the attention of the child welfare agencies and have alcohol and drug problems; and

''(ii) whether and how such activities address any of the practice and policy areas in subsection (a)(6); and

''(B) subject to paragraph (2), meet the other requirements of subsection (a) unless, with respect to a specific requirement of such subsection, the Secretary determines that it would be inappropriate to apply such requirement to an Indian tribe, taking into account the resources, needs, and other circumstances of the Indian tribe.

''(2) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS; USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS.—Paragraphs (11) and (13) of subsection (a) shall not apply to a plan submitted by an Indian tribe. The indirect cost rate agreement in effect for an Indian tribe shall apply with respect to administrative costs under the tribe's plan.

''(3) AUTHORITY FOR INTERTRIBAL CONSORTIUM.—The participating Indian tribes of an intertribal consortium may develop and submit a single plan that meets the applicable requirements of subsection (a) (as so determined by the Secretary) and paragraph (1) of this subsection.

''SEC. 443. APPROPRIATION OF FUNDS.

''(a) APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of providing allotments to eligible States and Indian tribes under this subpart and research and training under subsection (b)(3), there is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated—

''(1) for fiscal year 2001, $200,000,000;

''(2) for fiscal year 2002, $275,000,000;

''(3) for fiscal year 2003, $375,000,000;

''(4) for fiscal year 2004, $475,000,000; and

''(5) for fiscal year 2005, $575,000,000.

''(b) RESERVATION OF FUNDS.—With respect to a fiscal year:

''(1) TERRITORIES.—The Secretary shall reserve 2 percent of the amount appropriated under subsection (a) for such fiscal year for payments to Puerto Rico, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

''(2) INDIAN TRIBES.—The Secretary shall reserve not less than 3 nor more than 5 percent of the amount appropriated under subsection (a) for such fiscal year for direct payments to Indian tribes and Indian tribal organizations for activities intended to increase the capacity of the Indian tribes and tribal organizations to expand treatment, services, and training to assist families with alcohol and drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare agencies.

''(3) RESEARCH AND TRAINING.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall reserve 1 percent of the amount appropriated under subsection (a) for such fiscal year for practice-based research on the effectiveness of various approaches for the screening, assessment, engagement, treatment, retention, and monitoring of families with alcohol and drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system, and for training of staff in such areas and shall ensure that a portion of such amount is used for research on the effectiveness of these approaches for Indian children and for the training of staff serving children from the Indian tribes.

''(B) DETERMINATION OF USE OF FUNDS.—Funds reserved under subparagraph (A) may only be used to carry out a research agenda that addresses the areas described in such subparagraph and that is established by the Secretary, together with the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families and the Administrator of Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, with input from public and private nonprofit providers, consumers, representatives of Indian tribes, and advocates, as well as others with expertise in research in such areas.

''SEC. 444. PAYMENTS TO ELIGIBLE STATES AND INDIAN TRIBES.

''(a) AMOUNT OF GRANT.—

''(1) ELIGIBLE STATES OTHER THAN TERRITORIES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—From the amount appropriated under subsection (a) of section 443 for a fiscal year, after the reservation of funds required under subsection (b) of that section for the fiscal year and subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), the Secretary shall pay to each eligible State (after the Secretary has determined that the State has satisfied the matching requirement under subsection (b)) an amount that bears the same ratio to such amount for such fiscal year as the number of children under the age of 18 that reside in the eligible State bears to the total number of children under the age of 18 who reside in all such eligible States for such fiscal year.

''(B) MINIMUM ALLOTMENT.—In no case shall the amount of a payment to an eligible State for a fiscal year be less than an amount equal to 0.5 percent of the amount appropriated under subsection (a) of section 443 for the fiscal year, after the reservation of funds required under subsection (b) of that section.

''(C) PRO RATA REDUCTIONS.—The Secretary shall make pro rata reductions in the amounts of the allotments determined under subparagraph (A) for a fiscal year to the extent necessary to comply with subparagraph (B).

''(2) TERRITORIES.—From the amounts reserved under section 443(b)(1) for a fiscal year, the Secretary shall pay to each territory described in section 440(5)(B) with an approved plan that meets the requirements of section 442 (after the Secretary has determined that the territory has satisfied the matching requirement under subsection (b)) an amount that bears the same ratio to such amount for such fiscal year as the number of children under the age of 18 that reside in the territory bears to the total number of children under the age of 18 who reside in all such territories for such fiscal year.

''(3) INDIAN TRIBES OR TRIBAL ORGANIZATIONS.—From the amount reserved under section 443(b)(2) for a fiscal year, the Secretary shall pay to each Indian tribe with an approved plan that meets the requirements of section 442(c) (after the Secretary has determined that the Indian tribe has satisfied the matching requirement under subsection (b)) an amount that bears the same ratio to such reserved amount for such fiscal year as the number of children under the age of 18 in the Indian tribe bears to the total number of children under the age of 18 in all Indian tribes with plans so approved for such fiscal year, as determined by the Secretary on the basis of the most current and reliable information available to the Secretary. For purposes of making the allocations required under the preceding sentence, an Indian tribe may submit data and other information that it has on the number of Indian children under the age of 18 for consideration by the Secretary.

''(b) MATCHING REQUIREMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to receive a grant under this subpart for a fiscal year, an eligible State or Indian tribe shall provide through non-Federal contributions the applicable percentage determined under paragraph (2) for such fiscal year of the costs of conducting activities funded in whole or in part with funds provided under the grant. Such contributions shall be paid jointly by the State agencies, in the case of an eligible State, or by an Indian tribe.

''(2) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the applicable percentage for an eligible State or Indian tribe for a fiscal year is—

''(A) 15 percent, in the case of fiscal years 2001 and 2002;

''(B) 20 percent, in the case of fiscal years 2003 and 2004; and

''(C) 25 percent, in the case of fiscal year 2005.

''(3) SOURCE OF MATCH.—

''(A) ELIGIBLE STATES.—The non-Federal contributions required of an eligible State under this subsection may be in cash or in kind, fairly evaluated, including plant, equipment, or services. The contributions may be made directly or through donations from public or private entities. Amounts provided by the Federal Government, or services assisted or subsidized to any significant extent by the Federal Government may not be included in determining whether an eligible State has provided the applicable percentage of such contributions for a fiscal year.

''(B) INDIAN TRIBES.—With respect to an Indian tribe, such contributions may be made in cash, through donated funds, through nonpublic third party in kind contributions, or from Federal funds received under any of the following provisions of law:

''(i) The Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1901 et seq.).

''(ii) The Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b et seq.).

''(iii) Title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5301 et seq.).

''(4) WAIVER.—

''(A) ELIGIBLE STATES.—In the case of an eligible State, the Secretary, after consultation with the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families and the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, may modify the applicable percentage determined under paragraph (2) for matching funds if the Secretary determines that economic conditions in the eligible State justify making such modification.

''(B) INDIAN TRIBES.—In the case of an Indian tribe, the Secretary may modify the applicable percentage determined under such paragraph if the Secretary determines that it would be inappropriate to apply to the Indian tribe, taking into the resources and needs of the tribe and the amount of funds the tribe would receive under a grant made under this section.

''(c) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds provided under a grant made under this subpart may only be used to carry out activities specified in the plan, as approved by the Secretary.

''(d) DEADLINE FOR REQUEST FOR PAYMENT.—An eligible State or Indian tribe shall apply to be paid funds under a grant made under this subpart not later than the beginning of the fourth quarter of a fiscal year or such funds shall be reallotted under subsection (f).

''(e) CARRYOVER OF FUNDS.—Funds paid to an eligible State or Indian tribe under a grant made under this subpart for a fiscal year may be expended in that fiscal year or the succeeding fiscal year.

''(f) REALLOTMENT OF FUNDS.—

''(1) ELIGIBLE STATES.—In the case of an eligible State that does not apply for funds allotted to the eligible State under a grant made under this subpart for a fiscal year within the time provided under subsection (d), or that does not expend such funds during the time provided under subsection (e), the funds which the eligible State would have been entitled to for such fiscal year shall be reallotted to 1 or more other eligible States on the basis of each such State's relative need for additional payments, as determined by the Secretary, after consultation with the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families and the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration.

''(2) INDIAN TRIBES.—In the case of an Indian tribe that does not expend funds allotted to the tribe during the time provided under subsection (e), the funds to which the Indian tribe would have been entitled to for such fiscal year shall be reallotted to the remaining Indian tribes that are implementing approved plans in amounts that are proportional to the percentage of Indian children under the age of 18 in each such tribe.

''SEC. 445. PERFORMANCE ACCOUNTABILITY; REPORTS AND EVALUATIONS.

''(a) PERFORMANCE MEASUREMENT.—

''(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF INDICATORS.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families, the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, Chief Executive Officers of a State or Territory, State legislators, State and local public officials responsible for administering child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment programs, court staff, consumers of the services, and advocates for children and parents who come to the attention of the child welfare system, shall, within 12 months of the date of enactment of the Child Protection/Alcohol and Drug Partnership Act of 2000, establish indicators that will be used to assess periodically the performance of eligible States and Indian tribes in using grant funds provided under this subpart to promote child safety, permanence, and well-being and recovery in families who come to the attention of the child welfare system.

''(2) COORDINATION.—The indicators established under paragraph (1) shall be based on and coordinated with the performance outcomes established for the child welfare system pursuant to section 203(b) of the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997 and the performance measures developed under subpart II of part B of title XIX of the Public Health Service Act (relating to the substance abuse prevention and treatment block grant).

''(3) PURPOSE.—The indicators will be used to measure periodically the progress made by the State agencies and by child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies serving children in Indian tribes in the activities that such agencies jointly engage in with such grant funds. An eligible State or Indian tribe will be measured against itself, assessing progress over time against a baseline established at the time the grant activities were undertaken.

''(4) ILLUSTRATIVE EXAMPLES.—The indicators developed should address the range of activities that eligible States and Indian tribes have the option of engaging in with such grant funds. Examples of the types of progress to be measured in the different areas of activity include the following:

''(A) Improving the screening and assessment of families who come to the attention of the child welfare system with alcohol and drug problems, so such families can be promptly referred for appropriate treatment when necessary.

''(B) Increasing the availability of comprehensive and timely individualized treatment for families with alcohol and drug problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system.

''(C) Increasing the number or proportion of families who, when they come to the attention of the child welfare system with alcohol and drug problems, promptly enter appropriate treatment.

''(D) Increasing the engagement and retention in treatment of families with alcohol and drug problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system.

''(E) Decreasing the number of children who re-enter foster care after being returned to families who had alcohol or drug problems when the children entered foster care.

''(F) Increasing the number or proportion of staff in both the public child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies who have received training on the needs of families that come to the attention of the child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment systems for help, and the help that can be provided to such families.

''(G) Increasing the proportion of parents who complete treatment for alcohol or drug abuse and show improvement in their pre-employment or employment status.

''(5) DETERMINATION OF PROGRESS.—

''(A) INITIAL REPORT.—Not later than the end of the first fiscal year in which funds are received under a grant made under this subpart, the State agencies in each eligible State that receives such funds, and the Indian tribes that receive such funds, shall submit to the Secretary a report on the activities carried out during the fiscal year with such funds. The report shall contain such information as the Secretary determines is necessary to provide an accurate description of the activities conducted with such funds and of any changes in the use of such funds that are planned for the succeeding fiscal year.

''(B) USE OF INDICATORS.—As soon as possible after the establishment of indicators under paragraph (1), the State agencies and Indian tribes shall conduct evaluations, directly or under contract, of their progress with respect to such indicators that are directly related to activities the eligible State or Indian tribe is engaging in with such grant funds and include information on the evaluation in the reports to the Secretary required under subparagraphs (C) and (D). After the third year in which such activities are conducted, an eligible State or Indian tribe shall include in the evaluation at least some indicators that address improvements in treatment for families with alcohol and drug problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system.

''(C) SUBSEQUENT REPORTS.—After the initial report is submitted under subparagraph (A), an eligible State or Indian tribe shall submit to the Secretary, not later than June 30 of each fiscal year thereafter in which the State or tribe carries out activities with grant funds provided under this subpart, a report on the application of the indicators established under paragraph (1) to such activities. The reports shall include an explanation regarding why the specific indicators used were chosen, how such indicators are expected to impact a child's safety, permanence, well-being, and parental recovery, and the results (as of the date of submission of the report) of the evaluation conducted under subparagraph (B).

''(D) FINAL REPORT.—Not later than September 30, 2005, each eligible State and Indian tribe with an approved plan under this part shall submit a final report on the evaluations conducted under subparagraph (B) and the progress made in achieving the goals specified in the plan of the State or Indian tribe.

''(E) FAILURE TO REPORT.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (ii), an eligible State or Indian tribe that fails to submit the reports required under this paragraph or to conduct the evaluation required under subparagraph (B) shall not be eligible to receive grant funds provided under this subpart for the fiscal year following the fiscal year in which such State or Indian tribe failed to submit such report or conduct such evaluation.

''(ii) CORRECTIVE ACTION.—An eligible State or Indian tribe to which clause (i) applies may, notwithstanding such clause, receive grant funds under this subpart for a succeeding fiscal year if prior to September 30 of the fiscal year in which such failure occurred, the State agencies of the eligible State, or the Indian tribe, submit to the Secretary a plan to monitor and evaluate in a timely manner the activities conducted with such funds, and such plan is approved in a timely manner by the Secretary, after consultation with the Administration for Children and Families and the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration.

''(b) SECRETARIAL REPORTS AND EVALUATIONS.—

''(1) ANNUAL REPORTS.—On the basis of reports submitted under subsection (a), the Secretary, in consultation with the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families and the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, shall report annually, beginning on October 1, 2002, to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the joint activities conducted with funds provided under grants made under this subpart, the indicators that have been established, and the progress that has been made in addressing the needs of families with alcohol and drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system and in achieving the goals of child safety, permanence, and family stability.

''(2) EVALUATIONS.—Not later than 6 months after the end of each 5-year funding cycle under this subpart, the Secretary shall submit a report to the committees described in paragraph (1) that summarizes the results of the evaluations conducted by eligible States and Indian tribes under subsection (a)(5)(B), as reported by such States and Indian tribes in accordance with subparagraphs (C) and (D) of subsection (a)(5). The Secretary shall include in the report required under this paragraph recommendations for further legislative or administrative actions that are designed to assist children and families with alcohol and drug abuse problems who come to the attention of the child welfare system.''.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, today I am here to talk about our Nation's most vulnerable children—those innocent kids who are in the child protection system because they have been abused or neglected by parents, many of whom have drug or alcohol problems. Over 500,000 children are in foster care nationwide and 3,000 children are in West Virginia. Each one deserves a safe, permanent home according to the fundamental guidelines set by the 1997 Adoption and Safe Families Act.

National statistics range between 40 percent and 80 percent of families in the child welfare system struggling with alcohol or drug abuse, or both. One recent survey noted that 67 percent of the parents involved in child abuse or neglect cases needed alcohol or drug treatment, but only one-third of those parents got the appropriate treatment or services to deal with their addiction. In my own state of West Virginia, over half of the children placed in foster care have families with alcohol or drug abuse problems, and we know even more children are at risk of neglect, but are not in foster care yet because of their parent's substance abuse problems.

Another sad, stunning statistic is that children with open child welfare cases whose parents have substance abuse problems are younger than other children in foster care, and they are more likely to be the victims of severe and chronic neglect. Once such children are placed in foster care, they tend to stay in care longer than other children.

I believe the only way to achieve the critical goals of a safe, healthy, and permanent home for every child is to tackle the problem of alcohol and drug abuse among parents. What happens to parents who abuse alcohol or drugs ultimately will decide that child's fate. To help the child, we must address the addiction of their parents.

The issue of alcohol and drug abuse is difficult. Part of the 1997 Adoption and Safe Families Act required the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to study this problem within the child welfare system. This important report, Blending Perspectives and Building Common Ground, outlines our challenges. There is a lack of appropriate treatment and services, especially services designed to meet the needs of parents in the child protection system. Unfortunately, there is poor communication and collaboration between alcohol and drug abuse agencies and child protection agencies. Issues such as confidentiality, different definitions of who ''the client'' is, and different time frames for decisions make collaboration harder. For example, under the 1997 Adoption and Safe Families Act, state agencies and courts are expected to consider termination of parental rights if a child has been in foster care for 15 of 22 months. Treatment programs designed for single clients have different timeframes.

To address the challenge, we must find new ways to encourage these two independent systems to work together on behalf of parents with an alcohol or drug problem and their children. In addition to treating the patient's addiction, we must also provide for the needs of their child.

Therefore, we need to create incentives for both agencies to consider the total picture—What are the child's needs? What are the parent's needs? How can we effectively serve both, and meet the fundamental goals of the Adoption Law that every child deserves a safe, healthy, permanent home.

The HHS report sets five priorities. First, it calls for building collaborative working relationships among agencies. It stresses that addiction is a treatable disease, but access to timely, comprehensive substance abuse treatment services is key. Keeping clients in treatment is crucial, but serving parents is harder because services must also be available to their children. As mentioned, children of abusing parents need special services. The final priority in the HHS study is for research and more information on the interaction between substance abuse and child maltreatment.

Today, I am proud to join with my colleagues, Senator SNOWE, DEWINE, and DODD to introduce legislation to address this troubling issue. We have worked for months with state officials, child advocates and officials in the substance abuse community to develop the Child Protection/Alcohol and Drug Partnership Act of 2000. This bill builds on the foundation of the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997—fundamental goals of making a child's safety, health, and permanency paramount.

To accomplish these bold goals, we need to be bold by investing in partnerships that will respond to the needs and priorities outlined in the comprehensive HHS study. I believe a new program and a new approach are essential. A new system is needed to address the special concerns of this unique population—parents with alcohol and drug problems who neglect their children. A program designed to serve a single male with drug problems doesn't respond to the needs of a mother and her child.

To be effective, we must link child protection workers with those involved in alcohol and drug treatment programs. Forging new partnerships takes time—and it takes money. That is why our legislation invests $1.9 billion over 5 years to combat the problems of drugs and alcohol abuse in families in the child welfare system.

I understand this is a large sum, but alcohol and drug abuse is a huge problem. Before reacting to the cost of the bill, consider what the costs are if we do nothing.

If we do not invest in alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment for such families, children will be neglected or abused. Young children will be placed in foster care, at a wide range of costs, and they will linger there longer than other children without family substance abuse problems.

In 1997, the House Ways and Means Subcommittee received testimony from Professor Richard Barth who noted that many newborns in substance abuse cases already had siblings placed in foster care. Barth estimated that if only one-third of the mothers with substance abuse problems got successful, early treatment upon the birth of their first child, instead of waiting until later, many years of foster care placements could be prevented and millions of dollars could be saved.

Our bill is designed to tackle this tough issue so agencies do not wait too long to help vulnerable children. Our bill will promote innovative approaches that serve both parents and children. It will offer funding for screening and assessment to enhance prevention. It will support outreach to families and retention so that parents stay in treatment. It can support joint training, and educate alcohol and drug counselors about the special needs of children and the importance of a safe, permanent home. It can support outpatient services or residential treatment. It allows investments in aftercare to keep families and children safe.

If we do invest in such specialized alcohol and drug treatment programs for families, we can achieve two things. For many families, I hope, treatment will be successful and children will return to a safe and stable home. But for others, we will have tried, and learned the important lesson that some children need an alternate place—some children need adoption. Under the Adoption and Safe Families Act, courts cannot move forward on adoption until appropriate services have been provided to families. That is the law, and we must follow it. Therefore, to move some children towards adoption, services must be tried for their families.

We want a responsible approach that will include accountability. It requires annual reports to assess how much progress is made each and every year. Reports should measure success in treating parents, but equally important will be measures of children's safety and family stability.

Over the years, we have worked on child welfare issues in a positive, bipartisan manner. I am proud to continue the bipartisan approach as we grapple with such tough controversial issues as alcohol and drug abuse among parents in the child welfare system.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a fact sheet and section-by-section analysis of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION—CHILD PROTECTION/ ALCOHOL AND DRUG PARTNERSHIP ACT OF 2000

(A bill to amend part B of title IV of the Social Security Act to create a grant program to promote joint activities among Federal, State, and local public child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies)

GRANTS TO PROMOTE CHILD PROTECTION/ALCOHOL AND DRUG PARTNERSHIP FOR CHILDREN

In an effort to improve child safety, family stability, and permanence, as well as promote recovery from alcohol and drug abuse problems, the Secretary may award grants to eligible States and Indian tribes to foster programs for families who are known to the child welfare system to have alcohol and drug abuse problems. The Secretary shall notify States and Indian tribes of approval or denial not later than 60 days after submission.

STATE PLAN REQUIREMENTS

In order to meet the prevention and treatment needs of families with alcohol and drug abuse problems in the child welfare system and to promote child safety, permanence, and family stability, State agencies will jointly work together, creating a plan to identify the extent of the drug and alcohol abuse problem.

Creation of plan.—State agencies will provide data on appropriate screening and assessment of cases, consultation on cases involving alcohol and drug abuse, arrangements for addressing confidentiality and sharing of information, cross training of staff, co-location of services, support for comprehensive treatment for parents and their children, and priority of child welfare families for assessment or treatment.

Identify activities.—A description of the activities and goals to be implemented under the five-year funding cycle should be identified, such as: identify and assess alcohol and drug treatment needs, identify risks to children's safety and the need for permanency, enroll families in appropriate services and treatment in their communities, and regularly assess the progress of families receiving such treatment.

Implement prevention and treatment services.—States and Indian tribes should implement individualized alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment services that are available, accessible, and appropriate that include the following components:

(A) Preventive and early intervention services for the children of families with alcohol and drug abuse problems that integrate alcohol and drug abuse prevention services with mental health and domestic violence services, as well as recognizing the mental, emotional, and developmental problems the children may experience.

(B) Prevention and early intervention services for parents at risk for alcohol and drug abuse problems.

(C) Comprehensive home-based, our-patient and residential treatment options.

(D) Formal and informal after-care support for families in recovery.

(E) Services and programs that promote parent-child interaction.

Sharing information among agencies.—Agencies should eliminate existing barriers to treatment and to child safety and permanence by sharing information among agencies and learning from the various treatment protocols of other agencies such as:

(A) Creating effective engagement and retention strategies.

(B) Encouraging joint training of child welfare staff and alcohol and drug abuse prevention agencies, and judges and court staff to increase awareness and understanding of drug abuse and related child abuse and neglect and more accurately identify abuse in families, increase staff knowledge of the services and resources that are available in the communities, and increase awareness of permanence for children and the urgency for time lines in making these decisions.

(C) Improving data systems to monitor the progress of families, evaluate service and treatment outcomes, and determine which approaches are most effective.

(D) Evaluation strategies to identify the effectiveness of treatment that has the greatest impact on families in different circumstances.

(E) Training and technical assistance to increase the State's capacity to perform the above activities.

Plan descriptions and assurances.—States and Indian tribes should create a plan that includes the following descriptions and assurances:

(A) A description of the jurisdictions in the State whether urban, suburban, or rural, and the State's plan to expand activities over the 5-year funding cycle to other parts of the State.

(B) A description of the way in which the State agency will measure progress, including how the agency will jointly conduct an evaluation of the results of the activities.

(C) A description of the input obtained from staff of State agencies, advocates, consumers of prevention and treatment services, line staff from public and private child welfare and drug abuse agencies, judges and court staff, representatives of health, mental health, domestic violence, housing and employment services, as well as a representative of the State agency in charge of administering the temporary assistance to needy families program (TANF).

(D) An assurance of coordination with other services provided under other Federal or federally assisted programs including health, mental health, domestic violence, housing, employment programs, TANF, and other child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse programs and the courts.

(E) An assurance that not more than 10% of expenditures under the State plan for any fiscal year shall be for administrative costs. However, Indian tribes will be exempt from this limitation and instead may use the indirect cost rate agreement in effect for the tribe.

(F) An assurance from States that Federal funds provided will not be used to supplant Federal or non-Federal funds for services and activities provided as of the date of the submission of the plan. However, Indian tribes will be exempt from this provision.

Amendments.—A State or Indian tribe may amend its plan, in whole or in part at any time through a plan amendment. The amendment should be submitted to the Secretary not later than 30 days after the date of any changes of activities. Approval from the Secretary shall be presumed unless the State has been notified of disapproval within 60 days after receipt.

Special Application to Indian tribes.—The Indian tribe must submit a plan to the Secretary that describes the activities it will undertake with both the child welfare and alcohol and drug agencies that serve its children to address the needs of families who come to the attention of the child welfare agency who have alcohol and drug problems. The Indian tribe must also meet other applicable requirements, unless the Secretary determines that it would be inappropriate based on the tribe's resources, needs, and other circumstances.

APPROPRIATION OF FUNDS

Appropriations.—A total of 1.9 billion dollars will be appropriated to eligible States and Indian tribes at the progression rate of:

(1) for fiscal year 2001, $200,000,000;
(2) for fiscal year 2002, $275,000,000;
(3) for fiscal year 2003, $375,000,000;
(4) for fiscal year 2004, $475,000,000; and
(5) for fiscal year 2005, $575,000,000.

Territories.—The Secretary of HHS shall reserve 2% of the amount appropriated each fiscal year for payments to Puerto Rico, Guam, the United States Virgin Islands, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands. In addition, the Secretary shall reserve from 3 to 5 percent of the amount appropriated for direct payment to Indian tribes.

Research and Training.—The Secretary shall reserve 1% of the appropriated amount for each fiscal year for practice-based research on the effectiveness of various approaches for screening, assessment, engagement, treatment, retention, and monitoring of families and training of staff in such areas. In addition, the Secretary will also ensure that a portion of these funds are used for research on the effectiveness of these approaches for Indian children and the training of staff.

Determination of use of funds.—Funds may only be used to carry out a specific research agenda established by the Secretary, together with the Assistant Secretary of the Administration for Children and Families and the Administrator of Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration with input from public and private nonprofit providers, consumers, representatives of the Indian tribes and advocates.

PAYMENTS TO STATES

Amount of grant to State and territories.—Each eligible State will receive an amount based on the number of children under the age of 18 that reside in that State. There will be a small state minimum of .05% to ensure that all States are eligible for sufficient funding to establish a program.

Amount of grant to Indian tribes or tribal organizations.—Indian tribes shall be eligible for a set aside of 3% to 5%. This amount will be distributed based on the population of children under 18 in the tribe.

State matching requirement.—States shall provide, through non-Federal contributions, the following applicable percentages for a given fiscal year:

(A) for fiscal years 2001 and 2002, 15% match;

(B) for fiscal years 2003 and 2004, 20% match; and

(C) for fiscal year 2005, 25% match.

Source of match.—The non-Federal contributions required of States may be in cash or in-kind, including plant equipment or services made directly from donations from public or private entities. Amounts received from the Federal Government may not be included in the applicable percentage of contributions for a given fiscal year. However, Indian tribes may use three Federal sources of matching funds: Indian Child Welfare Act funds, Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act funds, and Community Block Grant funds.

Waiver.—The Secretary may modify matching funds if it is determined that extraordinary economic conditions in the State justify the waiver. Indians tribes' matching funds may also be modified if the Secretary determines that it would be inappropriate based on the resources and needs of the tribe.

Use of Funds and Deadline for Request of Payment.—Funds may only be used to carry out activities specified in the plan, as approved by the Secretary. Each State or Indian tribe shall apply to be paid funds not later than the beginning of the fourth quarter of a fiscal year or they will be reallotted.

Carryover and Reallotment of funds.—Funds paid to an eligible State or Indian tribe may be used in that fiscal year or the succeeding fiscal year. If a State does not apply for funds allotted within the time provided, the funds will be reallocated to one or more eligible States on the basis of the needs of that individual state. In the cases of Indian tribes, funds will be reallotted to remaining tribes that are implementing approved plans.

PERFORMANCE MEASUREMENT

Establishment of Indicators.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families, the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration within HHS, and with state and local government, public officials responsible for administering child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment programs, court staff, consumers of the services, and advocates for these children and parents will establish indicators within 12 months of the enactment of this law which will be used to assess the performance of States and Indian tribes. A State or Indian tribe will be measured against itself, assessing progress over time against a baseline established at the time the grant activities were undertaken.

Illustrative Examples.—Indicators of activities to be measured include:

(A) Improve screening and assessment of families;

(B) Increase availability of comprehensive individualized treatment;

(C) Increase the number/proportion of families who enter treatment promptly;

(D) Increase engagement and retention;

(E) Decrease the number of children who re-enter foster care after being returned to families who had alcohol or drug problems;

(F) Increase number/proportion of staff trained; and

(G) Increase the proportion of parents who complete treatment and show improvement in their employment status.

Reports.—The child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse and treatment agencies in each eligible state, and the Indian tribes that receive funds shall submit no later than the end of the first fiscal year, a report to the Secretary describing activities carried out, and any changes in the use of the funds planned for the succeeding fiscal year. After the first report is submitted, a State or Indian tribe must submit to the Secretary annually, by the end of the third quarter in the fiscal year, a report on the application of the indicators to its activities, an explanation of why these indicators were chosen, and the results of the evaluation to date. After the third year of the grant all of the States must include indicators that address improvements in treatment. A final report on evaluation and the progress made must be submitted to the Secretary not later than the end of each five year funding cycle of the grant.

Penalty.—States or Indian tribes that fail to report on the indicators will not be eligible for grant funds for the fiscal year following the one in which it failed to report, unless a plan for improving their ability to monitor and evaluate their activities is submitted to the Secretary and then approved in a timely manner.

Secretarial reports and evaluations.—Beginning October 1, 2002, the Secretary, in consultation with the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families, and the Administrator of the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, shall report annually, to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate on the joint activities, indicators, and progress made with families.

Evaluations.—Not later than six months after the end of each 5 year funding cycle, the Secretary shall submit a report to the above committees, the results of the evaluations as well as recommendations for further legislative actions.

FACT SHEET

The Child Protection/Alcohol and Drug Partnership Act of 2000 is a bill to create a grant program to promote joint activities among Federal, State, and local public child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies to improve child safety, family stability, and permanence for children in families with drug and alcohol problems, as well as promote recovery from drug and alcohol problems.

Child welfare agencies estimate that only a third of the 67% of the parents who need drug or alcohol prevention and treatment services actually get help today. This bill builds on the foundation of the Adoption and Safe Families Act of 1997 which requires States to focus on a child's need for safety, health and permanence. The bill creates new funding for alcohol and drug treatment and other activities that will serve the special needs of these families to either provide treatment for parents with alcohol and drug abuse problems so that a child can safely return to their family or to promote timely decisions and fulfill the requirement of the 1997 Adoption Act to provide services prior to adoption.

GRANTS TO PROMOTE CHILD PROTECTION/ ALCOHOL AND DRUG PARTNERSHIPS

In an effort to improve child safety, family stability, and permanence as well as promote recovery from alcohol and drug abuse problems, HHS will award grants to States and Indian tribes to encourage programs for families who are known to the child welfare system and have alcohol and drug abuse problems. Such grants will forge new and necessary partnerships between the child protection agencies and the alcohol and drug prevention and treatment agencies in States so they can together provide necessary services for this unique population.

These grants will help build new partnerships to provide alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment services that are timely, available, accessible, and appropriate and include the following components:

(A) Preventive and early intervention services for the children of families with alcohol and drug problems that combine alcohol and drug prevention services with mental health and domestic violence services, and recognize the mental, emotional, and developmental problems the children may experience.

(B) Prevention and early intervention services for families at risk of alcohol and drug problems.

(C) Comprehensive home-based, out-patient and residential treatment options.

(D) Formal and informal after-care support for families in recovery that promote child safety and family stability.

(E) Services and supports that promote positive parent-child interaction.

FORGING NEW PARTNERSHIPS

GAO and HHS studies indicate that the existing programs for alcohol and drug treatment do not effectively service families in the child protection system. Therefore, this new grant program will help eliminate barriers to treatment and to child safety and permanence by encouraging agencies build partnerships and conduct joint activities including:

(A) Promote appropriate screening and assessment of alcohol and drug problems.

(B) Create effective engagement and retention strategies that get families into timely treatment.

(C) Encourage joint training for staff of child welfare and alcohol and drug abuse prevention and treatment agencies, and judges and other court personnel to increase understanding of alcohol and drug problems related to child abuse and neglect and to more accurately identify alcohol and drug abuse in families. Such training increases staff knowledge of the appropriate resources that are available in the communities, and increases awareness of the importance of permanence for children and the urgency for expedited time lines in making these decisions.

(D) Improve data systems to monitor the progress of families, evaluate service and treatment outcomes, and determine which approaches are most effective.

(E) Evaluate strategies to identify the effectiveness of treatment and those parts of the treatment that have the greatest impact on families in different circumstances.

NEW, TARGETED INVESTMENTS

A total of $1.9 billion will be available to eligible States with funding of $200 million in the first year expanding to $575 million by the last year. The amount of funding will be based on the State's number of children under 18, with a small State minimum to ensure that every State gets a fair share. Indian tribes will have a 3%-5% set aside. State child welfare and alcohol and drug agencies shall have a modest matching requirement for funding beginning with a 15% match and gradually increasing to 25%. The Secretary has discretion to waive the State match in cases of hardship.

ACCOUNTABILITY AND PERFORMANCE MEASUREMENT

To ensure accountability, HHS and the related State agencies must establish indicators within 12 months of the enactment of this law which will be used to assess the State's progress under this program. Annual reports by the States must be submitted to HHS. Any state that fails to submit its report will lose its funding for the next year, until it comes into compliance. HHS must issue an annual report to Congress on the progress of the Child Protection/Alcohol and Drug Partnership grants.

By Mr. ABRAHAM:

S. 2436. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to repeal the targeted area limitation on the expense deduction for environmental remediation costs and to extend the termination date of such deduction; to the Committee on Finance.

BROWNFIELD CLEANUP COST RECOVERY ACT

• Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Brownfield Cleanup Cost Recovery Act. This legislation would repeal the targeted area limitation on the expense deduction for environmental remediation costs and extend the termination date of such deduction to 2004.

Mr. President, the Environmental Protection Agency's brownfields program is designed to help communities restore less seriously contaminated sites that have the potential for economic development. Brownfields are defined as abandoned, idled, or underused industrial and commercial facilities where expansion or redevelopment is complicated by real or perceived environmental contamination.

In general, costs incurred for new buildings or for permanent improvements to increase the value of a property must be capitalized—the cost must be deducted over a period of years. Some expenses, such as repairs, are currently deductible—deductible in the year in which the cost is incurred. This is also called expensing. It is a considerable financial advantage to be able to fully deduct an expense in one year rather than over many. The brownfields tax provision would include environmental remediation costs as allowable costs for expensing. This would create the financial incentive needed to bring companies in to remediate brownfields.

Prior to the passage of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, the tax code discouraged the remediation of environmentally damaged property. In 1996, I introduced legislation to eliminate this bias. This legislation ultimately was included as part of the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, which is now law. However, the incentive expires at the end of this year. As part of the Taxpayer Refund and Relief Act of 1999, Congress passed provisions expanding upon this important community development legislation. This bill contains the same provisions that were included in the Taxpayer Refund and Relief Act of 1999, which Congress passed, but President Clinton vetoed.

In addition, Mr. President, current law limits expensing of brownfield sites to those sites within ''targeted'' areas—defined as being a renewal community under section 198. This bill would eliminate the ''targeted area'' limitation, allowing for increased remediation in all areas, not just federal designated zones.

Mr. President, encouraging community renewal has long been a very important issue to me. In 1995, my first year as a Senator, I joined with Senators LIEBERMAN, SANTORUM, DEWINE and Moseley-Braun, to introduce the Enhanced Enterprise Zones Act, to stimulate job creation and residential growth in America's most distressed rural and urban communities. More recently, Senator LIEBERMAN and I introduced the American Community Renewal Act. The ACRA would provide benefits to 100 distressed communities around the country, including tax benefits designed to attract businesses and employers to Renewal Zones. It is my hope that this bill will become law this year.

In my opinion, Mr. President, brownfield remediation is a crucial component of any policy for community renewal if that policy is to be successful. The provisions provided in this legislation will make such remediation more likely and more common. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to give it their strong support.●

By Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire (for himself and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 2437. A bill to provide for the conservation and development of water and related resources, to authorize the Secretary of the Army to construct various projects for improvements to rivers and harbors of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

WATER RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 2000

● Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2437

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.—

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Water Resources Development Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. DEFINITION OF SECRETARY.

In this Act, the term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Army.

SEC. 3. COMPREHENSIVE EVERGLADES RESTORATION PLAN.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the following definitions apply:

(1) CENTRAL AND SOUTHERN FLORIDA PROJECT.—The term ''Central and Southern Florida Project'' means the project for Central and Southern Florida authorized under the heading ''CENTRAL AND SOUTHERN FLORIDA'' in section 203 of the Flood Control Act of 1948 (62 Stat. 1176), any modification to the project authorized by law, or modified by the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan.

(2) SOUTH FLORIDA ECOSYSTEM.—The term ''South Florida ecosystem'' means the area consisting of the lands and waters within the boundary, existing on July 1, 1999, of the South Florida Water Management District, including the Everglades ecosystem, the Florida Keys, Biscayne Bay, Florida Bay, and other contiguous near-shore coastal waters of South Florida.

(3) COMPREHENSIVE EVERGLADES RESTORATION PLAN.—The term ''Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan'' means the plan contained in the ''Final Feasibility Report and Programmatic Environmental Impact Statement,'' April 1999, as transmitted to the Congress by the July 1, 1999, letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Army for Civil Works pursuant to Section 528 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 (110 Stat. 3767).

(4) NATURAL SYSTEM.—The term ''natural system'' means all Federally or state managed lands and waters within the South Florida ecosystem, including the water conservation areas, Everglades National Park, Big Cypress National Preserve, and other federally or state designated conservation lands, and other lands that create or contribute to habitat supporting native flora and fauna.

(b) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that:

(1) The Everglades is an American treasure. In its natural state, the South Florida ecosystem was connected by the flow of fresh water from the Kissimmee River to Lake Okeechobee—south through vast freshwater marshes known as the Everglades—to Florida Bay, and on to the coral reefs of the Florida Keys. The South Florida ecosystem covers approximately 18,000 square miles and once included a unique and biologically productive region, supporting vast colonies of wading birds, a mixture of temperate and tropical plant and animal species, and teeming coastal fisheries and North America's only barrier coral reef. The South Florida ecosystem is endangered as a result of adverse changes in the quantity, distribution, and timing of flows and degradation of water quality. The Everglades alone has been reduced in size by approximately 50 percent. Restoration of this nationally and internationally recognized ecosystem, including America's Everglades, is in the Nation's interest.

(2) The Central and Southern Florida Project plays an important role in the economy of south Florida by providing flood protection and water supply to agriculture and the residents of south Florida and providing water to the water conservation areas, Everglades National Park and other natural areas for the purpose of preserving fish and wildlife resources. The population of the region is expected to continue to grow, further straining the ability of the existing Central and Southern Florida Project to meet the needs of the natural system and the people of south Florida.

(3) Modifications to the Central and Southern Florida Project are needed to restore, preserve, and protect the South Florida ecosystem, including the Everglades, while continuing to provide for the water related needs of the region, including flood protection and other objectives served by the Project.

(4) The Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan is a scientifically and economically sound plan that modifies the Central and Southern Florida Project to restore, preserve and protect the South Florida ecosystem. By storing most of the water currently discharged to the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico, ensuring the quality of water discharged into the South Florida ecosystem from project features, and removing internal levees and canals in the Everglades, the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan provides the roadmap for the recovery of a healthy, sustainable ecosystem as well as providing for the other water-related needs of the region, including flood protection, the enhancement of water supplies, and other objectives served by the Central and Southern Florida Project.

(5) The comprehensive, system-wide nature of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan and the linkage of the elements of the plan to each other must be preserved not only during the over 25-year period that will be necessary for its implementation, but for as long as the project remains authorized. Implementation must proceed in a programmatic manner using the principles of adaptive assessment as outlined in the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan.

(6) The Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan contains a number of components that will benefit Everglades National Park, Biscayne National Park, Florida Keys National Marine Sanctuary, Big Cypress National Preserve, Ten Thousand Islands National Wildlife Refuge, and Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge by significantly improving the quantity, quality, timing, and distribution of waste delivered to these Federal areas. Improved water deliveries will also provide benefits to federally-listed threatened and endangered species.

(7) The Congress, the Federal government, and the State of Florida have, in prior legislation, recognized the need to restore, preserve, and protect the South Florida ecosystem, These on-going efforts are important to the success of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan. Since the creation of the South Florida Ecosystem Restoration Task Force in 1993, the Federal government has been working in partnership with tribal, state, and local governments, the private sector, and individual citizens to accomplish restoration of the South Florida ecosystem. It is important for the long-term restoration of this ecosystem that these efforts, including the South Florida Ecosystem Restoration Task Force, be continued and strengthened. The state, with its financial responsibilities for project implementation and capabilities in the planning, design, construction, and operation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan, must be a full partner with the Federal government.

(c) COMPREHENSIVE EVERGLADES RESTORATION PLAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Congress hereby approves the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan to modify the Central and Southern Florida Project to restore, preserve, and protect the South Florida ecosystem. These changes are necessary in order to ensure that the Central and Southern Florida Project as amended provides for the improvement and protection of water quality in, and the reduction of the loss of fresh water from, the South Florida ecosystem, as well as providing for the water related needs of the region, including flood protection, the enhancement of water supplies, and other objectives served by the Central and Southern Florida Project.

(2) SPECIFIC AUTHORIZATIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Those projects included in the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan and specified in paragraphs (B) and (C) are authorized to be carried out by the Secretary substantially in accordance with the plans, and subject to the conditions described in the Central and Southern Florida Project: Comprehensive Review Study Report of the Chief of Engineers dated June 22, 1999.

(B) PILOT PROJECTS.—The following pilot projects are authorized for implementation, after review and approval by the Secretary, at a total cost of $69,000,000, with an estimated Federal cost of $34,500,000 and an estimated non-Federal cost of $34,500,000:

(1) Caloosahatchee River (C–43) Basin ASR ($6,000,000);

(2) Lake Belt In-Ground Reservoir Technology ($23,000,000);

(3) L–31N Seepage Management (10,000,000); and,

(4) Wastewater Reuse Technology ($30,000,000).

(C) OTHER PROJECTS.—The following projects are authorized at a total cost of $1,100,918,000, with an estimated Federal cost of $550,459,000 and an estimated non-Federal cost of $550,459,000. Prior to implementation of projects (1) through (10), the Secretary shall review and approve a Project Implementation Report prepared in accordance with subsection (g).

(1) C–44 Basin Storage Reservoir ($112,562,000);

(2) Everglades Agricultural Area Storage Reservoirs—Phase I ($233,408,000);

(3) Site 1 Impoundment ($38,535,000);

(4) Water Conservation Areas 3A/3B Levee Seepage Management ($100,335,000);

(5) C–11 Impoundment and Stormwater Treatment Area ($124,837,000);

(6) C–9 Impoundment and Stormwater Treatment Area ($89,146,000);

(7) Taylor Creek/Nubbin Slough Storage and Treatment Area ($104,027,000);

(8) Raise and Bridge East Portion of Tamiami Trail and Fill Miami Canal within Water Conservation Area 3 ($26,946,000);

(9) North New River Improvements ($77,087,000);

(10) C–111 Spreader Canal ($94,035,000); and

(11) Adaptive Assessment and Monitoring Program (10 years) ($100,000,000).

(d) ADDITIONAL PROGRAM AUTHORITY.—In order to expedite implementation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan, the Secretary is authorized to implement modifications to the Central and Southern Florida Project that are consistent with the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan and that will produce independent and substantial restoration, preservation, or protection benefits to the South Florida ecosystem; provided that the total Federal cost of each project accomplished under this authority shall not exceed $35,000,000; and provided further that the total Federal cost of all the projects accomplished under this authority shall not exceed $250,000,000. Prior to implementation of any project authorized under this subsection, the Secretary shall review and approve a Project Implementation Report prepared in accordance with subsection (g).

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF FUTURE PROJECT FEATURES.—Except for those projects authorized in subsections (c) and (d), all future projects included in the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan shall require a specific authorization of Congress. Prior to authorization, the Secretary shall transmit such projects to Congress along with a Project Implementation Report prepared in accordance with subsection (g). Further, such projects, if authorized, shall be implemented pursuant to subsection (i) of this section.

(f) COST SHARING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The non-Federal share of the cost of implementing projects authorized under subsections (c), (d), and (e) shall be 50 percent. The non-Federal sponsor shall be responsible for all lands, easements, rights-of-way, and relocations and shall be afforded credit toward the non-Federal share in accordance with paragraph (3)(A). The non-Federal sponsor may accept Federal funding for the purchase of the necessary lands, easements, rights-of-way or relocations, provided that such assistance is credited toward the Federal share of the cost of the project.

(2) OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE.—Notwithstanding section 528(e)(3) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996, the non-Federal sponsor shall be responsible for sixty percent of the operation, maintenance, repair, replacement, and rehabilitation cost of activities authorized under this section.

(3) CREDIT AND REIMBURSEMENT.—

(A) LANDS.—Regardless of the date of acquisition, the value of lands or interests in land acquired by non-Federal interests for any activity required in this section shall be included in the total cost of the activity and credited against the non-Federal share of the cost of the activity. Such value shall be determined by the Secretary.

(B) WORK.—The Secretary may provide credit, including in-kind credit, to or reimburse the non-Federal project sponsor for the reasonable cost of any work performed in connection with a study or activity necessary for the implementation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan if the Secretary determines that the work is necessary and the credit or reimbursement is granted for work completed during the period of design or implementation pursuant to an agreement between the Secretary and the non-Federal sponsor that prescribes the terms and conditions of the credit or reimbursement.

(C) AUDITS.—Credit or reimbursement for land or work granted under this subsection shall be subject to audit by the Secretary.

(g) EVALUATION OF PROJECT FEATURES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Prior to implementation of project features authorized in subsection (c)(2)(C)(1) through (c)(2)(C)(10) and subsection (d), the Secretary, in cooperation with the non-Federal sponsor, shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment, complete Project Implementation Reports to address the project(s) cost effectiveness, engineering feasibility, and potential environmental impacts, including National Environmental Policy Act compliance. The Secretary shall coordinate with appropriate Federal, tribal, state and local governments during the development of such reports and shall identify any additional water that will be made available for the natural system, existing legal users, and other water related needs of the region. Further, such reports shall ensure that each project feature is consistent with the programmatic regulations issued pursuant to subsection (i).

(2) PROJECT JUSTIFICATION.—Notwithstanding section 209 of the Flood Control Act of 1970 (42 U.S.C. 1962–2) or any other provision of law regarding economic justification, in carrying out activities authorized in accordance with subsections (c), (d), and (e), the Secretary may determine that activities are justified by the environmental benefits derived by the South Florida ecosystem in general and the Everglades and Florida Bay in particular; and shall not need further economic justification if the Secretary determines that the activities are cost effective.

(h) SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Socially and economically disadvantaged individuals and communities make up a large portion of the South Florida ecosystem and have legitimate interests in the implementation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan. Further, such groups have not, in some cases, been given the opportunity to understand and participate fully in the development of water resources projects. As provided in this subsection, the Secretary shall ensure that impacts on socially and economically disadvantaged individuals are considered during the implementation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan and that such individuals have opportunities to review and comment on its implementation.

(2) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection, the following definitions apply:

(A) SMALL BUSINESS CONCERN.—The term ''small business concern'' has the meaning such term has under section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632).

(B) SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—The term ''socially and economically disadvantaged individuals'' has the meaning such term has under section 8(d) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 637(d)) and relevant subcontracting regulations promulgated pursuant thereto.

(3) PROGRAM FOR SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—The Secretary shall establish a program to ensure that socially and economically disadvantaged individuals within the South Florida ecosystem are informed of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan, given the opportunity to review and comment on each project feature, provided opportunities to participate as a small business concern contractor, and given opportunities for employment or internships in emerging industry sectors.

(4) CONTRACTS TO BUSINESSES OWNED BY SOCIALLY AND ECONOMICALLY DISADVANTAGED INDIVIDUALS.—The Secretary shall establish a goal that not less than 10 percent of the amounts made available for construction of projects authorized pursuant to subsections (c), (d) and (e), shall be expended with small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals within the South Florida ecosystem.

(i) ASSURING PROJECT BENEFITS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The primary and overarching purpose of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan is to restore, preserve and protect the natural system within the South Florida ecosystem. The Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan shall be implemented to ensure the protection of water quality in, the reduction of the loss of fresh water from, and the improvement of the environment of the South Florida ecosystem, while providing for other water-related needs of the region, including water supply and flood protection. The Central and Southern Florida Project, as amended by the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan, shall be implemented in a manner that ensures that the benefits to the natural system and the human environment, including the proper quantity, quality, timing and distribution of water, are achieved and maintained for as long as the Central and Southern Florida Project remains authorized. When implemented fully, the approximately 68 features of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan will result in modifications to the existing Central and Southern Florida Project works that shall provide the water necessary to restore, preserve and protect the natural system while providing for other water related needs of the region. The Secretary shall ensure that both the natural system and the human environment receive the benefits intended when such modifications to the Central and Southern Florida project are made pursuant to the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan and previous Acts of Congress.

(2) DEDICATION AND MANAGEMENT OF WATER—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Consistent with subsection (i)(2)(B), the Secretary shall dedicate and manage the water made available from the Central and Southern Florida Project features authorized, constructed, and operated in accordance with previous Acts of Congress and this Act authorizing the implementation of features of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan, for the temporal and spatial needs of the natural system. The needs of the natural system and the human environment shall be defined in terms of quality, quantity, timing and distribution of water. In developing the regulations that provide for the dedication and management of water for the natural system in accordance with this subsection, the Secretary shall incorporate rainfall driven operational criteria and annual fluctuations in rainfall.

(B) PROGRAMMATIC REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall, after notice and opportunity for public comment and with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior, and in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency and the Governor of the State of Florida, issue programmatic regulations identifying the amount of water to be dedicated and managed for the natural system from the Central and Southern Florida Project features authorized, constructed, and operated in accordance with previous acts of Congress and this Act through the implementation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan features. Such regulations shall be completed within two years of the date of enactment of this Act. These regulations shall ensure that the natural system and the human environment receive the benefits intended, including benefits for the restoration, preservation, and protection of the natural system, as the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan is implemented and incorporated into the Central and Southern Florida Project for as long as the project remains authorized. Nothing in this Act shall prevent the State of Florida from reserving water for environmental uses under the 1972 Florida Water Resources Act to the extent consistent with this section.

(C) PROJECT SPECIFIC REGULATIONS.—The Secretary, after notice and opportunity for public comment, and in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, Secretary of Commerce, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, other Federal agencies, and the State of Florida shall develop project feature specific regulations to ensure that the benefits anticipated from each feature of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan are achieved and maintained as long as the project remains authorized. Each such regulation shall be consistent with the programmatic regulations issued pursuant to subsection (i)(2)(B), be based on the best available science, and ensure that the quantity, quality, timing, and distribution of water for the natural system and the human environment anticipated in the Comprehensive Plan for each project feature is achieved and maintained.

(3) EXISTING WATER USES.—The Secretary shall ensure that the implementation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan, including physical or operational modifications to the Central and Southern Florida Project, does not cause substantial adverse impacts on existing legal water uses, including annual water deliveries to Everglades National Park, water for the preservation of fish and wildlife in the natural system, and other legal uses as of the date of enactment of this Act. The Secretary shall not eliminate existing legal sources of water supply, including those for agricultural water supply, water for Everglades National Park and the preservation of fish and wildlife, until new sources of water supply of comparable quantity and quality are available to replace the water to be lost from existing sources. Existing authorized levels of flood protection will be maintained.

(j) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Beginning on October 1, 2005, and periodically thereafter until October 1, 2036, the Secretary and the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, in consultation with the Environmental Protection Agency, the Department of Commerce and the State of Florida, shall jointly submit to Congress a report on the implementation of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan. Such reports shall be completed no less than every five years. Such reports shall include a description of planning, design, and construction work completed, the amount of funds expended during the period covered by the report, and the work anticipated over the next five-year period. In addition, each report shall include the determination of each Secretary, and the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, concerning the benefits to the natural system and the human environment achieved as of the date of the report and whether the completed features of the Comprehensive Everglades Restoration Plan are being operated in a manner that is consistent with the programmatic regulations established under subsection (i)(2)(B).

SEC. 4. WATERSHED AND RIVER BASIN ASSESSMENTS.

Section 729 of Public Law 99–662 [100 stat. 4164] is amended by—

(a) striking ''STUDY OF WATER RESOURCES NEEDS OF RIVER BASINS AND REGIONS.'' and all that follows, and

(b) inserting in lieu thereof:

''WATERSHED AND RIVER BASIN ASSESSMENTS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to assess the water resources needs of river basins and watersheds of the United States. Such assessments shall be undertaken in cooperation and coordination with the Departments of the Interior, Agriculture and Commerce, the Environmental Protection Agency, and other appropriate agencies, and may include an evaluation of ecosystem protection and restoration, flood damage reduction, navigation and port needs, watersheds protection, water supply, and drought preparedness.

''(b) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary shall consult with Federal, Tribal, State, interstate, and local governmental entities in carrying out the assessments authorized by this section. In conducting such assessments, the Secretary may accept contributions of services, materials, supplies and cash from Federal, Tribal, State, interstate, and local governmental entities where the Secretary determines that such contributions will facilitate completion of the assessments.

''(c) COST SHARING REQUIREMENTS.—The non-Federal share of the cost of an assessment conducted under this section shall be 25 percent of the cost of such assessment. The non-Federal sponsor may provide the non-Federal cost-sharing requirement through the provision cash or services, materials, supplies, or other in-kind services. In no event shall such credit exceed the non-Federal required share of costs for the assessment.

''(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $15,000,000.''

SEC. 5. BROWNFIELDS REVITALIZATION PROGRAM

(a) GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, in consultation with the Environmental Protection Agency and other appropriate agencies, carry out a program to provide assistance to non-Federal interests in the remediation and restoration of abandoned or idled industrial and commercial sites where such assistance will improve the quality, conservation, and sustainable use of the Nation's streams, rivers, lakes, wetlands, and floodplains. Assistance may be in the form of site characterizations, planning, design, and construction projects. To the maximum extent practicable, projects implemented by the Secretary under this section will be done in cooperation and coordination with other Federal, Tribal, State, and local efforts to maximize resources available for the remediation, restoration, and redevelopment of brownfield sites.

(b) JUSTIFICATION FOR ASSISTANCE.—Notwithstanding any economic justification provision or requirement of section 209 of the Flood Control Act of 1970 [42 U.S.C. 1962–2] or economic justification provision of any other law, the Secretary may determine that the assistance projects authorized by subsection (a),

(1) is justified by the public health and safety, and environmental benefits; and

(2) shall not need further economic justification if the Secretary determines that the assistance is cost effective.

(c) COST SHARING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Prior to implementing any assistance project under this section, the Secretary shall enter into a binding agreement with the non-Federal interest, which shall require the non-Federal interest to: (a) pay 50 percent of the total costs of the assistance project; (b) acquire and place in public ownership for so long as is necessary to implement and complete the assistance project any lands, easements, rights-of-way, and relocations necessary for implementation and completion of the assistance project; (c) pay 100 percent of any operation, maintenance, repair, replacement, and rehabilitation costs associated with the assistance project; and (d) hold and save harmless the United States free from claims or damages due to implementation of the assistance project, except for the negligence of the Government or its contractors.

(2) CREDIT.—The non-Federal interest shall receive credit for the value of any lands, easements, rights-of-way, and relocations provided for implementation and completion of such assistance project. The Secretary also may afford credit to a non-Federal interest for services, studies, supplies, and other in-kind consideration where the Secretary determines that such services, studies, supplies, and other in-kind consideration will facilitate completion of the assistance project. In no event shall such credit exceed the 50 percent non-Federal cost-sharing requirement.

(d) APPLICABILITY OF OTHER FEDERAL AND STATE LAWS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as waiving, limiting, or otherwise affecting the applicability of any provision of Federal or State law.

(e) PROJECT COST LIMITATION.—Not more than $5,000,000 in Army Civil Works Appropriations funds may be allotted under this section at any single site.

(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriate to carry out this section $25,000,000 for each fiscal year from 2002 through 2005.

(g) PROGRAM EVALUATION.—Not later than December 31, 2005, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works of the Senate a report that discusses the program's performance objectives and evaluates is effectiveness in achieving them, along with any recommendations concerning continuation of the program.

SEC. 6. TRIBAL PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized, in cooperation with Federally recognized Indian tribes and other Federal agencies, to study and determine the feasibility of implementing water resources development projects that will substantially benefit Indian tribes, and are located primarily within Indian country, as defined in 18 U.S.C. 1151, or in proximity to Alaska native villages. Studies conducted under this authority may address, but are not limited to, projects for flood damage reduction, environmental restoration and protection, and preservation of cultural and natural resources.

(b) CONSULTATION AND COORDINATION.—the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of the Interior on studies conducted under this section in recognition of the unique role of the Secretary of the Interior regarding trust responsibilities with Indian tribes, and in recognition of mutual trust responsibilities. the Secretary shall integrate Army Civil Works activities with activities of the Department of the Interior to avoid conflicts, duplications of effort, or unanticipated adverse effects to Indian tribes, and shall consider existing authorities and programs of the Department of the Interior and other Federal agencies in any recommendations regarding implementation of project studied under this section.

(c) ABILITY TO PAY.—Any cost-sharing agreement for a study under this section shall be subject to the ability of a non-Federal interest to pay. The ability of any non-Federal interest to pay shall be determined by the Secretary in accordance with procedures established by the Secretary.

(d) CREDITS.—For such studies conducted under this section, the Secretary may afford credit to the tribe for services, studies, supplies, and other in-kind consideration where the Secretary determines that such services, studies, supplies, and other-in-kind consideration will facilitate completion of the project. In no event shall such credit exceed the tribe's required share of costs for the study.

(e) AUTHRORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out subsection (a) of this section $5,000,000 for each fiscal year, for fiscal years 2002 through 2006. Not more than $1,000,000 in Army Civil Works appropriations may be allotted under this section for any one tribe.

(f) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section the term ''Indian tribes'' means any tribe, band, nation, or other organized group of community of Indians, including any Alaska Native village (as defined in, or established pursuant to, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act [43 U.S.C.A. §1601 et seq.] which is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

SEC. 7. ABILITY TO PAY.

Section 103(m) of Public Law 99–662 (33 U.S.C. 2213(m), as amended) is amended by:

(1) Deleting subsection ''(1)'' in its entirety and inserting in lieu thereof the following language:

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Any cost-sharing agreement under this section for a feasibility study or for construction of an environmental protection and restoration or flood control project, or for construction of an agricultural water supply project, shall be subject to the ability of a non-Federal interest to pay.''

(2) Deleting subsection ''(2)'' in its entirety and inserting in lieu thereof the following language:

''(2) CRITERIA AND PROCEDURES.—the ability of a non-Federal interest to pay shall be determined by the Secretary in accordance with criteria and procedures in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of the Water Resources Development Act of 2000; except that such criteria and procedures shall be revised, and new criteria and procedures be developed, within 18 months after such date of enactment to reflect the requirements of paragraph (3) of section 202(b) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1996 [110 STAT. 3674].''

(3) adding the word ''and'' at the end of subsection (3)(A)(ii)

(4) Deleting subsection (3)(B) in its entirety.

(5) Deleting subsection (3)(C) in its entirety and inserting in lieu thereof the following language:

''(B) may consider additional criteria relating to the non-Federal interest's financial ability to carry out is cost-sharing responsibilities, or relating to additional assistance that may be available for other Federal or State sources.''

SEC. 8. PROPERTY PROTECTION PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to implement a program to reduce vandalism and destruction of property at water resources development projects under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army. In carrying out the program the Secretary may provide rewards to individuals who provide information or evidence leading to the arrest and prosecution of individuals causing damage to Federal property, including the payment of cash rewards.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated $500,000 annually to carry out this section.

SEC. 9. NATIONAL RECREATION RESERVATION SERVICE.

Notwithstanding Section 611 of the Omnibus Consolidated and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1999 (Pub. L. 105–277), the Secretary may participate in the National Recreation Reservation Service on an interagency basis and-fund the Department of the Army's share of those activities required for implementing, operating, and maintaining the Service.

SEC. 10. OPERATION AND MAINTENANCE OF HYDROELECTRIC FACILITIES.

Section 314 of Public Law 101–640 (33 U.S.C. 2321) is amended by inserting the following language immediately after the phrase ''commercial activities'': ''where such activities require specialized training related to hydroelectric power generation. These activities would be subject to the labor standards provisions in the Service Contract Act, 41. U.S.C. 351, and to the extent applicable, the Davis-Bacon Act, 40 U.S.C., Sections 276(a)–7.''

SEC. 11. INTERAGENCY AND INTERNATIONAL SUPPORT.

Section 234 of Public Law 104–303 (33 U.S.C. 2323a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (d) by deleting ''$1,000,000'' and inserting $2,000,000.

SEC. 12. REBURIAL AND TRANSFER AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) REBURIAL.—The Secretary is authorized, in consultation with the appropriate Indian tribes, to identify and set aside areas at civil works projects managed by the Secretary that may be used to reinter Native American remains that have been discovered on project lands, and which have been rightfully claimed by a lineal descendant or Indian tribe in accordance with applicable Federal law. The Secretary, in consultation and in consent with the lineal descendant or the respective Indian tribe, is authorized to recover and rebury the remains at such sites at full Federal expense.

(2) TRANSFER AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding any provision of law, the Secretary is authorized to transfer to the Indian tribe the land identified by the Secretary in subsection (1) for use as a cemetery. The Secretary shall retain any necessary rights-of-way, easements, or other property interests that the Secretary of the Army determines is necessary to carry out the authorized project purpose.

(b) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section the term ''Indian tribe'' means any tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians, including any Alaska Native village (as defined in, or established pursuant to, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act [43 U.S.C.A. §1601 et seq.] which is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

SEC. 13. AMENDMENT TO RIVERS AND HARBORS ACT.

33 U.S.C. 401 is amended by adding the following language at the end of the last sentence: ''The approval required by this section of the location and plans, or any modification of plans, for any dam or dike, applies only to any dam or dike that would completely span a waterway currently used to transport interstate or foreign commerce, in a manner that actual, existing interstate or foreign commerce could be adversely affected. Any other dam or dike proposed to be built in any other navigable water of the United States shall be regulated as a structure under 33 U.S.C. 403, and shall not require approval under this section.''

SEC. 14. STRUCTURAL FLOOD CONTROL COST-SHARING.

(a) Section 103(a) of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 [100 Stat. 4084–4085] is amended by—

(1) striking ''35'' whenever it appears in paragraph (2) and inserting ''50 in lieu thereof;

(2) deleting the word ''MINIMUM'' in paragraph (2);

(3) adding the following language to paragraph (2) immediately after the last sentence in that paragraph: The non-Federal share under paragraph (1) shall not exceed 50 percent of the cost of the project assigned to flood control. The preceding sentence does not modify the requirement of paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection.'', and

(4) deleting paragraph (3) and (4) in their entirety.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to any project or separable element thereof with respect to which the Secretary and the non-Federal interest have not entered into a project cooperation agreement on or before the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 15. CALFED BAY-DELTA PROGRAM ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to participate with the appropriate Federal and State agencies in the planning and management activities associated with the CALFED Bay Delta Program, and shall, to the maximum extent practicable and in accordance with all applicable laws, integrate the activities of the Army Corps of Engineers in the San Joaquin and Sacramento River basins with the long-term goals of the CALFED Bay Delta Program.

(b) COOPERATIVE ACTIVITIES.—In participating in the CALFED Bay Delta Program as provided for in subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary is authorized to accept and expend funds from other Federal agencies and from non-Federal public, private and non-profit entities to carry out ecosystem restoration projects and activities associated with the CALFED Bay Delta Program and may enter into contracts, cooperative research and development agreements, and cooperative agreements with Federal and non-Federal private, public, and non-profit entities in carrying out these projects and activities.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Army to carry out activities under this section $5,000,000 for fiscal years from 2002 through 2005.

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the area covered by the CALFED Bay Delta Program is defined as the San Francisco Bay, Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta Estuary and its watershed (Bay-Delta Estuary) as identified in the Framework Agreement Between the Governor's Water Policy Council of the State of California and the Federal Ecosystem Directorate (Club Fed).

SEC. 16. PROJECT DE-AUTHORIZATIONS.

Section 33 U.S.C. 579a is deleted in its entirety and the following language inserted in lieu thereof:

''PROJECT DE-AUTHORIZATIONS

''(a) PROJECTS NEVER UNDER CONSTRUCTION.—

''(1) The Secretary shall transmit annually to Congress a list of projects and separable elements of projects that have been authorized for construction, but for which no appropriations have been obligated for construction of the project or separable element during the four consecutive fiscal years preceding the transmittal of such list.

''(2) Any water resources project authorized for construction, and any separable element of such a project, shall be de-authorized after the last day of the 7-year period beginning on the date of the project or separable element's most recent authorization or reauthorization unless funds have been obligated for construction of the project or separable element.

''(b) PROJECTS WHERE CONSTRUCTION HAS BEEN SUSPENDED.—

''(1) The Secretary shall transmit annually to Congress a list of projects and separable elements of projects that have been authorized for construction, and for which funds have been obligated in the past for construction of the project or separable element, but for which no appropriations have been obligated for construction of the project or separable element during the two consecutive fiscal years preceding the transmittal of such list.

''(2) Any water resources project, and any separable element of such a project, for which funds have been obligated in the past for construction of the project or separable element, shall be de-authorized if appropriations specifically identified for construction of the project or separable element (either in Statute or in the accompanying legislative report language) have not been obligated for construction of the project or separable element during any five subsequent consecutive fiscal years.

''(c) CONGRESSIONAL NOTIFICATIONS.—Upon submission of the lists under subsections (a) and (b), the Secretary shall notify each Senator in whose State, and each Member of the House of Representatives in whose district, the affected project or separable element would be located.

''(d) FINAL DE-AUTHORIZATION LIST.—The Secretary shall publish annually in the Federal Register a list of all projects or separable elements de-authorized under subsections (a) and (b).

''(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, for non-structural flood control projects, the phrase 'construction of the project or separable element' means the acquisition of lands, easements and rights-of-way primarily to relocate structures, or the performance of physical work under a construction contract for other non-structural measures. For environmental protection and restoration projects, it means the acquisition of lands, easements and rights-of-way primarily to facilitate the restoration of wetlands or similar habitats, or the performance of physical work under a construction contract to modify existing project facilities or to construct new environmental protection and restoration measures. For all other water resources projects, it means the performance of physical work under a construction contract. In no case shall the term ''physical work under a construction contract'', as used in this subsection, include activities related to project planning, engineering and design, relocation, or the acquisition of lands, easements, and rights-of-way.

''(f) EFFECTIVE DATE OF PROVISIONS.—Subsections (a)(2) and (b)(2) shall become effective three years after the date of enactment of this Act.''

SEC. 17. FLOODPLAIN MANAGEMENT REQUIREMENTS.

(a) Section 402 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1986 [100 Stat. 4133] is amended by—

(1) in subsection (c)(1) by deleting ''Within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this subsection, the'' and inserting ''The'';

(2) by inserting ''that non-Federal interests shall adopt and enforce'' after the word ''policies'' in the second sentence in subsection (c)(1); and

(3) by inserting at the end of subsection (c)(1) ''Such guidelines shall also require non-Federal interests to take measures to preserve the level of flood protection provided by the project for which subsection (a) applies.''

(b) APPLICABILITY.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to any project or separable element thereof with respect to which the Secretary and the non-Federal interest have not entered into a project cooperation agreement on or before the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 18. STUDY OF TRANSFER OF PROJECT LANDS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—

''(1) STUDY OF TRANSFER.—The Secretary is authorized to conduct a feasibility study in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, the state of * * * and with the affected

Indian tribes, for the transfer to the Secretary of Interior the land described in subsection (b) to be held in trust for the benefit of the respective Indian tribes.

''(b) LANDS TO BE STUDIED.—The land authorized to be studied for transfer is land that—

(1) was acquired by the Secretary for the implementation of the Pick-Sloan Missouri River Basin program; and

(2) is located within the external boundaries of the reservations of the Three Affiliated Tribes of the Fort Berthold Reservation, N.D., the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe of North and South Dakota, the Crow Creek Sioux Tribe of the Crow Creek Reservation, SD, the Yankton Sioux Tribe of South Dakota, and the Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe of South Dakota.

''(c) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section the term ''Indian tribe'' means any tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians, including any Alaska Native village (as defined in, or established pursuant to, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act [43 U.S.C.A. §1601 et seq.] which is recognized as eligible for the special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

SEC. 19. PUGET SOUND AND ADJACENT WATERS RESTORATION.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to participate in Critical Restoration Projects in the area of the Puget Sound and its adjacent waters, including the watersheds that drain directly into Puget Sound, Admiralty Inlet, Hood Canal, Rosario Strait, and the eastern portion of the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

''(b) DEFINITION.—''Critical Restoration Projects'' are those projects that will produce, consistent with existing Federal programs, projects and activities, immediate and substantial restoration, preservation and ecosystem protection benefits.

''(c) PROJECT SELECTION.—The Secretary, with the concurrence of the Secretaries of the Interior and Commerce, and in consultation with other appropriate Federal, Tribal, State, and local agencies, may identify critical restoration projects and may implement those projects after entering into an agreement with an appropriate non-Federal interest in accordance with the requirements of section 221 of the Flood Control Act of 1970, as amended (42 U.S.C. 1962d–5b) and this section.

''(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Army to pay the Federal share of the cost of carrying out projects under this section $10,000,000.

''(e) PROJECT COST LIMITATION.—Not more than $2,500,000 in Army Civil Works appropriations Federal funds may be allocated to carrying out any one project under this section.

''(c) COST SHARING.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Prior to implementing any project under this section, the Secretary shall enter into a binding agreement with the non-Federal interest, which shall require the non-Federal interest to: (a) pay 35 percent of the total costs of the project; (b) acquire any lands, easements, rights-of-way, relocations, and dredged material disposal areas necessary for implementation of the project; (c) pay 100 percent of the operation, maintenance, repair, replacement, and rehabilitation costs associated with the project; and (d) hold and save harmless the United States free from claims or damages due to implementation of the assistance project, except for the negligence of the Government or its contractors.

(2) CREDIT.—The non-Federal interest shall receive credit for the value of any lands, easements, rights-of-way, relocations, and dredged material disposal areas provided for implementation and completion of such assistance project. The non-Federal interest may provide up to 50 percent of the non-Federal cost-sharing requirement through the provision of services, materials, supplies, or other in-kind services.●

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself, Mrs. MURRAY, and Mr. GORTON):

S. 2438. A bill to provide for enhanced safety, public awareness, and environmental protection in pipeline transportation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

THE KING AND TSIORVAS PIPELINE SAFETY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2000

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the King and Tsiorvas Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2000. This bill proposes to reauthorize the Pipeline Safety Act, which expires at the end of this fiscal year (FY), through fiscal year 2003. It is intended to strengthen and improve both federal and state pipeline safety efforts and heighten public awareness of pipeline safety. I am pleased to be joined in sponsoring this bill by Senator MURRAY and Senator GORTON.

Many of these issues came to the forefront as a result of a tragic accident that occurred in Bellingham, Washington, last June 10, 1999. An underground hazardous liquid pipeline ruptured and 277,000 gallons of gasoline leaked into a creek. Two 10-year-old boys, Wade King and Stephen Tsiorvas, had been playing by the creek into which the gasoline flowed. The gasoline was accidently ignited and a massive fire ensued. Both boys died as a result of their injuries. Another young man, Liam Wood, was fishing at the creek the same day. He was overcome by the gasoline fumes, slipped into unconsciousness, and subsequently drowned.

Mr. President, in addition to these needless deaths, the pipeline accident caused destructive fires and environmental damage for miles. Since the June accident, many concerned individuals have come forward and dedicated themselves to finding ways to improve and strengthen the Department of Transportation pipeline safety program. The Senators from Washington State have introduced one bill. Other pipeline safety measures have been introduced in the House. Yesterday, the Administration submitted its own pipeline safety reauthorization proposal. These bills contain many provisions I believe merit Congressional consideration and some of those provisions are included in the legislation I am introducing today.

It is my intention, as Chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, to chair a full Committee hearing on Pipeline Safety in the near future. I hope to report a reauthorization measure to the full Senate before the Memorial Day Recess. In that effort, I will be seeking input from public safety advocates, the National Transportation Safety Board, the DOT-Inspector General, the Department of Transportation, industry and others interested in promoting pipeline safety.

Mr. President, currently the Office of Pipeline Safety (OPS) within the Research and Special Programs Administration (RSPA) oversees the transportation of about 65 percent of the petroleum and most of the natural gas transported in the United States. OPS regulates the day-to-day safety of 2,000 gas pipeline operators with more than 1.9 million miles of pipeline, as well as more than 200 hazardous liquid operators and 165,000 miles of pipelines. Given the immense array of pipelines that traverse our nation, reauthorization of the pipeline safety program is, quite simply, critical to public safety.

The safety record of pipeline transportation is generally quite good. However, accidents do occur and when they occur, they can be devastating, as was the case last June.

Last month, the Senate Commerce Committee held a field hearing on this accident in Bellingham, Washington, and the Committee, as I mentioned, is committed to moving a reauthorization bill through the legislative process as soon as possible. We must act to help improve pipeline safety and prevent tragedies like that which occurred in Bellingham.

The bill I am introducing includes a number of provisions intended to strengthen and improve pipeline safety. It also is designed to increase State oversight authority and facilitate greater public information sharing at the local community level.

Two areas that warrant DOT's immediate attention, in my view, concern safety recommendations that have already been issued by the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) and the Inspector General (IG). The Department's responsiveness to NTSB pipeline safety recommendations for years has been poor at best. While current law requires the Secretary to respond to NTSB recommendations within 90 days from receipt, there are no similar requirements at RSPA. The problem is serious, Mr. President. I am aware of one case in particular where a NTSB recommendation sat at DOT's pipeline office for more than 900 days before even a letter so much as acknowledging receipt was sent. Such blatant disregard for the important work of the NTSB is intolerable. Therefore, this legislation statutorily requires RSPA and OPS to respond to each pipeline safety recommendation it receives from the NTSB and to provide a detailed report on what action it plans to initiate to adopt the recommendation.

In addition, the bill would require the Department to implement the recommendations made last month by the IG to further improve pipeline safety. The DOT IG found several glaring safety gaps at OPS and it is incumbent upon us all to do all we can to insure that the Department affirmatively acts on these critical problems.

The bill would also address the issue of training of pipeline operators. A number of safety interests, including the NTSB, have long emphasized the need to improve operator training. In recognition that a one-size-fits-all approach on this issue is not feasible due to the far different operating and maintenance requirements governing pipeline operations, this bill would require each operator to submit a training plan to the Secretary keyed to his or her particular operation. The Secretary would be expected to review the plans and work with operators to ensure a consistent safety level is maintained. The bill also directs the Secretary to issue regulations to ensure periodic inspections of pipelines and provides authority to the Secretary to shut down operations which are determined to pose an imminent hazard.

Another critical component of this reauthorization bill focuses on increased public education efforts, enhanced emergency response preparedness, and community right to know. It also includes provisions to increase state oversight of pipeline safety concerns. While some may prefer to reduce the federal role over pipeline safety and substantially increase the authority of State regulation, I believe such an approach would be short-sighted. While the concept of preemption by states may seem an attractive solution for some pipeline safety concerns, it is not the best approach. After all, pipelines play a vital role in both interstate and international commerce. A mishmash of state laws regarding the construction, maintenance, training, and operation of pipelines would certainly hamper commerce and would likely not improve safety. In fact, accident records show that more than 70 percent of pipeline transportation injuries and fatalities have occurred on intrastate lines, pipelines under the direct responsibility of the States.

Recently, the U.S. Courts have upheld the need for consistent standards in interstate and international commerce. However, in the Courts ruling, they did not restrict the right of the states to take action altogether. In fact, states already have considerable power to regulate pipelines and promote safety through the Federal/State Partnership program. Additionally, the states ability to promulgate laws regarding ''one call'' can do more to prevent accidents than any other action. States already play an important role and my bill would build on that role and permit the states to join the Secretary in efforts to oversee interstate pipeline transportation and promote emergency preparedness and accident prevention.

The bill also addresses the need to improve data collection and analysis. For more than 25 years, the NTSB has identified major deficiencies and recommended changes to RSPA's pipeline accident data collection process. This bill would ensure RSPA take the action necessary to address these identified problems and improve its data collection and use.

In addition, the bill calls attention to the critical role of innovative technology in promoting safety. Specifically, the bill directs the Secretary to focus the department's research and development programs to address technology that can detect pipe material defects and alternative pipeline inspection and monitory technologies that cannot accommodate current technologies. Finally, the bill would increase funding to carry out pipeline safety and state grant programs through fiscal year 2003.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues attention to this important safety issue and look forward to bringing a reauthorization bill to the full Senate for consideration in the near future.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 2439. A bill to authorize the appropriation of funds for the construction of the Southeastern Alaska Intertie system, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

SOUTHEASTERN ALASKA INTERTIE SYSTEM

• Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill with my colleague, Senator TED STEVENS, to provide a tremendously important authorization for an electrical intertie for an isolated region of my State of Alaska. As many of my colleagues know, Alaska has many unique problems. We are over twice the size of Texas, with fewer miles of paved roads than the District of Columbia. Most of our communities are unconnected. The results of this are stark for those in unconnected communities, and have significant impacts on their lives. Energy costs and reliance upon fossil fuels for power generation are just some of these impacts.

The vast majority of these towns and villages pay very high energy costs. In some instances, these costs exceed 38 cents per kilowatt hour. This makes the cost of living almost unbearable for many local residents. For example, the village of Kake, Alaska pays 38 cents per kilowatt hour and has 38 percent unemployment. Unlike in the rest of the country, when unemployment strikes a particular unconnected community in Alaska, the option to drive to employment in a neighboring community does not exist. One either stays in a devastated community or sells one's home in a market of sellers under duress. With electrical rates running three times and above those in most of the U.S., few will invest in these communities.

Mr. President, I refer Members to the latest study of economic situation in Southeast Alaska. The report deals with the economic impact of declining timber harvests in Southeast Alaska. This is not intended to restart the debate over that issue. That is for another forum. However, what the report vividly describes is the drastic decline in the economy of this region. In the last decade, known by most of the country as the greatest boom in the century, Southeast Alaska has lost 2900 jobs and over $100 million in payroll. Many of these communities have suffered losses in population. For example, the Wrangell/Petersburg area has suffered a 13 percent loss in wage and salary income; my hometown of Ketchikan suffered a similar 12 percent loss. Personal income is down from 5 to 11 percent in the region generally. The problem for Southeast Alaska is that it has no viable option for a replacement industry.

In other areas of the country, such as the Pacific Northwest, alternative employment such as high tech companies in Oregon and Washington have replaced honorable livelihoods in resource-based industries. There has been no comparable replacement industry for Southeast Alaska. There are a number of reasons, but the biggest reason is lack of affordable power for most communities.

Mr. President, in the Pacific Northwest, power costs are reasonable and the Bonneville Power Administration has an efficient and modern distribution system. In the lower 48 generally, every village and town is connected by power grid to the rest of the nation. That is not the case in Southeast Alaska. This lack of connection exacerbates the situation.

However, what can be done is to interconnect the region. By doing this, the existing and potential clean energy sources can be maximized and the power can be managed between communities and other users. Right now, one hydroelectric facility, Lake Tyee has tremendous excess capacity to bring clean and cheaper energy to many villages. This has been proven in a study conducted by the Southeast Conference. The Southeast Conference is the group of Mayors representing communities throughout Southeast Alaska. This study, entitled the Southeast Alaska Electrical Intertie System Plan, outlines the regional grid which this bill authorizes.

Mr. President, let me be clear, this is only an authorization. The bill provides no obligation to the Federal government to be involved in the construction of this intertie system whatsoever.

The bill also does not authorize nor does it contemplate that the federal government will exercise any ownership or management responsibility over this system. In fact, the Southeast communities which have asked me to introduce this bill seek to manage this project themselves.

It simply provides an authorization for the Congress to assist the communities in assemblying funding for the project. There is ample precedent for this. In fact, this very process was used successfully in Arizona and Utah with the Central Arizona and Central Utah projects. The era of the federal government constructing, owning and operating new power generation facilities has passed. However, the federal government can provide valuable assistance to a group of communities which seek to get their region back on the road to economic recovery. This is a good bill because it encourages local self reliance.

Mr. President, an intertie can do so much to assist this region. Right now, we have a series of isolated communities which cannot even work with each other on power issues. Each must provide its own generation and transmission facilities. And almost all of these facilities use diesel oil-fired generation because that is the only type of self-contained transmission facility which these communities can afford. Instead with an intertie, these generators can be put in mothballs and used only for isolated emergency backup. The intertie will provide reliable and clean sources of energy for all these communities.

I am informed by the communities that they intend to form a state chartered regional power authority to manage this Intertie. It will have no federal budgetary obligation. Additionally, the intertie will help the environment by shifting these small villages from their diesel generation and pointing them towards clean, renewable fuel sources. All of these facilities will be subject to all federal, state, and local laws including environmental laws. Just to make sure that this is clear, I have included a specific provision in the bill that reaffirms that this simple authorization will not affect, change, or alter any obligations under federal laws such as the National Environmental Policy Act (NEPA). All of the facilities will be subject to normal permitting.

There will undoubtedly be environmental studies required for the different components. For example, part of phase 1 of the Intertie includes the Swan Lake-Lake Tyee project which will connect my hometown of Ketchikan to its neighbors to the north, Wrangell and Petersburg. The permits for this project are already in place and were issued by the Forest Service as a result of a laborious 2 year NEPA study. The Forest Service issued a full Environmental Impact Statement which resulted in a favorable record of decision. No corners were cut and the project was approved by the Forest Service and permits issued. This bill will have no effect on that process. Any other phases will have to undergo close scrutiny, although I am convinced that connecting communities together using renewable hydropower will be much better environmentally than continued reliance on transporting, storing and burning high-priced diesel.

Mr. President, Alaska was not even a state when the major transmission systems were built in this country in the 1930's, 1940's and 1950's. Until World War II compelled the heroic construction of the Alcan Highway. Alaska was not even connected by road to the rest of the country. Alaska was never even considered as a candidate for the construction of a transmission system. Alaska's economic development is in its infancy even today. A project like the Southeast Regional Intertie is necessary to give that region of Alaska the opportunity to recover from the economic disaster outlined in the McDowell report. It is my intention to have this bill considered by my committee soon and I hope to report it favorably to the Senate floor in the near future.

By Mrs. HUTCHISON (for herself, Mr. McCAIN, Mr. GORTON, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, and Mr. BRYAN):

S. 2440. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, to improve airport security; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

AIRPORT SECURITY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2000

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Aviation Security Improvement Act of 2000. I would like to recognize the efforts of Commerce Committee Chairman McCAIN and Aviation Subcommittee Chairman GORTON who have agreed to cosponsor this legislation. I am also joined by Senators INOUYE, ROCKEFELLER, and BRYAN in this effort to improve the security of the flying public.

Approximately 500 million passengers will pass through U.S. airports this year. Protecting their safety in an incredible challenge to the men and women of the aviation industry. The Federal Government, through the Federal Aviation Administration and Industry together, must do everything within our power to protect the public from the menace of terrorism and other security threats.

In 1996, soon after the tragedy of TWA flight 800, I proposed new requirements to improve security at the nation's airports. Congress adopted these requirements as part of the Federal Aviation Reauthorization Act of 1996. This legislation tried to improve the hiring process and enhance the professionalism of airport security screeners. The act also directed the FAA to upgrade security technology with regard to baggage screening and explosive detection.

In my view, the FAA has been slow to implement these vital security improvements. The FAA does not plan to finalize the regulation to improve training requirements for screeners and certification for screening companies until May 2001. Five years is too long to wait. Technology upgrades have also been slow in coming, even though the upgraded technology is readily available. The traveling public should not have to wait yet another year before these improvements are implemented.

The FAA must modernize its procedure for background checks of prospective security-related employees. An FAA background check currently takes 90 days. That is too long. Under current procedures, the FAA is required to perform these checks only when an applicant has a gap in employment history of 12 months or longer, or if preliminary investigation reveals discrepancies in an applicant's resume. But 43% of violent felons serve an average of only seven months. This gap should be closed.

My legislation, the Airport Security Improvement Act, would direct FAA to require criminal background checks for all applicants for positions with security responsibilities, including security screeners. The bill will also require that these checks be performed expeditiously.

My legislation also directs FAA to improve training requirements for security screeners by September 30 of this year. FAA should require a minimum of 40 hours of classroom instruction and 40 hours of practical on-the-job training before an individual is deemed qualified to provide security screening services. This standard would be a substantial increase over the 8 hours of classroom training currently required for most screening positions in the U.S. The 40 hour requirement is the prevailing standard in most of the industrialized world.

Finally, my bill would require FAA to work with air carriers and airport operators to strengthen procedures to eliminate unauthorized access to aircraft. Employees who fail to follow access procedures should be suspended or terminated. I understand that FAA is currently working on improving access standards. I hope this bill will encourage them to do so in a timely fashion.

We are privileged to have with us today a distinguished panel of witnesses who are well-versed in the area of airport security. I want to welcome them to the hearing and I am looking forward to their testimony.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I am an original cosponsor of Senator HUTCHISON's bill to improve aviation security. Our colleague from Texas brings unique expertise to this issue as a former member of the National Transportation Safety Board. I want to thank her for her diligence in this area over the past several years as a member of the Commerce Committee Aviation Subcommittee.

Among other things, the Airport Security Improvement Act of 2000 would make pre-employment criminal background checks mandatory for all baggage screeners at airports, not just those who have significant gaps in their employment histories. It would require screeners to undergo extensive training requirements, since U.S. training standards fall far short of European standards. The legislation would also seek tighter enforcement against unauthorized access to airport secure areas.

I cannot overemphasize the importance of adequate training and competency checks for the folks who check airline baggage for weapons and bombs. The turnover rate among this workforce is as high as 400 percent at one of the busiest airports in the country! The work is hard, and the pay is low. Obviously, this legislation does not establish minimum pay for security screeners. By asking their employers to invest more substantially in training, however, we hope that they will also work to ensure a more stable and competent workforce.

Several aviation security experts appeared before the Aviation Subcommittee at a hearing last week. They raised additional areas of concern that I expect to address as this bill proceeds through the legislative process. For instance, government and industry officials alike agree that the list of ''disqualifying'' crimes that are uncovered in background checks needs to be expanded. Most of us find it surprising that an individual convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, burglary, larceny, or possession of drugs would not be disqualified from employment as an airport baggage screener.

Fortunately, this bill is not drafted in response to loss of life resulting from a terrorist incident. Even so, it is clear that even our most elementary security safeguards may be inadequate, as evidenced by the loaded gun that a passenger recently discovered in an airplane lavatory during flight.

I look forward to working with Senator HUTCHISON, as well as experts in both government and industry circles, to make sure that any legislative proposal targets resources in the most effective manner. By and large, security at U.S. airports is good, and airport and airline efforts clearly have a deterrent effect. What is also clear, however, is that we cannot relax our efforts as airline travel grows, and weapons technologies become more sophisticated.

By Mr. BOND (for himself and Mrs. LINCOLN):

S. 2441. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to establish a program for fisheries habitat protection, restoration, and enhancement, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

FISHABLE WATERS ACT

• Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Fishable Waters Act with my colleague from Arkansas, Senator LINCOLN. This is consensus legislation from a uniquely diverse spectrum of interests to establish a comprehensive, voluntary, incentive-based, locally-led program to improve and restore our fisheries.

Put simply, this legislation enables local stakeholders to get together to design water quality projects in their own areas that will be eligible for some $350 million federal assistance to implement for the benefit of our fisheries and water quality. It does not change any existing provisions, regulatory or otherwise, of the Clean Water Act.

The Fishable Waters Act compliments existing clean water programs that are designed to encourage, rather than coerce the participation of landowners. This legislation will work because it will empower people at the local level who have a stake in its success and who will have hands-on involvement in its implementation.

It is supported by members of the Fishable Waters Coalition which includes the American Sportfishing Association, Trout Unlimited, the Izaak Walton League of America, the National Corn Growers Association, the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, the Bass Anglers Sportsman Society, the American Fisheries Society, the International Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies, and the Pacific Rivers Council. These groups have labored quietly but with great determination for several years to produce this consensus proposal to build on the success of the Clean Water Act.

As my colleagues understand, it is at great peril that anyone in this town undertakes to address clean water-related issues but the need is too great and this approach too practical to not embrace it, introduce it, and work to achieve the wide-spread support it merits.

A companion bill is being introduced by Congressman JOHN TANNER in the House. That measure is being cosponsored by Representatives ROY BLUNT, JOHN DINGELL, NANCY JOHNSON, CHARLES STENHOLM, SHERWOOD BOEHLERT, WAYNE GILCHREST, PAT DANNER, PHIL ENGLISH, CHRISTOPHER JOHN and JIM SAXTON.

Joining us yesterday for the kickoff were representatives of the Fisable Waters Coalition and a special guest, a fishing enthusiast who some may know otherwise as a top-ranked U.S. golfer, David Duval. ''Why am I here? I like to fish. I've done it as long as I can remember,'' Duval said. ''I want my kids to be able to have healthy habitats for fish. I want my grandkids and my great-grandkids to be able to do what I enjoy so much, and I think this could make a big difference.''

This bipartisan and consensus legislation is intended to capture opportunities to build on the success of the Clean Water Act. It enables local stakeholders to get together with farmers who own 70 percent of our nation's land to design local water quality projects that will be eligible for some $350 million in federal assistance for the benefit of our fisheries and water quality.

Instead of Washington saying, ''you do this and you pay for it'' and instead of Washington saying, ''you do this but we'll help you pay for it'', this legislation lets local citizens design projects that can be eligible for federal assistance. For farmers, the idea of protecting land for future generations is not an abstract notion because the farmers in my State know that good stewardship is good for them and their families. Their challenge is that while they feed this nation and provide some $50 billion in exports, they do not have the ability to pass additional costs onto consumers like corporations do. For the 2 million people who farm to provide environmental benefits for themselves and the rest of the nation's 270 million people, they need partners because they cannot afford to do it by themselves. This legislation recognizes that reality.

While one can expect a great deal of controversy surrounding any comprehensive Clean Water effort, the consensus that has built around this approach is cause for great optimism that this legislation will be the vehicle to make significant additional progress in improving water quality.

I congratulate members of the Coalition for producing and supporting this consensus legislation and I look forward to working with Senator LINCOLN and my other Senate colleagues to move this legislation forward.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a one-page summary of the bill.

There being no objection, the material was ordered be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FISHABLE WATERS ACT BILL SUMMARY IN BRIEF

PURPOSE

This legislation begins with the premise that while great progress has been made in improving water quality under the Clean Water Act, more opportunities remain. The particular emphasis on this legislation is on opportunities to address fisheries habitat and water quality needs.

The findings include that it shall be the policy of the United States to protect, restore, and enhance fisheries habitat and related uses through voluntary watershed planning at the state and local level that leads to sound fisheries conservation on an overall watershed basis.

To carry out this objective, a new section is added to the Clean Water Act.

PROGRAM

The legislation authorizes the establishment of voluntary and local Watershed Councils to consider the best available science to plan and implement a program to protect and restore fisheries habitat with the consent of affected landowners.

Each comprehensive plan must consider the following elements: characterization of the watershed in terms of fisheries habitat; objectives both near- and long-term; ongoing factors affecting habitat and access; specific projects that need to be undertaken to improve fisheries habitat; and any necessary incentives, financial or otherwise, to facilitate implementation of best management practices to better deal with non-point source pollution including sediments impairing waterways.

Projects and measures that can be implemented or strengthened with the consent of affected landowners to improve fisheries habitat including stream side vegetation, instream modifications and structures, modifications to flood control measures and structures that would improve the connection of rivers to low-lying backwaters, oxbows, and tributary mouths.

With the consent of affected landowners, those projects, initiatives, and restoration measures identified in the approved plan become eligible for funding through a Fisheries Habitat Account.

Funds from the Fisheries Habitat Account may be used to provide up to 15 percent for the non-federal matching requirement under including the following conservation programs: The Wetlands Reserve Program; The Environmental Quality Incentives Program; The National Estuary Program; The Emergency Conservation Program; The Farmland Protection Program; The Conservation Reserve Program; The Wildlife Habitat Incentives Program; The North American Wetlands Conservation Program; The Federal Aid in Sportfish Restoration Program; The Flood Hazard Mitigation and Riverine Ecosystem Restoration Program; The Environmental Management Program; and The Missouri and Middle Mississippi Enhancement Project.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to develop an urban waters revitalization program ($25m/yr) to improve fisheries and related recreational activities in urban waters with priority given to funding projects located in and benefitting low-income or economically depressed areas.

$250 million is authorized annually through Agriculture for the planning and implementation of projects contained in approved plans.

States with approved programs may, if they choose, transfer up to 20 percent of the funds provided to each state through the Clean Water Act's $200 million Section 319 non-point source program to implement planned projects.

Up to $25 million is authorized annually through Interior for measures to restrict livestock assess to streams and provide alternative watering opportunities and $50 million is authorized annually to provide, with the cooperation of landowners, minimum instream flows and water quantities.●

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, I rise today to join my colleague from Missouri, KIT BOND, in introducing the Fishable Waters Act. This bill is aimed at restoring and maintaining clean water in our Nation's rivers, lakes, and streams. This bill will provide funding for programs with a proven track record of conserving land, cleaning up the environment, and promoting clean and fishable waters. This legislation takes the right approach to reducing non-point source pollution. It's voluntary. It's incentive-based. And if encourages public-private partnerships.

Our State Motto, ''The Natural State,'' reflects our dedication to preserving the unique natural landscape that is Arkansas. We have towering mountains, rolling foothills, an expansive Delta, countless pristine rivers and lakes, and a multitude of timber varieties across our state. From expansive evergreen forests in the South, to the nation's largest bottomland hardwood forest in the East, as well as one of this nation's largest remaining hardwood forests across the Northern one-half of the state, Arkansas has one of the most diverse ecosystems in the United States. Most streams and rivers in Arkansas originate or run through our timberlands and are sources for water supplies, prime recreation, and countless other uses. We also have numerous outdoor recreational opportunities and it is vital that we take steps to protect the environment.

This bill utilizes current programs within the U.S. Department of Agriculture that have a proven track record of reducing non-point sources of pollution and promoting clean and fishable water through voluntary conservation measures. Existing USDA programs like the Wetlands Reserve Program, the Environmental Quality Incentives Program, Conservation Reserve Program, and Wildlife Habitat Incentives Program, assist farmers in taking steps towards preserving a quality environment.

CRP and WRP are so popular with farmers, that they will likely reach their authorized enrollment cap by the end of 2001. Mr. President, farmers wouldn't flock to these programs unless there was an inherent desire to ensure that they conserved and preserved our Nation's water resources.

Arkansas ranks third in the number of enrolled acres in USDA's Wetlands Reserve Program because our farmers have recognized the vital role that wetlands play in preserving a sound ecology.

WRP is so popular in AR that we have over 200 currently pending applications that we cannot fill because of lack of funding. That's over 200 farmers that want to voluntarily conserve wetland areas around rivers, lakes, and streams. We need to fill that void in funding for these beneficial programs. This bill will help farmers in Arkansas and across the nation to voluntarily conserve sensitive land areas and provide buffer strips for runoff areas.

Farmers make their living from the soil and water. They have a vested interest in ensuring that these resources are protected. I don't believe that our nation's farmers have been given enough credit for their efforts to preserve a sound environment.

As many of you know, farming has a special place in my heart because I was raised in a seventh generation farm family. I know first hand that farmers want to protect the viability of their land so they can pass it on to the next generation. This bill is about more than agriculture though. It strikes the right balance between our agricultural industry and another pastime that I feel very strongly about, hunting and fishing.

Over the years many people have been surprised when they learn that I am an avid outdoorsman. I grew up in the South where hunting and fishing are not just hobbies, they're a way of life. My father never differentiated between taking his son or daughters hunting or fishing, it was just assumed that we would all take part. For this, I will be forever grateful because I truly enjoy the outdoors, and the time I spent hunting and fishing is a big part of who I am today.

We are blessed in Arkansas to have such bountiful outdoor opportunities. For these opportunities to continue to exist we must take steps to ensure that our nation's waters are protected. Trout in Arkansas' Little Red River and mallards in the riverbottoms of the Mississippi Delta both share a common need of clean water. And that is what we are ultimately striving for with this legislation: an effective, voluntary, incentive based plan to provide funding for programs that promote clean water.

Mr. President, I want to again stress the importance of voluntary programs.

We cannot expect to have success by using a heavy-handed approach to regulate our farmers, ranchers, and foresters into environmental compliance. Trying to force people into a permitting program to reduce the potential for non-profit runoff may actually discourage responsible environmental practices.

I agree with the EPA's objective of cleaning up our nation's impaired rivers, lakes, and streams, but firmly believe that a permitting program is not the best solution to the problem of maintaining clean water. Placing another unnecessary layer of regulation upon our nation's local foresters will only slow down the process of responsible farming and forestry and the implementation of voluntary Best Management Practices.

Mr. President, this legislation takes the right approach to clean and fishable waters. It's voluntary. It's incentive-based. And it encourages public-private partnerships to clean up our Nation's rivers, lakes, and streams.

I encourage my colleagues to join us in the fight for clean and fishable waters.

By Mrs. MURRAY:

S. 2442. A bill to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development

Act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to provide long-term, low-interest loans to apple growers; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

APPLE ORCHARD DIVERSIFICATION ACT

• Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Apple Orchard Diversification Act of 2000.

Mr. President, I am proud that Washington state produces more apples than any other state in the nation. The apple industry is an independent group. It has made Washington state and U.S. apples and apple products popular in many corners of the world. In the mid-1990s, growers were doing well, markets were opening and expanding, and the future looked bright.

But in 1998 and 1999, the bottom fell out from under them. Low prices and weather-related disasters devastated apple producers, and growers of hundreds of other commodities nationwide. In northeastern and mid-Atlantic states, fruit and vegetable growers were hit hard by freezing temperatures and drought. In the Pacific Northwest, some growers were hurt by bad weather.

But the biggest problem is low prices. These low prices are caused by the Asian financial crisis; by market access problems; by below-cost apple juice concentrate dumping by China; by record world-wide production and oversupply; and other factors.

The results are devastating, especially in my home state of Washington. Nationwide, the industry lost an estimated $300 million on the 1998 crop. In Okanogan County in Washington state, some organizations have estimated that 90 percent of apple growers will not recover their 1999 expenses. Okanogan County already experiences high unemployment. It cannot afford a long-term, depressed farm economy. The county declared an economic disaster and urged the state to do the same. Meanwhile, other counties, especially in north central Washington, are trying to respond to this disaster. Many growers will go out of business. Others will not be able to get commercial lending this year.

The Administration and members of this Congress are working to resolve some of the issues facing the industry and rural communities.

Last year, Congress passed a large disaster relief package for agriculture. I supported this package because it kept many producers above water for another year. However, like many of my colleagues, I was frustrated this package did not do more for specialty crop producers. Congress provided $1.2 billion in crop loss assistance. Specialty crop producers, including apple growers, were eligible to receive assistance to address weather-related disasters, and some growers did. But, in states like Washington, the aid package did too little.

Fortunately, action is occurring on the most important issue facing the apple industry. Earlier this month, the U.S. Department of Commerce levied anti-dumping duties of 51.74 percent on the majority of imports of below-cost apple juice concentrate from China. The Administration's preliminary anti-dumping duty ruling in November 1999 helped our producers by raising the price of both juice apples and concentrate. By May 22, the U.S. International Trade Commission will make its final injury ruling. If an injury determination is made, the Administration will implement anti-dumping duties at the levels prescribed by the Commerce Department.

Our second victory was to address pest control in abandoned orchards. During my trip to central Washington last August, I heard from community leaders that this was a real problem.

Low prices have caused many producers to abandon their orchards, and some of these orchards became infested. Infested orchards impact the operations of other producers and create potential trade problems. In response, counties tore out trees and sprayed orchards. But last year, funds in many counties were running low.

USDA holds defaulted loans on some of these abandoned orchards. Last year, I urged the agency to take responsibility for pest control on those properties. The Farm Service Agency in Washington state created a strategy for reimbursing counties for pest control In October 1999, I wrote to Secretary Glickman to urge him to approve FSA's reimbursement strategy. Shortly thereafter, USDA implemented this initiative so counties could continue to control pests.

The third victory for apple and specialty crop producers may come soon, when President Clinton signs risk management reform legislation into law. The bill passed by the Senate would make major changes to federal crop insurance policy to ensure that all producers, including specialty crop growers, will have access to more viable risk management products.

But more needs to be done. My highest priorities for agriculture remain investing in research, expanding trade, and providing a safety net when economic and natural disasters strike.

Last November, I introduced S. 1983, the Agricultural Market Access and Development Act. My bill would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to spend up to $200 million—but not less than the current $90 million—for the Market Access Program. And it would set a floor of $35 million for spending on the Foreign Market Development ''Cooperator'' Program. Senators CRAIG, BOXER, FEINSTEIN, GORDON SMITH, GORTON, WYDEN, CLELAND, and COVERDELL have all cosponsored this legislation, and I appreciate their support.

The USDA Foreign Agricultural Service has reported that in 1999 we experienced our first agricultural trade deficit with the European Union. We imported $7.7 billion of EU agricultural products and exported $6.8 billion. Our competitors have increased market promotion spending by 35 percent, or $1 billion, over the past three years. Our spending, however, has decreased one percent.

Agricultural exports are key to maintaining a reasonable trade balance. Other nations have invested in market development, and it's worked. We need to enhance our trade programs to give our producers a more level playing field and a fighting chance.

Besides expanding trade, we must strengthen the safety net for producers. We should not go back to our old Federal farm policies. Our program commodity growers do not want that, and our specialty crop producers do not want a new, permanent relationship with the federal government.

But I believe this farm crisis has taught us that we need flexible tools available for all producers when economic or natural disasters strike. For some commodities this may mean counter-cyclical payments. Or it may mean a variety of flexible loans that meet the needs of all producers or specific commodities. As we debate the next farm bill, we should give USDA flexibility, within fiscally-responsible guidelines, to respond to crises in agriculture.

Today, I am introducing legislation to create a one-time Apple Orchard Diversification Program. I have heard from growers that they could very much use a loan program to diversify their orchards into more commercially-viable varieties. Many of our producers invested heavily in Red and Golden Delicious apples, which are the varieties hardest hit by the economic crisis. We need a mechanism to allow these growers to diversify their orchards.

My bill would do just that. It would authorize USDA to provide up to $75 million in long-term, low-interest loans to apple producers. The loans could be used by producers to purchase trees for converting existing apply orchards into more profitable apple varieties.

My bill waives much of the regulatory process. USDA has been overwhelmed with managing disaster programs, and that has delayed relief. Instead, my bill bill requires USDA to conduct a stakeholder process, which would include three hearings around the country. The industry would help develop the program, and address issues such as income and acreage qualifications for growers who receive loans, and parameters on payments, acreage and varietal stock quality.

The concept of orchard diversification was born when Under Secretary

Gus Schumacher visited Quincy, Washington, in July 1999. The Under Secretary has spent a great deal of time in apply producing regions around the country. Mr. Schumacher has been criticized by some elected officials and individuals for holding the listening session in Washington state. But I appreciate, and I know many of our family farmers appreciate, his interest in these issues.

In conclusion, my grandfather moved to the Tri-Cities in the early 1990s to work for Welch's. As a young child, I remember many trips to central Washington at harvest time to visit my grandmother, who remained in the area after my grandfather's death. To this day, the smell of fresh picked peaches and apples remind me of my childhood. To my Dad, it meant much more; it meant how his family put food on the table and paid the mortgage. We grew up understanding how important family-run orchards were to our state's economy.

As I raised my own family, I always made sure we had a fruit tree in our yard. I wanted to remind myself of my years growing up and also to show my kids what a resource we have in our state. I could not imagine discussing Washington's economy without a box of apples being part of the picture. I want to make sure it stays that way for many generations to come.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor and help pass this important legislation.●

S. 2443. A bill to increase immunization funding and provide for immunization infrastructure and delivery activities; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself and Mr. REED):

S. 2444. A bill to amend title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, the Public Health Service Act, and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to require comprehensive health insurance coverage for childhood immunization; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

THE STATE IMMUNIZATION FUNDING AND INFRASTRUCTURE ACT OF 2000 AND COMPREHENSIVE INSURANCE COVERAGE OF CHILDHOOD IMMUNIZATION ACT OF 2000

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, as National Immunization Week approaches, I rise today to introduce legislation addressing childhood immunizations. National Immunization Week (April 17–21) recognizes one of the most powerful health care and public health achievements in this century. Remarkable advances in the science of vaccine development and widespread immunization efforts have led to a substantial reduction in the incidence of infectious disease. Today, vaccination coverage is at record high levels. Smallpox has been eradicated; polio has been eliminated from the Western Hemisphere; and measles and Hib invasive disease, the leading cause of childhood meningitis and postnatal retardation, have been reduced to record lows.

The two bills I introduce today build on these successes. One proposal, ''The State Immunization Funding and Infrastructure Act of 2000,'' ensures that state and local health departments are adequately funded to continue successful efforts to immunize children and improve their ability to reach pockets of underimmunized populations. The other, ''The Comprehensive Insurance Coverage of Childhood Immunization Act of 2000,'' requires all health plans to cover recommended childhood and adolescent immunizations.

In spite of our successes, we must remain vigilant. Every day, nearly 11,000 infants are born and each baby will need up to 19 doses of vaccine by age two. New vaccines continue to enter the market. Although a significant proportion of the general population may be fully immunized at a given time, coverage rates in the United States are uneven and life-threatening disease outbreaks do occur. In fact, in many of the Nation's urban and rural areas, rates are unacceptably low and are actually declining.

Unfortunately, one of the areas most in need of attention is in my own home State of Illinois. Childhood immunization coverage rates in Chicago have dropped each year since 1996 when they peaked at 76 percent. The most recent National Immunization Survey indicates that Chicago's coverage rate is now 66.7 percent—one of the lowest rates in the United States. Coverage rates for African American children in Chicago are the worst in the Nation.

It is notable, however, that during this same period when Chicago has struggled to improve vaccination rates, Federal financial assistance to state and local health departments for immunization outreach activities has been significantly reduced. In 1999, Chicago received a 38 percent reduction in Federal funds for the operation of their immunization program. In 2000, Chicago suffered another 37.5 percent reduction. The State of Illinois suffered a 58 percent reduction in 1999 and a further 16 percent reduction in the year 2000. And the story in my State is not that different from other areas of the country. Federal support for vaccine delivery activities has declined by more than 30 percent since 1995.

Purchasing vaccines is not enough. The Section 317 immunization program administered by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention provides grants to state and local public health departments for ''operations and infrastructure'' activities. These grants are a critical source of support, indeed the sole source of Federal support, for essential efforts to get children immunized. They fund immunization registries, provider education programs, outreach initiatives to parents, outbreak control, and linkages with other public health and welfare services. These grants get the vaccine from the warehouse to our children.

The State Immunization Funding And Infrastructure Act of 2000 authorizes an increase in Federal support for Section 317 grants to states by $75 million for a total of $214 in FY2001. This restores funding to the levels States and localities received in the mid-1990's and will help to stabilize many of the key functions that have been cut back in the face of steep funding reductions. In the past few years, many states have already had to reduce clinic hours, cancel contracts with providers, suspend registry development and implementation, limit outreach efforts and discontinue performance monitoring. The bill also provides a $20 million increase over last year's funding level ($10 million over the President's budget) for vaccine purchase. This will ensure that States are able to purchase adequate amounts of all currently licensed and recommended vaccines.

The other proposal I am introducing today, The Comprehensive Insurance Coverage of Childhood Immunization Act of 2000, will require that all health plans cover all immunizations in accordance with the most recent version of the Recommended Childhood Immunization Schedule issued by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. These vaccinations must be provided without deductibles, coinsurance or other cost-sharing for all children and adolescents under the age of 19.

I was shocked to learn that, according to a recent survey of employer-sponsored health plans conducted by William M. Mercer, Inc. and Partnership for Prevention, one out of five employer-sponsored plans do not cover childhood immunizations and one out of four fail to cover adolescent immunizations. Not only is this a significant gap in our health system, but it is simply financially illogical. Childhood and adolescent immunizations have been proven to save money. They decrease the direct medical costs due to vaccine-preventable illnesses and reduce the time parents spend off the job, tending sick children.

I invite my colleagues to join me in these efforts to maintain and improve our nation's national immunization record and to ensure that all areas of the country and all populations benefit from the advances we have made over the last century. Despite remarkable progress, many challenges still face the U.S. vaccine delivery system. Approximately one million children are still not adequately immunized. Our infrastructure must be capable of successfully implementing an increasingly complex vaccination schedule. Pockets of underserved children still leave us vulnerable to deadly disease outbreaks.

By Mr. ROBB (for himself, Mr. EDWARDS, and Ms. LANDRIEU):

S. 2445. A bill to provide community-based economic development assistance for trade-affected communities; to the Committee on Finance.

ASSISTANCE DEVELOPMENT FOR COMMUNITIES ACT

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I'm pleased to introduce the Assistance in Development to Communities Act. This bill addressed the importance—and need—for community-based, economic development to assist areas in trade-related, economic transitions.

Despite the increased globalization of our economy, many communities nationwide are still one-company or one-industry towns. If that company or industry is adversely affected by trade, the entire community faces economic strain. When these communities lose a major employer or industry, they sadly also lose something far more valuable—they lose their way of life, and too often their strong sense of community.

Currently, when an individual loses a job because of the effects of trade, the federal government provides Trade Adjustment Assistance or NAFTA-Trade Adjustment Assistance to help with income support and worker retraining. But what good is that training without jobs?

While we continue to open new avenues of free trade, the federal government has an obligation to help trade affected communities attract good jobs. Unfortunately, prospective employers don't automatically appear on the community's doorstep. Workers have mortgages, car payments, health concerns, family obligations and ties to the community, so relocation isn't always feasible. Local officials must find a way to lure industries to the area. Yet, they are caught in vicious cycle—employers are reluctant to move to economically depressed areas, but without jobs, communities will never recover.

This is an on-going reality in the Martinsville/Henry County region of Virginia. In January, I spoke with local officials about the steady stream of job losses they've endured, including the loss of the number two employer in Martinsville. They've faced double-digit unemployment—something that's virtually unheard of in this strong economy. They told me they need help.

This legislation is borne from their ideas. The AID to Communities bill give local communities the resources they need to implement their own ideas for attracting new employers—quickly and easily. It does this by providing an automatic, one-time grant to help affected communities formulate an economic development plan. This grant, up to $100,000, gives communities the resources they need to develop a long-term plan to readjust their economic base. Once that plan has been developed, the AID to Communities bill establishes a second, competitive grant program to help affected areas implement their plans. These grants can be used in a variety of ways, from expanding commercial infrastructure to establishing small business incubators.

My bill also offers two incentives to attract prospective employers. The first incentive would expand the Work Opportunity Tax Credit (WOTC) to provide employers with a tax credit if they hire someone who lives in an affected community and has lost a job due to trade. My bill would also make explicit that the New Markets Tax Credit, which provides incentives for private sector investment and capital access in certain areas, is available for trade-affected communities.

Finally, the bill makes the federal government a better partner be creating a one-stop, easily accessible clearinghouse of economic development information. This clearinghouse would provide access to cross-agency economic development tools, such as grants or low-interest loans, for affected communities so local officials don't have to hunt through each federal agency for the information they need.

Our neighbors in places like Martinsville/Henry County, Virginia are eager to enjoy the economic prosperity that the rest of the country enjoys, yet has so far eluded them. The AID to Communities bill is one way to help. I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure that this bill becomes law and that the people of Martinsville/Henry County, and in so many other small towns across America, get the help we owe them.

By Ms. LANDRIEU:

S. 2446. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide assistance to homeowners and small businesses to repair Formosan termite damage; to the Committee on Finance.

FORMOSAN TERMITE TAX CREDIT

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I rise today to bring to the attention of the Senate a plague that has been afflicted upon our country—formosan termites. Clearly, any termite is bad news for home and building owners, but the formosan termite is especially a problem. This aggressive termite species is becoming even more prevalent than native termite species in some areas. While native species generally feed on dead trees and processed wood, formosan termites have an unbelievably horrific appetite with a diet that consists of anything that contains wood fiber including homes, buildings and live trees as well as crops and plants. Believe it or not, formosan termites can even penetrate plaster, plastic and asphalt to get to a new food source.

Coptotermes formosanus (otherwise known as the formosan termite), have invaded port cities in the United States and are spreading rapidly across the rest of the country. Right now this exotic species is wrecking their special brand of havoc in 14 states including California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, South Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia, and Hawaii with their map of destruction growing wider daily. Experts have estimated that it costs Americans an astonishing $1 billion each year to repair the harm, with each new case costing homeowners an average of $20,000.

Since the formosan termites was first brought to the United States it has spread like a plague through the Southeast. The infestation is most severe in New Orleans, where these pests have caused more damage than, ''tornadoes, hurricanes, and floods combined'' and the total annual cost of termite damage and treatment is estimated at $217,000,000. In areas like the famed historic French Quarter, where close-packed houses share common walls, entire city blocks must be treated—a procedure that is costly and complicated. Outside the Quarter, officials fear that infestation may have hit as many as one-third of the beloved live oaks that shade historic thoroughfares such as St. Charles Avenue. A voracious blind creature that eats history—it sounds like something from a science-fiction nightmare, but it's real.

Unfortunately, the only explanation for how this pest came to exist in the United States is that it was introduced from east Asia in the 1940s through the mishandling of U.S. military cargo and troops returning home from World War II—I believe that since the government caused the damage, the government should do something to relieve the burden.

The bill I am introducing today seeks to provide the victims of Formosan Termites with some much needed relief. Under current law, small business owners are allowed to deduct the cost to repair Formosan Termite damage as a capital loss under IRS code Section 165. For some reason, individual homeowners have been denied this same right, although they can deduct the cost to repair damages caused by disasters which are defined as casualty losses, such as flood and fire. My bill simply changes the definition of casualty loss to include Formosan Termites so that homeowners are allowed the same deduction that business owners are already getting.

This measure also seeks to make low interest loans financed by the issuance of ''qualified'' private activity tax exempt bonds more accessible for homeowners and small businesses seeking to repair the expensive damage which was inflicted upon their homes by formosan termite damage. It does this by expanding current mortgage revenue bond provisions to permit homeowners to receive up to a $25,000 home improvement loan to repair this damage and also allows small businesses and landlords to use issue revenue bonds to finance loans for this same purpose. As an added incentive, as long as the proceeds are used to purchase tax exempt bonds to finance the repair of Formosan Termite damage, banks will be allowed to deduct the interest payments on these loans.

Obviously this legislation will not solve all of the problems formosan termites have caused. However, I do believe it is a good first step towards alleviating the burden these pests bring upon homeowners across the country. I urge everyone to join with me and give the victims of this plague a little relief. Thank you.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2446

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DEDUCTION FOR INDIVIDUALS FOR LOSSES CAUSED BY FORMOSAN TERMITE DAMAGE.

(a) INCLUSION OF FORMOSAN TERMITE DAMAGE AS CASUALTY LOSS.—Section 165(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to limitation of deduction of losses of individuals) is amended by inserting ''Formosan termite damage,'' after ''shipwreck,''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 165(h)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining personal casualty gain) is amended by inserting ''Formosan termite damage,'' after ''shipwreck,''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1999.

SEC. 2. PROCEEDS OF MORTGAGE REVENUE BONDS ALLOWED FOR LOANS TO HOMEOWNERS TO REPAIR FORMOSAN TERMITE DAMAGE.

(a) EXCEPTION FROM INCOME REQUIREMENTS.—Section 143(f) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to income requirements) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(7) EXCEPTION FOR QUALIFIED HOME IMPROVEMENT LOANS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to any qualified home improvement loan used for the repair of Formosan termite damage.''.

(b) AMOUNTS UP TO $10,000 USED FOR TERMITE REPAIR NOT INCLUDED IN CALCULATING LIMIT FOR HOME IMPROVEMENT LOAN.—Paragraph (4) of section 143(k) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining qualified home improvement loan) is amended by adding at the end the following flush sentence: ''In calculating the $15,000 amount, any amount up to $10,000 used for the repair of Formosan termite damage shall not be taken into account.''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to bonds issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. PROCEEDS OF SMALL ISSUE BONDS ALLOWED FOR LOANS TO LANDLORDS AND SMALL BUSINESSES TO REPAIR FORMOSAN TERMITE DAMAGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (B) of section 144(a)(12) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to bonds to finance manufacturing facilities and farm property) is amended by striking ''or'' at the end of clause (i), by striking the period and inserting '', or'' at the end of clause (ii), and by adding at the end the following new clause:

''(iii) any Formosan termite damage repair loan.''.

(b) DEFINITION OF FORMOSAN TERMITE DAMAGE REPAIR LOAN.—Section 144(a)(12) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

''(D) FORMOSAN TERMITE DAMAGE REPAIR LOAN.—For purposes of this paragraph—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The term 'Formosan termite damage repair loan' means the financing of repairs on or in connection with residential rental property or property used by a small business by the owner thereof, for damage caused by Formosan termites.

''(ii) SMALL BUSINESSES COVERED.—The term 'small business' means, for any taxable year, any corporation or partnership if the entity meets the $5,000,000 gross receipts test of section 448(c) for the prior taxable year.''.

(c) AMOUNTS USED IN FORMOSAN TERMITE REPAIR NOT INCLUDED IN CALCULATING LIMIT ON AMOUNT OF BOND.—Clause (i) of section 144(a)(4)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to certain capital expenditures not taken into account) is amended by inserting ''Formosan termite damage,'' after ''storm,''.

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The heading in section 144(a)(12)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by striking ''AND FARM PROPERTY'' and inserting ''FARM PROPERTY, AND FORMOSAN TERMITE REPAIR''.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to bonds issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. EXCEPTION FROM VOLUME CAP FOR PRIVATE ACTIVITY BONDS USED TO REPAIR FORMOSAN TERMITE DAMAGE.

(a) EXCEPTION FROM VOLUME CAP.—Section 146(g) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to exception for certain bonds) is amended by striking ''and'' at the end of paragraph (3), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting a comma, and by adding after paragraph (4) the following new paragraphs:

''(5) any qualified mortgage bond if 95 percent or more of the net proceeds of the bond are to be used to provide home improvement loans for the repair of Formosan termite damage, and

''(6) any qualified small issue bond if 95 percent or more of the net proceeds of the bond are to be used to provide Formosan termite damage repair loans (as defined in section 144(a)(12)(D)).''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to bonds issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 5. EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN BONDS USED TO REPAIR FORMOSAN TERMITE DAMAGE FROM RESTRICTIONS ON DEDUCTION BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS FOR INTEREST.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Clause (ii) of section 265(b)(3)(B) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining qualified tax-exempt obligations) is amended by striking ''or'' at the end of subclause (I), by redesignating subclause (II) as subclause (IV), and by inserting after subclause (I) the following new subclauses:

''(II) any qualified mortgage bond if 95 percent or more of the net proceeds of the bond are to be used to provide home improvement loans for the repair of Formosan termite damage,

''(III) any qualified small issue bond if 95 percent or more of the net proceeds of the bond are to be used to provide Formosan termite damage repair loans (as defined in section 144(a)(12)(D)), or''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to bonds issued after the date of the enactment of this Act.

By Mr. WELLSTONE (for himself, Mr. DASCHLE, and Mr. BAUCUS):

S. 2447. A bill to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make competitive grants to establish National Centers for Distance Working to provide assistance to individuals in rural communities to support the use of teleworking in information technology fields; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

TELEWORK ACT OF 2000

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I rise today on behalf of myself and Senators DASCHLE and BAUCUS to introduce the Rural Telework Act of 2000, a bill that is designed to make information technology (IT) industries a part of diverse, sustainable rural economies while helping IT employers find skilled workers. The goal of this bill is to link unemployed and underemployed individuals in rural areas and on Indian reservations with jobs in the IT industry through telework.

We are in the midst of an information revolution which has the potential to be every bit as significant to our society and economy as the industrial revolution two hundred years ago. But in recent months there has been much discussion of the ''digital divide,'' the idea that one America is not able to take advantage of the promise of new technologies to change the way we learn, live, and work while the other America speeds forward into the 21st Century. As advanced telecommunications and informaiton technology become the new engines of our economy, it is critical that all no communities are left behind.

Many rural communities and Indian reservations are already facing severe unemployment underemployment, and population loss due to a lack of economic opportunities. A study last year by the Center for Rural Affairs reports that widespread poverty exists in agriculturally based counties in a six-state region including Minnesota. Over one-third of households in farm counties have annual income less than $15,000 and, in every year from 1988 to 1997, earnings in farm counties significantly trailed other counties. Unemployment on many Indian reservations exceed 50% and remote locations make traditional industries uncertain agents for economic development.

There are troubles ahead for the new economy as well: the information technology industry reports that it faces a dramatic shortage of skilled workers. The Minnesota Department of Economic Security projects that over the next decade, almost 8,800 workers will be needed each year to fill position openings in specific IT occupations. Approximately 1,000 students graduate each year from IT-related post-secondary programs in Minnesota, not anywhere near enough to fill the demand, according to this same state agency. This shortage is reflected nation wide, with industry projecting shortfalls of several hundred of thousand IT workers per year in coming years.

Rural workers need jobs. High tech employers need workers. This legislation would create models of how to bring these communities together to find a common solution to these separate challenges.

The Rural Telework Act of 2000 would authorize the Department of Agriculture to make competitive grants to qualified organizations to implement five year projects to train, connect, and broker employment in the private sector, through telework, a population of rural workers in their community. A grant recipient would be designated as a National Center for Distance Working. The National Centers for Distance Working, located in rural areas, are intended to be locally developed and implemented national models of how telework relationships can meet the needs of rural communities for new economic opportunities and the need of IT intensive industries for new workers.

Mr. President, telework is a new term that may be unfamiliar to colleagues so I want to take a moment to explain what it is. According to the International Telework Association and Council (ITAC), telework is defined as using information and communications technologies to perform work away from the traditional work site typically used by the employer. For example, a person who works at home and transmits his or her work product back to the office via a modem is a teleworker, also known as a telecommuter; as is someone who works from a telework center, which is a place where many teleworkers work from—often for different companies.

The nature of IT jobs allow them to be performed away from a traditional work site. As long as workers have the required training, and a means of performing work activities over a distance—through the use of advanced telecommunications—there is no reason that skilled IT jobs cannot be filled from rural communities.

Because it essentially allows distance to be erased, telework is a promising tool for rural development and for making rural and reservation economies sustainable. Very soon, a firm located in another city, another state or even another country need not be viewed as a distant opportunity for rural residents, but as a potential employer only as far away as a home computer or telework center. Likewise, telework arrangements allow employers to draw from a national labor pool without the hassles and cost associated with relocation.

Many businesses and organizations are already using telework or telecommuting as a tool to reduce travel and commuting times and to accommodate the needs and schedules of employees. Many metropolitan communities with high concentrations of IT industries are already looking to telework as a means of addressing urban and suburban ills such as housing shortages, traffic congestion, and pollution.

However, the IT industry does not currently view rural America as a potential source of skilled employees. Nor do many rural communities know how to turn IT industries into a viable source of good jobs to revitalize local economies. Moreover, many rural community leaders fear that providing IT job skills to rural residents—when there are no opportunities for using those skills in the community—will lead to further population losses as retrained workers seek opportunities in metropolitan areas. At the same time, management of off-site employees requires new practices to be developed by employers and in some cases, dramatic paradigm shifts. Rural areas and Indian reservations are in danger of being left behind by a revolution which actually holds the most promise for those communities which are the most distant. IT employers risk missing a pool of potential employees with a strong work ethic.

Establishment of a National Center for Distance Working in a rural community or Indian reservation will give that community access to federal resources to implement a locally designed proposal to employ rural residents in IT jobs through telework relationships, linking prospective employers with rural residents. Successful National Centers for Distance Work would be locally developed and implemented national models for how telework can be used as a tool for rural development.

The Department of Agriculture's Rural Utility Service (RUS) would administer the program which would have a $11 million annual authorization level. At least $10 million of authorized funds would be used for the purpose of making competitive grants to establish National Centers for Distance Working.

Grant money made available under the program would be highly flexible, and would need to be leveraged with private, local and state resources. For example, they could be used to provide or enhance the quality of: IT skills training and education, technology and telecommunications, promotion of teleworking, brokering employment for rural IT workers, and other necessary elements to establish IT work opportunities in that rural community.

The funds are not intended to duplicate existing federal training and connectivity programs. Nor is it intended that Centers use these funds to supplant existing telecommunications providers who offer appropriate services to make telework a reality in rural communities. Rather, the federal investment is targeted to augment these existing sources of funding and allow rural communities to fill in the gaps in existing public and private resources and services. Prospective grant recipients would need to form partnerships with local, state, and private entities, including potential employers.

The grants made available under this program would not be sufficient to cover the full cost of training, connecting, and employing rural workers, but are intended to be ''seed money'' leveraged with dollars from other sources. Grant recipients would be required to match the funds provided under this program with funds from non-federal sources.

Finally, up to $1 million of the $11 million could be used by RUS to make grants for the purpose of promoting the development of teleworking in rural areas by making grants to entities to conduct research on economics, operational, social, and policy issues related to teleworking in rural areas, including the development of best practices for businesses that employ teleworkers.

The necessary vision of how to make telework a reality already exists in some employers and in some rural communities. In Sebeka, Minnesota—a town with a population of little more than 600 people—a small firm called Cross Consulting was founded. That company employs over 20 people through a contract with Northwest Airlines to provide do programming on Northwest's mainframe computers. These people are rural teleworkers. The new economy is not leaving Sebeka behind and we need to incubate that kind of innovation in rural areas and Indian reservations across the country.

Mr. President, for many jobs, in many industries, telework may be the future of work. It may also be the future of diverse, sustainable rural economies. This legislation offers an early opportunity to invest in local innovation to harness this potential.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2447

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Rural Telework Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) many rural communities and Indian reservations have not benefited from the historic economic expansion in recent years, and high levels of unemployment and underemployment persist in the rural communities and reservations;

(2) many economic opportunities, especially in information technology fields, are located away from many rural communities and reservations;

(3) the United States has a significant and growing need for skilled information technology workers;

(4) unemployed and underemployed rural employees represent a potential workforce to fill information technology jobs;

(5) teleworking allows rural employees to perform skill intensive information technology jobs from their communities for firms located outside rural communities; and

(6) employing a rural teleworkforce in information technology fields will require—

(A) employers that are willing to hire rural residents or contract for work to be performed in rural communities;

(B) recruitment and training of rural residents appropriate for work in information technology fields;

(C) means of connecting employers with employees through advanced telecommunications services; and

(D) innovative approaches and collaborative models to create rural technology business opportunities and facilitate the employment of rural individuals.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to make competitive grants to establish National Centers for Distance Working in rural areas to provide assistance to individuals in rural communities to support the use of teleworking in information technology fields;

(2) to promote teleworking arrangements, small electronic business development, and creation of information technology jobs in rural areas for the purpose of creating sustainable economic opportunities in rural communities;

(3) to promote the practice of teleworking to information technology jobs among rural, urban, and suburban residents, Indian tribes, job training and workforce development providers, educators, and employers;

(4) to meet the needs of information technology and other industries for skilled employees by accelerating the training and hiring of rural employees to fill existing and future jobs from rural communities and Indian reservations;

(5) to promote teleworking and small electronic business as sustainable income sources for rural communities and Indian tribes; and

(6) to study, collect information, and develop best practices for rural teleworking employment practices.

SEC. 3. NATIONAL CENTERS FOR DISTANCE WORKING PROGRAM.

Subtitle D of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1981 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 376. NATIONAL CENTERS FOR DISTANCE WORKING PROGRAM.

''(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

''(1) CENTER.—The term 'Center' means a National Center for Distance Working established under subsection (b) that receives a grant under this section.

''(2) ELIGIBLE ORGANIZATION.—The term 'eligible organization' means a nonprofit entity, an educational institution, a tribal government, or any other organization that meets the requirements of this section and such other requirements as are established by the Secretary.

''(3) INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY.—The term 'information technology' means any equipment, or interconnected system or subsystem of equipment, that is used in the automatic acquisition, storage, manipulation, management, movement, control, display, switching, interchange, transmission, or reception of data or information, including a computer, ancillary equipment, software, firmware and similar procedures, services (including support services), and related resources.

''(4) RURAL AREA.—The terms 'rural' and 'rural area' have the meaning given the terms in section 381A.

''(5) SECRETARY.—The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Rural Utility Service.

''(6) TELEWORKING.—The term 'teleworking' means the use of telecommunications to perform work functions over a distance and to reduce or eliminate the need to perform work at a traditional worksite.

''(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a National Centers for Distance Working Program under which the Secretary shall make competitive grants to eligible organizations to pay the Federal share of the cost of establishing National Centers for Distance Working in rural areas to conduct projects in accordance with subsection (c).

''(2) ELIGIBLE ORGANIZATION.—The Secretary shall establish criteria that an organization must meet to be eligible to receive a grant under this section.

''(c) PROJECTS.—A Center shall use a grant received under this section to conduct a 5-year project—

''(1) to provide training, referral, assessment, and employment-related services and assistance to individuals in rural communities and Indian tribes to support the use of teleworking in information technology fields, including services and assistance related to high technology training, telecommunications infrastructure, capital equipment, job placement services, and other means of promoting teleworking;

''(2) to identify skills that are needed by the business community and that will enable trainees to secure employment after the completion of training;

''(3) to recruit employers for rural individuals and residents of Indian reservations;

''(4) to provide for high-speed communications between the individuals in the targeted rural community or reservation and employers that carry out information technology work that is suitable for teleworking;

''(5) to provide for access to or ownership of the facilities, hardware, software, and other equipment necessary to perform information technology jobs; and

''(6) to perform such other functions as the Secretary considers appropriate.

''(d) ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA.—

''(1) APPLICATION AND PLAN.—As a condition of receiving a grant under this section for use with respect to a rural area, an organization shall submit to the Secretary, and obtain the approval of the Secretary of, an application and 5-year plan for the use of the grant to carry out a project described in subsection (c), including a description of—

''(A) the businesses and employers that will provide employment opportunities in the rural area;

''(B) fundraising strategies;

''(C) training and training delivery methods to be employed;

''(D) the rural community of individuals to be targeted to receive assistance;

''(E) any support from State and local governments and other non-Federal sources; and

''(F) outreach activities to be carried out to reach potential information technology employers.

''(2) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—As a condition of receiving a grant under this section, an organization shall agree to obtain, after the application of the organization has been approved and notice of award has been issued, contributions from non-Federal sources that are equal to—

''(i) during each of the first, second, and third years of a project, 1 non-Federal dollar for each 2 Federal dollars provided under the grant; and

''(ii) during each of the fourth and fifth years of the project, 1 non-Federal dollar for each Federal dollar provided under the grant.

''(B) INDIAN TRIBES.—Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), an Indian tribe may use Federal funds made available to the tribe for self-governance to pay the non-Federal contributions required under subparagraph (A).

''(C) FORM.—The non-Federal contributions required under subparagraph (A) may be in the form of in-kind contributions, including office equipment, office space, and services.

''(e) SELECTION CRITERIA.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall—

''(A) establish criteria for the selection of eligible organizations to receive grants under this section; and

''(B) evaluate, rank, and select eligible organizations on the basis of the selection criteria.

''(2) FACTORS.—The selection criteria established under paragraph (1) shall include—

''(A) the experience of the eligible organization in conducting programs or ongoing efforts designed to improve or upgrade the skills of rural employees or members of Indian tribes;

''(B) the ability of the eligible organization to initiate a project within a minimum period of time;

''(C) the ability and experience of the eligible organization in providing training to rural individuals who are economically disadvantaged or who face significant barriers to employment;

''(D) the ability and experience of the eligible organization in conducting information technology skill training;

''(E) the degree to which the eligible organization has entered into partnerships or contracts with local, tribal, and State governments, community-based organizations, and prospective employers to provide training, employment, and supportive services;

''(F) the ability and experience of the eligible organization in providing job placement for rural employees with employers that are suitable for teleworking;

''(G) the computer and telecommunications equipment that the eligible organization has or expects to possess or use under contract on initiation of the project; and

''(H) the means the applicant proposes, such as high-speed Internet access, to allow communication between rural employees and employers.

''(3) PUBLICATION.—The Secretary shall—

''(A) publish the selection criteria established under this subsection in the Federal Register; and

''(B) include a description of the selection criteria in any solicitation for applications for grants made by the Secretary.

''(f) STUDIES OF TELEWORKING.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—To promote the development of teleworking in rural areas, the Secretary may make grants to entities to conduct research on economic, operational, social, and policy issues relating to teleworking in rural areas, including the development of best practices for businesses that employ teleworkers.

''(2) LIMITATION.—The Secretary shall use not more than $1,000,000 of funds made available for a fiscal year under subsection (g) to carry out this subsection.

''(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $11,000,000 for each fiscal year.''.

By Mr. BROWNBACK:

S. 2449. A bill to combat trafficking of persons, especially into the sex trade, slavery, and slavery-like conditions, in the United States and countries around the world through prevention, prosecution, and enforcement against traffickers, and through protection and assistance to victims of trafficking; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE INTERNATIONAL ANTI-TRAFFICKING ACT OF 2000

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, today, I am introducing legislation entitled the International Anti-Trafficking Act of 2000 which combats the insidious practice of trafficking of persons worldwide.

As we begin the 21st Century, the degrading institution of slavery continues throughout the world. Sex trafficking is a modern day form of slavery, and it is the largest manifestation of slavery in the world today.

Every year, approximately 1 million women and children are forced into the sex trade against their will, internationally. They are usually transported across international borders so as to ''shake'' local authorities, leaving the victims defenseless in a foreign country, virtually held hostage in a strange land. It is estimated that at least 50,000 women and children are brought into the United States annually, for this purpose. The numbers are staggering, and growing rapidly. Some report that over 30 million women and children have been enslaved in this manner since the 1970's. I believe this is one of the most shocking and rampant human rights abuses worldwide.

One of two methods, fraud or force, is used to obtain victims. The most common method, ''fraud,'' is used with villagers in under-developed areas. Typically the ''buyer'' promises the parents that he is taking their young daughter to the city to become a nanny or domestic servant, giving the parents a few hundred dollars as a ''down payment'' for the future money she will earn for the family. Then the girl is transported across international borders, deposited in a brothel and forced into the trade, until she is no longer useful (becoming sick with AIDS). She is held against her will under the rationale that she must ''work off'' her debt which was paid to the parents, which typically takes several years. The second method used for obtaining victims is ''force'' which is used in the cities, where a girl is physically abducted, beaten, and held against her will, sometimes in chains. The routes are specific and definable, and include Burma to Thailand, Eastern Europe to the Middle East, and Nepal to India, among numerous other routes, through which victims of this practice are channeled.

Presently, no comprehensive legislation has been adopted, yet, which holistically challenges the practice of trafficking and assists the victims. I am introducing this legislation, the International Anti-Trafficking Act of 2000, today as a companion to the legislation introduced by Congressman CHRIS SMITH and Congressman SAM GEJDENSON, known as the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 (H.R. 3244). Senator WELLSTONE has also introduced legislation which closely mirrors the Smith-Gejdenson bill. Our primary difference is the methods for enforcement. Unless the President implements one of the broad waivers granted to him in this legislation, non-humanitarian, non-trade foreign assistance (listed under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961) to countries will be suspended if countries fail to meet the minimum standard to stop the flow of traffickers in their own countries. Please note that there is an extremely broad national interest waiver provision granted to the President which allows him to exempt any and all programs, as well as an additional waiver which allows the President to guard against any adverse effect on vulnerable victims of trafficking, including women and children.

This bill presents a comprehensive scheme to ''penalize the full range of offenses'' involved in elaborate trafficking networks. It also provides a doorway of freedom for those who are presently enslaved throughout the world and promotes their recovery in civil society. Some of the provisions include: establishment of an Interagency Task Force to Monitor and Combat Trafficking, enhanced reporting by the State Department on this practice, protection and assistance for victims of trafficking, changes in immigration status allowing victims to stay to testify in prosecutions, strengthens prosecution and punishment of traffickers, among other provisions.

In short, we believe it's time to challenge this evil slavery practice known as trafficking, and I believe this legislation is a first step to gaining freedom for those who are presently bound.

By Mr. COVERDELL:

S. 2452. A bill to reduce the reading deficit in the United States by applying the findings of scientific research in reading instruction to all students who are learning to read the English language and to amend the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to improve literacy through family literacy projects and to reauthorize the inexpensive book distribution program; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

READING DEFICIT ELIMINATION ACT OF 2000

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, America has a reading deficit! According to the National Adult Literacy Survey (NALS), 41 million adults are unable to perform even the simplest literacy tasks. The most recent National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP) conducted in 1998 continues to show that almost 70 percent of 4th grade students cannot read at a proficient level. Even worse, 40 percent of those 4th graders could not read at even a basic level for their grade.

In short, Mr. President, unless we treat this situation as the national emergency that it is—and soon—the next decade will see an astonishing 70 percent of our 4th grade students joining the ranks of those 41 million American adults who are unable to perform simple literacy tasks.

The ability to read the English language with fluency and comprehension is essential if individuals, old and young, are to reach their full potential in any field of endeavor. As the saying goes, ''reading is fundamental.''

And the statistics bear that out as well. Workers who lack a high school diploma earn a mean monthly income of $452, compared to $1,829 for those with a bachelor's degree. Forty three percent of people with the lowest literacy skills live in poverty, 17 percent receive food stamps, and 70 percent have no job or a part-time job.

And make no mistake that the nation itself and not just individuals will suffer. If our children are not taught to read, who will man our high tech defenses or fill the high tech jobs in America's future?

Compounding these astounding statistics, Mr. President, the 1998 NAEP also found that minority students on average continue to lag far behind in reading proficiency, even though many of them are in Title I programs of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act or participated in Head Start programs.

Clearly, throwing taxpayer money at the problem does not work. Our children's reading scores continue to decline or remain stagnant, even though Congress has spent more than $120 million over the past 30 years for academic enrichment programs under Title I and other federal efforts ostensibly with the primary purpose of improving reading skills among disadvantaged children.

It should also be pointed out that more than half of the students being placed in the special learning disabilities category of our Special Education programs are there in large part because they have not learned to read. The national cost of special education at the federal, state, and local levels now exceeds $60 billion each year. The National Institute for Child Health and Human Development says that 90–95 percent of these students could learn to read and be returned to their regular classrooms if they were given instruction using scientifically based reading principles. This would result in over $12 billion in savings nationwide every year by eliminating the need for special education for these children.

In response to these disturbing national statistics concerning the inability of so many children to read, I worked with Representative BILL GOODLING—Chairman of the Education Committee in the House of Representatives—to develop the Reading Deficit Elimination Act of 2000, which I am introducing today.

By providing funds for teacher training, textbook and curriculum purchases, student assessments, teacher bonuses, and tuition assistance grants to parents, this legislation offers the States a helping hand in teaching students nationwide to read. Unlike the unfunded mandates that have failed in the past, this legislation will give states and communities funds to institute reading instruction based on years of federally sponsored research, giving them the ability and the flexibility to help our children succeed.

The National Reading Panel—requested by Congress and created by the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development—released its report just this morning on scientifically-based reading instruction and research in a hearing of the Senate's Labor/HHS Appropriations Subcommittee chaired by Senator COCHRAN.

The report clearly articulates the most effective approaches to teaching children to read, the status of the research on reading, reading instruction practices that are ready to be used by teachers in classrooms around the country, and a plan to rapidly disseminate the findings to teachers and parents. The report also constitutes the most comprehensive review of existing reading research to be undertaken in American education history. Panel members identified more than 100,000 research studies completed since 1966, developed and submitted them to rigorous criteria for their review.

A major finding of the report was that systematic phonics instruction is one of the necessary components of a total reading program. Similarly, the NRP also found that the sequence of reading instruction that obtains maximum benefits for students should include instruction in phonemic awareness, systematic phonics, reading fluency, spelling, writing and reading comprehension strategies. We must use the knowledge of reading skills and the principles for teaching reading skills gained from these studies from the government and the private sector to reduce the number of individuals and students who cannot read.

The programs and provisions in the Reading Deficit Elimination Act of 2000 are based on these finding by the National Reading Panel.

Mr. President, Frederick Douglass, arguably the most influential African American of the nineteenth century said, ''Once you learn to read, you will be forever free.'' Douglass knew the importance of freedom, and he knew the importance of literacy. The ability to read the English language with fluency and comprehension is essential if individuals are to reach their full potential in any endeavor. Again, as the saying goes: ''Reading is fundamental.'' No one should be left behind because they can't read. We must not limit the success of the next generation by allowing them to continue down the path of illiteracy. We must teach them to read and give them this fundamental tool they need to succeed in life as well as in school.

S. 2454. A bill to amend the Communications Act of 1934 to authorize low-power television stations to provide digital data services to subscribers; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2454

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROVISION OF DIGITAL DATA SERVICES BY LOW-POWER TELEVISION STATIONS.

Section 336 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 336) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (h) as subsection (i); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (g) the following:

''(h) LPTV PROVISION OF DIGITAL DATA SERVICES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—A low-power television station may utilize its authorized spectrum to provide digital data services to the public by subscription.

''(2) NOTICE REQUIRED.—Before providing such services under paragraph (1), a low-power television station shall provide notice to the Commission in such form and at such time as the Commission may require.

''(3) PROTECTION FROM INTERFERENCE.—The Commission may not authorize any new service, television broadcast station, or modification of any existing authority that would result in the displacement of, or predicted interference with, a low-power television station providing such services.

''(4) PROTECTION OF TELEVISION SIGNALS.—The Commission shall prevent interference with television signal reception from low-power television stations providing such services.

''(5) DIGITAL DATA SERVICE DEFINED.—In this subsection, the term 'digital data service' includes—

''(A) digitally-based interactive broadcast service; and

''(B) wireless Internet access, without regard to whether such access is—

''(i) provided on a one-way or a two-way basis;

''(ii) portable or fixed; or

''(iii) connected to the Internet via a band allocated to Interactive Video and Data Service, and without regard to the technology employed in delivering such service, including the delivery of such service via multiple transmitters at multiple locations.''.

S. 2453. A bill to authorize the President to award a gold medal on behalf of Congress to Pope John Paul II in recognition of his outstanding and enduring contributions to humanity, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

CONGRESSIONAL GOLD MEDAL FOR POPE JOHN PAUL II

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation awarding the Congressional Gold Medal to Pope John Paul II.

Mr. President, Pope John Paul II is the most recognized person in the world, having personally visited tens of millions, in almost every continent and country. He has been one of the greatest pastoral leaders of this century, fearlessly guiding the Catholic Church into the new millennium. Due to his tremendous faith and leadership he was elected bishop at a very early age, and elected to the papacy on October 16, 1978, at the age of 58.

Though many people see the Pope as an important statesman, diplomat, and political figure, Pope John Paul II is much more than that. As spiritual leader to the world's 1 billion Catholics, the Pope has commenced a great dialog with modern culture, one that transcends the boundaries of political or economic ideology.

As have his predecessors of happy memory, he stands boldly as an ever vigilant sign of contradiction to a culture that is darkened by the clouds of death. In the face of this mounting storm, he has tirelessly proclaimed the need for a culture of life.

In what is now one of the Pope's most famous encyclicals, and the one which he regards to be the most significant of this pontificate, Evangelium Vitae (the Gospel of Life), he argues powerfully for an increased respect for all human life:

Thirty years later, taking up the words of the Council and with the same forcefulness I repeat that condemnation in the name of the whole Church, certain that I am interpreting the genuine sentiment of every upright conscience: "Whatever is opposed to life itself, such as any type of murder, genocide, abortion, euthanasia, or willful self-destruction, whatever violates the integrity of the human person, such as mutilation, torments inflicted on body or mind, attempts to coerce the will itself; whatever insults human dignity, such as subhuman living conditions, arbitrary imprisonment, deportation, slavery, prostitution, the selling of women and children; as well as disgraceful working conditions, where people are treated as mere instruments of gain rather than as free and responsible persons; all these things and others like them are infamies indeed. They poison human society, and they do more harm to those who practice them than to those who suffer from the injury. Moreover, they are a supreme dishonor to the Creator."

That is from the Pope's Evangelium.

Mr. President, the urgency of this message—the Pope's message—becomes more acute by the day; particularly at the beginning of the new millennium.

The Pope, having witnessed firsthand the brutal inhumanity of Nazi and Communist regimes, understands, in a way few of us can appreciate, the true dignity of each and every human being. He is a crusader against the offenses against human dignity that have transpired in the 20th century. More than any other single person this century, Pope John Paul II has worked to protect the rights of each individual.

As well, John Paul II has addressed almost every major question posed by the modern mind at the turn of the millennium.

As noted by the biographer of the Pope, George Weigel, the Pope has provided answers to the questions and desires facing today's world: The human yearning for the sacred, the meaning of freedom, the quest for a new world order, the nature of good and evil, the moral challenge of prosperity, and the imperative of human solidarity in the emerging global civilization. Through his teaching, the Pope has brought the timeless principles of truth contained in the gospel into active conversation with contemporary life and thought. The Pope has started a peaceful dialogue between ideas of the modern world and the age-old truths contained in the Gospel message.

One of the gospel messages emphasized by the Pope is the need for forgiveness and reconciliation with God, and with our sisters and brothers. A week before his historic personal pilgrimage to the Holy Land the Pope asked forgiveness from God on behalf of Christians who were inactive, or who were not active enough in opposing the forces of evil that have ravaged humanity during the past century.

This apology preceded his recent personal pilgrimage to the Holy Land; a pilgrimage in which the Pope opened up yet another dialog—this time with the people of the Middle East—a region ripped apart by centuries old conflict, bitterness, and war. Again, in the Holy Land, he empathized with those who suffered under the tyranny of the Nazi regime. The Pope highlighted during his trip, and he has on other occasions, his deep compassion for those who suffered under the brutality of Hitler's Germany and their genocidal war.

In the midst of the conflict in the Holy Land, the Pope again shone through as a beacon of light and peace as he proclaimed yet again to the people of the Middle East and the World, the universal calls to holiness.

As the New York Times so eloquently noted after the Pope's visit to Jerusalem's Yad Vashem:

John Paul has done more than any modern pope to end the estrangement between Catholics and Jews. He was the first pope to pray in a synagogue, the first to acknowledge the failure of individual Catholics to deter the Holocaust and the first to call anti-Semitism a sin "against God and man."

There is a valedictory quality to the Pope's actions and travels as the church approaches its third millennium. He seems determined to trace the birth of Christianity in this epochal year, to right the wrongs of the church and to bring a spirit of conciliation to the Middle East. Not long ago he went to Egypt and visited Mount Sinai, where Moses received God's law. This week he stood atop Mount Nebo in Jordan and looked across the Promised Land. He prayed in silence near the places where Jesus was born and baptized. Most people as infirm as John Paul would not dare make such strenuous trips. But he seems to be a man on a mission, and the world is better for it.

That was from the New York Times.

He is indeed a man on a mission. His message was peacefully conveyed in the Middle East to peoples with whom he has obvious deep religious differences. His serenity in the midst of such turmoil, as well as his obvious love for all people should be a model for us all as we encounter people in our daily life with whom we radically disagree, or with whom we have had a difficult relationship.

His epoch journey to the Holy Land will be remembered by history. And, I have no doubt that his presence there will leave a lasting impression, and I hope that it will work to bring about true peace as well.

His trip to the Middle East is just one particular example. The Pope's dialog with the modern era has taken him across the world, and has brought the Church into active conversation with people that many in the modern world have chosen to either forget or to ignore. It is a dialog that is ultimately a challenge to the people of the United States as well.

For example, his trip to Cuba initiated a dialog between politically opposed forces both here in America and in Cuba.

Also, Pope John Paul II's recent call to forgive the debt incurred by Third World countries during the past century, was and is, a challenge to the industrialized nations of the world to join hands in an effort to begin lifting the forgotten people of heavily indebted countries into the next millennium by providing some of the economic relief that they need. This is the challenge presented to those in industrialized countries, to remember and to help those who are less fortunate.

The legislation I just introduced has been cosponsored by 66 of my Senate colleagues, and I am hopeful that we can pass this legislation quickly in order to honor so great a man who has done such great things.

By Mr. ASHCROFT:

S.J. Res. 45. A joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to allow the States to limit the period of time United States Senators and Representatives may serve; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES TO ALLOW STATES TO LIMIT THE PERIOD OF TIME UNITED STATES SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES MAY SERVE

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a joint resolution proposing a constitutional amendment regarding Congressional term limits and the ability of States to set term limits for members of the United States Congress. Mr. President, I would like to summarize the history of this proposed constitutional amendment.

On November 29, 1994, the Clinton administration argued before the Supreme Court of the United States that States should not have the right to limit congressional terms. Thus, the executive branch has spoken against the right of the states and of the people to limit the number of terms individuals may serve in the U.S. Congress.

On May 23rd, 1995, in U.S. Term Limits v. Thorton (514 U.S. 779), the Supreme Court denied the people the right to limit congressional terms. Before the court ruling, 23 states, including my home state of Missouri, had some limit on the number of terms members of Congress could serve.

In a 5–4 decision, the Court invalidated measures which represented over five years of work and were supported by 25 million voters. These voters wanted nothing more than to rein in congressional power, restore competitive elections, and create a Congress that looked, and legislated, like America.

Both the executive branch, through the Clinton administration, and the judicial branch, have spoken against the right of States and of the people to limit the terms of individuals who represent them in Congress.

There has been limited debate on terms limits in this Congress. In 1995, the House of Representatives fell well short of the two-thirds majority required to forward to the people a constitutional amendment on term limits. Of the 290-vote margin required for a constitutional amendment, they mustered only 227 votes. What would normally be a significant majority vote in the House, was clearly not enough to ensure that States would have the opportunity to vote on a constitutional amendment permitting term limits.

One hope for the overwhelming number of people in this country who endorse term limits is for Congress to extend them the opportunity to amend the Constitution in a way that would allow individual States to limit the terms members of Congress may serve. More than 3 out of 4 people in the United States endorse the concept of term limits. They have watched individuals come to Washington and spend time here, captivated by the Beltway logic, the spending habits and the power that exists in this city. The people of America know that the talent pool in America is substantial and there are many who ought to have the opportunity to serve in Congress. Furthermore, they know that term limits would ensure that individuals who go to Washington return someday to live under the very laws that they enact.

In January of 1995, Senator THOMPSON and I introduced a constitutional amendment that would have limited members of Congress to three terms in the House and two terms in the Senate. As a result of its defeat and of the administration's refusal to recognize the will of the people, in May of 1995, I introduced S.J. Res. 36, a different kind of constitutional amendment. This amendment simply would give States the explicit right to limit congressional terms. It would not mandate that any State limit the nature or extent of the terms of the individuals who represent it in the Congress. Instead, it would give the States, if they chose to do so, the right to limit the members' terms who represent that State. I am reintroducing that amendment today.

In the Thornton case, Justice Thomas wrote, ''Where the Constitution is silent it raises no bar to action by the States or the people.'' I believe he is correct. This is the concept embodied in the often forgotten Tenth Amendment that would not cede all power to the federal government, only to have it doled back to us where the federal government thinks it appropriate. This proposed amendment is offered to rectify that situation.

The people of this Republic should have the opportunity to limit the terms of those who serve them in Congress. In light of the fact that the administration has argued against term limits, the executive branch is not going to support term limits, and because the judicial branch has ruled conclusively now that the States have no constitutional authority to act in this area, it is up to those of us in Congress to give the people the opportunity to be heard on this issue.

We must, at least, give them the opportunity to vote on that right by sending to them this joint resolution on the right of States and individuals to limit members' terms who serve the States and the districts of those States in the U.S. Congress.

It is a profoundly important expression of our confidence in the people of this country to extend to them the right to be involved in making this judgment. I submit this joint resolution today in the hopes that democracy will continue to flourish as people have greater opportunities to be involved.

Res. 247, a resolution commemorating and acknowledging the dedication and sacrifice made by the men and women who have lost their lives while serving as law enforcement officers.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 104—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING THE ONGOING PROSECUTION OF 13 MEMBERS OF IRAN'S JEWISH COMMUNITY

Mr. SCHUMER. (for himself, Mr. BROWNBACK, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. DODD, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. FEINGOLD) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 104

Whereas on the eve of the Jewish holiday of Passover in 1999, 13 Jews, including community and religious leaders in the cities of Shiraz and Isfahan, were arrested by the authorities of the Islamic Republic of Iran and accused of spying for the United States and Israel;

Whereas no evidence has been brought forth to substantiate these arrests, and no formal charges have been lodged after more than a year of consideration;

Whereas the Secretary of State has identified the case of the 13 Jews in Shiraz as "one of the barometers of U.S.-Iran relations";

Whereas countless nations have expressed their concern for these individuals and especially their human rights under the rule of law;

Whereas Iran must show signs of respecting human rights as a prerequisite for improving its relationship with the United States; and

Whereas President Khatami was elected on a platform of moderation and reform: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the Clinton Administration should—

(1) condemn, in the strongest possible terms, the arrest and continued prosecution of the 13 Iranian Jews;

(2) demand that these fabricated charges be dropped immediately and individuals released forthwith; and

(3) ensure that Iran's treatment of this case is a benchmark for determining the nature of current and future United States-Iran relations.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I rise on the eve of the trial of 13 Iranian Jews charged with spying on behalf of the United States and Israel to ask my colleagues to support a Concurrent Resolution urging President Clinton to do everything possible to ensure that the accused men receive a fair and open trial. As it stands right now, the Revolutionary Court judge has made a mockery of any pretense that the men will receive a fair hearing. Ten of the 13 have, for nearly a year, been denied their legal right to choose their own lawyers, and have only recently been appointed lawyers by the judge in the case—just days before the trial was set to begin. Furthermore, the trial is scheduled to be closed to any outside observers or media.

These facts do not bode well for the accused. However, I believe that strong pressure from the United States will help convince the Iranian government that should these men experience anything less than a fair outcome in this preposterous case, Teheran would face serious consequences.

The 13 Iranian Jews, mostly community and religious leaders in the cities of Shiraz and Isfahan, were arrested one year ago by the Iranian authorities and accused of spying. No evidence has been brought forth to substantiate the arrests. Indeed, how could it be? Jews in Iran are prohibited from holding any positions that would grant them access to state secrets.

What I find most troubling is that the United States recently presented Iran with goodwill overtures, such as lifting restrictions on many Iranian imports and easing travel restrictions between our two countries, but we receive no assurances that these gestures would be reciprocated in any way. In fact, Iran has continued to display nothing but hostility and contempt for the United States and everything for which we stand. At a minimum, Iran must show signs of respecting human rights as a prerequisite for our improving relations with them. In fact, Secretary of State Albright has identified the case of the 13 Jews in Iran as "one of the barometers of United States-Iran relations." I urge the President to make perfectly clear to Iran that the stakes in this trial are exceedingly high, and need to be taken very seriously.

Now, much has been made of President Mohammad Khatami's popular reform movement, and there is significant optimism that a kinder, gentler Iran is slowly emerging from the darkness of a 20-year hardline clerical dictatorship. Indeed, Khatami has received a huge mandate from the people of Iran over the past four years. However, Iran must fully understand that normalized relations with the United States is only a pipedream if persecution such as that enacted upon the 13 Jews accused of spying goes unchallenged. If it does not, then what kind of reform movement are we really witnessing?

Colleagues, I strongly urge you to join me in co-sponsoring this Resolution to send a message to the President that he must use all his resources to convince President Khatami that a farcical trial leading to a pre-ordained outcome would send US-Iran relations back to ground zero.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 105—DESIGNATING APRIL 13, 2000, AS A DAY OF REMEMBRANCE OF THE VICTIMS OF THE KATYN FOREST MASSACRE

Mr. ABRAHAM submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. CON. RES. 105

Whereas 60 years ago, the Katyn Forest crime was committed, resulting in the death of 21,000 Polish military officers of all armed services, and justice and administration personnel;

Whereas, on the occasion of 60th anniversary of the Katyn crime, the Lower Chamber of the Polish Parliament (Sejm) will pay homage to all those murdered—the "best sons of the nation", those who had not given in to Soviet ideology and physical pressure, and remained loyal to the Republic of Poland and the values they were taught to uphold;

Whereas Congress joins the Sejm in condemning all forms of genocide, murder, deportation, and violation of human rights;

Whereas Congress joins the Sejm in its appreciation to all scholars, researchers, and writers, especially those under Soviet domination, who had the courage to tell the truth about the Katyn crime;

Whereas Congress acknowledges with gratitude the Sejm's recognition of the pioneering work of Congress and the House of Representatives for the establishment in 1951 of a Select Committee to conduct an investigation of the Katyn crime;

Whereas Congress is pleased to join the Sejm in thanking those citizens of Russia who, guided by their sense of honor and dignity, contributed to the disclosure of the basic Katyn crime and the confirming, related documents; and

Whereas Congress continues to recognize the importance of remembering the victims of communism as when it passed H.R. 3000 in 1993 calling for a Victims of Communism Memorial, and commends the work of the Victims of Communism Memorial Foundation in working toward this objective: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress joins the Polish Sejm in designating April 13, 2000, as a day of remembrance to the victims of the Katyn Massacre that occurred 60 years ago and urges citizens of the United States to join their Polish counterparts in learning about and understanding what happened in the Katyn Forest.

• Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise to submit a concurrent resolution commemorating the sixtieth anniversary of the Katyn Forest massacre. For too long, Mr. President, too much of the world has been silent concerning this horrible crime against humanity, committed by the forces of communism. Through this resolution we may join with the Polish people in reminding the world of the horrors suffered by that nation's people at the hands of Soviet forces.

Now that the forces of Soviet communism have been defeated, Mr. President, it is too easy to forget those whose suffering has never been properly recognized. And few suffered as did the Poles. This proud nation, so often torn apart by opposing forces through the centuries, had once again achieved independence after World War I. The infamous Hitler/Stalin pact put an end to that independence, splitting the Polish nation in half, with each half being enslaved to a separate totalitarian dictatorship.

The horrors visited upon the Polish people by Hitler's Nazi regime are well known, they are rightly commemorated in monuments and declarations. But the victims of Soviet communism in Poland have not had their story told. For the sake of humanity and freedom around the globe, that story must be told. This resolution is a beginning to that process. It is a first step in telling the world the full, awful truth of what was done to real people in the name of an abstract, unreal vision of Soviet humanity.

Sixty years ago, 21,000 Polish military officers, justice and administration personnel were slaughtered in the Katyn Forest. Today the Lower House of the Polish Parliament, the Sejm, is paying homage to these murdered patriots. These ''best sons of the nation,'' as the Sejm calls them, those who refused to give in to Soviet ideology and physical intimidation, remained loyal to the Republic of Poland, and to the values of freedom, faith and nation, to which that Republic was dedicated. They paid for their patriotism with their lives.

For too long, Mr. President, the awful story of this massacre has been kept from the light of day. As we pay tribute to the patriots slain in the Katyn Forest, it is only right that we pay tribute to the brave citizens of the then-Soviet Union who risked their own lives and freedom in helping disclose the events we mark today. We also should be grateful to those who, after the fall of Soviet communism, have obeyed their own sense of honor in contributing to the confirmation and documentation of this crime.

Now the full story of the Katyn Forest can be told. It is my hope that this story will be told throughout the United States, Europe and the rest of the world as a reminder of the inhumanities perpetrated by those enthralled to the ideology of communism. By telling this story, we can help open the hearts and minds of people everywhere to the dangers of armed ideologies. The U.S. Congress itself has recognized the importance of remembering the victims of communism. That is why, in 1993, we passed a Resolution calling for a Victims of Communism Memorial and commending the work of the Victims of Communism Memorial Foundation for its work toward that objective.

Mr. President, it is my hope that this resolution can serve to bring us closer to our brethren in Poland and to people around the world who love freedom. The price paid by the Polish people for their liberty is one for which all of us owe them a great debt of gratitude and respect. The blood of martyrs was spilled in the Katyn Forest. Martyrs to freedom and humanity. We have a duty, in my view, to pay tribute to the sacrifice they made for us all.●

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 106—RECOGNIZING THE HERMANN MONUMENT AND HERMANN HEIGHTS PARK IN NEW ULM, MINNESOTA, AS A NATIONAL SYMBOL OF THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF AMERICANS OF GERMAN HERITAGE

Mr. GRAMS (for himself and Mr. WELLSTONE) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

S. CON. RES. 106

Whereas there are currently more than 57,900,000 individuals of German heritage residing in the United States, who comprise nearly 25 percent of the population of the United States and are therefore the largest ethnic group in the United States;

Whereas those of German heritage are not descendants of only 1 political entity, but of all German-speaking areas;

Whereas Americans of German heritage have made countless contributions to American culture, arts, and industry, the American military, and American government;

Whereas there is no nationally recognized tangible symbol dedicated to German Americans and their positive contributions to the United States;

Whereas the story of Hermann the Cheruscan parallels that of the American Founding Fathers, because he was a freedom fighter who united ancient German tribes in order to shed the yoke of Roman tyranny and preserve freedom for the territory of present-day Germany;

Whereas the Hermann Monument located in Hermann Heights Park in New Ulm, Minnesota, was dedicated in 1897 to honor the spirit of freedom and was later dedicated to all German immigrants who settled in New Ulm and elsewhere in the United States; and

Whereas the Hermann Monument has been recognized as a site of special historical significance by the United States Government, by inclusion on the National Register of Historic Places: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Hermann Monument and Hermann Heights Park in New Ulm, Minnesota, is recognized by Congress as a national symbol of the contributions of Americans of German heritage.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I come to the floor today to submit a concurrent resolution designating Hermann Monument and Hermann Heights Park in New Ulm, Minnesota, as national symbols of the contributions of Americans of German Heritage. I would like to thank Congressman DAVID MINGE and the other members of the Minnesota Congressional Delegation for introducing a similar resolution in the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, I'd be surprised if anyone in this chamber has heard of Hermann Monument, but I would like to take a few minutes to explain its significance to the City of New Ulm, the State of Minnesota, and Americans of German Heritage across the United States.

The Hermann Monument was erected in 1889 as a tribute to German immigrants to the United States. It honors Hermann the Cheruscan, who forged the creation of a united Germany by defeating three Roman Legions who had occupied the area now known as Germany. Hermann remains a symbol of German history, culture, dedication, and perseverance.

The Hermann Monument, made of copper sheeting riveted to a steel interior frame, was dedicated in New Ulm, Minnesota, on September 25, 1897. It stands 102 feet tall and is the second largest copper statue in the United States, behind only the Statue of Liberty. The Hermann monument remains the only memorial in the United States dedicated to German heritage and the contributions to American culture, arts, industry, and government.

I believe it's also important to note that there are now almost 58,000,000 individuals of German heritage living in the United States, comprising nearly 25 percent of our nation's population. That number makes German-Americans the largest ethnic group in the United States. In Minnesota, the number doubles to roughly 50 percent of Minnesotans being of German heritage.

Today, however, the Hermann Monument faces a serious threat from over 100 years of rain, wind, heat, humidity, hail and other challenges that have rendered the monument in need of restoration. Thankfully, the people of New Ulm have formed the Hermann Monument Renovation Project to raise the roughly $1.75 million needed to restore the monument and construct an Interpretive Center at its base.

Mr. President, the legislation Senator WELLSTONE and I are introducing provides no funding for the restoration of the Hermann Monument. In fact, the Resolution costs the Federal Government nothing. Instead, our Resolution simply recognizes the Hermann Monument as a national symbol of the contributions of German Americans and gives the restoration project a boost in the arm. Our Resolution is a way for every member of the Senate to recognize the contributions of German Americans across the country. It doesn't preclude another such designation in the United States nor does it designate the Hermann Monument as the only National symbol for German Americans.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will join me, Senator WELLSTONE, the Minnesota Congressional Delegation, the Society of German-American Studies, the Steuben Society of America, the City of New Ulm, and the people of Minnesota in supporting this Resolution recognizing the contributions of German Americans and the national significance of New Ulm's Hermann Monument.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 107—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS CONCERNING SUPPORT FOR THE SIXTH NONPROLIFERATION TREATY REVIEW CONFERENCE

Mr. AKAKA (for himself, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. KERRY, Mr. ROTH, and Mr. BINGAMAN) submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. CON. RES. 107

Whereas the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons (in this concurrent resolution referred to as the ''Treaty'') entered into force 30 years ago on March 5, 1970;

Whereas the original 43 signatories have increased to 187 parties;

Whereas in 1995 the signatories agreed to extend the Treaty indefinitely;

Whereas the Treaty institutionalizes the commitment of the nonnuclear weapons states not to acquire nuclear weapons;

Whereas the United States, the United Kingdom, France, the Russian Federation, and China have committed themselves to a reduction of nuclear weapons;

Whereas the testing of nuclear weapons in South Asia by two of the five countries in the world that have not adhered to the Treaty is cause for renewed attention to the dangers of nuclear proliferation; and

Whereas the Sixth Nonproliferation Treaty Review Conference will take place in New York from April 24 to May 19, 2000: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Congress—

(1) reaffirms its support for the objectives of the Treaty on the Nonproliferation of Nuclear Weapons and expresses support for taking all appropriate measures to strengthen the Treaty and attain its objectives;

(2) expresses support for strengthening the international inspection system operated by the International Atomic Energy Agency and for the new Additional Safeguards Protocol to the International Atomic Energy Agency Safeguards Agreement that the International Atomic Energy Agency is negotiating with each adhered to the Treaty; and

(3) calls on all parties participating in the Review Conference to make a good faith effort to ensure the success of the Conference.

• Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a Concurrent Resolution expressing the sense of the Congress concerning support for the Sixth Nonproliferation Treaty Review Conference.

The Sixth Nonproliferation Treaty Review Conference will begin on April 24th in New York City. For the first time since the member parties agreed five years ago to a permanent extension to this important arms control agreement, states will be meeting to discuss additional efforts to strengthen the treaty.

Thirty years ago, this treaty entered into force with 43 signatories. The number of parties to the agreement has increased to 187. Only four states—India, Pakistan, Israel, and Cuba—are not members.

At the time of the last review conference in 1995, members agreed to hold review meetings every five years to assess progress in implementing efforts to attain the treaty's objectives.

The resolution that I am introducing today, along with Senators BAUCUS, KERRY, ROTH and BINGAMAN, reaffirms Congressional support for the objectives of the Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) and calls on all parties participating in the review conference to make a good faith effort to ensure the conference's success. A similar resolution is being introduced in the House of Representatives.

Many states have called into question American commitment to the control of nuclear weapons because of the Senate vote last year on the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty and because of fears that the American development of a national missile and theater missile defense systems are efforts to negate the Anti Ballistic Missile Treaty (ABM).

I believe that Congressional support for the NPT and for other workable arms control agreements that achieve serious reductions in weapons of mass destruction is as strong as ever. The Congress will be looking very closely at this conference for reassurance that the other parties to the NPT, most especially the other nuclear weapons states such as China and Russia, share an equal commitment to attaining the objectives of the NPT.

There have been suggestions that states will attempt to disrupt the conference by walking out or by proposing resolutions critical of the United States and other states. Such efforts will damage the treaty and give satisfaction only to those countries, such as Iraq and Iran, who still appear to desire nuclear weapons.

Our resolution also expresses support for strengthening the international verification system operated by the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). When the NPT was negotiated in 1970, the IAEA safeguards system was designated as its global verification mechanism. IAEA inspectors review the nuclear programs of all non-nuclear weapon members and, while the five legally recognized nuclear weapons states—Britain, France, China, Russia, United States—are not obligated to permit inspections, in practice IAEA has some access to their facilities.

The Gulf War revealed inadequacies in the IAEA safeguard system. The discovery of Iraq's secret nuclear program demonstrated the need for additional IAEA powers of information collection and inspection. Efforts are now underway to develop a Strengthened Safeguards system of which a critical part will be a new inspection protocol providing IAEA inspectors additional authority to collect more information about a wider range of activities. This new information and access will be critical to detecting states, such as Iraq and Iran, who may try to develop secretly a nuclear weapon.

There is no greater threat to America's security than the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. The Nonproliferation Treaty and the role of the IAEA are essential parts of our efforts to prevent nuclear catastrophe. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this resolution and ensuring its speedy consideration.•

SENATE RESOLUTION 291—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING THE REPROGRAMMING OF FUNDS FOR THE DRUG ENFORCEMENT ADMINISTRATION FOR FISCAL YEAR 2000 IN ORDER TO ASSIST STATE AND LOCAL EFFORTS TO CLEAN UP METHAMPHETAMINE LABORATORIES

Mr. HUTCHINSON (for himself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. FRIST, and Mr. THOMPSON) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

S. RES. 291

Whereas the participation of the Drug Enforcement Administration in the seizures of methamphetamine laboratories has increased drastically since 1994;

Whereas in 1994, the Drug Enforcement Administration participated in the seizure of only 306 clandestine laboratories, 86 percent of which were methamphetamine laboratories;

Whereas in 1999, a total of 6,325 methamphetamine and amphetamine laboratories were seized in the United States, and the Drug Enforcement Administration participated in 1,948 of those seizures;

Whereas the Drug Enforcement Administration and State and local law enforcement agencies spend millions of dollars every year cleaning up the pollutants and toxins created and left behind by operators of clandestine methamphetamine and amphetamine laboratories;

Whereas methamphetamine manufacturing poses serious dangers to human life and the environment;

Whereas the chemicals and substances used in methamphetamine manufacturing are unstable, volatile, and highly combustible, and the smallest amounts of such chemicals, when mixed improperly, can cause explosions and fire;

Whereas most clandestine methamphetamine and amphetamine laboratories are situated in residences, motels, trailers, and vans, thereby increasing the danger posed by such explosions and fire;

Whereas for every pound of methamphetamine that is produced, more than five pounds of toxic waste is produced and left behind;

Whereas the Drug Enforcement Administration has been assisting State and local law enforcement agencies in cleaning up methamphetamine laboratory sites;

Whereas State and local agencies lack the financial ability, equipment, and training to cleanup these sites, and therefore rely predominately, if not entirely, on the Drug Enforcement Administration to clean up methamphetamine laboratories;

Whereas the funds appropriated to the Drug Enforcement Administration for fiscal year 2000 for the cleanup of State and local methamphetamine laboratories were exhausted in March 2000, though the number of methamphetamine laboratories has continued to increase dramatically;

Whereas the exhaustion of Drug Enforcement Administration funds to assist State and local methamphetamine laboratory cleanup efforts results in a great increase in the risk of harm to State and local law enforcement officers, the public, and the environment; and

Whereas it is imperative that sufficient funding be provided to the Drug Enforcement Administration for methamphetamine laboratory cleanup, and the Department of Justice has suggested that $10,000,000 be reprogrammed in its budget for this purpose: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available for the Department of Justice for fiscal year 2000, $10,000,000 should be reprogrammed for the Drug Enforcement Administration in order to permit the Drug Enforcement Administration to assist State and local efforts to clean up methamphetamine laboratories in fiscal year 2000.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise today with Senators GRASSLEY, HATCH, CRAIG, THOMAS, and FRIST to submit a resolution which states that it is the Sense of the Senate that $10 million should be immediately reprogrammed within the United States Department of Justice's (DOJ) budget to allow the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) to support the cleanup of State and local methamphetamine laboratories in Fiscal Year 2000. I do so with a sense of urgency as my home State of Arkansas has suffered a terrible and great increase in the production, distribution, and use of methamphetamine and is desperately in need of federal assistance to bear the financial burden inherent in the cleanup of methamphetamine laboratories.

In March, Governor Huckabee informed me that the DEA had exhausted all of the funding available to cleanup State and local methamphetamine labs and that the State of Arkansas was paying over $7,500 a day despite the much-appreciated efforts undertaken by ENSCO, an El Dorado, Arkansas company, to dispose of methamphetamine labs at no cost to the State. As the costs associated with the cleanup of a single lab range anywhere from $3,000 to $100,000 and average about $5,000 and, with over 200 labs seized to date, Arkansas will seize over 800 labs this year, it is imperative that funding be provided to the DEA so that it may continue to assist in State and local methamphetamine lab cleanups.

On March 28, 2000, Senators GRASSLEY, KYL, CRAIG, ASHCROFT, and I asked United States Attorney General Reno to identify $10 million in funding within the DOJ's budget which could be reprogrammed to provide the DEA with the monies necessary for it to administer the cleanup of labs seized by State and local law enforcement agencies. I was greatly encouraged and highly appreciative when she quickly responded by requesting that $10 million in Community Orientated Policing Service (COPS) recovery funds be reprogrammed. Despite an April 3, 2000, letter from Senators INHOFE, CRAIG, THOMAS, THOMPSON, FRIST, ASHCROFT, HATCH, ENZI, and I supporting this request, the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) has informed me that a determination has not been made. While I appreciate the fact that Director Lew and the OMB continue to look for this critical funding, I ask them to put aside politics and act quickly to meet this need.

This Resolution is intended to make it clear to this Administration that the United States Congress is serious about solving this problem. I implore the President to take a firm stand against methamphetamine and establish an effective policy to address this exponentially increasing problem. I am firmly convinced that we can solve this problem with Congressional support and Presidential leadership. Accordingly, I ask my colleagues to take the first step toward a solution by joining me in supporting this Resolution.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague Senator HUTCHINSON in sponsoring this resolution. We have been working closely together to find a solution to this growing problem. Unfortunately it seems the White House fails to grasp the urgency.

Mr. President, the DEA, who has for several years reimbursed state and local law enforcement agencies for the costs they have incurred in cleaning up drug laboratories, has run out of cleanup money. This has happened at a time when the number of these labs are growing rapidly, and springing up in towns and counties where there has never been a problem in the past. Iowa alone has a stack of over $83,000 in outstanding lab cleanup bills, and this amount continues to grow. Last year, Iowa received over $1.3 million in reimbursement, and at the current pace this total is expected to be higher this year.

Four weeks ago, Mr. President, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. KYL, and I wrote the appropriations committee to alert them to this problem. Our offices were aware of this impending problem, and wanted to insure that no one was taken by surprise so there could be a quick resolution. Two weeks ago, we were joined by Mr. CRAIG and Mr. ASHCROFT in a letter to the Attorney General, encouraging her to work with the Appropriators in reprogramming funds to cover this shortfall.

I am pleased to say that within days we had been informed that a reprogramming request had been sent to the White House Budget Office for their approval. The request would allow for the use of returned COPS funds—money that was not going to be spent otherwise—to be used to clean up these environmental hazzards. I want to emphasize that this source was identified by the Justice Department, not by Congress. And I want to applaud their swift action to solve the problem, and not play politics.

But then, OMB happened. It did nothing. The problem mounts, and OMB sits. That is why Senator HUTCHINSON and I are offering this Sense of the Senate. We hope to encourage timely action—not more sitting on bureaucratic thumbs. I urge my colleagues to join us.

SENATE RESOLUTION 292—RECOGNIZING THE 20TH CENTURY AS THE "CENTURY OF WOMEN IN THE UNITED STATES"

Mr. CLELAND (for himself, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BOND, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. BRYAN, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. KERRY, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mrs. MURRAY, Mrs. LINCOLN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. ROBB, Mr. COCHRAN, and Mr. DURBIN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 292

Whereas women made unparalleled strides during the 20th century in education, professions, legal rights, politics, military service, religion, sports, and self-reliance;

Whereas at the dawn of the 20th century, most women in the United States were denied the right to vote;

Whereas the Women's Suffrage movement, the largest grassroots political movement in the Nation's history, involved about 2,000,000 women and took more than 70 years of petitions, referenda, speeches, national and State campaigns, demonstrations, arrests, and hunger strikes;

Whereas women won the right to vote throughout the United States with the ratification of the 19th amendment to the Constitution of the United States in 1920, and by the end of the century, women were voting in larger numbers than men in some national elections;

Whereas women represent an increasing share of people being awarded college and postgraduate degrees;

Whereas women are increasingly owning their own businesses and working to narrow the gap in earnings between women and men, and in 1999 women earned 73 cents for every dollar earned by men in contrast to the 57 cents they received in 1973;

Whereas during the 20th century, women served their country proudly and capably in the armed services, including duty in both World Wars, Korea, Vietnam, Panama, Libya, the Persian Gulf, Bosnia, Kosovo, and all major contingencies including in warfighting roles;

Whereas in World War I, women were only allowed to serve in the Army as nurses, and with over 30,000 women serving in World War I, approximately 10,000 women served as volunteers overseas, with no rank and no benefits;

Whereas women now serve in all ranks, in all branches of the armed services, as pilots, intelligence specialists, drill instructors, specialists, and technicians, soldiers, airmen, and marines on the battlefields, and as sailors aboard Navy and Coast Guard ships at sea;

Whereas women were once denied the right to enter the national academies for military service or to compete to become astronauts or combat pilots, in 1976 Congress passed, and President Ford signed into law, legislation authorizing the admission of women into the military service academies;

Whereas women are now excelling in military academies and emerging as part of the military leadership of the future, and have served with distinction as members of combat squadrons and as commanders and members of the space shuttle crew;

Whereas the 20th century saw women in new roles as justices on the United States Supreme Court, members of the President's Executive Cabinet, United States Senators and Representatives, and women's services have become invaluable in appointed and volunteer positions and as Federal legislators, State and local legislators, Governors, judges, Cabinet officers, county commissioners, mayors, city council members, directors of Federal, State and local agencies;

Whereas women have become prominent figures in amateur and professional sports highlighted in 1999 with the United States Women's Soccer Team winning the World Cup in a stunning victory; and

Whereas women can look back at the opportunities created during the 20th century and look ahead toward even greater accomplishments in the 21st century: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) commends the accomplishments and unfailing spirit of women in the 20th century; and

(2) recognizes the 20th century as the ''Century of Women in the United States''.

• Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a resolution recognizing the 20th century as the ''Century of Women in the United States.'' I would like to thank Georgia State Representative Hinson Mosley for introducing a similar resolution in the Georgia General Assembly recognizing the tremendous accomplishments of women in Georgia and in the United States during the 20th century and for sharing his resolution with me. Representative Mosley's exceptional resolution passed the Georgia House of Representatives by a vote of 120–0 and the Georgia Senate on a vote of 51 to 0.

Like Representative Mosley's resolution, my proposal recognizes that as we enter the 21st century, it is essential that we note the vast opportunities available to today's women that were not available to women entering the 20th century. Women made unprecedented strides in civil rights, careers, religion, education and military service. Although we must keep in mind the challenges that women in our society continue to face and the work that women and men must yet accomplish, let us celebrate the victories won by women in the past 100 years.

I, along with Senators BOXER, BOND, BAUCUS, BRYAN, DURBIN, LANDRIEU, MIKULSKI, MURRAY, LINCOLN, KERRY, JEFFORDS, FEINSTEIN, ROBB and COCHRAN urge my colleagues to support this resolution and recognize the 20th century as the ''Century of Women in the United States.''•

SENATE RESOLUTION 293—ENCOURAGING ALL RESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES TO COMPLETE THEIR CENSUS FORMS TO ENSURE THE MOST ACCURATE ENUMERATION OF THE POPULATION POSSIBLE

Mr. DASCHLE (for himself, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. KERRY, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. REID, Mr. HARKIN, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. KERREY, Mr. KOHL, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. ROBB, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. REED, and Mrs. BOXER) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs:

S. RES. 293

Whereas the Constitution requires an actual enumeration of the population every 10 years;

Whereas Federal, State, and local governments, as well as charities and other groups serving Americans, use information gathered by the census to distribute hundreds of billions of dollars for programs from education to employment, housing to transportation, and rural development to urban empowerment;

Whereas inaccurate or incomplete census data would make it impossible for this aid to be distributed appropriately or fairly and would prevent critically needed funding from finding its way to the appropriate recipients;

Whereas inaccurate or incomplete census data would also throw into doubt the ability to correctly apportion representation in Congress or equitably redraw voting district lines within the States, raising questions about whether the one-person-one-vote rights of Americans are being appropriately guarded;

Whereas the privacy of all data collected by the Bureau of the Census is guaranteed absolute confidentiality for 72 years from the public and all other government agencies; and

Whereas the Bureau of the Census cannot conduct its constitutional or legal duties and Americans cannot be assured of the integrity of the census results, and therefore the equity of all of the manifold decisions that rely upon census numbers, without the fullest possible participation from the public: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) it is the civic duty of Americans to assist in ensuring the most accurate census possible; and

(2) all residents of the United States should complete their census forms.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, today Senator LIEBERMAN and I, along with a group of our colleagues, are introducing a resolution emphasizing to all Americans the importance of accurately and completely filling out their census forms. It is my hope that all members of the Senate will cosponsor this important resolution to support the Census Bureau as it carries out the role that the Constitution and Congress have directed it to take.

I continue to be concerned with the statements of some elected officials urging Americans not to respond to some of the questions on their census forms. These statements are reckless and irresponsible.

First, every question on the census form is required by the Constitution or by law. All of these questions were reviewed by Congress before the census began, and received virtually no comment at that time. Second, an accurate census is absolutely critical to meet the needs of the public. Local, state and federal aid programs all depend upon an accurate census count to properly distribute funding for roads, schools and health care. Disaster response agencies like the Federal Emergency Management Agency use census data to prepare for and respond to hurricanes, tornadoes and other natural disasters. Finally, accurate information about population is absolutely essential to fairly distribute congressional seats to ensure that all Americans have equal representation in Congress.

Any effort to encourage Americans not to complete their census questionnaire will only hinder our ability to allow every community to live up to its potential, and provide its citizens with the roads, hospitals and schools they need.

As you know, last week the Senate approved an amendment stating that no American should be prosecuted for failing to fill out his or her census form. This resolution was distracting and unnecessary. No American is—or for years has been—prosecuted for failing to complete a census form.

The Census Bureau needs to know that it has the full support of the Congress as it carries out its vital task. This resolution makes clear just how important the bureau's task is, and the need for every American to comply with the law and complete the census form. I urge all my colleagues to give it their support.

SEC. 101. RIGHT TO NOTICE AND TO BE HEARD CONCERNING DETENTION.

Section 3142 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (g)—

(A) in paragraph (3), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(B) by redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (5); and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

''(4) the views of the victim; and''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(k) NOTICE AND RIGHT TO BE HEARD.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), with respect to each hearing under subsection (f)—

''(A) before the hearing, the Government shall make reasonable efforts to notify the victim of—

''(i) the date and time of the hearing; and

''(ii) the right of the victim to be heard on the issue of detention; and

''(B) at the hearing, the court shall inquire of the Government whether the victim wishes to be heard on the issue of detention and, if so, shall afford the victim such an opportunity.

''(2) EXCEPTIONS.—The requirements of paragraph (1) shall not apply to any case in which the Government or the court reasonably believes—

''(A) available evidence raises a significant expectation of physical violence or other retaliation by the victim against the defendant; or

''(B) identification of the defendant by the victim is a fact in dispute, and no means of verification has been attempted.''.

(c) VICTIM DEFINED.—Section 3156(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(2) in paragraph (5), by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; and''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(6) the term 'victim'—

''(A) means an individual harmed as a result of a commission of an offense involving death or bodily injury to any person, a threat of death or bodily injury to any person, a sexual assault, or an attempted sexual assault; and

''(B) includes—

''(i) in the case of a victim who is less than 18 years of age or incompetent, the parent or legal guardian of the victim;

''(ii) in the case of a victim who is deceased or incapacitated, 1 or more family members designated by the court; and

''(iii) any other person appointed by the court to represent the victim.''.

SEC. 102. RIGHT TO A SPEEDY TRIAL.

Section 3161(h)(8)(B) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(v) The interests of the victim (or the family of a victim who is deceased or incapacitated) in the prompt and appropriate disposition of the case, free from unreasonable delay.''.

SEC. 103. RIGHT TO NOTICE AND TO BE HEARD CONCERNING PLEA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended—

(1) by redesignating subdivision (h) as subdivision (i); and

(2) by inserting after subdivision (g) the following:

''(h) RIGHTS OF VICTIMS.—

''(1) VICTIM DEFINED.—In this subdivision, the term 'victim' means an individual harmed as a result of a commission of an offense involving death or bodily injury to any person, a threat of death or bodily injury to any person, a sexual assault, or an attempted sexual assault, and also includes—

''(A) in the case of a victim who is less than 18 years of age or incompetent, the parent or legal guardian of the victim;

''(B) in the case of a victim who is deceased or incapacitated, 1 or more family members designated by the court; and

''(C) any other person appointed by the court to represent the victim.

''(2) NOTICE.—The Government, before a proceeding at which a plea of guilty or nolo contendere is entered, shall make reasonable efforts to notify the victim of—

''(A) the date and time of the proceeding;

''(B) the elements of the proposed plea or plea agreement;

''(C) the right of the victim to attend the proceeding; and

''(D) the right of the victim to address the court personally, through counsel, or in writing on the issue of the proposed plea or plea agreement.

''(3) OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD.—The court, before accepting a plea of guilty or nolo contendere, shall afford the victim an opportunity to be heard, personally, through counsel, or in writing, on the proposed plea or plea agreement.

''(4) EXCEPTIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subdivision—

''(A) in any case in which a victim is a defendant in the same or a related case, or in which the Government certifies to the court under seal that affording such victim any right provided under this rule will jeopardize an ongoing investigation, the victim shall not have such right;

''(B) a victim who, at the time of a proceeding at which a plea of guilty or nolo contendere is entered, is incarcerated in any Federal, State, or local correctional or detention facility, shall not have the right to appear in person, but, subject to subparagraph (A), shall be afforded a reasonable opportunity to present views or participate by alternate means; and

''(C) in any case involving more than 15 victims, the court, after consultation with the Government and the victims, may appoint a number of victims to represent the interests of the victims, except that all victims shall retain the right to submit a written statement under paragraph (2).''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall become effective as provided in paragraph (3).

(2) ACTION BY JUDICIAL CONFERENCE.—

(A) RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States shall submit to Congress a report containing recommendations for amending the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to provide enhanced opportunities for victims to be heard on the issue of whether or not the court should accept a plea of guilty or nolo contendere.

(B) INAPPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAW.—Chapter 131 of title 28, United States Code, does not apply to any recommendation made by the Judicial Conference of the United States under this paragraph.

(3) CONGRESSIONAL ACTION.—Except as otherwise provided by law, if the Judicial Conference of the United States—

(A) submits a report in accordance with paragraph (2) containing recommendations described in that paragraph, and those recommendations are the same as the amendments made by subsection (a), then the amendments made by subsection (a) shall become effective 30 days after the date on which the recommendations are submitted to Congress under paragraph (2);

(B) submits a report in accordance with paragraph (2) containing recommendations described in that paragraph, and those recommendations are different in any respect from the amendments made by subsection (a), the recommendations made pursuant to paragraph (2) shall become effective 180 days after the date on which the recommendations are submitted to Congress under paragraph (2), unless an Act of Congress is passed overturning the recommendations; and

(C) fails to comply with paragraph (2), the amendments made by subsection (a) shall become effective 360 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(4) APPLICATION.—Any amendment made pursuant to this section (including any amendment made pursuant to the recommendations of the Judicial Conference of the United States under paragraph (2)) shall apply in any proceeding commenced on or after the effective date of the amendment.

SEC. 104. ENHANCED PARTICIPATORY RIGHTS AT TRIAL.

(a) AMENDMENT TO VICTIM RIGHTS CLARIFICATION ACT.—Section 3510 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(d) APPLICATION TO TELEVISED PROCEEDINGS.—This section applies to any victim viewing proceedings pursuant to section 235 of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (42 U.S.C. 10608), or any rule issued thereunder.''.

(b) AMENDMENT TO VICTIMS' RIGHTS AND RESTITUTION ACT OF 1990.—Section 502(b) of the Victims' Rights and Restitution Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 10606(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking paragraph (4) and inserting the following:

''(4) The right to be present at all public court proceedings related to the offense, unless the court determines that testimony by the victim at trial would be materially affected if the victim heard the testimony of other witnesses.''; and

(2) in paragraph (5), by striking ''attorney'' and inserting ''the attorney''.

SEC. 105. RIGHT TO NOTICE AND TO BE HEARD CONCERNING SENTENCE.

(a) ENHANCED NOTICE AND CONSIDERATION OF VICTIMS' VIEWS.—

(1) IMPOSITION OF SENTENCE.—Section 3553(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in paragraph (6), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(B) by redesignating paragraph (7) as paragraph (8); and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (6) the following:

''(7) the views of any victims of the offense, if such views are presented to the court; and''.

(2) ISSUANCE AND ENFORCEMENT OF ORDER OF RESTITUTION.—Section 3664(d)(2)(A) of title 18, United States Code is amended—

(A) by redesignating clauses (v) and (vi) as clauses (vii) and (viii) respectively; and

(B) by inserting after clause (iv) the following:

''(v) the opportunity of the victim to attend the sentencing hearing;

''(vi) the opportunity of the victim, personally or through counsel, to make a statement or present any information to the court in relation to the sentence;''.

(b) ENHANCED PARTICIPATORY RIGHTS.—Rule 32 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended—

(1) in subdivision (b)—

(A) by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) as paragraphs (5), (6), and (7), respectively;

(B) by inserting after paragraph (3) the following:

''(4) NOTICE TO VICTIM.—The probation officer must, before submitting the presentence report, provide notice to the victim as provided by section 3664(d)(2)(A) of title 18, United States Code.''; and

(C) in paragraph (5), as redesignated—

(i) by redesignating subparagraphs (E) through (H) as subparagraphs (F) through (I), respectively; and

(ii) by inserting after subparagraph (D) the following:

''(E) any victim impact statement submitted by a victim to the probation officer;'';

(2) in subdivision (c)(3), by striking subparagraph (E) and inserting the following:

''(E) afford the victim, personally or through counsel, an opportunity to make a statement or present any information in relation to the sentence, including information concerning the extent and scope of the victim's injury or loss, and the impact of the offense on the victim or the family of the victim, except that the court may reasonably limit the number of victims permitted to address the court if the number is so large that affording each victim such right would result in cumulative victim impact information or would unreasonably prolong the sentencing process.''; and

(3) in subdivision (f)(1)—

(A) by striking ''the right of allocution under subdivision (c)(3)(E)'' and inserting ''the notice and participatory rights under subdivisions (b)(4) and (c)(3)(E)''; and

(B) by striking ''if such person or persons are present at the sentencing hearing, regardless of whether the victim is present;''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by subsection (b) shall become effective as provided in paragraph (3).

(2) ACTION BY JUDICIAL CONFERENCE.—

(A) RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States shall submit to Congress a report containing recommendations for amending the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to provide enhanced opportunities for victims to participate during the presentencing and sentencing phase of the criminal process.

(B) INAPPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAW.—Chapter 131 of title 28, United States Code, does not apply to any recommendation made by the Judicial Conference of the United States under this paragraph.

(3) CONGRESSIONAL ACTION.—Except as otherwise provided by law, if the Judicial Conference of the United States—

(A) submits a report in accordance with paragraph (2) containing recommendations described in that paragraph, and those recommendations are the same as the amendments made by subsection (b), then the amendments made by subsection (b) shall become effective 30 days after the date on which the recommendations are submitted to Congress under paragraph (2);

(B) submits a report in accordance with paragraph (2) containing recommendations described in that paragraph, and those recommendations are different in any respect from the amendments made by subsection (b), the recommendations made pursuant to paragraph (2) shall become effective 180 days after the date on which the recommendations are submitted to Congress under paragraph (2), unless an Act of Congress is passed overturning the recommendations; and

(C) fails to comply with paragraph (2), the amendments made by subsection (b) shall become effective 360 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(4) APPLICATION.—Any amendment made pursuant to this section (including any amendment made pursuant to the recommendations of the Judicial Conference of the United States under paragraph (2)) shall apply in any proceeding commenced on or after the effective date of the amendment.

SEC. 106. RIGHT TO NOTICE AND TO BE HEARD CONCERNING SENTENCE ADJUSTMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Rule 32.1(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(3) NOTICE TO VICTIM.—At any hearing pursuant to paragraph (2) involving 1 or more persons who have been convicted of an offense involving death or bodily injury to any person, a threat of death or bodily injury to any person, a sexual assault, or an attempted sexual assault, the Government shall make reasonable efforts to notify the victim of the offense (and the victim of any new charges giving rise to the hearing), of—

''(A) the date and time of the hearing; and

''(B) the right of the victim to attend the hearing and to address the court regarding whether the terms or conditions of probation or supervised release should be modified.''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective as provided in paragraph (3).

(2) ACTION BY JUDICIAL CONFERENCE.—

(A) RECOMMENDATIONS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Judicial Conference of the United States shall submit to Congress a report containing recommendations for amending the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to ensure that reasonable efforts are made to notify victims of violent offenses of any revocation hearing held pursuant to Rule 32.1(a)(2), and to afford such victims an opportunity to participate.

(B) INAPPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAW.—Chapter 131 of title 28, United States Code, does not apply to any recommendation made by the Judicial Conference of the United States under this paragraph.

(3) CONGRESSIONAL ACTION.—Except as otherwise provided by law, if the Judicial Conference of the United States—

(A) submits a report in accordance with paragraph (2) containing recommendations described in that paragraph, and those recommendations are the same as the amendment made by subsection (a), then the amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective 30 days after the date on which the recommendations are submitted to Congress under paragraph (2);

(B) submits a report in accordance with paragraph (2) containing recommendations described in that paragraph, and those recommendations are different in any respect from the amendment made by subsection (a), the recommendations made pursuant to paragraph (2) shall become effective 180 days after the date on which the recommendations are submitted to Congress under paragraph (2), unless an Act of Congress is passed overturning the recommendations; and

(C) fails to comply with paragraph (2), the amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective 360 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(4) APPLICATION.—Any amendment made pursuant to this section (including any amendment made pursuant to the recommendations of the Judicial Conference of the United States under paragraph (2)) shall apply in any proceeding commenced on or after the effective date of the amendment.

SEC. 107. RIGHT TO NOTICE OF RELEASE OR ESCAPE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter C of chapter 229 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''§ 3627. Notice to victims of release or escape of defendants

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Bureau of Prisons shall ensure that reasonable notice is provided to each victim of an offense for which a person is in custody pursuant to this subchapter—

''(1) not less than 30 days before the release of such person under section 3624, assignment of such person to pre-release custody under section 3624(c), or transfer of such person under section 3623;

''(2) not less than 10 days before the temporary release of such person under section 3622;

''(3) not later than 12 hours after discovery that such person has escaped;

''(4) not later than 12 hours after the return to custody of such person after an escape; and

''(5) at such other times as may be reasonable before any other form of release of such person as may occur.

''(b) APPLICABILITY.—This section applies to any escape, work release, furlough, or any other form of release from a psychiatric institution or other facility that provides mental or other health services to persons in the custody of the Bureau of Prisons.

''(c) VICTIM CONTACT INFORMATION.—It shall be the responsibility of a victim to notify the Bureau of Prisons, by means of a form to be provided by the Attorney General, of any change in the mailing address of the victim, or other means of contacting the victim, while the defendant is in the custody of the Bureau of Prisons. The Bureau of Prisons shall ensure the confidentiality of any information relating to a victim.''.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for subchapter C of chapter 229 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''3627. Notice to victims of release or escape of defendants.''.

SEC. 108. RIGHT TO NOTICE AND TO BE HEARD CONCERNING EXECUTIVE CLEMENCY.

(a) NOTIFICATION.—Subchapter C of chapter 229 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding after section 3627, as added by section 107, the following:

''§ 3628. Notice to victims concerning grant of executive clemency

''(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section—

''(1) the term 'executive clemency'—

''(A) means any exercise by the President of the power to grant reprieves and pardons under clause 1 of section 2 of article II of the Constitution of the United States; and

''(B) includes any pardon, reprieve, commutation of sentence, or remission of fine; and

''(2) the term 'victim' has the same meaning given that term in section 503(e) of the Victims' Rights and Restitution Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 10607(e)).

''(b) NOTICE OF GRANT OF EXECUTIVE CLEMENCY.—

''(1) If a petition for executive clemency is granted, the Attorney General shall make reasonable efforts to notify any victim of any offense that is the subject of the grant of executive clemency that such grant has been made as soon as practicable after that grant is made.

''(2) If a grant of executive clemency will result in the release of any person from custody, notice under paragraph (1) shall be prior to that release from custody, if practicable.''.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for subchapter C of chapter 229 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''3628. Notice to victims concerning grant of executive clemency.''.

(c) REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—The Attorney General shall submit biannually to the Committees on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Senate a report on executive clemency matters or cases delegated for review or investigation to the Attorney General by the President, including for each year—

(1) the number of petitions so delegated;

(2) the number of reports submitted to the President;

(3) the number of petitions for executive clemency granted and the number denied;

(4) the name of each person whose petition for executive clemency was granted or denied and the offenses of conviction of that person for which executive clemency was granted or denied; and

(5) with respect to any person granted executive clemency, the date that any victim of an offense that was the subject of that grant of executive clemency was notified, pursuant to Department of Justice regulations, of a petition for executive clemency, and whether such victim submitted a statement concerning the petition.

(d) SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING THE RIGHT OF VICTIMS TO NOTICE AND TO BE HEARD CONCERNING EXECUTIVE CLEMENCY.—It is the Sense of the Senate that—

(1) victims of a crime should be notified about any petition for executive clemency filed by the perpetrators of that crime and provided an opportunity to submit a statement concerning the petition to the President; and

(2) the Attorney General should promulgate regulations or internal guidelines to ensure that such notification and opportunity to submit a statement are provided.

SEC. 109. REMEDIES FOR NONCOMPLIANCE.

(a) GENERAL LIMITATION.—Any failure to comply with any amendment made by this title shall not give rise to a claim for damages, or any other action against the United States, or any employee of the United States, any court official or officer of the court, or an entity contracting with the United States, or any action seeking a rehearing or other reconsideration of action taken in connection with a defendant.

(b) REGULATIONS TO ENSURE COMPLIANCE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General of the United States and the Chairman of the United States Parole Commission shall promulgate regulations to implement and enforce the amendments made by this title.

(2) CONTENTS.—The regulations promulgated under paragraph (1) shall—

(A) contain disciplinary sanctions, including suspension or termination from employment, for employees of the Department of Justice (including employees of the United States Parole Commission) who willfully or repeatedly violate the amendments made by this title, or willfully or repeatedly refuse or fail to comply with provisions of Federal law pertaining to the treatment of victims of crime;

(B) include an administrative procedure through which parties can file formal complaints with the Department of Justice alleging violations of the amendments made by this title;

(C) provide that a complainant is prohibited from recovering monetary damages against the United States, or any employee of the United States, either in his official or personal capacity; and

(D) provide that the Attorney General, or the designee of the Attorney General, shall be the final arbiter of the complaint, and there shall be no judicial review of the final decision of the Attorney General by a complainant.

TITLE II—VICTIM ASSISTANCE INITIATIVES

SEC. 201. PILOT PROGRAMS TO ESTABLISH OMBUDSMAN PROGRAMS FOR CRIME VICTIMS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) DIRECTOR.—The term ''Director'' means the Director of the Office of Victims of Crime.

(2) OFFICE.—The term ''Office'' means the Office for Victims of Crime.

(3) QUALIFIED PRIVATE ENTITY.—The term ''qualified private entity'' means a private entity that meets such requirements as the Attorney General, acting through the Director, may establish.

(4) QUALIFIED UNIT OF STATE OR LOCAL GOVERNMENT.—The term ''local government'' means a unit of a State or local government, including a State court, that meets such requirements as the Attorney General, acting through the Director, may establish.

(5) VOICE CENTERS.—The term ''VOICE Centers'' means the Victim Ombudsman Information Centers established under the program under subsection (b).

(b) PILOT PROGRAMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 12 months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Attorney General, acting through the Director, shall establish and carry out a program to provide for pilot programs to establish and operate Victim Ombudsman Information Centers in each of the following States:

(A) Iowa.

(B) Massachusetts.

(C) Maryland.

(D) Vermont.

(E) Virginia.

(F) Washington.

(G) Wisconsin.

(2) AGREEMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General, acting through the Director, shall enter into an agreement with a qualified private entity or unit of State or local government to conduct a pilot program referred to in paragraph (1). Under the agreement, the Attorney General, acting through the Director, shall provide for a grant to assist the qualified private entity or unit of State or local government in carrying out the pilot program.

(B) CONTENTS OF AGREEMENT.—The agreement referred to in subparagraph (A) shall specify that—

(i) the VOICE Center shall be established in accordance with this section; and

(ii) except with respect to meeting applicable requirements of this section concerning carrying out the duties of a VOICE Center under this section (including the applicable reporting duties under subsection (c) and the terms of the agreement) each VOICE Center shall operate independently of the Office.

(C) NO AUTHORITY OVER DAILY OPERATIONS.—The Office shall have no supervisory or decisionmaking authority over the day-to-day operations of a VOICE Center.

(c) OBJECTIVES.—

(1) MISSION.—The mission of each VOICE Center established under a pilot program under this section shall be to assist a victim of a Federal or State crime to ensure that the victim—

(A) is fully apprised of the rights of that victim under applicable Federal or State law; and

(B) is provided the opportunity to participate in the criminal justice process to the fullest extent of the law.

(2) DUTIES.—The duties of a VOICE Center shall include—

(A) providing information to victims of Federal or State crime regarding the right of those victims to participate in the criminal justice process (including information concerning any right that exists under applicable Federal or State law);

(B) identifying and responding to situations in which the rights of victims of crime under applicable Federal or State law may have been violated;

(C) attempting to facilitate compliance with Federal or State law referred to in subparagraph (B);

(D) educating police, prosecutors, Federal and State judges, officers of the court, and employees of jails and prisons concerning the rights of victims under applicable Federal or State law; and

(E) taking measures that are necessary to ensure that victims of crime are treated with fairness, dignity, and compassion throughout the criminal justice process.

(d) OVERSIGHT.—

(1) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.—The Office may provide technical assistance to each VOICE Center.

(2) ANNUAL REPORT.—Each qualified private entity or qualified unit of State or local government that carries out a pilot program to establish and operate a VOICE Center under this section shall prepare and submit to the Director, not later than 1 year after the VOICE Center is established, and annually thereafter, a report that—

(A) describes in detail the activities of the VOICE Center during the preceding year; and

(B) outlines a strategic plan for the year following the year covered under subparagraph (A).

(e) REVIEW OF PROGRAM EFFECTIVENESS.—

(1) GAO STUDY.—Not later than 2 years after the date on which each VOICE Center established under a pilot program under this section is fully operational, the Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct a review of each pilot program carried out under this section to determine the effectiveness of the VOICE Center that is the subject of the pilot program in carrying out the mission and duties described in subsection (c).

(2) OTHER STUDIES.—Not later than 2 years after the date on which each VOICE Center established under a pilot program under this section is fully operational, the Attorney General, acting through the Director, shall enter into an agreement with 1 or more private entities that meet such requirements that the Attorney General, acting through the Director, may establish, to study the effectiveness of each VOICE Center established by a pilot program under this section in carrying out the mission and duties described in subsection (c).

(f) TERMINATION DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), a pilot program established under this section shall terminate on the date that is 4 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) RENEWAL.—If the Attorney General determines that any of the pilot programs established under this section should be renewed for an additional period, the Attorney General may renew that pilot program for a period not to exceed 2 years.

(g) FUNDING.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, an aggregate amount not to exceed $5,000,000 of the amounts collected pursuant to sections 3729 through 3731 of title 31, United States Code (commonly known as the ''False Claims Act''), may be used by the Director to make grants under subsection (b).

SEC. 202. AMENDMENTS TO VICTIMS OF CRIME ACT OF 1984.

(a) CRIME VICTIMS FUND.—Section 1402 of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601) is amended—

SEC. 203. INCREASED TRAINING FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS AND COURT PERSONNEL TO RESPOND TO THE NEEDS OF CRIME VICTIMS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, amounts collected pursuant to sections 3729 through 3731 of title 31, United States Code (commonly known as the ''False Claims Act'') may be used by the Office for Victims of Crime to make grants to States, State courts, units of local government, and qualified private entities, to provide training and information to prosecutors, judges, law enforcement officers, probation officers, and other officers and employees of Federal and State courts to assist them in responding effectively to the needs of victims of crime.

SEC. 204. INCREASED RESOURCES TO DEVELOP STATE-OF-THE-ART SYSTEMS FOR NOTIFYING CRIME VICTIMS OF IMPORTANT DATES AND DEVELOPMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subtitle A of title XXIII of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (Public Law 103–322; 108 Stat. 2077) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"SEC. 230103. STATE-OF-THE-ART SYSTEMS FOR NOTIFYING VICTIMS OF IMPORTANT DATES AND DEVELOPMENTS.

"(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to the Office for Victims of Crime of the Department of Justice such sums as may be necessary for grants to Federal, State, and local prosecutors' offices and law enforcement agencies, Federal and State courts, county jails, Federal and State correctional institutions, and qualified private entities, to develop and implement state-of-the-art systems for notifying victims of crime of important dates and developments relating to the criminal proceedings at issue.

"(b) FALSE CLAIMS ACT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, amounts collected pursuant to sections 3729 through 3731 of title 31, United States Code (commonly known as the 'False Claims Act'), may be used for grants under this section.".

(b) VIOLENT CRIME REDUCTION TRUST FUND.—Section 310004(d) of the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 (42 U.S.C. 14214(d)) is amended—

(1) in the first paragraph designated as paragraph (15) (relating to the definition of the term "Federal law enforcement program"), by striking "and" at the end;

(2) in the first paragraph designated as paragraph (16) (relating to the definition of the term "Federal law enforcement program"), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by inserting after the first paragraph designated as paragraph (16) (relating to the definition of the term "Federal law enforcement program") the following:

"(17) section 230103.".

SEC. 205. PILOT PROGRAM TO STUDY EFFECTIVENESS OF RESTORATIVE JUSTICE APPROACH ON BEHALF OF VICTIMS OF CRIME.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, amounts collected pursuant to sections 3729 through 3731 of title 31, United States Code (commonly known as the "False Claims Act") and amounts available in the Crime Victims Fund (42 U.S.C. 10601 et seq.), may be used by the Office for Victims of Crime to make grants to States, State courts, units of local government, and qualified private entities for the establishment of pilot programs that implement balanced and restorative justice models.

(b) DEFINITION OF BALANCED AND RESTORATIVE JUSTICE MODEL.—In this section, the term "balanced and restorative justice model" means an approach to criminal justice that promotes the maximum degree of involvement by a victim, offender, and the community served by a criminal justice system by allowing the criminal justice system and related criminal justice agencies to improve the capacity of the system and agencies to—

(1) protect the community served by the system and agencies; and

(2) ensure accountability of the offender and the system.

SEC. 206. COMPENSATION AND ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF TERRORIST ACTS, MASS VIOLENCE, OR INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1404B of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10603b) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1404B. COMPENSATION AND ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF TERRORIST ACTS OR MASS VIOLENCE.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Director may make supplemental grants as provided in section 1402(d)(5)—

"(1) to States, which shall be used for eligible crime victim compensation and assistance programs for the benefit of victims; and

"(2) to victim service organizations and to agencies (including Federal, State, and local governments and foreign governments) and organizations that provide emergency or ongoing assistance to victims of crime, which shall be used to provide, for the benefit of victims—

"(A) emergency relief (including assistance and crisis response) and other related victim services;

"(B) emergency response training and technical assistance; and

"(C) ongoing assistance including during any investigation and prosecution.

"(b) VICTIM DEFINED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In this section, the term 'victim' means a person who has suffered direct physical or emotional injury or death as a result of a terrorist act or mass violence occurring on or after December 21, 1988.

"(2) INCOMPETENT, INCAPACITATED, OR DECEASED VICTIMS.—In the case of a victim who is less than 18 years of age, incompetent, incapacitated, or deceased, a family member or legal guardian of the victim may receive the compensation or assistance under this section on behalf of the victim.

"(3) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, in no event shall an individual who is criminally culpable for the terrorist act or mass violence receive any compensation or assistance under this section, either directly or on behalf of a victim.

"(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section may be construed to supplant any compensation available under title VIII of the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986.".

(b) INCREASE CAP ON EMERGENCY RESERVE FUND AND ALLOW FOR TRANSFER OF UNOBLIGATED FUNDS TO THE EMERGENCY RESERVE FUND.—

(1) CAP INCREASE.—Section 1402(d)(5)(A) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601(d)(5)(A)) is amended by striking "$50,000,000" and inserting "$100,000,000".

(2) TRANSFER.—Section 1402(e) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C 10601(e)) is amended by striking "in excess of $500,000" and all that follows through "than $500,000" and inserting "shall be available for deposit into the emergency reserve fund referred to in subsection (d)(5) at the discretion of the Director. Any remaining unobligated sums".

(c) COMPENSATION TO VICTIMS OF INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 1404B the following:

"SEC. 1404C. COMPENSATION TO VICTIMS OF INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM.

"(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

"(1) Nationals of the United States and officers and employees of the Federal Government may suffer physical and emotional injury or death as a result of international terrorism.

"(2) The United States has an obligation to assist nationals of the United States if, through no fault of their own, they are targeted by terrorists as symbols of the United States.

"(3) Officers and employees of the United States who are not nationals of the United States may serve as a surrogate for the United States and may be targeted by international terrorists. Depending upon the nature of the duties of such an officer or employee, and the location of service of that officer or employee, the officer or employee may be placed in circumstances of greater vulnerability than other individuals who are not nationals of the United States.

"(4) Even if international terrorism is not directed clearly or exclusively at the United States, the status of an individual as a national of the United States or as an officer or employee of the Federal Government may contribute to some extent to the targeting of that individual by terrorists.

"(5) To provide fair compensation to these victims of international terrorism, Congress should assist these victims with the typical expenses of victimization and the extraordinary expenses associated with victimization abroad.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM.—The term 'international terrorism' has the meaning given the term in section 2331 of title 18, United States Code.

"(2) NATIONAL OF THE UNITED STATES.—The term 'national of the United States' has the meaning given the term in section 101(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)).

"(3) VICTIM.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'victim' means a person who—

"(i) suffered direct physical or emotional injury or death as a result of international terrorism occurring on or after December 21, 1988; and

"(ii) as of the date on which the international terrorism occurred, was a national of the United States or an officer or employee of the Federal Government.

"(B) INCOMPETENT, INCAPACITATED, OR DECEASED VICTIMS.—In the case of a victim who is less than 18 years of age, incompetent, incapacitated, or deceased, a family member or legal guardian of the victim may receive the assistance under this section on behalf of the victim.

"(C) EXCEPTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, in no event shall an individual who is criminally culpable for the terrorist act or mass violence receive any assistance under this section, either directly or on behalf of a victim.

"(c) AWARD OF COMPENSATION.—The Director may carry out a program as provided in section 1402(d)(5)(B) to provide assistance to victims of international terrorism to compensate them for expenses associated with that victimization.

"(d) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Director shall annually submit to Congress a report on the status and activities of the program under this section, which report shall include—

"(1) an explanation of the procedures for filing and processing of applications for assistance;

"(2) a description of the procedures and policies instituted to promote public awareness about the program;

"(3) a complete statistical analysis of the victims assisted under the program, including—

"(A) the number of applications for assistance submitted;

''(B) the number of applications approved and the amount of each award;

''(C) the number of applications denied and the reasons for the denial;

''(D) the average length of time to process an application for assistance; and

''(E) the number of applications for assistance pending and the estimated future liability of the program; and

''(4) an analysis of future program needs and suggested program improvements.''.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1402(d)(5)(B) of the Victims of Crime Act of 1984 (42 U.S.C. 10601(d)(5)(B)) is amended by inserting '', to provide assistance to victims of international terrorism under the program under section 1404C,'' after ''section 1404B''.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this week marks the 20th anniversary of our observance of National Crime Victims' Rights Week. This is a week that we set aside each year to honor and commemorate the victims of crime and those who serve them. It is appropriate to take this time to discuss the unmet needs of victims in our Nation's criminal justice system.

Tremendous strides have been made in these past 20 years toward ensuring better and more comprehensive rights and services for victims of crime. Today, there are over 30,000 laws nationwide that define and protect victims' rights, as well as over 10,000 national, State, and local organizations that provide assistance to people who have been hurt by crime. This is substantial progress, but there is still more to be done.

My involvement with crime victims' rights began more than three decades ago when I served as State's Attorney for Chittenden County, Vermont, and witnessed first-hand the devastation of crime. I have worked ever since to ensure that the criminal justice system is one that respects the rights and dignity of victims of crime and domestic violence, rather than one that presents additional ordeals for those already victimized.

I am proud that Congress has been a significant part of the solution to provide victims with greater rights and assistance. During the last two decades, Congress has passed several bills to this end. These bills have included:

The Victims and Witness Protection Act of 1982;

The Victims of Crime Act of 1984;

The Victims' Rights and Restitution Act of 1990;

The Violence Against Women Act of 1994;

The Mandatory Victims' Restitution Act of 1996;

The Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act of 1996;

The Victim Rights Clarification Act of 1997;

The Crime Victims with Disabilities Awareness Act of 1998; and

The Torture Victims Relief Act of 1998.

It is because of my continuing commitment to protecting the rights of victims that I joined with Senator KENNEDY to introduce the Crime Victims Assistance Act, S. 934, and its predecessor in the 105th Congress. This legislation offers full-scale reform of Federal rules and Federal law to establish stronger rights and protections for victims of Federal crime. This legislation further proposes to assist victims of State crime through the infusion of additional resources to make the criminal justice system more supporting of crime victims. In addition, this legislation would improve the capacity of the Office for Victims of Crime to provide more immediate and effective assistance to Americans who are victims of terrorism abroad.

The Crime Victims Assistance Act would improve the lot of victims throughout the country. Unfortunately, it appears that in this Congress, as in the last, we will not take the simple and important step of enacting this legislation. Instead, the Judiciary Committee has focused on proposals to amend the United States Constitution. Such action is ill-advised and a constitutional amendment is unnecessary. I regret that for the last several years the pace of crime victim legislation has slowed dramatically. I have grave reservations about proceeding first to amend the Constitution and only then to design and enact the legislation that could help crime victims. To help victims we must act on legislation like the Crime Victims Assistance Act and we should be doing so without further delay.

While the Crime Victims Assistance Act is central to a package of victim assistance legislation, it does not stand alone. There is so much that we could be doing to help victims, none of which requires an amendment to the Constitution. If we truly want to help victims we should, for example, re-authorize the Violence Against Women Act. A bill to reauthorize those programs has been pending without action for too long. It contains over $3.7 billion dollars in funding over five years, funding that primarily goes to State and local programs that desperately need assistance.

Just yesterday, the Office of Justice Programs announced that Women Helping Battered Women in Burlington, Vermont, will be receiving $249,043 under the Rural Domestic Violence and Child Victimization Enforcement Program—a VAWA program that I initiated. Earlier this month, the Vermont Center for Crime Victim Services received an award of $799,534 under the same program. This program, and other VAWA programs, meet the true and immediate needs of victims in every State. By contrast, the proposed constitutional amendment is a political gimmick, which promises much but fails to define real rights or provide real remedies or assistance.

We must also do more for victims of hate crimes by passing the Hate Crimes Prevention Act. This legislation amends the Federal hate crimes statute to make it easier for federal law enforcement officials to investigate and prosecute cases of racial and religious violence. It also focuses the attention and resources of the Federal Government on the problem of hate crimes committed against people because of their sexual orientation, gender, or disability. The Senate approved this legislation last summer as part of the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill, but it was dropped before final passage. We should pass it now, without further delay.

With a simple majority of both Houses of Congress we can pass the Crime Victims Assistance Act, which should have been enacted three years ago; we can re-authorize the Violence Against Women Act; we can pass the Hate Crimes Prevention Act. These laws can make a difference today in the lives of crime victims throughout the country. There would be no need to achieve super-majorities in both Houses of Congress, no need to await ratification efforts among the States and no need to go through the ensuing process of enacting implementing legislation.

I regret that we did not do more for victims last year or the year before. Over the course of that time, I have noted my concern that we not dissipate the progress we could be making by focusing exclusively on efforts to amend the Constitution. Regretfully, I must note that the pace of victims legislation has slowed noticeably and many opportunities for progress have been squandered.

I look forward to continuing to work with the Administration, victims groups, prosecutors, judges and other interested parties on how we can most effectively enhance the rights of victims of crime. Congress and State legislatures have become more sensitive to crime victims rights over the past 20 years and we have a golden opportunity to make additional, significant progress this year to provide the greater voice and rights that crime victims deserve.

I want to take this opportunity to commend all those who work so hard every day to assist victims of crime and to prevent others from becoming victims of crime. That is something I try to do every year and, in particular, during Crime Victims Rights Week. In preparing to do so again this year I was disappointed to see that no other Senator has yet recognized Crime Victims Rights week.

On behalf of Senators KENNEDY, SARBANES, KERRY, HARKIN, MURRAY, FEINGOLD, and ROBB, I am today filing a substitute amendment to our bill. In spite of the Judiciary Committee's lack of attention to these matters, we have continued to work on them, think about them and to improve the bill. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the substitute amendment and a section-by-section summary be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I support greater recognition of the rights of victims of crime. Clearly, they deserve enforceable rights that are guaranteed by law. But, just as clearly, these rights can be achieved without amending the Constitution. The Constitution is the foundation of our democracy, and it reflects the enduring principles of our country. The framers deliberately made it difficult to amend because it was never intended to be used for normal legislative purposes.

We have a responsibility to assure victims of crime that their rights in the criminal justice system will not be ignored. That is why my colleagues and I are re-introducing the Crime Victims Assistance Act.

Our bill clearly defines the rights of victims, and it establishes an effective means to implement and enforce these rights. It does so without taking the drastic and unnecessary step of amending the Constitution. Acting through legislation allows us to act quickly to give victims the rights to which they are entitled. It also allows us to react quickly to changing circumstances. By contrast, the proponents of a constitutional amendment are asking victims to wait, possibly for years, before any of the provisions in the amendment are adopted, much less implemented.

Our bill provides enhanced protections to victims of federal crimes. It assures victims a greater voice in the prosecution of the criminals who injured them and their families. It gives victims the right to be notified and heard on detention and plea agreements, the right to be notified and heard at probation revocation hearings, the right to be notified of the escape or release of a criminal from prison, and the right to a speedy trial and prompt disposition, free from unreasonable delay. In addition, our bill enhances victims' rights to obtain restitution, to be notified and heard at sentencing, and to be present at trial.

The rights established by our bill will fill the existing gaps in federal criminal law and will be a major step toward ensuring that victims of crime receive appropriate and sensitive treatment. Our bill will achieve these goals in a way that does not interfere with the efforts of the States to protect victims in ways appropriate to each State's unique needs.

Our bill also contains measures to ensure that victims receive the counseling, information, and assistance they need in order to participate in the criminal justice process to the maximum extent possible. It creates and funds additional federal victim assistance personnel. It authorizes the use of funds to establish effective pilot programs. It provides funds for increased training of state and local law enforcement agencies and court personnel, to enable them to respond effectively to the needs of victims and to notify them of important dates and developments. Our bill also establishes ombudsman programs to ensure that victims are given unbiased information about navigating the criminal justice process. To make all of these improvements possible, the proposed statute also improves federal financial support for victim assistance and compensation.

There is no need to amend the constitution to achieve these important goals. In my view, when it is not necessary to amend the constitution to achieve a particular goal, it is necessary not to amend it. That is why I ask my colleagues to establish effective and enforceable rights for victims of crime by supporting the Crime Victims Assistance Act.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I was pleased to join Senators LEAHY and KENNEDY as a sponsor of the Crime Victims Assistance Act, and I endorse this modified version of the bill. This is an important bill designed to give substantial, enforceable rights to the victims of federal crimes to participate fully in the various criminal justice proceedings arising out of their cases.

I understand that the sponsors of the constitutional amendment concerning the rights of victims of crime, often referred to as the Victims' Rights Amendment or VRA, will bring the amendment to the Senate floor in the near future. I have the utmost concern for the victims of crime, and I want to see them supported as much as possible in the law as they deal with the consequences of the crime committed against them. But I oppose the amendment.

The main reason for my opposition is that I do not think it is necessary to amend our great governing document, the Constitution of the United States, to provide the protection that victims of crime seek and deserve. We have a responsibility to deal with these issues through legislation before turning to the constitutional amendment process. That process is long and uncertain and its results are much less easier to fix than a statute if we have left something undone that should have been done.

The statutory alternative developed by Senators LEAHY and KENNEDY, which I expect will be offered as an amendment to the VRA when it comes to the floor, will truly serve the interests of victims in a much more direct and effective way than would a constitutional amendment. And we can enact it this year, getting relief and protections to victims of crime immediately that will not be available to them until some uncertain date under the constitutional amendment.

So I am pleased to join in this effort, and I look forward to working with my colleagues to try to convince the Senate that this is the best way to support the interests of victims of violent crime.

JOHN H. CHAFEE ENVIRONMENTAL EDUCATION ACT OF 1999

INHOFE AMENDMENT NO. 3098

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. INHOFE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1946) to amend the National Environmental Education Act to redesignate that Act as the "John H. Chafee Environmental Education Act," to establish the John H. Chafee Memorial Fellowship Program, to extend the programs under that Act, and for other purposes; as follows:

In section 7(f) of the John H. Chafee Environmental Education Act (as amended by section 4(a)), strike paragraph (2) and insert the following:

"(2) MEMBERSHIP.—The Panel shall consist of 5 members, appointed by the Administrator from among persons recommended by the National Environmental Education Advisory Council.

In section 6(1) of the bill, strike subparagraph (C) and insert the following:

(C) by striking the last sentence;

In section 11(b)(1) of the John H. Chafee Environmental Education Act (as amended by section 8(a)(2))—

(1) in subparagraph (C)—

(A) strike "40 percent" and insert "38 percent"; and

(B) strike "and" at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (D), strike the period at the end and insert "; and"; and

(3) add at the end the following:

"(E) not more than 2 percent shall be used to administer and make grants under the teachers' awards program under section 8(b).

PALACE OF THE GOVERNORS EXPANSION ACT

DOMENICI AMENDMENT NO. 3099

Mr. SESSIONS (for Mr. DOMENICI) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1727) to authorize for the expansion annex of the historic Palace of the Governors, a public history museum located, and relating to the history of Hispanic and Native American culture, in the Southwest and for other purposes, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Palace of the Governors Annex Act".

SEC. 2. CONSTRUCTION OF PALACE OF THE GOVERNORS ANNEX, SANTA FE, NEW MEXICO.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the United States has a rich legacy of Hispanic influence in politics, government, economic development, and cultural expression;

(2) the Palace of the Governors—

(A) has been the center of administrative and cultural activity over a vast region of the Southwest since its construction as New

Mexico's second capitol in Santa Fe by Governor Pedro de Peralta in 1610;

(B) is the oldest continuously occupied public building in the continental United States, having been occupied for 390 years; and

(C) has been designated as a National Historic Landmark;

(3) since its creation, the Museum of New Mexico has worked to protect and promote Southwestern, Hispanic, and Native American arts and crafts;

(4) the Palace of the Governors houses the history division of the Museum of New Mexico;

(5) the Museum has an extensive, priceless, and irreplaceable collection of—

(A) Spanish Colonial paintings (including the Segesser Hide Paintings, paintings on buffalo hide dating back to 1706);

(B) pre-Columbian Art; and

(C) historic artifacts, including—

(i) helmets and armor worn by the Don Juan de Oñate expedition conquistadors who established the first capital in the territory that is now the United States, San Juan de los Caballeros, in July 1598;

(ii) the Vara Stick used to measure land grants and other real property boundaries in Dona Ana County, New Mexico;

(iii) the Columbus, New Mexico Railway Station clock that was shot, stopping the pendulum, freezing for all history the moment when Pancho Villa's raid began;

(iv) the field desk of Brigadier General Stephen Watts Kearny, who was posted to New Mexico during the Mexican War and whose Army of the West traveled the Santa Fe trail to occupy the territories of New Mexico and California; and

(v) more than 800,000 other historic photographs, guns, costumes, maps, books, and handicrafts;

(6) the Palace of the Governors and its contents are included in the Mary C. Skaggs Centennial Collection of America's Treasures;

(7) the Palace of the Governors and the Segesser Hide paintings have been declared national treasures by the National Trust for Historic Preservation; and

(8) time is of the essence in the construction of an annex to the Palace of the Governors for the exhibition and storing of the collection described in paragraph (5), because—

(A) the existing facilities for exhibiting and storing the collection are so inadequate and unsuitable that existence of the collection is endangered and its preservation is in jeopardy; and

(B) 2010 marks the 400th anniversary of the continuous occupation and use of the Palace of the Governors and is an appropriate date for ensuring the continued viability of the collection.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ANNEX.—The term ''Annex'' means the annex for the Palace of the Governors of the Museum of New Mexico, to be constructed behind the Palace of the Governors building at 110 Lincoln Avenue, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

(2) OFFICE.—The term ''Office'' means the State Office of Cultural Affairs.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(4) STATE.—The term ''State'' means the State of New Mexico.

(c) GRANT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Secretary shall make a grant to the Office to pay 50 percent of the costs of the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex.

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, to receive a grant under this paragraph (1), the Office shall—

(A) submit to the Secretary a copy of the architectural blueprints for the Annex; and

(B) enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Secretary under subsection (d).

(d) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—At the request of the Office, the Secretary shall enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Office that—

(1) requires that the Office award the contract for construction of the Annex after a competitive bidding process and in accordance with the New Mexico Procurement Code; and

(2) specifies a date for completion of the Annex.

(e) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the costs of the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex—

(1) may be in cash or in kind fairly evaluated, including land, art and artifact collections, plant, equipment, or services; and

(2) shall include any contribution received by the State (including contributions from the New Mexico Foundation and other endowment funds) for, and any expenditure made by the State for, the Palace of the Governors or the Annex, including—

(A) design;

(B) land acquisition (including the land at 110 Lincoln Avenue, Santa Fe, New Mexico);

(C) acquisitions for and renovation of the library;

(D) conservation of the Palace of the Governors;

(E) construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex; and

(F) donations of art collections and artifacts to the Museum of New Mexico on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) USE OF FUNDS.—The funds received under a grant awarded under subsection (c) shall be used only for the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing and equipment of the Annex.

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), subject to the availability of appropriations, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out this section $15,000,000, to remain available until expended.

(2) CONDITION.—Paragraph (1) authorizes sums to be appropriated on the condition that—

(A) after the date of enactment of this Act and before January 1, 2010, the State appropriate at least $8,000,000 to pay the costs of the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex; and

(B) other non-Federal sources provide sufficient funds to pay the remainder of the 50 percent non-Federal share of those costs.

NRC FAIRNESS IN FUNDING ACT OF 1999

SMITH AMENDMENTS NOS. 3100–3101

Mr. SESSIONS (for Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire) proposed two amendments to the bill (S. 1627) to extend the authority of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission to collect fees through 2004, and for other purposes; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 3100

Beginning on page 5, strike line 2 and all that follows through page 7, line 22, and insert the following:

SEC. 101. NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION ANNUAL CHARGES.

Section 6101 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 2214) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(3), by striking ''September 30, 1999'' and inserting ''September 20, 2005''; and

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by inserting ''or certificate holder'' after ''licensee''; and

(B) by striking paragraph (2) and inserting the following:

''(2) AGGREGATE AMOUNT OF CHARGES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The aggregate amount of the annual charges collected from all licensees and certificate holders in a fiscal year shall equal an amount that approximates the percentages of the budget authority of the Commission for the fiscal year stated in subparagraph (B), less—

''(i) amounts collected under subsection (b) during the fiscal year; and

''(ii) amounts appropriated to the Commission from the Nuclear Waste Fund for the fiscal year.

''(B) PERCENTAGES.—The percentages referred to in subparagraph (A) are—

''(i) 98 percent for fiscal year 2001;

''(ii) 96 percent for fiscal year 2002;

''(iii) 94 percent for fiscal year 2003;

''(iv) 92 percent for fiscal year 2004; and

''(v) 88 percent for fiscal year 2005.''.

AMENDMENT NO. 3101

On page 7, strike line 23 and insert the following:

SEC. 102. NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION AUTHORITY OVER FORMER LICENSEES FOR DECOMMISSIONING FUNDING.

Section 161i. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2201(i)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''and (3)'' and inserting ''(3)''; and

(2) by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: '', and (4) to ensure that sufficient funds will be available for the decommissioning of any production or utilization facility licensed under section 103 or 104b., including standards and restrictions governing the control, maintenance, use, and disbursement by any former licensee under this Act that has control over any fund for the decommissioning of the facility''.

SEC. 103. COST RECOVERY FROM GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on Forests and Public Land Management of the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place on Thursday, May 4, 2000 at 2:30 p.m., in room SD–366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

The purpose of this hearing is to conduct oversight on the United States

Forest Service's use of current and proposed stewardship contracting procedures, including authorities under section 347 of the FY 1999 omnibus appropriations act, and whether these procedures assist or could be improved to assist forest management activities to meet goals of ecosystem management, restoration, and employment opportunities on public lands.

Those who wish to submit written statements should write to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC 20510. For further information, please call Mark Rey (202) 224–2878.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Thank you, Mr. President. I want to speak for about 5 or 6 minutes on a bill I am introducing.

What does my colleague from Louisiana have in mind?

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, I wanted to speak for about 2 minutes. If Senator BYRD would allow both of us to go forward before he begins his remarks, I would be happy to yield.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I would be happy to yield to my colleague from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I thank Senator BROWNBACK.

THE HAGUE CONVENTION ON INTERNATIONAL ADOPTION

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I make note tonight of a very significant event which occurred today in the Capitol. We were able to pass legislation from the Foreign Relations Committee, under the leadership of the chairman of that committee, Chairman JESSE HELMS, The Hague Convention on International Adoption.

The reason I mention it particularly tonight is that we will be taking up this implementation legislation when we return—hopefully, soon after we return. Then we will be considering a very important treaty under the same title.

There are many hundreds of leaders in Washington today from the Joint Council on International Children's Services and with the National Council for Adoption who have worked literally for years to bring us to this point.

I also commend our partners in the House, Congressman DELAHUNT from Massachusetts, Congressman BURR, and Congressman GEJDENSON from Connecticut who worked very hard on this who were terrific leaders.

Sixty-six countries participated in this ground-breaking document. There were 37 signatories, and to date 29 countries have ratified. I particularly mention Mexico and Romania as two of the earliest countries.

Since the United States receives more children in this country through adoption than all other countries combined, and since we pride ourselves on being a leader in this particular area, I think it is very significant that we step forward, pass this legislation, and ratify this treaty.

In closing, let me say it is so significant because many Senators from both sides of the aisle have worked for so many years to promote adoption in a very positive way to say basically that every child deserves a home. If their biological family is split apart or broken up by death, or disease, or tragedy, neglect, or abuse, it is our responsibility as a society to make sure those children are cared for permanently by someone who is capable of nurturing and loving.

The significance of this treaty is that now we express, in an international way, that that child should then go to their family and then to the community at large, but if no place can be found, surely there is a home somewhere on this planet for these children. There are many orphans and there are many children in limbo caught within systems in the United States and elsewhere.

I thank my colleagues and I thank Senator HELMS for his great leadership. I look forward to taking up this issue when we return because there was great committee work done and a lot of work for many years was put into this. I am convinced that millions of children now all over the world will be able to find a home and families will be able to find children once this legislation is implemented and carried out.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Thank you very much. I thank my colleague from West Virginia for allowing me to speak for a few minutes.

THE MAJORITY LEADER, TRENT LOTT

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I want to recognize the majority leader, Senator TRENT LOTT, for his great work in getting the marriage penalty bill brought up to the point where, right after we get back, I am hopeful, we will be able to vote on this piece of legislation and get it passed.

(The remarks of Mr. BROWNBACK pertaining to the introduction of S. 2449 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

ORGAN TRANSPLANT LEGISLATION

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have a very brief colloquy with the distinguished Senator from Vermont from the Committee on Labor, Health, Education and Pensions. It had been anticipated there would be a unanimous consent request to move forward on legislation on organ transplants which came out of the Labor Committee yesterday on a unanimous vote. I had been deeply involved in that matter when the issue came before the conference on the appropriations bill for Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education. We had crafted, after a great deal of controversy, a resolution where the Secretary of Health and Human Services came especially to an evening session and we worked out what I thought were the final details on the settlement.

But as I think George Shultz said, nothing is ever settled in Washington and the matter has seen a new birth. The issue came before the Labor Committee and they have crafted a new proposal. I had intended to object. It now appears that others will object and the matter will not come forward.

I thought it useful to have a colloquy with Senator JEFFORDS where I would not raise an objection on his assurance that out of the conference the bill of the Labor Committee would not be watered down any more. That is a minimal consideration for fairness in organ transplants. In my judgment, no bill would be better than any bill which is less than the one which is out of committee.

My own personal view is that the compromise crafted in my subcommittee on appropriations on that bill is a superior approach, but I did see the wave moving toward what happened in the Labor Committee yesterday. Therefore, I will not raise an objection on the assurance from the chairman that that bill will not be reduced, modified, or weakened in any way in conference.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I thank the Senator for his statement. We had an incredibly good breakthrough in negotiations, which is why I can reassure the Senator of my belief that we don't have to worry about it being changed, with the administration about 3 o'clock the morning before last, after long negotiations, and we came to a resolution which at least I know my critics in Vermont and everyone I know has agreed is a wonderful resolution of the problem. I am hopeful we will also be able to get the holds from the other side of the aisle removed expeditiously so this can be passed.

I thank the Senator because he was a leader in this field, and the bill he brought out of the appropriations process was certainly one which was taken into consideration and utilized in the final resolution.

With Senator KENNEDY and Senator FRIST agreeing to it, with the administration, I think we have, for the first time, a real hope this very difficult area of organ transplants and how they will be utilized may have a permanent solution—at least a solution for a foreseeable length of time. A lot of it is due to the efforts of the Senator, and I appreciate it.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my colleague from Vermont for that statement. I want to be sure I have his commitment he will not bring back a conference report to this floor which would water down in any way the bill which came out of his committee yesterday.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I give the Senator those assurances.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my friend from Vermont, and I thank my colleague from West Virginia, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

THE LAST BUDGET RESOLUTION MANAGED BY SENATOR LAUTENBERG

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the conference report on the budget resolution for fiscal year 2001 has been adopted. I note that this will be the last budget resolution to be managed by my good friend from New Jersey, Senator LAUTENBERG. Senator LAUTENBERG joined the Budget Committee in 1985, 2 years after he was first elected to the Senate. Since that time, he has become an expert on the Federal budget process. He has worked hard. He has been diligent in his business.

The Bible says:

> Seest thou a man diligent in his business? he shall stand before kings.

FRANK LAUTENBERG has been diligent in his business. His mastery of Federal budget matters was aided, to a great degree, by his earlier mastery of business matters in the private sector. FRANK LAUTENBERG was one of the founding partners of a company called Automatic Data Processing. That company now employs 37,000 employees and has a market capitalization in excess of $31 billion. Just prior to being elected to the Senate, FRANK LAUTENBERG served as both chairman and chief executive officer of that company. As a businessman, he developed an uncanny ability to perform mathematical calculations in his mind. As such, his staff on the Budget Committee is usually playing catchup, as Senator LAUTENBERG restates budgetary issues in percentage terms.

The people of New Jersey, and, indeed, the people of the United States, have benefited greatly from the business expertise that FRANK LAUTENBERG has brought to the U.S. Senate and especially to his assignment as the ranking member of the Senate Budget Committee. FRANK LAUTENBERG rose to the position of ranking member in 1997, following the retirement of Senator James Exon of Nebraska. Throughout Senator LAUTENBERG's service on the Budget Committee, he has been an extraordinarily able and outspoken advocate of funding for our Nation's children, for the environment, and for transportation.

In addition to serving on the Senate Budget Committee, Senator LAUTENBERG also serves on the Appropriations Committee, where he is ranking member of the very important Subcommittee on Transportation on which I serve. In that regard, Senator LAUTENBERG is eminently well versed in both the budget and appropriations processes.

So I commend Senator LAUTENBERG for his very able service to the Senate and to the Nation in his capacity as ranking member of the Senate Budget Committee. We will miss not only his contributions but also his good humor in future budget debates.

Mr. President:

It isn't enough to say in our hearts
That we like a man for his ways;
It isn't enough that we fill our minds
With psalms of silent praise;
Nor is it enough that we honor a man
As our confidence upward mounts;
It's going right up to the man himself
And telling him so that counts.

If a man does a work that you really admire,
Don't leave a kind word unsaid.
In fear to do so might make him vain
And cause him to lose his head.
But reach out your hand and tell him, ''Well done.''
And see how his gratitude swells.
It isn't the flowers we strew on the grave,
It's the word to the living that tells.

So I say to FRANK LAUTENBERG: Well done.

EASTER—A TIME OF REBIRTH

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, when many people contemplate Easter, thoughts of chocolate bunnies, Easter egg hunts, and family gatherings come to mind. Little girls dream of a new frilly lace-bedecked frock, shiny new patent leather shoes, and a festive bonnet adorned with ribbons and flowers to top it all off. It is hard not to feel an excitement in the air as the daylight hours increase, the winter coats are put away, and the sweet smell of the season's first roses fill the air. The landscape is freshly decorated with a pallet of azaleas, tulips, jonquils, and pink and white flowers of the dogwood. Overnight, it seems, the silhouettes of the tree branches disappear, replaced by the first green buds of spring. Neighbors, who seemed almost strangers during the long dark winter, suddenly greet you from their front porches, and passersby out for an afternoon stroll stop to offer that much-needed gardening advice, or they admire your latest planting. The first aroma of charcoal fills the air as grills are fired up after a long rest. Children play outside after dinner, trying to squeeze in every bit of the daylight into their playtime. Everything seems new, everything seems exciting, everything seems reborn. But during this season of rebirth, how many stop to ponder the true meaning of this most holiest of seasons of the Christian calendar?

Easter, Jesus' resurrection from the dead, was the key belief of the earliest Christians. In fact, that truly miraculous event has made an imprint on other religions and inspired to thought and deed individuals who do not practice the Christian faith. Mohandas K. Gandhi said simply and eloquently:

> Jesus, a man who was completely innocent, offered himself as a sacrifice for the good of others, including his enemies, and became the ransom of the world. It was a perfect act.

The Bible says a great deal about Easter, that central mystery of the Christian faith. That Jesus was crucified and miraculously raised from the dead is hard for many to accept. It was hard for the early Christians to comprehend also, but the faith in the risen Christ spread like a wildfire on a dry and windy summer day!

Easter arrives late this year, on April 23, almost as late as it can possibly be. It is celebrated on a Sunday on varying dates between March 22 and April 25, and is, therefore, called a movable feast. Easter embodies many pre-Christian traditions. The origin of its name is unknown; however, many scholars have accepted the derivation proposed by the 8th-century English scholar St. Bede—that it probably comes from Eastre, the Anglo-Saxon name of a Teutonic goddess of spring and fertility, whose festival was celebrated on the day of the vernal equinox. The Easter rabbit, a symbol of fertility, and colored Easter eggs, originally painted with bright colors to represent the sunlight of spring, and used in egg-rolling contests, are traditions that have survived. According to the New Testament, Christ was crucified on the eve of Passover and soon rose from the dead. The Easter festival commemorated Christ's resurrection. Over time, there were serious differences between the early Christians over the date of the Easter festival. Those of Jewish origin celebrated Easter immediately after Passover, which fell on the evening of the full moon. Therefore, Easter, from year to year, fell on different days of the week. Christians of Gentile origin, on the other hand, wished to commemorate the resurrection on Sunday, the first day of the week. It was on the same day of the week each year, but fell on different dates from year to year. In 325 A.D. Roman Emperor Constantine the Great, who, early in his reign, issued a document allowing Christians to practice their religion within the empire, convoked the Council of Nicaea. The council unanimously ruled that the Easter festival should be celebrated throughout the Christian world on the first Sunday after the full moon following the vernal equinox.

At Easter, we receive again God's greatest gift of love: Jesus. Spring is a time to remember that gift. Death and resurrection are entwined not only in the death and resurrection of our Lord, but also in spring's final struggle with winter's strong grasp. There is a struggle in both dying and in birth and it is logical to think that something must be born in order to die. However, from Jesus' words in John's Gospel, Chapter 12, verses 23 and 24, as Jesus foresees his own death, the Bible tells us something different—it tells us that something must die in order to be born. Jesus says:

> The hour is come, that the Son of man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.

Easter is the time of year that finds many churches overflowing. Parking attendants direct traffic caused by the overflow of cars on this special day. Pews are packed tight. Extra chairs line the aisles, and much of this crowd only sees the inside of a church once a year, and Easter is the day. It is nice to see new faces. Those who attend church every Sunday look around at all the new faces, hoping they will become familiar, and struggle to find their regular seats. The struggle is worth it, however, because some of these same people will come back and join with the community that has worshiped together all year. They will become members of a church family like those who have risen in the darkness to watch the youth group tell the Easter story at sunrise—there is nothing like it, telling it at sunrise—or who are praising God with their voices in the choir, or who cooked the pancake breakfast for Palm Sunday, or who decorated the Sanctuary with Easter Lilies. Perhaps they will be like those who teach the children the meaning of God's love and grace in Sunday school classes. They will find a church home. They will find God. They will be awakened. They will be reborn!

During our lives, we all experience the loss of a loved one. Have you ever thought about the resurrection story in a way that brought you comfort in your time of grief? A little boy recently lost his grandfather, and one day, when he was remembering his grandfather, he said to his mother, ''Mom, Easter will be extra special this year. We will have two reasons to celebrate! Granddad and Jesus have both risen!'' If a 6-year-old can understand the beauty of the Easter story on this level, think of the hope that this celebration can bring to others who are grieving. I talked with one of my constituents on yesterday who lost his wife. I said: Come Eastertime, your wife knows your grief. She knows about your sorrow. And the beauty of the story is, you can see her again. Every year at this time I remember my beloved grandson, Michael, who died in a tragic accident in 1982. I know that he is in a better place, and my faith in the Lord carries me through my sorrow. I can visualize Michael stepping out of the tomb with Christ, and I know that he, too, is ''alive.'' Hear these words of Trappist monk Henri Nouwen:

Easter does not make death less painful or our own grief less heavy. It does not make the loss less real, but Easter makes us see and feel that death is part of a much greater and much deeper event, the fullness of which we cannot comprehend, but which we know is a life-bringing event.

He goes on to say:

The best way I can express to you the meaning death receives in the light of the resurrection of Jesus is to say that the love that causes us so much grief and makes us feel so fully the absurdity of death is stronger than death itself. Love is stronger than death. The same love that makes us mourn and protest against death will now free us to live in hope.

So, Mr. President, let Easter be the time to remember that the tomb is empty, that those who have passed before us have been reborn and will live eternal life. Let us rejoice at this miracle and the miracle of God's love. As we hide Easter eggs for our children, our grandchildren, or even our great grandchildren, and help them search through the green and purple Easter grass for the last sticky marshmallow chick and a handful of jelly beans, let us not forget the gift that God gave us. As Jesus said in the third chapter of the Gospel of John, verse 16:

For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.

These are powerful words, and they are often used as words of persuasion, to bring others to Christ. God gave His only begotten Son . . . for us! What a powerful love that is!

While the Senate is in recess and the schools are closed for ''spring break,'' I hope that those who are listening will take this time to recall this miracle of Easter. I continue to believe that the warp and woof of this great Nation are the deeply rooted religious beliefs of its people. Our religious beliefs, though diverse, our common faith in the Creator, remind all of us to look for the greater good, the higher, better part of ourselves and of others. The lessons differ, but the message is the same. Let us love one another. The resurrection of Jesus is the basis for the Christian belief that not only Jesus, but all Christians, will triumph over death. In closing, I recall the words of William Jennings Bryan and his thoughts concerning Proof of Immortality:

If the Father deigns to touch with divine power the cold and pulseless heart of the buried acorn and to make it burst forth from its prison walls, will He leave neglected in the earth the soul of man, made in the image of his Creator? If He stoops to give to the rosebush, whose withered blossoms float upon the autumn breeze, the sweet assurance of another springtime, will He refuse the words of hope to the sons of men when the frosts of winter come? If matter, mute and inanimate, though changed by the forces of nature into a multitude of forms, can never be destroyed, will the imperial spirit of man suffer annihilation when it has paid a brief visit like a royal guest to this tenement of clay? No, I am sure that He who, notwithstanding His apparent prodigality, created nothing without a purpose, and wasted not a single atom in all His creation, has made provision for a future life in which man's universal longing for immortality will find its realization. I am as sure that we live again as I am sure that we live today.

Mr. President, let us celebrate these words of hope this Easter season. The tomb is empty and the soul of man will never, never die.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. L. CHAFEE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

INDEPENDENT COUNSEL ROBERT RAY

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise tonight to speak in support of the remarks that were made earlier today by the distinguished Senator from Nevada, Mr. REID. Senator REID spoke eloquently about the need for Robert Ray, the independent counsel who assumed duties when Kenneth Starr resigned, to bring that investigation of the President to a close.

The report earlier this week in the Washington Post that Mr. Ray is increasing his budget and his staff in contemplation of a possible indictment of the President after the President leaves office is chilling. Senator REID is right to remind Mr. Ray that this is the United States and not a country such as the old Soviet Union where the abuse of the administration of law was used as a political weapon.

Mr. Ray apparently justifies the continuation of his office and his consideration of an indictment of the President because of his commitment to the principle that no one is above the law.

Certainly in this country that principle is fundamental. That was the theory behind establishing the independent counsel law in the first place. But that principle has two other equally important applications. One is that it means Mr. Ray himself is not above the law; and, two, while it is imperative that top Government officials be treated no better than private citizens, it is equally important that they should also be treated no worse.

The independent counsel law requires that the independent counsel operate as a normal U.S. attorney and that the independent counsel comply with the policies and practices of the Department of Justice.

We require this in the law because we do not want our top Government officials to be treated worse than a private citizen. Yes, we want to make sure our top Government officials do not get preferential treatment, but equally important, we do not want them to be treated unfairly either.

Mr. Ray projects he is going to spend an additional $3.5 million in the next 6 months sifting through the evidence to determine whether or not he should indict the President for perjury in a civil case.

Do any of us think that a U.S. attorney would spend 2 years and tens of millions of dollars investigating a possible perjury charge in a civil suit to begin with? Does anyone think a U.S. attorney would then ask for or receive six new attorneys, additional investigators and contractors, and an additional $3.5 million of taxpayers' money on top of the 40 staff people and above the $52 million that the office had already spent to investigate?

The facts in the Lewinsky case have been sliced and diced and parsed and sifted through over and over again. They have been brutally revealed and thoroughly reviewed detail by detail.

If Mr. Ray is not to be above the law himself, and if he is to abide by the principle he claims to hold dear, then he should do what a U.S. attorney would do in a case like this involving a private citizen—bring it to a close.

The purpose of the independent counsel law is to fairly investigate top Government officials so they are treated no better and no worse than a private citizen. It is, instead, being used to pillory.

Nineteen months ago, Mr. Ray's predecessor, Kenneth Starr—surely a dogged independent counsel—represented to Congress that he was going to end the investigation ''soon.'' That was Mr. Starr's word, ''soon.''

Mr. Starr represented the following to the House of Representatives on September 11, 1998:

All phases of the investigation are now nearing completion. This Office will soon make final decisions about what steps to take, if any, with respect to the other information it has gathered.

Those were Mr. Starr's words 19 months ago when he made the representation to the Congress of the United States and the people of the United States that his office would soon make final decisions about what steps to take, if any.

Mr. Ray's statement, as reported in the Washington Post, that this is still an open investigation and that he wants six new attorneys and $3.5 million more belies Mr. Starr's formal representation to the Congress and to the people. In commenting on Mr. Ray's latest statements, Pulitzer Prize winning columnist Maureen Dowd noted that even Javert, the driven policeman in the book ''Les Miserables,'' who was singularly focused on capturing Jean Valjean ''jumped into the Seine at some point.''

I am not urging Mr. Ray to jump into the Potomac. I am saying—and I am confident that this is the opinion of the majority of the people in our country—that Mr. Ray needs to bring this investigation to a close and to do it now.

The Lewinsky matter is over. The Paula Jones case is over. They were traumatic times for the country. The public has suffered. The President has been punished. It is time to move on. To extend this investigation with new attorneys and more money and more time is to punish the country. The country doesn't deserve it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that today's editorial from the New York Times entitled ''Reining in Robert Ray'' and today's op-ed piece from the Washington Post by Richard Cohen entitled ''Independent Counsel Overkill'' be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 13, 2000]

REINING IN ROBERT RAY

There are worrying signs that Robert Ray, the career prosecutor who succeeded Kenneth Starr as independent counsel investigating President Clinton, shares his clumsy predecessor's problem in winding up an investigation. Mr. Ray at this point should have a concise two-point agenda—to deliver a report summing up the findings of his office, and then go home. Instead he is beefing up his staff. Moreover, he makes it no secret that he is actively considering indicting Mr. Clinton after he leaves office in connection with the same issues that were argued at the impeachment trial last year.

In other words, Mr. Ray intends to drag out his mandate nine more months. ''It is an open investigation,'' he told The Washington Post this week. ''There is a principle to be vindicated, and that principle is that no person is above the law, even the president of the United States.''

Mr. Ray is right about that principle, and we have consistently favored vigorous inquires into the president's personal and campaign finances and his truthfulness under oath.

But respect for the rule of law does not require a suspension of reasonable prosecutorial discretion.

It would be a disservice to the Constitution to set a new precedent of indicting former presidents over offenses adjudicated in the context of impeachment that received an adequate and punishing airing in the Senate trial. Responding to the new stirrings in the independent counsel's office, Vice President Gore said yesterday that Mr. Clinton had no intention of pardoning himself should he be indicted while president, or accepting a pardon from his successor. That is laudable, if true. Yet the possibility of criminal charges against the president should not be on the table at this late date. The nation has moved on, and once he has completed his overdue reports, so should Mr. Ray.

INDEPENDENT COUNSEL OVERKILL

(By Richard Cohen)

Something happens to an ordinary man when he becomes an independent counsel. His chest must swell, his biceps must bulge and he probably cannot pass a phone booth without feeling the urge to change his clothes. Such a man is Robert W. Ray, the successor to Ken Starr, who earlier this week told The Post he just might indict Bill Clinton after the president leaves office. Stay in that phone booth, Bob.

Ray's warning is backed by a reconstitution of the office. Six new lawyers have been hired. A new investigator has been brought on board. An FBI agent has been detailed to the staff, and Ray plans to spend even more money in the next six months than he has in the last—for a total of $6.6 million. From what he says and the way he has been acting, it seems Ray might put the cuffs on Clinton just as the new president says, ''So help me God.''

Why? ''There is a principle to be vindicated,'' he told The Post's David Vise, ''and that principle is that no person is above the law, even the president of the United States.'' This, of course, is the sort of thing you find chiseled over courthouse doors, contradicted only by what transpires in the courthouse itself. Some people are above the law. The envelope, please.

The first is Richard Nixon. Guilty of obstruction of justice, of using our very government to cover up his crimes and lying so often about so much that I don't think he spoke the truth for his entire last year in office, he nonetheless was given a deal: resign the presidency and you will not be indicted. Just to make the deal sweeter, Gerald Ford, his successor, pardoned him.

Next comes Spiro T. Agnew, Nixon's first vice president. A more mendacious fellow never occupied that office. He extorted. He accepted bribes. He lied. Yet he too was allowed to resign his office, pay a wee fine—and go his merry way. An ordinary man would have gone to jail. Agnew too was above the law.

These are not happy facts, but they are true nevertheless. They reflect a coming to terms with reality that, in the end, persuaded prosecutors to abandon their plans to seek indictments. The stakes were greater than the fate of a single man and, besides, some felt Nixon and Agnew had been punished enough. They were ruined men.

The reality is that Clinton, too, has already paid a penalty. He is only the second president to be impeached and he has undergone the most mortifying and virtually molecular examination of his private life. To most Americans, the matter must seem closed. It sure seemed that way to Richard Posner, the federal judge whose wisdom was recently enlisted in a vain attempt to settle the government's case against Microsoft.

Posner is the author of a book about the Clinton investigation, ''An Affair of State,'' for which he was criticized by Ronald Dworkin, a New York University law professor who is as eminent on the left as Posner is on the right. Dworkin wrote recently in the New York Review of Books that as a sitting judge, Posner should never have written about an ''impending'' case.

Nonsense, replied Posner in the current issue. ''A prosecution of President Clinton, while conceivable as a theoretical possibility, is not imminent and in fact will almost certainly never happen.'' He even restated it by saying, ''Almost no issue of policy has a smaller probability of someday becoming a legal case.'' Clearly, Robert Ray has not read Posner.

But he should. We all know Clinton lied. We all believe he perjured himself, and I, for one, do not excuse him for any of it. A president, of all people, should not lie under oath. Still, it has all been played out, talked to death in the House and Senate, yakked to smithereens on television and bound for posterity by Ken Starr.

Ray can indict Clinton anywhere he has a grand jury. But Washington's the town where the president works, where he lives and where he was deposed. If there was a crime, Washington's the crime scene. A trial there would mean a jury pool drawn from a majority black city where, in most neighborhoods, no one has seen a Republican since the Garfield administration. But no matter where he was tried, it likely would be by people who feel that a person who lies about sex, while technically wrong, is guilty only of committing common sense. A conviction is out of the question.

Give it up Bob. Your best way of serving the country is to close down your office, lock the door and put Clinton behind you.

Much of the country already has.

ONE YEAR OF COLUMBINE

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, one week from today, we will memorialize the worst school shooting tragedy in our nation's history. The very mention of Columbine High School strikes a nerve with the American public. It reminds us of a horrendous scene of children, screaming and running from their assailants, while SWAT-teams descended on to their otherwise calm neighborhood. On April 20, this year the nation will remember, but for the students of Columbine, those few hours of April 20, 1999 are replayed over and over again every day in their minds.

The survivors of Columbine revisit the massacre daily. They are reminded of that day by the fragments of ammunition in their bodies, or the scars cut deep in to their skin. When they see trenchcoats, they shudder, when they hear or smell fireworks, they get flashbacks. At such young ages, they have endured unimaginable physical and emotional pain. They have been poked and prodded by nurses, physicians, surgeons, physical, occupational and recreational therapists, and clinical psychologists. Some of them have found peace, others are still angry and frightened. A few can not tell their stories but many can tell them over and over again.

For Columbine-survivor Valeen Schnurr, ''The nights are always the worst.'' Valeen is in college now, but Columbine is still very much with her. She writes, ''Inevitably, I find my thoughts drifting into nightmares, terrifying images of the library at Columbine High School on April 20, 1999. The sound of students screaming as explosives and gunshots echo through the school; the burning pain of the bullets penetrating my body; the sound of my own voice professing my faith in God; seeing my hands fill with my own blood; and my friend Lauren Townsend lying lifeless beside me as I try to wake her.''

''In the mornings when I look in the mirror, the scars I see on my arms and upper body always remind me that it's not just a nightmare, but the memory of a real event that will stay with me for the rest of my life. The scars are a part of me now, but they help me to remember that I've been blessed with a second chance at life.''

Another survivor, Kelsey Bane, talks about how she felt on her first day back at Columbine. ''On August 16, 1999, a new school year began. Only this year, I wasn't full of excitement. Instead, I was full of emotions I can't describe, because I was headed back to my school—Columbine High—for the first time since April 20. I was scared out of my mind, but I knew that whatever I did that day would determine the way I would live the rest of my life. So I went to school; I faced my fears and my nightmares from the past four months and got ready to begin a new school year.''

Over the last year, ''[it] has gotten harder, as I expected it would. Sometimes I can't remember what used to occupy my thoughts, because now my mind is overwhelmed by these horrific experiences. Our lives will never be the same—and I don't think I will ever fully accept that.''

Nicole Nowlen, who was a relatively new student when the tragedy occurred, wrote ''nine pieces of buckshot hit me; four exited and five are still inside. When school started at Chatfield High [in May], I wasn't physically ready, so I finished my sophomore year with a tutor and went back to Columbine in August.''

''It's been like this roller-coaster ride ever since. October and November got too crazy. First they arrested a kid [from Columbine] for making threats to finish the job. Then there was the six-month anniversary, and Mrs. Hochhalter [the mother of Anne Marie Hochhalter who was badly injured] killed herself. In all my classes, the kids never stopped talking about the shooting. It was depressing, so I decided to be home schooled.

''I started seeing a counselor in November . . . Things are better now, so I'm not going anymore. I may go again, but for now I'm at a good point.''

''What helped me the most was Gerda Weissman Klein. She's a 75-year-old Holocaust survivor who came to speak at our school in January. She's really the only one who understands what happened to all of us.''

For the students of Columbine, every day is a struggle, every day takes another act of courage. There is nothing we can do in Congress to change that, but there is something we can do to protect other students from the nightmares, the anger, and the pain, as told by these students. Congress owes it to Columbine to try to end school shootings and reduce access to guns among young people. As of this one-year anniversary, Congress has failed to do so.

Columbine victim Valeen Schnurr wrote, ''People on the outside don't realize how horrible it can actually be. We're the ones who can get everyone motivated and involved in making changes.'' I only hope Valeen is right. Her story should motivate Congress to strengthen our laws and save the lives of America's children.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEFENDING THE INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I was disappointed to hear one of our fine Senators, an able attorney, take the floor just a few minutes ago to commence a new round of attacks, it appears, on the new independent counsel, Mr. Ray.

We went through a period of time in which a person in this country was trying to enforce the law, trying to complete his duty as a sworn officer of the court, an individual asked to serve by the Attorney General of the United States, Mr. Starr, who conducted himself with restraint, propriety and fidelity to duty—a thankless task. He then gave up that office. Now it appears that Mr. Ray will be subjected to the same type of remarks. It is really disturbing and frustrating for me to hear that. I hope we don't hear that beginning. He simply made the obvious statement to the paper that the President can be indicted after he leaves office. He said that the investigation is not complete. He is charged with completing the investigation. He has an obligation to complete it, and he should complete it. I don't think anyone would suggest that he ought to stop before the evidence is gathered, that he ought not to fulfill his duty and responsibility that has been given to him. So I am really concerned about that.

During the impeachment trial—and I hate to even recall that, but I didn't start this discussion tonight—I remember that those on the other side of the aisle said even if a crime were committed, that would be something a prosecutor would deal with but it did not require us to impeach. Obviously, that is true. People could have believed that crime was committed and that an impeachment vote was not required. But that does not suggest a prosecution should not go forward. We have a principle in this country that is chiseled into the walls of the Supreme Court building: Equal Justice Under Law.

The Supreme Court made clear during the Nixon case, and at other times, that no American is above the law. They say, well, you would never prosecute another citizen in America for committing perjury in a civil case. That is silly. Well, I suggest that is not accurate. People are prosecuted for perjury in civil cases. I served as a U.S. attorney for 12 years in Mobile, AL. I remember very distinctly a young police officer who accused the chief of police of corruption. He was his driver. He made allegations in a deposition, and lawsuits were filed against the chief of police in Mobile, AL, who was an African American. They were coming after him. He repeated that under oath, and it turned out to be totally bogus. He eventually admitted it was bogus. He came to me as a U.S. attorney, a Federal prosecutor—it was a Federal lawsuit—and I believed it ought to be prosecuted. We charged that young man for that stupid, perjurious, felonious act. He pleaded guilty to it, as well he should have.

I don't know why the President is above that. If he did a crime, he ought to answer for it. I remember when this matter was at one of its intense points, I shared a private conversation with a distinguished Senator on the other side of the aisle. I shared with him that maybe the President ought to just admit he did something wrong, say he did it to the world, say he didn't tell the truth, ask the Congress to not impeach him, ask the American people for forgiveness, and say when he serves his term and walks out of there, he is willing to plead guilty to any crime he committed and ask for the mercy of the court. Now that would have ended the whole thing. That would have taken a manly act on his part, which I didn't really see occur during that time.

So I don't know how it ought to be handled. But I don't believe a duly appointed special prosecutor needs to be subjected to abuse on the floor of the Senate for doing what he is instructed to do and charged with doing by the courts of America. And to say it is like Russia, I don't appreciate that one bit. What is like Russia is when leaders lie, cheat, steal, and maintain their office.

That is what happens in a country such as Russia, not in a free democracy where all Americans are equal and have a right to know that every other public official is equal and subject to the law just as they are.

I am not suggesting I know what the facts are or that Mr. Ray does or does not have a good case. I have been a prosecutor, and I know what you have to do. A prosecutor has to gather the facts. Then if he has a case, he has to put it out before the whole world. If it is not there, he will be remembered for a bogus and unfair prosecution, if he ever got an indictment from a grand jury, which I doubt he would if he didn't have a good case. I am not afraid of the system. The President is subject to the system as is anyone else.

I wish we could bring this investigation to a close, but I happen to be on the committee involved in an investigation of various matters involving campaign finance and spying and that sort of thing. Senator SPECTER from Pennsylvania chairs it, and Senator TORRICELLI is a member. We have an incredibly difficult time getting information and documents from this Government. No wonder it takes Mr. Starr and Mr. Ray so long and they are frustrated at every turn in obtaining evidence they need to make a legitimate decision and present a legitimate case to a grand jury.

I wish this were over. I wish we never had to talk about it. I don't intend to raise the subject myself. But as a Federal attorney, I have been in court trying to do my duty. I have made up my mind that I am not going to allow somebody who is doing his duty to gather the evidence and make a decision on whether a case ought to go forward to be abused and compared to somebody in Russia. I am not going to allow that. We need to speak out against that, and I intend to do so at every opportunity.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration, en bloc, of the following Energy Committee matters:

S. 397, Calendar No. 448; S. 503, Calendar No. 449; S. 1694, Calendar No. 450; S. 1167, Calendar No. 451; H.R. 150, Calendar No. 452; H.R. 834, Calendar No. 453; H.R. 1231, Calendar No. 454; H.R. 1444, Calendar No. 455; H.R. 2368, Calendar No. 456; H.R. 2862, Calendar No. 457; H.R. 2863, Calendar No. 458; S. 408, Calendar No. 462; S. 1218, Calendar No. 463; S. 1629, Calendar No. 467; H.R. 3090, Calendar No. 488; S. 1797, Calendar No. 494; S. 1892, Calendar No. 497.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that any committee amendments, where applicable, be agreed to, the bills then be considered read the third time and passed, as amended, if amended, any title amendments be agreed to, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements relating to any of these bills appear at this point in the RECORD, with the above occurring en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL MATERIALS CORRIDOR PARTNERSHIP ACT OF 1999

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 397) to authorize the Secretary of Energy to establish a multiagency program in support of the Materials Corridor Partnership Initiative to promote energy efficient, environmentally sound economic development along the border with Mexico through the research, development, and use of new materials technology, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu there of the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''National Materials Corridor and United States-Mexico Border Technology Partnership Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the 2,000 mile long United States-Mexico border region, extending 100 kilometers north and south of the international boundary, has undergone rapid economic growth that has provided economic opportunity to millions of people;

(2) the border region's rapid economic growth has unfortunately created serious problems including pollution, hazardous wastes, and the inefficient use of resources that threaten people's health and the prospects for long-term economic growth in the region;

(3) there are a significant number of major institutions in the border States of both countries currently conducting research, development and testing activities in technologies that might help alleviate these problems;

(4)(A) these new technologies may provide major opportunities for significantly—

(i) minimizing industrial wastes and pollution that may pose a threat to public health;

(ii) reducing emissions of atmospheric pollutants;

(iii) using recycled natural resources as primary materials for industrial production; and

(iv) improving energy efficiency; and

(B) such advances will directly benefit both sides of the United States-Mexico border by encouraging energy efficient, environmentally sound economic development that improves the health and protects the natural resources of the border region;

(5) in August 1998, the binational United States-Mexico Border Region Hazardous Wastes Forum, organized by the Department of Energy's Carlsbad Area Office, resulted in a consensus of experts from the United States and Mexico that the Department of Energy's science and technology could be leveraged to address key environmental issues in the border region while fostering further economic development of the border region;

(6) the Carlsbad Area Office, which manages the Waste Isolation Pilot Plant in Carlsbad, New Mexico, is well suited to lead a multiagency program focused on the problems of the border region given its significant expertise in hazardous materials and location near the border;

(7)(A) promoting clean materials industries in the border region that are energy efficient has been identified as a high priority issue by the United States-Mexico Foundation for Science Cooperation; and

(B) at the 1998 discussions of the United States-Mexico Binational Commission, Mexico formally proposed joint funding of a ''Materials Corridor Partnership Initiative'', proposing $1,000,000 to implement the Initiative if matched by the United States;

(8) recognizing the importance of materials processing, research institutions in the border States of both the United States and Mexico, in conjunction with private sector partners of both nations, and with strong endorsement from the Government of Mexico, in 1998 organized the Materials Corridor Council to implement a cooperative program of materials research and development, education and training, and sustainable industrial development as part of the Materials Corridor Partnership Initiative; and

(9) successful implementation of this Act would advance important United States energy, environmental, and economic goals not only in the United States-Mexico border region but also serve as a model for similar collaborative, transnational initiatives in other regions of the world.

SEC. 3. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to establish a multiagency program to—

(1) alleviate the problems caused by rapid economic development along the United States-Mexico border;

(2) support the Materials Corridor Partnership Initiative referred to in section 2(7); and

(3) promote energy efficient, environmentally sound economic development along that border through the development and use of new technologies, particularly hazardous waste and materials technologies.

SEC. 4. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) PROGRAM.—The term ''program'' means the program established under section 5(a).

(2) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Energy.

SEC. 5. ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a multiagency program to—

(A) alleviate the problems caused by rapid economic development along the United States-Mexico border, particularly those associated with public health and environmental security;

(B) support the Materials Corridor Partnership Initiative; and

(C) promote energy efficient, environmentally sound economic development along that border through the development and use of new technologies, particularly hazardous waste and materials technologies.

(2) CONSIDERATIONS.—In developing the program, the Secretary shall give due consideration to the proposal made to the United States-Mexico Binational Commission for the Materials Corridor Partnership Initiative.

(3) PROGRAM MANAGEMENT.—This program shall be managed for the Secretary by the Department's Carlsbad Area Office, with support, as necessary, from the Albuquerque Operations Office.

(b) PARTICIPATION OF OTHER FEDERAL AGENCIES AND COMMISSIONS.—The Secretary shall organize and conduct the program jointly with—

(1) the Department of State;

(2) the Environmental Protection Agency;

(3) the National Science Foundation;

(4) the National Institute of Standards and Technology;

(5) the United States-Mexico Border Health Commission; and

(6) any other departments, agencies, or commissions the participation of which the Secretary considers appropriate.

(c) PARTICIPATION OF THE PRIVATE SECTOR.—When appropriate, funds made available under this act shall be made available for technology deployment, research, and training activities that are conducted with the participation and support of private sector organizations located in the United States and, subject to section 7(c)(2), Mexico, to promote and accelerate in the United States-Mexico border region the use of energy efficient, environmentally sound technologies and other advances resulting from the program.

(d) MEXICAN RESOURCE CONTRIBUTIONS.—The Secretary shall—

(1) encourage public, private, nonprofit, and academic organizations located in Mexico to contribute significant financial and other resources to the program; and

(2) take any such contributions into account in conducting the program.

(e) TRANSFER OF TECHNOLOGY FROM NATIONAL LABORATORIES.—In conducting the program, the Secretary shall emphasize the transfer and use of technology developed by the national laboratories of the Department of Energy.

SEC. 6. ACTIVITIES AND MAJOR PROGRAM ELEMENTS.

(a) ACTIVITIES.—Funds made available under this Act shall be made available for technology deployment, research, and training activities, particularly related to hazardous waste and materials technologies, that will alleviate the problems caused by rapid economic development along the United States-Mexico border, that focus on issues related to the protection of public health and environmental security, and that promote—

(1) minimization of industrial wastes and pollutants;

(2) reducing emissions of atmospheric pollutants;

(3) use of recycled resources as primary materials for industrial production; and

(4) improvement of energy efficiency.

(b) MAJOR PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The program shall have the following major elements, all of which shall emphasize hazardous waste and materials technologies:

(A) Technology Deployment, focused on the clear, operational demonstration of the utility of well developed technologies in new organizations or settings.

(B) Research, focused on developing, maturing, and refining technologies to investigate or improve the feasibility or utility of the technologies.

(C) Training, focused on training businesses, industries, and their workers in the border region in energy efficient, environmentally sound technologies that minimize waste, decrease public health risks, increase recycling, and improve environmental security.

(2) TECHNOLOGY DEPLOYMENT AND RESEARCH.—Projects under paragraph (1)(A) and (1)(B) should typically involve significant participation from private sector organizations that would use or sell such a technology.

SEC. 7. PARTICIPATION OF DEPARTMENTS, AGENCIES, AND COMMISSIONS OTHER THAN THE DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY.

(a) AGREEMENT.—Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall enter into an agreement with the departments, agencies, and commissions referred to in section 5(b) on the coordination and implementation of the program.

(b) ACTIONS OF DEPARTMENTS, AGENCIES, AND COMMISSIONS.—Any action of a department, agency, or commission under an agreement under subsection (a) shall be the responsibility of that department, agency, or commission and shall not be subject to approval by the Secretary.

(c) USE OF FUNDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and the departments, agencies, and commissions referred to in section 5(b) may use funds made available for the program for technology deployment, research, or training activities carried out by—

(A) State and local governments and academic, nonprofit, and private organizations located in the United States; and

(B) State and local governments and academic, nonprofit, and private organizations located in Mexico.

(2) CONDITION.—Funds may be made available to a State or local government or organization located in Mexico only if a government or organization located in Mexico (which need not be the recipient of the funds) contributes a significant amount of financial or other resources to the project to be funded.

(d) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—The Secretary may transfer funds to the departments, agencies, and commissions referred to in section 5(b) to carry out the responsibilities of the departments, agencies, and commissions under this Act.

SEC. 8. PROGRAM ADVISORY COMMITTEE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish an advisory committee consisting of representatives of the private, academic, and public sectors.

(2) CONSIDERATIONS.—In establishing the advisory committee, the Secretary shall take into consideration organizations in existence on the date of enactment of this Act, such as the Materials Corridor Council and the Business Council for Sustainable Development-Gulf Mexico.

(b) CONSULTATION AND COORDINATION.—Departments, agencies, and commissions of the United States to which funds are made available under this Act shall consult and coordinate with the advisory committee in identifying and implementing the appropriate types of projects to be funded under this Act.

SEC. 9. FINANCIAL AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Federal departments, agencies, and commissions participating in the program may provide financial and technical assistance to other organizations to achieve the purpose of the program.

(b) TECHNOLOGY DEPLOYMENT AND RESEARCH.—

(1) USE OF COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Federal departments, agencies, and commissions shall, to the extent practicable, use cooperative agreements to fund technology deployment and research activities by organizations outside the Federal Government.

(B) NATIONAL LABORATORIES.—In the case of a technology deployment or research activity conducted by a national laboratory, a funding method other than a cooperative agreement may be used if such a funding method would be more administratively convenient.

(2) FEDERAL SHARE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Federal Government shall pay not more than 50 percent of the cost of technology deployment or research activities under the program.

(B) QUALIFIED FUNDING AND RESOURCES.—No funds or other resources expended either before the start of a project under the program or outside the scope of work covered by the funding method determined under paragraph (1) shall be credited toward the non-Federal share of the cost of the project.

(c) TRAINING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Federal departments, agencies, and commissions shall, to the extent practicable, use grants to fund training activities by organizations outside the Federal Government.

(2) NATIONAL LABORATORIES.—In the case of a training activity conducted by a national laboratory, a funding method other than a grant may be used if such a funding method would be more administratively convenient.

(3) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal Government may fund 100 percent of the cost of the training activities of the program.

(d) SELECTION.—All projects funded under contracts, grants, or cooperative agreements established under this program shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be selected in an open, competitive process using such selection criteria as the Secretary, through his program management, and in consultation with the departments, agencies, and commissions referred to in section 5(b), determines to be appropriate. Any such selection process shall weigh the benefits to the border region.

(e) ACCOUNTING STANDARDS.—

(1) WAIVER.—To facilitate participation in the program, Federal departments, agencies, and commissions may waive any requirements for Government accounting standards by organizations that have not established such standards.

(2) GAAP.—Generally accepted accounting principles shall be sufficient for projects under the program.

(f) NO CONSTRUCTION.—No program funds may be used for construction.

SEC. 10. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this Act $10,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2000 through 2004.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill (S. 397), as amended, was passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

To authorize the Secretary of Energy to establish a multiagency program to alleviate the problems caused by rapid economic development along the United States-Mexico border, particularly those associated with public health and environmental security, to support the Materials Corridor Partnership Initiative, and to promote energy efficient, environmentally sound economic development along that border through the development and use of new technology, particularly hazardous waste and materials technology.

SPANISH PEAKS WILDERNESS ACT OF 1999

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 503) designating certain land in the San Isabel National Forest in the State of Colorado as the ''Spanish Peaks Wilderness'', which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment, as follows:

S. 503

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Spanish Peaks Wilderness Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. DESIGNATION OF SPANISH PEAKS WILDERNESS.

(a) COLORADO WILDERNESS ACT.—Section 2(a) of the Colorado Wilderness Act of 1993

(Public Law 103–77; 107 Stat. 756; 16 U.S.C. 1132 note) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(20) SPANISH PEAKS WILDERNESS.—Certain land in the San Isabel National Forest that—

''(A) comprises approximately 18,000 acres, as generally depicted on a map entitled 'Proposed Spanish Peaks Wilderness', dated February 10, 1999; and

''(B) shall be known as the 'Spanish Peaks Wilderness'.''.

(b) MAP; BOUNDARY DESCRIPTION.—

(1) FILING.—As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture (referred to in this Act as the ''Secretary''), shall file a map and boundary description of the area designated under subsection (a) with—

(A) the Committee on Resources of the House of Representatives; and

(B) the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate.

(2) FORCE AND EFFECT.—The map and boundary description under paragraph (1) shall have the same force and effect as if included in the Colorado Wilderness act of 1993 (Public Law 103–77; 107 Stat. 756), except that the Secretary may correct clerical and typographical errors in the map and boundary description.

(3) AVAILABILITY.—The map and boundary description under paragraph (1) shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Chief of the Forest Service.

[SEC. 3. ACCESS.

[Within the Spanish Peaks Wilderness designated under section 2—

[(1) the Secretary shall allow the continuation of historic uses of the Bulls Eye Mine Road established prior to the date of enactment of this Act, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may provide; and

[(2) access to any privately owned land within the wilderness areas designated under section 2 shall be provided in accordance with section 5 of the Wilderness Act (16 U.S.C. 1134 et seq.).]

SEC. 3. ACCESS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall allow the continuation of historic uses of the Bulls Eye Mine Road established before the date of enactment of this Act, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary may provide.

(b) PRIVATELY OWNED LAND.—Access to any privately owned land within the wilderness areas designated under section 2 shall be provided in accordance with section 5 of the Wilderness Act (16 U.S.C. 1134 et seq.).

SEC. 4. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

Section 10 of the Colorado Wilderness Act of 1993 (Public Law 103–77; 107 Stat. 756; 16 U.S.C. 1132 note) is repealed.

The committee amendment was agreed to. The bill (S. 503), as amended, was passed.

HAWAII WATER RESOURCES RECLAMATION ACT OF 1999

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1694) direct the Secretary of the Interior to conduct a study on the reclamation and reuse of water and wastewater in the State of Hawaii, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment, as follows:

S. 1694

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Hawaii Water Resources Reclamation Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the Act of August 23, 1954 (68 Stat. 773, chapter 838) authorized the Secretary of the Interior to investigate the use of irrigation and reclamation resource needs for areas of the islands of Oahu, Hawaii, and Molokai in the State of Hawaii;

(2) section 31 of the Hawaii Omnibus Act (43 U.S.C. 422*l*) authorizes the Secretary to develop reclamation projects in the State under the Act of August 6, 1956 (70 Stat. 1044, chapter 972; 42 U.S.C. 422a et seq.) (commonly known as the ''Small Reclamation Projects Act'');

(3) the amendment made by section 207 of the Hawaiian Home Lands Recovery Act (109 Stat. 364; 25 U.S.C. 386a) authorizes the Secretary to assess charges against Native Hawaiians for reclamation cost recovery in the same manner as charges are assessed against Indians or Indian tribes;

(4) there is a continuing need to manage, develop, and protect water and water-related resources in the State; and

(5) the Secretary should undertake studies to assess needs for the reclamation of water resources in the State.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(2) STATE.—The term ''State'' means the State of Hawaii.

SEC. 4. WATER RESOURCES RECLAMATION STUDY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Commissioner of Reclamation, shall conduct a study that includes—

(1) a survey of irrigation and water delivery systems in the State;

(2) an estimation of the cost of repair and rehabilitation of the irrigation and water delivery systems;

(3) an evaluation of options for future use of the irrigation and water delivery systems (including alternatives that would improve the use and conservation of water resources); and

(4) the identification and investigation of other opportunities for reclamation and reuse of water and wastewater for agricultural and nonagricultural purposes.

(b) REPORTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than [1 year after the date of enactment of this Act,] 2 years after appropriation of funds authorized by this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report that describes the findings and recommendations of the study described in subsection (a) to—

(A) the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate; and

(B) the Committee on Resources of the House of Representatives.

(2) ADDITIONAL REPORTS.—The Secretary shall submit to the Committees described in paragraph (1) any additional reports concerning the study described in subsection (a) that the Secretary considers to be necessary.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as are necessary to carry out this section.

SEC. 5. WATER RECLAMATION AND REUSE.

Section 1602(b) of the Reclamation Wastewater and Groundwater Study and Facilities Act (43 U.S.C. 390h(b)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: '', and the State of Hawaii''.

SEC. 6. DROUGHT RELIEF.

Section 104 of the Reclamation States Emergency Drought Relief Act of 1991 (43 U.S.C. 2214) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by inserting after ''Reclamation State'' the following: ''and in the State of Hawaii''; and

(2) in subsection (c), by striking ''ten years after the date of enactment of this Act'' and inserting ''on September 30, 2005''.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1694), as amended, was passed.

INDEPENDENT SCIENTIFIC REVIEW PANEL OF THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST ELECTRIC POWER PLANNING COUNCIL

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1167) amend the Pacific Northwest Electric Power Planning and Conservation Act to provide for expanding the scope of the Independent Scientific Review Panel which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment as follows:

S. 1167

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REVIEW OF REIMBURSABLE PROJECTS, PROGRAMS, AND MEASURES BY THE INDEPENDENT SCIENTIFIC REVIEW PANEL OF THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST ELECTRIC POWER PLANNING COUNCIL.

Section 4(h)(10)(D) of the Pacific Northwest Electric Power Planning and Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 839b(h)(10)(D)) is amended by striking clauses (vii) and (viii) and inserting the following:

''(vii) REVIEW BY THE PANEL OF REIMBURSABLE PROJECTS, PROGRAMS, AND MEASURES.—

''(I) IN GENERAL.—With regard to Columbia Basin fish and wildlife projects, programs or measures proposed in a Federal agency budget to be reimbursed by BPA, or paid through a direct funding agreement with BPA, the panel shall annually—

''(aa) review such proposals;

''(bb) determine whether the proposals are consistent with the criteria stated in item (iv);

''(cc) make any recommendations that the Panel considers appropriate to make the project, program, or measure meet the criteria stated in item (iv); and

''(dd) transmit the recommendations to the Council no later than April 1 of each year.

''(II) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY AND COMMENT.—Determinations and recommendations made by the panel under subclause (I) shall be available to the public and shall be subject to public comment as in item (v).

''(III) ROLE OF THE COUNCIL.—The Council shall fully consider the recommendations of the Panel when making its final recommendations of projects proposed by Federal agencies and reimbursed by BPA, or paid through a direct funding agreement with BPA. The Council shall submit its recommendations to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations and relevant authorizing committees, and the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Reclamation, and the Bonneville Power Administration no later than May 15 of each year. If the Council does not incorporate a recommendation of the Panel in its recommendations, the Council shall explain in writing its reasons for not accepting Panel recommendations.

''(viii) COST LIMITATION.—The annual cost of this provision shall not exceed $750,000 in 1997 dollars.''.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1167), as amended, was passed.

EDUCATION LAND GRANT ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 150) to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to convey National Forest System land for use for educational purposes, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''National Forest Education and Community Purpose Lands Act''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) communities adjacent to and surrounded by National Forest System land have limited opportunities to acquire land for recreational, educational and other public purposes;

(2) in many cases, such recreational, educational and other public purposes are not within the mission of the Forest Service, but would not be inconsistent with land and resource management plans developed for the adjacent national forest;

(3) such communities are often unable to acquire land for such recreational, educational and other public purposes due to extremely high market value of private land resulting from the predominance of Federal land in the local area; and

(4) the national forests and adjacent communities would mutually benefit from a process similar to that available to the Bureau of Land Management under the Act of June 14, 1926 (commonly known as the ''Recreation and Public Purposes Act'') (43 U.S.C. 869 et seq.).

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCE.—The term ''hazardous substance'' has the meaning given the term in section 101 of the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (42 U.S.C. 9601).

(2) PARCEL.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The term ''parcel'' means a parcel of land under the jurisdiction of the Forest Service that has been withdrawn from the public domain.

(B) EXCLUSION.—The term ''parcel'' does not include land set aside or held for the benefit of Indians.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Agriculture, acting through the Chief of the Forest Service.

SEC. 4. DISPOSAL OF NATIONAL FOREST SYSTEM LAND FOR PUBLIC PURPOSES.

(a) AUTHORITY.—Upon receipt and approval of an application in writing, the Secretary may dispose of National Forest System land to a State or a political subdivision of a State as provided in this section on the condition that the parcel be used for recreational, educational and other public purposes, as determined by the Secretary.

(b) CONDITIONS OF DISPOSAL, TRANSFER OF TITLE, OR CHANGE IN USE.—Before any parcel may be disposed of or any application for a transfer of title to or a change in use of a parcel is approved under this section, the Secretary shall determine that—

(1) the parcel is to be used for an established or proposed project that is described in detail in the application to the Secretary, and that would serve public objectives (either locally or at large) that outweigh the objectives and values which would be served by maintaining such parcel in Federal ownership;

(2) the applicant is financially and otherwise capable of implementing the proposed project; and

(3) the acreage is not more than is reasonably necessary for the proposed use.

(c) PUBLIC PARTICIPATION.—The Secretary shall provide an opportunity for public participation in a disposal under this section, including at least one public hearing or meeting, to provide for public comments.

(d) REVIEW OF APPLICATIONS.—

(a) IN GENERAL.—When the Secretary receives an application under this section to convey a parcel for recreational, educational, or other public purposes related to emergency services, the Secretary shall—

(A) before the end of the 14-day period beginning on the date of the receipt of the application, provide notice of that receipt to the applicant; and

(B) before the end of the 120-day period beginning on that date—

(i) make a final determination whether or not to convey land pursuant to the application, and notify the applicant of that determination; or

(ii) submit written notice to the applicant containing the reasons why a final determination has not been made.

(2) OTHER APPLICATIONS.—When the Secretary receives an application under this section to convey a parcel for any public purposes other than those under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall—

(A) before the end of the 14-day period beginning on the date of the receipt of the application, provide notice of that receipt to the applicant; and

(B) take reasonable actions necessary to make a final determination whether or not to convey land pursuant to the application, and notify the applicant of that determination, to the extent practicable, before the end of the 180-day period beginning on that date.

(e) PARCELS WITHDRAWN IN AID OF FUNCTIONS OF FEDERAL AND STATE AGENCIES.—If a parcel has been withdrawn in aid of a function of a Federal agency other than the Department of Agriculture or of an agency of a State or political subdivision of a State (including a water district), the Secretary may dispose of the parcel under this section only with the consent of the agency.

(f) CONVEYANCES AND LEASES.—

(1) CONVEYANCES.—The Secretary may convey a parcel to the State or a political subdivision of a State in which the parcel is located if the proposed use is not inconsistent with the land allocations within applicable land and resource management plans under the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 (16 U.S.C. 1600 et seq.)

(2) LEASES.—The Secretary may lease a parcel to the State or a political subdivision of a State in which the parcel is located, at a reasonable annual rental, for a period up to 25 years, and, at the discretion of the Secretary, with a privilege of renewal for a like period, if the proposed use is not inconsistent with the land allocations within applicable land and resource management plans under the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974 (16 U.S.C. 1600 et seq.)

(3) CONSIDERATION.—The conveyance or lease of a parcel for purposes under this section shall be made at a price to be fixed by the Secretary, consistent with the pricing structure established by the Secretary of the Interior under the Act of June 14, 1926 (43 U.S.C. 869 et seq.).

(g) ACREAGE LIMITATIONS AND PROPERTY DESCRIPTIONS.—

(1) ACREAGE LIMITATIONS.—A conveyance under this section may not exceed 100 acres, unless the parcel contains facilities that have been determined by the Secretary to be suitable for disposal under the authority of the General Services Administration. This limitation shall not be construed to preclude an entity from submitting subsequent applications under this section for additional land conveyances if the entity can demonstrate to the Secretary a need for additional land.

(2) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—If necessary, the exact acreage and legal description the real property conveyed under this subsection shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary and the applicant. The cost of the survey shall be borne by the applicant.

(3) RECREATION AND PURPOSES ACT.—Section 1 of the Act of June 14, 1926 (commonly known as the ''Recreation and Public Purposes Act''; 43 U.S.C. 869), as amended, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''(d) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—If necessary, the exact acreage and legal description of the real property conveyed under this section shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary and the applicant. The cost of the survey shall be borne by the applicant.''.

(h) RESERVATION OF MINERAL RIGHTS.—Each conveyance or lease under this section shall contain a reservation to the United States of all mineral deposits in the parcel conveyed or leased and of the right to mine and remove the mineral deposits under applicable laws (including regulations).

(i) USE OF THE LEASED LAND FOR UNAUTHORIZED PURPOSES.—Each lease under this section shall contain a provision for termination of the lease on a finding by the Secretary that—

(1) the parcel has not been used by the lessee as specified in the lease of a period greater than 5 years; or

(2) the parcel or any part of the parcel is being devoted to a use other than that for which the lease was made.

(j) CONDITIONS OF CONVEYANCE; REVERSION FOR NONCOMPLIANCE.—

(1) CONDITIONS OF CONVEYANCE.—

(A) TRANSFER OF TITLE.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), title to a parcel conveyed by the Secretary under this section may not be transferred by the grantee or a successor of the grantee.

(ii) EXCEPTION.—With the consent of the Secretary in accordance with this section, title to a parcel may be transferred to the State or a political subdivision of the State in which the parcel is located.

(B) USE.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), a grantee or a successor of the grantee may not change the use specified in the conveyance of a parcel under this section to another or additional use.

(ii) EXCEPTION.—Upon application and appropriate public participation, the Secretary may approve a change in use of a parcel to anther recreational, educational or other public use, in accordance with this section.

(2) REVERSION FOR NONCOMPLIANCE.—If at any time after a parcel is conveyed by the Secretary, the grantee or a successor of the grantee, without the consent of the Secretary, attempts to transfer title to or control over the parcel to another person or entity or to devote the parcel to a use other than that for which the parcel was conveyed, title to the parcel shall revert to the United States.

(k) PRIOR CONVEYANCES.—On application by the State or a political subdivision of the State in which the parcel is located, the Secretary may authorize a transfer of title or a change in use in accordance with subsection (j) with respect to any parcel conveyed under this section or any other law.

(l) SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL SITES.—

(1) CONVEYANCE FOR THE PURPOSES OF SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL.—If the Secretary receives an application for conveyance of a parcel under this section for the purpose of solid waste disposal or for another purpose that the Secretary finds may include the disposal, placement, or release of any hazardous substance, the Secretary may convey the parcel subject only to this subsection.

(2) INVESTIGATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Before any conveyance of a parcel under this subsection, the Secretary shall investigate the parcel to determine whether any hazardous substance is present on the parcel.

(B) ELEMENTS OF AN INVESTIGATION.—An investigation under subparagraph (A) shall include—

(i) a review of any available records of the use of the parcel; and

(ii) all appropriate analyses of the soil, water and air associated with the parcel.

(C) PRESENCE OF A HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCE.—A parcel shall not be conveyed under this subsection if the investigation indicates that any hazardous substance is present on the parcel.

(3) SUBMISSION TO OTHER STATE AND FEDERAL AGENCIES.—No application for conveyance under this subsection shall be acted on by the Secretary until the applicant has furnished evidence, satisfactory to the Secretary, that a copy of the application and information concerning the proposed use of the parcel covered by the application has been provided to the Environmental Protection Agency and to all other State and Federal agencies with responsibility for enforcement of Federal and State laws applicable to land used for the disposal, placement, or release of solid waste or any hazardous substance.

(4) WARRANTY.—No application for conveyance under this subsection shall be acted on by the Secretary until the applicant gives a warranty that—

(A) use of the parcel covered by the application will be consistent with all applicable Federal and State laws, including laws dealing with the disposal, placement, or release of hazardous substances; and

(B) the applicant will hold the United States harmless from any liability that may arise out of any violation of any such law.

(5) REQUIREMENTS.—A conveyance under this subsection shall be made to the extent that the applicant demonstrates to the Secretary that the parcel covered by an application meets all applicable State and local requirements and is appropriate in character and reasonable in acreage in order to meet an existing or reasonably anticipated need for solid waste disposal or for another proposed use that the Secretary finds may include the disposal, placement, or release of any hazardous substance.

(6) CONDITIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—A conveyance of a parcel under this subsection shall be subject to the conditions stated in this paragraph.

(B) REVERTER.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—The instrument of conveyance shall provide that the parcel shall revert to the United States unless substantially all of the parcel has been used, on or before the date that is 5 years after the date of conveyance, for the purpose specified in the application, or for other use or uses authorized under subsection (b) with the consent of the Secretary.

(ii) LIMITATION.—No portion of a parcel that has been used for solid waste disposal or for any other purpose that the Secretary finds may result in the disposal, placement, or lease of a hazardous substance shall revert to the United States.

(C) PAYMENT TO THE SECRETARY ON FURTHER CONVEYANCE.—If at any time after conveyance any portion of a parcel has not been used for the purpose specified in the application, and the entity to which the parcel was conveyed by the Secretary transfers ownership of the unused portion to any other person or entity, transferee shall be liable to pay the Secretary the fair market value of the transferred portion as of the date of the transfer, including the value of any improvements thereon.

(D) USE OF PAYMENTS.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, all amounts received by the Secretary under subparagraph (C) shall be retained by the Secretary, shall be available to the Secretary for use for the management of National Forest System land, and shall remain available until expended.

CONVEYANCE OF NATIONAL FOREST LAND TO ELKO COUNTY, NEVADA

The bill (H.R. 1231) to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain National Forest lands to Elko County, Nevada, for continued use as a cemetery, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H.R. 1231

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. CONVEYANCE OF NATIONAL FOREST LANDS TO ELKO COUNTY, NEVADA, FOR USE AS CEMETERY.

(a) REQUIREMENT TO CONVEY.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall convey, without consideration, to Elko County, Nevada, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the real property described in subsection (b).

(b) DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The property referred to in subsection (a) consists of: (A) a parcel of National Forest lands (including any improvements thereon) in Elko County, Nevada, known as Jarbidge Cemetery, consisting of approximately 2 acres within the following described lands: NE¼ SW¼ NW¼, S. 9 T. 46 N, R. 58 E., MDB&M, which shall be used as a cemetary; and (B) the existing bridge over the Jarbidge River that provides access to that parcel, and the road from the bridge to the parcel as depicted on the map entitled 'Elko County Road and Bridge Conveyance' dated July 27, 1999.

(2) SURVEY.—The exact acreage and legal description of the property to be conveyed under subsection (a) shall be determined by a survey satisfactory to the Secretary. As a condition of any conveyance under this section, the Secretary shall require that the cost of the survey shall be borne by the County.

(c) ADDITIONAL TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—The Secretary may require such additional terms and conditions with respect to the conveyance under subsection (a) as the Secretary considers appropriate to protect the interests of the United States, except that the Secretary may not retain for the United States any reversionary interest in property conveyed under this section.

IRRIGATION MITIGATION AND RESTORATION PARTNERSHIP ACT OF 1999

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 1444) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to plan, design, and construct fish screens, fish passage devices, and related features to mitigate adverse impacts associated with irrigation system water diversions by local governmental entities in the State of Oregon, Washington, Montana, Idaho, and California, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Irrigation Mitigation and Restoration Partnership Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) PACIFIC OCEAN DRAINAGE AREA.—The term ''Pacific Ocean drainage area'' means the area comprised of portions of the States of Oregon, Washington, Montana, and Idaho from which water drains into the Pacific Ocean.

(2) PROGRAM.—The term ''Program'' means the Irrigation Mitigation and Restoration Partnership Program established by section 3(a).

(3) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF THE PARTNERSHIP PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established the Irrigation Mitigation and Restoration Partnership Program within the Department of the Interior.

(b) GOALS.—The goals of the Program are—

(1) to decrease fish mortality associated with the withdrawal of water for irrigation and other purposes without impairing the continued withdrawal of water for those purposes; and

(2) to decrease the incidence of juvenile and adult fish entering water supply systems.

(c) IMPACTS ON FISHERIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Under the Program, the Secretary, in consultation with the heads of other appropriate agencies, shall develop and implement projects to mitigate impacts to fisheries resulting from the construction and operation of water diversions by local governmental entities, including water and soil conservation districts, in the Pacific Ocean drainage area.

(2) TYPES OF PROJECTS.—Projects eligible under the Program may include the development, improvement, or installation of—

(A) fish screens;

(B) fish passage devices;

(C) other facilities agreed to by non-Federal interests, relevant Federal and tribal agencies, and affected States; and

(D) inventories by the States on the need and priority for projects described in subparagraphs (A) through (C).

(3) PRIORITY.—The Secretary shall give priority to any project that has a total cost of less than $5,000,000.

SEC. 4. PARTICIPATION IN THE PROGRAM.

(a) NON-FEDERAL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Non-Federal participation in the Program shall be voluntary.

(2) FEDERAL ACTION.—The Secretary shall take no action that would result in any non-Federal entity being held financially responsible for any action under the Program, unless the entity applies to participate in the Program.

(b) FEDERAL.—Development and implementation of projects under the Program on land or facilities owned by the United States shall be nonreimbursable Federal expenditures.

SEC. 5. EVALUATION AND PRIORITIZATION OF PROJECTS.

Evaluation and prioritization of projects for development under the Program shall be conducted on the basis of—

(1) benefits to fish species native to the project area, particularly to species that are listed as being, or considered by Federal or State authorities to be, endangered, threatened, or sensitive;

(2) the size and type of water diversion;

(3) the availability of other funding sources;

(4) cost effectiveness; and

(5) additional opportunities for biological or water delivery system benefits.

SEC. 6. ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A project carried out under the Program shall not be eligible for funding unless—

(1) the project meets the requirements of the Secretary, as applicable, and any applicable State requirements; and

(2) the project is agreed to by all Federal and non-Federal entities with authority and responsibility for the project.

(b) DETERMINATION OF ELIGIBILITY.—In determining the eligibility of a project under this Act, the Secretary shall—

(1) consult with other Federal, State, tribal, and local agencies; and

(2) make maximum use of all available data.

SEC. 7. COST SHARING.

(a) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the cost of development and implementation of any project under the Program on land or at a facility that is not owned by the United States shall be 35 percent.

(b) NON-FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—The non-Federal participants in any project under the Program on land or at a facility that is not owned by the United States shall provide all land, easements, rights-of-way, dredged material disposal areas, and relocations necessary for the project.

(c) CREDIT FOR CONTRIBUTIONS.—The value of land, easements, rights-of-way, dredged material disposal areas, and relocations provided under subsection (b) for a project shall be credited toward the non-Federal share of the costs of the project.

(d) ADDITIONAL COSTS.—

(1) NON-FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITIES.—The non-Federal participants in any project carried out under the Program on land or at a facility that is not owned by the United States shall be responsible for all costs associated with operating, maintaining, repairing, rehabilitating, and replacing the project.

(2) FEDERAL RESPONSIBILITY.—The Federal Government shall be responsible for costs referred to in paragraph (1) for projects carried out on Federal land or at a Federal facility.

SEC. 8. LIMITATION ON ELIGIBILITY FOR FUNDING.

A project that receives funds under this Act shall be ineligible to receive Federal funds from any other source for the same purpose.

SEC. 9. REPORT.

On the expiration of the third fiscal year for which amounts are made available to carry out this Act, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report describing—

(1) the projects that have been completed under this Act;

(2) the projects that will be completed with amounts made available under this Act during the remaining fiscal years for which amounts are authorized to be appropriated under section 10; and

(3) recommended changes to the Program as a result of projects that have been carried out under this Act.

SEC. 10. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this Act $25,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

(b) LIMITATIONS.—

(1) SINGLE STATE.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), not more than 25 percent of the total amount of funds made available under this section may be used for 1 or more projects in any single State.

(B) WAIVER.—On notification to Congress, the Secretary may waive the limitation under subparagraph (A) if a State is unable to use the entire amount of funding made available to the State under this Act.

(2) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Not more than 6 percent of the funds authorized under this section for any fiscal year may be used for Federal administrative expenses of carrying out this Act.

Amend the title so as to read: ''A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to establish a program to plan, design, and construct facilities to mitigate impacts associated with irrigation system water diversions by local governmental entities in the Pacific Ocean drainage of the States of Oregon, Washington, Montana, and Idaho.''.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill (H.R. 455), as amended, was passed.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1218), aas amended, was passed.

OREGON LAND EXCHANGE ACT OF 1999

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1629) to provide for the exchange of certain land in the State of Oregon, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Oregon Land Exchange Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) certain parcels of private land located in northeast Oregon are intermingled with land owned by the United States and administered—

(A) by the Secretary of the Interior as part of the Central Oregon Resource Area in the Prineville Bureau of Land Management District and the Baker Resource Area in the Vale Bureau of Land Management District; and

(B) by the Secretary of Agriculture as part of the Malheur National Forest, the Wallowa-Whitman National Forest, and the Umatilla National Forest;

(2) the surface estate of the private land described in paragraph (1) is intermingled with parcels of land that are owned by the United States or contain valuable fisheries and wildlife habitat desired by the United States;

(3) the consolidation of land ownerships will facilitate sound and efficient management for both public and private lands;

(4) the improvement of management efficiency through the land tenure adjustment program of the Department of the Interior, which disposes of small isolated tracts having low public resource values within larger blocks of contiguous parcels of land, would serve important public objectives, including—

(A) the enhancement of public access, aesthetics, and recreation opportunities within or adjacent to designated wild and scenic river corridors;

(B) the protection and enhancement of habitat for threatened, endangered, and sensitive species within unified landscapes under Federal management; and

(C) the consolidation of holdings of the Bureau of Land Management and the Forest Service—

(i) to facilitate more efficient administration, including a reduction in administrative costs to the United States; and

(ii) to reduce right-of-way, special use, and other permit processing and issuance for roads and other facilities on Federal land;

(5) time is of the essence in completing a land exchange because further delays may force the identified landowners to construct roads in, log, develop, or sell the private land and thereby diminish the public values for which the private land is to be acquired; and

(6) it is in the public interest to complete the land exchanges at the earliest practicable date so that the land acquired by the United States can be preserved for—

(A) protection of threatened and endangered species habitat; and

(B) permanent public use and enjoyment.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(1) the term ''Clearwater'' means Clearwater Land Exchange—Oregon, an Oregon partnership that signed the document entitled ''Assembled Land Exchange Agreement between the Bureau of Land Management and Clearwater Land Exchange—Oregon for the Northeast Oregon Assembled Lands Exchange, OR 51858,'' dated October 30, 1996, and the document entitled ''Agreement to initiate'' with the Forest Service, dated June 30, 1995, or its successors or assigns;

(2) the term ''identified landowners'' means private landowners identified by Clearwater and willing to exchange private land for Federal land in accordance with this Act;

(3) the term ''map'' means the map entitled ''Northeast Oregon Assembled Land Exchange/

Triangle Land Exchange'', dated November 5, 1999; and

(4) the term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture, as appropriate.

SEC. 4. BLM—NORTHEAST OREGON ASSEMBLED LAND EXCHANGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon the request of Clearwater, on behalf of the appropriate identified landowners, the Secretary of the Interior shall exchange the Federal lands described in subsection (b) for the private lands described in subsection (c), as provided in section 6.

(b) BLM LANDS TO BE CONVEYED.—The parcels of Federal lands to be conveyed by the Secretary to the appropriate identified landowners are as follows:

(1) the parcel comprising approximately 45,824 acres located in Grant County, Oregon, within the Central Oregon Resource Area in the Prineville District of the Bureau of Land Management, as generally depicted on the map;

(2) the parcel comprising approximately 2,755 acres located in Wheeler County, Oregon, within the Central Oregon Resource Area in the Prineville District of the Bureau of Land Management, as generally depicted on the map;

(3) the parcel comprising approximately 726 acres located in Morrow Country, Oregon, within the Baker Resource Area of the Vale District of Land Management, as generally depicted on the map; and

(4) the parcel comprising approximately 1,015 acres located in Umatilla County, Oregon, within the Baker Resource Area in the Vale District of the Bureau of Land Management, as generally depicted on the map.

(c) PRIVATE LANDS TO BE ACQUIRED.—The parcel of private lands to be conveyed by the appropriate identified landowners to the Secretary are as follows:

(1) the parcel comprising approximately 31,646 acres located in Grant County, Oregon, within the Central Oregon Resource Area in the Prineville District of the Bureau of Land Management, as generally depicted on the map;

(2) the parcel comprising approximately 1,960 acres located in Morrow County, Oregon, within the Baker Resource Area in the Vale District of the Bureau of Land Management, as generally depicted on the map; and

(3) the parcel comprising approximately 10,544 acres located in Umatilla County, Oregon, within the Baker Resource Area in the Vale District of the Bureau of Land Management, as generally depicted on the map.

SEC. 5. FOREST SERVICE—TRIANGLE LAND EXCHANGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon the request of Clearwater, on behalf of the appropriate identified landowners, the Secretary of Agriculture shall exchange the Federal lands described in subsection (b) for the private lands described in subsection (c), as provided in section 6.

(b) FOREST SERVICE LANDS TO BE CONVEYED.—The National Forest System lands to be conveyed by the Secretary to the appropriate identified landowners comprise approximately 3,901 acres located in Grant and Harney Counties, Oregon, within the Malheur National Forest, as generally depicted on the map.

(c) PRIVATE LANDS TO BE ACQUIRED.—The parcels of private lands to be conveyed by the appropriate identified landowners to the Secretary are as follows:

(1) the parcel comprising approximately 3,752 acres located in Grant and Harney Counties, Oregon, within the Malheur National Forest, as generally depicted on the map;

(2) the parcel comprising approximately 1,702 acres located in Baker and Grant Counties, Oregon, within the Wallowa-Whitman National Forest, as generally depicted on the map; and

(3) the parcel comprising approximately 246 acres located in Grant and Wallowa Counties, Oregon, within or adjacent to the Umatilla National Forest, as generally depicted on the map.

SEC. 6. LAND EXCHANGE TERMS AND CONDITIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the land exchanges implemented by this Act shall be conducted in accordance with section 206 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (43 U.S.C. 1716) and other applicable laws.

(b) MULTIPLE TRANSACTIONS.—The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture may carry out a single or multiple transactions to complete the land exchanges authorized in this Act.

(c) COMPLETION OF EXCHANGES.—Any land exchange under this Act shall be completed not later than 90 days after the Secretary and Clearwater reach an agreement on the final appraised values of the lands to be exchanged.

(d) APPRAISALS.—The values of the lands to be exchanged under this Act shall be determined by appraisals using nationally recognized appraisal standards, including as appropriate—

(A) the Uniform Appraisal Standards for Federal Land Acquisitions (1992); and

(B) the Uniform Standards of Professional Appraisal Practice.

(2) To ensure the equitable and uniform appraisal of the lands to be exchanged under this Act, all appraisals shall determine the best use of the lands in accordance with the law of the State of Oregon, including use for the protection of wild and scenic river characteristics as provided in the Oregon Administrative Code.

(3)(A) all appraisals of lands to be exchanged under this Act shall be completed, reviewed and submitted to the Secretary not later than 90 days after the date Clearwater requests the exchange.

(B) Not less than 45 days before an exchange of lands under this Act is completed, a comprehensive summary of each appraisal for the specific lands to be exchanged shall be available for public inspection in the appropriate Oregon offices of the Secretary, for a 15-day period.

(4) After the Secretary approves the final appraised values of any parcel of the lands to be conveyed under this Act, the value of such parcel shall not be reappraised or updated before the completion of the applicable land exchange, except for any adjustments in value that may be required under subsection (e)(2).

(e) EQUAL VALUE LAND EXCHANGE.—(1)(A) The value of the lands to be exchanged under this Act shall be equal, or if the values are not equal, they shall be equalized in accordance with section 206(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (43 U.S.C. 1716(b)) of this subsection.

(B) The Secretary shall retain any cash equalization payments received under subparagraph (A) to use, without further appropriation, to purchase land from willing sellers in the State of Oregon for addition to lands under the administration of the Bureau of Land Management or the Forest Service, as appropriate.

(2) If the value of the private lands exceeds the value of the Federal lands by 25 percent or more, Clearwater, after consultation with the affected identified landowners and the Secretary, shall withdraw a portion of the private lands necessary to equalize the values of the lands to be exchanged.

(3) If any of the private lands to be acquired do not include the rights to the subsurface estate, the Secretary may reserve the subsurface estate in the Federal lands to be exchanged.

(f) LAND TITLES.—(1) Title to the private lands to be conveyed to the Secretary shall be in a form acceptable to the Secretary.

(2) The Secretary shall convey all right, title, and interest of the United States in the Federal lands to the appropriate identified landowners, except to the extent the Secretary reserves the subsurface estate under subsection (c)(2).

(g) MANAGEMENT OF LANDS.—(1) Lands acquired by Secretary of the Interior under this Act shall be administered in accordance with sections 205(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (43 U.S.C. 1715(c)), and lands acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be administered in accordance with sections 205(d) of such Act (43 U.S.C. 1715(d)).

(2) Lands acquired by the Secretary of the Interior pursuant to section 4 which are within the North Fork of the John Day subwatershed shall be administered in accordance with section 205(c) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (43 U.S.C. 1715(c)), but shall be managed primarily for the protection of native fish and wildlife habitat, and for public recreation. The Secretary may permit other authorized uses within the subwatershed if the Secretary determines, through the appropriate land use planning process, that such uses are consistent with, and do not diminish these management purposes.

SEC. 7. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1629), as amended, was passed.

ELIM NATIVE CORPORATION LAND RESTORATION

The bill (H.R. 3090) to amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act to restore certain lands to the Elim Native Corporation, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

H.R. 3090

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ELIM NATIVE CORPORATION LAND RESTORATION.

Section 19 of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1618) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(c)(1) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

''(A) approximately 350,000 acres of land were withdrawn by Executive orders in 1917 for the use of the United States Bureau of Education and of the Natives of Indigenous Alaskan race;

''(B) these lands comprised the Norton Bay Reservation (later referred to as Norton Bay Native Reserve) and were set aside for the benefit of the Native inhabitants of the Eskimo Village of Elim, Alaska;

''(C) in 1929, 50,000 acres of land were deleted from the Norton Bay Reservation by Executive order.

''(D) the lands were deleted from the Reservation for the benefit of others;

''(E) the deleted lands were not available to the Native inhabitants of Elim under subsection (b) of this section at the time of passage of this Act;

''(F) the deletion of these lands has been and continues to be a source of deep concern to the indigenous people of Elim; and

''(G) until this matter is dealt with, it will continue to be a source of great frustration and sense of loss among the shareholders of the Elim Native Corporation and their descendants.

''(2) WITHDRAWAL.—The lands depicted and designated 'Withdrawal Area' on the map dated October 19, 1999, along with their legal descriptions, on file with the Bureau of Land Management, and entitled 'Land Withdrawal Elim Native Corporation', are hereby withdrawn, subject to valid existing rights, from all forms of appropriation or disposition under the public land laws, including the mining and mineral leasing laws, for a period of 2 years from the date of the enactment of this subsection, for selection by the Elim Native Corporation (hereinafter referred to as 'Elim').

''(3) AUTHORITY TO SELECT AND CONVEY.—Elim is authorized to select in accordance with the rules set out in this paragraph, 50,000 acres of land (hereinafter referred to as 'Conveyance Lands') within the boundary of the Withdrawal Area described in paragraph (2). The Secretary is authorized and directed to convey to Elim in fee the surface and subsurface estates to 50,000 acres of valid selections in the Withdrawal Area, subject to the covenants, reservations, terms and conditions and other provisions of this subsection.

''(A) Elim shall have 2 years from the date of the enactment of this subsection in which to file its selection of no more than 60,000 acres of land from the area described in paragraph (2). The selection application shall be filed with the Bureau of Land Management, Alaska State Office, shall describe a single tract adjacent to United States Survey No. 2548, Alaska, and shall be reasonably compact, contiguous, and in whole sections except when separated by unavailable land or when the remaining entitlement is less than a whole section. Elim shall prioritize its selections made pursuant to this subsection at the time such selections are filed, and such prioritization shall be irrevocable. Any lands selected shall remain withdrawn until conveyed or full entitlement has been achieved.

''(B) The selection filed by Elim pursuant to this subsection shall be subject to valid existing rights and may not supercede prior selections of the State of Alaska, any Native corporation, or valid entries of any private individual unless such selection or entry is relinquished, rejected, or abandoned prior to conveyance to Elim.

''(C) Upon receipt of the Conveyance Lands, Elim shall have all legal rights and privileges as landowner, subject only to the covenants, reservations, terms and conditions specified in this subsection.

''(D) Selection by Elim of lands under this subsection and final conveyance of those lands to Elim shall constitute full satisfaction of any claim of entitlement of Elim with respect to its land entitlement.

''(4) COVENANTS, RESERVATIONS, TERMS, AND CONDITIONS.—The covenants, reservations, terms and conditions set forth in this paragraph and in paragraphs (5) and (6) with respect to the Conveyance Lands shall run with the land and shall be incorporated into the interim conveyance, if any, and patent conveying the lands to Elim.

''(A) Consistent with paragraph (3)(C) and subject to the applicable covenants, reservations, terms, and conditions contained in this paragraph and paragraphs (5) and (6), Elim shall have all rights to the timber resources of the Conveyance Lands for any use including, but not limited to, construction of homes, cabins, for firewood and other domestic uses on any Elim lands: Provided, That cutting and removal of Merchantable Timber from the Conveyance Lands for sale shall not be permitted: Provided further, That Elim shall not construct roads and related infrastructure for the support of such cutting and removal of timber for sale or permit others to do so. 'Merchantable Timber' means timber that can be harvested and marketed by a prudent operator.

''(B) Public Land Order 5563 of December 16, 1975, which made hot or medicinal springs available to other Native Corporations for selection and conveyance, is hereby modified to the extent necessary to permit the selection by Elim of the lands heretofore encompassed in any withdrawal of hot or medicinal springs and is withdrawn pursuant to this subsection. The Secretary is authorized and directed to convey such selections of hot or medicinal springs (hereinafter referred to as 'hot springs') subject to applicable covenants, reservations, terms and conditions contained in paragraphs (5) and (6).

''(C) Should Elim select and have conveyed to it lands encompassing portions of the Tubutulik River or Clear Creek, or both, Elim shall not permit surface occupancy or knowingly permit any other activity on those portions of land lying within the bed of or within 300 feet of the ordinary high waterline of either or both of these water courses for purposes associated with mineral or other development or activity if they would cause or are likely to cause erosion or siltation of either water course to an extent that would significantly adversely impact water quality or fish habitat.

''(5) RIGHTS RETAINED BY THE UNITED STATES.—With respect to conveyances authorized in paragraph (3), the following rights are retained by the United States:

''(A) To enter upon the conveyance lands, after providing reasonable advance notice in writing to Elim and after providing Elim with an opportunity to have a representative present upon such entry, in order to achieve the purpose and enforce the terms of this paragraph and paragraphs (4) and (6).

''(B) To have, in addition to such rights held by Elim, all rights and remedies available against persons, jointly or severally, who cut or remove Merchantable Timber for sale.

''(C) In cooperation with Elim, the right, but not the obligation, to reforest in the event previously existing Merchantable Timber is destroyed by fire, wind, insects, disease, or other similar manmade or natural occurrence (excluding manmade occurrences resulting from the exercise by Elim of its lawful rights to use the Conveyance Lands).

''(D) The right of ingress and egress over easements under section 17(b) for the public to visit, for noncommercial purposes, hot springs located on the Conveyance Lands and to use any part of the hot springs that is not commercially developed.

''(E) The right to enter upon the lands containing hot springs for the purpose of conducting scientific research on such hot springs and to use the results of such research without compensation to Elim. Elim shall have an equal right to conduct research on the hot springs and to use the results of such research without compensation to the United States.

''(F) A covenant that commercial development of the hot springs by Elim or its successors, assigns, or grantees shall include the right to develop only a maximum of 15 percent of the hot springs and any land within ¼ mile of the hot springs. Such commercial development shall not alter the natural hydrologic or thermal system associated with the hot springs. Not less than 85 percent of the lands within ¼ mile of the hot springs shall be left in their natural state.

''(G) The right to exercise prosecutorial discretion in the enforcement of any covenant, reservation, term or condition shall not waive the right to enforce any covenant, reservation, term or condition.

''(6) GENERAL.—

''(A) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—The Secretary and Elim shall, acting in good faith, enter into a Memorandum of Understanding (hereinafter referred to as the 'MOU') to implement the provisions of this subsection. The MOU shall include among its provisions reasonable measures to protect plants and animals in the hot springs on the Conveyance Lands and on the land within ¼ mile of the hot springs. The parties shall agree to meet periodically to review the matters contained in the MOU and to exercise their right to amend, replace, or extend the MOU. Such reviews shall include the authority to relocate any of the easements set forth in subparagraph (D) if the parties deem it advisable.

''(B) INCORPORATION OF TERMS.—Elim shall incorporate the covenants, reservations, terms and conditions, in this subsection in any deed or other legal instrument by which it divests itself of any interest in all or a portion of the Conveyance Lands, including without limitation, a leasehold interest.

''(C) SECTION 17(b) EASEMENTS.—The Bureau of Land Management, in consultation with Elim, shall reserve in the conveyance to Elim easements to the United States pursuant to subsection 17(b) that are not in conflict with other easements specified in this paragraph.

''(D) OTHER EASEMENTS.—The Bureau of Land Management, in consultation with Elim, shall reserve easements which shall include the right of the public to enter upon and travel along the Tubutulik River and Clear Creek within the Conveyance Lands. Such easements shall also include easements for trails confined to foot travel along, and which may be established along each bank of, the Tubutulik River and Clear Creek. Such trails shall be 25 feet wide and upland of the ordinary high waterline of the water courses. The trails may deviate from the banks as necessary to go around man-made or natural obstructions or to portage around hazardous stretches of water. The easements shall also include one-acre sites along the water courses at reasonable intervals, selected in consultation with Elim, which may be used to launch or take out water craft from the water courses and to camp in nonpermanent structures for a period not to exceed 24 hours without the consent of Elim.

''(E) INHOLDERS.—The owners of lands held within the exterior boundaries of lands conveyed to Elim shall have all rights of ingress and egress to be vested in the inholder and the inholder's agents, employees, co-venturers, licensees, subsequent grantees, or invitees, and such easements shall be reserved in the conveyance to Elim. The inholder may not exercise the right of ingress and egress in a manner that may result in substantial damage to the surface of the lands or make any permanent improvements on Conveyance Lands without the prior consent of Elim.

''(F) IDITAROD TRAIL.—The Bureau of Land Management may reserve an easement for the Iditarod National Historic Trail in the conveyance to Elim.

''(7) IMPLEMENTATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to implement this subsection.''.

SEC. 2. COMMON STOCK TO ADOPTED-OUT DESCENDANTS.

Section 7(h)(1)(C)(iii) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1606(h)(1)(C)(iii)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: '', notwithstanding an adoption, relinquishment, or termination of parental rights that may have altered or severed the legal relationship between the gift donor and recipient''.

SEC. 3. DEFINITION OF SETTLEMENT TRUST.

Section 3(t)(2) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602(t)(2)) is amended by striking ''sole'' and all that follows through ''Stock'' and inserting ''benefit of shareholders, Natives, and descendants of Natives,''.

AMENDING THE ALASKA NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1797) to amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, to provide for a land conveyance to the City of Craig, AK, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION. 1. LAND EXCHANGE WITH CITY OF CRAIG, ALASKA.

(a) At such time as Congress appropriates funds sufficient for the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire non-Federal lands within conservation system units on the Tongass National Forest, the Secretary shall convey to the City of Craig, Alaska, all Federal interests in the lands identified in subsection (b): Provided, That the lands conveyed to the City of Craig shall be of equal value to the lands acquired by the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to this subsection.

(b) The approximately 4,532 acres of Federal lands to be conveyed to the City of Craig are described as follows:

(1) All Federal land in the following described protracted and partially surveyed townships in the Copper River Meridian, Alaska:

(A) Within T. 71 S., R. 81 E—

Section 24, E½;

Section 25, E½, S½ SW¼;

Section 36.

Containing 1360 acres, more or less;

(B) Within T. 71 S., R. 82 E—

Section 19, S½ SW¼;

Section 29, W¼ NW¼, N½ SW¼;

Section 30, All;

Section 31, All.

Containing 1500 acres, more or less; and

(C) Within T. 72 S., R. 82 E—

Section 5, SW¼ NW¼, W½, SW¼;

Section 6, All;

Section 7, NE¼ NE¼;

Section 8, W½, SW¼ SE¼;

Section 17, NW¼ NW¼, E½ NW¼, NE¼ SW¼, W½ NE¼, NW¼ SE¼, S½ SE¼;

Section 20, NE¼.

Containing 1672 acres, more or less.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agree to.

The bill (S. 1797), as amended, was passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to provide for a land conveyance to the City of Craig, Alaska, and for other purposes.

VALLES CALDERA PRESERVATION ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1892) to authorize the acquisition of the Valles Caldera, to provide for an effective land and wildlife management program for this resource within the Department of Agriculture, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

TITLE I—VALLES CALDERA NATIONAL PRESERVE AND TRUST

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''Valles Caldera Preservation Act''.

SEC. 102. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the Baca ranch comprises most of the Valles Caldera in central New Mexico, and constitutes a unique land mass, with significant scientific, cultural, historic, recreational, ecological, wildlife, fisheries, and productive values;

(2) the Valles Caldera is a large resurgent lava dome with potential geothermal activity;

(3) the land comprising the Baca ranch was originally granted to the heirs of Don Luis Maria Cabeza de Vaca in 1860;

(4) historical evidence, in the form of old logging camps and other artifacts, and the history of territorial New Mexico indicate the importance of this land over many generations for domesticated livestock production and timber supply;

(5) the careful husbandry of the Baca ranch by the current owners, including selective timbering, limited grazing and hunting, and the use of prescribed fire, have preserved a mix of healthy range and timber land with significant species diversity, thereby serving as a model for sustainable land development and use;

(6) the Baca ranch's natural beauty and abundant resources, and its proximity to large municipal populations, could provide numerous recreational opportunities for hiking, fishing, camping, cross-country skiing, and hunting;

(7) the Forest Service documented the scenic and natural values of the Baca ranch in its 1993 study entitled ''Report on the Study of the Baca Location No. 1, Santa Fe National Forest, New Mexico'', as directed by Public Law 101–556;

(8) the Baca ranch can be protected for current and future generations by continued operation as a working ranch under a unique management regime which would protect the land and resource values of the property and surrounding ecosystem while allowing and providing for the ranch to eventually become financially self-sustaining;

(9) the current owners have indicated that they wish to sell the Baca ranch, creating an opportunity for Federal acquisition and public access and enjoyment of these lands;

(10) certain features on the Baca ranch have historical and religious significance to Native Americans which can be preserved and protected through Federal acquisition of the property;

(11) the unique nature of the Valles Caldera and the potential uses of its resources with different resulting impacts warrants a management regime uniquely capable of developing an operational program for appropriate preservation and development of the land and resources of the Baca ranch in the interest of the public;

(12) an experimental management regime should be provided by the establishment of a Trust capable of using new methods of public land management that may prove to be cost-effective and environmentally sensitive; and

(13) the Secretary may promote more efficient management of the Valles Caldera and the watershed of the Santa Clara Creek through the assignment of purchase rights of such watershed to the Pueblo of Santa Clara.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this title are—

(1) to authorize Federal acquisition of the Baca ranch;

(2) to protect and preserve for future generations the scientific, scenic, historic, and natural values of the Baca ranch, including rivers and ecosystems and archaeological, geological, and cultural resources;

(3) to provide opportunities for public recreation;

(4) to establish a demonstration area for an experimental management regime adapted to this unique property which incorporates elements of public and private administration in order to promote long term financial sustainability consistent with the other purposes enumerated in this subsection; and

(5) to provide for sustained yield management of Baca ranch for timber production and domesticated livestock grazing insofar as is consistent with the other purposes stated herein.

SEC. 103. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) BACA RANCH.—The term ''Baca ranch'' means the lands and facilities described in this section 104(a).

(2) BOARD OF TRUSTEES.—The terms ''Board of Trustees'' and ''Board'' mean the Board of Trustees as describe in section 107.

(3) COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS.—The term ''Committees of Congress'' means the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Resources of the House of Representatives.

(4) FINANCIALLY SELF-SUSTAINING.—The term ''financially self-sustaining'' means management and operating expenditures equal to or less than proceeds derived from fees and other receipts for resource use and development and interest on invested funds. Management and operating expenditures shall include Trustee expenses, salaries and benefits of staff, administrative and operating expenses, improvements to and maintenance of lands and facilities of the Preserve, and other similar expenses. Funds appropriated to the Trust by Congress, either directly or through the Secretary, for the purposes of this title shall not be considered.

(5) MULTIPLE USE AND SUSTAINED YIELD.—The term ''multiple use and sustained yield'' has the combined meaning of the terms ''multiple use'' and ''sustained yield of the several products and services'', as defined under the Multiple-Use Sustained-Yield Act of 1960 (16 U.S.C. 531).

(6) PRESERVE.—The term ''Preserve'' means the Valles Caldera National Preserve established under section 105.

(7) SECRETARY.—Except where otherwise provided, the term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Agriculture.

(8) TRUST.—The term ''Trust'' means the Valles Caldera Trust established under section 106.

SEC. 104. ACQUISITION OF LANDS.

(a) ACQUISITION OF BACA RANCH.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In compliance with the Act of June 15, 1926 (16 U.S.C. 471a), the Secretary is authorized to acquire all or part of the rights, title, and interests in and to approximately 94,761 acres of the Baca ranch, comprising the lands, facilities, and structures referred to as the Baca Location No. 1, and generally depicted on a plat entitled ''Independent Resurvey of the Baca Location No. 1'', made by L.A. Osterhoudt, W.V. Hall, and Charles W. Devendorf, U.S. Cadastral Engineers, June 30, 1920–August 24, 1921, under special instructions for Group No. 107 dated February 12, 1920, in New Mexico.

(2) SOURCE OF FUNDS.—The acquisition under paragraph (1) may be made by purchase through appropriated or donated funds, by exchange, by contribution, or by donation of land. Funds appropriated to the Secretary from the Land and Water Conservation Fund shall be available for this purpose.

(3) BASIS OF SALE.—The acquisition under paragraph (1) shall be based on an appraisal done in conformity with the Uniform Appraisal Standards for Federal Land Acquisitions and—

(A) in the case of purchase, such purchase shall be on a willing seller basis for no more than the fair market value of the land or interests therein acquired; and

(B) in the case of exchange, such exchange shall be for lands, or interests therein, of equal value, in conformity with the existing exchange authorities of the Secretary.

(4) DEED.—The conveyance of the offered lands to the United States under this subsection shall be by general warranty or other deed acceptable to the Secretary and in conformity with applicable title standards of the Attorney General.

(b) ADDITION OF LAND TO BANDELIER NATIONAL MONUMENT.—Upon acquisition of the Baca ranch under subsection (a), the Secretary of the Interior shall assume administrative jurisdiction over those lands within the boundaries of the Bandelier National Monument as modified under section 3 of Public Law 105–376 (112 Stat. 3389).

(c) PLAT AND MAPS.—

(1) PLAT AND MAPS PREVAIL.—In case of any conflict between a plat or a map and acreages, the plat or map shall prevail.

(2) MINOR CORRECTIONS.—The Secretary and the Secretary of the Interior may make minor corrections in the boundaries of the Upper Alamo watershed as depicted on the map referred to in section 3 of Public Law 105–376 (112 Stat. 3389).

(3) BOUNDARY MODIFICATION.—Upon the conveyance of any lands to any entity other than the Secretary, the boundary of the Preserve shall be modified to exclude such lands.

(4) FINAL MAPS.—Within 180 days of the date of acquisition of the Baca ranch under subsection (a), the Secretary and the Secretary of the Interior shall submit to the Committees of Congress a final map of the Preserve and a final map of Bandelier National Monument, respectively.

(5) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY.—The plat and maps referred to in the subsection shall be kept and made available for public inspection in the offices of the Chief, Forest Service, and Director, National Park Service, in Washington, D.C., and Supervisor, Santa Fe National Forest, and Superintendent, Bandelier National Monument, in the State of New Mexico.

(d) WATERSHED MANAGEMENT REPORT.—The Secretary, acting through the Forest Service, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the National Park Service, shall—

(1) prepare a report of management alternatives which may—

(A) provide more coordinated land management within the area known as the upper watersheds of Alamo, Capulin, Medio, and Sanchez Canyons, including the areas known as the Dome Diversity Unit and the Dome Wilderness;

(B) allow for improved management of elk and other wildlife populations ranging between the Santa Fe National Forest and the Bandelier National Monument; and

(C) include proposed boundary adjustments between the Santa Fe National Forest and the Bandelier National Monument to facilitate the objectives under subparagraphs (A) and (B); and

(2) submit the report to the Committees of Congress within 120 days of the date of enactment of this title.

(e) OUTSTANDING MINERAL INTERESTS.—The acquisition of the Baca ranch by the Secretary shall be subject to all outstanding valid existing mineral interests. The Secretary is authorized and directed to negotiate with the owners of any fractional interest in the subsurface estate for the acquisition of such fractional interest on a willing seller basis for not to exceed its fair market value, as determined by appraisal done in conformity with the Uniform Appraisal Standards for Federal Land Acquisitions. Any such interests acquired within the boundaries of the Upper Alamo watershed, as referred to in subsection (b), shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior as part of Bandelier National Monument.

(f) BOUNDARIES OF THE BACA RANCH.—For purposes of section 7 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601–9), the boundaries of the Baca ranch shall be treated as if they were National Forest boundaries existing as of January 1, 1965.

(g) PUEBLO OF SANTA CLARA.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may assign to the Pueblo of Santa Clara rights to acquire for fair market value portions of the Baca ranch. The portion that may be assigned shall be determined by mutual agreement between the Pueblo and the Secretary based on optimal management considerations for the Preserve including manageable land line locations, public access, and retention of scenic and natural values. All appraisals shall be done in conformity with the Uniform Appraisal Standards for Federal Land Acquisition.

(2) STATUS OF LAND ACQUIRED.—As of the date of acquisition, the fee title lands, and any mineral estate underlying such lands, acquired under this subsection by the Pueblo of Santa Clara are deemed transferred into trust in the name of the United States for the benefit of the Pueblo of Santa Clara and such lands and mineral estate are declared to be part of the existing Santa Clara Indian Reservation.

(3) MINERAL ESTATE.—Any mineral estate acquired by the United States pursuant to section 104(e) underlying fee title lands acquired by the Pueblo of Santa Clara shall not be developed without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior and the Pueblo of Santa Clara.

(4) SAVINGS.—Any reservations, easements, and covenants contained in an assignment agreement entered into under paragraph (1) shall not be affected by the acquisition of the Baca ranch by the United States, the assumption of management by the Valles Caldera Trust, or the lands acquired by the Pueblo being taken into trust.

SEC. 105. THE VALLES CALDERA NATIONAL PRESERVE.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Upon the date of acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a), there is hereby established the Valles Caldera National Preserve as a unit of the National Forest System which shall include all Federal lands and interests in land acquired under sections 104(a) and 104(e), except those lands and interests in land administered or held in trust by the Secretary of the Interior under sections 104(b) and 104(g), and shall be managed in accordance with the purposes and requirements of this title.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes for which the Preserve is established are to protect and preserve the scientific, scenic, geologic, watershed, fish, wildlife, historic, cultural, and recreational values of the Preserve, and to provide for multiple use and sustained yield of renewable resources within the Preserve, consistent with this title.

(c) MANAGEMENT AUTHORITY.—Except for the powers of the Secretary enumerated in this title, the Preserve shall be managed by the Valles Caldera Trust established by section 106.

(d) ELIGIBILITY FOR PAYMENT IN LIEU OF TAXES.—Lands acquired by the United States under section 104(a) shall constitute entitlement lands for purposes of the Payment in Lieu of Taxes Act (31 U.S.C. 6901–6904).

(e) WITHDRAWALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Upon acquisition of all interests in minerals within the boundaries of the Baca ranch under section 104(e), subject to valid existing rights, the lands comprising the Preserve are thereby withdrawn from disposition under all laws pertaining to mineral leasing, including geothermal leasing.

(2) MATERIALS FOR ROADS AND FACILITIES.—Nothing in this title shall preclude the Secretary, prior to assumption of management of the Preserve by the Trust, and the Trust thereafter, from allowing the utilization of common varieties of mineral materials such as sand, stone, and gravel as necessary for construction and maintenance of roads and facilities within the Preserve.

(f) FISH AND GAME.—Nothing in this title shall be construed as affecting the responsibilities of the State of New Mexico with respect to fish and wildlife, including the regulation of hunting, fishing, and trapping within the Preserve, except that the Trust may, in consultation with the Secretary and the State of New Mexico, designate zones where and establish periods when no hunting, fishing, or trapping shall be permitted for reasons of public safety, administration, the protection of nongame species and their habitats, or public use and enjoyment.

(g) REDONDO PEAK.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purposes of preserving the natural, cultural, religious, and historic resources on Redondo Peak upon acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a), except as provided in paragraph (2), within the area of Redondo Peak above 10,000 feet in elevation—

(A) no roads, structures, or facilities shall be constructed; and

(B) no motorized access shall be allowed.

(2) EXCEPTIONS.—Nothing in this subsection shall preclude—

(A) the use and maintenance of roads and trails existing as of the date of enactment of this Act;

(B) the construction, use and maintenance of new trails, and the relocation of existing roads, if located to avoid Native American religious and cultural sites; and

(C) motorized access necessary to administer the area by the Trust (including measures required in emergencies involving the health or safety of persons within the area).

SEC. 106. THE VALLES CALDERA TRUST.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established a wholly owned government corporation known as the Valles Caldera Trust which is empowered to conduct business in the State of New Mexico and elsewhere in the United States in furtherance of its corporate purposes.

(b) CORPORATE PURPOSES.—The purposes of the Trust are—

(1) to provide management and administrative services for the Preserve;

(2) to establish and implement management policies which will best achieve the purposes and requirements of this title;

(3) to receive and collect funds from private and public sources and to make dispositions in support of the management and administration of the Preserve; and

(4) to cooperate with Federal, State, and local governmental units, and with Indian tribes and Pueblos, to further the purposes for which the Preserve was established.

(c) NECESSARY POWERS.—The Trust shall have all necessary and proper powers for the exercise of the authorities vested in it.

(d) STAFF.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Trust is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation and duties of an executive director and such other officers and employees as it deems necessary without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and may pay them without regard to the provisions of chapter 51, and subchapter III of chapter 53, title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates. No employee of the Trust shall be paid at a rate in excess of that payable to the Supervisor of the Santa Fe National Forest or the Superintendent of the Bandelier National Monument, whichever is greater.

(2) FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this title, employees of the Trust shall be Federal employees as defined by title 5, United States Code, and shall be subject to all rights and obligations applicable thereto.

(B) USE OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES.—At the request of the Trust, the employees of any Federal agency may be provided for implementation of this title. Such employees detailed to the Trust for more than 30 days shall be provided on a reimbursable basis.

(e) GOVERNMENT CORPORATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Trust shall be a Government Corporation subject to chapter 91 of title 31, United States Code (commonly referred to as the Government Corporation Control Act). Financial statements of the Trust shall be audited annually in accordance with section 9105 of title 31 of the United States Code.

(2) REPORTS.—Not later than January 15 of each year, the Trust shall submit to the Secretary and the Committees of Congress a comprehensive and detailed report of its operations, activities, and accomplishments for the prior year including information on the status of ecological, cultural, and financial resources being managed by the Trust, and benefits provided by the Preserve to local communities. The report shall also include a section that describes the Trust's goals for the current year.

(3) ANNUAL BUDGET.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Trust shall prepare an annual budget with the goal of achieving a financially self-sustaining operation within 15 full fiscal years after the date of acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a).

(B) BUDGET REQUEST.—The Secretary shall provide necessary assistance (including detailees as necessary) to the Trust for the timely formulation and submission of the annual budget request for appropriations, as authorized under section 111(a), to support the administration, operation, and maintenance of the Preserve.

(f) TAXES.—The Trust and all properties administered by the Trust shall be exempt from all taxes and special assessments of every kind by the State of New Mexico, and its political subdivisions including the counties of Sandoval and Rio Arriba.

(g) DONATIONS.—The Trust may solicit and accept donations of funds, property, supplies, or services from individuals, foundations, corporations, and other private or public entities for the purposes of carrying out its duties. The Secretary, prior to assumption of management of the Preserve by the Trust, and the Trust thereafter, may accept donations from such entities notwithstanding that such donors may conduct business with the Department of Agriculture or any other department or agency of the United States.

(h) PROCEEDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding sections 1341 and 3302 of title 31 of the United States Code, all monies received from donations under subsection (g) or from the management of the Preserve shall be retained and shall be available, without further appropriation, for the administration, preservation, restoration, operation and maintenance, improvement, repair, and related expenses incurred with respect to properties under its management jurisdiction.

(2) FUND.—There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States a special interest bearing fund entitled ''Valles Caldera Fund'' which shall be available, without further appropriation for any purpose consistent with the purposes of this title. At the option of the Trust, or the Secretary in accordance with section 110, the Secretary of the Treasury shall invest excess monies of the Trust in such account, which shall bear interest at rates determined by the Secretary of the Treasury taking into consideration the current average market yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturity.

(i) RESTRICTIONS ON DISPOSITION OF RECEIPTS.—Any funds received by the Trust, or the Secretary in accordance with section 109(b), from the management of the Preserve shall not be subject to partial distribution to the State under—

(1) the Act of May 23, 1908, entitled ''an Act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and nine'' (35 Stat. 260, chapter 192; 16 U.S.C. 500);

(2) section 13 of the Act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat. 963, chapter 186; 16 U.S.C. 500); or

(3) any other law.

(j) SUITS.—The Trust may sue and be sued in its own name to the same extent as the Federal Government. For purposes of such suits, the residence of the Trust shall be the State of New Mexico. The Trust shall be represented by the Attorney General in any litigation arising out of the activities of the Trust, except that the Trust may retain private attorneys to provide advice and counsel.

(k) BYLAWS.—The Trust shall adopt necessary bylaws to govern its activities.

(l) INSURANCE AND BOND.—The Trust shall require that all holders of leases from, or parties in contract with, the Trust that are authorized to occupy, use, or develop properties under the management jurisdiction of the Trust, procure proper insurance against any loss in connection with such properties, or activities authorized in such lease or contract, as is reasonable and customary.

(m) NAME AND INSIGNIA.—The Trust shall have the sole and exclusive right to use the words ''Valles Caldera Trust'', and any seal, emblem, or other insignia adopted by the Board of Trustees. Without express written authority of the Trust, no person may use the words ''Valles Caldera Trust'' as the name under which that person shall do or purport to do business, for the purpose of trade, or by way of advertisement, or in any manner that may falsely suggest any connection with the Trust.

SEC. 107. BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Trust shall be governed by a 9-member Board of Trustees consisting of the following:

(1) VOTING TRUSTEES.—The voting Trustees shall be—

(A) the Supervisor of the Santa Fe National Forest, United States Forest Service;

(B) the Superintendent of the Bandelier National Monument, National Park Service; and

(C) 7 individuals, appointed by the President, in consultation with the congressional delegation from the State of New Mexico. The 7 individuals shall have specific expertise or represent an organization or government entity as follows—

(i) one trustee shall have expertise in aspects of domesticated livestock management, production, and marketing, including range management and livestock business management;

(ii) one trustee shall have expertise in the management of game and nongame wildlife and fish populations, including hunting, fishing, and other recreational activities;

(iii) one trustee shall have expertise in the sustainable management of forest lands for commodity and noncommodity purposes;

(iv) one trustee shall be active in a nonprofit conservation organization concerned with the activities of the Forest Service;

(v) one trustee shall have expertise in financial management, budget and program analysis, and small business operations;

(vi) one trustee shall have expertise in the cultural and natural history of the region; and

(vii) one trustee shall be active in State or local government in New Mexico, with expertise in the customs of the local area.

(2) QUALIFICATIONS.—Of the trustees appointed by the President—

(A) none shall be employees of the Federal Government; and

(B) at least five shall be residents of the State of New Mexico.

(b) INITIAL APPOINTMENTS.—The President shall make the initial appointments to the Board of Trustees within 90 days after acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a).

(c) TERMS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Appointed trustees shall each serve a term of 4 years, except that of the trustees first appointed, 4 shall serve for a term of 4 years, and 3 shall serve for a term of 2 years.

(2) VACANCIES.—Any vacancy among the appointed trustees shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made, and any trustee appointed to fill a vacancy shall serve for the remainder of that term for which his or her predecessor was appointed.

(3) LIMITATIONS.—No appointed trustee may serve more than 8 years in consecutive terms.

(d) QUORUM.—A majority of trustees shall constitute a quorum of the Board for the conduct of business.

(e) ORGANIZATION AND COMPENSATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall organize itself in such a manner as it deems most appropriate to effectively carry out the activities of the Trust.

(2) COMPENSATION OF TRUSTEES.—Trustees shall serve without pay, but may be reimbursed from the funds of the Trust for the actual and necessary travel and subsistence expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties.

(3) CHAIR.—Trustees shall select a chair from the membership of the Board.

(f) LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES.—Appointed trustees shall not be considered Federal employees by virtue of their membership on the Board, except for purposes of the Federal Tort Claims Act, the Ethics in Government Act, and the provisions of chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code.

(g) MEETINGS.—

(1) LOCATION AND TIMING OF MEETINGS.—The Board shall meet in sessions open to the public at least three times per year in New Mexico. Upon a majority vote made in open session, and a public statement of the reasons therefore, the Board may close any other meetings to the public: Provided, That any final decision of the Board to adopt or amend the comprehensive management program under section 108(d) or to approve any activity related to the management of the land or resources of the Preserve shall be made in open public session.

(2) PUBLIC INFORMATION.—In addition to other requirements of applicable law, the Board shall establish procedures for providing appropriate public information and periodic opportunities for public comment regarding the management of the Preserve.

SEC. 108. RESOURCE MANAGEMENT.

(a) ASSUMPTION OF MANAGEMENT.—The Trust shall assume all authority provided by this title to manage the Preserve upon a determination by the Secretary, which to the maximum extent practicable shall be made within 60 days after the appointment of the Board, that—

(1) the Board is duly appointed, and able to conduct business; and

(2) provision has been made for essential management services.

(b) MANAGEMENT RESPONSIBILITIES.—Upon assumption of management of the Preserve under subsection (a), the Trust shall manage the land and resources of the Preserve and the use thereof including, but not limited to such activities as—

(1) administration of the operations of the Preserve;

(2) preservation and development of the land and resources of the Preserve;

(3) interpretation of the Preserve and its history for the public;

(4) management of public use and occupancy of the Preserve; and

(5) maintenance, rehabilitation, repair, and improvement of property within the Preserve.

(c) AUTHORITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Trust shall develop programs and activities at the Preserve, and shall have the authority to negotiate directly and enter into such agreements, leases, contracts and other arrangements with any person, firm, association, organization, corporation or governmental entity, including without limitation, entities of Federal, State, and local governments, and consultation with Indian tribes and pueblos, as are necessary and appropriate to carry out its authorized activities or fulfill the purposes of this title. Any such agreements may be entered into without regard to section 321 of the Act of June 30, 1932 (40 U.S.C. 303b).

(2) PROCEDURES.—The Trust shall establish procedures for entering into lease agreements and other agreements for the use and occupancy of facilities of the Preserve. The procedures shall ensure reasonable competition, and set guidelines for determining reasonable fees, terms, and conditions for such agreements.

(3) LIMITATIONS.—The Trust may not dispose of any real property in, or convey any water rights appurtenant to the Preserve. The Trust may not convey any easement, or enter into any contract, lease, or other agreement related to use and occupancy of property within the Preserve for a period greater than 10 years. Any such easement, contract, lease, or other agreement shall provide that, upon termination of the Trust, such easement, contract, lease or agreement is terminated.

(4) APPLICATION OF PROCUREMENT LAWS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, Federal laws and regulations governing procurement by Federal agencies shall not apply to the Trust, with the exception of laws and regulations related to Federal Government contracts governing health and safety requirements, wage rates, and civil rights.

(B) PROCEDURES.—The Trust, in consultation with the Administrator of Federal Procurement Policy, Office of Management and Budget, shall establish and adopt procedures applicable to the Trust's procurement of goods and services, including the award of contracts on the basis of contractor qualifications, price, commercially reasonable buying practices, and reasonable competition.

(d) MANAGEMENT PROGRAM.—Within two years after assumption of management responsibilities for the Preserve, the Trust shall, in accordance with subsection (f), develop a comprehensive program for the management of lands, resources, and facilities within the Preserve to carry out the purposes under section 105(b). To the extent consistent with such purposes, such program shall provide for—

(1) operation of the Preserve as a working ranch, consistent with paragraphs (2) through (4);

(2) the protection and preservation of the scientific, scenic, geologic, watershed, fish, wildlife, historic, cultural and recreational values of the Preserve;

(3) multiple use and sustained yield of renewable resources within the Preserve;

(4) public use of and access to the Preserve for recreation;

(5) renewable resource utilization and management alternatives that, to the extent practicable—

(A) benefit local communities and small businesses;

(B) enhance coordination of management objectives with those on surrounding National Forest System land; and

(C) provide cost savings to the Trust through the exchange of services, including but not limited to labor and maintenance of facilities, for resources or services provided by the Trust; and

(6) optimizing the generation of income based on existing market conditions, to the extent that it does not unreasonably diminish the long-term scenic and natural values of the area, or the multiple use and sustained yield capability of the land.

(e) PUBLIC USE AND RECREATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Trust shall give thorough consideration to the provision of appropriate opportunities for public use and recreation that are consistent with the other purposes under section 105(b). The Trust is expressly authorized to construct and upgrade roads and bridges, and provide other facilities for activities including, but not limited to camping and picnicking, hiking, and cross country skiing. Roads, trails, bridges, and recreational facilities constructed within the Preserve shall meet public safety standards applicable to units of the National Forest System and the State of New Mexico.

(2) FEES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Trust is authorized to assess reasonable fees for admission to, and the use and occupancy of, the Preserve: Provided, That admission fees and any fees assessed for recreational activities shall be implemented only after public notice and a period of not less than 60 days for public comment.

(3) PUBLIC ACCESS.—Upon the acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a), and after an interim planning period of no more than two years, the public shall have reasonable access to the Preserve for recreation purposes. The Secretary, prior to assumption of management of the Preserve by the Trust, and the Trust thereafter, may reasonably limit the number and types of recreational admissions to the Preserve, or any part thereof, based on the capability of the land, resources, and facilities. The use of reservation or lottery systems is expressly authorized to implement this paragraph.

(f) APPLICABLE LAWS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Trust, and the Secretary in accordance with section 109(b), shall administer the Preserve in conformity with this title and all laws pertaining to the National Forest System, except the Forest and Rangeland Renewable Resources Planning Act of 1974, as amended (16 U.S.C. 1600 et seq.).

(2) ENVIRONMENTAL LAWS.—The Trust shall be deemed a Federal agency for the purposes of compliance with Federal environmental laws.

(3) CRIMINAL LAWS.—All criminal laws relating to Federal property shall apply to the same extent as on adjacent units of the National Forest System.

(4) REPORTS ON APPLICABLE RULES AND REGULATIONS.—The Trust may submit to the Secretary and the Committees of Congress a compilation of applicable rules and regulations which in the view of the Trust are inappropriate, incompatible with this title, or unduly burdensome.

(5) CONSULTATION WITH TRIBES AND PUEBLOS.—The Trust is authorized and directed to cooperate and consult with Indian tribes and pueblos on management policies and practices for the Preserve which may affect them. The Trust is authorized to allow the use of lands within the Preserve for religious and cultural uses by Native Americans and, in so doing, may set aside places and times of exclusive use consistent with the American Indian Religious Freedom Act (42 U.S.C. 1996 (note)) and other applicable statutes.

(6) NO ADMINISTRATIVE APPEAL.—The administrative appeals regulations of the Secretary shall not apply to activities of the Trust and decisions of the Board.

(g) LAW ENFORCEMENT AND FIRE MANAGEMENT.—The Secretary shall provide law enforcement services under a cooperative agreement with the Trust to the extent generally authorized in other units of the National Forest System. The Trust shall be deemed a Federal agency for purposes of the law enforcement authorities of the Secretary (within the meaning of section 15008 of the National Forest System Drug Control Act of 1986 (16 U.S.C. 559g)). At the request of the Trust, the Secretary may provide fire presuppression, fire suppression, and rehabilitation services: Provided, That the Trust shall reimburse the Secretary for salaries and expenses of fire management personnel, commensurate with services provided.

SEC. 109. AUTHORITIES OF THE SECRETARY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the assumption of management of the Preserve by the Trust, the Secretary is authorized to—

(1) issue any rights-of-way, as defined in the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, of over 10 years duration, in cooperation with the Trust, including, but not limited to, road and utility rights-of-way, and communication sites;

(2) issue orders under and enforce prohibitions generally applicable on other units of the National Forest System, in cooperation with the Trust;

(3) exercise the authorities of the Secretary under the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1278, et seq.) and the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 797, et seq.), in cooperation with the Trust;

(4) acquire the mineral rights referred to in section 104(e);

(5) provide law enforcement and fire management services under section 108(g);

(6) at the request of the Trust, exchange land or interests in land within the Preserve under laws generally applicable to other units of the National Forest System, or otherwise dispose of land or interests in land within the Preserve under Public Law 97–465 (16 U.S.C. 521c through 521i);

(7) in consultation with the Trust, refer civil and criminal cases pertaining to the Preserve to the Department of Justice for prosecution;

(8) retain title to and control over fossils and archaeological artifacts found within the Preserve;

(9) at the request of the Trust, construct and operate a visitors' center in or near the Preserve, subject to the availability of appropriated funds;

(10) conduct the assessment of the Trust's performance, and, if the Secretary determines it necessary, recommend to Congress the termination of the Trust, under section 110(b)(2); and

(11) conduct such other activities for which express authorization is provided to the Secretary by this title.

(b) INTERIM MANAGEMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall manage the Preserve in accordance with this title during the interim period from the date of acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a) to the date of assumption of management of the Preserve by the Trust under section 108. The Secretary may enter into any agreement, lease, contract, or other arrangement on the same basis as the Trust under section 108(c)(1): Provided, That any agreement, lease, contract, or other arrangement entered into by the Secretary shall not exceed two years in duration unless expressly extended by the Trust upon its assumption of management of the Preserve.

(2) USE OF THE FUND.—All monies received by the Secretary from the management of the Preserve during the interim period under paragraph (1) shall be deposited into the ''Valles Caldera Fund'' established under section 106(h)(2), and such monies in the fund shall be available to the Secretary, without further appropriation, for the purpose of managing the Preserve in accordance with the responsibilities and authorities provided to the Trust under section 108.

(c) SECRETARIAL AUTHORITY.—The Secretary retains the authority to suspend any decision of the Board with respect to the management of the Preserve if he finds that the decision is clearly inconsistent with this title. Such authority shall only be exercised personally by the Secretary, and may not be delegated. Any exercise of this authority shall be in writing to the Board, and notification of the decision shall be given to the Committees of Congress. Any suspended decision shall be referred back to the Board for reconsideration.

(d) ACCESS.—The Secretary shall at all times have access to the Preserve for administrative purposes.

SEC. 110. TERMINATION OF THE TRUST.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Valles Caldera Trust shall terminate at the end of the twentieth full fiscal year following acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a).

(b) RECOMMENDATIONS.—

(1) BOARD.—

(A) If after the fourteenth full fiscal years from the date of acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a), the Board believes the Trust has met the goals and objectives of the comprehensive management program under section 108(d), but has not become financially self-sustaining, the Board may submit to the Committees of Congress, a recommendation for authorization of appropriations beyond that provided under this title.

(B) During the eighteenth full fiscal year from the date of acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a), the Board shall submit to the Secretary its recommendation that the Trust be either extended or terminated including the reasons for such recommendation.

(2) SECRETARY.—Within 120 days after receipt of the recommendation of the Board under paragraph (1)(B), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees of Congress the Board's recommendation on extension or termination along with the recommendation of the Secretary with respect to the same and stating the reasons for such recommendation.

(c) EFFECT OF TERMINATION.—In the event of termination of the Trust, the Secretary shall assume all management and administrative functions over the Preserve, and it shall thereafter be managed as a part of the Santa Fe National Forest, subject to all laws applicable to the National Forest System.

(d) ASSETS.—In the event of termination of the Trust, all assets of the Trust shall be used to satisfy any outstanding liabilities, and any funds remaining shall be transferred to the Secretary for use, without further appropriation, for the management of the Preserve.

(e) VALLES CALDERA FUND.—In the event of termination, the Secretary shall assume the powers of the Trust over funds under section 106(h), and the Valles Caldera Fund shall not terminate. Any balances remaining in the fund shall be available to the Secretary, without further appropriation, for any purpose consistent with the purposes of this title.

SEC. 111. LIMITATIONS ON FUNDING.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary and the Trust such funds as are necessary for them to carry out the purposes of this title for each of the 15 full fiscal years after the date of acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a).

(b) SCHEDULE OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Within two years after the first meeting of the Board, the Trust shall submit to Congress a plan which includes a schedule of annual decreasing appropriated funds that will achieve, at a minimum, the financially self-sustained operation of the Trust within 15 full fiscal years after the date of acquisition of the Baca ranch under section 104(a).

SEC. 112. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE STUDY.

(a) INITIAL STUDY.—Three years after the assumption of management by the Trust, the General Accounting Office shall conduct an interim study of the activities of the Trust and shall report the results of the study to the Committees of Congress. The study shall include, but shall not be limited to, details of programs and activities operated by the Trust and whether it met its obligations under this title.

(b) SECOND STUDY.—Seven years after the assumption of management by the Trust, the General Accounting Office shall conduct a study of the activities of the Trust and shall report the results of the study to the Committees of Congress. The study shall provide an assessment of any failure to meet obligations that may be identified under subsection (a), and further evaluation on the ability of the Trust to meet its obligations under this title.

TITLE II—FEDERAL LAND TRANSACTION FACILITATION

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the ''Federal Land Transaction Facilitation Act''.

SEC. 202. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the Bureau of Land Management has authority under the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.) to sell land identified for disposal under its land use planning;

(2) the Bureau of Land Management has authority under that Act to exchange Federal land for non-Federal land if the exchange would be in the public interest;

(3) through land use planning under that Act, the Bureau of Land Management has identified certain tracts of public land for disposal;

(4) the Federal land management agencies of the Departments of the Interior and Agriculture have authority under existing law to acquire land consistent with the mission of each agency;

(5) the sale or exchange of land identified for disposal and the acquisition of certain non-Federal land from willing landowners would—

(A) allow for the reconfiguration of land ownership patterns to better facilitate resource management;

(B) contribute to administrative efficiency within Federal land management units; and

(C) allow for increased effectiveness of the allocation of fiscal and human resources within the Federal land management agencies;

(6) a more expeditious process for disposal and acquisition of land, established to facilitate a more effective configuration of land ownership patterns, would benefit the public interest;

(7) many private individuals own land within the boundaries of Federal land management units and desire to sell the land to the Federal Government;

(8) such land lies within national parks, national monuments, national wildlife refuges, national forests, and other areas designated for special management;

(9) Federal land management agencies are facing increased workloads from rapidly growing public demand for the use of public land, making it difficult for Federal managers to address problems created by the existence of inholdings in many areas;

(10) in many cases, inholders and the Federal Government would mutually benefit from Federal acquisition of the land on a priority basis;

(11) proceeds generated from the disposal of public land may be properly dedicated to the acquisition of inholdings and other land that will improve the resource management ability of the Federal land management agencies and adjoining landowners;

(12) using proceeds generated from the disposal of public land to purchase inholdings and other such land from willing sellers would enhance the ability of the Federal land management agencies to—

(A) work cooperatively with private landowners and State and local governments; and

(B) promote consolidation of the ownership of public and private land in a manner that would allow for better overall resource management;

(13) in certain locations, the sale of public land that has been identified for disposal is the best way for the public to receive fair market value for the land; and

(14) to allow for the least disruption of existing land and resource management programs, the Bureau of Land Management may use non-Federal entities to prepare appraisal documents for agency review and approval consistent with applicable provisions of the Uniform Standards for Federal Land Acquisition.

SEC. 203. DEFINITIONS.

In this title:

(1) EXCEPTIONAL RESOURCE.—The term ''exceptional resource'' means a resource of scientific, natural, historic, cultural, or recreational value that has been documented by a Federal, State, or local governmental authority, and for which there is a compelling need for conservation and protection under the jurisdiction of a Federal agency in order to maintain the resource for the benefit of the public.

(2) FEDERALLY DESIGNATED AREA.—The term ''federally designated area'' means land in Alaska and the eleven contiguous Western States (as defined in section 103(o) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1702(o))) that on the date of enactment of this Act was within the boundary of—

(A) a national monument, area of critical environmental concern, national conservation area, national riparian conservation area, national recreation area, national scenic area, research natural area, national outstanding natural area, or a national natural landmark managed by the Bureau of Land Management;

(B) a unit of the National Park System;

(C) a unit of the National Wildlife Refuge System;

(D) an area of the National Forest System designated for special management by an Act of Congress; or

(E) an area within which the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture is otherwise authorized by law to acquire lands or interests therein that is designated as—

(i) wilderness under the Wilderness Act (16 U.S.C. 1131 et seq.);

(ii) a wilderness study area;

(iii) a component of the Wild and Scenic Rivers System under the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1271 et seq.); or

(iv) a component of the National Trails System under the National Trails System Act (16 U.S.C. 1241 et seq.).

(3) INHOLDING.—The term ''inholding'' means any right, title, or interest, held by a non-Federal entity, in or to a tract of land that lies within the boundary of a federally designated area.

(4) PUBLIC LAND.—The term ''public land'' means public lands (as defined in section 103 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1702)).

(5) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 204. IDENTIFICATION OF INHOLDINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall establish a procedure to—

(1) identify, by State, inholdings for which the landowner has indicated a desire to sell the land or interest therein to the United States; and

(2) prioritize the acquisition of inholdings in accordance with section 206(c)(3).

(b) PUBLIC NOTICE.—As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this title and periodically thereafter, the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall provide public notice of the procedures referred to in subsection (a), including any information necessary for the consideration of an inholding under section 206. Such notice shall include publication in the Federal Register and by such other means as the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture determine to be appropriate.

(c) IDENTIFICATION.—An inholding—

(1) shall be considered for identification under this section only if the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture receive notification of a desire to sell from the landowner in response to public notice given under subsection (b); and

(2) shall be deemed to have been established as of the later of—

(A) the earlier of—

(i) the date on which the land was withdrawn from the public domain; or

(ii) the date on which the land was established or designated for special management; or

(B) the date on which the inholding was acquired by the current owner.

(d) NO OBLIGATION TO CONVEY OR ACQUIRE.—The identification of an inholding under this section creates no obligation on the part of a landowner to convey the inholding or any obligation on the part of the United States to acquire the inholding.

SEC. 205. DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LAND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish a program, using funds made available under section 206, to complete appraisals and satisfy other legal requirements for the sale or exchange of public land identified for disposal under approved land use plans (as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act) under section 202 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1712).

(b) SALE OF PUBLIC LAND.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The sale of public land so identified shall be conducted in accordance with sections 203 and 209 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1713, 1719).

(2) EXCEPTIONS TO COMPETITIVE BIDDING REQUIREMENTS.—The exceptions to competitive bidding requirements under section 203(f) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1713(f)) shall apply to this section in cases in which the Secretary determines it to be necessary.

(c) REPORT IN PUBLIC LAND STATISTICS.—The Secretary shall provide in the annual publication of Public Land Statistics, a report of activities under this section.

(d) TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY.—The authority provided under this section shall terminate 10 years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 206. FEDERAL LAND DISPOSAL ACCOUNT.

(a) DEPOSIT OF PROCEEDS.—Notwithstanding any other law (except a law that specifically provides for a proportion of the proceeds to be distributed to any trust funds of any States), the gross proceeds of the sale or exchange of public land under this Act shall be deposited in a separate account in the Treasury of the United States to be known as the ''Federal Land Disposal Account''.

(b) AVAILABILITY.—Amounts in the Federal Land Disposal Account shall be available to the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture, without further Act of appropriation, to carry out this title.

(c) USE OF THE FEDERAL LAND DISPOSAL ACCOUNT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Funds in the Federal Land Disposal Account shall be expended in accordance with this subsection.

(2) FUND ALLOCATION.—

(A) PURCHASE OF LAND.—Except as authorized under subparagraph (C), funds shall be used to purchase lands or interests therein that are otherwise authorized by law to be acquired, and that are—

(i) inholdings; and

(ii) adjacent to federally designated areas and contain exceptional resources.

(B) INHOLDINGS.—Not less than 80 percent of the funds allocated for the purchase of land within each State shall be used to acquire inholdings identified under section 204.

(C) ADMINISTRATIVE AND OTHER EXPENSES.—An amount not to exceed 20 percent of the funds deposited in the Federal Land Disposal Account may be used by the Secretary for administrative and other expenses necessary to carry out the land disposal program under section 205.

(D) SAME STATE PURCHASES.—Of the amounts not used under subparagraph (C), not less than 80 percent shall be expended within the State in which the funds were generated. Any remaining funds may be expended in any other State.

(3) PRIORITY.—The Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture shall develop a procedure for prioritizing the acquisition of inholdings and non-Federal lands with exceptional resources as provided in paragraph (2). Such procedure shall consider—

(A) the date the inholding was established (as provided in section 204(c));

(B) the extent to which acquisition of the land or interest therein will facilitate management efficiency; and

(C) such other criteria as the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture deem appropriate.

(4) BASIS OF SALE.—Any land acquired under this section shall be—

(A) from a willing seller;

(B) contingent on the conveyance of title acceptable to the Secretary, or the Secretary of Agriculture in the case of an acquisition of National Forest System land, using title standards of the Attorney General;

(C) at a price not to exceed fair market value consistent with applicable provisions of the Uniform Appraisal Standards for Federal Land Acquisitions; and

(D) managed as part of the unit within which it is contained.

(d) CONTAMINATED SITES AND SITES DIFFICULT AND UNECONOMIC TO MANAGE.—Funds in the Federal Land Disposal Account shall not be used to purchase land or an interest in land that, as determined by the Secretary or the Secretary of Agriculture—

(1) contains a hazardous substances or is otherwise contaminated; or

(2) because of the location or other characteristics of the land, would be difficult or uneconomic to manage as Federal land.

(e) LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND ACT.—Funds made available under this section shall be supplemental to any funds appropriated under the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act (16 U.S.C. 460l–4 et seq.).

(f) TERMINATION.—On termination of activities under section 205—

(1) the Federal Land Disposal Account shall be terminated; and

(2) any remaining balance in the account shall become available for appropriation under section 3 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act (16 U.S.C. 4601–6).

SEC. 207. SPECIAL PROVISIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Nothing in this title provides an exemption from any limitation on the acquisition of land or interest in land under any Federal Law in effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) OTHER LAW.—This title shall not apply to land eligible for sale under—

(1) Public Law 96–568 (commonly known as the ''Santini-Burton Act'') (94 Stat. 3381); or

(2) the Southern Nevada Public Land Management Act of 1998 (112 Stat. 2343).

(c) EXCHANGES.—Nothing in this title precludes, preempts, or limits the authority to exchange land under authorities providing for the exchange of Federal lands, including but not limited to—

(1) the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701 et seq.); or

(2) the Federal Land Exchange Facilitation Act of 1988 (102 Stat. 1086) or the amendments made by that Act.

(d) NO NEW RIGHT OR BENEFIT.—Nothing in this Act creates a right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or in equity by a party against the United States, its agencies, its officers, or any other person.

The Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1892), as amended, was passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to provide for a land conveyance to the City of Craig, Alaska, and for other purposes.

METHANE HYDRATE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 2000

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on the bill (H.R. 1753) to promote the research, identification, assessment, exploration, and development of gas hydrate resources, and for other purposes,

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate to the title; and agree to the amendment of the Senate to the text to the bill (H.R. 1753) entitled ''An Act to promote the research, identification, assessment, exploration, and development of gas hydrate resources, and for other purposes'', with the following amendment:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Methane Hydrate Research and Development Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) CONTRACT.—The term ''contract'' means a procurement contract within the meaning of section 6303 of title 31, United States Code.

(2) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENT.—The term ''cooperative agreement'' means a cooperative agreement within the meaning of section 6305 of title 31, United States Code.

(3) DIRECTOR.—The term ''Director'' means the Director of the National Science Foundation.

(4) GRANT.—The term ''grant'' means a grant awarded under a grant agreement, within the meaning of section 6304 of title 31, United States Code.

(5) INDUSTRIAL ENTERPRISE.—The term ''industrial enterprise'' means a private, nongovernmental enterprise that has an expertise or capability that relates to methane hydrate research and development.

(6) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term ''institution of higher education'' means an institution of higher education, within the meaning of section 102(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1002(a)).

(7) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Energy, acting through the Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy.

(8) SECRETARY OF COMMERCE.—The term ''Secretary of Commerce'' means the Secretary of Commerce, acting through the Administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration.

(9) SECRETARY OF DEFENSE.—The term ''Secretary of Defense'' means the Secretary of Defense, acting through the Secretary of the Navy.

(10) SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.—The term ''Secretary of the Interior'' means the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the United States Geological Survey and the Director of the Minerals Management Service.

SEC. 3. METHANE HYDRATE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) COMMENCEMENT OF PROGRAM.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Director, shall commence a program of methane hydrate research and development in accordance with this section.

(2) DESIGNATIONS.—The Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Director shall designate individuals to carry out this section.

(3) COORDINATION.—The individual designated by the Secretary shall coordinate all activities within the Department of Energy relating to methane hydrate research and development.

(4) MEETINGS.—The individuals designated under paragraph (2) shall meet not later than 270 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and not less frequently than every 120 days thereafter to—

(A) review the progress of the program under paragraph (1); and

(B) make recommendations on future activities to occur subsequent to the meeting.

(b) GRANTS, CONTRACTS, COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS, INTERAGENCY FUNDS TRANSFER AGREEMENTS, AND FIELD WORK PROPOSALS.—

(1) ASSISTANCE AND COORDINATION.—In carrying out the program of methane hydrate research and development authorized by this section, the Secretary may award grants or contracts to, or enter into cooperative agreements with, institutions of higher education and industrial enterprises to—

(A) conduct basic and applied research to identify, explore, assess, and develop methane hydrate as a source of energy;

(B) assist in developing technologies required for efficient and environmentally sound development of methane hydrate resources;

(C) undertake research programs to provide safe means of transport and storage of methane produced from methane hydrates;

(D) promote education and training in methane hydrate resource research and resource development;

(E) conduct basic and applied research to assess and mitigate the environmental impacts of hydrate degassing (including both natural degassing and degassing associated with commercial development);

(F) develop technologies to reduce the risks of drilling through methane hydrates; and

(G) conduct exploratory drilling in support of the activities authorized by this paragraph.

(2) COMPETITIVE MERIT-BASED REVIEW.—Funds made available under paragraph (1) shall be made available based on a competitive merit-based process.

(c) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary shall establish an advisory panel consisting of experts from industrial enterprises, institutions of higher education, and Federal agencies to—

(1) advise the Secretary on potential applications of methane hydrate;

(2) assist in developing recommendations and priorities for the methane hydrate research and development program carried out under subsection (a)(1); and

(3) not later than 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, and at such later dates as the panel considers advisable, submit to Congress a report on the anticipated impact on global climate change from—

(A) methane hydrate formation;

(B) methane hydrate degassing (including natural degassing and degassing associated with commercial development); and

(C) the consumption of natural gas produced from methane hydrates.

Not more than 25 percent of the individuals serving on the advisory panel shall be Federal employees.

(d) LIMITATIONS.—

(1) ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—Not more than 5 percent of the amount made available to carry out this section for a fiscal year may be used by the Secretary for expenses associated with the administration of the program carried out under subsection (a)(1).

(2) CONSTRUCTION COSTS.—None of the funds made available to carry out this section may be used for the construction of a new building or the acquisition, expansion, remodeling, or alteration of an existing building (including site grading and improvement and architect fees).

(e) RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE SECRETARY.—In carrying out subsection (b)(1), the Secretary shall—

(1) facilitate and develop partnerships among government, industrial enterprises, and institutions of higher education to research, identify, assess, and explore methane hydrate resources;

(2) undertake programs to develop basic information necessary for promoting long-term interest in methane hydrate resources as an energy source;

(3) ensure that the data and information developed through the program are accessible and widely disseminated as needed and appropriate;

(4) promote cooperation among agencies that are developing technologies that may hold promise for methane hydrate resource development; and

(5) report annually to Congress on accomplishments under this section.

SEC. 4. AMENDMENTS TO THE MINING AND MINERALS POLICY ACT OF 1970.

Section 201 of the Mining and Minerals Policy Act of 1970 (30 U.S.C. 1901) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (6)—

(A) in subparagraph (F), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(B) by redesignating subparagraph (G) as subparagraph (H); and

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (F) the following:

''(G) for purposes of this section and sections 202 through 205 only, methane hydrate; and'';

(2) by redesignating paragraph (7) as paragraph (8); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (6) the following:

''(7) The term 'methane hydrate' means—

''(A) a methane clathrate that is in the form of a methane-water ice-like crystalline material and is stable and occurs naturally in deep-ocean and permafrost areas; and

''(B) other natural gas hydrates found in association with deep-ocean and permafrost deposits of methane hydrate.''.

SEC. 5. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Energy to carry out this Act—

(1) $5,000,000 for fiscal year 2001;

(2) $7,500,000 for fiscal year 2002;

(3) $11,000,000 for fiscal year 2003;

(4) $12,000,000 for fiscal year 2004; and

(5) $12,000,000 for fiscal year 2005.

Amounts authorized under this section shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 6. SUNSET.

Section 3 of this Act shall cease to be effective after the end of fiscal year 2005.

SEC. 7. NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL STUDY.

The Secretary shall enter into an agreement with the National Research Council for such council to conduct a study of the progress made under the methane hydrate research and development program implemented pursuant to this Act, and to make recommendations for future methane hydrate research and development needs. The Secretary shall transmit to the Congress, not later than September 30, 2004, a report containing the findings and recommendations of the National Research Council under this section.

SEC. 8. REPORTS AND STUDIES.

The Secretary of Energy shall provide to the Committee on Science of the House of Representatives copies of any report or study that the Department of Energy prepares at the direction of any committee of the Congress.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, we have a number of bills from my Committee on the Calendar that are ready for consideration, but I want to take a moment to say a few words about a bill I think has real potential for addressing the long-term energy needs of our nation. H.R. 1753, the Methane Hydrate Research and Development Act of 2000, would establish a small research program with the potential for a major payoff—energy security for the foreseeable future. Methane hydrates are rigid, ice-like solids of water surrounding a gas molecule, found at low temperatures and high pressures. When melted or depressurized, they release methane, pure natural gas, the same fuel we use to heat our homes and power our economy.

Significant quantities of methane hydrates have been detected all over the world. In the U.S., marine geologists have detected deposits of methane hydrates in deep sea sediments that lie off the coasts of the Carolinas, Louisiana, Texas, California, Oregon, and my home state of Alaska. We've also detected methane hydrates under the permafrost during conventional oil drilling operations in my home state of Alaska. The U.S. Geological Survey estimates that nearly 320,000 trillion cubic feet of natural gas can be extracted from the methane hydrates found in the U.S. alone. Compare that to our existing reserves of cheap, clean natural gas—1,300 trillion cubic feet—and our annual use of natural gas—just 20 trillion cubic feet per year. Even if we can learn to recover just 1 percent of our methane hydrate reserves, we will more than triple our available natural gas reserves and guarantee a source of cheap, secure and clean energy for the next century and well beyond.

The problem is: we need fundamental research on these hydrates to understand how they form, and how the gas molecule can be released in a way that we can use. Even now, methane hydrates pose hazards to conventional oil and gas recovery. Hydrates determine the stability and strength of the sea floor—when the hydrates are destabilized, the resulting gas release can undermine oil platforms and sink drilling ships. Methane hydrates release 160 volumes of gas for every volume of hydrate—and many existing hydrate formations are very unstable. Even a small disturbance—an unintentional landslide—could release massive quantities of gas. Oil platforms in the Caspian Sea have been destroyed as a result of this kind of accidental release.

Methane hydrates also play a significant role in global climate change. Recent scientific research suggests that abrupt climate changes have occurred in the past as a result of release of methane gas from hydrates. They are an important part of the global carbon cycle, which we must ultimately understand in detail if we want to act responsibly to address the risk of climate change. Since natural gas releases fewer carbon atoms per unit of energy, replacing coal and oil usage with natural gas from methane hydrates also reduces our risk of climate change—some experts estimate we can reduce our carbon dioxide emissions by 20 percent just by fuel substitution alone. We can also learn about carbon sequestration through studying how methane hydrates form—perhaps even replacing methane hydrates used for energy with hydrates using carbon dioxide sequestered from the atmosphere.

All of these things point to the need for a fundamental methane hydrate research program of the kind proposed in this bill. I want to thank my good friends and colleagues on the Energy Committee, Senators AKAKA and CRAIG, for their leadership and recognition of the potential for methane hydrates to satisfy our future energy needs, enable our long-term energy security, and help us responsibly address the risk of climate change. Working with our colleagues in the House, we have been able to develop legislation that would authorize $45 million in new funding for research in this important area. Anticipating passage of a bill like this one, the Department of Energy has prepared an excellent multi-year research and development program plan that addresses all of the issues involved—with the goal of safe commercial production of energy from hydrates by 2010.

It is clear that we are not doing enough to explore the possibility of this exciting new energy source. Other nations of the world—Japan, Canada, India, Korea and Norway—are starting ambitious research programs. The Japanese began a drilling project of their own in November 1999, and expect that production can begin within 10 years, maybe sooner. The technology exists—Syntroleum, an Oklahoma company—has recently acquired a patent for a gas hydrate recovery system. All we need now is the sustained research to make it commercially viable.

For those reasons, Mr. President, I am glad that my colleagues here in the Senate will agree to pass the bill in the form passed by the House two weeks ago, so we can send it to the President for signature and get going on this important research program. Thanks to the leadership of Senators AKAKA and CRAIG, we may look back years from now on this day as the day we broke free of our dependence on foreign oil and guaranteed ourselves a clean energy source for many years to come.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate agree to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to consideration en bloc of the following Energy Committee matters:

S. 1705, Calendar 492;
S. 1727, Calendar 493;

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that any committee amendments, where applicable, be agreed to, with the exception of S. 1727, which should be withdrawn, and a substitute amendment to S. 1727, which is at the desk, be agreed to, the bills be read three times and passed, as amended, if amended, any title amendments be agreed to, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, and that any statements related to any of these bills be printed in the RECORD, with the above occurring en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CASTLE ROCK RANCH ACQUISITION ACT OF 1999

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1705) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to enter into land exchange to acquire from the private owner and to convey to the State of Idaho approximately 1,240 acres of land near the City of Rocks National Reserve, Idaho, and for other purposes.

The bill (S. 1705), was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Castle Rock Ranch Acquisition Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) MONUMENT.—The term ''Monument'' means the Hagerman Fossil Beds National Monument, Idaho, depicted on the National Park Service map numbered 300/80,000, C.O. No. 161, and dated January 7, 1998.

(2) RANCH.—The term ''Ranch'' means the land comprising approximately 1,240 acres situated outside the boundary of the Reserve, known as the ''Castle Rock Ranch''.

(3) RESERVE.—The term ''Reserve'' means the City of Rocks National Reserve, located near Almo, Idaho, depicted on the National Park Service map numbered 003/80,018, C.O. No. 169, and dated March 25, 1999.

(4) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. ACQUISITION OF CASTLE ROCK RANCH.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsection (b), the Secretary shall acquire, by donation or by purchase with donated or appropriated funds, the Ranch.

(b) CONSENT OF LANDOWNER.—The Secretary shall acquire land under subsection (a) only with the consent of the owner of the land.

SEC. 4. LAND EXCHANGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) FEDERAL AND STATE EXCHANGE.—Subject to subsection (b), on completion of the acquisition under section 3(a), the Secretary shall convey the Ranch to the State of Idaho in exchange for approximately 492.87 acres of land near Hagerman, Idaho, located within the boundary of the Monument.

(2) STATE AND PRIVATE LANDOWNER EXCHANGE.—On completion of the exchange under paragraph (1), the State of Idaho may exchange portions of the Ranch for private land within the boundaries of the Reserve, with the consent of the owners of the private land.

(b) CONDITION OF EXCHANGE.—As a condition of the land exchange under subsection (a)(1), the State of Idaho shall administer all private land acquired within the Reserve through an exchange under this Act in accordance with title II of the Arizona-Idaho Conservation Act of 1988 (16 U.S.C. 460yy et seq.).

(c) ADMINISTRATION.—State land acquired by the United States in the land exchange under subsection (a)(1) shall be administered by the Secretary as part of the Monument.

(d) NO EXPANSION OF RESERVE.—Acquisition of the Ranch by a Federal or State agency shall not constitute any expansion of the Reserve.

(e) NO EFFECT ON EASEMENTS.—Nothing in this Act affects any easement in existence on the date of enactment of this Act.

PALACE OF THE GOVERNORS EXPANSION ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1727) to authorize funding for the expansion annex of the historic Palace of the Governors, a public history museum located, and relating to the history of Hispanic and Native American culture, in the Southwest and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with amendments; as follows:

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italic.)

S. 1727

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This act may be cited as ''Palace of the Governors Expansion Act''.

SEC. 2. CONSTRUCTION OF PALACE OF THE GOVERNORS EXPANSION.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States has an enriched legacy of Hispanic influence in politics, government, economic development and cultural expression.

(2) The Palace of the Governors has been the center of administrative and cultural activity over a vast region of the Southwest since its construction as New Mexico's second capitol in Santa Fe by Governor Pedro de Peralta in 1610.

(3) The Palace of the Governors is the oldest continuously occupied public building in [the] the contiguous United States and has been occupied for 390 years.

(4) Since its creation the Museum of New Mexico has worked to protect and promote Southwest, Hispanic and Native American arts and crafts.

(5) The Palace of the Governors is the history division of the Museum of New Mexico and was once proposed by Teddy Roosevelt to be part of the Smithsonian Museum and known as the ''Smithsonian West.''

(6) The Museum has a extensive and priceless collection of:

(A) Spanish Colonial and Iberian Colonial paintings including the Sagesser Hyde paintings on buffalo hide dating back to 1706.

(B) Pre-Columbian Art.

(C) Historic artifacts including:

(i) Helmets and armor worn by the Don Juan Onate expedition conquistadors who established the first capital in the United States, San Juan de los Caballeros, in July of 1598.

(ii) The Vara Stick used to measure land grants and other real property boundaries in Dona Ana County, New Mexico.

[(iii) The Columbus, New Mexico Railway Station clock that was shot, stopping the pendulum, freezing for all history the moment when Pancho Villa's raid began. It marks the beginning of the last invasion of the continental United States.]

[(iv)] (iii) The field desk of Brigadier General Stephen Watts Kearny who was posted to New Mexico during the Mexican War and whose Army of the West traveled the Santa Fe trail to occupy the territories of New Mexico and California.

[(v)] (iv) More than 800,000 other historic photographs, guns, costumes, maps, books and handicrafts.

(7) The Palace of the Governors and the Sagesser Hyde paintings were designated National Treasures by the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

(8) The facilities both for exhibiting and storage of this irreplaceable collection are so totally inadequate and dangerously unsuitable that there existence is endangered and their preservation is in jeopardy.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ANNEX.—The term ''Annex'' means the Palace of the Governors, Museum of New Mexico addition to be located directly behind the historic Palace of the Governors building at 110 Lincoln Avenue, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

(2) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Interior.

(c) CONSTRUCTION OF THE ANNEX.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Secretary shall award a grant to New Mexico to pay for the Federal share of the costs of the final design, construction, furnishing and equipping of the Palace of the Governors Expansion Annex that will be located directly behind the historic Palace of the Governors at 110 Lincoln Avenue, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

(d) GRANT REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to receive a grant awarded under subsection (c), New Mexico, acting through the Office of Cultural Affairs—

(A) shall submit to the Secretary, within 30 days of the date of enactment of this section, a copy of the architectural blueprints for the Palace of the Governors Expansion Annex.

(B) shall exercise due diligence to obtain an appropriation from the New Mexico State Legislature for at least $8 million.

(C) shall exercise due diligence to expeditiously execute a memorandum of understanding recognizing that time is of the essence for the construction for the Annex because 2010 marks the 400th anniversary of the continuous occupation and use of the Palace of the Governors.

(2) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—The memorandum of understanding described in paragraph (1) shall provide—

(A) the date of completion of the construction of the Annex.

(B) that Office of Cultural Affairs shall award the contract for construction of the Annex in accordance with the New Mexico Procurement Code; and

(C) that the contract for the construction of the Annex shall be awarded pursuant to a competitive bidding process.

(3) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of the costs described in subsection (c) shall be 50 percent.

(4) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the costs described in section (c) shall be in cash or in kind fairly evaluated, including land, art and artifact collections, plant, equipment, or services. The non-Federal share shall include any contribution received by New Mexico for the design, land acquisition, library acquisition, library renovation, Palace of the Governors conservation, and construction, furnishing, equipping of the Annex, or donations of art collections to the Museum of New Mexico prior to the date of enactment of this section. The non-Federal share of the costs described in subsection (c) shall include the following:

(A) Cost of the land at 110 Lincoln Avenue, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

(B) Library acquisition expenditures.

(C) Library renovation expenditures.

(D) Palace conservation expenditures.

(E) New Mexico Foundation and other endowment funds.

(F) Donations of art collections or other artifacts.

(e) USE OF FUNDS FOR CONSTRUCTION.—FURNISHING AND EQUIPMENT.—Subject to funds being appropriated, the funds received under a grant awarded under subsection (c) shall be used only for the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing and equipment of the Annex.

(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Subject to funds being appropriated, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out this section a total of $15,000,000 for fiscal year 2001 and succeeding fiscal years. Funds appropriated pursuant to the authority of the preceding sentence shall remain available until expended but are conditioned upon the New Mexico State legislature appropriating at least $8 million between date of enactment and 2010 and other non-federal sources providing enough funds, when combined with the New Mexico State legislature appropriations, to make this federal grant based on a fifty-fifty match.

The amendment (No. 3099) was agreed to, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 3099

(Purpose: To provide a complete substitute)

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Palace of the Governors Annex Act''.

SEC. 2. CONSTRUCTION OF PALACE OF THE GOVERNORS ANNEX, SANTA FE, NEW MEXICO.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the United States has a rich legacy of Hispanic influence in politics, government, economic development, and cultural expression;

(2) the Palace of the Governors—

(A) has been the center of administrative and cultural activity over a vast region of the Southwest since its construction as New Mexico's second capitol in Santa Fe by Governor Pedro de Peralta in 1610;

(B) is the oldest continuously occupied public building in the continental United States, having been occupied for 390 years; and

(C) has been designated as a National Historic Landmark;

(3) since its creation, the Museum of New Mexico has worked to protect and promote Southwestern, Hispanic, and Native American arts and crafts;

(4) the Palace of the Governors houses the history division of the Museum of New Mexico;

(5) the Museum has an extensive, priceless, and irreplaceable collection of—

(A) Spanish Colonial paintings (including the Segesser Hide Paintings, paintings on buffalo hide dating back to 1706);

(B) pre-Columbian Art; and

(C) historic artifacts, including—

(i) helmets and armor worn by the Don Juan de Oñate expedition conquistadors who established the first capital in the territory that is now the United States, San Juan de los Caballeros, in July 1598;

(ii) the Vara Stick used to measure land grants and other real property boundaries in Dona Ana County, New Mexico;

(iii) the Columbus, New Mexico Railway Station clock that was shot, stopping the pendulum, freezing for all history the moment when Pancho Villa's raid began;

(iv) the field desk of Brigadier General Stephen Watts Kearny, who was posted to New Mexico during the Mexican War and whose Army of the West traveled the Santa Fe trail to occupy the territories of New Mexico and California; and

(v) more than 800,000 other historic photographs, guns, costumes, maps, books, and handicrafts;

(6) the Palace of the Governors and its contents are included in the Mary C. Skaggs Centennial Collection of America's Treasures;

(7) the Palace of the Governors and the Segesser Hide paintings have been declared national treasures by the National Trust for Historic Preservation; and

(8) time is of the essence in the construction of an annex to the Palace of the Governors for the exhibition and storing of the collection described in paragraph (5), because—

(A) the existing facilities for exhibiting and storing the collection are so inadequate and unsuitable that existence of the collection is endangered and its preservation is in jeopardy; and

(B) 2010 marks the 400th anniversary of the continuous occupation and use of the Palace of the Governors and is an appropriate date for ensuring the continued viability of the collection.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) ANNEX.—The term ''Annex'' means the annex for the Palace of the Governors of the Museum of New Mexico, to be constructed behind the Palace of the Governors building at 110 Lincoln Avenue, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

(2) OFFICE.—The term ''Office'' means the State Office of Cultural Affairs.

(3) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior.

(4) STATE.—The term ''State'' means the State of New Mexico.

(c) GRANT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Secretary shall make a grant to the Office to pay 50 percent of the costs of the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex.

(2) REQUIREMENTS.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, to receive a grant under this paragraph (1), the Office shall—

(A) submit to the Secretary a copy of the architectural blueprints for the Annex; and

(B) enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Secretary under subsection (d).

(d) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—At the request of the Office, the Secretary shall enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Office that—

(1) requires that the Office award the contract for construction of the Annex after a competitive bidding process and in accordance with the New Mexico Procurement Code; and

(2) specifies a date for completion of the Annex.

(e) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—The non-Federal share of the costs of the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex—

(1) may be in cash or in kind fairly evaluated, including land, art and artifact collections, plant, equipment, or services; and

(2) shall include any contribution received by the State (including contributions from the New Mexico Foundation and other endowment funds) for, and any expenditure made by the State for, the Palace of the Governors or the Annex, including—

(A) design;

(B) land acquisition (including the land at 110 Lincoln Avenue, Santa Fe, New Mexico);

(C) acquisitions for and renovation of the library;

(D) conservation of the Palace of the Governors;

(E) construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex; and

(F) donations of art collections and artifacts to the Museum of New Mexico on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) USE OF FUNDS.—The funds received under a grant awarded under subsection (c) shall be used only for the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing and equipment of the Annex.

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), subject to the availability of appropriations, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out this section $15,000,000, to remain available until expended.

(2) CONDITION.—Paragraph (1) authorizes sums to be appropriated on the condition that—

(A) after the date of enactment of this Act and before January 1, 2010, the State appropriate at least $8,000,000 to pay the costs of the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex; and

(B) other non-Federal sources provide sufficient funds to pay the remainder of the 50 percent non-Federal share of those costs.

The bill (S. 1727), as amended, was passed, as follows:

S. 1727

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

(A) after the date of enactment of this Act and before January 1, 2010, the State appropriate at least $8,000,000 to pay the costs of the final design, construction, management, inspection, furnishing, and equipping of the Annex; and

(B) other non-Federal sources provide sufficient funds to pay the remainder of the 50 percent non-Federal share of those costs.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Palace of the Governors Annex Act has passed the Senate.

In conjunction with Hispanic Heritage Month, I introduced the Palace of the Governors Expansion Act last October. The palace is a symbol of Hispanic influence in the United States and truly shows the coming together of many cultures in the New World—the various native American, Hispanic, and Anglo peoples who have lived in the region for over four centuries.

Since introducing this bill last October, the situation has become an emergency. Walls are crumbling, water pipes are leaking, plumbing is backing up threatening priceless documents.

The bill would authorize the construction of the Palace of the Governors' Annex. It would preserve a priceless collection of Spanish colonial, Iberian colonial paintings, artifacts, maps, books, guns, costumes, photographs. The collection includes such historically unique items as the helmets and armor worn by the Don Juan Onate expedition conquistadors who established the first capital in the United States, San Juan de los Caballeros, in July 1598. It includes the Vara Stick, a type of yardstick used to measure land grants and other real property boundaries in Dona Ana County, NM.

We have all heard of Geronimo. The collection includes a rifle dropped by one of his men during a raid in the Black Range area of western New Mexico.

We have all heard of Pancho Villa. His activities in the Southwest come alive when viewing some of the artifacts included in the Palace of the Governors Collection. The Columbus, NM, railway station clock was shot in the pendulum, freezing for all history the moment that Pancho Villa's raid and invasion began. It is part of the collection, but you wouldn't know it because there is no room to display it.

Brig. Gen. Stephen Watts Kearny was posted to New Mexico during the Mexican War. He commanded the Army of the West as they traveled from the Santa Fe Trail to occupy the territories of New Mexico and California. As Kearny traveled, he carried a field desk which he used to write letters, diaries, orders, and other historical documents. It is part of the collection, but you can't see it because there is no display space for it in the Palace of the Governors.

Many of us have read books by D.H. Lawrence, but none of us has seen the note from his mother that is part of the collection.

There are more than 800,000 other historic photographs, guns, costumes, maps, books, and handicrafts.

Where are these treasures that Teddy Roosevelt wanted to make part of the Smithsonian housed now?

Where is this collection designated as a National Treasure by the National Trust for Historic Preservation kept?

In the basement of a 400-year-old building.

It is a national travesty.

This legislation would right this wrong by authorizing funds for a Palace of the Governors Expansion Annex. The entire project will cost $32 million. The legislation authorizes a $15 million federal grant if the museum can match the grant on a 50-50 basis.

The Palace of the Governors has acquired a half block behind the current palace. Obtaining this valuable real estate is evidence of the ingenuity and commitment of those involved in preserving the collection. Real estate near Santa Fe's plaza is seldom for sale at any price, much less an affordable price.

The Palace of the Governors has been the center of administrative and cultural activity over a vast region in the Southwest since its construction as New Mexico's second capitol by Governor Pedro de Peralta in 1610. The building is the oldest continuously occupied public building in the United States. Since its creation, the Museum of New Mexico has worked to protect and promote Hispanic, Southwest, and native American arts and crafts.

I hope the House will act expeditiously on this legislation to save this important collection.

DEADLINE EXTENSION FOR COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION OF A HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1836) to extend the deadline for commencement of construction of a hydroelectric project in the State of Alabama, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed; as follows:

S. 1836

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF DEADLINE AND REINSTATEMENT OF LICENSE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the time period specified in section 13 of the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 806) that would otherwise apply to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission project numbered 7115, the Commission shall, at the request of the licensee for the project, in accordance with the good faith, due diligence, and public interest requirements of that section and the Commission's procedures under that section, extend for 3 consecutive 2-year periods, the time period during which the licensee is required to commence construction of the project.

(b) APPLICABILITY.—Subsection (a) shall take effect on the expiration of the period required for commencement of construction of the project described in subsection (a).

(c) REINSTATEMENT OF EXPIRED LICENSE.—If the license for the project described in subsection (a) has expired prior to the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall reinstate the license effective as of the date of its expiration and extend the time required for commencement of construction of the projects for not more than 3 consecutive 2-year periods, the first of which shall commence on the date of expiration of the license.

WHITE CLAY CREEK WILD AND SCENIC RIVERS SYSTEM ACT

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1849) to designate segments and tributaries of White Clay Creek, Delaware and Pennsylvania, as a component of the Wild and Scenic Rivers System, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''White Clay Creek Wild and Scenic Rivers System Act''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) Public Law 102–215 (105 Stat. 1664) directed the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation and consultation with appropriate State and local governments and affected landowners, to conduct a study of the eligibility and suitability of White Clay Creek, Delaware and Pennsylvania, and the tributaries of the creek for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System;

(2) as a part of the study described in paragraph (1), the White Clay Creek Study Wild and Scenic Study Task Force and the National Park Service prepared a watershed management plan for the study area entitled ''White Clay Creek and Its Tributaries Watershed Management Plan'', dated May 1998, that establishes goals and actions to ensure the long-term protection of the outstanding values of, and compatible management of land and water resources associated with, the watershed; and

(3) after completion of the study described in paragraph (1), Chester County, Pennsylvania, New Castle County, Delaware, Newark, Delaware, and 12 Pennsylvania municipalities located within the watershed boundaries passed resolutions that—

(A) expressed support for the White Clay Creek Watershed Management Plan;

(B) expressed agreement to take action to implement the goals of the Plan; and

(C) endorsed the designation of the White Clay Creek and the tributaries of the creek for inclusion in the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

SEC. 3. DESIGNATION OF WHITE CLAY CREEK.

Section 3(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(161) WHITE CLAY CREEK, DELAWARE AND PENNSYLVANIA.—

''(A) SEGMENTS.—The 191 miles of river segments of White Clay Creek (including tributaries of the Creek and all second order tributaries of the designated segments) in the States of Delaware and Pennsylvania (referred to in this paragraph as the 'Creek'), as depicted on the recommended designation and classification maps, as follows:

''(i) 30.8 miles of the east branch, including Trout Run, beginning at the headwaters within West Marlborough township downstream to a point that is 500 feet north of the Borough of Avondale wastewater treatment facility, as a recreational river.

''(ii) 15.0 miles of the east branch beginning at the southern boundary line of the Borough of Avondale to a point where the East Branch enters New Garden Township at the Franklin Township boundary line, including Walnut Run and Broad Run outside the boundaries of the White Clay Creek Preserve, as a recreational river.

''(iii) 4.0 miles of the east branch that flow through the boundaries of the White Clay Creek Preserve, Pennsylvania, beginning at the northern boundary line of London Britain township and downstream to the confluence of the middle and east branches, as a scenic river.

''(iv) 20.9 miles of the middle branch, beginning at the headwaters within Londonderry township downstream to the boundary of the White Clay Creek Preserve in London Britain township, as a recreational river.

''(v) 2.1 miles of the west branch that flow within the boundaries of the White Clay Creek Preserve in London Britain township, as a scenic river.

''(vi) 17.2 miles of the west branch, beginning at the headwaters within Penn township downstream to the confluence with the middle branch, as a recreational river.

''(vii) 12.7 miles of the main stem, excluding Lamborn Run, that flow through the boundaries of the White Clay Creek Preserve, Pennsylvania and Delaware, and White Clay Creek State Park, Delaware, beginning at the confluence of the east and middle branches in London Britain township, Pennsylvania, downstream to the northern boundary line of the city of Newark, Delaware, as a scenic river.

''(viii) 27.5 miles of the main stem (including all second order tributaries outside the boundaries of the White Clay Creek Preserve and White Clay Creek State Park), beginning at the confluence of the east and middle branches in London Britain township, Pennsylvania, downstream to the confluence of the White Clay Creek with the Christina River, as a recreational river.

''(ix) 1.4 miles of Middle Run outside the boundaries of the Middle Run Natural Area, as a recreational river.

''(x) 5.2 miles of Middle Run that flows within the boundaries of the Middle Run Natural Area, as a recreational river.

''(xi) 15.6 miles of Pike Creek, as a recreational river.

''(xii) 38.7 miles of Mill Creek, as a recreational river.

''(B) BOUNDARIES.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in clause (ii), in lieu of the boundaries provided for in subsection (b), the boundaries of the segments shall be the greater of—

''(I) the 500-year floodplain; or

''(II) 250 feet as measured from the ordinary high water mark on both sides of the segment.

''(ii) EXCEPTIONS.—The boundary limitations described in clause (i) are inapplicable to—

''(I) the areas described in section 4(a) of the White Clay Creek Wild and Scenic Rivers Act; and

''(II) the properties, as generally depicted on the map entitled ''White Clay Creek Wild and Scenic River Study Area Recommended Designated Area'', dated June 1999, on which are located the surface water intakes and water treatment and wastewater treatment facilities of—

''(aa) the City of Newark, Delaware;

''(bb) the corporation known as United Water Delaware; and

''(cc) the Borough of West Grove, Pennsylvania.

''(C) ADMINISTRATION.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The segments designated by subparagraph (A) shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the White Clay Creek Watershed Management Committee as provided for in the plan prepared by the White Clay Creek Wild and Scenic Study Task Force and the National Park Service, entitled 'White Clay and Its Tributaries Watershed Management Plan' and dated May 1998.''

SEC. 4. SUBSEQUENT DESIGNATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Churchman's Marsh, Lamborn Run, and the properties on which the intake structures and pipelines for the proposed Thompson's Station Reservoir may be located shall be considered suitable for designation as components of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System only at such time as those areas are removed from consideration as locations for the reservoir under the comprehensive plan of the Delaware River Basin Commission.

(b) ASSISTANCE FOR SUBSEQUENT DESIGNATIONS.—The Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as the ''Secretary'') shall offer assistance to the State of Delaware and New Castle County, Delaware, if an area described in subsection (a) is designated a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

SEC. 5. MANAGEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In order to provide for the long-term protection, preservation, and enhancement of White Clay Creek and its tributaries, the Secretary shall offer to enter into cooperative agreements pursuant to section 10(e) and section 11(b)(1) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1281(e) and 16 U.S.C. 1882(b)(1)) with the White Clay Creek Watershed Management Committee as provided for in the plan entitled ''White Clay Creek and its Tributaries Watershed Management Plan'' and dated May, 1998 (hereinafter referred to as the ''management plan'').

(b) FEDERAL ROLE.—(1) The Director of the National Park Service (or a designee) shall represent the Secretary in the implementation of the management plan and this paragraph (including the review, required under section 7(a) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1278(a)), of proposed Federally-assisted water resources projects that could have a direct and adverse effect on the values for which the segments were designated and authorized).

(2) To assist in the implementation of the management plan and to carry out this Act, the Secretary may provide technical assistance, staff support, and funding at a cost to the Federal Government in an amount, in the aggregate, of not to exceed $150,000 for each fiscal year.

(c) COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.—Any cooperative agreement entered into under section 10(e) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1281(e)) relating to any of the segments designated by section 3—

(1) shall be consistent with the management plan; and

(2) may include provisions for financial or other assistance from the United States to facilitate the long-term protection, conservation, and enhancement of the segments.

(d) COMPREHENSIVE MANAGEMENT PLAN.—The management plan shall be deemed to satisfy the requirements for a comprehensive management plan under section 3(d) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1274(d)).

(e) STATE REQUIREMENTS.—State and local zoning laws and ordinances, as in effect on the date of enactment of this Act, shall be considered to satisfy the standards and requirements under section 6(c) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1277(c)).

(f) NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM.—Notwithstanding section 10(c) of the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act (16 U.S.C. 1281(c)), any portion of a segment designated by section 3 that is not in the National Park System as of the date of enactment of this Act shall not—

(1) be considered a part of the National Park System;

(2) be managed by the National Park Service; or

(3) be subject to laws (including regulations) that govern the National Park System.

(g) NO LAND ACQUISITION.—The Federal Government shall not acquire, by any means, any right or title in or to land, any easement, or any other interest for the purpose of carrying out this Act.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed.

The bill (S. 1849), as amended, was passed.

ESTABLISHING WOMEN'S RIGHTS NATIONAL HISTORIC PARK

Amend the title so as to read ''An Act to exempt certain reports from automatic elimination and sunset pursuant to the Federal Reports Elimination and Sunset Act of 1995, and for other purposes.''.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is today considering for final passage S. 1769, as amended by the House. I introduced S. 1769 with Chairman HATCH on October 22, 1999 and it passed the Senate on November 5, 1999. This bill will continue and enhance the current reporting requirements for the Administrative Office of the Courts and the Attorney General on the eavesdropping and surveillance activities of our federal and state law enforcement agencies. The House amendment is the text of H.R. 3111, a bill to exempt from automatic elimination and sunset certain reports submitted to Congress that are useful and helpful in informing the Congress and the public about the activities of federal agencies in the enforcement of federal law. I am also glad to support this amendment.

For many years, the Administrative Office (AO) of the Courts has complied with the statutory requirement, in 18 U.S.C. 2519(3), to report to Congress annually the number and nature of federal and state applications for orders authorizing or approving the interception of wire, oral or electronic communications. By letter dated September 3, 1999, the AO advised that it would no longer submit this report because ''as of December 21, 1999, the report will no longer be required pursuant to the Federal Reports Elimination and Sunset Act of 1995.'' I commend the AO for alerting Congress that their responsibility for the wiretap reports would lapse at the end of this year, and for doing so in time for Congress to take action. The date upon which this reporting requirement was due to lapse was extended in the FY 2000 Consolidated Appropriations Act, H.R. 3194, until May 15, 2000—only a few short weeks away.

AO has done an excellent job of preparing the wiretap reports. We need to continue the AO's objective work in a consistent manner. If another agency took over this important task at this juncture and the numbers came out in a different format, it would immediately generate questions and concerns over the legitimacy and accuracy of the contents of that report.

In addition, it would create difficulties in comparing statistics from prior years going back to 1969 and complicate the job of congressional oversight. Furthermore, transferring this reporting duty to another agency might create delays in issuance of the report since no other agency has the methodology in place. Finally, federal, state and local agencies are well accustomed to the reporting methodology developed by the AO. Notifying all these agencies that the reporting standards and agency have changed would inevitably create more confusion and more expense as law enforcement agencies across the country are forced to learn with a new system and develop a liaison with a new agency.

The system in place now has worked well and we should avoid any disruptions. We know how quickly law enforcement may be subjected to criticism over their use of these surreptitious surveillance tools and we should avoid aggravating these sensitivities by changing the reporting agency and methodology on little to no notice. I appreciate, however, the AO's interest in transferring the wiretap reporting requirement to another entity. Any such transfer must be accomplished with a minimum of disruption to the collection and reporting of information and with complete assurances that any new entity is able to fulfill this important job as capably as the AO has done.

S. 1769 would update the reporting requirements currently in place with one additional reporting requirement. Specifically, the bill would require the wiretap reports prepared beginning in calendar year 2000 to include information on the number of orders in which encryption was encountered and whether such encryption prevented law enforcement from obtaining the plain text of communications intercepted pursuant to such order.

Encryption technology is critical to protect sensitive computer and online information. Yet, the same technology poses challenges to law enforcement when it is exploited by criminals to hide evidence or the fruits of criminal activities. A report by the U.S. Working Group on Organized Crime titled, ''Encryption and Evolving Technologies: Tools of Organized Crime and Terrorism,'' released in 1997, collected anecdotal case studies on the use of encryption in furtherance of criminal activities in order to estimate the future impact of encryption on law enforcement. The report noted the need for ''an ongoing study of the effect of encryption and other information technologies on investigations, prosecutions, and intelligence operations''. As part of this study, ''a database of case information from federal and local law enforcement and intelligence agencies should be established and maintained.'' Adding a requirement that reports be furnished on the number of occasions when encryption is encountered by law enforcement is a far more reliable basis than anecdotal evidence on which to assess law enforcement needs and make sensible policy in this area.

The final section of S. 1769 would codify the information that the Attorney General already provides on pen register and trap and trace device orders, and would require further information on where such orders are issued and the types of facilities—telephone, computer, pager or other device—to which the order relates. Under the Electronic Communications Privacy Act (''ECPA'') of 1986, P.O. 99–508, codified at 18 U.S.C. 3126, the Attorney General of the United States is required to report annually to the Congress on the number of pen register orders and orders for trap and trace devices applied for by law enforcement agencies of the Department of Justice. As the original sponsor of ECPA, I believed that adequate oversight of the surveillance activities of federal law enforcement could only be accomplished with reporting requirements such as the one included in this law.

The reports furnished by the Attorney General on an annual basis compile information from five components of the Department of Justice: the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the United States Marshals Service and the Office of the Inspector General. The report contains information on the number of original and extension orders made to the courts for authorization to use both pen register and trap and trace devices, information concerning the number of investigations involved, the offenses on which the applications were predicted and the number of people whose telephone facilities were affected.

These specific categories of information are useful, and S. 1769 would direct the Attorney General to continue providing these specific categories of information. In addition, the bill would direct the Attorney General to include information on the identity, including the district, of the agency making the application and the person authorizing the order. In this way, the Congress and the public will be informed of those jurisdictions and using this surveillance technique—information which is currently not included in the Attorney General's annual reports.

The requirement for preparation of the wiretap reports will soon lapse so I am delighted to see the Congress take prompt action on this legislation to continue the requirement for submission of the wiretap reports and to update the reporting requirements for both the wiretap reports submitted by the AO and the pen register and trap and trace reports submitted by the Attorney General.

Mr. SESSIONS. I ask unanimous consent the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the majority leader, after consultation with the chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance, pursuant to Public Law 106–170, announces the appointment of the following individuals to serve as members of the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Advisory Panel: Larry D. Henderson, of Delaware, for a term of two years, and Stephanie Smith Lee, of Virginia, for a term of four years.

The Chair, on behalf of the Democratic leader, after consultation with the ranking member of the Senate Committee on Finance, pursuant to Public Law 106–170, announces the appointment of the following individuals to serve as members of the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Advisory Panel: Dr. Richard V. Burkhauser, of New York, for a term of two years, and Ms. Christine M. Griffin, of Massachusetts, for a term of four years.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 2000

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, on behalf of the leader, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn under the provisions of H. Con. Res. 303 until the hour of 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, April 25. I further ask consent that on Tuesday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then begin to debate on the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 3, proposing an amendment to the Constitution to protect the rights of crime victims, until 12:30 p.m., with the time equally divided between the two bill managers.

I further ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 12:30 p.m. the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m. in order for the weekly party caucuses to meet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. SESSIONS. For the information of all Senators, the Senate will convene on Tuesday, April 25, at 9:30 a.m. and immediately begin debate on the motion to proceed to the victims' rights legislation until 12:30 p.m. At 2:15 p.m., when the Senate reconvenes from the weekly party conference luncheons, the Senate will vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to S.J. Res 3. If that cloture vote is not invoked, then a second vote will occur on cloture on the marriage penalty bill. It is hoped that cloture will be invoked and debate can begin on the crime victims resolution following the vote.

In addition, the leaders will continue to work to resolve the Democratic objections to the marriage penalty bill.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M., TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 2000

Mr. SESSIONS. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in adjournment under the provisions of H. Con. Res. 303.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 8:19 p.m., adjourned until Tuesday, April 25, 2000, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

HONORING THE MONTGOMERY COUNTY VALOR AWARD WINNERS

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to rise and bring to the attention of my colleagues some very special public safety personnel in Montgomery County, Maryland. Every year, the Montgomery County Chamber of Commerce honors police officers and fire fighters who have shown the highest level of dedication to their noble duties. These individuals are being honored on April 14, 2000 at the 1999 Public Safety Awards Luncheon.

The Valor Awards honor public service officials who have demonstrated extreme self-sacrifice, personal bravery, and ingenuity in the performance of their duty. There are five categories: The Gold Medal of Valor; The Silver Medal of Valor; The Bronze Medal of Valor; The Honorable Mention Award; and The Bernard D. Crooke, Jr. (Police) and Leslie B. Thompson (Fire and Rescue) Community Service Award.

The Sliver Medal of Valor is awarded in recognition of acts involving great personal risk. The Silver Medal of Valor Award Winners for 1999 are: Police Officer 1 Valentine Schiller, Police Officer 1 Peter Sheng, Police Officer 3 Stephen Matthews, and Police Officer 3 Curtis Jacobs.

The Bronze Medal of Valor is awarded in recognition of acts of bravery involving unusual personal risk beyond that which should be expected while performing the usual responsibility of the member. The Bronze Medal of Valor Award Winners for 1999 are: Police Officer 3 Brian Dillman, Police Officer 3 Claude Onley, Sergeant Dom Fazio, Lieutenant Daniel Irvine, Firefighter/Paramedic 3 Sherry Hohl, Firefighter/Rescuer 3 Ernest Farkas, and Firefighter/Rescuer 3 Jody Nightengale.

The Honorable Mention Award is awarded for acts that involve personal risk and/or demonstration of judgment, zeal, or ingenuity not normally involved in the performance of duties. The Honorable Mention Award Winners for 1999 are: Lieutenant Michael Garvey, Sergeant Robert Phillips, Police Officer 3 Edward Tarney, Police Officer 3 Robert Hunt, Police Officer 1 Theresa Durham, Police Officer 3 Robin M. Dyer, Firefighter/Rescuer 3 Kirk Risinger, Firefighter/Rescuer 2 Stephen Batdorff, Firefighter/Rescuer 3 Anthony Veith, firefighter/Rescuer Larry Lewis, and Firefighter/Rescuer 3 Douglas Hinkle.

The Community Service Award is awarded for dedication and initiative above and beyond the call of duty over a period of time without compensation, that has affected and benefitted the citizens of Montgomery County. The Bernard D. Crooke, Jr. Community Service Award Winner for 1999 is Police Officer 2 Charles J. Welter. The Leslie B. Thompson Community Service Award Winner for 1999 is Fire and Rescue Department Communications Manager Mary Marchone.

Due to the dedicated efforts of these public servants who place the safety and well-being of others above their own, Montgomery County is a better place to live. They have rightfully earned the highest appreciation and respect from myself, the members of the Montgomery County Chamber of Commerce, and from all the people of our community whose lives they have touched. I know my colleagues will join me in thanking these heroes for a job well done.

COMMEMORATION OF THE CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY OF THE UNITED STATES NAVY SUBMARINE FORCE

HON. FRANK A. LoBIONDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. LoBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, April 11, 2000, marked the centennial anniversary of the United States Navy Submarine Force. To commemorate this unique event, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the thousands of sailors who have gallantly served our nation as members of this elite group.

April 11, 1900 ushered in the birth of this outstanding American Naval Force, which has proven its undeniable worth through every major military endeavor our country has asked the Navy to address. In World War II alone, the Navy Submarine Force scored the most complete victory of any force in any theater of war by destroying 1,314 ships between 1939 and 1945. Out of 16,000 submariners, the force lost 375 officers and 3,131 enlisted men in fifty-two submarines, the lowest casualty rate of any combatant submarine service on any side in the conflict.

Now capable of firing missiles from a vertical launch system, the Navy's Los Angeles class SSNs have proven very useful in the more restricted spaces of modern littoral war at sea. Submarine launched Tomahawks have proven extraordinarily effective in a variety of combat operations starting with Desert Storm.

With a drastically reduced force, submariners still manage to conduct both independent tactical and strategic patrols, as well as renewed joint operations with carrier battle groups. Without a doubt, the United States Navy Submarine force continues to be one of the most valuable components to our nation's well-being and security.

Thank you for your tireless effort, dedication, and contribution to America's continued prosperity and happy anniversary.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE UNIVERSITY OF WASHINGTON MEDICAL SCHOOL

HON. JAY INSLEE

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, today I commend the fine folks at the University of Washington Medical School for doing an exemplary job of preparing doctors and medical personnel for our future.

This year, The U.S. News and World Report rated the University of Washington Medical School as the TOP primary care medical school in our country. This Medical School has been their top choice for the past seven years. In choosing to recognize the University of Washington, The U.S. News and World Report looked at the school's excellent reputation, the quality of the research conducted by its students and faculty, and the low faculty to student ratio among other criteria. I would like to add to this that the University of Washington Medical School is also the leading teaching hospital in the five-state northwestern region of our country.

I am particularly impressed by the specific programs within the Medical School that The U.S. News and World Report recognized for excellence. The University of Washington Medical School has the best family medicine program and the best rural medicine program in our country. Its programs for women's health, AIDS, Pediatrics and Geriatrics are rated in the top five in our country. It also boasts leading nursing, physician assistant and dental programs.

To me, this means that the facility and administration at the University of Washington Medical School is producing the very best of the doctors who will care for our families, our parents and our children. I know that the students who attend the Medical School will spread out across our country bringing the wisdom and the skills that they learned at the University. Like all doctors, the graduates of the University of Washington Medical School maintain the gift of life. Unlike most, they have had the privilege of attending the best Medical School in the nation. I am proud that this institution graces the state that I represent and I commend all who have made the Medical School into what it is today.

HONORING THE 138TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA EMANCIPATION ACT

HON. ELEANOR HOLMES NORTON

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague, Representative DON MANZULLO, for joining me in our annual observance of Emancipation Day, and for his generous and continued attention to the District of Columbia.

One hundred thirty-eight years ago, President Lincoln ended slavery in the District, nine months before the Emancipation Proclamation was signed. In 1862, the existence of slavery and denial of human rights in the Nation's Capital was a contradiction in terms. Today, we use this occasion to draw attention to a continuing contradiction. District of Columbia citizens are still denied basic rights in the Capital of the free world. The District is the only jurisdiction in America whose citizens pay taxes, but are denied full representation in Congress. D.C. residents are the only Americans whose laws can be overturned by Congress, in violation of American principles of local self-government.

I am pleased to note that this year the D.C. Council has passed a bill designating April 16th as District of Columbia Emancipation Day. How much more would District residents rejoice if they had the full representation and freedom enjoyed by other Americans. How much more joyously would they celebrate if the right to vote in this House and in the Senate were their basic right.

Because of a historic court case, we believe this right is within our reach. Two lawsuits on their way to the U.S. Supreme Court, Adams v. Clinton and Alexander v. Daley, have been consolidated to challenge the denial of basic democratic rights. We are indebted to the attorneys, John Ferren, former D.C. Corporation Counsel; Charles Miller and Thomas Williamson, of Covington & Burling; Jamin Raskin, Professor of Law, American University; and George LaRoche, who handled this case before a three-judge court. And we are indebted to the 75 citizens who are the plaintiffs in these suits and who, therefore, represent all the citizens of the District of Columbia.

Judge Oberdorfer, the distinguished, dissenting jurist in the case, wrote, ''Under established constitutional principles, neither the . . . people of the District nor their posterity forfeited [their] constitutional right when the District became the seat of government.'' In the District, we have a history of recognizing April 16th as a day of celebration. We do so this year with special determination to gain and enjoy all the benefits that American citizenship provides—full representation in Congress.

I salute D.C. Reading is Fundamental for its continued efforts to promote Emancipation Day in the District. Its work inspires our children to read, to learn the history of this city, and to insist, as Americans, upon their full rights.

HONORING JO ANNE DARCY OF CALIFORNIA

HON. HOWARD P. ''BUCK'' McKEON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. MCKEON. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize Jo Anne Darcy on the occasion of her retirement as Senior Field Deputy for Los Angeles County Supervisor Mike Antonovich, in the county's Fifth Supervisorial District.

Mrs. Darcy has served as Senior Field Deputy for Los Angeles County Supervisor Mike Antonovich, serving the unincorporated areas of the Santa Clarita Valley, ever since Supervisor Antonovich was elected in 1980. She has diligently served the citizens of the Santa Clarita Valley in a wide variety of roles, from case work to law enforcement to parks, as well as representing the Supervisor at events in the district. She has performed her job with great dedication, energy, skill and obvious love for the people of Santa Clarita Valley.

Mrs. Darcy is also the Mayor of Santa Clarita. I had the honor of serving with Mrs. Darcy on Santa Clarita's first elected City Council when the city was incorporated in 1987. She has served continuously on the City Council since then, having been re-elected to another four-year term in April 1998. She served as Mayor in 1990, 1994, 1999 and 2000.

Mrs. Darcy has been a tireless and dedicated public servant, both in her elected and appointed positions, and in the many volunteer activities in which she has been engaged. These activities are too numerous to mention fully. However, some of them include serving on the California State Film Commission, chairing the film committee of the Newhall-Saugus-Valencia Chamber of Commerce; serving as Founding Officer of the Friends of the Libraries of SCV; co-chairing and serving as Executive Director of the Western Walk of Fame and Newhall Walk of Western Stars; Founding the Zonta Club of SCV; serving as Founding Member of the SCV Historical Society; Founding Officer to the Association to Aid Victims of Domestic Violence; President of the Santa Clarita Valley American Heart Association; Chairing an annual wine auction that Benefits the SCV Senior Center's Meals on Wheels Program.

Mrs. Darcy has been named the Woman of the Year by the SCV Chamber of Commerce; the Outstanding Woman from the Soroptomists, the Citizen of the Year from the Santa Clarita Elks Lodge, and many, many other honors from community groups.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to continuing to work with Mrs. Darcy in her role as Mayor and City Council member of Santa Clarita. I wish her all the best in her retirement from Supervisor Antonovich's office.

CONGRATULATING UND'S FIGHTING SIOUX

HON. EARL POMEROY

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the University of North Dakota's Fighting Sioux hockey team for their exciting win Saturday night over Boston College to clinch the NCAA Division I National Championship for Hockey. Congratulations to UND President Charles Kupchella and UND Hockey Coach Dean Blais and, of course, to the entire Fighting Sioux team.

This is the seventh time that the University of North Dakota hockey team has won the NCAA Division I hockey championship. The last time the team won the title was in 1997.

This team out of Grand Forks, North Dakota exemplifies the very best features of our great state. They work hard, support each other, rally behind one another, and, through teamwork, they get the job done. These players are true champions on the ice, and, like all true champions, they share the glory.

The efforts of these young men are reflected not only in their collective win, but in the honors that some of the individual earned this year. Lee Goren, otherwise known as ''Scorin' Goren,'' earned the tournament's Most Outstanding Player award and led the league in scoring while goalie Karl Goehring, had eight shut-outs during the season. Their accomplishments reflect well on the team, their coach and the spirit at UND.

Just, as they are examples of the best of UND athletics, these athletes are also stellar performers in the classroom. Combined, the team has a cumulative grade point average of 3.12; stand-out goalie Karl Goehring has a 4.0 gpa. To me, one of the most exciting statistics about the team this year is that twelve members of the team were named to the WCHA All-American Academic Team.

North Dakota has much to be proud of at the University of North Dakota. UND's John D. Odegard School of Aerospace Sciences is one of, if not THE, best non-military aviation program in the world. UND's Energy and Environmental Research Center has clients all over the world and UND's School of Medicine and Health Sciences is a national leader in educating doctors for rural medicine and family practice, and has educated about 20 percent of the Native American doctors currently practicing in the United States.

There is no shortage of outstanding programs at the University of North Dakota, but this week, the work of the UND hockey team justifiably takes center ice. They are true champions, and North Dakotans—especially UND alumni such as myself—are proud of their accomplishments.

These men are role models both on and off of the ice. They are skilled athletically, academically and are known for their good sportsmanship.

I want to commend them for their achievement today. These young men represent North Dakota well. I wish them continued success in all of their future endeavors.

TAXPAYER BILL OF RIGHTS 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. MAX SANDLIN

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2000. This legislation offers strong protections of taxpayers, including much-needed safeguards on personal information. This bill recognizes the importance of protecting taxpayers' privacy and would help prevent the illegal disclosure of personal information.

The Taxpayer Bill of Rights, however, fulfills only a small part of our obligation to protect individual privacy. Last year, I voted for legislation, the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Financial Services Modernization bill, that contained new federal protections of consumers' financial privacy. This legislation, which passed Congress and was signed into law by the President, allows consumers to protect their privacy by choosing to opt-out of information sharing by their financial institutions.

The protections included in the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act are an important beginning and represent a minimum federal standard. Most importantly, the new law affords states the opportunity to pass even tougher restrictions on information sharing, thus giving them the chance to enact their own consumer privacy protections above and beyond the federal minimum.

Allowing consumers the right to opt-out is a step in the right direction, although we still have many challenges ahead of us with regard to adequately protecting medical information and safeguarding Internet privacy. I urge my colleagues to join me in this important effort and continue to work hard to protect the privacy rights of every American.

TRIBUTE TO DR. HENRY J. HEIMLICH

HON. ROB PORTMAN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to Dr. Henry J. Heimlich, a community hero, an internationally recognized leader in health care, and a dear friend who will be honored on April 20 by the Rotary Club of Cincinnati. This recognition will come during National Heimlich Maneuver Week. He was selected for these honors because of his outstanding contributions to the medical community that have literally saved thousands of lives.

In fact, Dr. Heimlich has been credited with saving more lives than any other living person. Dr. Heimlich's most notable accomplishment, of course, is the Heimlich Maneuver, which he created in 1974. Since its creation, the Heimlich Maneuver has been used to save the lives of countless people from choking deaths, to prevent and halt asthma attacks, and to clear near-drowning victims' water-filled lungs more safely.

Perhaps lesser known is the Heimlich Operation, which is considered the first successful organ transplant in history. This operation enables patients with an esophagus birth defect, who previously only could be fed through a tube inserted into their stomachs, to eat normally.

Dr. Heimlich also invented the Heimlich Micro Trach, a tiny tube that is inserted into the trachea to deliver oxygen from a small tank directly to the lungs, enabling oxygen-dependent patients to become mobile and return to work and social activities.

Dr. Heimlich's Chest Drain Valve is credited with saving the lives of thousands of American soldiers during the Vietnam War. It is used in emergency treatment of people with chest wounds to clear air and fluids from the chest cavity. Up to a quarter million of these valves are used worldwide every year in civilian and military medicine.

Although he has already achieved much, Dr. Heimlich is still working to save lives. He continues development of malariotherapy, which, through a curable form of malaria, increases the body's immune responses to fight viruses and cancer by increasing production of such biochemicals as interferon, interleukin-1 and tumor necrosis factor. Dr. Heimlich believes that malariotherapy can be used, with more research, to fight cancer, AIDS, and Lyme disease.

At the age of 80, Dr. Heimlich continues his important work at the Heimlich Institute where new ways to improve and save lives are being researched. All of us in Cincinnati are grateful to him for his full devotion, service, and most impressive contributions to our community and the world.

WILDLIFE AND SPORT FISH RESTORATION PROGRAMS IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. DON YOUNG

OF ALASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 5, 2000

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3671) to amend the Acts popularly known as the Pittman-Robertson Wildlife Restoration Act and the Dingell-Johnson Sport Fish Restoration Act to enhance the funds available for grants to States for fish and wildlife conservation projects and increase opportunities for recreational hunting, bow hunting, trapping, archery, and fishing, by eliminating opportunities for waste, fraud, abuse, maladministration, and unauthorized expenditures for administration and execution of those Acts, and for other purposes:

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following into the RECORD in support of H.R. 3671.

ARCHERY MANUFACTURERS AND MERCHANTS ORGANIZATION,
Gainesville, FL, March 13, 2000.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR DON: We heartily support H.R. 3671, the Wildlife and Sport Fish Restoration Programs Improvement Act of 2000. We feel this measure will tighten-up the administration of these programs and we are particularly supportive of Sec. 102, Firearm and Bow Hunter Education and Safety Program Grants of H.R. 3671. This will go a long way toward fulfilling the commitment made to our sport and industry when we agreed to be taxed under Pittman-Robertson some 30 years ago.

We also are greatly appreciative of having had the opportunity to participate in discussions with staff leading up to the writing of H.R. 3671. There was a refreshing openness in this entire process.

Sincerely,

DICK LATTIMER,
President/CEO.

NATIONAL RIFLE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, INSTITUTE FOR LEGISLATIVE ACTION,
Fairfax, VA, March 13, 2000.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
Chairman, House Resources Committee, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN YOUNG: The NRA wholeheartedly supports your bill, H.R. 3671, the Wildlife and Sport Fish Restoration Programs Improvement Act. We speak on behalf of every one of our 3.2 million members who pay into the Pittman Robertson trust fund whether they own firearms for self-defense, recreational shooting, collecting or hunting.

Sportsmen and other firearm owners put their faith and trust in the Federal Government when they elected to be taxed to help fledgling state fish and wildlife agencies of the 1930's begin to launch what we take for granted today as scientific wildlife management. For over six decades, sportsmen have trusted the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to manage their excise tax dollars for the benefit of state wildlife restoration programs. However, alarmed over several programs created with the use of administrative dollars, but without legal authority, the NRA went on record in a statement submitted for your 1996 oversight hearing on the "Teaming with Wildlife" concept urging the Congress to examine how the Service was spending trust fund administrative dollars. Never did we imagine the extent of waste, abuse and mismanagement that was uncovered through your Committee's investigative efforts.

The NRA strongly believes that meaningful, long-lasting reform can only be assured through legislative reform as embraced by your legislation, H.R. 3671. What the Service can implement administratively to strengthen internal controls and management for Pittman-Robertson trust fund and its counterpart, the Dingell-Johnson trust fund, should be encouraged. But those efforts alone cannot restore the trust of our members. Reform must be anchored in corrective measures made as amendments to the underlying laws.

The NRA appreciates the opportunity that you accorded us to participate in discussions regarding the shape the reform language should take. Your bill reflects a very deliberative process in assimilating a diverse array of recommendations and views. There are two provisions of H.R. 3671 I would like to comment on that are of particular importance to our membership. First, the bill ensures that none of the administrative funds will ever be used by any organization that promotes or encourages opposition to hunting, fishing or trapping or for any project that promotes such opposition. This is language critical to a reform bill.

Second, on behalf of all our members that rely on shooting ranges for firearm and hunter safety courses and recreational and competitive shooting, we appreciate having language in the bill that earmarks funds for shooting and archery range purposes. These funds will supplement the discretionary funds made available to states from one-half of the excise tax revenue collected on the sale of handguns and archery equipment. For years our recreational shooters have expressed concern that states have not lived up to the bargain struck with them in support of the extension of the excise tax in the 1970's. We trust that the states will look to these funds as additional support to assist them in meeting the needs of the excise tax paying shooters, hunters and archers and will not attempt to use these funds as an offset to the discretionary funds.

We thank you for your leadership in overseeing the examination of Service's management of the trust funds and your commitment provide an avenue to restore health and vitality to the programs. These trust funds are unprecedented in the world and while the conservation dollars can be counted in the billions, the conservation benefits are inestimable. It is important for all of us who cherish our fish and wildlife resources to see that the sportsmen and women of this country are given a sound reason to be taxed for the benefit of the conservation, restoration, and enhancement of those same resources.

Sincerely,

JAMES JAY BAKER,
Executive Director.

Congressman DON YOUNG.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN YOUNG: This communication is to indicate the support of the National Trappers Association for H.R. 3671.

NTA has worked hard to assure corrective actions are taken to be sure the PR–DJ Funds from excise taxes are used for wildlife and conservation efforts as originally intended.

Thank you so much for doing the right thing for sportsmen in America, the true conservationists who put their money where their mouth is.

Sincerely,

SCOTT HARTMAN,
Director, National & International Affairs.

NATIONAL WILDERNESS INSTITUTE,
Washington, DC, April 5, 2000.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
Chairman, House Resources Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Thank you for introducing The Wildlife and Sport Restoration and Improvement Act of 2000. This bill will help stop the mismanagement by the current leadership of the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Dingell-Johnson Act, the Pittman-Robertson Act and other programs administered by the Division of Federal Aid. These laws are based on the remarkably straightforward idea of using an excise tax on guns, ammunition and fishing gear to provide a secure funding base for state fish and game departments. Most state fish and wildlife agencies get their budgets almost entirely from the sale of hunting and fishing licenses and P–R and D–J funds.

In much of the world, sport hunting and fishing are the privilege of noblemen but America is different, and sportsmen here are determined to preserve our country's outdoor heritage and maintain hunting and fishing opportunities for everyone. That is why sportsmen started these programs which have been largely responsible for the development of scientific wildlife management. Of course, the sound wildlife conservation efforts underwritten by sportsmen also benefit non-game species. When sportsmen create habitat for quail, ducks or trout, they also provide habitat for woodpeckers, eagles and all other species.

Sportsmen pay for conservation and the rest of us have pretty much gotten a free ride. That is why it was so wrong for the current leaders of the Fish and Wildlife Service to loot this uniquely effective program to create slush funds and use it as a cash cow to cover foreign travel and unrelated administrative expenses. Their attempt to divert these funds to anti-hunting groups is an even worse affront. The mismanagement of these funds is cause for concern about any new funding mechanism that do not require annual appropriations. We greatly appreciate your leadership in upholding our sportsmen-conservationist heritage and taking steps to clean up the problems at the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Sincerely,

ROB GORDON,
Executive Director.

RE: H.R. 3671, the Pittman-Robertson Wildlife Restoration and Dingell-Johnson Sport Fish Restoration Act

DEAR CHAIRMAN YOUNG: Safari Club International (SCI) considers H.R. 3671, the Pittman-Robertson Wildlife Restoration and Dingell-Johnson Sport Fish Restoration Act, to be of utmost importance for the future of sportsmen and wildlife in the 106th Congress.

This is a bipartisan reform legislative effort. The bill has been introduced with a diverse and respected group of co-sponsors, including yourself, Representative John Dingell (D–MI), Representative Tom DeLay (R–TX), Representative Owen Pickett (D–VA), Representative Richard Pombo (R–CA), Representative Chris John (D–LA), Representative John Peterson (R–PA), and others. The Congressional Sportsmen's Caucus supports the legislation because of the positive impact it will have on wildlife, habitat and sportsmen far into the future.

H.R. 3671 will bring integrity and respect back into the system. As you know, the original intent of the Pittman-Robertson (P–R) excise tax was that it be used solely for the purpose of wildlife restoration in the 50 states. GAO investigations into the misuse of P–R funds revealed that ''P–R funds were being administered like a big shell game.'' H.R. 3671 eliminates any ambiguity in the current statute by explicitly delineating proper purposes for the fund. In addition to setting clear guidelines for federal administrators it will also emphasize to state wildlife administrators the intent of the law when spending sportsmen's dollars. H.R. 3671 will ensure accountability when spending money that comes from sportsmen.

In many cases the past distribution and spending of Pittman-Robertson funds did not follow the intent of the 1937 law. The areas badly neglected were hunter education, firearms safety, archery ranges, archery training and firearms ranges. Groups like SCI, AMO, NSSF, and NRA had to privately fund hunter education. Seven thousand volunteers had to step in and assume responsibility because this intended use of P–R money was not fulfilled as it should have been.

For example, in 1970, archers were promised that if they came into the excise tax program, that 50% of the money raised would be used for ranges and instruction. Since 1975, $282,189,160.00 have been raised. Very little of the promised $141 million has been used for ranges or instruction. Most of it was diverted to other uses. A very important part of the legislation is a restatement of the original intent.

The final, and perhaps the most important part of the legislation is a provision that encourages NGO's to participate in a matching grant program for hunter education, shooting safety, and recruitment of young people into an appreciation of the outdoors. This section involves those who pay the tax by allowing them to have a voice in how their money is spent.

For over 60 years, Pittman-Robertson funds have provided an abundance of wildlife and habitat that is enjoyed by sportsmen and the general public. Thank you for your support of H.R. 3671, which insures that this work can continue far into the future.

Sincerely,

LAWRENCE S. KATZ,
President.

TEXAS WILDLIFE ASSOCIATION,
San Antonio, TX, March 31, 2000.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
Chair, House of Representatives, Committee on Resources, RHOB, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN YOUNG: One of the great honors of my life has been testifying before you and your committee describing the problems that resulted in your filing H.R. 3671. Passing without dissent out of your committee speaks volumes about bringing justice to the folks who have been paying for conservation since 1937, and before. Who are they? Hunters and anglers have paid for conservation . . . period.

Not only has the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service forgotten this fact, they have also ignored the central mission of government: government should enable rather than require, let alone try to do itself. Your H.R. 3671 reminds the USFWS that their first duty is to empower the states to foster effort from their citizens.

The thousands of members of the Texas Wildlife Association, who hunt and fish and lovingly conserve many, many millions of acres of private wildlife habitat, urge all members of Congress to vote for H.R. 3671.

Very respectfully submitted,

DAVID K. LANGFORD,
Executive Vice President.

TRANS TEXAS HERITAGE ASSOCIATION,
Alpine, TX, March 31, 2000.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
Chairman, House Resources Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN YOUNG: The Trans Texas Heritage Association and regional associations, Davis Mountains Trans-Pecos and Hill Country Heritage Associations, represent members who own more than 15.5 million acres of private land in Texas. It is on behalf of these members that we thank you for introducing The Wildlife and Sport Fish Restoration and Improvement Act of 2000.

The Heritage Association members are land stewards, sportsmen, and conservationists. We are outraged by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's (USFWS) mishandling of funds from the Pittman-Robertson, Dingell-Johnson Act and other programs which were specifically set aside to fund state fish and game departments. Even more reprehensible is the USFWS's attempt to divert these funds to anti-hunting groups. We are thankful that The Wildlfie and Sport Fish Restoration and Improvement Act of 2000 will help to stop these and other abuses.

Chairman Young, we sincerely appreciate your commitment and efforts that will benefit the preservation and conservation of our nation's sportsmen's and outdoor heritage.

Very truly yours,

C.M. VAN EMAN,
President.

THE MULE DEER FOUNDATION,
Reno, NV, April 5, 2000.

Hon. DON YOUNG,
Chairman, House Resources Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, DC

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Your leadership for The Wildlife and Sport Fish Restoration and Improvement Act of 2000 is to be commended. The Mule Deer Foundation (MDF) anticipates this bill, when enacted, will assist the US Fish and Wildlife Service to better manage Federal Aid funds. MDF is especially supportive of good management of the funds from the Pittman-Robertson Act and the Dingell-Johnson Act. These Acts are central to the conservation funding in this country and are, frankly, an unprecedented model for sustainable conservation worldwide. Hunters and fishermen in our country historically have been the first to step to the plate to support conservation and these Acts provide a critical source of funding for conservation to stated conservation agencies. With the disparate pressures that come from varied interests, it is of critical importance that we continue to safeguard and improve the management of these funds.

The Mule Deer Foundation recognizes that this bill passed out of the House Resources Committee with an amazing 36–0 vote. MDF would like to voice its support for this bill and congratulations to the Committee for its bi-partisan approach to improving management of Federal Aid Funds.

The Mule Deer Foundation is a 501(c)(3) not for profit, charitable organization whose Mission is to ensure the conservation of mule and blacktailed deer and their habitats.

Chairman Young, on behalf of The Mule Deer Foundation, let me thank you and your Committee on this effort in behalf of American's conservation programs.

Very truly yours,

WILLIAM I. MORRILL,
President, and CEO.

GULF LUMBER COMPANY, INC.,

Hon. DON YOUNG, Chairman, House Resources Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Since the founding of the Mobile County Wildlife Association and the Alabama Wildlife Federation in the mid 1930's, my family has been involved in the innumerable conservation and wildlife organizations. We have spent untold dollars and man-hours furthering the conservation of wildlife and wildlife habitat.

I tell you this to say thank you for introducing The Wildlife and Sport Fish Restoration and Improvement Act of 2000. This bill will help stop the mismanagement by the current leadership of the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Dingell-Johnson Act, the Pittman-Robertson Act and other programs administered by the Division of Federal Aid.

It is wrong for the current leaders of the Fish and Wildlife Service to loot this uniquely effective program to create slush funds and use it as a cash cow to cover foreign travel and unrelated administrative expenses. Their attempt to divert these funds to anti-hunting groups is an even worse affront.

We greatly appreciate your leadership in upholding our sportsmen-conservationist heritage and taking steps to clean up the problems at the Fish and Wildlife Service.

Sincerely,

W.S. (SANDY) STIMPSON,
Sr. Vice President.

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION MONTH

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, today I commemorate April as the Child Abuse Prevention month and to inform my colleagues of a quiet but devastating situation that continues to plague our nation: that of child abuse and neglect. In this time of prosperity we are leaving needy children behind.

More than 1 million children are reported abused and neglected in this country each year. This is an amazing statistic, especially when most cases of neglect and abuse are not reported.

In Virginia, according to the American Humane Association's Children Division in 1997, there were 11,792 confirmed reports of maltreatment to children.

The situation, as it exists right now, simply cannot go on. These children need and deserve our help, and Congress can and must step in if we are to begin to better tackle this public health epidemic and national tragedy. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support vital federal programs that seek to address this problem through improved preventive and early intervention services.

The effects of child abuse are felt by communities as a whole and need to be addressed by the entire community. All citizens should become more aware of the negative effects of child abuse and its prevention within the community. All citizens should become involved in supporting vulnerable and at risk parents to raise their children in a safe nurturing environment. This is why it is important to recognize April as Child Abuse Prevention Month.

All citizens, community agencies, religious organizations, medical facilities, and businesses should increase their participation in our efforts to prevent child abuse, thereby strengthening the communities in which we live.

Child maltreatment has ramifications far beyond the actual physical and psychological harm done to the child. It also affects school readiness, juvenile crime and poor health outcomes. We simply must do more.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that I can count on my colleagues to recognize this month as Child Abuse Prevention Month and give strong support of these and other measures so that we can seek to put an end to what can only be called a national epidemic.

TAXPAYER BILL OF RIGHTS 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. BENJAMIN A GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am in strong support of H.R. 4163, the Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2000. I urge my colleagues to join in supporting this important legislation.

H.R. 4163 is a bipartisan bill designed to provide further protections to taxpayers from regulatory abuse by the Internal Revenue Service. In recent years, the Congress has adopted several of these taxpayer bill of rights, which have done much to reign in some of the more outrageous abuses heaped on taxpayers, who, by no fault of their own, have run afoul of overzealous IRS personnel.

This legislation offers a number of important protections for those individuals who have been unable to pay their taxes on time and thus have incurred additional interest and penalty charges. Specifically, the bill repeals the present day penalty for failure to pay tax, for those taxpayers that have entered into installment payments with the IRS to repay large outstanding balances.

Additionally, this bill: Expands circumstances where interest on underpayment of taxes may be abated, simplifies estimated tax calculations, limits taxpayer exposure to underpayment interest through the use of qualified reserve accounts, and tightens the privacy rights of taxpayers through limiting disclosure options open to the IRS.

Mr. Speaker, similar bills in the past have done much to provide protection to taxpayers from overbearing Federal agencies with regulations that have had unintended consequences in their implementation. This legislation continues that tradition by offering important protections to have, for whatever reason, made under-payments on taxes owed and are subsequently trying to make good on any overdue balances.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this worthy legislation.

TRIBUTE TO RETIRING COLONEL ROBERT N. CLEMENT

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that our colleague in the House of Representatives, Colonel Robert N. Clement, will retire from the Tennessee Army National Guard on April 30, 2000, after more than 31 years of exemplary military service.

Colonel Clement began his career as a Second Lieutenant in the United States Army Reserve. In January 1969, he entered active duty for his Officers Basic Course in the Adjutant General's Corps. Upon completion of the school at Fort Benjamin Harrison in March, he attended Middle Managers training at Fort Gordon, Georgia. Colonel Clement remained at Fort Gordon to serve as the Assistant Adjutant at the United States Civil Affairs School, where he received a Certificate of Achievement for his performance. He completed his active duty service with the Army Forces Entrance and Examination Station at Nashville, Tennessee. During this time, he earned promotion to first lieutenant and received the Army Commendation Medal.

Colonel Clement joined the Tennessee Army National Guard in January 1971 when he became a Personnel Management Officer in the 530th Administration Company. He was promoted to Captain while serving as a Special Services Officer in that unit. In 1975, he became an Assistant Information Officer in the 118th Public Affair Detachment. Shortly thereafter, Colonel Clement was reassigned as a Race Relations and Equal Opportunity Training Officer in the Headquarters, Tennessee Army National Guard, Nashville, Tennessee. He then served the Headquarters as Race Relations and Equal Opportunity Officer for the next six and one half years. He was promoted to Major during this assignment.

In 1983, Colonel Clement was named Chief, Enlisted Personnel Branch, Headquarters, State Area Command, Tennessee Army National Guard. After receiving significant experience in personnel actions over the next three years, he became a Selective Service Officer and was promoted to Lieutenant Colonel. His next assignment was as a Plans and Operations Officer in the Plans, Operations and Training Division. After completing four years in this assignment, he was promoted to Colonel and detailed as a Special Plans and Operations Officer. In July 1995, Colonel Clement became the Deputy Director, Plans, Operations and Training Division. One year later, he was assigned as the Senior Medical Operations Support Officer in support of MEDIGUARD Operations and served admirably in this assignment until his retirement.

Mr. Speaker, Colonel Clement has dedicated over 31 years to the military, serving with honor and distinction. I wish him all the best in the days ahead as he continues his public service by representing the people of the state of Tennessee. I am certain that the Members of the House will join me in paying tribute to this fine officer.

HONORING MS. MITZI STITES OF SPRINGFIELD, TN, ON THE OCCASION OF HER RETIREMENT AS EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE ROBERTSON COUNTY CHILD ADVOCACY CENTER

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, today I honor Ms. Mitzi Stites of Springfield, TN, on the occasion of her retirement as Executive Director of the Robertson County Child Advocacy Center and her tireless efforts on behalf of Tennessee's children.

Ms. Stites was named the first and only Executive Director of the Robertson County Child Advocacy Center in Springfield in 1993. Mitzi immediately put her energy to work for the children in the area, educating the community about the advocacy center and organizing area agencies who began working and meeting together on a regular basis as a result of her tireless efforts.

Children's Advocacy Centers (CACs) across the Nation are child-focused, facility-based programs in which representatives from many disciplines meet to discuss and make decisions about investigation, treatment, and prosecution of child abuse cases. They also work to prevent further victimization of children. This approach brings together a comprehensive group of agencies such as law enforcement, child protective services, prosecution, mental health and the medical community. It is an approach that truly puts the needs of the child victims first.

It takes a very unique individual to facilitate communications and meetings between these many agencies. Mitzi Stites initiated this plan in Robertson County in 1993 and since that time has seen great success. She has shown foresight and leadership not only in the day-to-day operations of the facility, but by pioneering a number of community efforts on behalf of children.

These include the Blue Ribbon Campaign in honor of April as Child Abuse Awareness Month, which Mitzi successfully launched in 1994 in Robertson County; the Teddy Bears for court program for child victims; the annual drive for backpacks filled with school supplies and toiletries for at risk, low-income, and children of victimization; and ''snuggables'' given to victims by the CAC, local enforcement, and the Department of Children's Services (DCS). She also annually organized ''angels'' to anonymously sponsor abused children and their families each Christmas. She has worked closely with Sharon Puckett of WSMV–TV in Nashville to provide hundreds of stuffed animals to needy children in our area. These stuffed animals were often donated quietly by Nashville's wealth of country music stars.

In addition, Mitzi Stites has been involved in numerous community and civic activities, serving as the Secretary for the Robertson County Coalition for several years, as well as many other organizations.

Prior to being named Executive Director for the Robertson County Children's Advocacy Center, Stites worked briefly at the Robertson County Times newspaper from 1992–1993. However she spent most of her career in mortgage banking, first with Southeast Mortgage Company in Miami from 1963–1989 and then with the JT Brokers Group, Inc., in Jupiter, Florida from 1989–1991.

Mitzi Stites often went above and beyond the call of duty, spending numerous hours fashioning the Robertson County Advocacy Center into a warm and homey atmosphere, rather than a sterile, office environment. The children who entered her doors often came in traumatized and fearful, but whether they were there for one visit or numerous visits, I assure you, they always left feeling loved.

Because my Springfield Congressional office was housed next door to the Advocacy Center, I was able to get to know Mitzi both professionally and personally. I admire her character and zeal on behalf of the children in our community, who once abused or neglected, often have no voice. Mitzi Stites has been that voice heard loud and clear on behalf of these children.

I wish the best for Ms. Stites on her retirement and in all of her future endeavors.

IN RECOGNITION OF SAMUEL MERRITT COLLEGE RECEIVING THE 1999 CALIFORNIA GOVERNOR'S QUALITY AWARD OAKLAND, CA

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize and celebrate Samuel Merritt College's receipt of the California Governor's Quality Award for 1999.

The Quality Award is California's premier award for performance excellence and quality achievement in business, education and health care professions. Samuel Merritt College was one of only six recipients to receive this prestigious award. The College is the first institution of higher education to receive this award.

Samuel Merritt College educates students for a life of highly skilled and compassionate service in health care. Founded in 1909 as a hospital school of nursing, Samuel Merritt College today offers both graduate and undergraduate degree programs in a variety of health science fields. The College's degrees include Bachelor of Science degrees in Nursing and Health and Human Sciences and Master degrees in Occupational Therapy, Physician Assistant, Physical Therapy, and Nursing.

Samuel Merritt College has a long tradition of excellence representing the finest in health sciences education.

On March 8, 2000, a reception was held by the College's Board of Regents in celebration of this honor.

The Samuel Merritt College is truly a valuable resource for the community and medical profession. I am proud of this accomplishment and join in the celebration of this well-deserved recognition.

APRIL 13, 2000 IS NATIONAL D.O. DAY

HON. JAMES M. TALENT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, today I honor National D.O. Day. I rise to recognize members of the osteopathic medical profession for their substantial contributions to American healthcare. I congratulate the American Osteopathic Association on its 103 years of service to osteopathic physicians and their patients. It is my pleasure to acknowledge members of the osteopathic medical profession, their spouses, and osteopathic medical students who have chosen today to make visits to their representatives and senators. It's good to see these individuals taking time to educate our colleagues on the values and principles of osteopathic medicine.

Mr. Speaker, I am fortunate to represent the State of Missouri, which is the home of osteopathic medicine. In 1892, a charter was obtained for the American School of Osteopathy. The original school was located in a small one room building in Kirksville, Missouri and today is known as the Kirksville College of Osteopathic Medicine. A revised and expanded charter was issued on October 3, 1894, in accordance with the laws regulating educational institutions in the State of Missouri. Dr. Andrew Taylor Still, an allopathic physician (or M.D.), was the founder of the Kirksville school and, indeed, the father of osteopathic medicine.

Osteopathic medicine is a unique form of American medical care developed in 1874 by Dr. Still who was dissatisfied with the effectiveness of 19th century medicine. Dr. Still was one of the first in his time to study the attributes of good health so that he could understand the process of disease. Dr. Still's philosophy focused on the unity of all body parts. He identified the musculoskeletal system as a key element of health and recognized the body's ability to heal itself. Dr. Still pioneered the concept of "wellness" over 100 years ago. He stressed preventative medicine, eating properly and keeping fit. Dr. Still's philosophy—that in coordination with appropriate medical treatment—the osteopathic physician acts as a teacher to help patients take more responsibility for their own well-being and change unhealthy patterns—is every bit as viable today as it was when he developed it.

D.O.s complete four years of basic medical education, followed by an intern year and specialty training. In fact, D.O.s are certified in 23 specialties and subspecialties. They pass state licensing examinations and practice in duly accredited and licensed osteopathic and allopathic healthcare facilities. D.O.s comprise a separate, yet equal, branch of American medical care.

It is the ways that D.O.s and M.D.s are different that brings an extra dimension to healthcare. Just as Dr. Still pioneered osteopathic medicine on the Missouri frontier in 1874, today's osteopathic physicians serve as modern day medical pioneers. They continue the tradition to bringing healthcare to areas of greatest need. Approximately 64 percent of all osteopathic physicians practice in primary care areas such as pediatrics, family practice, obstetrics/gynecology and internal medicine. Many D.O.s fill a critical need by practicing in rural and medically underserved areas.

To the over 1,600 D.O.s in my state, the approximately 2,000 students at Colleges of Osteopathic Medicine in Kirksville and Kansas City, and to all 45,000 D.O.s represented by the American Osteopathic Association—congratulations on your contributions to the good health of the American people. I look forward to working with you to further our mutual goal of continually improving our nation's healthcare.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF SUISUN-FAIRFIELD CHAPTER 81 OF THE DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS

HON. MIKE THOMPSON
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. THOMPSON of California. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize Disabled American Veterans Chapter 81 of Suisun-Fairfield, California as this organization celebrates its 50th anniversary of service to our country.

The Suisun-Fairfield Chapter is part of a national DAV network that provides services to and represents America's 2.1 million service-connected disabled veterans.

The DAV was formed in 1920 when local self help groups that had formed to provide support for the more than 300,000 disabled World War I troops who returned home from European battlefields merged into one national organization. The national organization received its Congressional Charter in 1932.

Forty local veterans helped organize and charter Chapter 81 in 1950. Over the years, its membership has grown to more than 900 veterans.

The annual Forget-Me-Not Drive is Chapter 81's primary community activity. The Forget-Me-Not Drive commemorates images brought back by soldiers who fought in World War I of flowers growing among the graves of their fallen comrades. The flower became the symbol of both those who died in battle and those who came home bearing the scars of war. Proceeds from the drive are used by Chapter 81 to provide incidentals to disabled veterans who are hospitalized or living in the community.

During the past fifty years, Chapter 81 has also hosted special events for disabled children and for residents of the Veterans Home of California.

Chapter 81 has also had a very active Ladies Auxiliary. They hosted the club's bimonthly family potlucks and continue to be involved in the club's annual Christmas Wish List Program for children and in distributing gifts at the Veterans Home.

Chapter 81 also actively works with its elected representatives to make sure that our service men and women who have been wounded in battle are not re-injured by peacetime apathy.

Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that we acknowledge and honor today this veterans' organization and the men and women who have given so much for our country.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO AMEND THE ALASKA NATIVE CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

HON. DON YOUNG
OF ALASKA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that would address several matters of concern to Alaska Natives through an amendment to the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (ANCSA).

As my colleagues know, ANCSA was enacted in 1971, stimulated by the need to address Native land claims as well as the desire to clear the way for the construction of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline and thereby provide our country with access to the petroleum resources of Alaska's North Slope. As the years pass, issues arise which require amending the Act. The Resources Committee as a matter of course routinely considers such amendments and brings them before the House.

Consequently, I am introducing this bill containing several such amendments to ANCSA in order to facilitate having its provisions circulated during the upcoming Congressional recess among Congress, the Administration and the State of Alaska for review and consideration.

This bill has six provisions. One provision would clarify the liability for contaminated lands. The clarification of contaminated land would declare that no person acquiring interest in land under this Act shall be liable for the costs of removal or remedial action, any damages, or any third party liability arising out or as a result of any contamination on that land at the time the land was acquired under this Act.

Section 3 of the bill amends the Act further to allow equal access to Alaska Native Veterans who served in the military or other armed services during the Viet Nam war. Alaska Natives have faithfully answered the call of duty when asked to serve in the armed services. In fact, American Indians and Alaska Natives generally have the highest record of answering the call to duty.

Under the Native Allotment Act, Alaska Natives were allowed to apply for lands which they traditionally used as fish camps, berry picking camps or hunting camps. However, many of our Alaska Natives answered the call to duty and served in the services during the Viet Nam war and were unable to apply for their Native allotment. This provision allows them to apply for their Native allotments and would expand the dates to include the full years of the Viet Nam war. The original dates recommended by the Administration only allowed the dates January 1, 1969 to December 31, 1971. Our Alaska Native veterans should not be penalized for serving during the entire dates of the Viet Nam conflict. This provision corrects that inequity by expanding the dates to reflect all the years of the Viet Nam war—August 5, 1964 to May 7, 1975.

The settlement trust provision of ANCSA presently indicates that the assets placed in a settlement trust are not subject to any creditor action other than those by the creditors of the settlement trust itself. Federal law is unclear whether the beneficiary's interests in the trust can be subject to attachment, etc., by their creditors. The legislative history from the 1988 amendments specifically indicates that a "spendthrift clause" could be included in the trust agreement for a settlement trust, but does not specify what the scope of such a provision could be. Normally, under general trust law, a spendthrift clause operates to limit the circumstances in which creditors can reach a beneficiary's trust interest. Alaska law

(A.S. 34.40.110) expressly recognizes the validity of a spendthrift clause for trusts established on or after April 2, 1997, but does not expressly authorize a spendthrift clause for trusts established prior to this date.

All this uncertainty places the Trustees in a difficult legal position under present law in deciding whether to honor creditor levies against beneficiary interests in a settlement issue. Trustees are required as fiduciaries to protect the beneficiaries' rights, but are also required to honor creditor actions if those are valid under applicable law. At least one court case is now pending before the United States District Court for Alaska to determine whether the trustees of a settlement trust must honor a levy by the State of Alaska with regard to various beneficiaries' unpaid child support obligations.

By contrast, since 1971 section 7(h) of ANCSA has clearly restricted most creditor actions as to Native corporation stock. Creditors are prohibited from levies and other similar actions against Settlement Common Stock, except to the extent that a court has authorized creditor action with regard to unpaid child support. Thus, child support levies are valid against Settlement Common Stock as long as a court has previously authorized such actions.

The proposed provision removes the uncertainty as to levies against the beneficial interests in a settlement trust by clarifying that such levies and other creditor actions may occur in the same circumstances that such levies and actions could occur with regard to the stock in a Native corporation. Not only does this confirm the trust procedure to a procedure already known to the personnel within Native corporations (who often provide the day to day administration of the trusts), but it also follows logically because the source of the settlement trust assets was the Native corporation.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to the provisions which are currently included in the legislation I am introducing today which amends the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, it is my understanding that several other provisions are in the process of being drafted and/or negotiated with relevant parties. If those provisions are ready to be considered at the time of committee mark-up of this bill, then I anticipate that they would be offered for inclusion in the bill at that time.

Again, I am introducing this bill today to facilitate its provisions circulated and reviewed during the April recess by the Department of the Interior, the State of Alaska and Alaska Natives.

EARTH DAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, Earth Day serves to remind us all that environmental issues know no political bounds and affect all of the people, plants, and animals of the world community. It is essential that the policies our government enacts, and the personal activities we undertake reflect our profound concern for safeguarding the Earth.

From combating global climate change to protecting threatened species to providing clean water, we have a duty to act locally and globally to protect the environment for our present and future generations.

Saving the planet may seem to be an insurmountable task, but in order for our children to have a brighter future we must commit ourselves to an environmental policy which seeks to establish a clean, safe, and productive environment.

The 106th Congress is working to preserve and protect our Nation's open spaces by reinvigorating the land and water conservation fund. Designed to protect our nation's natural heritage, the land and water conservation fund is a vital program which has saved thousands of acres of forest, miles of river, and many of America's mountain ranges. In the face of pollution and urban sprawl, the 106th Congress has responded by looking to preserve our nation's greenways.

We must not forget that the air we breathe is our most precious resource. Americans can clearly see, smell and feel the difference that pollution has made in their lives. As a strong supporter of the Clean Air Act, I fully understand the need for clean air standards. By encouraging innovation, cooperation, and the development of new technologies for pollution reduction, these standards build upon the spirit of ingenuity that is the foundation of America's leadership in the world.

As chairman of the International Relations Committee, I understand the importance of using our leadership in the United States to assist other nations in developing and maintaining successful environmental programs.

I personally have led efforts to protect whales from commercial hunting and to protect African elephants from the deadly effect of the international ivory trade. I have also been in the forefront in bringing greater awareness to the linkages between refugees, world hunger and national security to environmental degradation. Moreover, if we do not assist in the survival of indigenous and tribal people, their wealth of traditional knowledge and their important habitats will no longer be available for the rest of mankind.

Earth Day is a successful vehicle and incentive for ongoing environmental education, action and change. Earth Day activities address worldwide environmental concerns and offer opportunities for individuals and communities to focus on their local environmental problems.

During the 106th Congress, I worked with the New York State's Governor Pataki and the citizens of New York's 20th Congressional District to save thousands of acres of precious lands, such as Sterling Forest, the Gaisman Estate, and Clausland Mountain. I have requested funding for the Hudson Valley National Heritage Area, which would help preserve the history, culture and traditions of this beautiful region. I am also proud to note that our 20th Congressional District of New York is home to the Lamont-Doherty Earth Observatory, one of the country's leading climate study institutions, which I have been pleased to support.

Earth Day is a powerful catalyst for people to make a difference toward a clean, healthy, prosperous future. We cannot continue with the attitude that someone else will clean up after us. We need to take care of our world today. I cannot think of a better way and a better day to commit to our environmental concerns than Earth Day. I salute all who observe Earth Day in all ways large and small.

TRIBUTE TO COMMAND SERGEANT MAJOR GEORGE E. CUTBIRTH

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that Command Sergeant Major George E. Cutbirth is retiring after 30 years of exemplary service in the United States Army. He has served his country with dignity, honor, and integrity.

Command Sergeant Major Cutbirth is a native of Southwest Missouri. He graduated from Hurley High School in 1969 and entered the Army in April 1970. He attended Basic Training and Advanced Individual Training at Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri. He has held positions of increasing responsibility during his career, to include: Squad Leader; Repair Control Supervisor; Platoon Sergeant; Drill Sergeant; Senior Drill Sergeant; TAC Sergeant; Instructor; First Sergeant; and Battalion Command Sergeant Major. He has also served as the Commandant, Ordnance Noncommissioned Officer Academy, Command Sergeant Major Ordnance Center and School, Ordnance Corps Regiment Sergeant Major and Command Sergeant Major Combined Arms Support Command. Currently, Command Sergeant Major Cutbirth is serving as the Command Sergeant Major for the United States Army Materiel Command. He is the first ordnance soldier to hold that position.

Command Sergeant Major Cutbirth has served in a variety of overseas and stateside assignments. They include tours in Okinawa, Vietnam, Italy, Korea and the Federal Republic of Germany. He also served in Saudi Arabia, Iraq and Kuwait during Operations Desert Shield and Desert Storm. Within the United States, he has been assigned to: Fort Campbell, Kentucky; Fort Leonard Wood, Missouri, Aberdeen Proving Ground, Maryland; and Fort Lee, Virginia.

Command Sergeant Major Cutbirth is a graduate of the United States Army Sergeants Major Academy, the 3rd Army Noncommissioned Officer Academy, the Drill Sergeant Academy, and numerous technical and functional courses. He also earned an Associate of Arts degree from Columbia College, Missouri, and a Bachelor of Science degree from the University of Maryland.

Command Sergeant Major Cutbirth's awards and decorations include: the Legion of Merit with two oak leaf clusters, the Bronze Star; the Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters; the Army Commendation Medal; and Army Achievement Medal; the Good Conduct Medal (tenth award); the National Defense Service Medal with Bronze Service Star; the Vietnam Service Medal; the Southwest Asia Service Medal; the Humanitarian Service Medal; the Overseas Service Ribbon with numeral three; the Army Service Ribbon, the Noncommissioned Officer Professional Development Ribbon with numeral four; the Vietnam Campaign Medal; the Kuwait Liberation Medal; the Master Parachutist Badge; the Drill Sergeant Badge; the Mechanic Badge; and the Belgian Parachutist Badge.

Mr. Speaker, Command Sergeant Major Cutbirth deserves the thanks and praise of the nation that he had faithfully served for so long. I know the Members of the House will join me in wishing him, his wife of 30 years, Catherine, and his three children, Laurie, Paul and Mathew, all the best in the years ahead.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall vote No. 114, I was unavoidably detained on official business. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

IN CELEBRATION OF THE 110TH ANNIVERSARY OF BETH EDEN BAPTIST CHURCH, OAKLAND, CA

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, today, I celebrate the 110th anniversary of the establishment of the Beth Eden Baptist Church in Oakland, California. This milestone will be commemorated from April 9 through May 21, 2000.

The theme of this celebration is taken from Ephesians 6:10–18 which reads: "By example-maintaining our armor of God and hold fast to the principles of righteousness, perseverance, faithfulness, salvation and spirit, which are in the word of God."

Beth Eden is the oldest Black Baptist Church in Alameda County. Founded on April 20, 1890, its first pastor was Rev. George Gray. Since 1890, the church has flourished following its theme "A Legacy of Faith."

Since its founding with Rev. Gray, Beth Eden has had eleven additional pastors, including Rev. Robert Alexander McQuinn, Rev. James Allen (who later founded Oakland's Allen Temple Baptist Church), Rev. John Dwelle, Rev. John Coylar (the Church's only Caucasian minister), Rev. John Allen, Rev. James Dennis (who later founded the North Oakland Baptist Church), Rev. Francis Walker, Rev. Samuel Hawkins, Rev. Paul Hubbard, Rev. Alvin Dones and Rev. Dr. Gillette James, the current pastor.

For more than a century, Beth Eden has been a West Oakland landmark of faith, activity and commitment to building a stronger community. These activities include building senior housing, holding interfaith Thanksgiving services with local churches, establishing a Missionary Society, creating SHARE, a discount food program, and helping to create the Black Adoption Placement and Research Center.

Beth Eden Baptist Church is truly a source of civic pride and a valuable resource for the community. I proudly join the church's members, friends and neighbors in saluting and honoring the history and spirit of this great church.

HONORING WILLIAM C. "BILL" COLEMAN IN RECEIVING THE J. ROBERT LADD COMMUNITY SERVICE AWARD AND THE 2000 SERVICE TO MANKIND AWARD

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize William C. Coleman in receiving the J. Robert Ladd Community Service Award and the Service to Mankind Award from the Lebanon Valley, Sertoma Club.

Bill has made an incredible difference in the community of Lebanon, Pennsylvania. He has been a regular volunteer at the Lebanon Rescue Mission since 1947. He has served on the board of directors, taught Sunday School and has presided as the executive director of the Rescue Mission. Bill has dedicated his life to helping those less fortunate. His generosity, kindness and love has earned him the respect of his community, family and friends.

Bill's relationship with the Lebanon Rescue Mission began when, at the tender age of 19, he felt something was missing in his life. During this time period he was diagnosed with a life-threatening illness. Looking for guidance, he felt compelled to visit the Mission. Bill went there with his mother and they met with Reverend Miller. Reverend Miller talked with Bill and read from the Bible. That night, Bill's life changed. He gave up drinking, gambling, smoking and, as Bill puts it, his vocabulary lost a lot of unnecessary words. Later, when the doctor who had previously diagnosed Bill with the life-threatening illness examined him again, he found Bill to be a perfect picture of health.

Bill started his career at a young age as a stock clerk at Pomeroy's, and moved onto Hershey's Chocolate and the Lebanon Paper Box Company. Bill continued to work hard and eventually landed a job at Winston Prints. He worked his way up through the ranks, eventually becoming supervisor, and later the number three man in the company. While Bill worked at Winston Prints his relationship with the Lebanon Rescue Mission also flourished. He was a dedicated and valued volunteer, spending many hours helping those in dire need. He became a Sunday School teacher, superintendent and secretary to the board of directors. In 1984, after 14 years with Winston Prints, Bill resigned to become the full-time executive director of the Lebanon Rescue Mission.

Bill has been instrumental in many changes that have taken place at the mission since 1984. The first significant change occurred in 1985 when plans were announced to build The Agape Family Shelter for homeless women and children. It was a huge undertaking that included raising nearly $400,000 to be used in refurbishing the 115-year-old Dehuff Mansion, making it livable for up to eighteen women and children. The shelter continues to provide a friendly, socialable and safe place for those who find themselves not only homeless, but with a feeling of hopelessness. The Agape Family Shelter provides women with love, attention, and care they drastically require. The shelter also promotes a special program which teaches battered women how to set goals and implement them into their daily lives.

Bill has also helped implement a program to help men who battle with problems with drugs and alcohol. In addition, Bill hosted a popular hour-long radio broadcast every Sunday morning for those who were seeking spiritual up-lifting. He served as the Chaplain for the Lebanon County Fire Police and has been an outspoken advocate for the people of Lebanon County.

Mr. Speaker, again I want to congratulate Bill Coleman in receiving the J. Robert Ladd Community Service Award and the Service to Mankind Award. Through his consistent and unselfish efforts, the community of Lebanon is a richer place for all those who reside there. Thank you Bill for your service to the men, women and children of Lebanon.

CELEBRATING MYRTLE LILLIAN WALDRUP SPRINKLE

HON. CHARLES H. TAYLOR

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to commend and celebrate the life and 100th birthday of one of Western North Carolina's most beloved citizens. I had the great opportunity to attend the birthday celebration of Myrtle Lillian Waldrup Sprinkle in Marion, McDowell County. While there I witnessed a gentle, gracious lady full of life, vigor and still displays an amazingly agile mind.

Mrs. Sprinkle was born on April 4, 1900 in Madison County North Carolina. She moved to McDowell County in 1945 with her husband as he was named to be the pastor of Mt. Zion Baptist Church. For all of Mrs. Sprinkle's life two things have mattered most. She has an undying devotion to her church and her family. She has been a member of Zion Hill Baptist Church for over 55 years and taught Sunday school for many years. Her granddaughter, Wanda Childers, described Mrs. Sprinkle's faith as "unwavering."

Mrs. Sprinkle has been a pillar of strength in her family. She is, in essence, a quiet woman, full of humility. She has always been there for her community and her family. Through her life she has learned that simple things matter, like making a quilt for every one of her 45 grandchildren. She loves nothing more than cooking, canning vegetables, and crocheting. Her family includes five pastors who have all acquired her undying faith. Mrs. Sprinkle has many relatives who can share her love, affection, and warmth. Her 14 children are Lula Randall (deceased), Ida Lee Sprinkle (deceased), Julian Sprinkle (deceased), John Sprinkle (deceased), E.F. Sprinkle, Jr. (deceased), Charles Sprinkle, Paul Sprinkle, Alvin Sprinkle, Novella Cable, Jaunita Worley, Harry Sprinkle, Harold Sprinkle, Jack Sprinkle, and Eva Pollack. She also has 45 grandchildren, 112 great grandchildren, and 54 great-great grandchildren.

I ask that my colleagues join me in congratulating this amazing centenarian on the occasion of her 100th birthday.

INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 4266; PROHIBITION ON UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT LIABILITY FOR NUCLEAR ACCIDENTS IN NORTH KOREA ACT OF 2000

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced H.R. 4266, the "Prohibition on United States Government Liability for Nuclear Accidents in North Korea Act of 2000." I am pleased to be joined in offering this bipartisan legislation by a distinguished group of original cosponsors including, among others, the Ranking Democratic Member of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Trade, and Consumer Protection of the Committee on Commerce, Mr. Markey, the Chairman of our Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific of the Committee on International Relations, Mr. BEREUTER, the Chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, Mr. SPENCE, and the Chairman of the House Republican Policy Committee, Mr. COX.

This bill prohibits the United States Government from, in effect, issuing insurance—backed up by the full faith and credit of the American taxpayer—for whatever liability claims might be made if the nuclear reactors that the Administration is trying to give to North Korea are involved in a catastrophic nuclear accident. The fact that the Administration is considering issuing such insurance was reported for the first time in yesterday's Los Angeles Times in an article by Jim Mann. I submit the Los Angeles Times article for the RECORD.

As explained in the article, the American taxpayer may ultimately be forced to pay tens of billions of dollars in damages if the North Koreans inadvertently create an Asian Chernoble with the advanced nuclear reactors that the Administration is seeking to give them. This is not an idle fear. The North Koreans have no experience whatsoever operating advanced light water nuclear reactors of the type the Administration plans to give them. The existing North Korean nuclear program involves graphite-moderated reactors operating on 1950s technology, with dials, levers, and vacuum tubes. The state of the art nuclear reactors that the Administration wants to give them are far more sophisticated than anything their technicians have ever seen.

This might not be a big problem if their technicians could be properly trained to operate modern light water reactors. But North Korea already has indicated that North Korean technicians will not be allowed to leave the country to receive such training on light water reactors currently operating elsewhere. Apparently the North Koreans are afraid their technicians will defect. Others fear, however, the result could be a Chernoble on the Korean Peninsula.

Among those who fear a possible nuclear catastrophe are the contractors who the Administration thought would be eager to participate in this $5 billion construction project in North Korea. The contractors are afraid that if there is such a catastrophe they might be sued, and the potential liability could bring down their companies. Ordinarily in such situations, companies buy insurance on the private market to protect themselves. In this case, however, the private insurers apparently have not been willing to provide sufficient coverage. This is in contrast to other countries like China, where U.S. and other private vendors have been willing to go forward on nuclear reactor projects because their concerns about liability have addressed by means short of an indemnity backed up by the United States Government.

I was surprised and alarmed to learn that the Administration is considering offering such an indemnity to contractors participating in the North Korean nuclear project. It has been five and a half years since the Agreed Framework between the United States and North Korea was signed. Over that period of time, there have been innumerable consultations between Congress and the Administration about the Agreed Framework. It is probably no exaggeration to say that Administration officials have testified before Congress dozens of times on the subject. The Administration is intimately familiar with our concerns about the potential costs of the project, and also with our unwillingness to provide U.S. Government funding for the construction of nuclear reactors in North Korea. Since 1994, Congress has routinely agreed to U.S. funding for the delivery of heavy fuel oil to North Korea pursuant to the Agreed Framework, but we have consistently prohibited U.S. funding for the construction of nuclear reactors.

Not once over the last five and a half years has the Administration come to us and told us they were considering imposing a contingent liability on the U.S. Government in connection with the construction of nuclear reactors in North Korea that could run into the tens of billions of dollars. Our staff had to ferret out this information through the conduct of congressional oversight, and most members of Congress first learned about it yesterday when they read about it in the press.

According to yesterday's press report, the Administration is considering imposing this liability on the American taxpayer by reinterpreting an old law in such way as to ensure that congressional approval will not be required. It is totally unacceptable that the Administration would consider obligating the American taxpayer in this way without the approval of Congress. The bipartisan legislation we are introducing today will make sure that the Administration cannot get away with this.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Apr. 12, 2000]

A RISKY POLICY ON N. KOREA

(By Jim Mann)

Warning to American taxpayers. Without knowing it, you may soon take on responsibility for what could be billions of dollars in liability stemming from nuclear accidents in, of all place, North Korea.

At the behest of the General Electric Co., the Clinton administration is quietly weighing a policy change that would make the U.S. government the insurer of last resort for any disasters at the civilian nuclear plants being built for the North Korean regime.

In case of a Chernobyl-type disaster in North Korea (a country not known for advanced safety procedures), the U.S. might wind up paying legal claims.

The proposed U.S. government guarantee, now being intensively studied by the State and Energy departments, would be aimed at easing the way for construction of two light-water nuclear reactors in North Korea. Those reactors are a key element in the Clinton administration's 1994 deal in which North Korea agreed to freeze its nuclear weapon program.

North Korea, which has defaulted on debts in the past, is too poor and unreliable to be counted on to pay legal claims arising from a nuclear accident. Private insurers are unwilling to take on the potentially astronomical claims of a North Korean Three Mile Island. So, American companies supplying parts for the North Korean reactors worry that, if there were a disaster, they would be sued.

Both the Clinton administration and GE confirmed that the company asked several months ago to be indemnified by the U.S. government before participating in the North Korea deal.

"We would like indemnity before we sign" any contract, said a spokesman for GE, which makes the steam turbines that would be used in the project.

"If there's an accident, they [GE officials] have to understand on what basis they'd be covered," explained Charles Kartman, the State Department's special envoy for North Korea.

Kartman acknowledged that GE's request was unusual, if not unique: Other firms participating in the North Korea project have been willing to go ahead without the indemnity GE is seeking in hopes that the unsettled liability questions could be worked out over the next few years.

How will the Clinton administration go about granting new legal protection to GE? It is reluctant to seek a new law from the Republican Congress, which often has criticized the administration's policy of engagement with North Korea.

That roadblock has set administration lawyers scurrying through the U.S. code, and they have found an obscure law that might be used in a new way to cover GE.

This law—Title 85, Section 804—was intended to indemnify companies that took part in nuclear cleanup operations. But the State and Energy departments are now thinking of applying it to protect the firms participating in the North Korean civilian reactor project.

Presto! One little legal reinterpretation by the administration and one huge new legal liability for American taxpayers.

Not to worry, insisted Kartman. The idea that the U.S. government will ever have to pay these claims is "very hypothetical."

He noted that the parts for the North Korean reactors would not be shipped

But ask yourself this: If the proposed international accord Kartman describes is such a sure thing and the prospects of claims from a nuclear accident are so remote, why can't the Clinton administration persuade GE to go ahead without the indemnity it is seeking? Why does the U.S. Government, rather than GE, have to take responsibility for this supposedly hypothetical risk?

Viewed strictly from GE's self-interest, its request has a certain logic. GE is a relatively small player in the North Korea project; most of the work is being done by South Korean companies. The sale of GE's steam turbines will bring in roughly $30 million, yet the company fears it could face lawsuits ranging in the billions.

Why don't the organizers of the North Korea project simply do without GE and find another company more willing to take the risk?

They could. But doing that would require a redesign of the North Korea project, would lead to delays of a year or more and would increase the overall costs—most of which are being paid by South Korea. So, on the whole, everyone involved is eager to avoid losing the big American company.

For GE, it seems, the Clinton administration brings good things to life. The rest of us are left to pray that we don't get stuck with massive bills from nuclear plants we won't run in a country over which we have no control.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO AMEND INTERNET TAX FREEDOM ACT

HON. JOHN CONYERS, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with Chairman HYDE, Commercial and Administrative Law Subcommittee Chairman GEKAS, and Ranking Member NADLER in introducing the "Internet Tax Reform and Reduction Act of 2000.".

As the Ranking Member of the Judiciary Committee, I have been proud of our Committee's bipartisan accomplishments in helping to maintain our Nation's leadership in the information economy. These include modernizing our patent and copyright laws, insuring the availability of trained workers, and our passage last Congress of the Internet Tax Freedom Act.

Today, I join with my colleagues in introducing the Internet Tax Reform and Reduction Act of 2000 as the starting point in our process of considering possible legislative responses to the issue of the applicability of State and local taxes on the Internet. The legislation we are introducing today reflects the views of number of Advisory Committee on Electronics Commerce Members led by Virginia Governor James Gilmore.

I believe it is important that their views be converted into legislative language so that the Congressional review process can commence. I intend to work with Chairman HYDE and Representatives GEKAS and NADLER in seeing that the other members of the Commission, including Utah Governor Michael Leavitt, are given the same opportunity. I also expect that the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Commercial and Administrative Law will hold a series of hearings during which all interested parties, including State and local elected officials, the technology community, and retailers will be able to offer their views.

The bill we are introducing today would amend the Internet Tax Freedom Act to impose a permanent moratorium on State and local taxes on Internet Access. It would also extend for 5 years the duration of the moratorium applicable to multiple and discriminatory taxes on electronic commerce and impose a 5 year moratorium on sales of digital goods and products. Further, the bill would set forth factors for the determination of jurisdictional nexus by the States with regard to Internet transactions, encourage the States to adopt a simplified sales and use tax, and set up an advisory commission on uniform sales and use taxes.

The issue of the application of State and local taxes on the Internet is one of the most important matters facing the Judiciary Committee and the Congress. The Internet has led our robust economy into the 21st century. Its use in both the commercial and consumer sectors has skyrocketed, spurring the development of new businesses, products and services, and new and less expensive research and communications methods. At the same time, the Internet poses many new and novel State and local taxation issues. The Internet is not a partisan issue by any means, and I am happy to join with my colleagues as we begin to address this critical issue.

CONGRESS NEEDS TO "WAKE UP" TO THE IMPORTANCE OF SLEEP

HON. JIM RAMSTAD

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. RAMSTAD. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to the Edina, Minnesota, School District, which was recently recognized by the National Sleep Foundation as the 2000 Sleep Capital of the Nation.

My good friend, Dr. Kenneth Dragseth, the Superintendent of Edina Schools, came to Washington to accept the award on behalf of the parents, students and teachers from Edina.

This national recognition is well-deserved and is a great way to celebrate National Sleep Awareness Week.

Four decades after President John F. Kennedy urged all Americans to take a 50-mile hike, Americans are once again waking up to the benefits of healthy living and the need for a well-balanced diet and regular exercise. But we too often neglect the importance of sleep.

Thankfully, not Edina. This school district, which is recognized universally as one of the finest public school systems in the nation, truly gets it.

They recognize that the future competitiveness and strength of our country depends on improving our education system.

That's why the Edina School District took concrete steps to make sure its students get enough sleep by starting school one hour later each day.

A recent National Sleep Foundation poll confirms that teens stay up too late and wake up too early. Another new study noted that on average, teens are getting about 2 hours less sleep a night than they need. This puts them at risk for car accidents, falling asleep in class, moodiness and depression.

To improve education, we must promote healthy learning environments. Stressing the need for enough sleep is essential for such environments. The bottom line is this: adequate sleep is a key component of a quality education.

I am also including for the RECORD a special "Bill of Nights" by the National Sleep Foundation which outlines the important suggestions by this group for improving sleep habits for everyone.

Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly applaud the Edina schools and their leadership to ensure that young people come to school healthy and ready to learn. They know it's time for America to "wake up" to this critically important problem.

Congratulations again, Edina Schools. You are ahead of the curve and I am proud to represent you!

PREAMBLE TO THE BILL OF NIGHTS OF THE NATIONAL SLEEP FOUNDATION—PRESENTED MARCH 28, 2000, WASHINGTON, DC

Whereas, science and medicine have determined that obtaining a sufficient amount of quality sleep is just as essential for good health as maintaining a balanced diet and getting regular exercise;

Whereas, obtaining a sufficient amount of quality sleep can also help to ensure personal safety, increase productivity and add to the enjoyment of life;

Whereas, the National Sleep Foundation is dedicated to improving public health and safety, this organization encourages all People to understand the importance of sleep and to make obtaining sufficient quality sleep a priority in their lives;

Therefore, the following Articles, created by the National Sleep Foundation and supported by its constituents, champion the right of all People to enjoy restful sleep for healthy, safe, and productive lives.

THE BILL OF NIGHTS OF THE NATIONAL SLEEP FOUNDATION

Article I All people should have the opportunity to fully understand the essential role of sleep in maintaining optimum mental and physical function.

Article II All People should have the opportunity to obtain the amount of sleep they require to maintain their optimum mental and physical function and to enjoy the benefits that sleep provides, including positive mood, alertness, enhanced memory and cognitive capabilities, and a sense of well-being.

Article III All people should have the opportunity to obtain sufficient, quality sleep free from disruptions due to environmental factors (i.e., light, noise, etc.), irregular sleep schedules, and underlying mental and physical conditions.

Article IV All People should have the opportunity to obtain accurate, scientifically validated sleep information and education in order to understand and improve their sleep.

Article V All People should have the benefit of a well-rested workforce and be secure in the knowledge that those who are depended upon to perform critical functions in society—including healthcare, transportation, public safety, hazardous materials management, and others—are attentive, alert and well-rested.

Article VI All People should be safe from the danger posed by drowsy drivers. Every driver is responsible for keeping the nation's roadways safe and free from the hazards posed by sleepiness and fatigue.

Article VII All People who experience problems sleeping should have the opportunity to obtain proper, informed diagnoses and treatment by healthcare providers who understand sleep disorders.

Article VIII All People should have reasonable access to affordable, quality treatment for sleep disorders.

Article IX All People should have the opportunity to benefit from the knowledge and advancements resulting from ongoing scientific research on sleep, which should be maintained as a national research priority.

Article X All People should have the opportunity to benefit from public policies that consider the importance of sleep in all aspects of our lives, including policies affecting the workplace, transportation, education, and healthcare.

CELEBRATING EARTH DAY

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the 30th annual Earth Day celebration. Next week, on April 22nd, people from across the country and around the globe will come together to renew their commitment to the environment, and to begin teaching a new generation about the importance of protecting our planet. We have a shared responsibility to preserve our vast and diverse natural resources. I have a longstanding commitment to conservation and environmental protection, and I am particularly proud to lend my voice to the Earth Day celebration.

Thirty years ago, on the first Earth Day, our country was taking its initial steps toward protecting the earth. While we have made substantial progress since that first celebration, we must continue our efforts to improve the quality of our environment.

As large-scale Earth Day celebrations take place all over the world, I would like to pay a special tribute to the local events taking place in many communities across our nation. These community celebrations demonstrate the direct impact that we can all have in conserving and protecting our environment. In Montgomery County, Maryland, for example, neighbors will work together on several river and stream clean-up projects, the Audubon Naturalist Society will host a nature fair for families, and several communities will host Earth Day anniversary celebrations.

The first Earth Day was founded on the belief that ordinary people working together can accomplish extraordinary goals. On Earth Day 2000, let us reaffirm our commitment to the preservation of our natural resources and protection of the environment.

MALACHI GOFORTH—STALWART, ACTIVIST

HON. CHARLES H. TAYLOR

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. TAYLOR of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, earlier this month, Henderson County, Western North Carolina, and the nation lost a truly outstanding American, Malachi Goforth. Mr. Goforth dedicated his life to serving his community and was tragically killed while helping a group of volunteers to repair the Shaw's Creek Baptist Church. Malachi served in the Navy during the Second World War, as a Deacon in the Shaw's Creek Baptist Church, and as a member of the Board of Trustees of the Blue Ridge Community College. He was dedicated to the principles of the Republican Party and in 1999 he received the 11th Congressional District Golden Elephant award for service to the party. Malachi was known for his spirit and energy. Malachi was devoted to the great people in his community, as he put in hours of volunteer service. Children were one of Malachi's greatest joys. Many kids in Henderson County will remember him for putting up lollipop trees in his yard. His granddaughter Sally Wooten remembers how children were delighted to see Malachi Goforth's white handlebar moustache. In fact during trips to the mall at Christmas many children through that Malachi was Santa Claus.

Malachi, on news of his death, garnered much praise from family, friends, and community leaders. Consider what the following people said in tribute to this great man:

"If someone were to say, 'show me a man with character,' Malachi would be the person you would hold up." Henderson County Sheriff George Erwin, Jr. "The whole Republican Party and the Republican men's club are gong to miss him. Everytime we had a meeting and you would look over that crowd, one of the comforting things that you always saw was that face and that moustache." Henderson County Republican club President, Fielding Lucas. Lucas also praised Goforth for "always being ready to stand up and ask the pointed questions that needed asking." "He has been a pillar of this community for decades and he will just be sorely missed." Henderson County Commission Chairman Grady Hawkins. I know that my colleagues will join me in saluting and remembering a great man whose death will leave a void that will never be filled.

FREEDOM FOR IRANIAN JEWS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform my colleagues of a resolution I am introducing today on behalf of the thirteen Iranian Jews now in custody on trumped up charges in Iran. In addition to the gentleman from California, Mr. SHERMAN, I am pleased that our distinguished Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HASTERT, is an original cosponsor of this measure, as well as the Ranking Minority Member on our House International Relations Committee, the gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. GEJDENSON.

Between January and March 1999, thirteen Jews were arrested in Iran and charged with spying for Israel and the United States. This is an outrageous charge that is without merit, having been denied by both our government and the State of Israel.

No evidence has been brought forth to substantiate these arrests, and no formal charges have been lodged after more than a year of consideration. Yet these thirteen individuals continue to face serious charges, and their trial was scheduled to begin on April 13th.

Secretary of State Albright has identified this case as "one of the barometers of U.S.-Iran relations", and countless nations have expressed their concern for these individuals, especially their human rights under the rule of law.

This resolution insists that Iran must show signs of respecting human rights as a prerequisite for improving its relationship with the United States; and therefore urges the Clinton Administration to condemn the arrest and continued prosecution of these thirteen people; demand that the fabricated charges be dropped and the men immediately released; and ensure that Iran's treatment of this case is a benchmark for determining the nature of current and future United States-Iran relations.

Accordingly, I urge our colleagues to support this resolution, whose text is printed below, since it sends a clear message to the government in Teheran that we will not countenance, nor will we remain silent, in the face of arrests of innocent individuals on trumped up charges.

H. CON. RES. 307

Whereas on the eve of the Jewish holiday of Passover in 1999, 13 Jews, including community and religious leaders in the cities of Shiraz and Isfahan, were arrested by the authorities of the Islamic Republic of Iran and accused of spying for the United States and Israel;

Whereas no evidence has been brought forth to substantiate these arrests, and no formal charges have been lodged after more than a year of consideration;

Whereas the Secretary of State has identified the case of the 13 Jews in Shiraz as "one of the barometers of U.S.-Iran relations";

Whereas countless nations have expressed their concern for these individuals and especially their human rights under the rule of law;

Whereas Iran must show signs of respecting human rights as a prerequisite for improving its relationship with the United States; and

Whereas President Khatami was elected on a platform of moderation and reform: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the Clinton Administration should—

(1) condemn, in the strongest possible terms, the arrest and continued prosecution of the 13 Iranian Jews;

(2) demand that these fabricated charges be dropped immediately and individuals released forthwith; and

(3) ensure that Iran's treatment of this case is a benchmark for determining the nature of current and future United States-Iran relations.

THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF

HON. RODNEY P. FRELINGHUYSEN

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to once again participate in the annual remembrance of the Armenian genocide. This year marks the 85th Anniversary of that terrible tragedy, which claimed the lives of over 1.5 million Armenians between 1915 and 1923.

The Armenian Genocide started in 1915, when the Turkish government rounded up and killed Armenian soldiers. Then, on April 24, 1915, the government turned its attention to slaughtering Armenian intellectuals. They were killed because of their ethnicity, the first group in the 20th Century killed not for what they did, but for who they were.

By the time the bloodshed of the genocide ended, the victims included the aged, women and children who had been forced from their homes and marched to relocation camps, beaten and brutalized along the way. In addition to the 1.5 million dead, over 500,000 Armenians were driven from their homeland.

It is important that we make the time, every year, to remember the victims of the Armenian genocide. We hope that, by remembering the bloodshed and atrocities committed against the Armenians, we can prevent this kind of tragedy from repeating itself. Unfortunately, history continues to prove us wrong.

So, Mr. Speaker, as we begin this new century, we must not forget the horrors of the past one. It is important to continue to talk about the Armenian genocide. We must keep alive the memory of those who lost their lives during the eight years of bloodshed in Armenia. We must educate other nations who have not recognized that the Armenian genocide occurred. Above all, we must remain vigilant.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Armenian-Americans—the survivors and their descendants—who continue to educate the world about the tragedy of the Armenian Genocide and make valuable contributions to our shared American culture. Because of their efforts, the world will not be allowed to forget the memory of the victims of the first 20th Century holocaust.

STATEMENT IN CELEBRATION OF THE LIFE OF REVEREND EARL NANCE, SR.

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to the Reverend Earl Nance, Sr. of St. Louis, who passed away on Tuesday, April 4, at the age of 89. While Reverend Nance was pastor of the Greater Mount Carmel Church for over 43 years until retiring in 1994, he will be most remembered for his active role in St. Louis politics and the civil rights movement of the 1960's.

Born in Alma, Arkansas, Reverend Nance attended both Lincoln University in Jefferson City, Missouri and Morehouse College in Atlanta, Georgia. During his studies at Morehouse, Reverend Nance befriended the late Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., whom he would later invite to the city of St. Louis to speak at a civil rights rally of over 9,000 individuals in 1957. He would remain a close an active ally of Dr. King as the Civil Rights movement grew and progressed during the 1960's.

Politically, Reverend Nance played an active role in many organizations in the St. Louis community. While pastor of the Greater Mount Carmel Missionary Baptist Church, he served on the St. Louis School Board from 1966 to 1973. He would also serve as an advisor to four St. Louis mayors, including Raymond Tucker, A.J. Cervantes, Vincent C. Schoelmehl, Jr., and Freeman Bosley, Jr.

Reverend Nance will be remembered as both a friend and public servant of the highest integrity. The city of St. Louis, and all who are dedicated to the cause of racial harmony and equal opportunity, will long cherish the many contributions of this outstanding leader.

I would like to share the following articles about Reverend Nance's passing from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch on April 6, 2000.

[From the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Metro, Thurs., Apr. 6, 2000]

PASTOR AND POLITICAL ACTIVIST EARL NANCE SR. DIES AT 89

(By Paul Harris)

The Rev. Earl Nance Sr., a longtime Baptist pastor and a community and political activist in St. Louis, died Tuesday (April 4, 2000) at Compton Heights Hospital after a brief illness. He was 89 and lived in St. Louis.

The Rev. Mr. Nance was pastor for 43 years of Greater Mount Carmel Missionary Baptist Church. His son, the Rev. Earl Nance Jr., copastor of the church, took over when his father retired in 1994.

The Rev. Mr. Nance and his son had a relationship that was more than just father and son—they were the closest of friends.

''It was definitely a strong relationship . . . and it remained so,'' Nance said. ''I guess you could say we were like brothers, but you would always know who was the father. He was my role model, and he paved the way for me in the church and in the city.''

Their lives had many other parallels. Both have been teachers in St. Louis Public Schools, have served on the St. Louis School Board and have served on the board of the Mathews-Dickey Boys' Club.

The Rev. Mr. Nance was an adviser to St. Louis Mayors Freeman Bosley Jr., Vincent C. Schoemehl Jr., John H. Poelker, Alfonso J. Cervantes and Raymond R. Tucker.

He served as president of the Central City Food Store, and he was the first president of the Missouri Progressive Baptist State Convention and moderator of its St. Louis District Association.

Reared on a farm in Alma, Ark., the Rev. Mr. Nance came to St. Louis in the 1930s and worked as a baggage handler at the bus station while living at the YMCA. He later sold insurance and attended the old Brooks Bible College here and Gamon Theological Seminary in Atlanta. He also served in the Army in World War II.

He graduated from Lincoln University in Jefferson City and Morehouse College in Atlanta, where he was a classmate of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. In 1962, he was instrumental in bringing the civil rights leader to St. Louis.

Recently, he received the Pioneer Award from the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. State Commemorative Committee for his commitment to civil rights in St. Louis.

Martin L. Mathews, president and chief executive officer of the Mathews-Dickey Boys and Girls Club, was a friend of the Rev. Mr. Nance for more than 40 years.

''He was always willing to go beyond the call of duty to help not only his congregation, but he would reach out and help others in the community,'' Mathews said. ''He was a stern man, but fair. . . . He stood by what he believed in and never wavered.''

The Rev. Mr. Nance was considered a mentor and counselor to many of the younger Baptist pastors in the city.

''He was there to help me shape my ministry,'' said the Rev. Willie J. Ellis Jr., pastor of New Northside Baptist Church. ''He was a man that spoke his mind. . . . He told it just like it was.''

The Rev. E.G. Shields, pastor of Mount Beulah M.B. Church, affectionately called the Rev. Mr. Nance ''Dad.''

''He had a love for younger pastors. He wanted us to make it,'' Shields said. ''He helped us to build our churches by first getting our financial statements together. I loved and respected him. He was truly a father figure to me.''

The Rev. Mr. Nance served as an associate pastor at Galilee Baptist Church and at Calvary Baptist Church before he became pastor of Greater Mount Carmel.

Visitation will be from 3 to 6 p.m. Saturday at Greater Mount Carmel M.B. Church, 1617 North Euclid Avenue. A funeral service will be at 6 p.m. Sunday at the church. Burial will be at St. Peter's Cemetery, 2101 Lucas and Hunt Road.

The Rev. Mr. Nance was married to the late Thelma Brown Nance, who also was a teacher in St. Louis Public Schools. She died in May. Survivors are two brothers, Clyde Nance and Ray Nance, both of Los Angeles; a sister, Sue Nance of Los Angeles; and a granddaughter.

A CIVIL RIGHTS PIONEER, MR. EARL NANCE SR.

With the passing of the Rev. Earl Nance Sr., the civil rights movement, the people of St. Louis and members of the Greater Mount Carmel Missionary Baptist Church have lost a friend.

As one of 18 children born to Betty and Willis Nance of Alma, Ark., Mr. Nance came from a humble background. Education was the tool Mr. Nance used to advance. He never forgot where he came from, and he always worked for better schools.

He began his formal education in Fort Smith, Ark., and attended Gamon Theological Seminary in Atlanta and Brooks Bible College in St. Louis. He was a graduate of Lincoln University in Jefferson City and of Morehouse College in Atlanta.

While at Morehouse, Mr. Nance was the somewhat older classmate, study partner and friend of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. Earl Nance became one of Mr. King's lieutenants in the civil rights movement and helped plan some of the movement's strategies.

He was influential in bringing the Rev. Dr. King to speak at a Freedom Rally here in 1957. More than 9,000 people attended the rally at Kiel Auditorium Convention Hall. The money raised helped the civil rights effort in the South.

And twice when Dr. King came to St. Louis he spoke at Washington Tabernacle Church, where the Rev. Mr. Nance's uncle, the late Rev. Dr. John E. Nance, was pastor. Before becoming pastor of Greater Mount Carmel in 1951, the Rev. Mr. Nance was a public school teacher. He was a member of the St. Louis School Board from 1966 to 1973 and an adviser to four St. Louis mayors: Raymond Tucker, A.J. Cervantes, Vincent C. Schoemehl Jr. and Freeman Bosley Jr.

For all his contributions to the community and church, perhaps Mr. Nance's greatest legacy is his son, the Rev. Earl Nance Jr. The younger Mr. Nance and his father were regarded as a team, with the son following closely in his father's footsteps. Mr. Nance Jr. and his father were co-pastor's of Greater Mount Carmel from 1979 until the elder Nance's retirement in 1994.

Shortly after his father's death, Earl Nance Jr. recalled two of his favorite memories of his father: ''He had a good sense of humor. He always kept us laughing at home. And he never missed my baseball games. He always blocked out Saturdays so he could watch me play.''

COMMENDING THE STUDENTS AT MOUNTLAKE TERRACE HIGH SCHOOL

HON. JAY INSLEE
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, at an event back home in Washington State, I had the opportunity to speak and listen to a group of students from Mountlake Terrace High School in my Congressional District. The group I spoke with represents some of the best and the brightest of our nation and their voices ought to be heard as we debate education reform. After I spoke to them many of the students e-mailed me with their thoughts and I rise today to share a few of the concerns that they have about the issues that we are debating in this chamber.

Justine, a student at Mountlake Terrace, stated the importance of good, high quality teachers. She wrote: "They are the ones who are teaching us how to take care of this beautiful place when people like you become too old to do so.'' We are on the verge of a teacher crisis in our country. Our children recognize the effects that teachers have on our future—I believe that it is time for us to recognize this as well.

I ask you to support a bill that I plan to introduce as an incentive for young people to enter into the teaching profession. Many of our young adults graduate from college strapped by enormous loans. My bill forgives the loans for those who teach in public schools for five years. This is a step in the right direction. It will help schools in all of our districts and we have the chance this year to make an impact.

Second, many students addressed what we call the digital divide. Angee, another student at Mountlake Terrace wrote to me: "I thought it would be cool to take classes off the Internet. That would be very beneficial to people in our school who may need a certain class to graduate that is not offered at our school.''

We can address this issue. I have written to my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee asking them to fund technology initiatives that make Advanced Placement courses widely available to students by teaching them via the Internet. This is a real opportunity for us to expand curricula and at the same time allow students to develop more sophisticated computer skills. I urge my colleagues to join me in finding ways to use technology to enhance and expand educational opportunities.

Third and finally, a student wrote to me: "I would like to know what you would do to keep drugs out of school and how you would keep guns out of the hands of people who might commit crimes or be a danger to themselves.'' This is a good question and unfortunately the answer is, "Not enough.''

Both Houses of Congress have passed Juvenile Justice legislation. To Members serving on the Conference committee—I ask that you go out into your communities and talk to students like the ones in my district and be sure that you can respond to their concerns about safety. Students realize that they have a responsibility to look out for each other and they know that they need to continue to do this. Parents also have a responsibility to be sure that they listen to their children and be the architects of a moral code of conduct for their family. As lawmakers we too share this responsibility to make our schools and communities safe. We cannot lecture parents, children, teachers and families about what they should be doing if we have not stepped up ourselves to address this issue where we can.

We stand now at a unique cross roads in American history. We enjoy a time of prosperous peace and economists predict that we will have a budget surplus in the federal budget. We are in a position to invest in the next generation of our nation. Unfortunately, our political system does not allow the students that I met with to vote. Imagine what would happen if they could. Think about what will happen in a few years when they can. They have asked me to help them and I challenge you—my colleagues—to join me and embrace the ideas represented by the next generation of Americans.

''THE ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL ECONOMY ACT OF 2000''

HON. DALE E. KILDEE
OF MICHIGAN
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, recent gasoline price spikes have renewed our awareness that continuing improvements in fuel economy are important to America. Because the goal of improved fuel economy should not be forgotten, I am introducing a bill entitled ''The Advanced Technology Motor Vehicle Fuel Economy Act of 2000.''

Back in 1975, after the disruptions of the Arab Oil Embargo of 1973, Congress worked to improve energy conservation efforts. One of the key elements was the Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) program, whereby automakers would meet increasing levels of fuel economy for their fleets of vehicles. This program was well intentioned. It was expected to help the U.S. reduce its import of petroleum—especially from the least stable producers around the world. National security would be improved. The balance of payments would be improved. Americans would save money at the pump. And automakers would be encouraged to bring new technologies to market faster.

However, expectations did not translate into reality. We have never seen $3 a gallon for gasoline, and price spikes have only occurred on a couple of temporary occasions. Oil supplies have not significantly tightened nor have imports declined. Furthermore, gasoline consumption has not changed significantly.

Despite suggestions to the contrary, the fleet average fuel economy for passenger cars has increased by over 100% and for light duty trucks by over 50% since 1974. Manufacturers have made cars lighter, smaller and more aerodynamic. They have improved the efficiency of engines, transmissions, and accessories. Some may assert that this shows the success of the CAFE program. However, these changes actually occurred largely as a result of the higher prices that did exist through the late 1970s and the intense competitiveness among manufacturers worldwide after world oil prices began to decline.

While I support the goals of improved fuel efficiency, I believe any increases in CAFE would be very disruptive of the current light truck market and are not necessary. Vehicle choice is too important to consumers, and unilateral disruptions would significantly hurt our vital American Auto Industry. Instead, I believe the proposals in ''The Advanced Technology Motor Vehicle Fuel Economy Act of 2000'' are a better way to achieve the results we want.

First, it focuses on the advanced technologies that the automakers are already aggressively pursuing by providing incentives to consumers who purchase vehicles that use hybrid powertrains, electric drive or fuel cells. These incentives will help to promote the work that is underway in the industry/government partnerships like the Partnership for a New Generation of Vehicles (PNGV). PNGV is a collaborative program to develop breakthrough technologies to improve fuel economy.

PNGV has been a huge success already. Just last month, DaimlerChrysler, Ford and GM each displayed concept cars that show how the technologies being developed (hybrid powertrains, lightweight materials, lower rolling resistance tires, great aerodynamics, and others) can be packaged to provide a five passenger, family sedan that can get 80 miles per gallon without sacrificing performance and most of the other important characteristics of today's comparable vehicles.

Second, the bill sets up a thorough study of current and future energy conversation measures related to motor vehicles and transportation. This study would provide for the National Academy of Sciences to review the current U.S. energy situation and make recommendations for future action. In addition, this title of the bill would require a study of lean burn technologies to make sure the U.S. is not embarking on a path that would preclude the use of promising fuel saving technologies.

The bill also extends CAFE credits available to manufacturers for producing flexible fuel vehicles: vehicles that can use either gasoline or an alternative fuel, such as ethanol or natural gas. The existence of these credits over the past several years has helped address an ongoing problem: fuel providers do not want to commit to alternative fuel stations without knowing that vehicles would be available to use them. Automakers did not want to produce vehicles that use only alternative fuels without knowing that the fuels would be available. The production of flexible fuel vehicles bridges this gap.

Mr. Speaker, this bill will help us deal with the CAFE dilemma that we face. The freeze of the current standards should continue. But in the meantime, we can study where we are, where we have been, and think carefully about where we need to go. And we can provide consumers with the incentives to purchase the vehicles that are starting to show up in the marketplace with some of the advanced technologies resulting from partnerships and competition among the manufacturers. I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

CELEBRATING MONSIGNOR JAMES F. COX'S 75TH BIRTHDAY

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Right Reverend Monsignor James F. Cox will celebrate his 75th birthday on May 15, 2000. Monsignor Cox has been dedicated to service for most of his life, especially within the Catholic Church and the Archdiocese of New York. He was ordained to the priesthood in 1951, and since that time, Monsignor Cox has made a valiant effort to serve the people of New York, most of whom reside in my Congressional district.

The title of Monsignor is one of prominence within the Catholic Church, bestowed upon those of great virtue and generosity. Monsignor Cox has been an exemplary model for all to follow. Throughout his years in our Hudson Valley, Monsignor Cox has served on several advisory and community boards that have been of great importance to the citizens of my district. He was a former member of the Rockland County Mental Health Board, former Chairman of the Rockland County Human Rights Commission, a former member of the Rockland County Board of Governors, a former President of the Board of Directors of the Rockland Haitian Association, Chaplain of the Columbiettes Triune Council of the Knights of Columbus, and State Chaplain of the Catholic Daughters of the Americas.

Moreover, Monsignor Cox was the Pastor of St. Mary's Parish in Washingtonville, NY and was the Roman Catholic Vican for both Rockland and Orange Counties. Today, Monsignor Cox continues his work as a Pastoral Associate at St. Joseph's Parish in Westchester County.

For his valiant efforts in the community, Monsignor Cox has also received honorary doctorate degrees from N.Y. State's Dominican College and St. Thomas Aquinas College. I invite all of my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to Monsignor Cox and remembering him on May 15th, the day of his 75th birthday and in wishing him Happy Birthday for many more years to come.

THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF
HON. LYNN C. WOOLSEY
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, today as I have each year since I came to Congress, I acknowledge the atrocities suffered by the Armenian people at the hands of the Ottoman Turks. This year marks the 85th anniversary of this atrocity.

It is important that we take this time to remember one of the greatest tragedies that humankind has ever witnessed. Mr. Speaker, little did anyone know that April 24, 1915, would forever signify the beginning of a Turkish campaign to eliminate the Armenian people from the face of the Earth.

Over the following 8 years, 1.5 million Armenians perished, more than 200 Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were massacred, and more than 500,000 were exiled from their homes. Armenian civilization, one of the oldest civilizations, virtually ceased to exist.

Sadly, this chapter of global history is not as well known or remembered an event of the 20th century as it deserves to be. Little attention was paid to this tragic episode by the victorious allied powers at the end of World War I, or by historians since. And unfortunately, as time wears on, so much of it has faded into memory, and people begin to forget what occurred during that horrific time.

However, even worse, as time passes on, and people are distanced from the atrocities, naysayers and revisionists have the opportunity to change this generation's understanding of Armenian genocide.

Even more outrageous though, due to the failure of some nations to acknowledge this horrible tragedy, 85 years later the Turkish crimes have gone unpunished.

An international court has yet to condemn the holocaust of an entire nation, and this impunity has permitted the Turks to repeat similar crimes against the Greek inhabitants of Asia minor; the Syrian Orthodox people and recently, people living in Cyprus.

Fortunately, despite this unspeakable tragedy committed 85 years ago, Armenians today remain a compassionate, proud, and dignified people. Despite the unmerciful efforts of the Turks, Armenian civilization lives on and thrives today.

Thankfully, this spirit lives on in the independent Republic of Armenia. And, it lives on in communities throughout America, especially in my home State of California. In fact, every proud Armenian that walks the world over is the product of generations of perseverance, courage, and hope.

I am proud that today my colleagues and I engage in this special order to honor the innocent Armenians who tragically lost their lives. Today we call attention to and acknowledge that the Ottoman Turks committed genocide against the Armenian people.

And today, we demand that this undeniable fact be accounted for by the current leaders in Istanbul. Unfortunately, the valuable lessons which might have been learned from this Armenian genocide have gone largely unlearned and unnoticed.

Perhaps if more attention had been paid to the slaughter of the innocent Armenian men, women, and children—perhaps if needed lessons in humanity had been learned earlier—our world could have avoided other tragic events and unspeakable events of this past century.

But since we can't change the past but only prepare for the future, it is only proper and fitting that the international bastion of democracy, the U.S. House of Representatives, is a voice in this campaign to recognize and acknowledge the Armenian genocide.

As George Santayana reminds us, "Those who forget the past are condemned to repeat it." Perhaps this, above all, is the valuable lesson each of us must learn from the Armenian genocide.

However, until that day comes, know that I will continue to remind our Nation, and this distinguished body, of our responsibility to learn from the past. And, our responsibility to speak out in order to prevent any such atrocity in the future.

HONORING JACKIE BALFOUR FOR TWENTY-TWO YEARS OF DEDICATED SERVICE

HON. JOHN A. BOEHNER
OF OHIO
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, "Service is the price you pay for the space you occupy on this Earth." This is the noble principle that has served to guide Jackie Balfour through her 22 years of dedicated service to her community in Celina and Mercer County, Ohio. For those past 22 years, Jackie went from volunteering with the Celina Chamber of Commerce in 1969 to recent years as the Chamber President. Noteworthy chamber events under Jackie's leadership include the establishing of the Convention and Visitor's Bureau in Auglaize County (OH), innovations as the Small Business Development Center and Industrial Awareness Days, the growth of the St. Mary's Lake Festival, and the creation of the Auglaize and Mercer County Industrial Association.

In 1967, Jackie earned her radio broadcasting license from the Federal Communication Commission and broke ground in the field as a woman broadcaster. She was one of the first women to earn this license. Jackie and her husband Keith owned Radio Station WKKI for a number of years during this time. She was one of only 35 individuals in eight states selected to participate in the Neil Armstrong Homecoming after his historic flight to the moon. In addition, Jackie has interviewed numerous elected officials and celebrities, including Joan Crawford, President Richard Nixon, Ohio Governor Jim Rhodes, Ed McMahon, Bob Hope and Nick Clooney.

But her participation and leadership did not end there. For 11 years Jackie worked on the Congressional Award program for young people and with the D.A.R.E. Boosters program. She had also previously served on the Board of Directors for the Chamber of Commerce Executives of Ohio, and served with the Community Improvement Association, the Celina Retail Merchants, and the Celina Business and Professional Association. She was a charter member of the Grand Lake Toastmasters, an organization dedicated to the improvement of oral communication and leadership skills. She is also an active member of her church, Grace Missionary Church in Celina, In 1997, the St. Mary's Business and Professional Women's Organization chose Jackie as their Woman of the Year.

Jackie Balfour is a true leader whose hard work and dedication should serve as an example for us all. Every American should aspire to this kind of enthusiastic commitment to service. I am proud to know and represent a person like Jackie Balfour in Congress. She is a truly gracious individual who strives to promote the ideals that will ensure our country remains a great place to live with hope and opportunity for all.

CONGRATULATING THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AND THE CENTURY COUNCIL FOR THEIR WORK ON ALCOHOL 101

HON. THOMAS W. EWING

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, today I congratulate the Century Council for their dedication to the fight against drunk driving and underage drinking. The Century Council, in conjunction with the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana, created Alcohol 101, an interactive CD–ROM program, which debuted on more than 1,000 college campuses during the 1998–1999 school year.

This virtual reality program is geared towards college age students and hopes to prevent and reduce the harm caused by abusive drinking habits. Students at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana, under the guidance of Professor Janet Reis, assisted in the development of this program by participating in focus groups and extensive surveys.

Thanks to the input of these students, thousands of college students across the country will be able to witness the negative consequences of abusive drinking. As a result, the students will be better prepared when confronting these situations in their daily lives.

Alcohol 101 has received high recognition from many health, education, and communications competitions. Most recently, the program received the prestigious FREDDIE award in the area of Health and Medical Film Competition.

Mr. Speaker, this program is a great asset to universities across the country and I offer my sincerest congratulations to the Century Council and the University of Illinois.

HONORING THE JUMP START 2000 STUDENTS FROM MILLS GODWIN HIGH SCHOOL IN RICHMOND, VA

HON. TOM BLILEY

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, today I commend a team of students from Mills Godwin High School in Richmond, VA on their outstanding top-place finish in JumpStart 2000. Students Yvonne Mowery, Amanda England, Ford Sleeman and Jason Selleck, coached by Ellen Mayo, took top honors in the 9–12 grade age group while competing against 2,024 other entries from 532 different schools nationwide.

JumpStart 2000 is a national science and technology challenge for students in grades K–12. They are tasked with identifying a problem of national or global importance in the 21st century and must propose an innovative solution that uses science and technology. The students work in teams of four under the supervision of an adult coach. The competition is sponsored by Parade and React magazines, and the National Science Board, the governing board of the National Science Foundation.

The Mills Godwin High School team impressed the judges with their entry titled ''Saving the World a Drop at a Time.'' They identified the need for worldwide access to a clean and safe water supply as one of the greatest challenges facing the world in the next century, especially in developing nations prone to a high mortality rate due in part to water-borne diseases found in contaminated water. The students' solution was an inexpensive, low-maintenance water purification system that uses natural materials and UV radiation to filter and disinfect water, thereby preventing the spread of water-borne disease.

I congratulate Yvonne, Amanda, Ford and Jason on their exceptional achievement, and I thank their coach Ellen Mayo for her dedication to working with these talented young adults.

THE CHICAGO AREA ENTREPRENEURSHIP HALL OF FAME

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, today I call your attention to the Chicago Area Entrepreneurship Hall of Fame sponsored by the University of Illinois at Chicago. Entrepreneurs inducted into the Hall of Fame are selected because they have steered their companies through significant challenges, and their businesses have emerged strong and vital.

Nominees are interviewed by members of the sponsoring organizations drawn from industry and voted upon by a judges panel. The Chicago Area Entrepreneurship Hall of Fame is the oldest recognition program of this kind in the Chicago area.

Winners selected for the 2000 Hall of Fame from Illinois' 10th Congressional District are: Jacob Kiferbaum, of Kiferbaum Construction Corporation, Deerfield, Illinois; Lake Forest resident Elizabeth Van Ella, of James E. Van Ella & Associates, Chicago; and Marshall Marcovitz, founder and former owner of Chef's Catalog, Northbrook, Illinois. Each of these businesses experienced substantial revenue growth under the guidance of these outstanding leaders in the business community.

By honoring the hard work and perseverance of these creative forces we are projecting their accomplishments as examples that others can follow. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating these Hall of Fame members on this achievement.

KINDERTRANSPORT—60TH ANNIVERSARY OF BRITISH HOSPITALITY FOR CHILD VICTIMS OF NAZI GERMANY

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, on December 2, 1938, two hundred children from a Jewish orphanage in Berlin arrived in Harwich, Britain. Over the next two years—between 1938 and 1940—some nine to ten thousand children arrived in Britain from Nazi Germany. These missions of mercy, which were supported by the United Kingdom, were called Kindertransport (Children's Transport). The program rescued refugee children from Germany, Austria, Czechoslovakia, and Poland. Three-quarters of that number, some 7,500, were Jewish, and the other approximately 2,500 were of other ethnic and religious backgrounds.

Mr. Speaker, this year marks the 60th anniversary of the end of the mission of mercy of the Kindertransport. I think it is appropriate that we mark that anniversary and pay tribute to the Government of the United Kingdom for their involvement with this effort in saving the lives of these ten thousand children.

The British government eased its immigration restrictions for certain categories of Jewish refugees after the Nazis staged their violent pogrom against Jews throughout Germany and Austria on November 9, 1938, called Kristallnacht (''Night of Broken Glass''). The Movement for the Care of Children in Germany coordinated the effort to assist refugee children. This organization, in cooperation with the British Committee for the Jews of Germany, worked to persuade the British Government to permit an unspecified number of children under the age of 17 to enter the country from Germany and territories that were incorporated in Germany.

Once the children arrived in Britain, private citizens and charitable groups, including Jewish organizations as well as Quakers and many other Christian denominations, guaranteed payment for each child's care, education, and eventual emigration out of Britain. In return for this guarantee, the British government agreed to permit unaccompanied refugee children to enter the country with simple travel visas. Parents and guardians could not accompany their children, and as a result, infants included in the program were tended by older children. Children with friends or relatives in Britain were generally favored, but other children were accepted if they were homeless or orphans, or if their parents were in concentration camps or otherwise no longer able to support them.

About half of the children lived with sponsors in London. Other children who did not have sponsors were taken to a summer camp in Dovercourt Bay and other facilities until individual families agreed to care for them or until hostels could be organized to care for larger groups of the children. These homes and hostels were located throughout Britain. After the war, many children from the Kindertransport program emigrated to Israel, the United States, Canada, and Australia, or became citizens of Great Britain. Most of these children never saw their parents again.

Mr. Speaker, as we mark sixty years since the conclusion of the Kindertransport program, I want to pay tribute to the British Government and the British people for providing sanctuary for these refugee children. If they had remained in Nazi Germany, it is clear that most if not all of them would have suffered tragic deaths.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express thanks to Margret Hofmann of Texas for bringing to my attention this heroic effort. She has striven to teach others, through stories like this one, about the humble heroes of the Holocaust. I would also like to thank Richard M. Graves of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum for providing me with information about the Kindertransport.

INTRODUCTION OF THE GREAT APE CONSERVATION ACT OF 2000

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, according to Jane Goodall, one of the world's leading primatologists and renowned authority on chimpanzees, all four species of great ape in Africa are in desperate trouble. If action is not taken now, it is likely there will be no viable populations of gorillas, orangutans, bonobos and chimpanzees living in the wild within 20 years. Such an ecological tragedy cannot be allowed to pass unnoticed.

The threats to the apes stem largely from increased commercial logging that facilitates both habitat loss and a growing and largely unregulated commercial bush meat trade. Bush meat, the term used to describe wildlife used for meat consumption, includes elephants, gorillas, chimpanzees, forest antelope and a variety of other species. Once only used as a subsistence food source, the commercial bush meat trade has skyrocketed in recent years with devastating impacts on wildlife populations, many of which are threatened and endangered. Not only is this commercial trade being used to supply urban populations in Africa, international trade is also growing.

We are only now beginning to understand and appreciate the complex role of great apes in maintaining the ecological health and biodiversity of tropical and subtropical forest habitats. Recent research indicates that these primates are particularly important for seed dispersal and habitat modification. Biologists fear that the loss of all great apes could irrevocably alter forest structure and the composition of species which could exacerbate other environmental threats caused by deforestation and agriculture.

Additionally, recent information strongly suggests that the consumption of primate bushmeat in the Congo Basin has the potential to become a devastating human health crisis. According to world expert and bushmeat Crisis Task Force member, Dr. Beatrice Hahn, research reasonably indicates that humans might acquire the immuno-deficiency syndrome (HIV) through the ingestion of primate tissue. Research also suggests that other viruses, including the Ebola virus, may be possibly linked to non-human primates and could be transmitted to humans through bush meat consumption.

A broad range of actions will be needed if there is any hope to protect and hopefully recover great ape populations in Africa. Logging companies must halt the flow of bushmeat from their operations. Long term support for protected areas, national parks, and buffer zones must be secured to protect habitat and wildlife. Law enforcement capacity to enable countries to enforce wildlife protection laws must be developed. Finally, efforts must be undertaken to help rural populations develop alternative sources of protein that will reduce the demand for bushmeat.

Today, I am introducing the Great Ape Conservation Act to address the imperiled status of Africa's large primates. Modeled after the highly successful African and Asian Elephant and Rhino Conservation Acts, the Great Ape Conservation Act would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to assist in the conservation and protection of great apes by providing grants to local wildlife management authorities and other organizations and individuals involved in the conservation, management, protection and restoration of great ape populations and their habitats. These projects tend to be implemented locally, working with affected communities, in order to be most effective.

The challenges facing the conservation of great apes are immense. Unfortunately, the resources so far available from the United Nations to cope with these threats have not been commensurate to the task. This bill would establish a Great Ape Conservation Fund as a separate account in the existing multinational Species Conservation Fund in the U.S. Treasury to address this deficiency. Over five years, the bill would authorize $5 million per year to support conservation grant activities. Scientific research and monitoring of ape populations and habitats, assistance in the development and implementation of habitat management plans, protection and acquisition of threatened habitats, enforcement of domestic laws relating to resource management, and other conservation measures would be included in the menu of eligible grant activities. Importantly, grants under this new program could also be used to support enforcement and implementation of trade prohibitions and restrictions established under the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species, or CITES. These grants would allow wildlife management authorities in the Congo Basin the flexibility they need to work cooperatively with affected local human populations. And only by incorporating the participation of local residents will we be able to address the many social and economic factors preventing the long-term conservation and protection of great apes.

International efforts to prevent the extinction of gorillas, orangutans, bonobos and chimpanzees will require the leadership of the United States. It will also require the United States to work collaboratively with those countries in Africa that have within their boundaries any part of the range of great apes. The task ahead is daunting. But the ecological consequences of not acting are far more tragic if it means that great apes will cease to exist in the wild. The Great Ape Conservation Act would be one significant step to avoid the permanent loss of great apes in Africa, and I urge all members to support this important legislation.

TRIBUTE TO EDGAR A. SCRIBNER

HON. SANDER M. LEVIN

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, today I reflect on the career of Mr. Edgar A. Scribner, as he retires from the Presidency of the Metropolitan Detroit AFL–CIO and is honored this evening in Detroit, Michigan.

For over 40 years, Ed has worked to improve the lives of working people and the Metro-Detroit community at large. After earning a B.S. from Wayne State University and attending the Institute of Labor and Industrial Relations, Ed planted his roots firmly in Detroit—the heartland of the organized labor movement. His labor activism began at Teamster Local Union #372, carried him to the Michigan Teamsters Joint Council #43 and finally, almost 12 years ago, to the Metro-Detroit AFL–CIO.

Ed embodies the ideals, values and basic tenets of organized labor and community service. He has worked on behalf of those principles for most of his life, doing so with intelligence, diligence and depth. He was effective—displaying strength and charm simultaneously.

He has indeed touched many, many lives. From inspiring young people in the classrooms at Wayne State and the University of Michigan or the Detroit Area Boy Scouts Council, to working on health care issues while serving on the Greater Detroit Area Health Council Board or as the Chairman of the Blue Care Network Board of Directors, the breadth and success of Ed's service to the community are indeed impressive. There is no doubt that his example inspires future labor and community activists to follow his lead.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join my salute of an exceptional leader: Edgar A. Scribner. His work on behalf of working people, the people of Metro-Detroit and our community at-large will resonate for many years to come. I wish him good health and happiness upon his retirement.

IN HONOR OF THE EDMONDS POLICE DEPARTMENT

HON. JAY INSLEE
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to the Edmonds Police Department in my congressional district in Washington State. This police agency is the first in Snohomish County to achieve national accreditation. Such an accreditation proves what many already know: the Edmonds Police Department is a skilled, efficient, and advanced law enforcement agency.

Mr. Speaker, police officers are on the front lines every day, ensuring that our communities are safe. Police officers leave the comfort and security of their homes to fulfill their duty to serve and protect. Police officers grant communities an important service, to secure the lawfulness and safety that the public deserves. The Edmonds Police Department, in particular, has proven its commitment to the community by becoming nationally accredited.

This national accreditation means that the public will have better communication with the police department including an annual internal affairs report, better performance and response times.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to take this opportunity to recognize the outstanding Edmonds Police Department, not only for its numerous accomplishments such as this one, but also for the great service it provides the citizens of Edmonds.

APPLAUDING THE NALC FOOD DRIVE EFFORTS

HON. ADAM SMITH
OF WASHINGTON
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize and commend the National Association of Letter Carriers [NALC] for holding the Nation's largest one-day food drive. In past years the NALC, through the personal contributions and service of its members, has collected more than 58 million pounds of food along various postal routes throughout the Nation. The NALC will be helping to feed American families and children again this year during their eighth annual food drive to feed hungry families and children across the country.

During this unprecedented time of economic expansion, Americans have benefitted from low unemployment, rising wages, and low inflation. However, some Americans continue to suffer from hunger. According to the Journal of Public Health, an estimated 10 million Americans suffer from the symptoms of hunger—4 million of which are children whose growth and development is threatened by malnutrition. These hard working families fail to make ends meet for reasons ranging from institutionalized poverty to a lack of educational resources and inadequate health insurance. As a result, some families are left with barely enough resources to subsist on.

In a nation of abundance, hardworking families should not have to experience the effects of hunger. Our postal carriers provide a valuable and much appreciated service through their hard work and contribution to the greater community. I commend the NALC for helping to feed the Nation's hungry and I encourage Members to help support the NALC in their efforts to feed America during their food drive on Saturday, May 13.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS
OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, April 12, I was unavoidably detained on official business and not present for rollcall vote Nos. 119–122.

Had I been present, I would have voted as follows: "nay" on rollcall vote No. 119; "aye" on rollcall vote No. 120; "aye" on rollcall vote No. 121; and "aye" on rollcall vote No. 122.

EARTH DAY 2000

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, this morning a number of my Republican colleagues and I held a national press conference in advance of Earth Day to release a list we call the "TR 10." The TR 10 is a package of moderate Republican initiatives named after our hero, Theodore Roosevelt. The bills included are Republican initiatives that have bipartisan support that ought to be enacted this year, and that could be enacted this year. This is our second annual TR 10 list, the last one was released with the late Senator John Chafee of Rhode Island, another hero of ours.

As with last Earth Day, the release of this list is designed to make several points beyond bringing additional attention to good legislation. First, the environment always has been, and remains, a bipartisan issue, a bipartisan quest—an issue on which Republicans are offering creative and essential leadership. Second, there are plenty of good initiatives out there, there is plenty of progress we can make right now, even in a narrowly divided Congress.

There's a cliche around this town that nothing gets done during an election year, especially nothing related to the environment. But unlike most cliches, this one has no basis in fact. In 1996, an election year, the 104th Congress—not one known for its green cast—passed the Food Quality Protection Act, the Safe Drinking Water Act and a massive parks bill, to name just a few landmarks. Similarly, this year, we could pass CARA and numerous other significant bills. Elections are more often a spur to action than a barrier to it.

So the approach of Earth Day in this election year should fill us with hope and optimism because we are well positioned to make real progress.

THE TR 10: A REPUBLICAN AGENDA FOR THE 106TH CONGRESS

(1) The Conservation and Reinvestment Act (CARA, H.R. 701)

We support the passage of CARA, preferably with the amendment being drafted by Rep. Sherwood Boehlert (R–N.Y.). The bill would provide permanent, off-budget funding of the LWCF, which provides financing to protect open spaces at the federal and state level. Republicans, led by Chairman Don Young (R–Alaska), are pushing for this landmark change in federal lands policy, which would spend almost $3 billion on conservation programs. The Boehlert amendment would make the distribution of funding more equitable and would ensure that the bill accomplishes its environmental purposes.

(2) Water Resources and Development Act (WRDA)/Everglades Restoration

We support the authorization of environmentally friendly flood control and water projects, particularly work to restore the Everglades. Such projects are expected to be included in the WRDA bill, which will be drafted by the House Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment, chaired by Congressman Boehlert. Boehlert is also heading up an effort to increase funding for water infrastructure by beefing up the state revolving funds under the Clean Water Act.

(3) Environmentally Sound Electric Deregulation

We support efforts to ensure that electric deregulation benefits the environment. Done properly, electric deregulation can improve the environment while lowering utility rates. But deregulation must include provisions to limit emissions from coal plants and to encourage the use of renewable sources of energy. Congressmen Rick Lazio (R–N.Y.), Jim Greenwood (R–Pa.) and Sherry Boehlert are leading the effort to ensure that such provisions are included in any legislation to reduce limits on sulfur dioxide and nitrogen oxides to prevent acid rain. Boehlert is also pressing to control all four utility pollutants.

(4) Credit for Voluntary Action (H.R. 2520)

We support Congressman Rick Lazio's bill to create credits for companies that are reducing emissions of greenhouse gases. Credits would encourage voluntary reductions in greenhouse gas emissions and could be used as part of any future regulatory regime.

(5) Beaches Environmental Assessment, Clean Up and Health Act (H.R. 999)

We support legislation to ensure that our coastal waters do not pose a health threat to bathers, boaters and surfers. This bill, introduced by Rep. Brian Bilbray (R–CA) and approved by the House, would require states to update their water quality standards to protect human health in coastal recreation waters. The bill would provide grants to states to implement the program.

(6) The Estuary Habitat Restoration Partnership Act (H.R. 1775)

We support legislation introduced by Rep. Wayne Gilchrest (R–Md.) that would restore and protect our nation's estuaries, which harbor ecosystems that are vital to environmental health and the fishing industry.

(7) The Long Island Sound Restoration Act (H.R. 3313)

We support legislation, introduced by Reps. Nancy Johnson (R–Conn.) and Rick Lazio, which would authorize additional funds to clean up the pollution in the Long Island Sound, a critical estuary and one of the nation's most populous coastal areas.

The bill addresses the non-point source pollution that may be causing the dramatic decreases in lobster and other shellfish populations in the Sound.

(8) Promoting cleaner, more efficient transportation

We support efforts to promote fuel efficiency and to reduce auto emissions. Congressmen Boehlert and Jim Greenwood are circulating a letter, urging the President to work with the congress to tighten Corporate Average Fuel Economy (CAFE) standards for Sport Utility Vehicles (SUVs). In addition, Congressman Brian Bilbray has a bill (H.R. 1976) requiring labeling on automobiles so that consumers know the emission levels of the cars they are purchasing.

(9) Promoting alternative-fueled vehicles

We support efforts to promote alternative-fueled vehicles. As part of AIR–21, the President signed into a law a measure introduced by Congressman Boehlert that will provide grants for airports in non-attainment areas to purchase clean vehicles, such as natural gas and hybrid-electric buses. This builds on alternative fuel vehicle programs that were included in ''TEA–21.'' Boehlert also worked with the U.S. Postal Service, Ford Motor Co. and Baker Electromotive to engineer the largest purchase of electric vehicles in history—up to 6,000 vehicles. Additional bills are being drafted to help more municipalities purchase clean vehicles.

(10) Superfund Reform/Brownfields Redevelopment

We support broad Superfund reform that will eliminate needless litigation that has delayed the clean-up of Superfund sites and prevented the redevelopment of brownfields. Superfund must have a rational liability system that exempts small businesses that contributed little to Superfund sites and must facilitate the redevelopment of brownfields, which are a blight in so many of our cities. One moderate approach to this bill is embodied in Congressman Boehlert's H.R. 1300, the Recycle America's Land Act, which has support from a wide range of groups including the National Association of Manufacturers and the U.S. Conference of Mayors, and the National Federation of Independent Business.

HONORING ANDREW BRENNAN FROM THE FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF INDIANA

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to pay tribute to an outstanding citizen of Indiana's First Congressional District, Mr. Andrew Brennan. On Saturday, April 15, 2000, Mr. Brennan will be honored for his exemplary and dedicated service to our community. His praiseworthy efforts will be recognized at the Trade Winds Gala 2000 banquet at the Radisson Hotel at Star Plaza in Merrillville, Indiana.

A longtime resident of Northwest Indiana, Andrew Brennan has been an active member of the TradeWinds Board of Directors for more than 13 years. TradeWinds Rehabilitation Center, Inc. is a private, not-for-profit entity that provides services to children and adults with disabilities and functional limitations to enhance independence, productivity and community participation. In April of last year, the TradeWinds Executive Board asked Mr. Brennan to serve as its full-time Interm Executive Director while they searched for a permanent director. Mr. Brennan graciously accepted the position.

Prior to volunteering his time at TradeWinds as the Interim Executive Director, Mr. Brennan owned and operated Viking Engineering Company with two plants in Northwest Indiana and one in Chicago, Illinois. In July of 1998 he sold two of the plants, but continued to work for the new owner. Mr. Brennan's expertise in manufacturing and production as well as his exceptional management and aggressive motivational style has proven successful within the TradeWinds organization. During the past year, he has done a marvelous job in mending strained relationships, opening lines of communication, and organizing and running an efficient organization. To date, Mr. Brennan has dedicated over 1,000 volunteer hours and has provided continuity, leadership, diplomacy and encouragement to staff, clients and the community.

While Mr. Brennan has dedicated considerable time and energy to this work, he has always made an extra effort to give to the community. Throughout the years, Brennan has served in many different leadership positions and has been very involved in several organizations including: Hoosier Boys Town, St. Margaret Merch Hospital, Hammond Chamber of Commerce, the Northern Indiana Arts Association and the Boy Scouts.

Though Mr. Brennan is dedicated to his career and community, he has never limited his time and love for his family. He and his wife Sarah, have three children: Sally, Susan and Jeffrey, of whom they are immensely proud.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you and my distinguished colleagues join me in congratulating Mr. Andrew Brennan for his outstanding devotion to Northwest Indiana. His dedicated service is commendable and admirable. Indiana's First Congressional District is proud to count such a committed and conscientious citizen, Andrew Brennan, among its residents.

IN HONOR OF THE ROBINSON SECONDARY SCHOOL'S DECA CHAPTER AND THEIR EFFORTS TO RAISE PUBLIC AWARENESS ABOUT THE BENEFITS OF AUTOMATED EXTERNAL DEFIBRILLATORS (AED)

HON. THOMAS M. DAVIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise and pay tribute to the members of the Distributive Education Clubs of America (DECA) Chapter at Robinson Secondary School in Fairfax, Virginia. The three hundred forty-one members of the Robinson DECA chapter have launched a dual campaign to not only educate the public about the benefits of Automatic External Defibrillators (AED), but to also increase support in Congress for the lifesaving bill H.R. 2498, the Cardiac Arrest Survival Act.

Robinson's DECA Chapter recognized that a group of potential sudden cardiac arrest victims have been ignored by the public: teenagers. These energetic members sought to rectify this situation by initiating a public relations campaign to raise general awareness about the benefits of AED's and to outfit high schools with these valuable devices. In a school as large as Robinson Secondary School, with 5,000 teachers, students, administrators, and community members, the need for an AED is particularly evident. In order to acquire the first student-purchased AED in the country, Robinson DECA held the Heart Start Shopping Night and raised the needed $3,500.

In working with the American Heart Association and a professional adult advisor committee, Robinson DECA realized that not every state currently has legislation to provide Good Samaritan protection for operators of the AED. This motivated DECA to work in support of the passage of H.R. 2495, the Cardiac Survival Act. This important piece of legislation, of which I am proud to be a co-sponsor of, would remove some of the barriers concerning the placement of AED's in public places by extending the Good Samaritan protection to AED users. Their lobbying efforts included developing a slogan and logo, researching H.R. 2495 in order to write a research paper, personally lobbying all 435 House of Representative members and staff, staging a rally on the steps of the United States Capitol, holding a press conference, and designating and operating an internet home page.

As all members of Congress surely know by now, once Robinson DECA rallies in support of a cause, they will not rest until the job is done. This was evident with their successful work towards the signing of the Ricky Ray Hemophilia Relief Fund Act and in their efforts to promote organ and tissue donation among our young people in America. Their current campaign for H.R. 2495 is traveling down that same road to success. Their dedicated, hard work has led to a substantial increase in cosponsors and wide-spread support for the bill in the House of Representatives. Furthermore, their public educational campaign has enlightened the public about AED's and implementing them to save someone in cardiac arrest.

Mr. Speaker, everyday 1,000 Americans suffer from sudden cardiac arrest, usually outside of a hospital setting. Unfortunately, more than 95 percent of the victims die because life-saving equipment is not readily available or arrives too late. Therefore, the work of Robinson's DECA chapter is vitally needed, and I applauded their enthusiasm and dedication in helping others understand the great need for AED's.

IN HONOR OF THE HOBOKEN LITTLE LEAGUE ON ITS 50TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the Hoboken Little League for the 50 years it has provided young people with access to one of America's greatest athletic traditions. Baseball teaches responsibility, teamwork, sportsmanship, and nurtures self-esteem.

Fifty years ago, on April 15, 1950, the Little League began its commitment to the young people of Hoboken with four teams. This commitment has grown to 12 teams, with 144 boys and girls between the ages of 9 and 12 currently participating in what has become one of the finest youth organizations in the country.

Of historical importance: In 1972, Maria Pepe, the first female to play Little League Baseball, joined the Hoboken Little League. Maria became the force behind the Supreme Court's 1974 ruling that gave women the right to participate in any and all sports.

This great youth organization would not have been possible without the dedication and hard work of those who understand the positive impact sports have on the lives of our young people. I would like to thank everyone who has contributed to the growth and continuation of the Hoboken Little League, especially the following dedicated individuals: Tim Calligy, James Farina, Charles Casalinos, Anthony Cardino, Dominick Miele, and Mike Turner.

I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating the Hoboken Little League on its 50th anniversary.

COMPUTER DEPRECIATION REFORM ACT

HON. JERRY WELLER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, today, I join my colleagues, TOM DAVIS of Virginia, BILLY TAUZIN of Louisiana and JENNIFER DUNN of Washington, in introducing the Computer Depreciation Reform Act of 2000 to allow businesses to expense their computer equipment. Currently, businesses must depreciate their computer equipment over a 5-year period. I believe that this 5-year depreciation lifetime for tax purposes is clearly outdated. Many companies today must update their computers as quickly as every 14 months in order to stay current technologically.

I believe it is time to update an outdated Tax Code to reflect the realities of today's technology-based workplace. A 5-year depreciation schedule for business computers is no longer realistic.

The Computer Depreciation Reform Act allows every company, from the neighborhood real estate office, to the local hospital, to the local bank to fully depreciate, or expense, their computer equipment during the tax year in which the equipment is purchased. As a result, these companies will no longer be forced to keep their equipment "on the books" for tax purposes long after its useful life has become obsolete.

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to working with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, the leadership, and Chairman ARCHER to update the Tax Code to reflect the realities of today's technological workplace.

IN HONOR OF ROBERT J. GILLIHAN

HON. KAREN McCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, today I honor Robert J. Gillihan, president of Teamsters Joint Council No. 56. Bob Gillihan is a valued member of the Missouri-Kansas community and a leading force in the fight for workers' rights.

Since an early age Bob Gillihan has demonstrated his untiring service to his country, his community, and his union. Joining the Marines in 1949, Bob honorably served our nation in Korea. While in the service, Bob displayed not just the courage of his convictions, but the persistence and determination necessary to lead. His personal and professional aspirations found ample expression in boxing's "sweet science." Between the ropes, Bob distinguished himself and his service, becoming All Service Middleweight Champion.

Following his career in the military, Bob returned to the Kansas City area and started working in the construction industry. Joining Teamsters Local 541, Bob began work on the Kansas Turnpike. His outstanding work ethic and determined nature earned Bob the respect of another dedicated union man, vice president of the Local, Red Ruark, who guided Bob into the concrete industry, and in 1968 seized upon his leadership and elevated him into the Local 541 office. Based on Red's endorsement and his own outstanding work, President Curly Rogers hired Bob as a Business Agent.

In his new role in the Union Leadership, Bob became intimately involved in negotiations to improve the working conditions for his fellow men and women of the Local. Bob's tireless efforts on behalf of his colleagues led to significant improvements in wages, health, welfare, and pension benefits, and annual vacation time. In the course of his duties, Bob has improved the quality of life, refined the meaning of living, and cultivated a culture of values under which we all live. Bob Gillihan has spent his entire life on the front lines, fighting for the interests of families that need it most, and most deserve it.

In 1980, Bob followed his old friend, Red Ruark, as vice president of Local 541, and was elected president in 1990, a position he holds today. Bob is also president of the Greater Kansas City Building and Construction Trades Council. A year later, Bob was elected secretary-treasurer of Teamsters Joint Council No. 56, a position he held until his appointment and subsequent election as the president of Joint Council 56 in 1999.

In addition to his union duties, Bob has worked throughout his career on issues of importance to the community at large. Bob served for 9 years on the Board of Directors of Park Lane Hospital, currently serves as a Commissioner for the Kansas City Area Transportation Authority, and served as Trustee for the Mo-Kan Teamsters Pension Health and Welfare Trust Fund. A dedicated family man, Bob and his lovely wife, Marlene have raised eight children and are the proud grandparents of many future leaders.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the constituents of the 5th District of Missouri—on behalf of working families across America—I rise today to salute Bob Gillihan. Thank you, Bob, for all you have done, and all you continue to add to our lives.

HONORING THE CROATIAN SONS LODGE NUMBER 170 OF THE CROATIAN FRATERNAL UNION

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honor to congratulate the Croatian Sons Lodge Number 170 of the Croatian Fraternal Union on the festive occasion of its 93rd Anniversary and Golden Member banquet on Sunday, April 30, 2000.

This year, the Croatian Fraternal Union will hold their gala event at the Croatian Center in Merrillville, Indiana. Traditionally, the anniversary celebration entails a formal recognition of the Union's Golden Members, those who have achieved fifty years of membership. This year's honorees who have attained fifty years of membership include: Helen Marie Benich, Norma Jean Gibson, Rose Marie Gobbie, Matilda Kardos, Edward A. Pishkur, Joan Skonie, Katherine Vild, Stanley Warshol, and Sylvia T. Wilk.

These loyal and dedicated individuals share this prestigious honor with approximately 300 additional Lodge members who have previously attained this important designation.

This memorable day will begin with the Reverend Father Benedict Benakovich officiating a morning mass at Saint Joseph the Worker Catholic Church in Gary, Indiana. The festivities will be culturally enriched by the performance of several Croatian musical groups. The Croatian Glee Club, "Preradovic," directed by Brother Dennis Barunica, and the Hoosier Hrvarti Adult Tamburitza Orchestra, directed by Jerry Banina, will both perform at this gala event. The Croatian Strings Tamburitzans and Junior Dancers directed by Dennis Barunica, and the Adult Kolo group, under the direction of Elizabeth Kyriakides, will provide additional entertainment for those in attendance. A formal dinner banquet will conclude the day's festivities at 3:30 in the afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in commending Lodge President Betty Morgavan, and all the other members of the Croatian Fraternal Union Lodge Number 170, for their loyalty and radiant display of passion for their ethnicity. The Croatian community has played a key role in enriching the quality of life and culture of Northwest Indiana. It is my hope that this year will bring renewed prosperity for all members of the Croatian community and their families.

HONORING THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ALLATOONA DAM AND LAKE PROJECT IN CARTERSVILLE, GEORGIA

HON. BOB BARR

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it is my distinct honor today to recognize the Allatoona Dam and Lake Project in Cartersville, Georgia, on the occasion of its upcoming 50th anniversary.

The Allatoona Dam Project was authorized by the Flood Control Acts of 1941 and 1946, to minimize flooding in Rome, Georgia, and surrounding areas.

On Saturday, June 15, 1946, ground-breaking ceremonies were held beside the Etowah River at the site where Allatoona Dam stands today. On that day 54 years ago, Georgia Governor Ellis Arnall, Georgia 7th District Congressman Malcolm C. Tarver, and Lt. General Raymond A. Wheeler, Chief of Engineers, U.S. Army, took shovels and pick in hand and launched a project that took four years to complete. Representative Tarver was the man most influential in passage of the Flood Control Act through Congress. In addition, Alabama Senator Lister Hill and Congressman Albert Raines of Gadsden, Alabama, assisted with passage of the Act.

General Wheeler stated in his address that, "in the course of our engineering studies and proposals, we took full cognizance of all uses of water, even through our primary concern was flood control. Consequently, this is not a flood control dam alone. It is a multi-purpose project." He explained that the Allatoona Project embraces power production, recreation, reforestation, health and other factors, but the prime purpose is flood control.

Construction crews worked 24 hours a day, seven days a week for three and a half years to complete the dam. The project was essentially completed and opened for public use in 1950.

The Allatoona Dam and Lake Project has had a direct and extremely positive impact on northeast Georgia. It is an honor to remember and commend the many men and women who worked to construct this magnificent facility; and who continue to run it in a manner that benefits millions of Georgians each year. I especially commend the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Allatoona Project Management Office in Cartersville, Georgia, and wish them well on the 50th anniversary of the Allatoona Dam and Lake.

IN RECOGNITION OF DIRECT DEPOSIT AND DIRECT PAYMENT WEEK

HON. THOMAS M. DAVIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I bring to the attention of my colleagues the celebration of Direct Deposit and Direct Payment Week, which will be observed around the country on May 15–19, 2000. This effort is dedicated to educating consumers, businesses, employers, financial institutions and billers of all kinds about the importance of Direct Deposit and Direct Payment as financial management tools.

The Direct Deposit and Direct Payment Coalition, composed of the Federal Reserve, the National Automated Clearing House Association (NACHA)—The Electronic Payments Association, and regional Automated Clearing House Associations, is celebrating this week to promote the benefits of Direct Deposit and Direct Payment to improve the efficiency of the Nation's payments system, to reduce payment risk, and to provide utmost privacy and security to users.

Direct Deposit and Direct Payment, electronic payment methods that allow consumers and businesses to be paid and to pay bills automatically, can reduce the Nation's costs considerably. Our Nation's payments system costs more than that of most other industrialized nations.

Direct Deposit and Direct Payment are two "unsung heroes" of wise financial management. Individuals can save effortlessly by earmarking part of their pay for Direct Payment into their savings or investment account. Saving for the future and managing finances wisely are important responsibilities. In addition, as a less costly and more efficient alternative to paper-based systems, Direct Deposit and Direct Payment benefit nearly every consumer and business.

Think of what our lives would be like without Direct Deposit and Direct Payment. Does anyone have time these days to stand in bank lines to deposit paychecks every week or two? With Direct Deposit, an individual's pay is automatically deposited into his/her checking or savings account. With Direct Payment, individuals can pay bills, such as mortgage or cable, directly from their accounts. Direct Payment saves time, and guarantees that payments will be made on time, every time. No more buying stamps, looking for mailboxes or worrying about the payments. Direct Payment can be used to make a large variety of payments, from utility to insurance to brokerage to telephone.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that all of my colleagues will join me in supporting Direct Deposit and Direct Payment Week. These secure, efficient and highly confidential payment methods have helped individuals and business save time and manage their finances more efficiently and securely for more than 25 years. And I urge all Americans to recognize the importance of these valuable financial tools.

IN HONOR OF BAYONNE LITTLE LEAGUE BASEBALL INC.'S 50TH SEASON ANNIVERSARY

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the Bayonne Little League Baseball Inc. for the forty-nine years it has provided young people with access to one of America's greatest athletic traditions. Baseball teaches responsibility, teamwork, sportsmanship, and nurtures self-esteem.

Forty-nine years ago, on April 15th, 1951, the Bayonne Little League Inc. began its commitment to the young people of Bayonne when W. Vincent Cook, and a handful of associates, organized a four-team program. Volunteers contacted several merchants who agreed to provide uniforms and equipment for the 90 youngsters in the league. In 1952, twelve more teams were added to accommodate the incredible numbers of boys who wanted to participate.

The increase in participation led to the building of a stadium. The League received assistance building the stadium from William Rosenthal, and, as a gesture of its appreciation, the League named the new stadium in memory of his son, Lewis Rosenthal.

In 1954, the number of Little League teams increased to twenty, and by 1962, the astounding success of the League led to the establishment of a program that consisted of 24 Major League and 12 Minor League teams. The challenge of expansion and the substantial financial obligation that went with it was a constant challenge for the organization; but not once did this prevent the League from successfully providing for the many young people who registered to play.

After numerous complications, and an extraordinary fund raising drive by the community of Bayonne, the League was able to move to a new stadium in 1965. The decades to follow demonstrated the same growth that the first did, and the community of Bayonne never wavered in its profound commitment to its young people and the challenge of Little League expansion.

This great youth organization would not have been possible without the hard work and dedication of Commissioner Gene Klumpp and all those who understand the positive impact sports have on our young people. I would like to thank everyone who has contributed to the growth and continuation of the Bayonne Little League.

I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Bayonne Little League Baseball Inc. on its 50th season anniversary.

A TRIBUTE TO REV. DR. WALLACE HARTSFIELD

HON. KAREN McCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and respect that I bring to your attention, and to the attention of the House, the outstanding work and commitment of Rev. Dr. Wallace Hartsfield for 50 years of preaching to church congregations, serving the last thirty four years as pastor of the Metropolitan Missionary Baptist Church in Kansas City.

Reverend Hartsfield was born in Atlanta, Georgia, November 13, 1929. He was an only child, raised by his mother, Ruby Morrissatte. After a three year tour of duty in the United States Army, he attended Clark College in Atlanta and in 1954 he received a Bachelor of Arts degree from Clark College. He received a Master of Divinity degree from Gammon Theological Seminary in Atlanta in 1957. His first pastorate was at a Baptist church in Pickens, South Carolina.

Reverend Hartsfield is chairman of the Congress of National Black Churches which represents 65,000 churches and 20 million members. Reverend Hartsfield is also chairman of the Economic Development Commission of the National Baptist Convention of America, Inc.; second vice president of the National Baptist Convention of America, Inc.; president of the Greater Kansas City Chapter of Operation PUSH; and an adjunct professor of the Central Baptist Theological Seminary in Kansas City, KS.

Reverend Hartsfield is married to Matilda Hopkins and on August 28 of this year they will celebrate their 43rd wedding anniversary. Reverend and Mrs. Hartsfield are the proud parents of four wonderful children: Pamela Faith, Danise Hope, Ruby Love, and Wallace S. Hartsfield, II.

I have known Reverend Hartsfield over the years through his extensive involvement in the community. He has been a leader in many worthwhile causes and a wonderful role model for our city's young people.

His leadership was invaluable, also, in redeveloping a blighted part of Kansas City when he led the Baptist Ministers' Union of Kansas City in their efforts to demolish the old St. Joseph's Hospital and replace it with a much-needed new shopping center, the Linwood Shopping Center. Residents of the city's central core had to travel some distances to buy groceries, drop off dry cleaning, and have a prescription filled, before the new development became a reality. Reverend Hartsfield successfully led the charge to secure with sufficient investment capital for the project, when resources for new development in that area of the city were scarce. He also was instrumental in the construction of a low-income 60-unit housing development, known as Metropolitan Homes, in that same geographical area.

Reverend Hartsfield recently chaired the capital fund campaign to expand and update Kansas City's Swope Parkway Health Center, which provides invaluable assistance to many people who could not otherwise afford or have access to quality, state-of-the-art health care. Millions of dollars were raised and the new health center stands as a testament to the untiring efforts of committed and dedicated people like Reverend Hartsfield.

Reverend Hartsfield has received numerous awards including: the One Hundred Most Influential Award from the Kansas City Globe newspaper; the Greater Kansas City Image Award presented by the Urban League; the Minister of the Year Award from the Baptist Ministers Union of Kansas City; a Public Service Award from the Ad Hoc Group Against Crime; the Role Model for Youth Award from Penn Valley Community College, in Kansas City; and a Community Service Award from Kansas City, MO, and then-mayor Richard Berkeley, among others.

Additionally, he was named 'One of the Top 50 Ministers in America' by Upscale magazine of Atlanta, GA and he received an honorary Doctor of Divinity degree from both Western Baptist Bible College in Kansas City and also from the Virginia Seminary and College of Lyncher, VA. Further, Reverend Hartsfield is a member of the board of directors for the national organization of Operation PUSH, and the Morehouse School of Religion in Atlanta, GA, among others.

This weekend in Kansas City, we are celebrating Reverend Hartsfield's 34th anniversary as pastor at the Metropolitan Missionary Baptist Church in Kansas City, and recognizing all of his critically important work and the leadership he has provided in the community over that span of time. He has blessed the lives of so many. Reverend Hartsfield loves people and he loves helping people. He has made a difference in the city he calls home, Kansas City, and we are proud to have him as one of its outstanding citizens.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I ask that you and our colleagues join with me and the congregation of the Metropolitan Missionary Baptist Church, the family of Reverend Hartsfield, and the citizens of Kansas City, MO in congratulating Reverend Hartsfield on his 50th preaching anniversary and for his 34 years of service to his church and his community.

CONGRATULATING CHRIST TEMPLE CHURCH OF CHRIST (HOLINESS) OF GARY, INDIANA

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure and enthusiasm that I congratulate Christ Temple Church of Christ (Holiness) U.S.A. in Gary, Indiana, as it celebrates its 75th anniversary as a parish on May 3–7, 2000. This anniversary is made even more special because a charter member, Brother Oliver B. Hardy, is able to celebrate with his fellow parishioners.

Christ Temple Church was formed largely through the efforts of two dedicated people. Sister Ella Bradley attended a church service in Gary, where she met Elder William A. Nolley. Elder Nolley was singing a song that Sister Bradley recognized, a song written by Bishop Charles Prince Jones, the founder of the Church of Christ Holiness U.S.A. After several discussions, Sister Bradley opened up her home on Tuesday, November 25, 1925, and Christ Temple Church was born. The initial membership consisted of Sister Bradley and her family as well as Elder Nolley and his wife, Velma.

After much hard work and dedication, land was purchased at 2472 Pierce Street in Gary. It was here that the church began to flourish. Elder Nolley was returned to the south by the presiding bishop and was replaced with Elder J.J. Peterson in 1931. Elder Peterson built a sanctuary on the lot on Pierce Street, and the congregation began to grow steadily. In June of 1962, the generous Elder Peterson was laid to rest, but his commitment to the church had made a lasting impression on the congregation and community.

After Elder Peterson's passing, the church continued to expand. By September of 1962, the membership of the church was beginning to outgrow the limited space of the sanctuary. The church leadership took the visionary approach by forming a building fund. They predicted that once the fund had reached $100,000 it would be time to build a new place of worship. Through the selflessness and generosity of the membership, their vision came to fruition on January 13, 1980, when they held their first service at their current location, 4201 Washington Street, in Gary.

Under the extraordinary leadership of Bishop O.W. McInnis and Elder Dale Cudjoe, the church members were able to pay off their new church's mortgage within nine months. On September 24, 1989, Elder Cudjoe was appointed pastor of Christ Temple Church of Christ, the position he holds today. Through his efforts the church has grown both spiritually and numerically.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my other distinguished colleagues to join me in congratulating the membership of the Christ Temple Church of Christ (Holiness) U.S.A. as they celebrate their 75th anniversary. From humble beginnings they have emerged into a thriving spiritual family. The church's positive impact on Northwest Indiana has been significant during the past 75 years. May they enjoy good fortune for many more years to come.

GIL ROBB WILSON CIVIL AIR PATROL AWARD WINNERS

HON. BOB BARR

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and admiration that I recognize two outstanding men who have recently been awarded the highest achievement a Senior Member of the Civil Air Patrol can receive: Chaplain LTC Alex Mills and LTC Earl Tillman. Both these men received the prestigious and the award is the Gil Robb Wilson Award. Recipients of the Gil Robb Wilson Award must complete all Level V training in the member's specialty tract. The award was instituted in 1964 and was named after the first member and CEO of the Civil Air Patrol, Gil Robb Wilson.

LTC Mills and LTC Tillman have a combined service record with the Civil Air Patrol of over 64 years. They are members of the Rome Composite Squadron, Group 1 Georgia Wing. LTC Mills has been a member of the Civil Air Patrol for over 20 years and serves as chaplain for the Rome Composite Squadron, as well as chaplain for Group 1 Headquarters, Georgia Wing. LTC Tillman has been a member of the Civil Air Patrol for 44 years, and is currently serving as the Rome Composite Check Pilot, Mission Pilot, and Cadet Orientation Pilot.

Service to their community and to the Civil Air Patrol, are but two examples of what make these two men outstanding citizens of Rome, Georgia. As a member of the Congressional Squadron of the Civil Air Patrol based in Washington, D.C. and as their United States Congressman, I want to congratulate LTC Mills and LTC Tillman for this outstanding achievement.

COSPONSOR THE McGOVERN-SMITH BILL ON EAST TIMOR

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, today I am proud to join with my colleague from New Jersey, Congressman CHRIS SMITH, to introduce the East Timor Repatriation and Security Act.

The crisis in East Timor continues, and the Congress needs to respond. Some 100,000 refugees remain trapped in squalid and theatening conditions inside West Timor. The overwhelming majority of these refugees want to return to their homes in East Timor, but cannot because the camps are under the control of the militias. Militias and elements of the Indonesian army continue cross-border attacks into East Timor. Reconstruction continues to be a slow and laborious task.

Our bill maintains the President's suspension on military cooperation with the Indonesian Armed Forces until the refugees are safely repatriated and military attacks against East Timor are ended. It calls upon the President to help the safe repatriation of the refugees and to help rebuild East Timor. And it salutes the members of the U.S. Armed Forces who have participated in the peacekeeping operation in East Timor.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the McGovern-Smith bill on East Timor and submit additional materials into the RECORD.

EAST TIMORESE REFUGEES FACE NEW THREAT

(NEW YORK, March 30, 2000)—Human Rights Watch today called on Indonesian authorities to lift a March 31 deadline on humanitarian aid to East Timorese refugees living in West Timor. The Indonesian government has given the refugees, some 100,000 people until the end of the month to choose whether to go back to East Timor or remain in Indonesia. Indonesia says it will end all delivery of food and other assistance as of March 31.

''Everyone wants a quick resolution of the refugee crisis, but this ultimatum is counterproductive,'' said Joe Saunders, deputy Asia director at Human Rights Watch. ''The threatened deadline alone has created panic. If it is implemented, the cutoff will directly endanger the lives of tens of thousands of refugees without solving the underlying problems.''

Conditions for many of the refugees are already dire. There have been food shortages, along with health and nutrition problems in many of the camps. Some reports estimate that as many as 500 refugees have died from stomach and respiratory ailments. Refugees also continue to face significant obstacles in deciding whether to return. In some areas, refugees continue to be subjected to intimidation by armed militias and disinformation campaigns. Refugees are told that conditions in East Timor are worse than in the camps, and that the United Nations is acting as a new colonial occupying force. Other refugees opposed independence for East Timor, or come from militia or army families, and fear vigilante justice should they return to East Timor.

Indonesian officials claim, however, that they can no longer afford to feed the refugees, that food aid acts as a magnet and prevents refugees in West Timor from returning home permanently, claiming that after March 31, the refugees should be the sole responsibility of the international community.

''Given Indonesia's economic woes, the call for international financial support in feeding and caring for the refugees is understandable. We can on donors to make urgently needed assistance available. But an artificial deadline helps no one,'' said Saunders. ''Thousands of refugees are not now in a position to make a free and informed choice about whether to return. A large part of the problem has been Indonesia's failure to create conditions in which refugees can make a genuine choice.''

According to aid agencies, the total number of refugees currently in West Timor is just under 100,000. Precise figures are not available because access to the camps and settlements has been limited by harassment and intimidation of humanitarian aid workers by pro-Indonesian militias still dominated in a number of the camps. Many refugees have also been subjected to months of disinformation and, often, intimidation by members of the pro-Indonesian military, Indonesia has recently made some progress in combating the intimidation in the camps, but lack of security and reliable information continue to be imported obstacle to return. Aid workers in West Timor estimate that one-half to two-thirds of the refugees, if given a free choice, would eventually choose to return to East Timor.

''Withdrawal of food aid and other humanitarian assistance should never be used as a means to pressure refugees into returning home prematurely'' said Saunders. ''Return should be voluntary and based on the first and informed choice of the refugees themselves.''

Following the announcement by the United Nations on September 4, 1999 that nearly eighty percent of East Timorese voters had rejected continued rule by Indonesia. East Timor was the site orchestrated mayhem. In the days and weeks following the announcement, an estimated seventy percent of homes and buildings across East Timor were destroyed, more than two-thirds of the population was displaced, and an estimated 250,000 East Timorse fled or were forcibly taken, often at gunpoint, across the border into Indonesian West Timor. To date roughly 150,000 refugees have return to East Timor.

NON-COMMISSIONED AND PETTY OFFICER PAY TABLE EQUITY ACT OF 2000

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing legislation that will provide much needed pay reform for our mid-career non-commissioned officers and petty officers. It is my hope this legislation will accomplish three important steps for the Nation's Armed Forces.

First, it will provide mid-career enlisted service members an increase in their basic pay that will nearly match the increases given to mid-grade commissioned officers beginning July 1, 2000.

Second, it will work to address the problem of retention of qualified and experienced mid-career enlisted noncommissioned and petty officers that the Armed Forces wants to retain.

Third, in retaining qualified and experienced mid-career enlisted service members, it will help maintain the high-level of personnel readiness enjoyed by the Nation's defense posture.

Last year, this Congress in the Fiscal 2000 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) approved a 4.8 percent pay raise for uniformed services personnel, one of the largest increases in recent history. It also authorized pay reform for certain mid-grade commissioned officers and mid-career enlisted service members effective July 1, 2000. While the pay raise itself is a critical step for our military personnel, the pay adjustment unfortunately will miss its mark in offering equitable reform for mid-grade enlisted noncommissioned officers (NCOs) and petty officers (POs) of the Armed Forces in grades E–5, E–6, and E–7.

Whereas, most mid-grade commissioned officers were to receive a well-deserved pay hike on July 1, 2000, mid-career enlisted NCOs and POs are targeted for minimal increases. The July 1, 2000 pay reform will provide for adjustments in 15 of 33 mid-grade officer pay cells, each of which rated increases greater than 4 percent. On the other hand, of the 33 mid-grade enlisted NCO/PO pay cells, only one (1) will receive a raise of 3.5 percent, two (2) are being offered a 3.1 percent increase, one (1) a 2.5 percent hike, and three (3) at 2.1 percent to 2.3 percent. It doesn't require a mathematician to figure out that the enlisted NCOs and POs will be largely left out of the equation.

Most of the military services are experiencing problems either in recruiting and retention, or both. One of the major issues confronting enlisted NCOs and POs is whether they have enough financial resources to care for their family—particularly when they are deployed. Recent surveys indicate that service members are not happy with the pay they're receiving. Recognizing this problem, the Fleet Reserve Association (FRA), a 75-year-old organization of career Sailors, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen, prepared a study that demonstrates the value of basic pay for enlisted NCOs and POs has diminished since the advent of the all-volunteer force (AVF). That study, which was distributed to a number of House and Senate members on both the Armed Services Committees and Defense Subcommittees and to selected defense and military officials, proves the value of basic pay for enlisted NCOs and POs has diminished since the advent of the all-volunteer force.

If Congress doesn't want to face the same problem of the late 1970s having too few enlisted petty officers to get its ships to sea, or experiencing another shortage of enlisted NCOs for the Army's combat forces, Congress must address the retention of qualified and experienced mid-career enlisted service members. This pay reform proposal for E–5's, E–6's and E–7's contained in this legislation will take steps to do just that.

Each E–5 with 8 to 26 years of service would receive a $31 per month increase in basic pay on July 1, 2000. E–6s, in the same years would each realize a monthly increase of $49, and E–7s a $56 raise each month. While I believe all of our military should be paid more, this is an important step in the right direction.

This bill has the full support of the Nation's eight national enlisted military organizations; the Air Force Sergeants Association, the Enlisted Association of the National Guard of the United States, the Fleet Reserve Association, the Naval Enlisted Reserve Association, the Non Commissioned Officers Association, The Retired Enlisted Association, the U.S. Coast Guard Chief Petty Officers Association, and the U.S. Coast Guard Enlisted Association.

These mid-career non-commissioned officers and petty officers are the backbone of our military. I hope that my colleagues will work with me to recognize that fact and to ensure they are provided pay table reform that is both fair and equitable.

DIGITAL DIVIDE ACCESS TO TECHNOLOGY ACT (DATA)

HON. JERRY WELLER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with my colleague, JOHN LEWIS of Georgia, to introduce H.R. 4274, the Digital Divide Access to Technology Act of 2000 (DATA Act). The DATA Act addresses a rather new situation which involves employers providing home computers to their employees.

Over the past couple of months, four major companies—Ford Motor Company, American Airlines, Delta Airlines, and Intel—have announced programs to provide home computers to their employees. The question before us is whether employer-provided home computers should be considered taxable income to the employees.

I believe that the government should not tax these computers and the legislation we are introducing today will ensure that these basic computers do not become a tax liability for the employees.

The DATA Act is a digital divide issue and it represents a powerful partnership between private companies and the government as we work to reduce the so-called digital divide and create new digital opportunities. These home computers will be available to employees and their families for work and personal use. Once in the home, the computers can be used by employees for Internet training, by the children for homework and research, and other family members to balance the family budget and stay in touch with far-away relatives. There are no restrictions on the use of the computers.

For tax purposes, the DATA Act treats the Internet access and first $1,260 of the value of a computer and peripheral equipment (e.g., monitors, printers and keyboards), including software, and Internet access as a fringe benefit, not subject to income tax. For the program to qualify, employers have to provide computers to substantially all employees working in the United States and employees can receive only one computer within a 36 month time period.

If the employer offers a program allowing employees to purchase an upgraded "or deluxe" model computer, the first $1,260 in value is still non-taxable, employees can pay for the deluxe version if they choose. Additionally, if employees are required to pay a monthly copayment for the computer, such as the $5 monthly responsibility of Ford employees, this payment does not factor into the value of the computer. Let me give you an example of how this works.

The 350,000 employees at Ford Motor Company will soon receive a home computer which costs $24.95 per month over 36 months, for a total of $898. The employees pay $5 per month, or $180 over 3 years, for the computer. Ford pays $19.95 per month for each employee, or almost $720 over 3 years. The $720 paid by Ford for the computers falls far below the $1,260 exclusion provided by this legislation. This program is available to all employees working for Ford. This includes everyone from the janitor, to the union worker, to the managers, and the Vice Presidents.

Mr. Speaker, these companies are likely to be only the first of many companies to provide home computers to their employees. I strongly believe this is an important way we, as policymakers, can work with corporations to help put more computers into the hands of American families and children. This legislation will help us close the digital divide and provide digital opportunities to hundreds of thousands of families currently without this equipment which is rapidly becoming a necessity for survival in the 21st century economy.

I look forward to working with these and other employers to continue developing this legislation to make it easier for these computers to be taken home by employees. I also look forward to working with the House Leadership, Chairman ARCHER, my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, as well as the Administration to ensure that this powerful mechanism available to close the digital divide is fully utilized.

RECOGNIZING THE ENVIRONMENTAL LEADERSHIP OF THE ASPEN SKI COMPANY

HON. DIANA DeGETTE

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the Aspen Skiing Company as a leader in environmental responsibility.

This is certainly not the first commendation the Aspen Skiing Company has received. In 1999 alone, the company became the first back to back winner of the Golden Eagle Award for Overall Environmental Excellence in the ski industry. It was the first skiing company and only U.S. business to receive the prestigious British Airways Tourism for Tomorrow Environmental Award. Additionally, the Aspen Skiing Company was recognized by the National Environmental Education and Training Foundation for its outstanding environmental educational programs.

As the award judges for the Golden Eagle Award noted, "Aspen Skiing Company's programs show a wide-range and detailed commitment to an ecological perspective in every area of their business." I whole-heartedly agree that the Aspen Skiing Company has, "without peer, established itself as an industry leader in environmentalism."

But Aspen is not resting on its laurels. The Skiing Company continues to develop innovative environmental programs and partnerships to protect the forests in which it resides and its commitment to the local community. The Aspen Skiing Company has entered into a cooperative with the Environmental Protection Agency and the Colorado Department of Public Health and the Environment to develop a pollution prevention based environmental management strategy that focuses on energy and waste conservation, and solid waste reduction to be used as a model for the skiing industry. It has developed a Natural Resource Management Plan to ensure vegetative diversity and wildlife protection on its mountains. The Aspen Skiing Company founded the Environment Foundation, a nonprofit, employee-funded and directed foundation which awarded more than $120,000 to 34 diverse local environmental groups since its inception, and continues to protect local habitat, ecosystems, and biodiversity.

Aspen Skiing Company continues to be a leader in environmentally sensitive development, not only within the ski industry, but all industry. Aspen's efforts to reduce the impact it has on the land, and conserve habitat and resources are exemplified by two of its recent projects, the Sundeck Restaurant and the Cirque Lift.

The Sundeck Restaurant, at the top of the mountain is on tract to be a fully certified "green building." The effort began with the deconstruction, rather than demolition of the old building, enabling materials to be salvaged and reused. The new building will utilize the latest "green" technology, including energy efficient windows, low toxicity paints, and recycled and recyclable materials.

When the Aspen Skiing Company decided to construct a new lift above tree line, it recognized the sensitivity of this ecosystem and proceeded accordingly. The construction of the Cirque Lift was completed without bulldozers or mechanized ground equipment. The heavy items for the lift, such as the lift poles and concrete, were airlifted by helicopter while all other supplies were carried up on foot, an astounding task at high elevation that speaks volumes to the company's commitment to protecting this delicate ecosystem. The lift itself continues that commitment, as it is the State of Colorado's first wind powered ski lift.

Aspen Skiing Company has also shown leadership in the public realm advocating for the protection of public lands and open spaces, which are so important to Colorado's wildlife and the quality of life for all Americans.

I have no doubt that the Aspen Skiing Company will continue to be a leader in efforts to protect the environment. I applaud their accomplishments.

TRIBUTE TO THE UNIVERSITY OF CONNECTICUT WOMEN HUSKIES—2000 NCAA WOMEN'S BASKETBALL NATIONAL CHAMPIONS

HON. JOHN B. LARSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. LARSON. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to the 2000 National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Women's Basketball National Champions, the University of Connecticut Huskies. On Sunday, April 2, the Husky Women put on what can only be described as a 40-minute basketball clinic for their opponents, the Tennessee Lady Vols.

Earlier this year, I had the great privilege to meet with Geno Auriemma and the team when they were in town to play Big East Conference rival Georgetown. Their individual accomplishments this year, like those of the women playing before them, continue to raise the standard for excellence and achievement in women's athletics. I would like to congratulate each member of the team, Coaches Geno Auriemma and Chris Dailey, Lew Perkins and the UCon Athletic Department, and all the fans and supporters of UConn Women's Basketball who made this great victory possible.

I can no more eloquently describe these achievements than Randy Smith did in his article published in the April 3, 2000, edition of the Journal Inquirer titled "Return of the Native is Masterpiece." I submit the text of that article for the RECORD at this time:

[From the Journal Inquirer, Apr. 3, 2000]

RETURN OF THE NATIVE IS MASTERPIECE

(By Randy Smith)

PHILADELPHIA.—A couple of minutes after his Connecticut women's basketball team won the national championship, coach Geno Auriemma embrace his own triple crown. He hugged his children, his wife, and his mother. There were tears in everybody's eyes.

The native had returned to Philadelphia to play for college basketball's biggest prize. He not only won it, but claimed Tennessee coach Pat Summitt's scalp in the process.

UConn's 71–52 decision over the Lady Vols was more coronation than competition.

''A lot of guys who were coaching when I was playing used to tell me I'll never be any good as a player and they were right,'' Auriemma said. ''So I turned out to be the coach of a championship team. It's kind of funny to come back and they're all in the stands. They're happy for me because they finally saw me win something.''

There was never a doubt.

Basketball is nowhere near as complicated as paid analysts try to make it. Do you know what it takes to win games? Good players. The rest is rhetoric.

It has taken Auriemma the better part of a decade to assemble more good players at UConn than Summitt has at Tennessee and those good players strutted their stuff Monday night. Shea Ralph, Asjha Jones, and Kelly Schumacher were standouts, but Svetlana Abrosimova, Swin Cash, Tamika Williams, Sue Bird, and Kennitra Johnson all played pivotal roles. Under the glare of the big spotlight, UConn got something from everybody.

''I've told these kids all year long that every pass we make in practice, every cut, every rebound, pretend like it's the one that's going to win the national championship,'' Auriemma said. ''The kids have practiced that way all year. And the night they had to do it, they did it better than at any other time of the season.''

Associate head coach Chris Dailey agreed.

''This was the A game we've been waiting for,'' she said. ''All anybody talks about is how talented we are. But if you take a closer look, our players are unselfish, they've got heart and character, they'll make sacrifices, and they're willing to put away individual things to be part of a team. There's not one pain in the neck in the bunch. That's the story.''

Here's another: Summit was hoisted by her own self-confidence. Had she admitted to herself that Tennessee would be the second-best team on the floor, she could have put in some wrinkles to give UConn problems. She could have played Semeka Randall on Bird to disrupt UConn's offense. She could have played a lot of zone to slow the pace of the game. She could have thrown in a couple of gimmicky defenses. Instead she opted to play UConn straight-up, even down a starter in Kristen Clement.

It was a very, very bad decision.

''It was an extremely disappointing performance by our basketball team and a very painful loss,'' Summit said. ''I don't think any of us expected this. Nothing we tried worked. At times, I felt helpless. We played on our heels from the beginning. I hate that we got ourselves in this position and couldn't have been more competitive. We'll look at the film later. No time soon, though.''

Auriemma spoke of Tennessee's ''aura'' leading up to the game, knowing full well that Connecticut carries one of its own.

''Do you know how many real adjustments we made?'' None. They had to adjust to us.''

That's not altogether true. Kyra Elzy's presence in Tennessee's starting lineup because of Clement's injury freed up one UConn player on defense, in this case, Abrosimova, who doubled down on Michelle Snow in the game's opening minutes. Snow was forced to make reaction passes and they're not that easy, especially if you're not accustomed to making them.

Tennessee's offense looked to be in a constant state of panic, while its defense was dissected time and time again by UConn's back door cuts and passes, a la the Princeton men's team.

''They ran back door cuts off the strong side and cuts across the middle,'' Summit said. ''They ran the same two offenses over and over again. It's not anything new. We'd seen it. Everybody got beat. Semeka Randall got lost on defense, probably more than anyone, and she's one of our best defenders. I wanted to play man to try and get something going, but I'd have to go back to zone because how many layups do you want to give them?''

If Summit had a white towel, she probably would have tossed it on the floor midway through the second half.

UConn employed pressure defense in spots to help cause 26 Tennessee turnovers.

''You don't use pressure just to steal the ball,'' Auriemma said. ''You use it to see how they handle it and they didn't handle it all that great. Had they gone boom, boom, layup, we would have gotten out of it. But they were struggling.''

Auriemma's use of pressure was borderline masterful during UConn's run through the NCAA Tournament. He said it was part of the plan from the beginning.

''For five months, we made teams prepare for our halfcourt offense and our halfcourt defense,'' he said. ''But we worked on the press every day in practice. We wanted to make teams prepare for more than one thing. We wanted a lot of things in our arsenal. The press was in our pocket all along. Come NCAA tournament time, we went to it because we wanted to be super aggressive. At the risk of sounding smart, that was the plan.''

''You don't use your closer until you need him.''

UConn ran the table, all right, but who knew the last ball, the orange one, would be a hanger?

The first national championship of the millennium may very well be remembered as the passing of the guard. UConn brought more fans to Philadelphia than Tennessee and those fans made more noise. UConn sent out more good players than Tennessee and those players scored way more points. The better team won without breaking stride and may be the first hard evidence that UConn indeed has a better program than Tennessee.

''You saw tonight what good teams are made of,'' Auriemma said. ''This team has a chemistry both on and off the court. This team is closer than any I've had.''

Auriemma proved Thomas Wolfe wrong. You can go home again.

A DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NUCLEAR WEAPONS FACILITY

HON. JOEL HEFLEY

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I share with you an update on the first-ever scheduled closure of a Department of Energy (DOE) nuclear weapons facility. In less than seven years, residents along the Front Range of Colorado will no longer live in the shadow of Rocky Flats, a 6,500 acre former weapons component manufacturing facility. What once was home to more than 100 tons of plutonium and plutonium byproducts will become history. More than 700 structures representing 3.5 million square feet will be demolished. The two on-site landfills that contributed to soil and groundwater contamination will no longer exist.

Since the early years of the Nuclear Age to the end of the Cold War, Rocky Flats, a mere 16 miles northwest of Denver, was a manufacturing site for plutonium triggers and other nuclear weapons parts. In 1989, the FBI and the EPA closed the site due to alleged violations of environmental law.

A joint company headquartered in my district has developed a fast-track closure plan, which DOE fully supports, that shaves decades off the original clean-up schedule. Originally expected to take 65 years and cost more than $35 billion, the accelerated closure plan will be completed by 2007 for under $8 billion.

To date great progress has been made at Rocky Flats such as cleaning up the majority of the top 10 environmental risk areas, including the removal of 30 tons of depleted uranium. Thousands of liters of plutonium and uranium solutions have been drained from dozens of tanks and stabilized. Most recently, the weapons research and development facility was decontaminated and demolished—six months ahead of schedule.

Within this decade, all nuclear materials and radioactive waste will be shipped to off-site storage facilities. Environmental remediation will be completed so that land is available for open space and industrial use and downstream water supplies are protected. Moreover, billions of taxpayer dollars that have been used in the operations, security and cleanup of Rocky Flats can be reallocated to similar sites throughout the country.

Imagine, after more than 50 years as a top-secret nuclear weapons facility that contributed to winning the Cold War, the Rocky Flats acreage will once again be available to the people of Colorado. Please join me in congratulating the DOE, the State of Colorado, and the companies involved for this extraordinary effort.

IN RECOGNITION OF THE REEDSBURG AREA HIGH SCHOOL EARTH DAY CELEBRATION

HON. TAMMY BALDWIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. BALDWIN. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, I pay tribute to the Reedsburg Area High School students and staff for their fantastic contributions in order to improve their environment, enrich their community, and celebrate Earth Day.

This year's Earth Day will be the ninth that the Reedsburg Area High School students and staff celebrate by volunteering their time. In previous years they have worked to maintain trails, clean and restore wilderness areas, and plant thousands of trees. With this tireless volunteer work they are making Wisconsin a better place for every citizen.

The students and staff at Reedsburg Area High School are also very special because of the amazing manner in which they celebrate Earth Day each year. As the Reedsburg students recently said to me in a letter, they are not "just another high school planting a tree." The entire high school, including over 900 students and staff work together on this day. They also branch out to other communities. This year they will send an astounding 26 work crews to different locations surrounding the Reedsburg area!

Americans are increasingly learning the benefits of youth service and focusing that work in the preservation of our environment. The students and staff of Reedsburg Area High School are pioneers in an effort that engages and empowers young people while connecting them with adults that provide education and guidance. It is an effort that views young people as assets and resources to their community. They are setting an impressive example for all people, young and old, across Wisconsin and the nation.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in memory of the victims of one of history's most terrible tragedies, the Armenian Genocide that took place in Turkey between 1915 and 1923. This antecedent for all subsequent 20th-century genocides began on April 24, 1915, when the rulers of the Ottoman Empire began the systematic and ruthless extermination of the Armenian minority in Turkey. By the end of the Terror, more than a million Armenian men, women, and children had been massacred and more than half a million others had been expelled from the homeland that their forebearers had inhabited for three millennia.

April 24, 1915 is remembered and commemorated each year by the Armenian community and people of conscience throughout the world. The Armenian Genocide is a historical fact. The Republic of Turkey has adamantly refused to acknowledge that the Genocide happened on its soil but the evidence is irrefutable.

As we enter the Third Millennium of the Christian Era, it behooves us to remember. If we ignore the lessons of the Armenian Genocide, then we are destined to continue our stumbles through the long, dark tunnel of endless ethnic-cleansings, genocides, and holocausts. Let us, then, remember to remember.

SUPPORTING THE BREAST AND CERVICAL CANCER TREATMENT ACT

HON. PAUL RYAN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am here today to speak in support of H.R. 1070, the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act. I believe this bill, which provides coverage for low-income women who have been diagnosed with breast or cervical cancer, provides a logical expansion of early detection efforts throughout the nation.

The federal government, through the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, currently provides screening for early detection of breast and cervical cancer. This bill would provide the next step by giving states the option of receiving an enhanced match through Medicaid if they choose to offer treatment services for women who have been diagnosed with breast or cervical cancer during the screening process.

As a member of the House Budget Committee, I offered an amendment, which was accepted, to provide funding for these services in the Medicaid program. Now that this funding has been set aside, it is time to bring H.R. 1070 to the floor. The principles of this bill have been agreed to in the budget, and it is now time to bring the actual bill to the floor for a vote.

I urge the House to consider this bill before Mother's Day as a statement of our sincere commitment to the millions of women in this country who suffer from these diseases.

IN HONOR OF DR. NESTOR CARBONELL-CORTINA FOR HIS LIFE-LONG COMMITMENT TO FREEDOM AND DEMOCRACY

HON. ROBERT MENENDEZ

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I honor Dr. Nestor Carbonell-Cortina for his life-long commitment to freedom and democracy.

Born in Havana, Cuba, Dr. Carbonell-Cortina understood early in his life that the price for freedom is high; that the fight for freedom is long; and that the cost for freedom is often paid for with the lives of those who never knew it.

In 1960, shortly after Castro seized control of Cuba, Dr. Carbonell-Cortina was forced to leave his native land, fleeing the oppressive communist rule imposed by the Castro regime. However, he returned and courageously fought in the Bay of Pigs Invasion, hoping to restore freedom to his homeland. In 1962, Dr. Carbonell-Cortina was responsible for the diplomatic strategy that removed the Castro regime from the Organization of the American Estates.

With the publication of numerous articles, essays and speeches, Dr. Carbonell-Cortina has continued his fight for freedom and his opposition to the Castro regime. Among his many publications are: El Espiritu de la Constitucion de 1940; Perfil Historio del IV Presidente de Cuba; Cortina: Tribuno de la Republica; And the Russians Stayed; y Por La Libertad de Cuba: Una Historia Inconclusa.

Dr. Carbonell-Cortina graduated from the University of Villanueva in the city of Havana with a law degree, and received his MA from Harvard. Currently, he is Vice President of International Relations for PepsiCo., Inc.

I ask my colleagues to join me in congratulating Dr. Nestor Carbonell-Cortina for his courageous commitment to the pursuit of freedom in the face of extraordinary opposition.

A TRIBUTE TO ROSE KEMP

HON. KAREN McCARTHY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to an outstanding individual from the State of Missouri. On April 27th, the Missouri Women's Council will honor Rose Kemp, Regional Administrator of the Women's Bureau, U.S. Department of Labor, with an award named on her behalf, the "Rose Kemp Public Service Award."

Ms. Rose Kemp was appointed as Regional Administrator of the Women's Bureau in 1983. She is responsible for policy development and implementation of workplace issues affecting women. In this role, Ms. Kemp has produced outstanding results by her commitment to promote the welfare of wage earning women, improve their working conditions, and advance their opportunities for profitable employment.

Ms. Kemp serves on numerous boards such as the Greater Kansas City Urban League, Francis Child Development Institute, and the Women's Council at the University of Missouri—Kansas City. All have profited from Ms. Kemp's expertise. She has been awarded the ''Kansas City Spirit Award,'' the Department of Labor's ''The Distinguished Career Service Award,'' the YWCA Heart of Gold Award, and the 100 Most Influential Black Citizens in the Greater Kansas City Area in 1993, 1994, 1996, 1997, and 1998. Ms. Kemp's service has benefited all women and been an asset for our community.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in saluting this courageous, innovative, and inspiring individual, Rose Kemp, as she accepts the first ever ''Rose Kemp Public Service Award.''

HONORING EIGHT NORTHWEST INDIANA EDUCATORS

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, today I commend eight dedicated teachers from Northwest Indiana who have been voted outstanding educators by their peers for the 1999–2000 school year. These individuals, Debra Ciochina, Douglas DeLaughter, Brenda Greene, Dennis Keithley, Martin Kessler, Marilyn Qualls, Martiann Recktenwall and Sharron Thornton, will be presented the Crystal Apple Award at a reception sponsored by the Indiana State Teachers Association. This glorious event will take place at the Broadmoor Country Club in Merrillville, Indiana, on Wednesday, May 3, 2000.

Debra Ciochina, from Crown Point Community School Corporation, has taught for 30 years. Currently, she teaches at Crown Point High School, where she has been the assistant director of the Crown Point High School Theater for five years. She also coaches the Crown Point High School Dance Team. As a freelance director, choreographer and performer for community theaters and schools, she has written and produced various original productions. Debra not only finds interesting ways to help her English and Speech classes learn important concepts, she also makes her students enjoy learning. Her charismatic personality transfers enthusiasm for her subject area to her students. She embraces the idea that each of us must find an individual passion and be true to one's convictions.

Douglas DeLaughter is described by his peers as an outstandingly professional and dedicated teacher. He has taught for 17 years, and is current working within the School Town of Munster. Doug has dedicated himself to understanding and displaying the aspects of being a professional in the field of education. His enthusiasm and love for education is truly contagious, for Doug inspires those around him to strive for excellence. Doug's commitment and love for children and their education has been seen in the number of hours he devotes to his job, the number of committees he has taken a leadership role in, and the programs he has instituted.

Brenda Greene has been a role model, inspiration and a coach during her 22 years of teaching. She currently teaches Speech and English in the North Newton School Corporation. Her commitment to students is obvious. As a professional educator, Brenda works closely with her students during and after school, ensuring that they do their best. Her colleagues know her as a dedicated teacher because she puts so much time into coaching the speech team, serving as a Building Representative, and fighting for the improvement of education.

Dennis Keithley teaches Language Arts at Lowell Middle School and has been a teacher within the Tri-Creek School Corporation for 31 years. Dennis graduated from Lowell High School and returned to teach in Lowell where his family has lived for many years. Dennis is a true champion of his students. He attends sporting events, music programs, drama productions, and graduation exercises in support of the students. Not only does Dennis care about his students, he also cares about his co-workers. Dennis has worked tirelessly for the Tri-Creek Teachers Organization by serving as its co-president for the last eight years. Additionally, he has served on the negotiating team, the high school air quality committee, the retirement benefits committee, the finance committee, and the teacher's evaluation committee. Dennis' dedication to the profession of teaching is exemplary.

Martin Kessler teaches math in the School Town of Highland. He has been a dedicated teacher to all of his students for the past 31 years. His sense of humor and teaching style has withstood the test of time. He is an entertainer as much as an educator and the kids love it! Martin makes learning math fun even for students who have had difficulty in the past. Through his caring attitude, Martin exhibits a great deal of thoughtfulness towards both student and teachers. He is involved in the local Indiana Teacher's Association and always supports his fellow teachers with action, not just words.

Marilyn Qualls from the Lake Central School Corporation always puts kids first. Throughout her career as an elementary teacher she has made personal sacrifices of time and effort to make sure each child in her classroom succeeds. Additionally, as a Building Representative, member of the District Council, and part of the bargaining team, she has always represented the teachers to the best of her ability. Marilyn is a continuous source of enthusiasm for her students and others as well.

For the past 20 years, Martiann Rectenwall has been an asset to the Hanover Community School Corporation. She creates interesting and innovative lessons that inspire her students to reach their fullest potential. Martiann inspires creative thought and promotes higher level thinking skills in all of her lessons. Her colleagues know her as a dedicated teacher since she puts so much time into developing special projects for her students. For Martiann, working extra hours or creating new teaching strategies to help her students achieve is not unusual.

Sharron Thornton from Lake Central School Corporation is truly a devoted educator. Throughout her 25 years career at Peifer Elementary School, she has trained numerous student teachers. Her guidance is very important because of her methods of dealing with children and academics. She strives to be approachable and communicates well with administrators, fellow teachers, students and parents. Her special inner core of education-related beliefs and opinions are well received and respected.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my distinguished colleagues to join me in commending these outstanding educators on their receipt of the 1999–2000 Crystal Apple Award. The years of hard work they have put forth in shaping the minds and futures of Northwest Indiana's young people is a true inspiration to us all.

IN CELEBRATION OF THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF CARTERSVILLE, GEORGIA

HON. BOB BARR

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this year, Cartersville, Georgia celebrates its 150th anniversary. The beautiful city of Cartersville is nestled in the foothills of the North Georgia mountains in Bartow County, about 45 minutes north of Atlanta. The low rolling mountains, green forest and waters of the Etowah River and Lake Allatoona help to create one of the most picturesque communities in the state of Georgia.

More impressive even than its geography, is the tremendous spirit of community involvement that is obvious to visitors and long-time residents alike. To visitors accustomed to the hustle and bustle of big city life a few miles away, Cartersville and its surrounding area provide a welcome change of scenery, peace and attitude.

The Cartersville we know and love today exists because of its citizens, past and present, who have shaped its development for the past 15 decades. Before the War Between the States, Cartersville and the surrounding area was characterized by a predominantly agrarian community, along with substantial iron mining and railroad interests. Unfortunately, like many other communities in the South, Cartersville and the surrounding county of Bartow, were devastated by the war and its immediate aftermath.

However, unlike some other areas, the people of Cartersville were quick to adapt to changing conditions, and managed to fashion an economically powerful community; coupling mining and farming with a thriving industrial base. Opportunities abounded for the business climate, largely because of the work ethic of its people, and its excellent schools.

Over the decades, Cartersville and Bartow County have continued to be a magnet for top-notch businesses; such as Shaw Carpets, Goodyear Tires, Phoenix Air, Dellinger Management, Emory-Cartersville Medical Center, Glad Trash Bags, and Anheuser-Bush, to name a few. Businesses have found Cartersville to be an ideal community in which to locate. Tourism is also a major component of the local economy, and of special interest are Lake Allatoona and the Etowah Indian Mounds; evidence that Native Americans once lived and thrived in this area.

Numerous leaders in American life, outside of the business sphere, have ties to Cartersville. In addition to giving America congressmen and military leaders, Cartersville has given Georgia former Governor Joe Frank Harris and current Georgia Supreme Court Chief Justice Robert Benham. In sports, baseball and horse racing, greats trace their origin to Cartersville. Finally, in the literary field, World War I correspondent Corra Harris, and humor columnist Bill Arp counted Cartersville as their home.

HEALTH CARE PREMIUM PAY CONVERSION FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES AND RETIREES

HON. THOMAS M. DAVIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, today introduced a new piece of legislation that will help Federal employees and retirees better afford health care.

The bill, which is titled the Federal Employees Health Insurance Premium Conversion Act, greatly expands a program already being utilized by several branches of the federal government. Under this bill, all current legislative branch employees, uniformed service employees, and all military and civilian retirees and their spouses would be able to have their health care premiums paid out of their pre-tax earnings.

Mr. Speaker, under this plan, which is already available to judicial branch and postal employees and will soon be available to all executive branch employees, federal workers who have previously struggled to pay their health care premiums will find that task just a little easier every month. Federal Retirees and their families, many of whom are on a fixed income, will also be able to pay their health care premiums without spending their entire months budget.

In short, Mr. Speaker, this bill will help federal employees compensate for the discrepancies between their pay and the private sector. It will further help us recognize the contributions made by federal retirees and allow them and their families afford health care.

In closing, I would ask all my colleagues to join me in support of this bill, and help get it passed so it can begin helping the people who need it the most as soon as possible.

BUSINESS CHECKING MODERNIZATION ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. WALTER B. JONES

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, today I support H.R. 4067, the "Business Checking Modernization Act" and urge my House colleagues who will be conferees negotiating with the Senate on this important legislation, to work for the inclusion of two specific provisions in any Conference Report.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4067 repeals certain banking laws to allow banks to pay interest on commercial checking accounts. The House of Representatives passed very similar legislation on October 9, 1998 by a unanimous vote. However, that legislation also included a key provision—allowing the Federal Reserve to pay interest on "sterile reserves". This feature should be added to H.R. 4067 because the bill as currently drafted would establish additional reservable accounts without providing for the payment of interest on sterile reserves required by the Federal Reserve for those accounts. In effect, the bill imposes new costs on banks without providing a way to offset those new expenses.

In addition, the bill currently before the House includes a phase-in period of three years before the law is changed to allow banks to pay interest on commercial checking accounts. While the bill passed in 1998 included a longer transition period than the current version before the House, a transition period of no less than three years is critical because the bill will be significantly changing the way banks have conducted their relationships with their customers. Under current law, banks have structured relationships with their business customers taking into account the prohibition against the payment of interest on commercial checking accounts. Banks frequently provide a variety of other services, and a sufficient transition period is needed to allow banks the opportunity to enter into new relationships with their commercial customers.

H.R. 4067 provides a three-year transition period, which I strongly urge my colleagues who negotiate the Conference Report to retain. Any shorter period would place an undue hardship on current banking customer relationships. I understand that House Banking Committee Chairman LEACH is supportive of these provisions, and I urge my colleagues to include these important provisions in any Conference Report, and reject any effort to shorten the transition period of three years in the bill.

IN HONOR OF JUDGE EDDIE CORRIGAN OF THE CLEVELAND MUNICIPAL HOUSING COURT

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I honor Judge Eddie Corrigan who served on the Cleveland Municipal Housing Court for eight years in the late 1980's and early 1990's. He was a brilliant jurist.

After graduating from Yale University, Judge Corrigan served in the Army infantry in the Pacific during WWII, where he held the rank of lieutenant. He later earned a law degree from the Western Reserve Law School in 1949 and opened a law practice in Painesville, Ohio in 1950.

He realized early that people needed to be challenged in order to get the point, and he quickly became a master at this. His wit and wisdom added a sudden spark to often-routine court proceedings. Quick with a quip, insightful and incredibly perceptive, Judge Corrigan was a true spark plug in the court room. He was Cleveland's most entertaining legal venue. Judge Corrigan, who legally changed his given name of Edward to Eddie in 1980, saying it sounded more American. His unconventional approach to life was a breath of fresh air to the city of Cleveland, Ohio and to its Municipal Housing Court. Judge Corrigan managed to live an extraordinarily full life and raise a wonderful family, including his wife of 33 years, seven children and ten grandchildren, in the process. He has become a Cleveland icon and an inspiration to us all. He will be missed.

I ask you, fellow colleagues, to join me in honoring this unique and brilliant man, Judge Eddie Corrigan of the Cleveland Municipal Housing Court.

HONORING THE NORTH PARK MIDDLE SCHOOL BAND FROM PICO RIVERA, CALIFORNIA

HON. GRACE F. NAPOLITANO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the outstanding achievements of the North Park Middle School Band from Pico Rivera, California. Time and again this forty-eight member marching band, through the leadership of director Ron Wakefield, concert master Karen Panganiban, drum major Jannette Aldana, assistant concert master Marytza Padilla, and administrative assistant Lou Diaz, have demonstrated a will, drive, and dedication whose efforts demand our respect and admiration.

The North Park Middle School band has performed in parades and concerts in Florida, Hawaii and Mexico, and their accolades encompass more than a hundred sweepstakes awards in parade competition. They were the first and are still the only middle school band to ever participate in the Pasadena Tournament of Roses Parade.

Today, I am overjoyed to announce that these young men and women will be performing at the National Band Festival in Carnegie Hall on April 21, 2000. It is the only middle school band to have been selected to perform with high school and college bands throughout the country. Next year, they will be performing in Vancouver, British Columbia, and the following spring, they will be our ambassadors of music at a concert in St. Paul's Cathedral in England.

The awards and honors that have been bestowed upon this amazing group of individuals enkindles in our community a sense of pride and happiness. These achievements have been made despite great financial adversities. The student musicians at North Park Middle School are a beacon of hope to schools throughout the country, because they have demonstrated that the arts must be an integral part of every school curriculum. They are also deserving of our highest commendation for their outstanding efforts in raising $80,000 so that we might enjoy their illustrious performances.

It is my very great honor to recognize the North Park Middle School Band for their tireless efforts, dedication, and commitment. They are an inspiration to all of us.

THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF

HON. TOM BLILEY

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, today in remembrance of the Armenian Genocide of 1915–1923, we protect the memory of the Armenian Genocide that began over 85 years ago.

Throughout my tenure in Congress, I have taken to the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives to urge my colleagues to recognize the genocide of the Armenian people at the hands of the Ottoman Turks. I continue that tradition again.

In the shadow of World War I, the Ottoman Turk Government embarked on a plan to systematically eliminate the Armenian people from their ancestral homeland. The Armenian men who had answered the call to join their country's armed forces were isolated and shot. On orders from the central government, Turkish soldiers rampaged from town to town, brutalizing and butchering the remaining Armenian population. Women and children were then forced on a death-march into the Syrian desert. By the end of the war, the Ottoman Turks had been successful in exterminating 2 out of every 3 Armenians. A million and a half Armenians had perished at the hands of the Ottoman Turks.

Henry Morgenthau, Sr., then United States Ambassador to Turkey, wrote:

> I am confident that the whole history of the human race contains no such horrible episode as this. The great massacres and persecutions of the past seem almost insignificant when compared to the sufferings of the Armenian race in 1915.

It was only 20 years later that Adolf Hitler asked rhetorically, 'Who remembers the Armenians?' as he began his master plan to annihilate the Jews. Those who fail to remember history are condemned to repeat it.

The years cannot mute the voice of those Armenian survivors whose individual accounts of savagery combine to form a bedrock of irrefutable evidence. Despite the attempts to hide the records and to distort the facts; despite the world's preoccupation with politics and strategy, the truth of the Armenian genocide remains.

The Armenian Genocide marked the beginning of a barbaric practice in the Twentieth Century. Now at the beginning of the Twenty-First Century, it is even more important to remember, and condemn, these horrific crimes against humanity. It is for these reasons that I ask you to support House Resolution 398.

THE IMPORTANCE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION—REMARKS OF DR. HENRY KAUFMAN, CHAIRMAN OF THE INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the Institute of International Education (IIE) held a meeting of its board today here in Washington and also honored a number of individuals for their contributions to international educational and academic exchanges. The IIE is an independent nonprofit organization which is a resource for educators and academic institutions around the world. It was established in the United States shortly after the end of World War I to encourage international education.

The Institute is the administrator of the Fulbright Program, which is our nation's premier public diplomacy initiative, and it provides training and leadership development programs for public and private sector initiatives. The mission of the IIE is to increase the number of students, scholars, and professionals who have the opportunity to study, teach and conduct research outside of their own country and to strengthen and internationalize institutions of higher learning in the United States and abroad.

Mr. Speaker, as the economy of the United States is increasingly integrated into the global economy, as our communications are increasingly instantaneous throughout the world, and as our national security, health, and well-being are increasingly affected by events thousands of miles from our shores, the importance of international education and understanding cannot be underestimated. In this increasingly interconnected world, the role and importance of the IIE likewise has become much more important.

Mr. Speaker, at the luncheon awards ceremony today here on Capitol Hill, Dr. Henry Kaufman, the Chairman of the Board of the Institute of International Education made outstanding remarks about the importance of international education for our nation's economy and for our continued leadership in the world. Dr. Kaufman had a distinguished career spanning a quarter century at Salmon Brothers, where he was Vice-Chairman of Solomon, Inc. After leaving that firm, he established Henry Kaufman and Company in 1988. He is a widely published author on economic and financial issues. In 1989, he became Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the Institute of International Education.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that Dr. Kaufman's particularly important remarks be placed in the RECORD, and I urge my colleagues to give them the serious and thoughtful attention they deserve.

REMARKS OF DR. HENRY KAUFMAN, CHAIRMAN, INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION, APRIL 13, 2000

Ladies and Gentlemen: The Board of Trustees of the Institute of International Education welcome you to this very special gathering here in the Rayburn House Office Building. We are here today to recognize the lives of public service of our two recipients of the Stephen P. Duggan Award for International Understanding.

Our two honorees have spent a portion of their professional lives as educators. Both recognize that the work force for the global economy that will be needed in the decades ahead requires an understanding and appreciation of other countries, other peoples and other cultures. And both recognize that international educational exchange is the best way to achieve that.

Each year, with the support of the Department of State, the Institute of International Education conducts research on the international student mobility. The most recent Open Doors data tells us that last year 114,000 American students pursued some study abroad. That is less than one percent of the students enrolled in our colleges and universities. Most of them studied abroad for one semester or less, and most in countries where English is the native language.

IIE believes that we must do better if we are to retain our position of leadership in this ever more interdependent world. Many of our own educational institutions are equally committed to assuring that their students have a study abroad experience. We are discussing with Members of Congress and their staffs ways that legislatively we may be able to establish programs that would foster student mobility.

The 490,000 foreign students studying here in the U.S. represent a contribution to our economy of some $13 billion. In addition, they internationalize our campuses by bringing their own perspectives to issues encountered in the classroom.

The U.S. share of the market of students studying abroad from throughout the world is shrinking. Many European countries, as well as Australia and New Zealand, are actively recruiting those students. In initiating a push to have universities in the United Kingdom educate a 25 percent share of that market, Prime Minister Tony Blair said as recently as last June: "People who are educated here have a lasting tie to our country. They promote Britain around the world, helping our trade and our diplomacy. It is easier for our executives and our diplomats to do business with people familiar with Britain."

By the same token, those who have studied here have observed an open democratic system of government, have experienced the freedoms we take for granted, have perfected their English language skills and have learned of the economic potential of our country as a trading partner. Their perspectives are informed by their personal experience of American values and the American way of life. They have an understanding and appreciation of the United States that can come only from living here.

COMMEMORATING THE ONE YEAR ANNIVERSARY OF THE TRAGIC ACCIDENT AT THE NAVAL BOMBING RANGE IN VIEQUES

HON. CARLOS A. ROMERO-BARCELÓ

OF PUERTO RICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. ROMERO-BARCELÓ. Mr. Speaker, almost one year ago on April 19, a tragic accident at the Vieques bombing range claimed the life of a civilian employee of the Navy, David Sanes Rodríguez. That tragedy brought to the forefront longstanding concerns for the safety, health and welfare of the 9,300 Americans citizens that reside in Vieques and has been the catalyst for discussions nationwide.

On January 31st, 2000, the Department of the Navy, the Administration and the Governor of Puerto Rico reached an agreement on the future of the range which formed the basis for the Presidential Directives. To underscore their support for the agreement, the Secretary of the Navy, with the approval of the Secretary of Defense, presented to the Congress legislative initiatives that will, first, transfer the Navy land on the western end of Vieques to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico and, second, seek approval for the transfer of $40 million dollars for economic incentives.

With these initiatives, Congress has the opportunity to ensure that national security and military readiness requirements are balanced with the rights, health, safety, and welfare of the American citizens of Vieques, while taking into account their contributions to the national defense.

As the sole elected representative of the four million American residents in Puerto Rico I support the agreement and am joined by Puerto Rico's Legislature, Mayor of Vieques, Governor Rosselló and former Governors Ferré and Hernández Colón.

The past year has been a critical time for all of us and it is my hope, that as we mark this significant anniversary, we can move forward together.

TAX LIMITATION CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

HON. CASS BALLENGER

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the Tax Limitation Amendment 2000 (H.J. Res. 94), introduced by our Republican colleague Representative PETE SESSIONS (R–TX). I firmly believe that we need this amendment to insure that, in virtually every circumstance, a tax increase would require a two-thirds vote in both houses of Congress for final adoption. While this is not a new idea, I believe it is a proposal which deserves our attention and that of the American taxpayers again this year.

Despite the best efforts of the Republican-led 106th Congress to reduce taxes and make the federal tax code fairer for America's hard-working citizens, we cannot count on future Congresses to share our enthusiasm for these reforms—reforms which are strengthening individual citizens' economic opportunities and fueling our nation's record economic growth. We proposed a tax limitation amendment in the fall of 1994 as one component of the Republican's Contract with America, a list of legislative objectives which has guided our policy agenda since the Republican takeover of the House and Senate in 1995. The enactment of H.J. Res. 94 would represent an insurance policy which this Congress should leave as a part of our legacy to our citizens.

H.J. Res. 94 not only seeks to make Congress more fiscally responsible, but it would instill greater public confidence in the tax system. This result has been endorsed by the National Commission on Economic Growth, chaired by former House Member and Republican Vice Presidential nominee Jack Kemp. The amendment would block future major tax increases which resemble President Clinton's 1993 tax increases for example, a bill which cleared the House by only one extra vote and clearly lacked strong bipartisan support. President Clinton's tax hikes are haunting many Americans today, in particular elderly Americans in my congressional district.

The bottom line is that the same super-majority requirement which is applied to major decisions like amending the Constitution and impeaching the President ought to be required for legislation which would take more money out of our constituents' monthly budgets.

HONORING MAJOR BURKS A. VIA, USMC

HON. CHRISTOPHER COX

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, on April 28, 2000, Marine Corps Major Burks A. Via will be laid to rest at Arlington National Cemetery. Major Via was a constituent; and the El Toro Marine Corps Air Station, where he was based for many years during his quarter century of military service, is of special significance to Orange County, CA. It is my honor to bring Major Burks' record to the attention of the 106th Congress as the nation prepares to honor him at Arlington.

Burks Via was born in Roanoke, VA, June 7, 1917. He joined the Marine Corps on his birthday in 1938. After the Royal Canadian Air Force trained him as a pilot, he flew missions in the South Pacific—207 from American Samoa and 40 from Munda, Bougaineville, and Guadalcanal.

Via piloted the first Marine Corps aircraft to land in Hong Kong after end of World War II. As the United States worked for post-war peace and stability in Asia, he served with the First Marine Air Wing in Tsingato, China. When Chinese Communist forces grew stronger, and turned their gun sights to U.S. Marines, he flew the final missions out of Chengchun, Mukden, and Peiping. His service record with the Fleet Marine Force, Western Pacific, from June 1948 to January 1949, includes salutations for ''extensive behind the lines intelligence missions'' against the Communist forces.

In 1949, he was transferred to Cherry Point, NC, the long-time East Coast counterpart to the El Toro Marine Corps Air Station. After duty at the Naval Air Station at Anacostia, where he was promoted to Major, he began a tour in 1953 that took him to El Toro, Hawaii, Japan, and Korea, flying 566 missions. Starting in 1955, Major Via took charge of transport missions for senior U.S. and NATO military officials and diplomats around the world. As Marine Colonel William L. Beach noted in his eulogy on December 17, 1999, Major Via was considered the best VP pilot in the Marine Corps and the Navy. In fact, when President Johnson flew to California to dedicate the University of California at Irvine in 1964, the Marine Corps pilot was asked to back up the President's Air Force One pilot. That same year, Major Burks retired, having logged 14,000 flight hours.

Major Burks served not only his nation, but also his family, and his community. His wife, Shirley, five children, and seven grandchildren, survived him. Orange County will miss him. At Arlington, the nation will honor him. His contributions to freedom in Asia, in Europe, and around the world, and his service to the Marine Corps and the nation, merit our appreciation and our gratitude in Congress.

REMEMBERING THE LATE HONORABLE EDWARD J. SCHWARTZ

HON. RANDY "DUKE" CUNNINGHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, today I honor the late Judge Edward J. Schwartz, who in his life brought honor to his country through distinguished public service in the U.S. Navy and as a judge for the United States District Court for the Southern District of California.

Judge Schwartz graduated from San Francisco Law School and practiced for one year before joining the Navy in 1942. He fought in both the Pacific and European Theaters of war and was released as a Lieutenant Commander in 1945. He was appointed to the bench by President Lyndon Johnson in 1968 and became chief judge in 1969 where he presided over one of the busiest caseloads in the country.

Judge Schwartz possessed the ideal qualities of a judge—wisdom, intellectual curiosity, an incisive mind, integrity, common sense, and a full measure of compassion. His career marks a time of great change in San Diego, from its past as a quiet Navy town, to its present as a dynamic multicultural high-tech community.

He is survived by his wife, Martha Monagan-Hart, his three children, and three grandchildren. Our thoughts and prayers go out to the family of the late Judge Edward J. Schwartz. He will truly be missed.

CELEBRATION OF THE 35TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SERVICE CORPS OF RETIRED EXECUTIVES

HON. TOM BLILEY

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, today I celebrate the 35th anniversary of the Service Corps of Retired Executives (SCORE) Chapter 12 in Richmond, Virginia, SCORE is a group of experienced executives who volunteer their time to help entrepreneurs start up and run a business.

Richmond's SCORE Chapter 12 was established in April 1965 by the U.S. Small Business Administration. Since then, these elder statesmen of central Virginia's small business community have been a resource for small business entrepreneurs, serving as mentors and advisors to the small business community. SCORE Chapter 12 volunteers have conducted over 30,000 free counseling sessions and led business workshops attended by over 10,000 individuals since its establishment 35 years ago. SCORE has made a significant contribution to the economic well being and quality of life in Richmond.

I commend the men and women of SCORE Chapter 12 who volunteer their time and expertise to improve and foster the growth of small business in central Virginia.

IN HONOR OF JEANNE SIMON

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Jeanne Simon, the wife of former Senator Paul Simon of Illinois. Jeanne Simon passed away on February 20th of this year. She was not only a gracious and dutiful politician's wife; Jeanne Simon forged her own career as a lawyer, author, politician, and lobbyist.

Throughout her full life, Jeanne Simon held many roles. She was among the first women to attend law school at Northwestern University. She served as an Illinois State Representative, Chairwoman for the U.S. National Commission on Libraries and Information Science, and was a member of the faculty at Southern Illinois University, where she and her husband helped establish the Public Policy Institute there.

After her marriage to fellow Illinois State Representative Paul Simon in 1960, Jeanne Simon chose not to run for re-election to her third term as State Representative. Instead, she dedicated her time to her husband's campaigns as he was elected State Senator, then Lieutenant Governor, U.S. Representative, and finally U.S. Senator in 1984.

Aside from her notable political career, Jeanne Simon was also a successful author and an authority and spokesperson on varied issues from libraries to education to arms control. Her diverse and dynamic career was an inspiration and her tireless devotion to her country and her government will not be forgotten.

My fellow colleagues, I ask you to join with me in remembering Jeanne Simon, an extraordinary and passionate woman who will be greatly missed.

EDWARD W. RHOADS CHAPTER, KOREAN WAR VETERANS ASSOCIATION

HON. ED PASTOR

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. PASTOR. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to the men and women of the Edward W. Rhoads Chapter of the Korean War Veterans Association in Tuscon, Arizona, who have joined together to honor those who fought in the "Forgotten War." Through personal commitment, they are working to identify veterans of the Korean conflict, especially those who live in or who served from Pima County, Arizona. Their commitment to those who served in Korea has encouraged a rebirth of patriotism and pride for Korean War Veterans. All branches of the United States Military are welcome to participate. The only requirement is that the veteran served on active duty.

The chapter is named for Edward W. Rhoads, Jr., who was the first casualty of the Korean War from Pima County. Mr. Rhoads was in Company G, 19th Infantry Regiment, 24th Infantry Division. He was captured on July 16, 1950, and died in North Korean POW Camp #3. His date of death is listed as December 31, 1951. He is credited with saving the life of one POW during the vicious "Tiger Death March." His story of quiet heroism, suffering and personal sacrifice is one of the many stories that need to be told and remembered of our Korean veterans.

I applaud the efforts of the members of the Edward W. Rhoads Chapter who have created a place where memories and heroic deeds can be shared by those who appreciate them most: the men and women who were there.

In addition, they have created a physical place of remembrance, a war memorial, to honor all who served during the Korean War. The names of the Pima County veterans who gave their lives in Korea will be inscribed on the memorial, which will serve as a reminder of all that duty to and love for one's country are part of our proud American heritage.

May America always be protected by individuals like the Korean War Veterans in the Edward W. Rhoads Chapter. In their youth they gave their vitality and innocence to protect our nation. Today they continue to give their energy and enthusiasm to protect the ideals for which our nation stands. May democracy always have such champions.

HONORING RICHARD B. HARVEY, DISTINGUISHED SERVICE—PROFESSOR OF POLITICAL SCIENCE

HON. LUCILLE ROYBAL-ALLARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Speaker, I am honored today to pay tribute and to congratulate Dr. Richard B. Harvey upon retirement from Whittier College. His educational leadership encouraged countless young students to seek careers in public service.

The inspiration that Dr. Harvey brings to the classroom springs from his commitment to educating students and his belief in the importance of the political process. Dr. Harvey has been an exceptional educator of our youth. He earned a B.A. degree from Occidental College, M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of California, Los Angeles. Within the Whittier educational community, Dr. Harvey participated as a Whittier college assistant dean, a dean of academic affairs and chair of the political science department. In addition to his academic pursuits, Dr. Harvey is also an author, a cohost on television programs, and a radio commentator, delivering political analysis of election results.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing Dr. Richard Harvey best wishes on his retirement. His dedication and commitment to teaching California politics has earned him the respect of our citizens.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. SAM JOHNSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, due to a scheduling conflict I was unavoidably detained and missed rollcall vote 115. Had I been present I would have voted ''aye'' on H.R. 4051, Project Exile: The Safe Streets and Neighborhoods Act of 2000. This bill would establish a grant program that provides incentives for States to enact mandatory minimum sentences for certain firearm offenses.

TRIBUTE TO MARTY RUBIN

HON. JULIAN C. DIXON

OF CALIFORNIA

HON. LUCILLE ROYBAL-ALLARD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. DIXON. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of myself and my colleague Congresswoman LUCILLE ROYBAL-ALLARD, I rise today to pay tribute to Marty Rubin, who after 44 years with the engineering firm of Parsons, Brinckerhoff Quade & Douglas, Inc., is retiring as Chairman Emeritus with a rich legacy of work on transit, highway, bridge, and other public works projects across the nation. From his extensive involvement in the Los Angeles Metro Rail System to his engineering guidance on the Long Beach Blue Line and the Green Line light rail systems, Marty's impact on the infrastructure of Los Angeles has been particularly profound. His friends and associates will gather to honor Marty on April 26 for the crucial role he played in the development of Los Angeles County's transportation system.

Marty Rubin's vision, energy, and wisdom in providing project planning, programming, designing, managing, engineering, and constructing support are recognized by public agencies nationwide. The numerous national transportation infrastructure projects outside of Los Angeles which have benefited from his expertise include San Francisco BART; the Honolulu Rapid Transit Program; the Aviation Parkway in Tucson; the California State Route 91 and State Route 126 Widening projects; the California 1–215 Corridor improvements; the Richmond-Petersburg Turnpike, Virginia; the Garden State Parkway, New Jersey; the Grand Central Parkway; and the New York Belt Parkway.

Marty's peers in the transportation industry and public transportation agencies around the country recognize Marty Rubin as a man of unparalleled integrity. For his efforts to promote minority opportunities in engineering throughout southern California, Marty Rubin has been recognized by the Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers for his leadership. Among the honors he has received is the 1998 Milton Pikarsky Distinguished Leadership Award in Transportation from the School of Engineering from the City College in New York.

Marty Rubin has made an immeasurable contribution to the improvement of mobility for the residents of Los Angeles County and the generations of residents to follow. We are proud to call him our friend, and ask our colleagues in the House to join us in commending this accomplished engineer for his services to the nation's transportation infrastructure and wishing him well in his retirement.

THE ATOMIC WORKERS COMPENSATION ACT

HON. TOM UDALL

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, today I speak about the issue of worker compensation. Today, the administration, Secretary Richardson, President Clinton, and Vice President Gore announced a worker compensation program for workers at the national laboratories all across this country.

Workers have worked at these nuclear establishments and plants for many years, and many of them have been injured as a result. This has been a very sad chapter in the history of the United States. The Department now acknowledges these occupational exposures and has decided to turn over a new leaf. I rise today to introduce legislation that deals with this situation. In New Mexico, about 3 weeks ago, I attended a hearing in my district where workers came forward; they talked about how patriotic they were. They talked about how they were serving their country for many, many years, and as a result of their work they believed they came down with cancers, with beryllium disease, with asbestosis, with a variety of other illnesses. These were very heart wrenching stories.

Among the New Mexicans who shared their testimony is Mr. Jonathan Garcia, who worked at Los Alamos National Laboratory for over 16 years. Mr. Garcia has radiation-induced leukemia. Mr. Garcia has been robbed of his health, but not his dignity.

Gene Westerhold worked for over 44 years cleaning up plutonium and hazardous chemicals for Los Alamos National Laboratory. Mr. Westerhold was told at one point that he was prohibited from working in certain areas due to his high radiation exposures. Yet, when he sought information of his exposure history, he was told his records were lost, Mr. Westerhold is a survivor.

Ms. Darleen Ortiz, whose father died of cancer after having spent his life cleaning up toxic materials at Los Alamos, is a survivor. Ms. Hugette Sirgant, a widow of a Los Alamos National Laboratory employee, has bravely taken on the role and responsibility as an advocate for both victims and survivors.

And lastly, Mr. Tómas Archuleta was exposed to beryllium, plutonium, asbestos, solvents, toxic metals and hazardous chemicals. Mr. Garcia, Mr. Westerhold, Mr. Archuleta, Ms. Oritz, and Ms. Sirgant are survivors. These brave people have asked for my help in crafting legislation that would help them.

Today, I introduced a piece of legislation that will be comprehensive. It will deal with all of the injuries that occurred and that were talked about at the Los Alamos hearing. It is comprehensive in the sense that it will cover beryllium; it will cover radiation. It will cover asbestos, and it will cover the chemicals that these workers were exposed to.

Under this legislation, the workers will be able to come forward to demonstrate their exposure and their illness in a program similar to the Workman's Compensation program that is in place for the Federal Government.

My legislation will also provide that during the 120 day period while their claim is pending, Los Alamos National Laboratory workers will be able to get health care for their ailments related to their workplace exposures free of charge at the nearest Veterans Hospital.

And the burden is on the government, because many of these individuals came forward and talked about how they had worked their whole life, and they knew they were exposed, but then, when they asked for their records, there were no records. Their records were lost. So under those circumstances, we clearly have to put the burden on the Government.

Although my bill is specifically directed to New Mexico, I know there are many other of my colleagues around the country that have this same situation in their districts. They are Democrats and Republicans and all areas of the United States are affected. So I think this is a great issue for us to join together in a bipartisan way, and I urge my colleagues to work together to craft a solution to this problem at the national level.

The reason I think it is so important is that these workers were true patriots. They were people that loved their country, cared about their country, and worked for their country at a critical time for us. We now need to do something for them.

THE REVEREND DR. ERROL A. HARVEY

HON. NYDIA M. VELÁZQUEZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize a man whose faith defined his character and whose character is considered a model for modern social justice.

Mr. Speaker, Helen Keller once said, "Character cannot be developed in ease and quiet. Only through experience of trial and suffering can the soul be strengthened, ambition inspired, and success achieved."

The Reverend Dr. Errol A. Harvey was born in the great city of Grand Rapids, Michigan in 1943. As the second of four sons born to Fred and Elizabeth Harvey, young Errol lived in Grand Rapids until 1965 when he graduated from Aquinas College with a degree in history and political science.

However, Errol, whose character was shaped at a very early age by the death of his dear mother Elizabeth, decided to answer the call of his faith and his God. Father Harvey entered Seabury-Western Theological Seminary and received a Bachelor's of Divinity degree in 1969. His work as a Catholic Priest took him from the Trinity Cathedral Church in Newark, New Jersey to Dorchester, Massachusetts to the infamous Bronx in New York.

And in every area in which he has lived, worked and taught, Father Harvey has left a legacy of community leadership, social justice and acted as a tireless champion of those who are less fortunate.

For instance, while Vicar of St. Andrew's Church in the Bronx, Father Harvey was instrumental in building St. Andrew's House, a 75 unit apartment complex for senior citizens and the physically challenged. St. Andrew's House became a beacon in a community long known as one of the poorest areas in New York City and in America.

Throughout his life, Father Harvey, armed with the courage of his convictions and the strength of his character, became a pioneer in the fight against homelessness, police brutality, labor exploitation and worldwide human rights abuses. He has fought against racial injustice and has been a vocal advocate for people with disabilities and those suffering from AIDS.

Today, Father Harvey continues to serve his adopted home of New York City as a member of the Board of Directors of Housing Works, Inc, the largest provider of housing and services for people with AIDS.

And while he has never sought out praise or any kind of honor, Father Harvey has been honored with such esteemed honors as the Outstanding Service Award from the Council of Churches of the City of New York and The Reverend Patrick D. Walker Leadership Award given by the Black Caucus of the Dioceses of New York.

And today, we honor Father Harvey one more time. Not with a glowing award or gold statue, but with a simple "Thank You and God Bless You Father."

DRUG PRICE COMPETITION IN THE WHOLESALE MARKETPLACE

HON. JO ANN EMERSON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mrs. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation that will preserve drug price competition in the wholesale marketplace, prevent the destruction of thousands of small businesses across America and avoid a possible disruption in the national distribution of prescription drugs to nursing homes, doctors offices, rural clinics, veterinary practices and other pharmaceutical end users. As befitting such legislation, I am pleased to note that this bill has cosponsors from both political parties, a number of different committees and many different areas of the country.

Our objective is to prevent and correct the unintended consequences to prescription drug wholesalers of a Final Rule on the Prescription Drug Marketing Act (PDMA) issued by the Food and Drug Administration in December, 1999. This regulation will require all wholesalers who do not purchase drugs directly from a manufacturer to provide their customers with a complete and very detailed history of all prior sales of the products all the way back to the original manufacturer. Absent such sales history, it will be illegal for wholesalers to resell such drugs. But in a true "Catch 22" fashion, the regulation does not require either the manufacturer or the wholesaler who buys directly from the manufacturer to provide this sales history to the subsequent wholesaler. In addition, the wholesaler who does not purchase directly from a manufacturer has no practical way of obtaining all the FDA required information needed to legally resell RX drugs. The result of this rule will be that most small wholesalers will be driven out of business. The FDA has estimated that there are about 4,000 such secondary wholesalers who are small businesses.

The FDA's Final Rule will also upset the competitive balance between drug manufacturers on the one hand and wholesalers and retailers on the other by granting the manufacturers the right to designate which resellers are "authorized" and which are not, quite apart from whether the reseller buys directly from the manufacturer or not. The original intent of the PDMA was that wholesalers who purchase directly from manufacturers be authorized distributors, exempt from the requirement to provide the sales history information to their customers. However, the FDA's regulation has separated the designation of an authorized distributor from actual sales of product, and will allow manufacturers to charge higher prices to wholesalers in exchange for designating them as authorized distributors. Drug price competition will also be significantly reduced if thousands of secondary wholesalers are driven out of business. The result of the FDA's regulation will be that consumers and taxpayers will pay even higher prices for prescription drugs.

Seems to me that the FDA is protecting the drug companies at the expense of the American public at a time when these companies must be encouraged to lower their outrageous prices so that our seniors and others in need can afford to pay for their medicine.

Thus, while the Congress wrestles with difficult questions regarding drug pricing for seniors, expanded insurance coverage for prescription drugs and the like, the PDMA Rules is a drug pricing issue that is relatively uncomplicated, easy to solve and not expensive.

The bill would make minor changes in existing language to correct the two problems described above. First, the bill would define an authorized distributor as a wholesaler who purchases directly from a manufacturer, making the definition self-implementing and removing the unfair advantage given to the manufacturer by the regulation. Secondly, the bill will add language to the statute which will greatly simplify the detailed sales history requirement for most wholesalers. If prescription drugs are first sold to or through an authorized distributor, subsequent unauthorized resellers will have to provide written certifications of this fact to their customers, but will not have to provide the very detailed and unobtainable sales history. For any product not first sold to or through an authorized distributor, a reseller would have to provide the detailed and complete sales history required by the FDA Rule. This would protect consumers against foreign counterfeits or any drugs which did not enter the national distribution system directly from the manufacturer, while eliminating a burdensome and expensive paperwork requirement on thousands of small businesses which has no real health or safety benefit in today's system of drug distribution.

My cosponsors and I invite and encourage Members to add their names to this bill and look forward to its prompt enactment this year. Unless the FDA regulation is reopened and significantly modified by the agency, overturned in court or, as I hope, corrected by this bill, wholesalers will have to start selling off their existing inventories as early as May because the products will be unsalable when the regulation goes into effect in December 2000. This forced inventory liquidation will be accompanied by an absence of new orders by thousands of wholesalers, and the result could easily be disruptions in the supply of prescription drugs to many providers and end users. Let us then move quickly to fix this problem and save consumers, taxpayers and thousands of small business men and women across the land from higher drug prices, potential health problems due to supply interruptions and significant economic loss and unemployment.

THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF

HON. LORETTA SANCHEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, I am paying tribute and joining my colleagues in commemorating the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. As many of you know, on April 24, 1915, a group of 200 Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were arrested and murdered, marking the beginning of the first genocide of this century. Over the next 8 years, 1.5 million Armenians were massacred and over 500,000 survivors were exiled in an attempt to eliminate the Armenian population in the Ottoman Empire. Several were deported from areas as far north as the Black Sea and as far west as European Turkey to concentration camps. In addition to being deprived of their homeland, their freedom, and their dignity, many Armenians died of starvation, thirst, and epidemic disease in horrendous concentration camps.

Unfortunately, 85 years after the beginning of this terrible period in the history of humanity, the Turkish Government refuses to acknowledge the truth about its past. As a member of the House Armed Services Committee and the Armenian Caucus, I have supported efforts to recognize the Armenian Genocide. I feel it is imperative that we show respect and remembrance to those victims and encourage Turkey to do the same. By remembering this crime against humanity, we honor those who perished and serve notice on all governments that such crimes will not be forgotten.

TRIBUTE TO MILTON J. WALLACE, COMMUNITY HERO

HON. CARRIE P. MEEK

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to pay tribute to one of my community's unsung heroes, Attorney Milton J. Wallace. On May 10, 2000, 12:00 noon, at the Miami Inter-Continental Hotel the Miami-Dade Affordable Housing Foundation will host its First Annual Housing Heroes Awards Luncheon to honor him for his many years of dedication and service under the aegis of the affordable housing movement.

Born to Mark and Regina Wallace in New Jersey on December 17, 1935, Milton Wallace was the only child who came to grace this loving couple. His family moved to Miami in 1949, and he subsequently attended the University of Miami, obtaining his bachelor's degree in 1956 with summa cum laude, the highest distinction awarded to any graduate. In 1959 he obtained his law degree, and was inducted as a member of the Iron Arrow—the august group of Hurricane alumni who have gone above and beyond the call of duty in upholding the honor and glory of their Alma Mater.

A Certified Public Accountant since 1957, he has also been a Member of the Florida Bar since 1959 and a Licensed General Contractor in Florida since 1969. Mr. Wallace became a City of Miami Judge from 1961 to 1963, and served as Florida's Assistant Attorney General from 1965 to 1970. He moved on to hold the position of General Counsel to the Florida Securities Commission, which soon became the Division of Securities within the office of Comptroller of the State of Florida.

Happily married to his wife Patricia since 1963, he is blessed with two sons, Mark who is 32 and Hardy, age 22. While his affiliations with many corporations and civic organizations are many, Milton Wallace takes ample pride in representing the noblest of our community. As a Director and founding member of the Miami-Dade Affordable Housing foundation, Inc., he has resiliently dedicated a major portion of his life to making the justice system work on behalf of the less fortunate.

He wisely chose the challenge of ensuring home ownership as an affordable and accessible right for countless ordinary citizens who have done and are doing their fair share in contributing to the good of our community. Long before anyone ever thought of hastening the dream of affordable housing into reality, Milton Wallace was relentless in his creativity and resourcefulness deeply aware of the fact that this project was well worth his effort. His focus saliently maximized his insight, understanding and commitment to those who lack the financial wherewithal to fulfill their wish of someday owning their dream house.

Under his leadership many lives have been saved and countless families have been rendered whole because the opportunity of accessing affordable housing has been expedited. He was the proverbial lone voice in the wilderness in exposing his righteous indignation over the harrowing difficulties of hard-working individuals who just could not cut through the labyrinth of banking regulations impacting housing loans that are truly affordable. At the same time, he has been forthright and forceful in advocating the tenets of equal treatment under the law for the poor who often are unfairly subjected to extensive red-tape and bureaucracy. To this very day his commitment toward them remains firm.

Accordingly, I will join my community in honoring him as a genuine leader whose dedication to affordable housing for all serves as an example of the difference each of us can make on behalf of the less fortunate. Single-handedly he has championed a career-long commitment to affordable housing for all of America's families. As the noble gadfly that he represents, he is one to goad his colleagues toward a more hopeful life for our community's ordinary working families. Milton Wallace thoroughly understands the accouterments of power and leadership, sagely exercising them alongside the mandate of his conviction and the wisdom of his knowledge, and focusing his energies on the well-being of a community he has learned to love and care for so deeply.

His being honored as the recipient of the First Annual Housing Heroes Awards truly evokes the unequivocal testimony of the respect and admiration he enjoys from our community. Milton Wallace indeed exemplifies a visionary whose courage and perseverance in the face of overwhelming odds appeal to our noblest character. This tribute dignifies his role as a community servant par excellence who gives credence to the generosity and optimism in the American spirit. Indeed, he will always serve as our indelible reminder of the nobility of commitment and the lasting power of public service.

On behalf of a grateful community, I truly salute him, and I wish him the best!

INTRODUCTION OF THE IDENTITY THEFT PREVENTION ACT OF 2000

HON. DARLENE HOOLEY

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the bipartisan Identity Theft Prevention Act of 2000. Identity theft has become the latest coast to coast crime wave. This bill includes common sense measures that will allow consumers to work with creditors and credit bureaus to combat this growing problem.

Identity theft occurs whenever someone uses your name, social security number, mothers maiden name, or any personally identifiable information to purchase goods or services—usually with credit cards. Victims of identity theft never realize they are victims until they receive a bill in the mail, or even worse, a notice from a collection agency for a purchase they never made on a credit card in their name that they don't even own.

While credit issuers have been willing to refund fraudulent charges, victims are still faced with problems of ruined or destroyed credit, the time commitments of redeeming their name with multiple credit bureaus and credit issuers, and the fear and anxiety associated with knowing that someone is using all of their personal information to charge any manner of goods. As a result of identity theft, victims have been turned down for jobs, mortgages, and other important extensions of credit.

Identity theft is a growing problem. Just look at the following statistics: Trans Union credit bureau's fraud victim assistance unit received just 35,235 complaints in 1992 but in 1997 received 522,922. That's a 1,400 percent increase! The Privacy Rights Clearing House estimates that there will be 400,000 to 500,000 new cases of ID fraud this year and the Federal Trade Commission's 1–800 number for ID theft receives an average of 400 calls a week from people like my constituent Paul LaLiBerte, from Clackamas, Oregon, who has been a victim of identity theft twice. One of those thousands of calls stated, "Someone is using my name and social security number to open credit card accounts. All the accounts are in collections. I had no idea this was happening until I applied for a mortgage. Because these "bad" accounts showed up on my credit report, I didn't get the mortgage." May 18, 1999.

This bill attempts to address these problems by empowering consumers and asking creditors and credit bureaus to do their part to combat fraud.

For instance, the bill requires that any time a creditor receives a change of address form, the creditor send back a confirmation to both the new and the old addresses. That way, if a thief attempts to change your billing address so you won't find out about fraudulent charges—you'll know.

The bill also requires credit bureaus to investigate discrepancies in addresses, to make sure that the address for the consumer that they have on file is not the address provided by the identity thief.

This bill codifies the practice of placing fraud alerts on a consumer's credit file and gives the Federal Trade Commission the authority to impose fines against credit issuers that ignore the alert. Too many credit issuers are presently ignoring fraud alerts to the detriment of identity theft victims. It also requires that fraud alerts are placed on all information reported by a credit bureau, including credit scores. Often when a credit score is issued without a full report, the fraud alert does not show up.

This legislation also gives consumers more access to the personal information collected about them, which is a critical tool in combating identity theft, by requiring that every consumer across the nation have access to one free credit report annually. Currently, six States—Colorado, Georgia, Massachusetts, Maryland, Vermont, and New Jersey—have such statutes. This act makes one free credit report a national requirement. In addition, consumers could review the personal information collected about them by individual reference services. With greater access to their own personal information, consumers can proactively check their records for evidence of identity theft and uncover other errors.

The bill also restricts the type of information a credit bureau can sell to marketers to your name and address only. Currently credit bureaus can sell such personally identifiable information as your social security number or mother's maiden name. This sensitive information would be treated under this bill like any other part of the credit report, with its disclosure restricted to businesses needing the data for extensions of credit, employment applications, insurance applications, or other permissible purposes.

I am introducing the Identity Theft Prevention Act with Representative STEVE LATOURETTE (R–OH) and twelve other cosponsors. This bill has been endorsed by Public Citizen and the Privacy Rights Clearinghouse, and is a companion bill to S. 2328 offered by Senators FEINSTEIN, KYL, and SHELBY. It is my hope that the House Banking Committee will take up consideration of this bill and that we can soon bring it to the floor for a vote by the entire Congress.

LEGISLATION TO REINFORCE ANTITRUST LAWS

HON. DAVID MINGE

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. MINGE. Mr. Speaker, following is a summary of my legislation.

A bill to reinforce our antitrust laws by focusing on three main issues:

(1) Broadening our antitrust laws: Antitrust violators should be liable to all injured persons, whether the damages are direct or indirect. Under current federal law, only direct parties have the right to a remedy for antitrust harm. By broadening the scope of persons who can demand reparations for harm caused by antitrust violators, without relying on government bureaucracies to do it for them, our antitrust laws can be more effective.

(2) Modernizing antitrust enforcement: This bill increases the maximum fines from $10 million to $100 million to reflect the magnitude of today's economy and potential damages from anti-competitive activity. Moreover, megamergers create heavy workload for the agencies responsible for their approval. The pre-merger notification filing fee structure is changed to reflect that.

(3) Addressing concentration in agribusiness: Growing concentration in food processing and distribution has been accompanied by low farm income and the loss of thousands of farmers. The weakening bargaining power of farmers and the potential market power of suppliers, processors and other intermediaries has been accompanied by record earnings. Moreover, the benefits of low farm prices are not passed on to American consumers; food prices are not declining. This bill creates a commission to study this troublesome situation. This bill also clarifies the Packers and Stockyards Act to ensure that small producers are not discriminated against and establishes a senior official position for agriculture at the Antitrust Division of the DOJ.

THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

SPEECH OF

HON. MARTIN T. MEEHAN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. MEEHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to commemorate the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. The actual date the anniversary will be observed is April 24, but I rise today while we are in session to pay my solemn respects to the innocent fallen and add my words to history's record of one of the most terrible tragedies known to mankind.

On April 24, 1915, a group of Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were arrested in the city then known as Constantinople, taken to the interior of Turkey, and murdered. What followed from there was nothing less than the systematic deprivation of Armenians living under Ottoman rule of their homes, property, freedom, and lives. The tragic toll of its dark period in world history includes the death of 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children and the deportation of 500,00 others. Before their tragic deaths, countless Armenian women were subject to unspeakable cruelties, in the form of sexual abuse and slavery.

History is not condemned to repeat itself. We can prevent future tragedies by acknowledging, remembering, and commemorating yesterday's tragedies. Unfortunately, the Turkish Government still refuses to admit its involvement in the Armenian Genocide, and even the current U.S. administration has not fully acknowledged the extent of the wrongdoing between 1915 and 1923. That is why we must make our voices heard. History's record must reflect the truth of what the Armenians experienced: mass murder and genocide. If it does not, only then are we condemned to a future littered with more instances of unspeakable wickedness and cruelty.

My congressional district contains a large and vibrant Armenian-American community, which has contributed so much to the Merrimack Valley's economic vitality and culture. When today's Armenian-American community commemorates the Armenian Genocide, they convey the message to the world that only the continued vigilance of people of good conscience stands between peaceful human coexistence and another instance of genocide.

My respect for my Armenian-American constituents and for their commitment to remembering past tragedy and preventing future tragedy compels me to rise and speak today. It compels me to add my voice to those who speak out against hatred and fear. It should compel us all to remember past horrors, lest they happen again.

READING DEFICIT ELIMINATION ACT

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced the Reading Deficit Elimination Act (RDEA), which is an important step in ensuring that every American has the ability to read. I am also pleased that Senator PAUL COVERDELL (R–GA) is introducing an identical bill today in the Senate.

According to statistics from the National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP), 74 percent of third graders remain poor readers when they reach the ninth grade. Overall, 40 percent of fourth-graders are reading at the "below basic" level. The National Adult Literacy Survey, as many as 50 million adults have only minimal reading skills. This situation is absolutely unacceptable.

Yesterday, we passed a resolution in my committee to make good on our commitment to fully fund the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA). This legislation is consistent with our efforts to provide funding for special education. It is estimated that as many as 2 million students who are placed in special education are there simply because they haven't been taught to read.

The National Institute for Child Health and Human Development tells us that 90 percent to 95 percent of these students could learn to read and be returned to their regular classrooms if they were given instruction based on the finding of scientific research.

Just this morning, the National Reading Panel released its report on "Teaching Children to Read," in both the Senate and the House. The message we heard confirms what we have known for years: Teaching children to read is essential if they are to be successful in life. We now have scientific research that shows us the way once again.

Based on findings of more than 35 years of research, the Panel reports the following ingredients of what students need to learn if they are to read proficiently:

Phonemic Awareness—letters represent sounds.

Systematic phonics instruction—a necessary, but not sufficient, component of learning to read.

Reading Fluency–rapid decoding of words, practiced until it is automatic.

Spelling–accurate spelling, not the invented kind.

Writing Clearly–which leads to developing good reading comprehension skills.

I believe if we are to eliminate the reading deficit, then it is necessary for students to be taught all of these necessary skills.

Complimentary to the legislation being introduced today is the Literacy Involves Families Together (LIFT) Bill, which I am pleased is part of the Reading Deficit Elimination Act. In addition, Republicans pushed to pass the Reading Excellence Act, which was signed into law by the president in 1998. It is helping teachers in low-income areas and in schools where there is a high illiteracy rate to apply the scientific principles of reading instruction in the classroom.

When President John Kennedy launched Project Apollo in 1962, and set a goal of sending a man to the moon by the end of the decade, all America cheered. That goal was met when Neil Armstrong set foot on the moon in July of 1969.

Our determination to eliminate the reading deficit is no less challenging than going to the moon, and it is equally achievable. For the sake of our children, and the future of our nation, we must not let them down.

I hope we can come together as a nation to cheer on the elimination of the reading deficit for all our children. The Reading Deficit Elimination Act is an important step in that direction.

TRIBUTE TO U.P. LABOR HALL OF FAME CHIESTER F. SWANSON

HON. BART STUPAK

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I pay tribute to the late Chester F. Swanson, one of that great breed of dedicated, lifelong union activists who help ensure a good quality of life for the working men and women of northern Michigan. I offer these remarks on the occasion of Chester's election to the Michigan's Upper Peninsula Labor Hall of Fame.

At age 15 in 1921, Chester began working for a famed gunmaker in my district, Marble Arms Corp. in Escanaba, Mich. He retired from the corporation after 50 years of service, but he returned many times after this retirement to help with the set-up of machines used to make gun sights.

In 1945 a charter was issued by the United Auto Workers for Local 126 at Marble Arms. Proud that the union had come to his shop, Chester made the drive across northern Michigan and took the ferry across the Straits of Mackinac to pick up the charter. He never stopped being a union advocate from that moment on, serving as the local's financial secretary and union steward.

Although Chester died almost 30 years ago, Mr. Speaker, one can still hear many wonderful stories that paint a picture of a man who took joy in each day, who made great friendships, who was respected by his co-workers, even the younger workers who remember him so fondly.

Gary Quick, UAW International Representative for Region 1–D, recalls that when Chester traveled, he called his mother each day, and when he completed the call he would return to his group and announce, "All is fine with Mum!"

Gary also recalls one icy winter night—a black, black night with the temperatures about 30 below zero—when the union leadership, including Chester, found itself traveling home from a meeting about 60 miles away. A side trip was required to take one of the members home in the small community of Rock, a trip on back roads with snowbanks higher than the automobile. Chester wondered aloud if the gang would survive the trip, should they run into trouble. For years afterward, Gary says, Chester would be sure to say, "We made it that cold night to drop off Red in Rock, so I guess we will make it wherever . . ."

Friends recall that Chester, even at the age of 90 years young, would eat his three good meals every day, would be ready to stay out with the younger fellows until late at night and would be ready to go again in the morning.

They recall that Chester never forgot his camera for important events, recording friends and sharing the prints, and maintaining a photo record of area youth participating in local sports.

Most of all, Mr. Speaker, friends remember Chester as a union man, who cared about his fellow workers, his community, and who cared about the job he performed with pride for more than half a century.

RECOGNIZING CARLISLE AND McCORD ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS

HON. ROBERT B. ADERHOLT

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. ADERHOLT. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to recognize two schools in my district that have been recognized by the U.S. Department of Education for their achievements as Title I schools.

These schools, Carlisle Elementary Schools in Boaz, Alabama and McCord Elementary School in Albertville, Alabama, were selected for this award through a competitive process coordinated and managed by the state education agency. The principals of these schools, Ms. Kim Mintz and Mr. Richard Cole respectively, deserve this national recognition for their unwavering dedication to the academic achievement of their students.

Title I schools are located in high poverty areas and receive funding to improve teacher training and learning for at-risk children. These two schools and the 97 others in the nation that are also receiving these awards, are schools that have far exceeded expectations; they have truly gone the extra mile to give these children a chance to succeed. In turn, these children, supported by their families, have worked hard and set an example for students everywhere.

The recognition is based on six criteria: opportunity for all children to meet proficient and advanced levels of performance; professional development for teachers and administrators; coordination with other programs; curriculum development and instruction to support achievement to high standards; partnerships developed among the school, parents, and the local community; and three years of successful achievement and testing data.

The awards will be presented on May 2 in Indianapolis at the 2000 International Reading Association Conference. Mr. Speaker, I commend the faculty, staff, parents, and students for making these schools such a landmark of achievement in the State of Alabama.

CELEBRATING DICK DALE, KING OF THE SURF GUITAR

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, today I celebrate the achievements of Dick Dale, a resident of Twentynine Palms, California, in the heart of the 40th district. Better known as the King of Surf Guitar, Dick Dale is a gifted musician who defined a music style in the early 1960s that is still enjoyed by millions of music-lovers the world over.

Surf music, which attempts to capture the feeling of riding the waves on a surfboard, was a uniquely American style of music known as the "California Sound." Along with his group, the Del-Tones, Dale composed and recorded the first surf record, which lit the fuse in 1961 for the national explosion of the surf music craze. He also helped pioneer the development of electronic reverberation and concert-quality amplifiers and speakers. Dale has recorded for NASA, Disneyland, and a multitude of commercials, television shows, and movies. The recipient of countless awards, Dale has been nominated for a Grammy and is enshrined in the Surfing Hall of Fame.

Beyond his musical talent, Dale is an accomplished horseman, exotic animal trainer, surfer, martial arts expert, archer, and pilot. In addition to his recording and performing career, Dale has worked tirelessly to clean up the world's oceans and protect endangered wild animals. He has donated the proceeds of some recordings to the Burn Treatment Center at the University of California.

Dick Dale has not been content to sit back as a legend. This superb musician and innovator is still performing and has won over a whole new generation of fans as well as maintained his legion of long time admirers. He always has time for his devoted fans, often signing autographs and swapping stories for hours after his concerts. Dick Dale is an American original and will forever be the King of Surf Guitar.

HONORING ASSISTANT FIRE CHIEF PAUL D. MARTIN, FIREHOUSE MAGAZINE'S FIREFIGHTER OF THE YEAR

HON. JOHN E. SWEENEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize Firehouse magazine's Firefighter of the Year, Assistant Fire Chief Paul D. Martin of Hudson Falls, New York. Assistant Chief Martin surpassed 101 other firefighters from across the nation to win the highly coveted award. His actions remind us that firefighting is one of the most dangerous occupations in the United States.

I salute Assistant Fire Chief Martin, a fire investigator, for his heroic actions in the early morning hours of August 27, 1999. Without regard to personal safety, Assistant Chief Martin executed a daring rescue of an elderly woman trapped in her flame engulfed residence. He fought heavy flames in the two-story building while pulling the 77 year old resident to safety. Assistant Chief Martin suffered second- and third-degree burns to his face, ears, lower back and hip as the intense flames and heat ignited his fire-retardant equipment. This performance of duty set him apart from all other firemen in the nation and earned him the title of Firefighter of the Year.

The 21-year veteran of fire service, husband, and father of two deserves our highest praise. He is among thousands of firefighters who lay their lives on the line for our safety and well-being every day. Upstate New Yorkers owe a lasting debt to Assistant Chief Martin and his firefighting colleagues who sacrifice so much to protect the lives and property of others.

Mr. Speaker, please join me in congratulating Assistant Chief Martin on his selection as Firefighter of the Year. Please also join me in recognizing his outstanding courage in the face of grave danger and unquestionable dedication to duty. He symbolizes America's greatest heroes.

A TRIBUTE TO REPRESENTATIVE STEPHEN CHEN

HON. GARY L. ACKERMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of my colleagues and submit for the RECORD an article regarding Representative Stephen Chen, who serves as the head of the Taipei Cultural and Economic Representative Office in Washington. The article, which ran in on April 3 in the New York Times, is a fitting tribute to Taiwan's unofficial Ambassador, who has worked diligently to promote and expand relations between the United States and the 22 million citizens of Taiwan.

Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Chen is a thorough professional who has enjoyed a long and distinguished life as a career diplomat. He has represented his government all over the world, including postings in the Philippines, Brazil, Argentina and Bolivia. His experience in the United States also is extensive, during the past twenty-five years Ambassador Chen served in Atlanta, Chicago, Los Angeles and he has spent the last three years the Representative in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain my colleagues would agree that Stephen Chen's charm and quiet demeanor have served Taiwan well. Whether meeting Members of Congress in their offices or Executive Branch officials in a more neutral setting, Ambassador Chen has always worked to make certain the United States and Taiwan remain strong friends.

Mr. Speaker, as the article notes, Ambassador Chen is planning to retire shortly. I am certain all of my colleagues join me in congratulating Stephen Chen on a distinguished diplomatic career. We in the Congress are indeed fortunate to know him, and we wish him well in the years ahead.

[From the New York Times (on the Web), Apr. 3, 2000]

PUBLIC LIVES—A DIPLOMATIC OUTSIDER WHO LOBBIES INSIDE WASHINGTON

(By Philip Shenon)

WASHINGTON—AT an embassy that is not an embassy, the ambassador who is not an ambassador can only imagine what it is like to be a full-fledged member of Washington's diplomatic corps.

"In the evenings, you attend cocktail parties, champagne dances," Stephen Chen said wistfully of the black-tie world from which he is largely excluded. "This is the very routine, beautiful picture of the diplomat in a textbook."

Mr. Chen, the director of the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office, the de factor embassy here for the government of Taiwan, is a charming pariah.

While he represents the interests of 22 million of the freest and richest people in Asia, the 66-year-old diplomat might as well be invisible, at least as far as many of the State Department's China experts are concerned.

The snubs, Mr. Chen suggested, are an obvious effort to appease Beijing, and they are more than a little unfair to a government that is only weeks away from a peaceful transfer of power from one democratically elected leader to another, the first time that has happened in almost 5,000 years of Chinese history.

"There is a kind of unfairness," Mr. Chen tells a visitor, the wall behind his desk decorated with a painting of the delicate blossoms of the winter plum, Taiwan's national flower. "We have been a model student for freedom, democracy and a market economy."

"We don't mind if the United States has rapprochement with mainland China—we think it's good to bring the P.R.C. into the family of civilizations," he says of the People's Republic of China,

Because the United States has no diplomatic relations with Taiwan and has recognized the Communist government in Beijing as the sole representative of the people of China, Mr. Chen and his staff of nearly 200 are barred from the premises of the State Department.

They are not invited to diplomatic receptions at the White House, or to most of the dinner parties and glittery balls held at the embassies of nations that recognize Beijing.

When Taiwanese diplomats want to talk with Clinton administration officials, the meetings are often held in hotel coffee shops.

"We must meet in a neutral setting, that is the rule," says Mr. Chen, explaining the awkward logistics of the job.

Relations with China have been especially jittery since Taiwan's election last month of the new president, Chen Shui-bian, a former democracy activist who long advocated Taiwan's independence and whose victory ended half a century of Nationalist rule.

On the eve of the election, Chinese leaders all but warned of an invasion if Mr. Chen and his party were victorious. Since the election, both Mr. Chen and Beijing have softened their rhetoric, and Mr. Chen has recently insisted that he sees no need for an independence declaration.

Stephen Chen, who is not related to the new president, welcomes the moderated rhetoric from Taiwan's new government. The Communist leaders in Beijing, he says, would strike only "if they should be unnecessarily provoked."

"We have been dealing with them for more than 60 years," he said. "We knew when they are bluffing, when they are not bluffing. If we don't give them an excuse, I don't think they're going to attack."

Mr. Chen, who was born in the Chinese city of Nanjing, last saw the mainland in 1949, when his family was on the run from the victorious Communist forces of Mao Zedong. They fled to Taiwan, his father a diplomat in the service of the Nationalist leader, Chiang Kai-shek.

His father was assigned to the embassy in the Philippines when Mr. Chen was 15, and he remained there for more than a decade, attending college in Manila, marrying his Chinese-Filipino high school sweetheart and becoming fluent in English.

In 1960, he returned to Taiwan and passed the foreign service exam. He was first sent to Rio de Janeiro, and then to Argentina and Bolivia. In 1973, he was named consul general to Atlanta, where he remained until the United States severed relations with Taiwan and recognized Beijing six years later.

Mr. Chen said he can remember sitting in his living room in Atlanta, watching the televised announcement by President Carter that the United States would recognize the Communist government. "I felt that I was being clobbered," he recalled. "A baseball bat on the head."

"It seemed very unfair," he continued. "It was as if the United States wanted to reward a bad guy, the lousy student, and to punish the good student. That was my feeling."

In the years since, he said, Taiwanese diplomats have learned how to innovate, especially in Washington, where they employ some of the city's most powerful lobbyists and retain close ties to many prominent conservative members of Congress.

Mr. Chen says his office has an annual budget for lobbying of about $1.2 million and contracts with 15 firms. "They help open doors, they make appointments for us," he said. "But we make the presentations."

Under a 1979 law, Taiwan can continue to buy American weapons.

And Mr. Chen has been a frequent visitor to Capitol Hill in recent weeks as his government seeks Congressional approval for the sale of a wish list of sophisticated weapons. "If we are deprived of basic defensive weapons, then of course we are thrown to the wolves," he said.

Mr. Chen is considering a visit to the lair of the wolves. After 40 years in the diplomatic service, he is nearing retirement, and he is planning a vacation on the mainland, which is now permitted.

"I tell you very frankly, I would like to see the Great Wall," he said. "This belongs to the legacy of China. It has nothing to do with Communism.''

A BILL TO CLARIFY THE TAX TREATMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN AID OF CONSTRUCTION

HON. WALLY HERGER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today, along with Mr. MATSUI and Mrs. JOHNSON, to ensure that needless Treasury regulation does not add unnecessarily to the cost of housing.

The need for this legislation is brought about because the Department of Treasury has issued proposed regulations to provide guidance on the definition of CIAC as enacted under the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996. Despite the fact that Congress specifically removed language concerning ''customer services fees'' in its amendment in 1996, the Department added the language back into the proposed regulation specifying that such fees are not CIAC. They then defined the term very broadly to include service laterals, which traditionally and under the most common state law treatment would be considered CIAC.

Because state regulators require all of the costs of new connections to be paid up front, these regulations will force water and sewerage utilities to collect the federal tax from homeowners, builders, and small municipalities. Because they collect it up front, the utility is forced to ''gross up'' the tax by collecting a tax on the tax on the tax, resulting in an over 55 percent effective tax rate.

This bill will clarify that water and sewerage service laterals are included in the definition of contributions in aid of construction (CIAC). It clarifies current law by specifically stating that ''customer service fees'' are CIAC, but maintains current treatment of service charges for stopping and starting service (not CIAC). Because this is a clarification of current law, the effective date for the bill is as if included in the original legislation (Section 1613(a) of the Small Business Job Protection Act of 1996).

Mr. MATSUI and Mrs. JOHNSON along with many of our colleagues here in the chamber, worked hard over the course of a number of years to restore the pre-1986 Act tax treatment for water and sewage CIAC. In 1996, we succeeded in passing legislation. It was identical to pre-1986 law with three exceptions. Two of the changes were made in response to a Treasury Department request. The third removed the language dealing with ''service connection fees'' primarily because of potential confusion resulting from the ambiguity of the term. The sponsors of the legislation were concerned that the IRS would use this ambiguity to exclude a portion of what the state regulators consider CIAC.

As part of our efforts, we developed a revenue raiser in cooperation with the industry to make up any revenue loss due to our legislation, including the three changes. This revenue raiser extended the life, and changed the method, for depreciating water utility property from 20-year accelerated to 25-year straight-line depreciation. As consequence of this sacrifice by the industry, our CIAC change made a net $274 million contribution toward deficit reduction.

It is my belief that the final revenue estimate done by the Joint Committee on Taxation on the restoration of CIAC included all property treated as CIAC by the industry regulators including specifically service laterals. In an October 11, 1995 letter to Senator GRASSLEY the Joint Committee on Taxation provided revenue estimates for the CIAC legislation. A footnote in this letter states, ''These estimates have been revisited to reflect more recent data.'' The industry had only recently supplied the committee with comprehensive data, which reflected total CIAC in the industry, including service laterals.

In urge my colleagues to join with us in sponsoring this important legislation in order to keep the Department of Treasury from further burdening the American Homeowner.

APRIL SCHOOL OF THE MONTH

HON. CAROLYN McCARTHY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have named North Side Elementary School in East Williston as the School of the Month in the Fourth Congressional District for April 2000. Dr. James F. Newman is the Principal of North Side, and Dr. Carolyn S. Harris is the Superintendent of Schools in the East Williston School District. The school teaches children in grades Kindergarten through 4.

North Side Elementary stood out in my mind as an outstanding example of how early education is most successful when parents are involved. The school's programs teach our children the true value of education because it encourages community participation.

The North Side Elementary School Community is a close-knit body of parents, teachers, students, and administrators. Their goal is to ensure each child a stable early education through an enriched curriculum that keeps the children excited, and unique programs that appeal to a wide variety of younger children.

North Side combines parental involvement with exceptional programming. The children benefit when the community engages them in activities that extend beyond the traditional classroom setting.

One of the more popular programs among students is Books Alive, where staff and parents act out a selection of children's literature in a theater presentation. The Parent-Teacher Organization also holds an annual fundraising dinner with all proceeds going towards grants to supplement North Side teaching materials and special projects. Last year the school established the Deidre Hannafin Writing and Publishing Center as a tribute to Hannafin, a dedicated teacher who died of cancer at the young age of 32. At the Center, students work side by side with their parents and teachers to publish a newspaper, classroom writing projects, and this year, a literary magazine.

While stressing the value of traditional subjects, students are encouraged to look into their creative sides through art, music and nature programs. The Enriched Integrated Studies Program is one more way that North Side attempts to reach each child's strengths. Students attend enrichment activities once a week in order to bring the classroom to life. Class topics have included Ancient Egypt and Greece, while the entire school participated in activities such as Science Day.

Long Island students receive a better education thanks to the faculty and teachers of North Side Elementary School and I am proud to name them school of the month for April in the Fourth Congressional District of New York.

IN MEMORY OF THE LATE MARTHA MANUEL CHACON

HON. JOE BACA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, it is with sadness that I inform my colleagues of the passing of a great individual, a person who graced our world and the lives of so many people with love and compassion.

Martha Manuel Chacon, who passed away on March 28, 2000, was a beloved tribal elder of the San Manuel Band of Serrano Mission Indians. She was totally dedicated to providing a better way of life for her tribal members as well as for future generations of Serranos and all Native Americans.

Mrs. Chacon's legacy will live on forever in the many lives she touched during her 89 years on this Earth. She demonstrated to all of us complete and total honesty and strength as well as leadership and courage.

Martha Manuel Chacon was and remains so much a tremendous person in our thoughts and in our memories. I appreciate so much and will long remember the many good and positive things she brought into the lives of so many people and to the lives of the people of the San Manuel Tribe.

I join with Martha's friends and family members in honoring such a truly remarkable and outstanding person, someone who gave so much to those she loved. Each of us is better and more fortunate for what she unselfishly gave to us and gave to our world, a world made so much brighter and gentler by her life and her presence.

Mr. Speaker, I join with all of those who loved Martha Manuel Chacon in extending our prayers, knowing that God's heaven will forever be blessed and graced by her presence.

TRIBAL MATRIARCH CHACON DIES AT 89

(By Joe Nelson)

SAN BERNARDINO—Martha Manuel Chacon was the backbone of the San Manuel Band of Serrano Mission Indians—possessing honesty, strength, leadership, and courage. She was considered a true friend in every sense of the word, family members say.

After a lifetime of service to the San Manuel tribe, Chacon died Tuesday at St. Bernardino Medical Center in San Bernardino. She was 89.

Chacon was the granddaughter of Santos Manuel—for whom the tribe is named.

Manuel was responsible for saving the tribe during difficult transition times in 1866, when settling in one place was a challenge because American Indians routinely were forced to move from one location to another as land got swallowed up. It was Manuel who was key in settling the tribe near Highland, were it has remained to this day.

Chacon helped bring electricity to the reservation in the 1950s and running water to tribal homes in the 1960s. Her leadership helped the tribe improve its quality of life and plan its future, members said.

One thing family members said they will remember about Chacon was her strong connection to Serrano ancestry, culture and heritage.

Chacon's daughter, Pauline Murillo, 67, remembers the stories her mother told her when she was a child—part of the American Indian oral tradition.

Chacon often would converse with family members in the Cahuilla language.

''We shared the customs. She would call me or I would call her and we would speak Indian,'' Murillo said.

As a young adult, when jobs were scarce and she faced extreme poverty, Chacon commuted to Los Angeles and spent the work week there as a house cleaner to make ends meet. She would return to the reservation on the weekends to be with her family, Murillo said.

The time away never negatively impacted Chacon's relationship with her family, relatives said.

''She was a very strong person. She was like the backbone to our whole family,'' said granddaughter Audrey Martinez, who serves as the tribe's secretary-treasurer.

Chacon is survived by her husband, Raoul; children Pauline Murillo, Roy Chacon, Rowena ''Rena'' Ramos, Sandy Marquez, Raoul ''Beanie'' Chacon Jr., and Carla Rodriguez; 18 grandchildren; 31 great-grandchildren; and four great-great grandchildren.

A rosary will be recited at Chacon's home on the San Manuel Reservation at 7 p.m. Monday. The funeral will be at 10 a.m. Tuesday, also at Chacon's home.

Donations in Chacon's memory can be sent to: Loma Linda University Children's Hospital Foundation, 11234 Anderson Road, Room A607, Loma Linda 92354.

HONORING MR. PAUL JOHNSON OF SPRINGFIELD, TENNESSEE ON THE OCCASION OF THE 31ST ANNIVERSARY OF HIS HEROIC MISSION TO VIETNAM

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 13, 2000

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, today I honor Mr. Paul Johnson of Springfield, Tennessee, on the occasion of the 31st anniversary of his heroic mission to Vietnam.

"Hero" is a term that I do not use lightly. However, "hero" is the most fitting word I could ever use to describe Paul Johnson and men like him, who risked their lives fighting for our country around the world.

As a career military man and Vietnam veteran, Paul Johnson has served our country well, retiring from the U.S. Army in 1985. However, until recently his story was largely unknown. Paul Johnson is not the kind of person who talks about his heroism. Perhaps that selflessness is what has made him a true hero.

Paul Johnson was only 29 years old when he arrived in Vietnam in the fall of 1968. He never dreamed that his year-long tour there would include an episode calling for him to risk his own life to save 90 U.S. Marines from a certain, fiery death. For such courage, Johnson was awarded the Soldier's Medal, one of the highest honors one can receive from the United States Army.

April 9, 1969, is a day that Sergeant Paul Johnson will never forget. That afternoon, after safely getting himself and others away from an explosives area, he was approached for assistance by a Marine Colonel who said that one hundred U.S. Marines were trapped inside a bunker beside an ammunition pad which had caught fire. The Marine Colonel could not order the Army soldier to assist, but stressed the need to rescue these men.

Johnson, knowing that the likelihood of surviving such a mission was very slim, made the decision to take his personnel carrier and go in anyway, risking his own life in the process. Although Johnson did not ask any of his men to go with him, his driver agreed to undertake the rescue mission with him. The two of them made four trips back and forth to the bunker that day through the smoke, heat, and flames, to rescue 90 men. According to his reports, each time they picked up a group of men, they greeted him with tears and shouts of joy. The day after the ordeal, Johnson drove past the location of the rescue and there was just a burned out hole where the bunker and ammunition dump had once been located. Paul believes that he made the miraculous rescue that day with the help of God.

The driver who assisted Paul in the rescue did not return from Vietnam. He was later killed in battle, with Johnson near his side. Johnson is appreciative of accolades he has received, but remains ever mindful of his friends and fellow soldiers who gave their lives in the conflict. Those are the individuals that Johnson believes should be honored and remembered. In fact, he flies an American flag in his yard in honor of those slain and as a symbol of the freedom he fought so hard to keep.

Paul Johnson was recently honored by the Tennessee State Legislature for his bravery and courage that April day and for his service to this nation. Currently, Paul is employed by the Robertson County Highway Department and is very actively involved in community and civic affairs.

May we not forget Paul Johnson and those like him, who have fought so bravely, and so selflessly to ensure our continuing freedom for this and future generations.

SENATE—Tuesday, April 25, 2000

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in a few moments we will pledge allegiance to our flag with words that may have become faithlessly familiar with repetition. As we affirm that we are one nation under You, dear God, shake us awake with the momentous conviction that You alone reign supreme and sovereign in this Nation and very powerfully and personally in this Chamber. Give us a renewed sense of Your holy presence and fill us with awe and wonder. This is Your Senate and the Senators are here by Your divine appointment and are accountable to You for every word spoken and every piece of legislation passed. Help them and all of us who work with them to live this day on the knees of our hearts, with renewed reverence for Your presence and profound gratitude for the grace and goodness of Your providential care for our beloved Nation. May all that we say and do this day be done by Your grace and for Your glory. For You are the Lord, the Creator, and our Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable GEORGE VOINOVICH, a Senator from the State of Ohio, led the Senate in the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VOINOVICH). The Senator from Arizona.

SCHEDULE

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, today the Senate will begin debate on the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 3, proposing an amendment to the Constitution to protect the rights of crime victims, until 12:30 p.m. Following that debate, the Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m. in order for the weekly party caucuses to meet. At 2:15, the Senate will proceed to a vote on the motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 3. If cloture is not invoked on the motion, then a second vote will occur on cloture on the substitute amendment to the marriage tax penalty bill.

I thank my colleagues for their attention.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. KYL. Before we begin, I will also ask unanimous consent that Senator SPECTER address the Senate for 10 minutes on an unrelated matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I hope in the process of the debate this week we get some information from the majority as to when we are going to be taking up the conference report on juvenile justice, when we will be taking up the conference report on the Patients' Bill of Rights, when we are going to start doing some substantive things on education. The session is winding down. We have 13 appropriations bills with which we must deal in the process. I think it would be a real shame if we finished the year without having worked on some of these issues the American public want most, including doing something about prescription drugs for senior citizens and the rest of the American public.

Mr. KYL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania has 10 minutes.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, there was a unanimous-consent request in that regard that has not been approved yet.

Mr. KYL. I wanted to note that I am sure the majority leader will be happy to respond to all of the elements the distinguished minority whip has raised when he is able to reach the floor.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator from Pennsylvania speaking for 10 minutes as long as the minority also has 10 minutes to speak in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, leadership time is reserved.

PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES TO PROTECT THE RIGHTS OF CRIME VICTIMS—MOTION TO PROCEED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 3 which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 3 proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank my distinguished colleague from Arizona for yielding me a few moments this morning.

ELIAN GONZALEZ

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have sought recognition to comment briefly on the case involving young Elian Gonzalez. At 11 o'clock this morning, Senator LOTT has scheduled a closed-door proceeding with Attorney General Reno, and there are a number of important outstanding questions which, in my view, should be addressed.

At the outset, let me make it plain that I believe and have believed that young 6-year-old Elian Gonzalez should have been reunited with his father at the earliest possible time. I believe that as a legal matter there is no real justification for any asylum proceeding to keep young Elian Gonzalez in the United States. The purpose of asylum is to protect an alien from going back to a country where he or she will be persecuted. That certainly is not the case with Elian Gonzalez. He would be adulated.

Nonetheless, I believe there are some very serious issues which have arisen that the Congress ought to address, and the most prominent of those is the manner in which Elian Gonzalez was taken into custody. In my opinion, there were less intrusive ways in which that could have been accomplished. The Immigration and Naturalization Service said that they proceeded at 5 a.m. because they did not want to have any interference from the crowd. The avoidance of interference from the crowd could have been accomplished at high noon if the crowd were to have been moved back several blocks, which is customary where people have a right to demonstrate, people have a right to express themselves, but they do not have the right to do it right at the location where there may be other interests which have to be preserved. Had the crowd been several blocks away, there would have been no difficulty in taking whatever action was deemed appropriate without the risk of having a problem with the crowd.

Once the Immigration and Naturalization Service agents were directed to move in to take custody of young Elian, they had been armed to protect themselves. But the action necessitating their being armed had very great potential for violence. It was a potential powder keg. Fortunately, there were no serious injuries. But there could have been. And it is my view that there ought to be a look by the Congress at ways to improve these procedures in the future.

The Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Garner v. Tennessee, issued a ruling involving a Tennessee statute which involved law enforcement officers using deadly force against a fleeing felon even if that felon was unarmed. The Supreme Court of the United States held that this statute was unconstitutional because deadly force may not be used unless it is to save lives or avoid grievous bodily injury. Now, the problem with what was done by the INS in moving in with drawn weapons at 5 a.m. was that it could have triggered a chain reaction which could have led to violence. And there was really no necessity. They were not dealing with the customary INS case where they have a suspected terrorist or a violent criminal. This is not a John Dillinger who has to be taken into custody. That matter could have waited another day.

When I read the morning papers last Friday that the Department of Justice was considering moving in to take young Elian Gonzalez, I wrote to both the Attorney General and the President and expressed the view that there were a number of less intrusive alternatives which could have been undertaken. And I pressed hard at that time for them to have a court order.

When the President said the Federal court ordered Elian Gonzalez taken into custody, that is not correct. The Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit specifically refused to decide and declined to issue an order requested by the Department of Justice to have the uncle turn over Elian to INS so he could be turned over to the father. The district court did not deal with the custody issue either, but only decided that if there were to be an application for asylum, the proper person to make that was the father and not the uncle.

On this state of the record, there is a very serious legal issue as to what authority the INS had to take Elian into custody. They certainly were not going to take him into custody to deport him because there was an order of the circuit court prohibiting that until the circuit court had decided the case.

There is, in my opinion, a need for Congress to take a look at another issue. The Department of Justice, regrettably, does not have a good record at Ruby Ridge or at Waco. I chaired the subcommittee hearings on Ruby Ridge which led to a change in the FBI rules on use of deadly force and currently am chairing a special task force of a subcommittee looking into Waco. In the context of what happened at Ruby Ridge and Waco and what happened with the potential powder keg in Miami last Saturday morning, it is my view the Congress ought to consider institutionalizing some permanent unit within the Department of Justice.

The raid, which was conducted at 5 a.m., has the potential—and it is hard to determine—of leaving very deep scars on young Elian Gonzalez. When it occurred, the question came into my mind as to why the father was not at the scene, if not present at the house, but close to the scene to assist in soothing young Elian. I think the entire matter could have been avoided had the crowd been cleared, had there been a court order, had the Government taken up the representation of the uncle's lawyer that Elian would be peacefully turned over.

In the interim, it is my hope that the proceedings in Federal court will be expedited. I ask unanimous consent that the letters I wrote to Attorney General Reno and President Clinton be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, those letters set forth in some greater detail the way those hearings can be expedited. When the Million Man March occurred in 1998 in New York City, the Federal court ruled on August 26, and the court of appeals took it up on September 1 and issued a 9-page opinion the same day. In the Pentagon papers case, only 18 days elapsed from the publication of the papers until the case went through the district court, the court of appeals, and the Supreme Court of the United States. I renew my suggestion to the Department of Justice to expedite those proceedings.

Ultimately, Elian will be returned with his father to wherever they choose to go. I hope they will stay in the United States, but that is a matter for the Gonzalezes to determine. Juan Miguel Gonzalez is the father, having parental responsibility for the child, but these are issues as to the use of this extraordinary force and what should be institutionalized in the Department of Justice, which I think the Congress should look into in oversight hearings, not to attach any blame but to improve procedures and approaches for the future.

Again I thank my distinguished colleague from Arizona and yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, April 21, 2000.

Hon. JANET RENO,
Attorney General, U.S. Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

DEAR ATTORNEY GENERAL RENO: I am deeply concerned about reports in today's media that you may initiate action through Federal law enforcement agencies to take Elian Gonzales from the residence of his relatives in Miami and return him to his father. My concern arises from the experience at Ruby Ridge, a subject on which I chaired Judiciary Subcommittee hearings and also on the Waco incident, on which I am now chairing a Judiciary Subcommittee on Department of Justice oversight.

In advance of any such action there are a number of alternatives which could be pursued. For example, the Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit could be asked to expedite the appeals process. There are many precedents for prompt, expedited Circuit Court action such as that taken by the Court of Appeals for the 2nd Circuit on the Million Man March case in 1998. There, the District Court, by order dated August 26, 1998, allowed the March for September 5 and the Circuit Court heard arguments on September 1, 1998 and issued a written opinion the same day.

Another option would be to ask the Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit to hear the case en banc which could be accomplished very promptly.

Yet another option is to ask the Supreme Court of the United States to take the case and hear it on an expedited basis which that Court has the authority to do at any time. The Pentagon Papers were published on June 12, 1971. The District Court issued a decision on June 19, the 2nd Circuit heard the case on June 22 and decided the case on June 23. The Supreme Court heard arguments on June 26 and decided the case on June 30, 1971.

In a case involving the Iranian hostages, the Solicitor General asked the Supreme Court for the United States for certification before judgment on June 10, 1981. The Supreme Court granted the request on June 11, ordered briefs within one week, heard arguments on June 24 and decided the case on July 2, 1981.

There is good reason to believe that the order of the 11th Circuit three-judge panel will be reversed for a number of reasons. One glaring error is that there is no basis for asylum for Elian Gonzales since that relief is granted when the individual faces persecution or some prospective ill treatment upon his return, which is certainly not the case with young Elian. If returned to Cuba, he will be the subject of adulation, not mistreatment.

Before resorting to action to take Elian from his Miami relatives, I urge you to seek a judicial order from the United States District Court authorizing such action by the Department of Justice. While perhaps not technically necessary, such an order might well be persuasive enough for the Miami relatives to turn Elian over voluntarily. Such an order may also be persuasive so that others would not impede Department of Justice action to take Elian from his Miami relatives.

I am sending a copy of this letter to the President, and I am sending you a copy of a letter I am writing to him.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, April 21, 2000.

Hon. WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON,
President, The White House, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: With this letter, I am enclosing a copy of a letter which I am sending to Attorney General Reno suggesting a number of judicial remedies before any action is taken to return Elian Gonzales to his father other than through a voluntary turning over of the boy by his Miami relatives.

I am writing to you and the Attorney General without being privy to any of the ongoing negotiations, but only because of my concern about what happened at Ruby Ridge and Waco which involved incidents where I have been extensively involved in oversight of the Department of Justice by Senate Judiciary Subcommittees.

If there is to be any action taken by Federal law enforcement officials other than a voluntary turning over by the Miami relatives of Elian Gonzales, then I urge you to be personally involved and to consult with experts in the field, in addition to officials at the Department of Justice because of the deeply flawed actions taken by the Department of Justice at Ruby Ridge and Waco and in other law enforcement judgments of the Attorney General.

As noted in my letter to the Attorney General, the hand of the Federal Government can be considerably strengthened by a District Court order authorizing the Department of Justice to take Elian Gonzales from his Miami relatives and returned to his father.

It may well be that taking the potential use of force off the table would materially damage the Government's bargaining position with the Miami Gonzales family; but if force is to be used, it must be used with mature, measured judgment contrary to what was done at Ruby Ridge and Waco.

Sincerely,

ARLEN SPECTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I seek recognition under the 10 minutes reserved on the Democratic side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

REPUBLICAN PRIORITIES

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, we just heard a statement from the Senator from Pennsylvania which echoes the statements of many Republicans since the reuniting of Elian Gonzalez with his father. This was a very sad situation. The Attorney General's comments indicate she made extraordinary efforts on a personal basis and through the Department of Justice to resolve the differences between the members of this family involving this 6-year-old boy.

I am sorry it came to the process that it did in the early hours of the morning on Saturday. I understand up until the very last moment, negotiations were underway with the family, with the very basic goal of reuniting this little boy with his father.

I will never know what took place in those conversations, but I can certainly understand that when the decision was made to enforce the law, to enforce the subpoena, and to move forward, those agents who went into that home were entitled to protect themselves. They did not know, going into that home, whether there was any danger inside. The fact that they were armed, of course, is troublesome in the presence of a 6-year-old boy, but I do not believe a single one of us would ask any law enforcement agent in America—Federal, State, or local—to endanger their own lives by walking into a building without adequate protection and show of force.

I hope we will put this in perspective. I have been absolutely fascinated by the Republican response to this. To consider some of the statements that have been made by Republican leaders on Capitol Hill since this event in Miami tells us a great deal about their priorities. There is a passion, there is a commitment, there is a sense of urgency to drop everything we are doing on Capitol Hill and move into a thorough investigation of this episode which occurred in the early morning hours of Saturday to decide whether or not Attorney General Reno was doing the appropriate thing in the way she approached it.

My question to the Republican majority in the Senate and the House is: Where is your passion, where is your sense of urgency, where is your commitment when it comes to the gun violence which is occurring on the streets of America every single day?

Yesterday, here in our Nation's Capital, families who gathered at the National Zoo for an annual holiday witnessed gun violence which claimed some seven victims, one of whom is now on life support and may not survive. Yet for a year—one solid year—the Republican leadership on Capitol Hill has refused to bring forward any gun safety legislation. Overnight they can call for an investigation of Attorney General Reno. Overnight they can bring her to Capitol Hill because of this question of what occurred in Miami. But for one solid year, they have been unwilling and unable to step up and do anything about gun safety to protect children and families across America.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DURBIN. No one was injured in the house of Elian Gonzalez's relatives in Miami. Thank God. But kids are injured every day across America. Twelve children are killed every day across America because of gun violence, and this Republican majority, which has this passion to investigate, ought to have the passion to legislate, to pass laws to make America safer. I would like to see some proportionality in the way they respond to the real issues facing American families.

I yield to my colleague from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator yielding to me.

This is a very sad chapter. It is a story of a 6-year-old child who has been used as a political football now for some many months—yes, by Fidel Castro, but also by some in this country—and it ought to stop. What happened the other morning in Miami is something none of us wants to see in this country, but it happened without violence occurring. No one was injured, and the fact is, a 6-year-old boy was restored to his father's care.

I have heard all of the stories and all of the words. I watched television last evening. I heard irresponsible statements about Waco, about storm troopers, all kinds of conjecture about secret meetings between Fidel Castro and officials in this country. Look, those things serve no purpose at this point.

This is a 6-year-old boy whose mother died and who now has been restored to the care of his father. Are there those here who believe that a 6-year-old boy whose father loves him should not be restored to the care of his father? If so, then let's have a long debate about parental rights. I suspect they do not want to restore this young boy to the care of his father because his father is a Cuban and he will go back to Cuba and that is a Communist country. But I do not see people coming to the floor of the Senate talking much about the fate of the children in Vietnam—that is a Communist country—or the fate of the children in China—that is a Communist country.

All of a sudden, this one 6-year-old child whose mother is dead and whose father wants him, because he comes from Cuba, does not have the right to be restored to the care of his father? Something is wrong with this.

I understand there is great passion on all sides. The Attorney General was faced with an awful choice, and she made a choice. The choice she made was to use whatever show of force was necessary—not force; show of force was necessary—to prevent violence while they were able to get this boy and restore him to the care of his father.

The fact is, it worked. In a little under 3 minutes, they were able to get this boy. This boy, now we see in a smiling picture, is in his father's arms where he ought to be.

I know we can criticize Janet Reno and others till the Sun goes down and every day thereafter, but it is not going to change the fact that this boy belongs with his father. We all know that. We should not use this boy for some broader political purpose of U.S.-Cuba relations, anti-Castroism, this, that, or the other thing. This is not about Fidel Castro. This is about a 6-year-old child and his father.

Mr. LEAHY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DORGAN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LEAHY. I am pleased to hear both of my distinguished colleagues talking about the necessity to protect those who go into a situation such as that. In an earlier career in law enforcement I had the experience of going on raids or arrests or hostage situations, oftentimes in the middle of the night. They are a very frightening thing.

I suspect those immigration officers and marshals also have families who worry about whether they are going to come back alive. They are entitled to some protection, too. They talk about a frightening picture of a man so intimidating that everybody would stand still. His finger was not on the trigger of his gun. If you look at the picture, the safety was on the weapon. An unarmed female INS officer, with no body armor or anything else, came in there, putting her own life at risk so the little boy would not be frightened when she picked him up. And she spoke to him in Spanish.

The Miami relatives could have avoided this. The Miami relatives took a position they wanted to help little Elian and hurt Fidel Castro. They helped Fidel Castro and hurt little Elian. They should have given him back to his father long ago. Instead, they made this whole situation necessary.

The officers who went in there are entitled to protect themselves. If I were their spouse, if I were their child, I would hope that they would. Then to accuse them of brainwashing or drugging this little boy is scandalous. These marshals, who took the little boy into their custody, are sworn to give their own life, if necessary, to protect the person they have in their custody.

They were there to protect the little boy. They did protect the little boy. He is now back with his father where he belongs.

I resent the statement of some of the Miami relatives saying these pictures of a happy child with his father are doctored, that it is not really little Elian, that they substituted someone else for him, or that the marshals drugged him. One relative even said the only reason he called his father from the airplane was because they put a gun to his head. This is outrageous.

These brave men and women, who constantly put their lives on the line to protect the people of this country, including oftentimes Members of Congress, ought to be praised.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). Twenty seconds.

Mr. DURBIN. Let me close by saying I hope we will see the same passion, the same commitment, the same sense of urgency from the Republican side when it comes to gun safety legislation, when it comes to legislation for a Patients' Bill of Rights, when it comes to a prescription drug benefit, as we have seen in their passion to continue to investigate every member of the Clinton administration.

PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES TO PROTECT THE RIGHTS OF CRIME VICTIMS—MOTION TO PROCEED—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time until 12:30 p.m. shall be equally divided between the two leaders.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, this is a historic time because we are about to commence a debate on an amendment that has passed through the Senate Judiciary Committee but has not yet come to the floor of the Senate; that is, an amendment to the U.S. Constitution to protect the rights of victims of violent crime.

I am very pleased this morning, along with Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN of California, to be making the primary case in support of this amendment.

I would like to make some opening remarks and then turn our opening time over to Senator FEINSTEIN for a discussion of the history of this amendment and much of the articulation of the need for it. But let me make a few preliminary comments.

First of all, we have heard a little bit about passion on a related matter. I can tell you there is nothing about which I am more passionate these days than supporting the rights of victims of violent crime.

According to the Department of Justice, there are over 8 million victims of violent crime in our society every year. Not enough is being done to protect the rights of these victims. They have no constitutional rights, unlike the defendants. Those accused of crime have more than a dozen rights which have been largely secured by amendments to the U.S. Constitution.

They, of course, trump any rights that States, either by statute or State constitutional provision, grant to the victims of crime.

It is time to level the playing field, to balance the scales of justice, and provide some rights for victims of crime. These are very basic and simple rights, as Senator FEINSTEIN will articulate in just a moment.

To secure basic rights to be informed and to be present and to be heard at critical stages throughout the judicial process is the least that our society owes people it has failed to protect.

Thirty-two State constitutional amendments have been passed by an average popular vote of nearly 80 percent. Clearly, the American people have developed a consensus that the rights of crime victims deserve protection.

Unfortunately, these State provisions have not been applied with sufficient seriousness to ensure the protection of these victims of crime.

Let me note some quotations, first from the Attorney General of the United States, and then from attorneys general—these are the law enforcement officials of our country—and the Governors, who, of course, are the chief executives of the various States.

Attorney General Reno explained, in testimony before the Senate Judiciary Committee:

> Efforts to secure victims' rights through means other than a constitutional amendment have proved less than fully adequate. Victims' rights advocates have sought reforms at the State level for the past 20 years. However, these efforts have failed to fully safeguard victims' rights. These significant State efforts simply are not sufficiently consistent, comprehensive, or authoritative to safeguard victims' rights.

Legal commentators have reached the same conclusion.

For example, Harvard law professor Laurence Tribe has explained that the existing statutes and State amendments ''are likely, as experience to date sadly shows, to provide too little real protection whenever they come into conflict with bureaucratic habit, traditional indifference, sheer inertia, or any mention of an accused's rights regardless of whether those rights are genuinely threatened.''

According to a December 1998 report from the National Institute of Justice, the victims are denied their rights. The report concluded that:

> Enactment of state laws and state constitutional amendments alone appear to be insufficient to guarantee the full provision of victims' rights in practice.

The report went on to note numerous examples of how victims were not given rights they were already supposed to be given under State provisions.

For example, even in several States identified as giving strong protection to victims' rights, fewer than 60 percent of the victims were notified of the sentencing hearing, and fewer than 40 percent were notified of the pretrial release of the defendant. That can be a serious matter to a victim of crime. A followup analysis of the same data found that racial minorities are less likely to be afforded their rights under the patchwork of existing statutes.

According to a letter, dated April 21 of this year, signed by 39 of the State attorneys general:

> We are convinced that statutory protections are not enough; only a federal constitutional amendment will be sufficient to change the culture of our legal system.

A 400-page report by the Department of Justice on victims' rights and services concluded that:

> [t]he U.S. Constitution should be amended to guarantee fundamental rights for victims of crime.

> A victims' rights constitutional amendment is the only legal measure strong enough to rectify the current inconsistencies in victims' rights laws that vary significantly from jurisdiction to jurisdiction on the state and federal levels.

For those who are concerned that somehow a Federal constitutional amendment would impinge upon States rights other than noticing, of course, that 75 percent of the States would have to approve such a constitutional amendment for it to go into effect, let me refer to a resolution of the National Governors' Association, which passed by a vote of 49–1, strongly supporting a constitutional amendment.

It stated:

Despite . . . widespread state initiatives, the rights of victims do not receive the same consideration or protection as the rights of the accused. These rights exist on different judicial levels. Victims are relegated to a position of secondary importance in the judicial process.

The resolution also stated:

The rights of victims have always received secondary consideration within the U.S. Judicial process, even though states and the American people by a wide plurality consider victims' rights to be fundamental. Protection of these basic rights is essential and can only come from a fundamental change in our basic law: the U.S. Constitution.

That is it. Despite the well-meaning intention of judges, prosecutors, and others who fundamentally agree that victims need these rights of basic fairness in our criminal justice system, as the evidence has overwhelmingly demonstrated, they are just not getting that kind of fair treatment, despite the best efforts of all these people. That is why, after 18 years, the conclusion has been reached by so many that the only way to guarantee these rights is by placing them in the U.S. Constitution where defendants' rights have also been amended into existence.

We all know it shouldn't be easy to amend the Constitution, but we have been very careful to communicate with prosecutors and others who are familiar with the issues. After 63 drafts, we think we have it right. We think we have a very tightly drawn amendment, which Senator FEINSTEIN will explain in just a moment, that protects these rights without denigrating whatsoever the rights of the defendants or those accused of crime.

Our amendment has 42 cosponsors in this body, a bipartisan group of Democrats and Republicans. We have 39 State attorneys general who have signed a strong letter in support. Our Presidential candidates, both current and past, have strongly supported a crime victims' rights amendment, as have groups such as Parents of Murdered Children, Mothers Against Drunk Driving, the National Organization for Victim Assistance, and others.

I thought it would be appropriate to recognize the President of the United States, who said in a very strong statement before a number of crime victims' rights groups:

I strongly believe that victims should be central participants in the criminal justice system, and that it will take a constitutional amendment to give the rights of victims the same status as the rights of the accused.

He also said the following, which I think represents the views of all of us in this body:

I do not support amending the Constitution lightly; it is sacred. It should be changed only with great caution and after much consideration. But I reject the idea that it should never be changed. Change it lightly and you risk its distinction. But never change it and you risk its vitality.

But this is different. This is not an attempt to put legislative responsibilities in the Constitution or to guarantee a right that is already guaranteed. Amending the Constitution here is simply the only way to guarantee the victims' rights are weighed equally with defendants' rights in every courtroom in America.

Mr. President, that is all we ask.

I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD three pages of groups that strongly support our amendment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Horticultural Therapy Association (AHTA), Valley Industry and Commerce Association.

Mr. KYL. In terms of specific letters of support and so on, we will hear about that at a later time.

I conclude my statement by saying it has been a great pleasure for me to work on a bipartisan basis with Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN who, as have I, has spent the better part of 4 years honing and crafting this amendment, working with victims' rights groups, visiting with fellow Senators, Members of the House of Representatives, representatives of the White House, the Department of Justice, and many others in an effort to ensure that the amendment we present to the Senate today is the very best possible product we could present.

We are always open to more suggestions. We have never closed the door to additional suggestions by people who in good faith wish to make sure this amendment will do what we want it to do, without, of course, taking away the rights of defendants. We remain committed to that proposition.

Over the next several days, obviously, we will hear from opponents. We are delighted to hear their comments and to visit with them about suggestions they may have. At the end of the day, as all of the statements I have read suggest, there is no alternative. There is only one way to protect the victims of violent crime; that is, through adoption of a Federal constitutional amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, had the Senator from Arizona completed his remarks?

Mr. KYL. I have completed my opening statement. I don't think there is a specific agreement. The time is divided equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is equally divided between Senator KYL and Senator LEAHY.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, normally I would speak at this point, under the usual procedure, following the majority floor leader. I know the distinguished Senator from California wishes to speak. I will not follow the normal procedure and speak but allow her to go forward. Then I will claim the floor after her speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I thank our ranking member for this opportunity. It gives an opportunity for the Senator from Arizona and me to explain the amendment. I very much appreciate that.

Providing constitutional rights for victims of violent crime has been at the top of my list of priorities as a Senator from California. I will take a few moments to explain why.

I thank our colleague, Senator KYL, for his leadership in bringing this issue to the forefront and working so closely with me in a bipartisan way over the past 4 years through two Congresses. I believe this is what voters sent us here to do, to work together, Republicans and Democrats, House and Senate, to find solutions to the problems ordinary Americans face every day. Indeed, ordinary Americans do find problems in the criminal justice system.

There were about 9 million victims of violent crimes in 1996, when we began this effort, and each of the 4 years since that time in the United States. Many of these victims were actually victimized a second time by the criminal justice system. They were kept in the dark about their case. They were excluded at the trial. They were unable to express their concerns for their safety when a decision was made to release their attacker. It is for these victims we are fighting for this amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

There are those who say the Constitution is a static document; it is a perfect document; it should not be changed. There are those who say it should not be changed easily. There are those who say it should not be changed without need. We are in the latter two. We believe we have a serious amendment, and we believe we can demonstrate the need for this change.

The amendment we propose today meets a situation, the situation that when the Constitution of the United States was written in 1789, there were but 4 million people in 13 colonies. Today we are over 250 million people, and victims of violent crimes alone amount to over 9 million a year.

When the Constitution was written, it was a different day. In 1791, the Bill of Rights was written. Between the text of the Constitution and the text of the Bill of Rights, a number of rights were provided to the accused, rights to protect them against an overeager, overzealous, and overambitious Government. We all know what they are: The right to counsel, to due process, to a speedy trial, against double jeopardy, against self-incrimination, against unreasonable searches and seizures, the right to have warrants issued upon probable cause, the right to a jury of peers, the right to be informed, and so on.

Victims were entirely left out, and when the Constitution and the Bill of Rights were written in 1789 and 1791, there were essentially no rights provided to victims in the United States. There was good reason for it. I want to say why that took place.

When the Constitution was written, in America in the late 18th century and well into the 19th century, public prosecutors did not exist. Victims could, and did, commence criminal trials themselves by hiring a sheriff to arrest the defendant, initiating a private prosecution. The core rights of our amendment to notice, to attend, to be heard were inherently made available to a victim of a violent crime. As Juan Cardenas, writing in the Harvard journal of law and public policy, observed:

At trial, generally, there were no lawyers for either the prosecution or the defense. Victims of crime simply acted as their own counsel, although wealthier crime victims often hired a prosecutor.

Gradually, public prosecution replaced the system of private prosecution. With the explosive growth of crime in this country in recent years, it became easier and easier for the victim to be left aside in the process.

As other scholars have noted:

With the establishment of the prosecutor the conditions for the general alienation of the victim from the legal process further increased.

Mr. President, this began to happen in the mid 19th century, around 1850, when the concept of the public prosecutor was developed in this country for the first time.

The victim is deprived of his [or her] ability to determine the course of a case and is deprived of the ability to gain restitution from the proceedings. Under such conditions, the incentives to report crime and to cooperate with the prosecution also diminished. As the importance of the prosecution increases, the role of victim is transformed [in our country] from principal actor to a resource that may [or may not] be used at the prosecutor's discretion.

Those aren't my words; those are words of Fredric Dubow and Theodore Becker in ''Criminal Justice and the Victim.''

So we see why the Constitution must be amended to guarantee these rights. There was no need to guarantee them in 1789 and 1791, when the Bill of Rights was added. We see that the criminal justice system has changed with the evolution of the concept of the public prosecutor, and we see that America has changed. The prevalence of crime has changed. The number of victims has changed. So creating the need and circumstance to respond to these developments and to restore balance in the criminal justice system by guaranteeing certain basic rights of violent crime victims in the United States is what we seek to do.

Those rights would be as follows: The right to notice of proceedings; the right not to be excluded from proceedings; the right to be heard at proceedings, if present; the right to submit a statement; the right to notice of release or escape of an attacker. For me, that is a central point and how I got involved in this movement. Also, there is the right to consideration in ensuring a speedy trial; the right to an order of restitution ordered by a judge; the right to consideration of safety in determining any conditional release. Those are basic, core rights that we would give to a victim of violent crime to be balanced against the rights of the accused.

Senator KYL mentioned that among our supporters are Prof. Laurence Tribe of the Harvard Law School. Professor Tribe is a noted constitutional expert. Let me quote portions of his testimony from the House hearing on the amendment:

The rights in question—the rights of crime victims not to be victimized yet again through the processes by which government bodies and officials prosecute, punish, and release the accused or convicted offender—are indisputably basic human rights against government, rights that any civilized system of justice would aspire to protect and strive never to violate.

Our Constitution's central concerns involve protecting the rights of individuals to participate in all those government processes that directly and immediately involve those individuals and affect their lives in some focused and particular way. . . . The parallel rights of victims to participate in these proceedings are no less basic, even though they find no parallel recognition in the explicit text of the U.S. Constitution.

The fact that the States and Congress, within their respective jurisdictions, already have ample affirmative authority to enact rules protecting these rights is. . .not a reason for opposing an amendment altogether. . . . The problem, rather, is that such rules are likely, as experience to date sadly shows, to provide too little real protection whenever they come into conflict with bureaucratic habit, traditional indifference, sheer inertia, or any mention of an accused's rights regardless of whether those rights are genuinely threatened.

Now, some people would say, ''Let's pass another Federal statute.'' To them, I say: Been there, done that. We did that twice—in the case of the Oklahoma City bombing—and the judge ignored the Federal statute both times. According to the FBI, 98.4 percent of violent crimes are prosecuted in State courts. So why a Federal statute won't work is that even the broadest Federal statute would affect only 1 percent of the victims of violent crimes in this Nation. And then that statute could, in effect, be trumped at any time by the constitutional amendment provided to the accused.

The attorneys general of 37 States, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands have all signed a letter with this statement:

We are convinced that statutory provisions are not enough. Only a Federal constitutional amendment will be sufficient to change the culture of our criminal justice system.

Let me tell you, very personally, why I believe this to be very necessary. Let me take you back to my life in San Francisco in the 1970s. In 1974, in my home city, a man by the name of Angelo Pavageau broke into the house of Frank and Annette Carlson in Portrero Hill. Mr. Pavageau tied Mr. Carlson to a chair, murdered him by beating him with a hammer, a chopping block, and a ceramic vase. He then repeatedly raped Annette Carlson, who was 24 years old, breaking several of her bones. He slit her wrists and tried to strangle her with a telephone cord before setting their home on fire and leaving them to go up in flames.

But Mrs. Carlson survived the fire; she lived and she testified against her attacker. That testimony sent him to prison where he resides, I believe, to this day. But she has been forced to change her name. She lives anonymously and she continues to live in fear that one day her attacker may be released and come back after her.

When I was mayor of San Francisco, she called me several times to notify me that she had found out that he was up for parole, and she begged me to do what I could to see that she would know if he was released so she could protect herself. Amazingly, it was up to her to find this information. The system did not provide it.

I believe no American citizen should have to live out of fear that their attacker will be released from jail or from prison without their notice. That is a basic right provided by this measure.

In 1979, a killing occurred which galvanized the victims' rights movement in California. A young woman named Catina Rosa Salerno was murdered on her first day of school at the University of the Pacific in Stockton. The killer was an 18-year-old, Steven Jones Burns, Catina's high school sweetheart and a trusted family friend. After shooting her, Burns went back to his dorm room to watch Monday night football. He could see her as she bled to death outside his window.

During the trial, the family was not allowed in the courtroom and had to sit outside waiting for news. The murder of Catina had a profound and lasting effect on the family. Her mother, Harriet, and her father, Michael, cofounded Crime Victims United, one of California's more outspoken groups for victims' rights, and the family has since that day worked tirelessly to educate the public about the rights of crime victims.

These cases helped California become the first State in the Nation to pass a crime victims' constitutional amendment, an amendment to the State Constitution of California, Proposition 8, in 1982. It gave victims the right to restitution, the right to testify at sentencing, probation, and parole hearings, established a right to safe and secure public school campuses, and made various changes in criminal law. It was a good start.

Since that time, a total of 32 States have passed constitutional amendments to provide victims of crime with certain basic rights. All of them have passed by substantial margins—Alabama, 80 percent; Connecticut, 78 percent; Idaho, 79 percent; Illinois, 77 percent; Indiana, 89 percent; Kansas, 84 percent. Some States passed them by constitutional convention: South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin.

What is wrong with that? What is wrong is the paperwork quilt of different rights provided by different State Constitutions. The remaining States—18 of them—provide no basic rights for a victim of a violent crime. We provide a basic core of rights—of notice, of presence, to be heard, to be noticed of an attacker's release, to restitution if ordered by a judge—eight certain, basic, core rights that exist for every victim of a violent crime throughout the United States. For the first time in history, the Constitution would recognize a victim has core basic rights, that those rights are present in the Constitution, and that the victims are free to exercise those rights.

In summary, I know this amendment is controversial. I know there are those who will say these State amendments are enough. I want to give a few examples of why the State amendments are not enough.

Maryland has a State amendment. But when Cheryl Rae Enochs Resch was beaten to death with a ceramic beer mug by her husband, her mother was not notified of the killer's release 2½ years into the 10-year sentence. The mother was not given the opportunity to be heard about this release—in violation of the Maryland constitutional amendment.

Arizona has a State constitutional amendment, but an independent audit of victim-witness programs in four Arizona counties, including Maricopa County, where Phoenix is located, found that victims were not consistently notified of hearings; they were not conferred with by prosecutors regarding plea bargains; they were not consistently provided with an opportunity to request postconviction notification.

Ohio has a State amendment. But when the murderer of Maxine Johnson's husband changed his plea, Maxine was not notified of the public hearing and was not given the opportunity to testify at his sentencing as provided in Ohio law.

A Justice Department-supported study of the implementation of State victims' rights amendments released earlier this year made similar findings:

Even in States with strong legal protections for victims' rights, the Victims' Rights study revealed many victims are denied their rights. Statutes themselves appear to be insufficient to guarantee the provision of victims' rights.

The report goes on:

Nearly two-thirds of crime victims, even in states with strong victims' rights protection, were not notified that the accused offender was out on bond.

Therefore, the victim had no opportunity to protect himself or herself.

Nearly one half of all victims, even in the strong protection states, did not receive notice of the sentencing hearing—notice that is essential if they are to exercise their right to make a statement at sentencing.

Finally:

A substantial number of victims reported they were not given an opportunity to make a victim impact statement at sentencing or parole.

State amendments are not enough. The reason a Federal statute will not work is that it has not worked before and our area of coverage is too small. The best Federal statute we could pass would cover but 1 percent of victims of violent crimes in this Nation.

That leaves but one remedy. It is a difficult remedy. It takes time. It imposes an act of conscience on every Member of this body and the other body who believes the Constitution of the United States should not be amended: Is it worthy to make this amendment to afford the victim of a rape attack, the victim of an attempted murder attack, with the notice as to when that individual is going to be released from jail or prison? I think it is.

Is this a worthy enough cause so that an individual can at least be noticed when a trial is going to take place, can at least be present, can at least make a statement, can at least have an order of restitution if ordered by a judge, and to at least have notice of these basic rights? I think so.

I don't believe the Constitution of the United States was written purposefully to exclude victims. The victim was part of the trial. The victim brought the trial. The victim brought the investigation. The victim was present in court. And our country functioned that way until the mid-19th century and the evolution of the public prosecutor.

The only way to remedy this significant omission, I contend, is to amend the Constitution of the United States and at long last show the Constitution is, in fact, a living document, that it does expand to take into consideration the evolution of circumstances within our country. This cannot be done, it cannot be achieved, without an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the people who have followed the victims' rights amendment closely know that I voted for this measure in the Judiciary Committee, and that I did so despite some reservations about its provisions and its language. No one has worked harder on this issue than the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee's Subcommittee on Technology, Terrorism, and Government Information—Senator JON KYL. He has been a tireless advocate for victims rights, and has done more than most will ever appreciate to make the Senate's consideration of this proposed resolution a reality. Both he, and his lead cosponsor and ranking member on the Subcommittee, Senator DIANNE FEINSTEIN, are to be commended. Frankly, they—and the committed network of victims' advocates—are why we are here today. It is because of their tireless commitment to this measure that I will vote to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed to consideration of S.J. Res. 3. I should be clear, however, that I do so with some reservations concerning the proposed text of the amendment. But I hope my concerns can be addressed during the floor debate on the resolution.

Among my reservations are:

Its scope: the amendment's protections apply only to violent crimes;

Its vagueness: some of its definitions are unclear and will be subject to too much judicial discretion; and

Its effects on principles of federalism: the proposed amendment could pave the way for more federal control over state legal proceedings.

Given my reservations, some of my colleagues have asked how I could nevertheless approve the Senate's consideration of S.J Res. 3. I'd like to explain, beginning with a little background on the origins of the criminal justice system.

Our Constitution provides the backbone for what has unquestionably evolved into the best criminal justice system that has ever existed on Earth. Decent and thoughtful people have worked for over two hundred years writing and re-writing the statutes, case law, rules and procedures that guide the judges and lawyers who run the system. Those laws and rules have, by and large, kept the courts appropriately focused on the twin goals of seeking the truth and protecting the accused from arbitrary or unreasonable government actions.

Although our criminal justice system is the best, it is not perfect. There are many ways in which it could improve. One of the most important areas needing improvement is the manner in which the criminal justice system treats victims of crime.

The fact that the drafters of the Constitution did not include specific rights for victims of crime is not surprising. At that time, there was no need for such rights because victims were parties to the legal actions against their perpetrators. There was no such thing as a public prosecutor; victims brought cases against their attackers. When the Constitution was drafted, victims of crime were protected by the same rights given to any party to litigation.

The rights of victims were dramatically altered—along with the rest of the criminal justice system—with the advent of government-paid public prosecutors in the mid-1800s. Since then, the government, not the victim, has been the party litigating against criminals in court. Obviously this has been a tremendously important effect on society by ensuring that criminals are punished even when their victims could not, or would not, prosecute them. Today we would not have even a semblance of crime control without public prosecutors.

Unfortunately, however, one side-effect of replacing victims with public prosecutors was to force victims to the sidelines of the criminal justice system. No longer are victims parties to the case. No longer do individual victims have legal representation in court. No longer are the victims an integral part of the process. Instead, victims have become relegated to the role of one-call witnesses who can be summoned—or not—by either side.

The distance between victims and the criminal process has grown greater over time. Prosecutors are overworked, courts face backlogs of cases, and prisons are overcrowded. These practical constraints, together with strategic legal considerations, has led to an increasingly institutional view of crime—a view that focuses on processing cases rather than involving victims.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I believe the time has come for the Senate to consider the victims rights amendment. The issue for the Senate should not be whether we pass a victims' rights amendment—I believe we should do so. But I believe we must ensure that whatever form our final product takes, we have fully debated and considered the matter. In the end, deliberations and our final passage of a victims' rights amendment will have profound, reaching effects on the criminal justice system. We need to be sure the results are as we would wish them to be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I listened to my two distinguished colleagues. Not only are all colleagues "distinguished" colleagues, but these two are also personal friends. One is a Republican, one a Democrat. Both are individuals I like very much, individuals with whom I enjoy working on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

However, notwithstanding our friendship and our service on the same committee, I must disagree with them on this constitutional amendment.

I do not disagree with them at all on the intent of the amendment to give victims rights; to make sure they can be heard in sentencing, to make sure their views are sought out in every area from plea bargains to compensation. I know in the 8 years I was a prosecutor I did that. It was the standard procedure in my office. I insisted that victims be heard in the pre-sentence report, victims be heard by the court, victims be heard by the prosecutor's office if a determination was made to either bring extra charges or to drop some charges—whatever the reason might be.

I must admit, I would have been very concerned had there been a constitutional amendment of this nature because I can almost picture the number of appeals, the number of delays, and the number of other issues that would come up. In many ways, it would create, in my view, just the opposite effect from that which the sponsors want; that is, so many appeals could come out of this that everybody would lose sight of who is being prosecuted and why.

Last Wednesday, we observed the fifth anniversary of the killing of 168 Americans in the horrific bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City, and we opened the Oklahoma City National Memorial.

Every American was shocked at the initial bombing. Every American must have been moved by the speeches and the observance at the memorial. I remember, after that terrible incident, the Senate proceeded to consider antiterrorism legislation. The incident was in the spring, and by June, we were considering antiterrorism legislation. In fact, at that time the Senate accepted my amendment to include victims legislation in the antiterrorism bill. I worked with Senator MCCAIN to increase assessments against those convicted of crime, with the assessments to go to the Crime Victims Fund. When the matter was completed the following year, we preserved our legislative improvements to help victims of terrorism in the United States, in fact around the world, as the Justice for Victims of Terrorism Act of 1996. We moved very quickly to respond.

Last Thursday, we also observed the anniversary of the tragic violence at Columbine High School. That was one in a series of deadly incidents of school violence over the last few years. Scores of our Nation's children have been killed or wounded over the last 3 years from school violence, and that violence has shaken families and communities across our Nation. In the wake of the Columbine violence, the Senate moved to the consideration of juvenile crime legislation. We had one of the few real Senate debates in the past few years. We had a 2-week debate. During that 2-week debate, we greatly improved the bill with numerous amendments, including a number directed at commonsense, consensus gun safety laws.

On May 20 last year, within a month of the Columbine tragedy, the Senate acted to pass the Hatch-Leahy juvenile crime bill. We did it by a 3–1 margin, but since last May when we passed it, the Congress has kept the country waiting for final action on the legislation. Since last May, the Congress and the Senate have kept the country waiting for sensible gun safety laws. It has been now more than a year since the tragic event at Columbine High School in Littleton, CO; more than a year since 14 students and a teacher lost their lives in that tragedy on April 20, 1999. Still, the American people are waiting for action by this Congress.

It has been more than 11 months since the Senate passed the Hatch-Leahy juvenile justice bill by a bipartisan vote of 73–25. It had modest, but I believe effective, gun safety provisions in it. It has been more than 8 months since the House and Senate juvenile justice conference met. That was only a ceremonial meeting. We did it for the first and the last and the only time. Throughout the entire school year that has ensued, the Republican Senate chairman of the House-Senate conference and the Republican leadership of the Congress, have refused to call this conference back to work. The Senate and House Democrats have been ready for months to reconvene the juvenile justice conference and work with Republicans to craft an effective juvenile justice conference report that includes reasonable gun safety provisions. But the majority has refused to act.

I think the lack of attention, a lack of effective action is shameful, particularly in light of the fact that Congress has spent far more time in recess than in session since the first ceremonial meeting of the conference.

I spoke on the floor several times over the last year—on September 8, September 9, October 21, March 21, March 28, March 29, April 5, April 6, April 13, and today—urging the majority to reconvene the juvenile justice conference. I have joined with Senators, both in writing and on the floor, to request the Senate leadership let us complete our work on the conference and send a good bill to the President. We should not delay simply because some powerful gun lobbies do not want us to pass even the most modest gun safety legislation; even the modest provision that closes this huge loophole we now have for gun shows where somebody in a flea market can sell firearms to felons.

On October 20, 1999, all the House and Senate Democratic conferees sent a letter to Senator HATCH and Congressman HYDE, calling for an open meeting of the conference. On March 3 of this year, after another shocking school shooting involving 6-year-old classmates in Michigan, Representative CONYERS and I wrote again to Senator HATCH and Congressman HYDE requesting an immediate meeting of the conference. The response has been resounding silence.

Even a bipartisan letter on April 11 from the Republican chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, HENRY HYDE, and the Ranking Democrat, JOHN CONYERS, to the Republican Senate chairman of the conference, Senator HATCH, has not succeeded in getting the conference back to work. We have to find time, or at least the will, to pass balanced, comprehensive juvenile crime legislation. This is something that could be signed into law today, or within a day after being passed. This is legislation we passed by a 73–25 margin, and then we hold it in abeyance because the gun lobbyists said do not touch this.

What have we done in the meantime? We keep having a number of proposed constitutional amendments. Last month, it was a proposed constitutional amendment regarding the flag. I spoke at the beginning and end of that debate to urge the Senate to turn to completing our work on the juvenile crime bill, health care reform legislation, on minimum wage legislation, on privacy legislation, on confirming the Federal judges needed in our courts around the country, and all the other matters that have been sidetracked this year. But rather than doing the legislative work that we should do first and foremost, we are now going to turn our attention to another constitutional amendment, this one with regard to crime victims' rights.

I believe constitutional amendments, if they are brought up, should be approached seriously. The distinguished Senator from Arizona and the distinguished Senator from California have approached it seriously. But that means a real, serious debate. If we are going to amend the Constitution of the United States, we should do it seriously. Instead, late on Thursday, after we voted to adopt an adjournment resolution, and everybody had left for the airport, the majority leader came to the floor to move to proceed to this matter. I do not think constitutional amendments should be a time filler to be called upon when we do not want to proceed to legislative items. Nor is a constitutional amendment the type of item that should be rushed through Senate consideration. It should be explored and thoughtfully considered. If we are going to start having constitutional amendments rather than legislative matters, then let's set aside a good period of time—a few weeks—to talk about this one.

Let's talk about the others that should come up. I can think of at least two. Let's have a constitutional amendment debate on abortion. For those who think Roe v. Wade should be the law of the land, let's write it into the Constitution. For those who think it should not be, this is the chance to overrule the Supreme Court. Let's settle once and for all this whole constitutional issue on abortion. Let's have a constitutional amendment on that. I am perfectly willing to move forward with that. Even though I have stated my strong positions on this issue, let's have a debate on it.

There are those who are concerned about whether we have too many gun rights and those who think we do not have enough. Maybe we should have a gun amendment to clarify the second amendment. Maybe we should get these issues out of the way once and for all. We can spend a few weeks on each one of these. We can be done by late August, and the Senate will have spoken as to how they think it should be done.

The last two times the Senate debated the so-called balanced budget amendment, those debates consumed a number of weeks, as they should. This was a palliative I happened to oppose. We were told that without a constitutional amendment to balance the budget, we could never balance the budget. Many of us said if we did our work and wrote the legislation the right way we could. Of course, that is exactly what happened. We did not need a constitutional amendment after all. We are now debating how to spend the budget surpluses because we balanced the budget without a constitutional amendment.

This proposed amendment is of similar length and additional complexity and will require some time to debate, as we did with the balanced budget amendment.

In addition, of course, this is the first time this amendment will be debated by the Senate. It has never been debated by the House. So there is a lot of new ground to cover. If we are to pass it, I know the House will want to look to our debate. I assume there will be weeks of debate on it, as there should be. It is a legitimate issue.

I think it can be handled statutorily, but if we are going to do it in the Constitution, we should spend the weeks necessary to make sure we get it right.

By way of illustration, the Judiciary Committee took more than 6 months to file its report on the proposed amendment, even though a similar measure had been the subject of a report last Congress. I note that the majority views in the committee report run over 40 pages. The principal sponsors, Senators KYL and FEINSTEIN, added a statement of their own additional views on top of those. I urge all Senators to read them because they are worth reading. I note that the minority views, in which I join with Senators KENNEDY, KOHL, and FEINGOLD, extend over 35 pages. I think they are well worth reading. There is a lot of discussion in them.

We will vote today on the majority leader's motion to invoke cloture on the motion to proceed. I will not oppose invoking cloture on the motion to proceed. In fact, I urge Senators to vote for cloture on the motion to proceed. I hope it will be a 100–0 vote. But once we proceed to consideration of this measure, my colleagues should understand that it is an important matter that will require some extensive debate, and we will see serious and substantial amendments to this proposal. I have heard from both sides of the aisle. I told the distinguished Senator from California that I will offer a statutory alternative in the days ahead that can move the cause of crime victims' rights forward immediately by a simple majority vote, without the additional complications and delays the constitutional amendment ratification process might entail, and without the need to return to Congress to draft, introduce, and pass implementing legislation. There will be other amendments, as I have said.

I know the distinguished sponsors of this amendment have been through more than 60 drafts to date. This is not an easy issue. It is hardly fixed in stone. It has not had Senate scrutiny. In fact, a number of Senators told me when they came back from the recess that they were surprised to know this was coming up because it was added to the agenda after we had voted to adjourn for the Easter recess. Many Senators are surprised it is before us. I have told them the proposed constitutional amendment is important. I think its meanings and mandates have to be explored.

In my personal view—and I actually note this with some sadness—the focus on the constitutional amendment has actually had the unintended consequence of slowing the pace of victims' rights legislation over the past several years. I am reminded of the debate we had year after year of the need for a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. President Reagan, who submitted budgets with the biggest deficits in the Nation's history, would always give great speeches about needing a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. Of course, I used to tell him: There you go again. All you had to do was introduce a balanced budget and let us vote on it. Instead, he introduced budgets, as was his right as President, with enormous deficits, and then a few days later gave a speech saying: I wish we had a constitutional amendment to balance the budget so we could balance this budget.

A President came along who did balance the budget. It was a very tough vote. I remember that vote in 1993. By a 1-vote margin in the House—no Republicans voted to balance the budget, which means cutting a whole lot of programs—no Republicans voted for it. It passed by a 1-vote margin in the House. It was a tie vote in the Senate. Vice President GORE had to preside and cast the deciding vote for a balanced budget.

It was tough. A lot of special interest groups from the right to the left saw their programs nailed, but it was the only way to balance the budget, and we balanced it. The stock market and the various financial markets took note: This is serious; they really are serious. That vote began this huge economic surge in this country. I do recall some on the other side saying: Why, if we vote to balance the budget, we are going to have enormous layoffs, 20 percent unemployment, we are going to have a depression, we are going to have a recession—all these things. Instead, the economy has created the most jobs ever in the history of our Nation. We have had the greatest economic expansion in our Nation's history and an enormous budget surplus. That is what happened, but it took a tough vote, not a palliative of a constitutional amendment to balance the budget; a tough vote.

A lot of Democrats who were courageous enough to actually vote to balance the budget were defeated the next year because they had to cast such unpopular votes to balance the budget. They did the right thing, and their children and grandchildren will bless them for it.

I have argued that rather than look again, in this case victims' rights, to a constitutional amendment, we should be looking at a statutory way, the same way we did with the balanced budget. I wish the Senate was considering the Victims Assistance Act, S. 934, and its extensive provisions to improve crime victims' rights and protections now and do that during this debate. Instead of during the next several weeks debating the constitutional amendment, why don't we debate S. 934?

I wish we would consider our Seniors Safety Act, S. 751, that helps protect our seniors from nursing home fraud and abuse and creates protections for victims of telemarketing fraud. These senior citizens who are abused in nursing homes and who are ripped off from telemarketing frauds are victims also.

I wish the Senate would consider a number of the scores of additional legislative proposals that would assist crime victims. Instead of the weeks we will spend on this constitutional amendment, why don't we debate the Violence Against Women Act II, S. 51, that my friend, Senator BIDEN, has championed? That bill will continue and improve important and effective programs for domestic violence victims and other victims of crime. The aid to those victims of crime would be immediate.

Senator WELLSTONE has introduced the International Trafficking of Women and Children Victim Protection Act, S. 600. It has received little attention, but it should be debated. He also sponsored the Battered Women's Economic Security and Safety Act, S. 1069, and the Children Who Witness Domestic Violence Protection Act, S. 1321. These bills were introduced to improve the safety and security of these victims, but they are not being considered.

It is said that we do not have time, but we are going to spend several weeks on a constitutional amendment that would still have to go through the other body, and would still have to go to the States for approval and ratification. During those several weeks, we could be debating those pieces of legislation for victims.

Senators SNOWE, HUTCHISON, GRAMS, ASHCROFT, SMITH, ABRAHAM, HATCH, EDWARDS, DURBIN, TORRICELLI, and others have sponsored legislation to help crime victims, but I do not think we are going to consider them. We are going to debate a proposed constitutional amendment. We will spend several weeks on something that is not self-executing but would require additional follow-on legislation in any event, but we are told we do not have time to debate, again, legislation which could apply help to victims this summer.

So as we turn to this constitutional debate, I observe it is not a matter on which the immediate filing of a cloture motion would be appropriate. I urge all Senators—Republicans and Democrats alike—to vote for cloture on the motion to proceed. But if we are serious about debating this measure, then we should debate it. The distinguished Senator from Arizona should have all the time he needs to talk about it. The distinguished Senator from California should have all the time she needs to talk about it. Other Senators who strongly support it should have all the time they need. But a number of Senators who disagree with them ought to have time to speak, too.

If it means setting aside other legislative agenda, then let's do so. We have a short legislative calendar filled with recesses as it is. Do away with a couple of the recesses and devote a significant portion of that time to this. It is not my first choice. I would prefer to go to legislative matters on the calendar. But if we are going to bring up a constitutional amendment, let's do it right.

I hope once we turn to the measure, the majority leader will recognize the inappropriateness of filing a cloture motion on this unexplored, proposed constitutional amendment. When that course was followed in 1995 in connection with the constitutional amendment to impose term limits on Congress, it short circuited the debate and prevented any serious consideration or amendment.

But then I suspect in that case it was because a lot of the people who said they were for term limits never wanted to actually vote on term limits. We have had people in this body who have been for term limits before I was born, people who have come back here 20 and 30 and 40 years to the Congress saying: We have to do something about term limits. They are so determined they will stay here if it takes them 100 years. If they have to serve for 100 years to get term limits, they will do it. It is probably why we have never voted on term limits, because it is a lot easier to talk about it than to vote on it. It is like a balanced budget; it is a lot easier to talk about it than to vote on it.

But we have a serious matter here. It has never been considered by the Senate, so we should talk about it. I think it could erect technical problems for important amendments such as proposals of statutory alternatives. But both the supporters and the opponents should know that we should have debate on it.

We have had a number of people, conservative commentators such as George Will and Stewart Taylor, who have spoken out strongly against it. We have had liberal commentators who have spoken out against it.

We have editorials from the New York Times, the Washington Post, and others who have opposed it—people ranging from Chief Justice William Rehnquist to Bud Welch, the father of one of the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing.

I ask unanimous consent that a partial list of those opponents be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ENZI). Who yields time?

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, let me take a few minutes to respond to the distinguished ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator LEAHY.

He is absolutely correct that constitutional amendments should not be rushed. We have taken a long time to get to this point—4 years. As a matter of fact, in the Judiciary Committee alone we have heard from 34 witnesses and have had 802 pages of testimony and submissions. In the House, there have been hearings. They have had 32 witnesses and about 575 pages of testimony and submissions. In other words, there have been about 66 witnesses and nearly 1,400 pages of testimony.

I commend the report of the Judiciary Committee to anyone who would like a really good read on this entire subject and the reasons why we need a Federal constitutional amendment.

The bill passed out of the Judiciary Committee 12–5. We took our time getting it to the Senate floor to make sure everybody had their say. The distinguished ranking minority member needed additional time to file his comments to the report. That was granted. He did so.

We agree there should be adequate time for the debate of this constitutional amendment, but we disagree that there should be a filibuster to use unnecessary time of the Senate.

Senator LEAHY talked about a lot of things. He talked about abortion, gun control, a balanced budget amendment and Ronald Reagan, the juvenile crime bill, nursing home fraud, and term limits. I would suggest that we ought to stick to the subject.

We all know one good way to defeat a good idea is to talk it to death and threaten to delay other business of the Senate.

I would suggest we stick to the exact question before us, and that is whether there should be a constitutional amendment protecting victims of crime.

Senator FEINSTEIN and I have laid out the case for this.

As I heard Senator LEAHY, there was only one fleeting reference to an argument in opposition. That was that the Senate had acted with alacrity in dealing with the problems that the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing case were suffering because the judge there did not permit the victims to attend the trial. Basically, he gave them a choice, over a lunch hour one day, saying: You can either attend the trial or be present at the time of sentencing and speak to that issue, but you cannot do both. Take your pick. What a Hobson's choice. The prosecutor really could not help advise the victims. Some of them chose not to attend the trial. Others chose to attend.

Senator LEAHY is correct about one thing. The Congress did act quickly to pass a law basically telling the Federal judge that they did have a right to attend the trial and the right to attend the sentencing and to speak at that time and that he should not deny them that right.

We passed that. The day after the Senate passed it, the President signed it into law. We were so concerned that these victims of that horrible tragedy have their rights protected that we passed a Federal statute—exactly what Senator LEAHY is suggesting as an alternative to the Federal constitutional amendment that Senator FEINSTEIN and I have presented.

What has happened? What has happened is that we are worse off than we were before we passed the statute. The judge did not apply the statute to protect the victims of crime. In effect, what happened was that the defendant's right to exclude them, based in the U.S. Constitution, trumped the Federal statute which, of course, is subservient to the Federal Constitution. If that was the basis on which the court ruled, it would have been a correct basis. If he really felt the defendant's rights required that the victims not be present in the courtroom, and that those rights are in the U.S. Constitution, then he would be correct that that would trump a Federal statute—the one that the Congress passed.

Clearly, the Oklahoma City bombing litigation leaves no doubt about the difficulties that victims face with mere statutory protection of their rights. For a number of the victims, the rights afforded in the act Congress passed in 1997 and the earlier victims' rights bill were not protected. They did not observe the trial of the defendant in that case, Timothy McVeigh, because of lingering doubts about the constitutional status of the statutes.

The interesting thing is that because that case was later taken up on appeal, the case of these victims, and the Tenth Circuit ruled in that case denying the victims the rights notwithstanding the Federal statute, you literally have a situation in which it would have been better if Congress had not acted by statute because there is now a precedent on the books. This was the first time victims sought Federal appellate review of their rights since the Victims Bill of Rights was passed in 1990, the underlying statute on which the 1997 statute was based.

Quoting now from Professor Paul Cassell:

> The undeniable, and unfortunate, result of that litigation has been to establish—as the only reported federal appellate ruling—a precedent that will make effective enforcement of the federal victims rights statutes quite difficult. It is now the law of the 10th circuit that victims lack "standing" to be heard on issues surrounding the Victims' Bill of Rights and, for good measure, that the Department of Justice may not take an appeal for the victims under either of those statutes. For all practical purposes, the treatment of crime victims' rights in federal court in Utah, Colorado, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Wyoming have been remitted to the unreviewable discretion of individual federal district court judges.

Professor Paul Cassell of the University of Utah Law School concludes:

> The fate of the Oklahoma City victims does not inspire confidence that all victims rights will be fully enforced in the future.
> . . . the Oklahoma City case provides a compelling illustration of why a constitutional amendment is necessary to fully protect victims' rights in this country.

The sad truth is that Congress's efforts to protect the rights in a very specific case by Federal statute not only didn't protect their rights but made matters worse. The statutory alternative Senators KENNEDY and LEAHY have proposed is not the answer. There has been no refutation of the point I tried to make in my original 10-minute statement that authority after authority after authority—the Attorney General, the Governors, the attorneys general—have all said that despite their best efforts, the statutory and State constitutional remedies simply have not worked to provide protections to victims of violent crime. After 18 years of experimenting, of trying, of doing their best, it is obviously now necessary to move forward with the next step, which is to elevate these rights to the same Constitution that protects the rights of the defendants. Nothing less is going to work.

I submit the arguments that Senator FEINSTEIN and I made have not been refuted. If the only response is that we are going to have to take a long time talking about extraneous matters, then my suggestion is that there is no real argument by those who oppose this amendment. There is no real substance to the notion that we shouldn't move forward.

I reiterate, I am pleased that Senator LEAHY will encourage all of his colleagues, as I certainly will encourage mine, on both sides of the aisle to support the motion to proceed. We do need to proceed. When we proceed, we can have that debate. Senator FEINSTEIN and I will renew our offer to continue to meet with the Department of Justice to get more suggestions from them. We have, in fact, incorporated many of their suggestions into the current text of the amendment. But it is time to move on. We can't keep putting it off. That is why we filed the cloture motion. That is why we want to proceed.

I appreciate what Senator LEAHY said, but I suggest that we need to move on with the debate on this amendment. Senator FEINSTEIN and I are prepared to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, if I may, I would like to have an opportunity to ask the Senator from Arizona a couple of questions. I thought he pointed out very ably the problem of a statute filling the void, the first problem being that the rights of the accused will always trump the rights of the victim. He pointed out very well and very ably and very specifically the situation that took place with respect to Oklahoma City.

Then we turned to the FBI to try to get the amount of coverage that could be achieved in the statute for victims across this great land. We were told that really the best we could do would be to protect by statute the 1 to 2 percent of victims who were victimized by violent crimes.

I think it is important that we discuss a little bit more why the Constitution will always trump a State law. I ask the Senator to lay that out once again.

Mr. KYL. I thank the Senator. I am pleased to do so.

I think she makes three very important points. One very important point she made is that if you have a Federal statute, you are only dealing with 1 to 2 percent of the victims of violent crime—those 8 million victims each year. Of course, that is the number of Federal crimes. There aren't very many serious Federal crimes that would carry the penalties necessary to invoke this constitutional provision. A Federal statute would be very small and of no comfort to the millions of victims of crime involved in State court proceedings.

Secondly, there are occasions when, as in the Oklahoma City bombing case, a defendant's rights are asserted based on an amendment to the Constitution. Sometimes, for example, the judge will say: Well, I am going to exclude witnesses. I will exclude victims from the courtroom because the defendant thinks it will create undue emotion, that it will jeopardize his right to a fair trial if the jury sees the victim or the family of the victim. That was the case in the Oklahoma City bombing case and in scores of others Senator FEINSTEIN has brought to the attention of the Senate.

Of course, the defendant and his family are permitted to sit there all dressed up and supportive of the defendant at the time of sentencing and to stand up and say what a fine fellow he is. The judge takes that into consideration. We are simply saying the victims ought to be able to stand before the judge and recount the horror, the tragedy, the weakness, the loss they have suffered for the judge to take into account as well at the time of sentencing. If the defendant's constitutional rights are deemed always to be superior because they are embodied in the U.S. Constitution and the victim's rights are always secondary, then the victim's rights will be honored in the breach rather than the observance, to quote one of the people I quoted earlier.

That is why the third point is so important. Even when there isn't a direct conflict—and there will rarely be a direct conflict—the primary situation will be presence in the courtroom at the time of trial. But in most situations there won't be the direct conflict between the defendant's right and the victim's right. It simply is a matter of inertia.

Perhaps Senator FEINSTEIN can find the quotation she read before. I think it was Professor Tribe whom the Senator quoted, who talked about judicial indifference, inertia. Well-meaning judges and prosecutors don't mean to deny victims the notice of the proceedings and the right to be present, but it becomes a secondary matter. We give the Miranda warning to the defendant. We make sure the defendant has legal counsel that people hire on his behalf, and we make absolutely certain that none of the defendant's rights are intruded upon, because if they are, the case will be overturned on appeal. And that is as it should be. But because of that attention to the constitutional rights of the defendant, we forget the victim. It is in that sense that the victims' rights are simply not being honored, why 60 percent—even in the States with good provisions—of the victims do not even get notice. That is a horrible statistic. What if we said 60 percent of the defendants didn't get their court-appointed lawyer, that it was too inconvenient or too costly? Sixty percent is a pretty good percentage. Clearly, we would find that inadequate. Fundamental rights are fundamental rights and they need to be protected.

So I think the Senator from California is correct that even though we don't mean to deny these rights, either because of the attention paid to the defendants or simply because of the fact there are other things more important to do than make sure victims have notice of these proceedings, they are denied their rights and the ability to participate.

A final point. There has been the contention that somehow it is going to become very expensive if—as we do with defendants—society has to pay for their rights. We do that for defendants; we pay for their attorneys, for their transcripts, and everything they need for their appeals. What we did here was not guarantee that victims have the right to attend the trial. For example, as are most of the provisions of the Constitution, we have said that the Government may not deny them the right to participate. They have to get there. They have to get there on their own. It is just that the Government can't deny them the right to sit on the bench in the courtroom if they show up.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Let me stop the Senator on that point because I think he has very well expressed what we are trying to do. We have discussed this before. I think the whole body should hear this. We know that those who are accused have basic rights. We know that the prosecution usually wants to try to get the victim in the courtroom. The defense attorney wants to keep the victim out of the courtroom. Supposing a situation arises where you have an emboldened or abusive victim, or one who is overly emotional, under our amendment, how would this work? What rights would the judge have in this situation?

Mr. KYL. I thank the Senator for that question because people not familiar with the process inside a courtroom may wonder if this amendment would permit a victim to cause a big scene in court, thus disrupting the trial and working to the disadvantage of the defendant. Of course, as the Senator knows, a judge has total control of the courtroom and has the ability to set whatever rules are necessary to maintain decorum and dignity within the courtroom and certainly to ensure the protection of the fair trial rights of the defendant. That is why a judge can always say—and we have seen it on TV hundreds of times—''order in the court,'' in effect saying, if you can't sit there quietly and unemotionally watching what is occurring, then you have to leave. Because in the court we cannot have undue displays of emotion. So the judge has within his total authority the ability to control either the defendant from his or her outbursts or any emotional outbursts of anybody else in the courtroom, including victims.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank the Senator. The Senator and I worked extensively with both Laurence Tribe, a professor of constitutional law at Harvard University, and Paul Cassell, a professor of law at the University of Utah College of Law. Both are very skilled and knowledgeable in this area. I happened to find an article that they wrote together in a newspaper. I thought it might be interesting to hear their view. I would like to read it to you and ask for your response:

> We take it to be common ground that the Constitution should never be amended merely to achieve short-term, partisan, or purely policy objectives. Apart from a needed change in governmental structure, an amendment is appropriate only when the goal involves a basic human right that by consensus deserves permanent respect, is not and cannot adequately be protected through State or Federal legislation—> would not distort basic principles of the separation of powers among the Federal branches or the division of powers between the national and state governments or the balance of powers between government and private citizens with respect to their basic rights.

I think we have shown why that can't happen—

>
> The proposed Victims Rights Amendment meets these demanding criteria. It would protect basic rights of crime victims, including their rights to be notified of and present at all proceedings in their case and to be heard at appropriate stages in the process. These are rights not to be victimized again through the process by which government officials prosecute, punish and release accused or convicted offenders.

Then it goes on to say:

> These are the very kinds of rights with which our Constitution is typically and particularly concerned—rights of individuals to participate in all those government processes that strongly affect their lives. ''Participation in all forms of government is the essence of democracy,'' President Clinton concluded in endorsing the amendment.

Now, what we come down to, essentially, is how do you express these things in a way that gives victims these certain basic rights? I think we have tried to do that. We put it up on a schedule here of crime victims' rights. I wish to quickly go over this. The rights of the accused are on the left. The rights we would afford victims are on the right. In a sense, we achieve a kind of balance. Now, the question comes when and if these rights come into conflict. The fact is, I think we both believe it will be rare that these rights come into conflict. As was said, with an emotional victim, there is in the law already the opportunity for a judge to handle this situation.

I have had a very hard time, because the Senator and I have had a number of critics on this; we have had a number of newspapers that have editorialized and said that what we are trying is trivial, not important. But let me tell you something. If you are a rape victim and you have reason to believe that individual may come back after you, it is not unimportant that you have notice when that individual is released from prison or from jail. It is not unimportant at all. I indicated earlier a case of an individual who has had to change her name and live in fear and anonymity because of this. The Constitution should protect that victim, and that is what we try to do. So I have had a very hard time seeing instances where there is actual conflict.

My question of the Senator is, Can the Senator expand on this more and indicate where there is conflict? People have said, ''You diminish the rights of the accused.'' I don't see us diminishing the rights of the accused. Their rights are very specific. We don't touch on these. There is the right to counsel, the right to due process, the right to a speedy trial. We want that, as well, because we know that the speed of the trial is an important deterrent to violence. We know that if a trial is not speedy, evidence grows cold, witnesses disappear. It is much more difficult to make a case if there is a long hiatus between arrest and trial. In fact, Federal law recognizes that by moving trials along in an expeditious way.

Double jeopardy. We certainly don't interfere with that. We certainly don't interfere with the prohibition against self-incrimination or against unreasonable search and seizure, probable cause, a jury of peers, the right to be informed, the right to confront witnesses, to subpoena witnesses, a prohibition against excessive bail, the right to a grand jury. There are a few other rights written into the Constitution. But our rights are so basic for a victim, such as the right to have notice when a trial takes place, the right to be present in the courtroom, the right to make a statement at an appropriate place in the trial, the right to have notice if your assailant is released. These are certain basic, core rights that in no way, shape, or form, it seems to me, interfere with the constitutional rights granted to a defendant or to an accused to protect them from excessive government under the Constitution of the United States.

So I have been very perplexed as to why we see bubbling out there this argument that we are setting up some collision of rights. We are simply trying to provide a victim with certain basic rights that are spelled out and are specific.

Would the Senator care to elaborate on that?

Mr. KYL. I agree it is perplexing how one could conclude a defendant's rights would be trampled on in any way by our proposal. It does not do that.

The article in the Los Angeles Times, quoting Professors Tribe and Cassell, makes the point that ''a victims' rights amendment must, of course, be drafted so the rights of victims will not furnish excuses for roughshod treatment of the accused. The Senate Resolution is such a carefully crafted measure, adding victims' rights that can exist side by side with defendants'.''

Precisely the point. There is only one conceivable circumstance I know of in which there could actually be an assertion of two constitutional rights, one by the defendant and one by the victim, which could theoretically come in conflict, and that is the right to be present at the trial. Courts deal with that today. They would balance the interests tomorrow. We have the same thing existing with respect to the press. We have the right of free press. Say victims want to attend the trial. Sometimes, as we know, judges don't permit that, but it is in the Constitution. That is right. But the defendant has a right to a fair trial as well.

The courts will balance those two interests and generally come to an accommodation that enforces both rights.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Would the Senator finish reading that? I think the next points are very important to our cause. They should be heard.

Mr. KYL. I think the two distinguished law professors make a very important point. They point out the example of paralleling a defendant's constitutionally protected right to a speedy trial. Our amendment confers on victims the right to consideration of their interest in a trial, free from unreasonable delay.

By definition, the professors note, these rights could not collide since they are both designed to bring matters to a close within a reasonable time. If any conflict were to emerge, courts retain ultimate responsibility for harmonizing the rights at stake.

We have also gone one other step. That is, whereas the defendant had an absolute right to a speedy trial—and frequently, also, courts determine he has a right to delay things—we have provided for victims merely that the judge must ''consider'' their desire to bring the trial to a speedy conclusion.

In this case, we have created a right of victims which, indeed, is subservient to the right of the defendants. Theirs is absolute. The victims have a right to have their views considered. We have been very careful to ensure we don't trample on defendants' rights.

I make one more point because the Senator reminded me of something that is very important. In the statement by Professor Mosteller, he makes a relative point that relates to this. ''In theory, victims' rights could be safeguarded without a constitutional amendment. It would only be necessary for actors within the criminal justice system—judges, prosecutors, defense attorneys, and others—to suddenly begin fully respecting victims' rights. The real world question, however, is how to actually trigger such a shift in the Zeitgeist. For nearly two decades, victims have obtained a variety of measures to protect their rights. Yet, the prevailing view from those who work in the field is that these efforts have 'all too often been ineffective.' Rules to assist victims 'frequently fail to provide meaningful protection whenever they come into conflict with'''—and here I break the quotation—not the defendant's rights. They are not conflicting with defendant's rights. That is not why they are denied, but rather ''whenever they come into conflict with bureaucratic habit, traditional indifference, or sheer inertia.''

That is what is preventing these rights from being fully affected—not that they conflict with the defendant's rights.

Here is the conclusion: The view that State victims provisions have been and will continue to often be disregarded is widely shared, as some of the strongest opponents of the amendment seem to concede the point. For example, Ellen Greenlee, president of the National Legal Aid and Defenders Association, bluntly and revealingly told Congress that the State victims amendments, ''so far have been treated as mere statements of principle that victims ought to be included and consulted more by prosecutors and courts. A State constitution is far . . . easier to ignore than the Federal one.''

That is the bottom line point.

State constitutions, even Federal statutes, as we found in the Oklahoma City bombing case, are far easier to ignore than the U.S. Constitution. That is something no judge and no prosecutor can ignore. That is why we want to elevate these rights—not because they conflict with the defendant's rights, not because they take anything away from any accused in the courtroom, but rather because these elemental rights of fairness are not currently being enforced by the judges and prosecutors because they just don't have the stature of the U.S. Constitution.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank the Senator.

If the Senator recalls, in our earlier discussions with the Justice Department, we were very concerned that the rights of the accused not be violated, not be diminished, and we quite consciously left out any specific remedy in this situation so that if someone doesn't exercise their right either to be present or to make a statement, in effect, they have no remedy, or after they make their statement, if the facts in the trial are such and the jury comes in with a decision, they have no right of a remedy.

So the basic core rights we provide are, in a sense, certain procedural rights that give them a place in the process.

Let me read what these two law professors have said on this point:

> The framers of the Constitution undoubtedly assumed the rights of victims would receive decent protection, but experience has not vindicated this assumption. It is now necessary to add a corrective amendment. Doing so would neither extend the Constitution to an issue of mere policy, nor provide special benefits to a particular interest group, nor use the heavy artillery of constitutional amendment where a simpler solution is available, nor would it put the Constitution to a purely symbolic use or enlist it for some narrow partisan purpose. Rather, the proposed amendment would help bridge a distinct and significant gap in our legal system's existing arrangements for the protection of basic human rights against an important category of government abuse.

This, I think, goes right to the question of remedy. We don't provide for a remedy, we simply say you have these basic rights to participate in this manner.

Mr. KYL. If I could put an exclamation point on that.

The point Senator FEINSTEIN makes is this: During the pendency of the proceedings, the victim has the right to assert these rights. For example, if you have a week-long trial and the victim finds out about the trial after the second day, the victim can't go back and say you have to start the trial all over again. All the victim can do is say, hey, I have a right to be there for the rest of the trial.

That is unlike the defendant's rights. Here is the exact language we included: ''Nothing in this article shall provide grounds to stay or continue any trial, reopen any proceeding, or invalidate any ruling''—and there are only two exceptions—''except with respect to conditional release or restitution or to provide rights guaranteed by this article in future proceedings without staying or continuing a trial. Nothing in this article shall give rise to or authorize the creation of a claim for damages . . .''

There are only two exceptions. One is prospective, so long as it does not continue or delay the proceedings. In other words, you have the right to say: Judge, this trial is starting, and I have a right to be there. And the other one is with respect to a conditional release.

I close with this point: You need the right to enforce it with respect to a conditional release.

Here is a true story. Here is how it would work. Patricia Pollard of Flagstaff, AZ, was picked up one night by a man and his wife, ironically, and the man brutally raped her, sliced her up with an open beer can, and left her to die. She lived. He was eventually prosecuted. After the Arizona legislature passed the provision which enabled victims to be notified, the parole board held a hearing on his conditional release. They decided to conditionally release her assailant from the Arizona State Penitentiary, but they did not give her notice.

The Governor's office found out about this, located Patricia Pollard in California, brought her back, and arranged for another meeting of the parole board after they had already made their decision. They agreed to hear her. She spoke about what he had done to her and what she feared he would do to others. The parole board reversed its decision.

I asked Patricia Pollard whether she did that because she feared for her life, that he would come after her again. She said: Well, he might have tried to track me down. But in truth, his crime against me was a random kind of crime. I was available for him to victimize. I simply could not have lived with myself if I had not gone there and told these people what he could do to someone else because I know that had he gotten out, he would have done it to somebody else.

That is why we provide this limited exception, the only situation, really, where something can be done retroactively—where a person was not given notice to attend the parole or conditional release proceedings and the individual has not yet been released, you can go back in and tell your story and just maybe it will make a difference. That is what this amendment is all about, protecting the rights not only of the victims of crime but of the rest of society as well.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank my colleague, yield the floor, and reserve the remainder of our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have listened to the presentations on the floor. Let me say the passion with which the Senator from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, and the Senator from Arizona bring this issue to the floor is a passion I understand. I certainly respect their views.

I have studied this issue at some length. I must say the Senator from California visited with me, I guess, half a dozen times about this issue over the past year or so. But I have reached a different conclusion. It is a difficult trail to get to this point, but my view is the issue is not whether victims in this country have rights in court proceedings, but how we achieve those rights.

It is true that criminals are accorded a whole series of rights in this country. I do not quarrel with that. I do not want us to put innocent people behind bars. It is difficult to convict in this country, and our Constitution establishes certain rights. We try, as a country, to make certain we only put those guilty of crimes, behind bars.

It is also true—and I say this to the Senator from California and the Senator from Arizona—it has been a longer process and a more difficult track, to make certain that victims and victims' families have their rights protected in our court system. I have offered legislation on this issue previously. In fact, I authored language included in the 1994 crime bill, which is now law, that gives crime victims the right to testify at federal sentencing hearings. My provision gives crime victims and their families the right in Federal court to present testimony about ''What this crime meant to me or to my family'' and ensures that judges and parole boards formally consider the impact of a crime on its victims when making sentencing and parole decisions.

I sat in a court at the manslaughter trial of the man on trial for the death of my mother. I am very sensitive to this issue. I understand—being a family member, sitting in a court, watching the trial of the man who was responsible for the death of my mother—I understand the concern a family member has about the rights of the victim and the rights of the victim's family to be present in that court. I understand the desire to present testimony during the sentencing phase, to have an understanding about when someone is let out of prison. I understand all that, and I am very sensitive to it because I have been through it personally, as a result of the tragic death of my mother.

I come to the floor of the Senate today saying I strongly support victims' rights. We are moving in this country in a variety of ways to achieve those rights. Thirty-three States have now amended their state constitutions to specifically describe the rights of victims and their families. Some say that approach does not work very well and is not universal; that sometimes it does not achieve our goal. I understand that argument. I understand the argument that the perpetrator of a heinous and violent crime is brought into the court, now some months later after the crime was committed, and his or her hair is combed, they are in a new suit, they look as if they just finished singing in a church choir, and all their acquaintances testify to what a remarkable person this is. It happens all the time in trials.

This animal who committed the violent murder on a Saturday night, in court 1 month or 2 or 6, or a year later, looks completely different and has a whole set of rights. I understand all that.

My concern is about the Constitution of the United States, and whether we should address this by changing the U.S. Constitution, or whether we should address it by continuing to make the changes, both with respect to Federal law and also mandating changes with respect to State law and State constitutional changes that accomplish the same result.

I have in my hand three pages of constitutional amendments that have been introduced in this session of Congress. We have had several of them, frankly, on the floor of the Senate. These are very important issues. Amending or changing the Constitution of this country ought to be done rarely and then only in circumstances where it is the only opportunity to achieve the change we want as a society. These are three pages of constitutional amendments that are proposed by my colleagues now.

We have had over 11,000 proposals to change the Constitution since it was written; 11,000 proposals. One of them, for example, said let's have a constitutional amendment that provides the Presidency of our country should be rotated. One term it shall be held by someone who is a southerner, from the southern States, and the next term followed by someone who comes from a northern State. That was a proposed constitutional amendment. I could describe more, of course. 11,000 times, the Members of Congress have felt the need to change the U.S. Constitution—this document which begins:

We the People of the United States, in Order to form a more perfect Union. . . .

We all understand the words. It was written by 55 white men just over two centuries ago in a room called the Assembly Room in Constitution Hall. My colleagues have heard me talk about it before, but I will say it again. In that room, George Washington's chair is still sitting at the front of the room where he presided over the Constitutional Convention. Go there today in Philadelphia and look at his chair. Ben Franklin sat over there; there James Madison. Thomas Jefferson was in Europe at the time so he didn't participate except through his writings, which then became, as we know it, the Bill of Rights.

But since those 55 men wrote the Constitution of the United States over two centuries ago, we have had so many proposals for change. I have mentioned to my colleagues on the 200th birthday of the writing of the Constitution, I was one of the 55 people who were authorized to go in for a ceremony, into this Assembly Room. This time, it was 55 men, women, minorities. I got chills sitting in this room because I had studied in a very small school the history about Ben Franklin, Madison, Mason, George Washington—the father of our country—and now I was sitting in the Assembly Room in Constitution Hall in Philadelphia where they wrote the Constitution of the United States.

Since that experience, I have had difficulty coming to the conclusion that we can improve upon the basic framework of the Constitution of the United States. Other countries try to replicate this Constitution; we try to amend it. Some of my colleagues apparently think it is a rough draft available for amendment at the whim of someone's interest in the House or the Senate. It is much more important than that, and we ought to amend the Constitution, in my judgment, rarely, and then when it is the only solution.

As I mentioned, 33 States have amended their Constitution to provide for victims' rights. We can provide for the Federal portion, and the Senators from Arizona and California are absolutely right, that is a very small portion of crime in the criminal justice system. We can also mandate—and I am perfectly prepared to do that—that the States must do the same in exchange for a certain number of incentives which we in the Congress provide. I am perfectly prepared to do that.

I do want to clear up a couple of misconceptions that have been part of the discussion with respect to the victims' rights amendment. The proposal to change the Constitution, in some measure, rests on the discussion about, among other things, the folks who were convicted in the Oklahoma City bombing case.

I want to describe what happened in that case because like many others, I saw the initial ruling and comments of the judge in the Federal court in Denver, and was appalled. He essentially said that those who were victims or family members of victims who wanted to witness the trial would not necessarily then be granted the opportunity to testify during the sentencing phase of the trial. I was concerned about that. I felt that was an abrogation of victims' rights.

What happened as a result of that is Congress passed a piece of legislation called the Victim Rights Clarification Act of 1997. We did that almost immediately. It reversed a presumption against crime victims observing any part of the trial proceedings if they were likely to testify during the sentencing hearing.

This piece of legislation that was passed almost immediately after the judge's ruling prohibited courts from excluding victims from the trial on the grounds they might be called to provide a victim's impact statement at sentencing. The result of the legislation was that the victims in the Oklahoma City bombing trial were allowed to observe both the trial of Timothy McVeigh and Terry Nichols and to provide impact statements through testimony.

In this circumstance, the legislation we passed in Congress worked exactly as Congress intended it to work. The testimony by a former prosecutor at the Oklahoma City bombing trial, Ms. Wilkinson, is something I want to recount because it is important to understand what happened, inasmuch as this example has been used.

It is important to look at how the Victim Rights Clarification Act was actually applied in the Oklahoma City case.

On June 26, 1996, Judge Matsch held that potential witnesses at any penalty hearing were excluded from pretrial proceedings and the trial itself to avoid any influence from that experience on their testimony.

That is what I described earlier, and I felt the same revulsion about that judge's decision as I think my colleagues did, and the result was that we passed the Victim Rights Clarification Act almost immediately. The President signed it into law on March 19, 1997. One week later, Judge Matsch reversed his exclusionary order and permitted observation at the trial proceedings by potential penalty-phase impact witnesses. In other words, the judge changed his mind immediately after the President signed the legislation.

Beth Wilkinson, a member of the Government team that successfully prosecuted, said:

What happened in [the McVeigh] case was once you all had passed the statute, the judge said that the victims could sit in, but they may have to undergo a voir dire process to determine whether rule 402. . .would have been impacted and could be more prejudicial.

This is what the prosecutor said. It is important to say this:

I am proud to report to you that every single one of those witnesses who decided to sit through the trial survived the voir dire, and not only survived, but I think changed the judge's opinion on the idea that any victim impact testimony would be changed by sitting through the trial. [T]he witnesses underwent the voir dire and testified during the penalty phase for Mr. McVeigh.

It worked in that case, but it worked even better in the next case. Just 3 months later when we tried the case against Terry Nichols, every single victim who wanted to watch the trial either in Denver or through closed-circuit television proceedings that were provided also by statute by this Congress, were permitted to sit and watch the trial and testify against Mr. Nichols in the penalty phase—all without having to undergo a voir dire process.

The point is, when the judge in the Oklahoma City bombing trial, which was conducted in Denver, made his initial ruling, there was a great amount of press about it, and all of us, including myself, was aghast at this ruling. Congress passed a piece of legislation almost immediately, the President signed it, and the judge reversed his ruling, and every single one of the victims or victims' families who wished to testify during the penalty phase was allowed to testify. That is critically important to be on the record.

The urge to amend the Constitution ought to be an urge based on all of the information available, and there is plenty of information available, it seems to me, based on this case and also based on the fact that 33 States have now changed their constitution and more will do so. In fact, all could do so if we decided to provide a mandate that would require them to do so. We are making significant progress in this area.

I understand, as I said when I started, the passions of the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from California. I have those same passions, and I want victims to have the same rights. I believe, however, that amending the Constitution should always be a last resort, not a first resort. I do not believe, despite all that has been said, that it serves this document very well to bring a piece of legislation to the floor of the Senate on a Tuesday and have a cloture vote on the motion to proceed. Presumably, we will have a cloture vote on the bill itself and probably have 8 hours, maybe 10 hours, maybe 14 hours, which would be a lengthy period of time for discussion in this Senate, and an attempt, I am sure, to stifle amendments, and then we would say: All right, now the Senate has considered changing the U.S. Constitution.

I do not think that is what Washington, Franklin, Madison, Mason, or others would have wanted us to do in consideration of changing this sacred document.

My hope is we will have an interesting and significant discussion about this and we will, from this debate, not only turn back the constitutional amendment but probably stimulate a great deal more activity on the part of the States. As I said before, I am willing to either offer an amendment or join others in offering an amendment that will require the States to make these changes. That would accomplish exactly the same thing without amending the U.S. Constitution. We can, in any event, make certain all this applies with respect to the Federal statute and Federal crimes.

My hope is, at the end of it, we will not only have denied the impulse to change the Constitution, but we will have created new energy and new incentives to make certain that victims' rights gain ground in State after State across this country. I will be happy to join others in the coming days, weeks, and months in an effort to accomplish that, because I have strong feelings about this issue. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Iowa.

ABORTION

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I wish to depart from the debate on the issue before us, which is an important issue. I appreciate the remarks made by my colleague from North Dakota. I listened intently to what he had to say, and I can understand his deep feelings about this issue.

I want to talk about another issue because today, across the street from where we sit in the Halls of the Senate, the U.S. Supreme Court is hearing arguments on a case involving the so-called partial-birth abortion law of the State of Nebraska. That law, passed by the Nebraska Legislature, is quite similar to the version the Senate and the House have debated over the years. In fact, it is very similar to the one passed by the Senate last October.

However, the real issue in the case before the Supreme Court and in the legislation before Congress is not about banning late term abortions. The real issue is about a systematic effort to overturn Roe V. Wade and to criminalize all abortions. The real issue is about whether we trust women, in consultation with their faith and their family, to make this very difficult, personal decision or do we put that trust in politicians? That is what this is really all about.

Last October 21, during debate on the so-called partial-birth abortion bill in the Senate, I, along with Senator BOXER, offered a resolution to this so-called partial-birth abortion bill. Our resolution was very simple. It stated that it was the sense of the Senate that Roe v. Wade was an appropriate decision and should not be repealed.

Let me read for the record the entire text of that resolution because it was very simple and very straightforward.

(a) Findings: Congress finds that—

(1) reproductive rights are central to the ability of women to exercise their full rights under Federal and State law;

(2) abortion has been a legal and constitutionally protected medical procedure throughout the United States since the Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade (410 U.S. 113 (1973));

(3) the 1973 Supreme Court decision in Roe v. Wade established constitutionally based limits on the power of States to restrict the right of a woman to choose to terminate a pregnancy; and

(4) women should not be forced into illegal and dangerous abortions as they often were prior to the Roe v. Wade decision.

(b) Sense of Congress: It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) Roe v. Wade was an appropriate decision and secures an important constitutional right; and

(2) such decision should not be overturned.

That is the full text of the resolution that I and Senator BOXER offered last October 21.

By invalidating the laws that forced many women to seek unsafe, and often deadly back-alley abortions, Roe was directly responsible for saving women's lives. It is estimated that as many as 5,000 women a year died from illegal abortions before Roe.

Roe v. Wade is the moderate, mainstream policy on which American women have come to rely. It recognized the right of women to make their own decisions about their own reproductive health. And very importantly, it provides specific protections for the life and the health of women.

So the vote on the Harkin-Boxer amendment last October to finally put the Senate on record about its support for the mainstream Roe decision was very important. It was the first vote directly ever held here on whether the Senate wants to go back to the days of back-alley abortions.

Our amendment barely passed, 51–47. Fifty-one said yes, Roe v. Wade was a good decision, it should not be overturned. Forty-seven Senators voted against that resolution, basically saying they did not agree with Roe v. Wade and that it should be overturned.

Frankly, I was shocked at how close the vote on our amendment was. In fact, in offering the amendment, I thought: Here is a chance for an overwhelming vote of support by the Senate in confirming the Supreme Court decision on Roe v. Wade.

But after that close vote, I then realized that the vote really lifted the veil of moderation of antichoice Senators. For so many who were saying, that they support Roe v. Wade and a woman's right to choose, they just want to ban partial birth abortion, here was the chance to express that. With 47 votes against Roe v. Wade, the veil has been lifted. Now we know what is the real agenda. The agenda is to criminalize choice, criminalize freedom of choice for women.

While the Nation's attention is refocused on the issue of choice with today's Supreme Court case, I also want to shed some light on what has been going on behind the scenes in Congress since the Senate very closely approved our amendment.

What would normally happen is that after the Senate passed the bill with our amendment, the House would act on the Senate-passed bill and request a conference with the Senate to work out the differences between the two bodies. Instead, the House of Representatives avoided a vote on our amendment. They took up a clean bill and sent it over here in order to avoid a conference. So it is clear that the Republican leadership in the House does not want to have to take a vote on this issue. In fact, the House has never had a vote on the issue of support for Roe v. Wade.

Why else would the House majority take the unusual step of punting the bill back to the Senate for a unanimous consent instead of taking it to conference? It is clear the Republican leadership in the House did not want to have a vote, which would be allowed under the House rules to instruct the House conferees to support my amendment in conference, thus putting the House on record, once and for all, as to whether or not they support Roe v. Wade.

Again, the Republican leadership in the House wants to continue to hide their true agenda. They want to hide behind a false cloak of moderation on the issue of choice.

Senator BOXER and I have objected to this latest maneuver. Let me be clear. Every time the so-called partial-birth abortion bill, or any other antichoice legislation, comes to the Senate floor, I will offer my amendment, and there will be another vote on the Roe v. Wade resolution. People in the leadership know that. That is why they have not bothered to bring up any of their antichoice legislation since the last vote on October 21. They know I will offer my amendment every single time to lift their veil of moderation.

So today I am challenging the House Republican leadership to allow a vote on our amendment. Let's let people know where their representatives stand on the basic issue of choice, the basic issue of Roe v. Wade. Because Roe v. Wade is the moderate, mainstream policy on which American women have come to rely. The Roe v. Wade vote in the Senate should send a wakeup call to all Americans that this policy is in jeopardy. They need to act to maintain it.

In this most personal of decisions, we need to trust women, not politicians, to make the choice. That is what this is all about. Whether it is the case in front of the Supreme Court or whether it is the vote in the Senate, the issue is simply this: Do you trust politicians, whether they are in a State government or in the Federal Government, to make this decision for women or do you trust women?

People of strong faith and good conscience have very different views on the issue of abortion. I respect both sides on this often divisive issue. I have struggled with it personally myself.

Whether or not we agree, we should all work together to find commonsense, common ground steps to reduce the number of abortions and to protect the health and well-being of women and children. That means fully funding maternal and child health programs, fully funding the Women, Infants, and Children's feeding programs, fully funding contraceptive coverage, family planning services, and better adoption options, just to name a few of the policies we ought to be about.

But the bottom line is this: Roe v. Wade was an enlightened decision. It is moderate. It puts the basic decisions on reproductive health where it belongs, with the woman and not with the Government.

Today, as the Supreme Court, across the street, listens to the arguments on the Nebraska partial-birth abortion law, let us resolve that we are going to maintain a woman's basic right to choose, that we will not let the politicians take it over, that we will not return to the dark days of back-alley abortions and the criminalization of a woman's own right to choose her reproductive health. That is what this issue is about.

The women of this country are counting on us to make sure we uphold the decision in Roe v. Wade. We cannot afford to let them down.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I came to the floor of the Senate because I noted that my friend, Senator HARKIN from Iowa, was talking about a very important subject, a woman's right to choose. This right has been protected. After the case Roe v. Wade in 1973, a woman has had that right.

Today we are looking at a different type of constitutional amendment. Senator HARKIN made the point that, in fact, we have a case being heard at the Supreme Court which is going to essentially look at a woman's right to choose. I think it is appropriate that he would come over to make a few points, and I would like to engage him in a colloquy, if he would be willing to do that.

First, I ask him to reiterate for me the basic point he made. We see in the Senate tens of votes we have to face on the issue of a woman's right to choose and the different aspects of it, whether a person who lives in the District of Columbia can use her insurance paid by the city to obtain a legal abortion, whether a Federal employee has that right, whether a woman in the military has the right to use a clean medical facility to exercise her rights, whether a woman in the late stage of a pregnancy that has turned desperately wrong has the right to have her health protected. We stand here on so many occasions casting these votes, having this debate ostensibly about a narrower issue surrounding a woman's right to choose.

I wonder if my friend believes that is the real goal of the people who continually bring up this matter or whether it is, in fact, something quite deep, which is trying to erode a woman's right to choose, that basic right that was given to her after the Roe v. Wade decision in 1973.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator from California for her long and strong support for the decision in Roe v. Wade. The Senator from California has been one of the most persistent and enlightened voices in the Senate—indeed, in the country—on protecting a woman's basic right to choose. I follow in her footsteps in many of these issues.

The Senator from California has really put her finger on it, the point I was trying to make today. This partial-birth abortion law that the Supreme Court is reviewing today, as well as the legislation before Congress—is just a smokescreen. It's a smokescreen which anti-choice Members and groups are hiding behind in order to get their eventual goal, which is the total repeal and overturn of Roe v. Wade, to take away the essential and basic fundamental rights about which the Senator just spoke.

Without Roe v. Wade and without that constitutionally protected right of women to have control over their own reproductive health, many of the things about which the Senator just spoke would be gone. There wouldn't be any right for women in the military, there wouldn't be any right for women in the District of Columbia or anywhere else, to have the kind of health coverage that would protect them in dire need when they need help, when perhaps a pregnancy has gone terribly wrong and they need immediate and very intensive medical help.

That was why I wanted to talk about it today. I don't want to interfere in the Supreme Court decision. That is for them to decide over there. What I wanted to point out was that in conjunction with that, here in the Halls of Congress there is a very dangerous game being played out where proponents of so-called partial-birth abortion really have want to overturn the basic right to choose for women. That is why the two of us joined together last fall to offer that amendment.

I say this because the Senator and I worked together on this amendment. We offered the amendment in good faith, thinking we were going to get an overwhelming vote of the Senate saying, yes, we support Roe v. Wade. I think both of us were shocked at how close we came.

Mrs. BOXER. I was stunned that Roe v. Wade is hanging by a thread in the Senate: 51–49; is that correct? It was very close.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, 51–47; there were a couple of people who were not here.

Mrs. BOXER. There were a couple of Members who were not here. To think that a basic right won by women when we were very young, in 1973, all those years ago, would be hanging by a thread in the year 2000 is really amazing. I really do pray that the Supreme Court, as they independently decide these issues in this particular case of the Nebraska statute will recognize that what the Senator from Iowa says is absolutely true. It is so important.

We have a big debate over some made-up terminology that doesn't even exist in medical books. There is no such thing as partial-birth abortion. There is either a birth or an abortion. That is it. The description of the method used is really a method that is used in the early stages of a pregnancy as well. So if, in fact, that Nebraska case is upheld, women will be denied what is considered by many doctors to be the safest method. That undermines Roe because Roe was a very moderate decision. It basically said that before that fetus is viable, the woman has an unfettered right to choose. But at any stage in the pregnancy, one thing has to come first: the woman's life and the woman's health.

I say to my friend, when we get into a pattern of outlawing specific procedures and playing doctor—by the way, we do have one doctor in this Senate, but he is not an OB/GYN—when we start to play doctor in the Senate, we are going to endanger women's health.

If we start outlawing procedures we don't like—by the way, there is no medical procedure—something that is gruesome or you don't get upset by—if we start doing that, we will overturn Roe right here because we will be saying a woman's health really is subordinate, doesn't matter, and what does it matter if a woman can't have a particular procedural and as a result she is paralyzed or can never bear another child? It would be a disaster, and it would be overturning this basic right.

So I want to say to my friend that I appreciate his leadership. I enjoy working with him on this because we feel so deeply about it. Before he leaves, I will make one more comment. I trust my friend mentioned this, but I am not sure because I was on my way over here. The House of Representatives denied the House the opportunity to vote on the Harkin-Boxer amendment. The House of Representatives in this year has used a gag rule, if you will, to deny the Members of the House a chance to stand up for or against Roe v. Wade. I wonder what they are so afraid of. Are they afraid that some of their Members are so to the right on this issue and so against public opinion, it would hurt them in their reelection?

Now is the time to be heard, when Roe is hanging by a thread, and we need to have a vote over there. I hope my friend will continue to press this point, as we say together that it is wrong to deny the House a chance to vote up or down on Roe.

I ask my friend for his closing comment on that.

Mr. HARKIN. Again, I appreciate the Senator's very lucid and clear delineation of exactly what is going on here. It was a gag rule in the House. That is what they did. Under their rules, the Republican leadership would not allow a vote on our amendment. Again, I think it is because they don't want their veil of moderation lifted. They want to say this is only about partial birth. It is not, and we know it. It is about Roe v. Wade. Yet they don't want to have their people out there voting on it.

I think the American people have a right to know where we stand on this most fundamental right of women in this country.

Again, I thank my friend from California for her long and strong leadership on this issue. It is vitally important to all of us in this country that the basic, fundamental, constitutional rights that were enumerated in Roe v. Wade for the women of this country remain, and remain strong, and not be undermined in this body. So I thank the Senator for her strong leadership in this effort.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank my friend. I see the Senator from Arizona on the floor, so I will wrap up.

I think it is interesting and important, as we look at new amendments to the Constitution, that we think about the rights we already take for granted. The women in this country have counted on the Constitution to protect their right to choose. I only hope they will continue to have that right. It is, in fact, hanging by a thread here in the Senate with only 51 votes supporting that basic decision.

So I say it is a day to look at our rights, as we are looking at victims' rights, or their lack of rights, and what ways we want to make sure victims have rights, and that we also consider if a woman is denied a fundamental right to have control over her own body, if she is denied that, she will be a victim—a victim of this Government thinking that, in fact, it knows better than she or the people who love her, and that the Government would think it would know better than her family, her God, and her conscience to make such a basic decision.

So it is a good day to talk about Roe v. Wade. As we look at new rights we are giving people, let's also make sure we don't take away any rights.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arizona.

PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES TO PROTECT THE RIGHTS OF CRIME VICTIMS—MOTION TO PROCEED—Continued

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, the proponents of the crime victims' constitutional rights amendment, as I understand it, have about 6 minutes remaining. Senator FEINSTEIN has asked that I conclude our portion of this opening debate.

People who are viewing this might wonder what the last 35, 40 minutes have been about. This wasn't supposed to be about abortion. How did that get involved in the crime victims' rights amendment? Perhaps Senator LEAHY began this trend when he first spoke this morning about the possibility of gun control, abortion, and the balanced budget amendment.

I think the point is that people who are not motivated to adopt a constitutional set of rights for crime victims are willing to try to use our hard work, our efforts, and our energy to bring this proposed constitutional amendment to the Senate—which is very difficult to do—as a means of trying to tack on their favorite proposal, or to delay the Senate action on the crime victims' rights amendment to the point that we will have to move on to other pressing business. Either of those possibilities, I think, would be very sad.

Let me recount what has happened here. For almost 4 years, Senator FEINSTEIN and I have worked very patiently to bring forward a crime victims' constitutional rights amendment. It is very difficult to get a constitutional amendment to the floor of the Senate. We have had 66 witnesses appear at hearings, with I think something like 15 pages of testimony transcript. We have had hearing after hearing. We have gone through 63 different drafts to make this as perfect as we could. We have gotten it out of the Judiciary Committee on a strong, bipartisan vote. Then we got the majority leader to give us some floor time, which is very precious.

In other words, we put a lot of work into this in support of victims of violent crime in our society. Throughout this building, and in others, there are scores of victims and victims' rights organizations around television sets watching these proceedings, having finally gotten what they hope to be their ''day in court''—an argument about the crime victims' rights amendment and a vote on that.

What is beginning to emerge is a very disturbing tactic by those who oppose us, and that is either to try to delay this to the point that the majority leader will have to move on to something else, by offering all kinds of extraneous amendments, or by seeking to achieve what they have never been able to achieve through the normal legislative process, by using our proposal as a vehicle to attach their idea onto—in this case, perhaps, abortion. What better way to kill ours while getting some time to discuss their proposal.

Some of these same proponents are those who argue most vigorously against so-called riders to appropriations bills. They say, well, you should not have an extraneous amendment on an appropriation bill. If you are going to bring something to the floor, you should not debate something else. You should not amend it with something extraneous. We are willing to allow germane amendments to victims' rights in an effort to resolve how to best protect victims' rights. But what I fear I have seen here is a tactic either to defeat what we are trying to do or to use what we are trying to do to advance an entirely different agenda. That would be wrong.

The people watching this debate must be saying: There they go again. What are these Senators doing? They had a proposal to bring forth a crime victims' rights amendment to the floor, and, by procedural legerdemain, is that going to be prevented, overcome by an abortion amendment or something of that sort? We hope not. The bottom line is that there is a reason all of the people who support this amendment have said it is now time for a Federal constitutional rights amendment.

As we have seen this morning, States have been unable to protect the rights of crime victims with State statutes and their own State constitutional amendments. Attorneys general and prosecutors support this. Law enforcement supports it. The Attorney General of Wisconsin, Jim Doyle—a very respected Democratic attorney general—said this before the Judiciary Committee:

> I believe that most prosecutors strongly support victims' rights.

He notes some of the concerns of prosecutors. He said:

> I believe these concerns are more than adequately addressed in S.J. Res. 3.

The bottom line is that we have support from victims' rights groups, prosecutors, attorneys general, and Governors, and it is time now to decide whether we want to protect crime victims or not. We have an opportunity by bringing this matter to the floor. At 2:15, we will have a vote on what is called a cloture motion on a motion to proceed. If 60 colleagues agree, we will be able to go forward and debate the motion to proceed, which I assume will be adopted later today. Then we can proceed with debate on the constitutional amendment itself. We look forward to that. If people want to bring forward relevant amendments to that, so be it. That is what the process is about. But I fear what will happen if, instead, we get a series of nongermane amendments or attempts to delay this, to the point that we run out of time and, in effect, a filibuster has killed any hope these crime victims have of protecting their rights in our courts.

We have waited too long. Eighteen years ago President Reagan's Commission on Crime Victims recommended the constitutional amendment to address these rights. Eighteen years is long enough to wait. I hope when we finally have an opportunity on the Senate floor, that opportunity is not snatched away by people who want to pursue other agendas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the proponents is expired; the opponents have 9 minutes.

Mr. KYL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from Wyoming, requests the quorum call be lifted, and without objection it is so ordered.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now stand in recess until the hour of 2:16 p.m.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 12:23 p.m., recessed until 2:16 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. INHOFE].

PROPOSING AN AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES TO PROTECT THE RIGHTS OF CRIME VICTIMS—MOTION TO PROCEED—Continued

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on Calendar No. 299, S.J. Res. 3, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims:

Trent Lott, Jon Kyl, Judd Gregg, Wayne Allard, Robert Smith of New Hampshire, Richard Shelby, Gordon Smith of Oregon, Bill Frist, Mike DeWine, Ben Nighthorse Campbell, Jim Bunning, Chuck Grassley, Rod Grams, Connie Mack, Craig Thomas, and Jesse Helms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the mandatory quorum call under the rules has been waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 3, a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to protect the rights of crime victims, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are required. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN), and the Senator from Vermont (Mr. JEFFORDS) are necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. KERREY), and the Senator from Maryland (Ms. MIKULSKI) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 82, nays 12, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the yeas are 82, the nays are 12. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, today I voted against a motion to close debate on the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 3, a victims' rights constitutional amendment. Only twelve Senators voted no, although a far larger number oppose this resolution. I was prepared to vote yes on the motion, because the rights of victims are terribly important and a resolution like this ought to be thoroughly debated. But before the vote I learned that the language of this resolution to amend the Constitution is still being negotiated. This ought to be a solemn, soberly undertaken effort, for it presumes to revise the work of Madison and Hamilton and those great Americans who put to paper the ingenious design of the American republic in that hot Philadelphia room 224 years ago. But instead, we were asked today to begin that debate in earnest while the supporters of the resolution were still off in a room somewhere trying to agree on the language of the resolution.

So I said no. I said no to this casual, cavalier approach to amending the Constitution. It does not respect the seriousness of the process and has led to constitutional profligacy in the Congress—to hundreds of constitutional amendments being offered as if they were not gravely important, as if they were not an attempt to edit the organic law that has held our democracy together for two centuries. In the opening days of some recent Congresses, we have seen constitutional amendments introduced at a rate of more than one per day.

A few weeks ago, we considered a constitutional amendment to allow prohibition of flag desecration. I opposed that amendment, but I didn't oppose cloture on the motion to proceed. I voted for cloture because the backers of the flag amendment, wrong as I thought they were, at least showed some respect for the process. They believed there was a need for the amendment and they were able to point to particular events and precedents that they believed needed to be addressed. But no court has struck down the dozens of state constitution provisions and hundreds of statutes that protect victims' rights across America today, so why rush to amend the Constitution? The backers of the flag amendment argued, correctly, that their goal of allowing prohibition of some forms of speech could be realized only by a constitutional amendment. They offered a resolution that had been refined over time, whose supporters at least, had agreed upon. All of us were aware, long before the vote, what the resolution said. The vote on proceeding to the flag debate was not held in a fluid situation, where negotiations about language that might end up in our Constitution were still taking place. So we voted as Senators to proceed and we did proceed to a sober, deliberate and thoughtful debate and an informed vote about the flag amendment.

Today, on the victims rights amendment, the process was not respected. The Senate acquiesced in a casual exercise in constitutional improvisation, shunning the statutory alternatives that are readily available, to embrace the near immutability of constitutional language. So I voted no—to say we are not ready to have this debate, but we will have the debate and we may now add one more reason to the many reasons to oppose this resolution: its proponents have not respected the process and we are obliged to assume that their constitutional amendment, even if it were right in its general substance, must be flawed in its language and details.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is the motion to proceed to S.J. Res. 3.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, there having been a cloture vote on that motion to proceed, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Each Senator would have up to 1 hour of debate, with a maximum of 30 hours total.

Mr. LEAHY. And within that 30 hours, am I correct, under the precedent of the Senate, Senators can yield part of their time to other Senators but not in such a way as to enlarge the 30 hours?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As long as it does not extend beyond a total of 30 hours. The yielding of time must go to the managers.

Mr. LEAHY. The leaders or their designees?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The leaders or their designees.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, I will claim such part of my hour as I might consume.

It was less than a month ago, I recall, I stood on the floor of the Senate to defend the Bill of Rights against the proposed flag amendment to our Constitution. The Senate voted March 29 to preserve the Constitution and refused to limit the first amendment and the Bill of Rights by means of that proposed amendment. Apparently, preserving the Constitution in March does not mean the Constitution is safe in April. So here I am again as we begin to debate yet another proposed amendment to the Constitution. Yet, again, I am here to speak out in favor of the integrity of our national charter.

I support crime victims' assistance and rights, but I do not support this proposed amendment to the Constitution. Just as opposition to a flag desecration amendment does not mean a Senator is in favor of flag burning, opposition to a victims' rights amendment does not mean that a Senator opposes justice for victims of crime. In fact, during the course of this debate, we will have a statutory alternative to the proposed constitutional amendment that would serve to advance crime victims' rights.

I have been in the Senate for 25 years. I think it is safe to say that I have been a very strong advocate for victims' rights during that time. My initial involvement with victims' rights began more than three decades ago when I served as State's attorney for Chittenden County, Vermont. According to our population and under our procedures at that time, by virtue of the office, at the age of 26, I became the chief law enforcement officer for the County. I saw firsthand the devastation of crime. I have worked ever since to ensure that the criminal justice system is one that respects the rights and the dignity of victims of crime and domestic violence, rather than one that presents additional ordeals for those already victimized.

I will continue to work for victims of crime and domestic violence in the course of this debate. I support crime victims and their rights, but I oppose this constitutional amendment. As a prosecutor, I was able to make sure victims were heard, that sentencing decisions were made with the rights of victims in mind, that plea bargains were not entered into without the rights of victims in mind. They were all heard. I also knew we could do that individually, or by State statute, or by State constitution. But we didn't have to amend the United States Constitution.

The proposed amendment, S.J. Res. 3, goes on for over 60 lines. I believe the most important part of our national charter, the Constitution, is the first amendment. This magnificent part of our document, in just five or six lines, says that we have the right of free speech, we have freedom of religion—that is, to practice any religion we want, or none if we want—we have the right to petition our Government, and we have the right of assembly. These rights, enunciated in just five or six lines in the Constitution, preserve the diversity—actually, they almost demand diversity in our country, and they protect diversity in our country. If you have diversity, especially diversity that is protected, you have democracy. Those five or six lines are the bedrock of our democracy and our freedom.

Contrast this with S.J. Res. 3. As I said earlier, I don't doubt the sincerity of my two friends, the chief sponsors of this; they are my friends and they are two people I respect. But this is over 60 lines. It is like a complicated statute, which will be made more complicated as the courts get a hold of it, as prosecutors have to figure out what is going on, and as defense attorneys look for loopholes. No place in it does it mention what we have always built our criminal justice system on—the protection of the rights of the accused.

James Madison, the great framer of the Constitution, instructed that a constitutional amendment should be limited to ''certain great and extraordinary occasions.'' Well, we have one thing that is great and extraordinary and that is our country and our democracy. It has made us the most powerful and influential nation on Earth today. But these are not great and extraordinary occasions that demand the amending of the United States Constitution.

I find it distressing that we so ignore James Madison's instructions and advice and that there are almost 60 proposed constitutional amendments pending before this Congress alone, including an amendment to make it easier to adopt other amendments in the future. Now, if we are going to do this, let's do it on everything. Let's have an amendment on gun control. Let's have an amendment on abortion. Let's have an amendment on reapplying from where Senators can serve. Let's do a number of other things. Some of the amendments that have been proposed look as if they were before a local board of select people. We should not be so eager to amend our Constitution. Look at Article V of the Constitution and read the first part of the first sentence. It says:

> The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary. . . .

Does anyone think the American people would ''deem this necessary''?

At one time, after the President at the time sent up unbalanced budget after unbalanced budget, Congress said the only way to stop us from spending was to have a constitutional amendment to balance the budget. Fortunately, we do not have such a constitutional amendment today. Instead, we have a President who had the guts to send up a balanced budget, and we had a Congress who had the guts to back him up and pass it. That is how to do it—the old-fashioned way.

I believe this particular proposed constitutional amendment regarding crime victims' rights fails to set the standards set by our founders in Article V of the Constitution. It cannot be necessary. Let me state why: Over the last several years, we have been making great strides in protecting crime victims' rights. We have accomplished much in 20 years to advance the cause of crime victims' rights, through State law and Federal statutory improvements, through increased training or education, and through implementation efforts. There is no basis today for concluding that this constitutional amendment is necessary for providing crime victims' rights in the criminal justice process.

There is a growing fascination in the Congress with amending our Constitution first and legislating second. No Member knows how long he or she will be in the Senate. I have been privileged in the State of Vermont. My friends in the State of Vermont have sent me here for over 25 years. They do remind me that Vermont is the only State in the Union that has elected only one member from my party to the Senate, but I am thankful they do it by ever increasingly large margins. I don't know how long I will be here; no Member does.

As long as I am here, I will take upon myself the duty to say to the Senate: Slow down on this idea of amending the Constitution. Slow down.

Whatever short-term political gain Members may feel today, your children and your children's children will in all likelihood live by what you do. The temptation was there for the framers of the Constitution. I am sure they looked at the differences between the States and thought, if I amend the Constitution just this way, my State has an advantage or I have an advantage over this person. Instead, they resisted the temptation. Maybe that is why we are the oldest currently existing democracy in the world. Maybe that is why we have a First Amendment, something not duplicated in any other nation on Earth. Maybe that is why we protect ourselves and our rights as we do, because we know we have resisted over the years the 11,000 suggested amendments to the Constitution. Of those 11,000 amendments, one has to assume that somebody in every single instance thought their amendment was extremely important. Every one of those 11,000 times, somebody somewhere thought: This is the amendment to the Constitution that we really need; this is the amendment that falls under Article V which says it is necessary.

I was the 21st person in the history of this country to vote 10,000 times in the Senate. Those 10,000 votes were not all necessary for this country. Sometimes they were votes called by the Sergeant at Arms, and sometimes they were to adjourn. Sometimes they were votes to commend ourselves for doing something we were paid to do anyway. Of course, sometimes they were extraordinarily important votes.

I took pride in being the 21st person in our Nation's history to vote that many times. But I wouldn't have taken pride to think I voted almost the same number of times for a different constitutional amendment. Yet 11,000 constitutional amendments have been before the Senate. Imagine our Constitution if the 11,000 amendments had passed. Heck, take half of them. Imagine our Constitution if 5,500 passed. Impossible. Say 10 percent, 1,100, passed; 5 percent, 550; 1 percent, 110, passed. If we had taken a tiny fraction of these 11,000 that were so essential to this Nation, our Constitution would not be something that would be revered around the world, that other countries would try to emulate; it would be a laughingstock.

Until we do our job with statutes, until we find the ways within the State, until we explore other ways to help with victims' rights, until we follow through with the commitment of necessary resources, until we look at all those States that have passed their own victims' rights laws, until we accept the fact that not one single court has found those unconstitutional, thus saying we don't need a constitutional amendment, until we do that, why do we amend the Constitution again?

As I said, I don't know how much longer I have in the Senate. However, I will stand on this floor, constitutional amendment after constitutional amendment. This is a wonderful document. Don't change it. Don't change it unless an amendment falls under Article V and really is necessary. This is not necessary.

It is ironic, at the height of the key dynamic changes in increased rights and protections for crime victims over the last decade, the efforts on behalf of this constitutional amendment have had the unfortunate, and I believe unintended, fact of slowing that process and dissipating those efforts.

Who suffered? The crime victims. Crime victims are among the most sympathetic figures. And they should be. They are also some of the most politically powerful groups in our society today. We are all supportive of crime victims. That probably takes political courage, to say we should ask some questions, because it takes little political courage to say you are in favor of crime victims; we all our. It is not whether we support crime victims, because we all do. Certainly, those of us like myself who have been prosecutors, who have seen firsthand the beaten victims, the stabbed victims—I even had a murder victim die in my arms while he was telling me who killed him—understand victims. But this debate is not about those victims. It is whether the Senate will endorse the amendment to the United States Constitution. I will do all in my power to make sure we do not amend the Constitution.

April is an especially sensitive time of year for crime victims and those who advocate for them. Frankly, I feel every day we should be advocating for them. Two weeks ago was the 20th anniversary of Crime Victims' Rights Week. During that time, I was one of the few Senators who came to the floor to try to make progress on crime victims' rights by proposing an improved version of the Crime Victims Assistance Act, S. 934.

Last week, we observed the fifth anniversary of the bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building. Some of us have worked long and hard for the victims of crime and terrorism around the world. I was proud to be the author of the Victims of Terrorism Act amendment to the anti-terrorism bill that passed the Senate in the wake of that tragedy of June, 1995, which served as the basis for what became the victims provisions ultimately enacted in 1996.

I worked with Senator NICKLES and others to provide closed circuit television coverage of the Oklahoma City bombing trials. I supported special assistance for victims and their families to attend and participate in the trials, including enactment of the Victims Rights Clarification Act in 1997 to help ensure those who attended the early portion of the trial could also testify or attend during the sentencing phase.

I do not need to be told by anybody that I have to be sympathetic with victims of crime. I have done that throughout my professional career. I have done it in legislation. I did it for 8 years as a prosecutor.

But I also look at some of the things we are not doing here in Congress. Last Thursday, we observed the first anniversary of the tragic violence at Columbine High School in Colorado. That anniversary served as a reminder of the school violence we have witnessed too often over the past few years. Yet the Senate and House have not completed their work on the juvenile crime bill, a bill that passed the Senate last May by a margin of almost 3 to 1.

The Hatch-Leahy bill passed this body 73–25. Since then, the Republican leadership continues its refusal to convene the House-Senate conference necessary to complete action on this measure. Tell that to the families who were at the zoo here in Washington D.C. yesterday. Tell them the gun lobby will tell us when we can meet and when we cannot, in the United States Congress. Tell those families.

We, oftentimes, have emotional issues that come before us. This past weekend Elian Gonzalez was reunited with his father, Juan Miguel Gonzalez. You know what happened there. The great uncle had temporary custody, custody was revoked, he refused to do a voluntary transfer of the child, the Attorney General finally had to act to reunite them and say the United States would uphold its own laws. I think it was done in the right way. Everybody is running around: We'll have a special citizenship bill, special amnesty bill, special whatever else. I say, remember what the Senate is supposed to be. Remember that wonderful story about the cup and saucer. We are the saucer that allows the cooling of the passions, and we should approach debate of a proposed constitutional amendment with the seriousness and deliberation that it requires.

We could go, instead, back to some of the legislative things we could do right now, that could be signed into law right now, that might help victims of crime.

I see the distinguished senior Senator from New Jersey, a man who, throughout his career here in the Senate, has worked so hard, not just for victims of crime but for those laws that might ensure that at least we have a diminution of crime, especially gun crimes. I am perfectly willing to reserve my time and yield to the distinguished Senator if he would care to speak.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAPO). The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, first, I thank the distinguished Senator from Vermont, the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee. He has a homespun way of talking at times, but he always brings good sense and good judgment to the debate. I appreciate his comments about how we have to be so mindful of our responsibilities under the Constitution, and we ought not to trifle with amendments to the Constitution. The Constitution is the fundamental text of our democracy and we ought not to amend it if there are other ways to address the problem.

Some of those listening may have trouble following all of our twists of logic, but one thing should be clear—we all know we have too many victims in our society. We know we have families torn apart, even if they are not directly victims themselves. Look at Columbine High School. Who were the victims? Were they just the young people and the teacher who were killed and their families? Were they the only victims? Or was the whole high school population of Columbine a victim? Or was the whole community of Littleton, Colorado that was the victim? Was the whole country a victim? I think so.

All of us had images seared into our psyches that I think for most of us will last a lifetime. Were we victims of a sort? Were we victims of our lack of understanding of how we got to that point? Are we victimized by violence that does not touch us immediately? I think so because otherwise we would not see these magnetic detectors all over the place. We wouldn't have security guards all over the place, and we wouldn't be spending money building ever more prisons—money that could be used for education or health care or prescription drugs or to help young people in our society. So we are all victimized by crime.

That is the problem with the constitutional amendment that is proposed—defining who is the victim. Once again, is it the family whose house was broken into and the terrible deeds that followed? Or is it everybody in the neighborhood? Or is it young child who lost a friend who was 6 years old, who do not understand why the friend was murdered by another 6-year-old child? Who is the victim? Even the family of a perpetrator of a terrible crime is often a victim.

Given the difficulty of defining who is a victim, it might be better to address this statutorily. We ought to write a statute that very clearly says: Yes, victims' rights have to be protected. We have said it so many times over the years, writing laws as opposed to amending the Constitution. That is the question, really. No one is saying we should not take care of the victims. But the question is whether you try to address the problem by statute or if you take the much more drastic step of amending the Constitution.

And when we talk about victims we should remember all of the people who have suffered because of the proliferation of guns.

Look at what happened yesterday at the National Zoo. Seven young people were shot. I have my four children and their spouses and seven grandchildren, the oldest of whom is 6, coming to Washington in a few weeks commemorating, with the grandfather of the family, my career in the Senate. We are going to celebrate. Because they are all so young, to amuse them I said we would go to the zoo. I am not as enthusiastic about going to the zoo today as I was a couple of weeks ago when we thought about this.

I am worried about what might happen in public gatherings. The two oldest of my grandchildren—again, they are little kids—are in school. I call my daughters and say: How are the kids? When I see something that goes awry in a school and a 6-year-old child can kill another 6-year-old child because of someone's careless possession of a gun, their careless abandonment of normal safety protections, I worry about them. I worry not only for my family. I worry mostly, obviously, as we all do, about my family. But I also worry about all of the violence that permeates our society. There is enough of that on television—even in cartoons. And I think that some of the depictions of violence may encourage violent behavior. The seeds may be there, but the encouragement, the nurturing of those seeds often takes place in movies and television where the hero is the guy who comes in with a gun blazing. Who he is killing we are never quite sure, but he is killing people.

If we want to take care of the victims, then we ought to pass a law and be bold about it and not fall prey to public posturing and say amend the Constitution. How many other rights ought to be included as we talk about victims? Should parents' rights be protected? Should grandparents' rights be protected? Should workers' rights be protected? Should women be protected? We think so. They are very often victims of crimes that do not necessarily leave a mark that one can see but often does enormous damage to their psyche and to their mental well-being—harassment, sexual harassment. Are we amending the Constitution to deal with that? No, we are not.

And we need to stop the political posturing about many issues. For example, we need to stop all of the posturing on gun control and take action.

I wrote an amendment and presented it to the Senate when we were discussing the juvenile justice bill. The amendment is very simple—it would close the gun show loophole. We received 50 votes on each side. No, that is not fair to say. Fifty votes for and 50 votes against, including some of my Republican friends who agreed with us that we ought to close a loophole in gun shows that permits people to buy guns without identifying themselves. I call it buyers anonymous: Someone goes in, puts their money down, and walks out with as many guns as they can physically carry. They can even come back for another load. There is no identification required. Even though some in this Senate want to protect that practice, my amendment prevailed. With the Vice President casting the tie-breaking vote, the amendment passed 51–50.

It was a dramatic day. We all worked so hard. But since then, the juvenile justice bill has been stalled in a conference committee.

There is a game played around here—political football. If you are in the majority and do not like something, you have the ability to stop the legislation from moving. We established a Senate conference committee with a House conference committee, which is the normal process. They confer on differences that each of the Houses has on their legislation. We sent it to the House. The conferees took forever to be named. Finally, we got conferees.

What did they do to keep the public from knowing, to keep potential victims from understanding what might be happening? They did nothing. The distinguished Senator from Vermont, who always brings sense to our body when he discusses issues with which he is so familiar, mentioned it. April 20 was the 1-year—I do not even like to use the word ''anniversary''—but it was one year since that horrible day we all witnessed—kids running, young people in the prime of life killed.

There is nothing more satisfying to me, perhaps because of my white hair and age, than seeing young people in the full blush of youth enjoying themselves. Sometimes they do silly things. It is fun when I see young people, whether they are little young people or 16, 17, or 19 years old. I joined the Army when I was 18. I did not realize how young it was until I looked back.

Young people who were enjoying themselves were mowed down by two young killers at Columbine High School. Families were brought to the worst grief anyone can imagine. A young man was hanging out the window pleading for help. We do not know what he was saying. One can imagine what he was saying. His hand was outstretched trying to reach for safety wherever he could go get it, a refuge from the madness surrounding him. That was April 20, 1999. April 20, 2000—nothing has happened. Nothing. I say let's vote on it—you can vote for gun safety or against it. Let the public see how you voted. But no, they do not want to do that because they are all scared in their own way. They are scared the public is going to see that they will not take steps to end gun violence.

Here we are. We had promises recently that we would be voting on a conference bill, and we ought to do that pretty soon. All they have to do is say to the conferees, ''Get the job done,'' and the bill will be on the floor. But we cannot get them to do that.

The majority—and I talk with all due respect in friendship about the majority—is in charge. That is the way it is. I wish it was otherwise, frankly, but the Republicans are in charge, and the Republican leader has not brought it up, though he said he wants to bring it up. He said it publicly. On April 9, when asked, he said he would bring it up soon. On ''Face the Nation,'' a very well-known program, he said he would be amenable to bringing it up. He was asked by Bob Schieffer: ''Don't you have to get the conference committee to meet? Why don't you at least have a meeting?'' in reference to the conference committee on juvenile justice, one part of which is an attempt to control gun violence.

The majority leader said they were talking about it.

Schieffer came back and said: ''Let me pin you down. Do you think you're going to get that conference committee to meet to kind of get this started?''

The response by the majority leader was, ''I do.''

That was April 9. Today is April 25. April 9 to April 25, that does not seem as if it is rushing to do things.

It was promised. Well, the majority leader said, ''I do.''

Schieffer said, ''This week?''

The majority leader, again, with all due respect, said, ''I don't know if it will be this week, but we will get it done in the next few weeks.''

There have been a few weeks. Why don't we get this done? We are all concerned about victims of crime, but let's pass legislation that will prevent people from becoming victims of crime.

I continue to urge the Congress to move forward on gun safety. And what is the response of the Republican Party—the Republican Senate group. Well, here is what GOP aide John Czwartacki said in Roll Call:

It is a shame but no surprise that they would exploit the tragedy of these children's deaths to promote a political agenda.

That is what he said. He said it in response to a commitment that I and several other Senators made that we would do whatever we could to get that juvenile justice bill moved along so we could discuss ways of reducing gun violence.

At times I wonder what it will take for people in this chamber to get the message. Despite what the American public says, despite what parents say, despite the fact that there will be a million moms marching on Mother's Day—some members of this body refuse to act.

Why? Why is it that the voice of the NRA, the National Rifle Association, can be heard so clearly in this place and so clearly influences legislation. Why is it that special interest voice sound so loudly in this place that the majority will not bring up legislation that says: Close the gun show loophole so unlicensed dealers cannot sell guns to unidentified buyers? Why is it?

Why is it that it drowns out millions of voices? Look at some of the polling data. In overwhelming majorities, up as high as 90 percent, people say: Shut down that gun show loophole. But those voices do not get through here.

It is quite an amazing process of physics that the sounds travel all the way here from the NRA office in Washington, but across this country where everybody is supposed to be represented in this body, those voices do not get through. They do not see the tears. They do not understand the grief. They do not hear the pleas of people who have become victims as a result of a loss of a child or a loss of a loved member of a family. Those voices do not get through. But the voice of the NRA, with its control of some of the people that work here and in the other body—control, that is what happens—they set the agenda.

As we discuss victims of crime and constitutional amendments, it bears a note of hypocrisy because buried in there, in my view, is this overhanging question about what constitutes a victim, as I earlier discussed. What should the Constitution be open to? In the more than 200 years we have had the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, it has been amended 18 times. It is a deliberate violation of what constitutes good judgment very sparingly.

One of the dreaded thoughts that passes through so many of our minds is amending the Constitution for one thing after another. We have had several goes at that very recently when it was thought maybe we would amend the Constitution to do things that we ought to take care of by law.

I will close, but just with this reminder. Here is a picture of one terrible person. He is on the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List. Guess what. He can go up to an unlicensed dealer at a gun show and buy guns. He does not even have to worry about them calling the cops because they do not ask his identification when selling weapons.

There is enormous pressure to keep this gun show loophole in place. Imagine, those criminals on the FBI's Ten Most Wanted List, and any one of them could walk in to a gun show and approach an unlicensed dealer and say: Give me a dozen of these or two dozen of those, and here is the money, and the deal is done.

It is my hope we will resolve the dispute that is in front of us now in a statutory fashion; that is, to write law, not to amend the Constitution. Start there. Extend the debate so that all points of view are sufficiently heard. Let's let the public know what we are talking about when we do this.

But even as we contemplate the course of action on this constitutional amendment—I think it was with 80-some votes that we said we ought to move ahead. Some of those who voted for cloture, however, are just interested in opening up the debate and not really supporting the constitutional amendment.

I say to all my colleagues, I intend to continue to push for the conferees on the juvenile justice bill to sit down and talk and to come up with a conference report. Come up with their conclusion, whatever that happens to be, and let the American public know that they are not just sitting on their hands as a way of killing this legislation. And those who oppose it should have the courage to speak up and say: No, I don't want to control gun violence that way. Guns don't kill. People kill. Or they may say: The little boy who is 6 years old is a criminal that the police should have been watching, I suppose, before he went to school that day with that gun.

There are so many times when a person becomes a criminal for the first time when they pull that trigger. But the response is always the same—guns don not kill, people kill. Well, you do not have many drive-by knifings. It's a lot easier to kill people with a gun.

So we are going to do whatever we can. We are going to seize whatever opportunities we can. We are going to stand and shout this message until it is heard all the way across this country, so that people will call this place, call their Senator, call their Representative, and tell them they want to see something done about gun violence in this country, that they are sick and tired of losing thousands and thousands of people to gun violence.

There are 33,000 victims in a year, when a country such as Japan and the UK and others have less than 100. We sure do not have 300 times their population.

There are ways to control violence. One of them is to take these lethal instruments out of the hands of people who are not qualified to have them.

I wrote a law to take guns away from those who are domestic abusers, guys who like to beat up their wives or kids, or guys who like to beat up their girlfriends.

We had a heck of a fight here. Finally, with President Clinton's help, we got a bill signed one night that was attached to an appropriations bill.

The opponents said: It is not going to do any good; it is not going to matter. That was done in the fall of 1996. Since that time, we have stopped 33,000 requests to buy guns. 33,000 times that a spouse or a friend or a child in a household doesn't have to hear somebody say, ''If you don't do this, I'm going to blow your brains out''; 33,000 times in just over 3 years.

The gun lobby fought me and said that is junk, you don't need that, that is silly, that is not where we ought to be going, we ought to be locking people up, and so forth. Of course, we do lock them up. They deserve to be locked up, if they are criminals. We lock up and enforce the law in more cases now than at any time in the past. Convictions are way up. Housing criminals has become a problem. We don't have a sufficient number of jails to accommodate them.

I go with this promise: We will be back again. Not just on this bill, but as we consider other pieces of legislation. We are going to fight on this floor. Whether it is kids pulling out guns to resolve fights, or someone using a gun when they want to rob someone, we have to stop the gun violence. I am sure the public will agree.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, as I understand it, to debate this amendment, S.J. Res. 3, I am entitled to 1 hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SCHUMER. I yield myself that hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from New Jersey for his eloquent words, his passion and leadership on this issue. I join with him, helping in any way I can to see that we get to finally pass the Lautenberg amendment which the country so much wants. I thank him for his doggedness. We will prevail, I do believe. I thank the Senator from New Jersey.

I am here to address S.J. Res. 3, the constitutional amendment for victims' rights. As I guess my history in the Congress shows, I have been very concerned about crime issues. If one would have to say they had a signature issue, for me, that has been it. I came to the view when I came to Congress—and am still of that view—that particularly in the 1980s and early 1990s, the pendulum had swung too far in the direction of individual rights and not enough in the direction of societal rights. I spent a good portion of my time in the Congress trying to bring that pendulum to the middle, joined by Democrats and Republicans. I am very proud of that work.

I come to the floor because nothing in my time in the Senate has troubled me more, has bothered me more, than the amendment we are beginning to debate. I greatly respect the Senator from Arizona, Mr. KYL, and the Senator from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, for the work they have done on this issue. Frankly, my views are not dissimilar to theirs on the issue of victims' rights. I helped write the law for right of allocution, for the victim to stand up at sentencing and say his or her piece. I have been extremely supportive of victims' rights.

Then why would I find this amendment so troubling, more troubling than any other bill we have debated? Because I revere the Constitution. I consider America to this day the noble experiment the Founding Fathers called it when they had written the Constitution. I believe the Constitution is a sacred document. The more I am in Government, the more I almost tremble beside the wisdom of the Founding Fathers. Someone called them the greatest group of geniuses. There may have been other individual geniuses who were greater than any single member who wrote the Constitution, but their collective genius was the greatest group assemblage of genius the world has known, a person wrote. I tend to share that.

Amending the document they put together is an awesome responsibility, something that should not be taken lightly, something that should be done with the utmost care and forethought. One should only debate constitutional amendments when there is no other way to go. We should not mess with the Constitution. We should not tamper with the Constitution.

Yet here we are today debating a victims' bill of rights, a constitutional amendment on victims' rights, when not a single State supreme court, and certainly not the U.S. Supreme Court, has declared any victims' rights statute unconstitutional. I repeat that amazing fact for my colleagues. For the first time we are here debating a constitutional amendment with the other 19 amendments and with, of course, the 10 amendments in the Bill of Rights being different, where not a single State supreme court and not the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled any part of victims' rights unconstitutional.

What is called for here is a statute. I would support making a statute, a law, almost the exact amendment, perhaps even the exact amendment, the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from California are proffering. But a constitutional amendment? Why? Why? Why amend the Constitution when no law has been declared unconstitutional? We have never done that in the over-200-year history of this Republic. We have never taken something we believe in and said, let's immediately make it a constitutional amendment.

We have debated constitutional amendments here because statutes were thrown out. We just did it on the flag burning amendment. People believe strongly that the flag should not be burned. The U.S. Supreme Court said it was under the aegis, the penumbra, of the first amendment. So we did our duty on this floor and debated whether we should amend the Bill of Rights. For the first time ever, we would do it to say that flag burning was prohibited. It was what the Founding Fathers thought the constitutional process should be. It was an amendment that had been thought about. It was an amendment that had been debated. It was an amendment that went to the core of great constitutional issues.

My guess is if a Washington or a Jefferson or a Madison were looking on the floor during that debate, they would have smiled, they would have said that was the Senate they hoped to have.

If a Washington or a Jefferson or a Madison were looking on the floor as we debate this, I believe they would recoil, not because of the issue of victims' rights but because of the thought of passing a constitutional amendment, only the 20th since the Bill of Rights, when no law had been declared unconstitutional, when no aspect of the Constitution itself needed to be clarified.

I ask my colleagues—and I will ask them when they are here because this debate will go on for some time, as it should—why not a statute? I have heard my colleague from California say: Because we have to show how important victims' rights are. With all due respect, we can show that importance with a statute.

I believe in the rights of working people. I have worked for laws such as minimum wage and protecting rights in the workplace. I would not put in the Constitution that we must protect the rights of working people, unless, of course, there were a series of statutes about working people that had been thrown out by the courts. Even in the early 1900s, when the wage laws and child labor laws were thrown out as unconstitutional, we didn't amend the Constitution—when there might have been reason to. But here? Now? As the lawyers say, no stare decisis, no final opinion. It doesn't make sense.

I have to tell my colleagues, if we were to pass this amendment, we would be fundamentally changing constitutional history, the way the laws of this country are made, because we would say that the new Constitution is open to things we believe in and feel strongly about, even where a statute might have solved the problem.

My colleague from California and I—I regret that she is not here—had this conversation after our caucus. She said to me, well, there have been two Federal courts that ignored victims' rights even though we passed statutes. Well, that means the statute was poorly drafted. A judge cannot ignore statutory law. I asked her, "Well, why wouldn't that be appealed if it wasn't well drafted?" It wasn't appealed. But to rush to a constitutional amendment?

This amendment has been below the radar screen. It has crept up upon us stealthily. It hasn't gotten the airing and debate it needs, and already we are rushing to judgment, attempting to pass a constitutional amendment. Again, it was said that the constitutional amendment is still being negotiated by one of the chief sponsors. What is this? We are negotiating a constitutional amendment at the same time we are debating it—something that if it becomes part of the Constitution cannot be changed without huge movement? You don't do that. The Constitution is a sacred document. The greatest group of practical geniuses in the world put it together. It is not something willy-nilly, if somebody feels strongly about it—and I respect the energy and passion—that we just go ahead and amend the Constitution. This is a dispiriting day in a certain way, in my judgment, because we are debating whether to take that great document, the Constitution of the United States, and cheapen it by saying when we feel passionately about something, we skip the statutory process, the judicial process, and we go right to amending the Constitution.

I am not debating the merits of the provisions. As I said, I believe in almost every one of them. But every one of these could be accomplished by statute, by law. And then, if we found out one was poorly drafted, we could change it; then, if we found out there was something people didn't take into account—and that happens when we write laws—we can change it. Not so with a constitutional amendment.

If you look at the amendment that has been drafted, it is longer than the entire Bill of Rights. If you look at the language, it is not the language of the Constitution of the United States, which talks about great concepts. Victims' rights is a fine concept, but the language, which I have here, is the language of a statute.

Again, I have not received an answer—a good answer—from my colleague from Arizona and my colleague from California as to why not a statute. You can pass it more quickly and more easily. It fits the amendment. It fits what you are trying to do. No court, no supreme court, no final authority has thrown it out. And to say there were two Federal cases where the judge ignored a statute, and we immediately go to a lower court judge, and we immediately go to a constitutional amendment, again, cheapens the Constitution.

I intend to debate this amendment at some length. I know some of my colleagues will, too. As I said, this has not gotten airing. In fact, a month ago, if you talked to most people, they shrugged their shoulders and said, "Don't worry, this won't come up." Well, it is here and it is being debated. We are on the precipice of changing what an amendment to the Constitution of this great country means. We ought not to do it lightly. We ought not to do it simply because we feel a need, as I do, to say that victims have rights in the courtroom. We ought to do it because there is no other alternative. And here there is. We ought to do it because the judicial and legislative processes have been exhausted and the Constitution hasn't anticipated a new change. This clearly is not that case. We ought to do it because this issue has reached its fulsomeness.

My colleagues, I believe if this body were to pass this amendment, we would regret it shortly thereafter. We would experience, as we never have, debate about what specific little clauses in the Constitution mean—not the interpretation of what is freedom of speech, but how do you define a victim. How do you deal with certain phrases and clauses? It is a troubling day. It is a troubling day because almost without debate, almost without national focus, we are thinking of changing what an amendment to the Constitution means. It is not simply supposed to make us feel good. It is not simply to make a political statement to the people back home. It is to fundamentally change the rights, privileges, and obligations of the Government and the citizenry.

Again, to my colleagues, why can't we try to pass this very same language as a statute? I am going to introduce that as an amendment if we are allowed to—the exact language they have but make it a statute. I have not heard a good argument and, until I do, I urge every one of my colleagues, Democrat and Republican, to refrain from the understandable desire to do something quickly and instead do something correctly.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of the hour that has been ceded to me to debate this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I don't understand the procedure at this moment. I don't know if I seek recognition through the Senator from New York or the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can seek recognition in his own right for up to 1 hour.

Mr. DURBIN. I ask to be recognized on S.J. Res. 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I commend my colleague from New York on the statement he has made on the floor of the Senate. It is interesting that when Members of the Senate are brought into this Chamber and asked to become official Members of this body, we are asked to take an oath. It is an oath which in one part—and perhaps the most important part—is to preserve and defend the Constitution of the United States. When you consider all of the great documents that have been produced in the history of this great country, it is clear that when it comes to our service in the Senate, the one document that we are asked to hold above all others, to preserve and defend, is the Constitution of the United States.

Of course, it is understandable because those who created the Senate and its counterpart, the House of Representatives, did it in this document, this Constitution, a copy of which I carry. They believed that future Senates and future Members of the House of Representatives, if they preserved this document, would preserve this union.

The job of preserving this Constitution of the United States is not often easy nor popular. Some say 11,000 different times in the last 100 years Members of the Senate have come to the floor in an attempt to change this document. It is interesting that in the course of the history of this Nation, after the adoption of the first ten amendments to the Constitution, the so-called Bill of Rights, we have only amended this Constitution 17 times—the Bill of Rights and 17 additional amendments. Today, we are being asked to amend the Constitution for the 18th time since the adoption of the Bill of Rights.

It is curious that in the history of our politics, the Republican Party, which so often claims to be the conservative party—and to take that literally, I assume that means to conserve the values and principles of this country—has so often been in the leadership not to conserve but to overturn and change the most basic document, the Constitution of the United States.

I am told in the last 4 weeks there have been four proposals—one in the House and three in the Senate; this is the third in the Senate—to change the Constitution of the United States. This document has endured for over 200 years. It appears many of our colleagues want to change it as quickly as possible in a variety of ways. Some want to change it when it comes to balancing the budget. Others want to change it when it comes to flag burning. Now today there is a suggestion that we want to change it when it comes to the rights of the victims of crime.

With all due respect to the wisdom and intelligence of all of my colleagues in the Senate, frankly, I think they are anxious to take a roller to a Rembrandt. They want to make their mark on the Constitution believing that what they suggest matches up to the stature of the words of Thomas Jefferson, Madison, and the Founding Fathers of this country.

With all due respect to my colleagues, Senate Joint Resolution No. 3 before the Senate now pales in comparison. This resolution has been around a while. It is shop worn. One of the sponsors of the resolution, Senator KYL, came to the floor today and said with some pride that this was the 63rd draft of this constitutional amendment, and as we stand today and debate, the 64th draft is being written in a back room. At some point it will pop out of that room and on to the Senate floor and we will be told: Here it is; this is the next amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Forgive me if I am skeptical, but I believe on reflection we would regret passing this proposed constitutional amendment. If the authors of this amendment who have been working on it for years—and I give them credit for all of their effort, but they still haven't gotten it right. As the matter comes to the floor of the Senate, do we honestly believe the words in this document will endure as our Constitution has endured for over 200 years? No, I think we are in haste producing a product which we will come to regret.

Now to the merits of the issue. It is one which, frankly, cannot help but touch your heart. Far too many people are victims of violent crime. These victims are frightened, they are fed up, and they are determined. They are rightfully frightened because they and others have far too great a chance of falling victim to a violent crime. These victims have endured needless and unjustified physical and emotional suffering. Just last night at 6 p.m., in the Nation's Capital, at the National Zoo, one of the real attractions in this city for visitors from across this region, around the Nation, and even around the world, seven children were shot while visiting the zoo. One of the seven, an 11-year-old boy, was shot in the back of the head and is in grave condition.

The statistics on violent crime and gun violence are staggering in the United States of America. Twelve children die every day in America as a result of gun violence.

Many crime victims are justifiably fed up. They feel as if the criminal justice system has wronged them. These people were innocent victims, but they feel deprived of the fundamental need to participate in the process of bringing the accused to justice. Victims of crime are understandably determined to ensure that other victims of violent crime have the right to an active and meaningful involvement in the criminal justice system. I believe every effort to ensure that crime victims are not victimized a second time by the criminal justice system should be taken. Today, we are here to begin the hard task of determining how best we can achieve this shared goal.

I don't think many will ever be able to appreciate fully the impact of crime on a person. In my family's history, we have had a home burglarized and felt violated, as most people would when they come home to find someone has been through your belongings and taken something away. This is an eerie feeling as one walks through the house.

I have had one of my children assaulted. Thank goodness she wasn't hurt seriously. As a parent, I felt rage at the thought that somebody would do this to my daughter. Thank God she survived it. They never caught the person responsible for it. I felt in a way that she was not the only victim. All of us who loved her were also victims of this violence.

A violent crime irreparably alters the texture of life for the victim, that victim's family, and many of their friends. The awareness and memory of that crime pervades and alters the victim's very being. I don't think a victim ever totally gets over it.

We know a criminal justice system at its best cannot undo a crime. We surely also realize the way to fully address the effect of crime is not just through the criminal justice system. If we are serious about dealing with the impact of crime upon an individual victim, a family, or a community, we must act systematically and consciously—not just with symbolism and political effort. I believe one of the worst things we can do is to pass a constitutional amendment that contains illusory or unenforceable promises regarding crime victims. In order to genuinely address this issue, we must understand the way crime rewrites a victim's life. Then we must do what we can to ensure that the rewrite is not inevitably tragic.

I support crime victims' rights. I confess to concerns about amending this Constitution. I view the Constitution, and in particular the Bill of Rights, as one of the most enlightened, intelligent, and necessary documents ever created. I believe any efforts to amend it must be reserved for the most serious circumstances.

I cannot help but remember as I stand on this floor, as I often do, debating constitutional amendments which seem to be the order of the day, how many leaders of newly emerged democracies come to the United States of America as one of their first stops. These men and women who have seen their countries liberated from totalitarian rule, Communist rule, come to the United States and make their stop right here on this Hill, in this city, in this building.

They believe, as I do, that the validation of democracy lies right here within the corners of the walls of this great building, because this generation of leadership in the Senate and in the House tries to carry on a tradition, a tradition of freedom and democracy, a tradition that is not embodied in a flag but is embodied in a book—the Constitution of the United States.

When you look at the political atmosphere surrounding this debate on this constitutional amendment, you will see that it is different from any other debate we have had on an amendment to this Constitution. A constitutional amendment is really only necessary when there is a concern that the rights of the minority may not be respected by the majority. When there was first a suggestion of a Bill of Rights, it was opposed by James Madison. He said: It is not necessary. The original Constitution, as written, defines what the Federal Government can do, and therefore all of our rights as individuals, as State governments, and as local governments, are certainly ours and preserved. We do not need to add any language preserving them, it is assumed that they will be preserved.

But as the Constitution was submitted to the various States for ratification, more and more delegates came back and said: We disagree. We want explicit protection. We want the Bill of Rights to explicitly protect the rights of American citizens, and we want to spell it out.

One of the primary arguments used for the validity of the Bill of Rights is that the first amendment, so often quoted for freedom of speech and press and assembly and religion, is often heralded as the first amendment because it was so important. A little reading of history shows us it was not the first amendment in the Bill of Rights. The first two amendments submitted to the States in the Bill of Rights were rejected. The third amendment, which is now our first amendment, moved up. The first two that were rejected related to the question of reapportionment of the Congress and the ability to be compensated or receive additional compensation during the course of a congressional term.

That little footnote in history notwithstanding, we value these 10 amendments in the Bill of Rights as special.

Then, beyond that Bill of Rights, concerns about the rights of the minority rose again in the 13th and 14th amendments, when we repealed slavery, or in regard to the 19th amendment and the provision of suffrage to women.

This amendment, however, does not fit in that description. All but a very small number of American politicians and organizations emphatically support victims rights. Every State in the Union has at least statutory protection of victims of crime when it comes to the procedure of criminal prosecution. Some 33 States have amended their State constitutions to provide similar protection, including my own home State of Illinois in 1992. I fully support that. I think the State was right to pass a crime victims protection in our State constitution.

Second, any amendment to the Constitution should be more than just a symbolic gesture. I want to grant crime victims real and concrete rights. The proposed amendment, however, has certain provisions which are illusory and unenforceable. Indeed, the amendment lacks definable language and does not address its implementation. What is the most important single word in a crime victims protection amendment? Let me suggest it is ''victim,'' the word ''victim.'' That is the group they seek to protect and honor and empower. Yet search, if you will, S.J. Res. 3, you will not find a definition of the word ''victim.''

For those who are listening to the debate, who say, ''How can that be a problem? We know who the victim of the crime is''—are you sure? My daughter was assaulted. She was certainly the victim of a crime. As her father, was I victimized?

Some say: That is a stretch, we just mean the person who was actually assaulted.

Let's try this from a different angle. Let's assume someone is a victim of a crime and is murdered. Are they the only victim of the crime? Is the spouse of the murdered victim also a victim? I could certainly argue that. I could argue a lot of other members of the family could be victims.

Let's consider this possibility. If you are going to empower victims to change the prosecution and the procedure in a criminal case, think about a battered wife. A battered wife, who has been the victim of domestic violence for a long period of time and who finally strikes back and assaults the spouse who has battered her, she is then brought in on criminal charges of assault and battery, and the abusing spouse becomes a victim, too. According to this amendment, the abusing spouse now has crime victim's rights, even though he was the one who battered his wife, giving rise to her response and retribution. It gets a little complicated, doesn't it?

We know who a crime victim was—someone who was hurt. When you start playing this thing out, you understand why the authors of this proposed constitutional amendment, despite 63 different drafts of this amendment, have never defined the word ''victim.'' Because if you empower that victim to slow down court proceedings or speed them up, to be notified, to be part of the process, you had better take care to understand who is going to receive these rights and how these rights will be exercised, because if you are not careful, you can have a lot of unfortunate consequences.

The amendment lacks this definable language. It does not direct the law enforcement court personnel, who are supposed to enforce the newly created victims' rights, on how to do so.

Finally, the important goal of establishing victims' rights can be achieved through legislation. A constitutional amendment is simply not necessary. Due to the respect I have for the Constitution, I am extremely reluctant to amend it unless there is no other means by which the victims of crime can be protected. Every state in the United States have a state statute to protect the rights of victims. Thirty-three States have constitutional amendments to protect the rights of victims. Frankly, there appears to be across the United States, in every State of the Nation, a protection of crime victims.

The obvious question of those who bring this amendment to the floor, then, is, why is this necessary? Why do we need to amend the Constitution of the United States if existing State law and State constitutional provisions already protect the victims of crime? There may be flaws in these State amendments, State constitutional amendments, State laws, but these flaws can be corrected on a State basis, as needed.

In addition, a statutory alternative to this constitutional amendment can reach all of the goals it seeks to achieve. Indeed, there is legislation that has been proposed by the Senator from Vermont, Mr. LEAHY, which I enthusiastically support, which would put in statute these crime victim protections. I think this is the best way, the most effective way, to deal with this.

Let me give a few illustrations of how complicated this situation can become. Some of them are real-life stories that give evidence of problems prosecutors have run into in States where individuals have the right to come forward and to assert their rights as victims of crime. Let me give you two of them.

In Florida, a Miami defense lawyer tells of representing a murder defendant who accepted a plea from the prosecution. Of course, the acceptance of a plea is a decision that you will plead guilty under certain circumstances and waive the right to a trial. The judge refused to accept the offer after the victim's mother spoke out against it. The victim's mother insisted that the criminal defendant go to trial, despite the agreement by the Government and the defense that he would accept a plea. The client went to trial, was acquitted, and released.

In the second case, in California, relatives of a homicide victim complained to a judge that a plea bargain between the prosecution and the defense was too lenient. They got what they wanted, withdrawal of the plea and prosecution of the man on murder charges. At the close of the trial, the defendant was acquitted and went free.

In each of these instances, in each State, the victim or victim's family asserted their rights to overturn a decision by the prosecutor based on that prosecutor's evaluation of the evidence and the likely outcome of a trial, and the net result of it was that the wrongdoer ended up walking out of the courthouse door without a penalty.

The suggestion that the victim's involvement or intervention is always going to lead to a stiffer penalty is, frankly, shown in these two cases not to apply.

I also make note of the fact that, during the course of this debate, those who support the constitutional amendment, the Senator from Arizona, Mr. KYL, and the Senator from California, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, have said on occasion that this would in no way jeopardize the rights of the accused; in other words, that empowering and giving new rights to crime victims will not be at the expense of the accused defendant. Our Constitution is very clear when it comes to criminal defendants, that there are certain rights which shall be protected. We, of course, know the right to trial by jury, the right to confront your accuser, and all of the rights which have been cataloged over the years.

When this constitutional amendment came before the Senate Judiciary Committee 2 years ago, I was a member of that committee. I offered an amendment to this legislation in committee which said nothing in this proposed constitutional amendment shall diminish or deny the rights of the accused as guaranteed under the Constitution. It was said over and over that is the case of this language and this proposal. Yet my attempt to put it into the amendment was refused. I understand Senator FEINGOLD of Wisconsin offered the same amendment in committee this time when it was being considered, and it, again, was refused.

As I stand here today, I suggest to my colleagues that we are considering a constitutional amendment which, though it is important, is not necessary. Before we amend the Bill of Rights in the United States of America, it should be something that we all believe, or at least the vast majority believes, is necessary. The existing State constitutional protections of crime victims, the existing State statutes all provide protection to the victims of crime. The suggestion that we can pass a Federal statute which can be modified if we find it is not perfect gives us an option to do something responsible without invading the sanctity and province of the Constitution of the United States.

In addition, I suggest that protecting the rights of victims, as important as it is, must be taken into consideration with base constitutional rights and protections for the accused as well in this free society, recalling the premise of criminal justice in America: innocence until guilt is proven. That is something which is painful to stand by at times, but it is as American as the Constitution which guarantees it.

I suggest to my colleagues in the Senate and to my friend, the Senator from New York, who I see is on the floor, that we should think twice before proceeding with this amendment to the Constitution. I will join my colleagues during the course of this debate in further discussion of the merits of this proposal. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I congratulate the distinguished Senator from Illinois for saying, but taking one exception, we ought to think twice about this matter. Dare I hope we might think once. It comes wholly unexpected to us, a massive departure from two centuries of constitutional practice, a measure—one amendment which was longer than the whole of the Bill of Rights, and there is not a single Member on the other side of the aisle listening, wishing to speak, present. There are three of us on the Senate floor with the Constitution in our hands in a matter of 27 hours—the casualness.

George Will said on Sunday that we were cluttering the Constitution. We do things palpably ill advised. In the House, they put us on a 1-year balanced budget back into an agricultural cycle, long since gone. There was no mention whatever of the rights of the accused, about which we were very concerned. A people should be concerned when Government accuses someone, and that is why we have the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Fourteenth amendments. Then to have this endless, tedious, complex amendment about victims' rights and, as the Senator says, no definition whatever of what a victim is.

I say to those not present on the opposite side—and there are, of course, supporters on this side—the capacity of American culture in this stage to think of new forms of victimhood is unprecedented. It has been a characteristic of the culture for a generation now to find victims and to declare oneself a victim and demand compensation and consideration therefore. It may become a permanent feature of American culture. I do not know. I doubt it. But it is at high moment now and would this amendment—oh, my goodness. And for the law schools, yes, and for those who design and build courthouses, oh, sure, and judges—there will be no more judges held up in this Senate. We will need double the Federal judiciary in no time at all.

How could we have come to the point where we have so little sense of our history, as the Senator from Illinois so rightly said. James Madison did not think a bill of rights was necessary since the Constitution only gave powers, specifically enumerated powers, to the Federal Government. What it was not given, it could not do. Still, George Mason and others persuaded him and prudence—a hugely important aspect of good government—prudence said: Well, why not have a bill of rights? And we have learned to be glad that we did.

Do my colleagues recall the impeachment trial we went through a year ago? I was struck by the managers—fine persons all—but how little reference they gave to the Constitution which provides for impeachment. I may be mistaken—I hope I am—but I did not hear one reference to Madison's notes which he kept during the Convention in Philadelphia, or the notes of the one day in which the impeachment clause was settled.

On that day, it was stated, for example, the most important impeachment of the age then was the impeachment of Warren Hastings going on in London. Edmund Burke, well known here as a supporter of the colony's rights, managed the case by the House of Commons in the House of Lords. The point was made by Mason that Hastings was not accused of a crime. That was not why he was being impeached. It was abuse of office. Hence, we have the term ''high crimes and misdemeanors.'' High crimes.

Now. Do my colleagues know what the references were in that debate? They were to Hollywood movies. And do my colleagues remember Marlene Dietrich in ''Witness for the Prosecution''? Are we trivializing our oath to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic? It is scarcely to be believed.

Why are the seats empty on the other side? I cannot be certain, but I offer a thought, and I would be happy to hear differently. The administration is negotiating with the sponsors because the administration has indicated a willingness to support this atrocity, this abomination, this violation of all we have treasured in two centuries and more.

That the administration should do this is something I could not imagine I would ever see. Yet we have it in writing that they are prepared to do it. I only hope the negotiations break down.

I shall have more to say at another time. But I just wanted to make this comment. Now I leave the floor. Our revered senior Senator from Vermont will be the only one remaining. I do not doubt he will have thoughts to disclose. But even he will eventually find himself somewhat distracted by the fact that no one is listening. The distinguished Presiding Officer is here. But there will not be another soul present with such attention and energy as we take up a matter of the greatest possible importance, which is amending the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, if the distinguished senior Senator from New York would yield to me before leaving?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I am happy to yield.

Mr. LEAHY. I hope all Senators get a chance to read what the distinguished Senator said. He is recognized as one of the foremost historians of this country and certainly of the Senate. He is so right: We are talking about amending the Constitution, and nobody is here to talk about it.

I say to my friend from New York, there have been 11,000 proposed amendments to the Constitution that have been brought before the Congress. Article V speaks of amending the Constitution when necessary.

The Senator from New York is a far greater student of history than I, but does he think that by any stretch of the imagination—we have had civil wars; we have fought in world wars; we have gone through Presidential assassinations; we have done all these things—we have ever come close to 11,000 times in the history of this great Nation where it has been necessary to amend the Constitution?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. We have not, sir, as is evidenced by the fact that I believe we have done it 18 times including the Bill of Rights, which was basically part of the Constitution.

Mr. LEAHY. I say to my friend from New York, it is the Senate that is the saucer that cools the passions. That should make us slow up and look at these things.

I wonder what would have happened if, say, during all those times, 10 percent of those amendments had gone through. That would be 1,100 amendments. If 1 percent went through, there would be over 100 amendments. What a different country this would be with much less democracy, if we would be a democracy at all.

The first amendment in our little pocketbooks of the Constitution is only four or five lines. The first amendment really protects the diversity of this country to make sure we remain a democracy, that we have the right to practice any religion we want, or none if we want—both thoughts are protected—that we can say what we want, that we can assemble and petition our Government. All of that is protected. Yet we have something that, when we print out this proposed amendment, goes on for something like 60 lines.

I am a lawyer. I loved doing appellate work. The distinguished Presiding Officer is a distinguished former attorney general. I am sure he would love to do appellate work. I can tell you right now, this is a lawyer's dream. We might as well quadruple the number of courts, the number of judges. They would not keep up with the appeals that would come just from this one amendment alone.

It is hard for me to emphasize enough, and I hate to hold up the Senator from New York on this, but there is nobody else here to express my frustration to.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Please.

Mr. LEAHY. He and I are on the same side of this. I have the privilege, as I said earlier, of being the 21st Member of the Senate, in all its history, to cast 10,000 votes. Some votes were important; a lot were not important. But I thought it was pretty impressive—10,000 votes. Even with all the unimportant ones, even after all of them, I did not vote enough to have voted on all the proposed constitutional amendments. There have been 11,000.

Our highly respected and beloved two most senior Members of this body, Senator THURMOND and Senator BYRD, have cast 15,000 votes. They are about the only ones who might have cast enough votes. But those votes encompassed all kinds of things.

Here we are talking about changing the Constitution at the drop of a hat. Some of us—Republicans and Democrats alike, conservatives and liberals—ought to stand up and say: We will pass statutes; we will experiment. If we are wrong, we will change the statutes; we will change the law. But we will not amend the Constitution. No matter that the proposal comes from the left or the right, no matter what it is, we should not pass it unless it is, as the Constitution says, necessary.

This resolution is not necessary for the security and for the continuation of the world's greatest democracy.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. May I just make a closing remark.

Not meaning to be disrespectful, but there is a joke, a witticism, if you like, that says libraries file the French Constitution under the heading of periodicals: It comes; it goes; it comes; it goes.

We have a treasure here, the oldest written Constitution on Earth. It has preserved a republic which is without equal. There are two nations, the United States and Britain, that both existed in 1800 and have not had their form of government changed by violence since then. We live in a world where a century ago there were approximately, as I count, 8 nations on Earth that both existed then and have not had their form of government changed by violence since.

If we are to trivialize the Constitution because of passing enthusiasms about this economic theory, that economic theory, we risk the stability of this institution.

I make just one reference to the fact that several years ago we passed a law providing for a Presidential line item veto on legislation. It was elementally unconstitutional. The Senate passed it. The House passed it. The President signed it.

Three of us—our revered senior Democratic Member, Senator BYRD, Senator LEVIN, and I—brought suit in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, which in good time held that the line item veto was indeed unconstitutional. The government appealed to the Supreme Court that as members of Congress we did not have the requisite standing.

Then in the following term, the veto had been exercised. We clearly did have standing. We went there as amici. And, bang, the Court said: This is unconstitutional.

Does the President not have lawyers? Are there no counsel on the Judiciary Committee here and in the House? It is something that elemental.

Sir, we are approaching a dangerous moment in the history of the Republic. As I leave the floor, as I am required elsewhere, I leave the Senator from Vermont who is alone defending the Constitution of the United States. He is alone on the Senate floor. There is not a single person here who supports this monstrosity, this abomination, willing to come forward and say why.

Does that not say something?

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I greatly appreciate the comments of the distinguished Senator from New York. He and I have been friends for over a generation. I for one have learned from him and have been inspired by him. He is so right on this. This debate is treated as a matter of such passing moment that nobody is here. I want them to have a chance to come back.

I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time for the quorum be charged not against any individual Senator but against the overall 30 hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I yield my time under the pending measure to the Senator from Vermont, Mr. LEAHY, 1 hour. I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time during the quorum not be charged to either side at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, I rise to oppose S.J. Res. 3, the victims' rights constitutional amendment. I agree with the goals of the proponents of the amendment. We have to do more to protect and enhance the rights of victims of crime. But I disagree with the particular means they have chosen to bring about that end. We do not need to amend the Constitution to protect victims. We can protect the rights of victims by enforcing current State and Federal laws. We can protect the rights of victims by providing the needed resources to prosecutors and courts to allow them to enforce and comply with existing laws. We can protect the rights of victims by enacting additional statutes, if needed, to deal with remaining concerns or any issues that might arise in this regard in the future.

The framers of the Constitution made the process of amending the Constitution very difficult. Those who propose to change that long-lived and successful charter bear a heavy burden. I have thus opposed proposals to amend the Constitution, and especially the Bill of Rights, even when the subject of the amendment was very close to my heart, as it was with the recent proposal to amend the Constitution to allow for mandatory campaign spending limits. Similarly, I believe deeply in the need to ensure that our criminal justice system treats victims fairly, but I do not believe we have to amend the Constitution to do so.

Throughout history, Members of Congress have thought of more than 11,000 different ways to amend the Constitution—as of this last recess, 11,045, by one count. Luckily, only 27 have become part of our national charter. Ten of those, the Bill of Rights, were part of the package of ratification, and two, the ones on prohibition, canceled each other. Three others followed the enormous upheaval of the Civil War and addressed the wrongs of slavery and inequality that spawned that conflict. But the pace at which Members have introduced and proposed amendments has picked up in modern times. More than half of the constitutional amendments proposed in the entire lifetime of our Nation have come in the last 40 years. Fewer were proposed in the first 173 years of our Nation. This Senate has now considered three so far in this session alone—and the year is still young.

In a sense, there is a certain lack of humility about proposing so quickly to amend the Constitution. To propose to change the Constitution now is to say we have come up with an idea that the framers of that great charter did not, or that we have come to a conclusion on how our Government should work fundamentally different from the one they had and fundamentally different from the one all the Congresses since have had. We should come hesitantly, if we do, to the conclusion that we know better than they did. Yes, there will come occasions where times have changed, as with women's right to vote, and we need to bring the Constitution up to date; but it is hard to consider the basic calculus of prosecutor, defendant, and victim to have changed this much since the foundation of the Republic.

I have to admit that of the constitutional amendments I have seen proposed in recent Congresses, this is less objectionable in some respects than most. But I still have significant concerns about the prospect of amending the Constitution, even for this very worthy purpose. We must use the constitutional amendment process sparingly. Before taking the grave step of amending our country's founding charter, we have to make sure we have exhausted all statutory alternatives. When it comes to victims' rights, we are far from exhausting those statutory alternatives. We currently have Federal and State laws protecting victims. Indeed, many States have passed their own constitutional amendments to protect victims, including my own State of Wisconsin—a proposal that I voted for when I was in the Wisconsin State Senate.

According to the proponents of this constitutional amendment, these existing laws are not being fully enforced. I would say we should therefore see to it that the existing laws are enforced. Let us enact legislation to improve the existing law, and let us provide the needed resources to prosecutors and courts to comply with existing laws. That is where the real struggle lies. Only when we have exhausted these legislative avenues should we possibly consider a constitutional amendment.

Let's address this important issue one step at a time. Statutes protecting victims are on the books in each and every State. Amendments to State constitutions have been adopted by at least 31 States. At the Federal level, prudent legislation has already been enacted and additional legislation proposed. Let us work with the current law and proposals to improve our Federal laws. In fact, additional statutory protections for victims have been introduced during this Congress by Chairman HATCH and by the ranking member and Senator KENNEDY. I believe these represent the right direction in which to go.

Chairman HATCH has introduced the Victims' Rights Act of 1999. Senators LEAHY and KENNEDY have introduced the Crime Victims Assistance Act. Senator LEAHY announced an improved version of that bill, taking into account many suggestions made by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I understand Senator LEAHY will offer his bill as a substitute to this constitutional amendment, if the majority leader allows Senators to exercise their traditional rights to offer amendments.

Enforcing and enacting comprehensive Federal statutes is the best way to protect victims. The Leahy-Kennedy bill will accomplish the same goals the proponents of this amendment want, but it will do it faster and also protect the integrity of the Constitution. The Leahy-Kennedy bill includes the right for a victim to be heard at the detention and sentencing stages, the right to be notified of escaped or released prisoners, and the right to be heard during consideration of a plea agreement. These are sensible protections that victims can see take effect in only a matter of weeks—the time it takes for consideration and passage of a statute—not years from now when maybe two-thirds of the Congress approves and three-fourths of the States ratify a constitutional amendment.

Another reason I oppose this measure is that a constitutional amendment, as you well know, is far less flexible than a statute when provisions must be improved over time. A constitutional amendment cannot easily be modified. Changing it at all—even one letter of it—would again require the approval of two-thirds of the Congress and ratification by three-fourths of the State legislatures. This is a real problem in this case because there are numerous uncertainties about the effect of this amendment. Even the sponsors are finding things they want to change. Each time this amendment has been brought before the Judiciary Committee, it has been different. In fact, the amendment was modified as recently as last spring when we marked it up in the Constitution Subcommittee. At that time, my good friend, Senator ASHCROFT, successfully offered an amendment to include the rights of victims to be involved in the pardon process. Such a change has inspired a good deal of criticism from the executive branch, which is concerned with its impact on the exclusive power of the President to grant pardons.

Whatever one thinks of the change to the amendment, it is the sort of thing that ought to give us pause when we are dealing not with a statute but with what is likely to be a permanent constitutional amendment. What if Senator ASHCROFT had not realized that this change was needed until after the pending proposed constitutional amendment was already adopted? What if, instead, we had approved the victims' rights amendment in the last Congress, as I am sure its sponsors would have preferred? Then, to change the amendment, Senator ASHCROFT would have been required to get two-thirds of the Congress and three-fourths of the State legislatures to agree to the change.

The pardon issue isn't the end of the matter. Other Senators have raised concerns about the specifics of this amendment; for example, its focus on the victims of violent crimes rather than all victims of crime. If any further changes are needed, we will have to, again, go through the lengthy and difficult process of amending the constitution. I have no doubt that further changes will be necessary. I have heard the main authors of this constitutional amendment saying with some pride that there have been 63 versions of this amendment. They offer that as a sign that this is a very well-honed, carefully drafted piece of legislation or amendment. What I suggest it means is that it is highly volatile, likely to change, and likely to be inappropriate for the Constitution, even after it is ratified, given all the changes that have been made and the problems with it. This constitutional amendment really reads as a statute. It is almost as long as the entire Bill of Rights. It is full of terms and concepts that will undoubtedly provoke years of litigation and years of attempts to overturn a court decision that one group or another doesn't like.

It even contains an extraordinary clause that might be called the ''emergency eject button.'' The Government can ignore the amendment. Remember, this language will be in the Constitution. The Government can ignore the amendment to achieve a ''compelling interest.''

What if the prosecutors in a high-profile case sought to avoid the impact of the amendment and the courts determined the justification they gave did not rise to the level of a compelling interest? If we, as a Congress, agreed with the prosecutors, we would not be able to pass a statute to override that judicial ruling because it would have to actually pass a constitutional amendment to deal with the problem.

It is clear that despite years of effort that have gone into this amendment, it will have to be fine-tuned in the future. We fine-tune statutes all the time, but we all know constitutional amendments can't really be fine-tuned. That is a big problem the Senate needs to face up to.

This amendment also poses major federalism problems. I am troubled this amendment could well result in extensive oversight of State criminal justice systems by the Federal courts. Victims who believe their rights have not been recognized in State court proceedings will undoubtedly file lawsuits in Federal district courts. Federal courts will end up second-guessing the decisions of State prosecutors or judges about how long a case took to get to trial or what victim should be notified of a bail hearing. That is why the Conference of Chief Justices, representing the chief justices of the supreme courts of all of our States, oppose this amendment and strongly prefer that we deal with this problem statutorily.

The State chief justices have also expressed concern that this year's version of the amendment, as opposed to previous versions, allows Congress, but not the States, to pass legislation implementing the amendment. They appropriately note that the States can better determine what laws are needed to implement the amendment, as it is the operation of their own criminal justice system that is really at issue. But that would again lead to precisely the patchwork of laws and protections varying from State to State that the sponsors of this amendment wish to avoid and claim is the reason they need a constitutional amendment.

I cannot emphasize enough that I am deeply committed to protecting the victims of crime. As a State senator in the Wisconsin State Senate in 1991, I voted in favor of amending the Wisconsin State Constitution to include protections for victims. As I have noted, most States have a State constitutional protection for victims, and every State in the country has at least a statute to protect victims.

I draw my colleagues' attention to the example of Wisconsin because the Wisconsin State Constitution repeatedly clarifies that the rights granted to the victim in the Wisconsin Constitution are not intended to diminish the rights of the accused. The Wisconsin amendment contains language that explicitly forbids victims' rights from impairing the rights of the accused that are otherwise guaranteed by law. Unfortunately, the victims' rights amendment before this body does not contain a similar provision.

For that reason, I offered an amendment during the Judiciary Committee markup that would have included a clarification similar to the Wisconsin language. It is troubling and puzzling to me that the majority of the Judiciary Committee did not agree with that amendment because they stated over and over again in defense of this amendment that it would in no way derogate the rights of the defense. If that is so, why did they oppose such a simple clarification that we found so useful when passing a similar provision in Wisconsin?

When, in the wake of the Boston massacre, John Adams defended the British soldiers accused of committing the killings there, he said:

> [I]t [is] more beneficial that many guilty persons should go unpunished than one innocent person should suffer.

Surely, if there is a central pillar of the American system of justice, this is it: Above all, we must protect the rights of the innocent.

That is why our Constitution enshrines limitations on the State and protections of the individual whose liberties the State would seek to curtail.

Sadly, even with our manifold protections for the rights of the accused, history has demonstrated that time and again America has on occasion brought innocence itself to the bar and condemned it to jail or even to die.

Many proponents of the amendment before the Senate today state categorically that the rights of victims and the rights of the accused can comfortably coexist. They claim the amendment would not reduce the rights of the accused. They may be right, although I fear that cases may arise where judges will believe that to give the amendment force will require a lessening of protections for the accused. Be that as it may, the proponents of this amendment have refused to make this protection of the rights of the accused crystal clear by writing that intent into the amendment itself. Until they do, it is not unreasonable for Senators to fear that this constitutional amendment in some cases would actually end up curtailing the legitimate rights and liberties of defendants in courts of law.

For those who believe in individual freedom and civil liberties, this should be troubling, indeed.

The Constitution should be modified sparingly, where no other alternative provides an adequate solution. That showing has not been made. The laws on the books now should be fully enforced. Courts and prosecutors should be given the resources they need to protect victims under current law. Congress and State legislatures should enact additional legislation where needed to give additional protection.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting prudent, statutory safeguards for victims. But I urge my colleagues to vote against this victims' rights amendment to the Constitution.

(The remarks of Mr. FEINGOLD pertaining to the introduction of S. 2458 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

Mr. FEINGOLD. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I want to address the pending so-called victims' rights constitutional amendment.

There is no question but that there are instances when victims of crimes in this country are not heard as they should be heard. Our criminal justice system does not work perfectly. But these duties are given to local judges and local district attorneys. They are elected officials. In most cases, they are responsible to the people in their jurisdictions. It is in their interest to make sure victims are treated appropriately.

Certainly, in most cases, the defendants are not the ones who have the public support on their side. It is certainly the victims. In most cases, it is in the interest of those charged with the responsibility of notifying victims of proceedings in court and treating them as they should be treated in carrying out those responsibilities.

Having said that, we must acknowledge that some things slip through the cracks. We have a constitutional amendment that is proposed basically to cover those instances when these local officials let things slip through the cracks and victims are not notified of court dates or sentencing or parole hearings. The sentiment is understandable, but if we look a bit closer, we have to conclude that a constitutional amendment to address this problem is not the way to go. It is constitutional overkill, to say the least.

All 50 States have recognized we can do better in terms of victims, we can notify them when important things happen with regard to the trial of a defendant, and all 50 States have passed legislation, constitutional amendments, or both, to address this problem.

Even still, we in Washington, DC, say we are going to pass a constitutional amendment, in effect mandating—an unfunded mandate at that—mandating these States behave in certain ways to take care of this problem.

People say: State laws and State constitutions still do not always work. There are still some cases where people are not notified, even though the State constitution and the State statute require it. A constitutional amendment will, in some way, solve that problem.

I suggest there is no reason to believe whatsoever that in individual cases where this problem still persists, a Federal constitutional amendment will do any better than a State constitutional amendment will do in ensuring those rights.

I believe this amendment will inject complexity into the judicial process, will cause increased litigation, and will actually have the effect of harming victims more than helping victims. The primary interest of a victim of a crime is to make sure a guilty defendant is, in fact, found guilty and properly punished. This constitutional amendment will make the procedure by which the DA's around the country are trying to prosecute these defendants more complex, more costly, more time consuming in many respects, and ultimately will harm the very end in which the victim is most interested, and that is seeing justice done and a guilty defendant found guilty by our court system.

This constitutional amendment gives nine new rights to a new category of people. The Constitution sets out our form of government. The Bill of Rights basically is restrictions on the power of that Government. It tells the Government things they cannot do because we have been mindful of the down sides of an all-powerful federal government. We have set forth specific things the Government may not do toward individuals. That has usually been the purpose of amendments to our Constitution; that is, again, limiting the Government in what they can do with regard to the individual. This constitutional amendment creates nine new rights on behalf of a new category of people; that is, so-called victims.

It has taken, in some cases, 200 years, or thereabouts, to have our courts pass on the issues that have come about because of the wording of our Constitution and the wording of the Bill of Rights—what is a reasonable and unreasonable search and seizure, for example.

This will, in language that is more lengthy than most of the amendments in the Bill of Rights, create additional complexity and raise additional questions that can only be resolved by courts of law. It will be many years before issues as to how this works are resolved. Who is a victim, how do you define a victim? For example, suppose we have a battered woman who is on trial for stabbing her husband. What if she is the defendant? What if the husband was, in fact, attacking her? Who is the victim in that case? The reasonable notice victims are supposed to get to court proceedings, it sounds good on its face, but what is reasonable notice? We have hundreds and hundreds of cases of trying to decide what is reasonable.

In another context, what if a victim is not notified of a court proceeding on time? Or what if they say they are not but perhaps they have been? They may come in and say: This proceeding you have just finished, I did not get notice of it.

The district attorney may say: Yes, we did give you notice.

They may say: No, you did not.

The district attorney may say: Yes, we did.

They may say: It was not reasonable notice.

The prosecutor may say: We gave you so many days.

All of these issues ultimately will have to be decided by a court that should be devoting its attention to the proceedings in the case, along with the district attorneys devoting their attention to prosecuting the defendant and not having these collateral issues making their job that much more difficult.

To understand the potential mischief of this constitutional amendment, I think you have to really understand our system and the way it is set up under the Constitution.

The Constitution was mindful of the inherent problems with a centralized government. Our founding forefathers' experience with a powerful government, with a king, led them to decide we would have a federal system whereby the States would have certain rights. They decided against a national police state. We have certain defined Federal responsibilities with regard to law enforcement. But there is no inherent police authority in the Constitution for the Federal Government. The basic police authority is out in the States. We do not want a national police force in this country or a centralized policing authority for every kind of crime that might occur. Murder, robbery, rape, burglary—those are crimes that are handled at the State level.

Mr. President, 95 percent of the offenses in this country are prosecuted at the State level, not the Federal level. That is not the Federal Government's business. Absent the relatively few truly Federal criminal cases that we have, these State offenses are prosecuted at the State level. They are prosecuted by district attorneys and assistant district attorneys all over the country. They are given a good deal of discretion as to how they handle these cases.

Mind you, in most cases these people are elected officials in their local communities. They have every reason to want to do the right thing. They take an oath to uphold the law. They have an interest in making sure everybody is treated fairly. It does not always happen, but it is a system we are dealing with here. We cannot address every particular instance that might come along. It is a system with which we are concerned.

This is our system. District attorneys decide when to plea bargain. District attorneys have to decide how strong their case is. Only they will know how strong their case is, in making a decision whether to accept a plea bargain.

Sometimes, when you have multiple defendants, district attorneys have to make a decision to make a deal with one defendant for more lenience in exchange for testimony against another defendant. All of these are discretionary things that in our system we give local district attorneys the right to do.

It is basically a system involving two parties; that is, the State, or the people, on the one hand, and the criminal defendants on the other.

What this constitutional amendment would do is change that whole system in many material respects. Instead of having a two-party system, where you have a prosecutor, or the State, or the people, and a criminal defendant, you would now have three parties. You would have the prosecutor, the defendant, and the victim.

At every meaningful stage of the criminal trial, you would have all of these three parties vying for the court's attention to have their interests expressed. It is complicated enough, as anybody who has ever been a prosecutor, an assistant U.S. attorney at the Federal level or assistant district attorney, can tell you.

It is complicated enough when you just have two parties. You are trying to do the right thing. You are trying to prosecute the case. For the person who you believe is guilty, who has been indicted, you are going to bring them to trial. The defendant has not been convicted yet, but you believe they are guilty or you would not be prosecuting them. But you also know the limitations of your case.

You also know how many other defendants there are out there. You also know whether or not this guy you have before you is a small fry or a big fish. You also know there might be a chance of getting to someone bigger.

All those kinds of things you know are very complicated, very difficult. The defendants file motions for continuances. The defendants file motions to suppress evidence, if there is a search warrant involved. There are motions to dismiss and all those kinds of things.

Here we come along with this constitutional amendment and inject a third party into the process, third parties who certainly have an interest in the outcome, third parties who are allowed to attend, third parties who want to see that justice is done. But a constitutional amendment would not just say, let's give these third parties these rights, let's try to do them right, let's try to make sure they have their voices heard; we would, by amendment, put this in the Constitution of the United States, just like the first amendment on free speech or the fifth amendment on due process or the sixth amendment on the right to counsel.

We would elevate the rights of a victim, with whom we are all sympathetic, up there with the prosecutor and the defense in trying to juggle all of this business of giving notice and having a right to be in the courtroom at every stage of the game. The judge is going to have to decide whether or not notice has been given correctly at all the right times, whether or not the right people are in the courtroom. All this new complexity injected in an already complex system.

As well meaning as it is, I think the result of it is going to be, as I said, more complexity, more litigation for people who believe the Constitution has not been followed, that they have not been given the right kind of notice, or they were late for court and they did not get to sit in the courtroom, or something of that nature. It is going to wind up hurting the ultimate interest of victims more than helping.

Under the constitutional amendment, the victim, as we would ultimately define a victim—as I said, it is not going to be that easy in many cases—would have a right to come in and object to a deal the district attorney might want to make.

Only the district attorney may know certain information. For example, let's say there is a gang involved and you have one cooperative witness. When the victims come in and object to the deal, the district attorney cannot stand up and say, this is the reason we are doing this, because everybody else would hear it. It would compromise possibly another case.

Or if the victim comes in and objects to a plea bargain with a particular defendant, the district attorney cannot get up and say, the reason we did this, Your Honor, is we really do not have much of a chance, and we are lucky to get this. He cannot do that because he may have to, in fact, go to trial. As happens sometimes, the judge is sympathetic and says: We agree with the victim. We are not going to accept this deal.

The district attorney is sitting there, unable to explain it fully on the one hand and then, on the other, having to go to trial, and in some cases, when in States that have such rules, has gone to trial and actually lost the case. So the attorney, instead of getting some punishment for a guilty defendant, has actually had to go to trial and at the trial, you have to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt—a high standard of proof—and the defendant walks because they were unable to make the deal that they were trying to make.

Under this amendment, there is a provision that is extremely troublesome; that is, that it becomes a constitutional right for a victim to be in court at all times during the proceeding. In most cases, in just about all States at one time, it was the rule. In fact, they just call it the rule. Every lawyer knows when you are trying a case, you say: Your Honor, I would like to impose the rule. When that happens, all of the other witnesses leave the courtroom because you don't want your witnesses to be hearing other witnesses testify. It might tailor their testimony. If somebody on your side of the case is testifying a certain way about how something happened, it makes sense that it is not in the interest of justice to have the other witnesses sitting there listening to that so when they get on the witness stand, they are not tempted to tailor their testimony and avoid any contradictions that the other side might take advantage of. It is kind of a horn book procedure.

What this amendment would do would say that the victim could sit in the courtroom and listen to all of the other witnesses testify. If the prosecutor decided to put the victim on last, they could listen to every one of the witnesses testify before the victim in the courtroom took the stand. That goes against experience and common sense and common practice for about 200 years in this country. We have to keep in mind that at this stage of the game, this defendant has not been convicted of anything. As angry as we might be at the defendant or as much as we think he might be guilty, we have to remember he hasn't been convicted of anything. In this country, everybody gets a fair trial.

If one of our loved ones was accused of something and we thought the accuser had their own reasons for accusing our loved one and we saw them sitting in the courtroom listening to all the witnesses talk about exactly how this happened and exactly how that happened and then they took the stand and kind of melded all the testimony together to make it all consistent and wrap it up in one big bow, I think we would be concerned about that. The trial judge at least ought to have the discretion of making a determination as to who sits in the courtroom and who does not. The Federal Government does not have any business micromanaging the trial of these lawsuits in every general sessions court in every little town in the country. That is what this constitutional amendment would do.

It would upset the balance we have always had in this country of a prosecutor, a defendant, tried in a State court with local rules. There have always been constitutional provisions the States have to abide by—there is no question about that—free speech, search and seizure, all of that, but we don't have a unitary government, we have a system of federalism whereby States decide these local cases and State judges make those decisions. We come along with a constitutional amendment that creates nine new rights, about 2½ pages of new Constitution, and goes totally away from the concept that we have had for 200 years in this country, the concept of federalism.

I think this proposal is another step down the road toward a Federal takeover of our criminal justice system. For most of America's history, Federal involvement in criminal law was limited to national issues. Yet in this age of mass media and saturation coverage, Congress and the White House are ever eager to pass Federal criminal laws. Chief Justice Rehnquist has said this. To appear responsive to every highly publicized societal ill or sensational crime, the Congress acts in these areas and creates more and more Federal crimes out of what should be State and local offenses.

We have reached the point where nobody really knows how many Federal crimes now exist. Nobody can really calculate them, but we keep piling them on, more and more. We have undoubtedly surpassed an old estimate that we had awhile back of 3,000. A hearing I chaired last year reviewed an American Bar Association task force report from leaders in the criminal justice system who counseled restraint in federalizing crime control.

Justice Brandeis once said:

> Denial of the right to experiment may be fraught with serious consequences to the Nation. It is one of the happy incidents of the federal system that a single courageous State may, if its citizens choose, serve as a laboratory; and try novel social and economic experiments without risk to the rest of the country.

That is the system we have. States address these issues in different ways. Why should we, as the Federal Government, impose one size fits all on a populace that is not in agreement on exactly what that should be? Why should the States not have the leeway to do what States have always done in our system?

Last but not least, this is a solution looking for a problem for the most part. Every State in the Union has addressed this issue. We have become more mindful that in some cases victims are not getting the attention they need. So every State in the Union has taken a look at this. We think the system works out pretty well. For the most part, our public officials are doing what they are supposed to do.

Some States have gone so far as to change their constitutions. Some States in the middle have passed legislation. But every State, one way or another, has addressed this, doing what States are supposed to be doing, responding to the demands of their local citizens. My State of Tennessee changed its constitution with regard to this. There is absolutely no need for us to federalize this particular area of criminal law.

Finally, my primary concern, besides the ones of upsetting our constitutional framework and system that we have enjoyed in this country for so long, is that—because of the complexity, because of the increased litigation and problems that we can't even anticipate now with a three-party procedure instead of a two-party procedure, questions that will have to be resolved by courts not knowing what kind of delays all this is going to produce and messing up our system and so forth—we will wind up in many cases hurting a victim's interests more than we will help them. As I said from the outset, the victim's primary interest is to make sure that a defendant who is guilty in fact be found guilty in a fair, efficient way that is uncomplicated, uncluttered, and that does not go on forever.

Therefore, I urge that we reject this constitutional amendment. I thank the Chair.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I compliment the Senator from Tennessee for what he said. He is a very thoughtful Senator with great respect for what the Senate's role is in our whole Federal system. We miss him on the Senate Judiciary Committee. I think that can be fairly said by Senators on both sides of the aisle because of his thoughtful involvement and debate. I note that when he was there, he raised similar issues. His voice was one that helped shape the debate. I thank him for it. I compliment him for it.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I understand that under the cloture rules, I am afforded 1 hour of debate time. I designate Senator DASCHLE to control my hour.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. J. Res. 3, the proposed constitutional amendment to establish certain rights for victims of violent crime. I am proud to be a cosponsor of this important legislative proposal introduced by Senators KYL and FEINSTEIN.

I have always cherished the basic freedoms established by the United States Constitution. This precious document provides important rights to every American—rights which have encouraged their active participation in the functions of our Republic. For example, the First Amendment encourages free speech and association, while the 19th and 26th Amendments were ratified to protect the voting rights of women and eighteen-year-old citizens.

As we debate the merits of the proposed Crime Victims Constitutional Amendment, I am reminded of the constitutional rights guaranteed to persons accused of crime. These include the right: to a speedy and public trial by jury; to know the nature of the accusation; to confront witnesses; to counsel; and rights against excessive bail, fines, or cruel or unusual punishment. These rights promote the involvement of the accused in court and should not be diminished by Congressional action.

In recent years, Congress has enacted legislation that seeks to establish certain rights for victims of crime, including the 1990 Victims Rights and Restitution Act, which required federal law enforcement agencies to make their best efforts to ensure that crime victims are treated with fairness and respect. Most recently, we enacted the Mandatory Victims Restitution Act of 1996 and the Victims Rights Clarification Act of 1997, which sought to allow crime victims to observe court proceedings even if they were expected to testify during the sentencing hearing. Additionally, all fifty states now have either constitutional amendments or statutes that seek to protect the rights of crime victims.

Despite these efforts by Congress and the States, I am very concerned that the United States Constitution does not protect the rights of victims and promote their involvement in the criminal justice process. In my view, the Crime Victims' Rights Amendment is the most effective way to address the current imbalance between the rights of defendants and victims within the Constitution. As a constituent from St. Paul recently wrote, the proposed amendment will, ''Prevent victims from being victimized twice. First, by the crime, then by the judicial system when they learn that those accused have all the rights.'' These concerns are shared by the Department of Justice, constitutional scholars, and various victim advocates such as the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children.

The proposed constitutional amendment to protect the rights of crime victims is not a new concept. As my colleagues may know, it was first recommended in 1982 by President Reagan's Task Force on Victims of Crime. Since its initial introduction during the 104th Congress, Senators KYL and FEINSTEIN have worked tirelessly to improve this proposal and preserve the rights of defendants and the authority of prosecutors. Importantly, the Crime Victims' Rights Constitutional Amendment received strong, bipartisan support upon its passage by the Senate Judiciary Committee earlier this month.

I would not support a proposal to change the fundamental character of the Constitution or eliminate the basic freedoms that it provides to Americans. However, I also believe that the rights of crime victims are not trivial to the needs of our nation and are worthy of protection under the Constitution. Passing additional laws or state constitutional amendments that may be ignored by federal and state court comes at the expense of those who have fallen victim to violent crime and who expect equal justice from the criminal justice system.

In addition, we must not forget that many crime victims are afraid of being victimized again and face retaliation by criminal offenders. We must ensure that victims feel respected throughout the criminal justice process. I believe establishing certain constitutional rights for crime victims will help to encourage greater reporting of crimes and cooperation with law enforcement. The Crime Victims' Constitutional Amendment would allow for greater participation in the criminal justice system in a manner completely consistent with constitutional amendments that have established a citizen's right to participate in other government processes.

I respectfully disagree with those who suggest that the Crime Victims' Constitutional Amendment conflicts with the principle of federalism. As someone who has worked to maintain the distinction between federal and state responsibility, I am pleased that this amendment provides an appropriate level of flexibility to the States. Specifically, this amendment would allow the States to pass legislation to define ''victims of crime'' and ''crimes of violence.'' It would also allow States to determine the degree of ''reasonable'' notice to public proceedings or the release or escape of a criminal offender that will be provided to crime victims.

Ultimately, it will be three-quarters of the States that must decide whether to consider and ratify this amendment. Passage of this amendment will not impose any rights upon the States without careful and lengthy consideration by the State legislatures. In fact, this amendment has been endorsed by 49 of our nation's Governors, the elected officials who are most concerned about unnecessary federal mandates being imposed upon the States. Additionally, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) has indicated that this amendment will not impose additional costs upon the States.

I also understand the concerns of those who suggest that the Crime Victims' Rights Amendment will disadvantage defendants during court proceedings. However, the amendment does not deprive the accused of any of their constitutional rights. It would ensure respect and basic fairness for crime victims through a constitutional right to be notified of court proceedings; to attend all public proceedings; to be heard at crucial stages in the process; to be notified of the offender's release or escape; to consideration for a trial free from unreasonable delay; to an order of restitution; to have the safety of the victim considered in determining a release from custody; and to be notified of these basic rights.

In proclaiming the first ''Victims Rights Week'' in 1981, President Reagan stated, ''For too long, the victims of crime have been the forgotten persons of our criminal justice system. Rarely do we give victims the help they need or the attention they deserve. Yet the protection of our citizens—to guard them from becoming victims—is the primary purpose of our penal laws. Thus, each new victim personally represents an instance in which our system has failed to prevent crime. Lack of concern for victims compounds that failure.''

Mr. President, I firmly believe that the Crime Victims' Rights Amendment will help to restore public confidence in the criminal justice system and give crime victims the protection they deserve. The high number of crime victims in our society underscores the need to pass this amendment and send it to the States for their careful consideration. I urge my colleagues to support passage of this important public safety initiative.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, as the Senate once again considers an amendment to the United States Constitution, this time to protect the rights of crime victims, I ask that George Will's column from Sunday's Washington Post be printed in the RECORD in its entirety. He offers a well-reasoned analysis of the concerns the proposed amendment raises.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, April 23, 2000]

(By George F. Will)

TINKERING AGAIN

Congress's constitutional fidgets continue. For the fourth time in 29 days there will be a vote on a constitutional amendment. The House failed to constitutionalize fiscal policy with an amendment to require a balanced budget. The Senate failed to eviscerate the First Amendment by empowering Congress to set ''reasonable limits'' on the funding of political speech. The Senate failed to stop the epidemic of flag burning by an amendment empowering Congress to ban flag desecration. And this week the Senate will vote on an amendment to protect the rights of crime victims.

Because many conservatives consider the amendment a corrective for a justice system too tilted toward the rights of the accused, because liberals relish minting new rights and federalizing things, and because no one enjoys voting against victims, the vote is expected to be close. But the amendment is imprudent.

The amendment would give victims of violent crimes rights to ''reasonable'' notice of and access to public proceedings pertaining to the crime; to be heard at, or to submit a statement to, proceedings to determine conditional release from custody, plea bargaining, sentencing or hearings pertaining to parole, pardon or commutation of sentence; reasonable notice of, and consideration of victim safety regarding, a release or escape from custody relating to the crime; a trial free from unreasonable delay; restitution from convicted offenders.

Were this amendment added to the Constitution, America would need more—a lot more—appellate judges to handle avalanches of litigation, starting with the definition of ''victim.'' For example, how many relatives or loved ones of a murder victim will have victims' rights? Then there are all the requirements of ''reasonableness.'' The Supreme Court—never mind lower courts—has heard more than 100 cases since 1961 just about the meaning of the Fourth Amendment's prohibition of ''unreasonable'' searches.

What is the meaning of the right to ''consideration'' regarding release of a prisoner? And if victims acquire this amendment's panoply of participatory rights, what becomes of, for example, a victim who is also a witness testifying in the trial, and therefore, not entitled to unlimited attendance? What is the right of the victim to object to a plea bargain that a prosecutor might strike with a criminal in order to reach other criminals who are more dangerous to society but are of no interest to the victim?

Federalism considerations also argue against this amendment, and not only because it is an unfunded mandate of unknowable cost. States have general police powers. As the Supreme Court has recently reaffirmed, the federal government—never mind its promiscuous federalizing of crimes in recent decades—does not. Thus Roger Pilon, director of the Center for Constitutional Studies at the Cato Institute, says the Victims' Rights Amendment is discordant with ''the very structure and purpose of the Constitution.''

Pilon says the Framers' ''guarded'' approach to constitutionalism was to limit government to certain ends and certain ways of pursuing them. Government, they thought, existed to secure natural rights—rights that do not derive from government. Thus the Bill of Rights consists of grand negatives, saying what government may not do. But the Victims' Rights Amendment has, Pilon says, the flavor of certain European constitutions that treat rights not as liberties government must respect but as entitlements government must provide.

There should be a powerful predisposition against unnecessary tinkering with the nation's constituting document, reverence for which is diminished by treating it as malleable. And all of the Victims' Rights Amendment's aims can be, and in many cases are being, more appropriately and expeditiously addressed by states, which can fine-tune their experiments with victims' rights more easily than can the federal government after it constitutionalizes those rights.

The fact that all 50 states have addressed victims' rights with constitutional amendments or statutes, or both, strengthens the suspicion that the proposed amendment is (as the Equal Rights Amendment would have been) an exercise in using—misusing, actually—the Constitution for the expressive purpose of affirming a sentiment or aspiration. The Constitution would be diminished by treating it as a bulletin board for admirable sentiments and a place to give special dignity to certain social policies. (Remember the jest that libraries used to file the French constitution under periodicals.)

The Constitution has been amended just 18 times (counting ratification of the first 10 amendments as a single act) in 211 years. The 19th time should not be for the Victims' Rights Amendment. It would be constitutional clutter, unnecessary and, because it would require constant judicial exegesis, a source of vast uncertainty in the administration of justice.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

85TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE 1915 GENOCIDE OF THE ARMENIAN PEOPLE BY THE TURKISH GOVERNMENT

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to commemorate the 85th anniversary of the 1915 Genocide of the Armenians by the Turkish Government. As so many of you are aware, between 1915 and 1923 more than one and a half million Armenians perished from atrocities committed against them. Yet the brave Armenian people persevered.

As the grandson of Lebanese immigrants, I am, of course, very familiar with the historic ties that have bound Armenians to the Lebanese. We have sheltered and strengthened one another in time of need. As peoples we have become close because the experience of being forced from one's home and homeland is not new to either of us.

Through mass deportations, starvation, disease, and outright massacres, Armenians have carried their heads high, as they carried on their way of life or carried their culture to new lands. The strength and pride in Armenian heritage have kept alive the memory of those who perished in the genocide. I rise today to pay tribute to that strong, proud heritage.

As a constant symbol of the strength and perseverance through which oppressed peoples survive, the Armenian genocide must serve as a reminder that we must never forget the atrocities of the past, lest they be repeated.

The Senate Immigration Subcommittee, which I chair, recently held hearings on the status of Albanian refugees in Kosovo. I must say that I was impressed with the strength and faith of these people in the face of the great hardships visited on their people. And I was reminded of another people ''cleansed'' from its homeland by brutal invaders.

But too few Americans are in a position to make that comparison. In the 85 years since the massacre of Armenians began, another great crime has been committed—the crime of keeping the truth from the world.

This was a crime against all people, because it denied them the lessons to be learned from that tragic tale. But most of all it was a crime against all Armenians, alive and dead. For even the dead have at least one right—that of having their story told.

The 1.5 million Armenians who died deserve to have the truth of their suffering known. Only when we know the horror that they went through can we comprehend the gravity of the crime. Only then will the rights of the dead be fulfilled. This is why we must make sure younger generations understand what happened and ensure that it never happens again.

Eighty-four years ago the world had the opportunity to prevent the Armenian holocaust. But the world did not act. While there was much talk, there was no real help for the Armenians. If only we had known then that tyranny must be opposed early and steadfastly, perhaps this and future acts of genocide could have been prevented.

But the world does not learn easily. Even today, massacres take place around the world, with people murdered not for what they have done but for whom they are.

And we must wonder about the final goals of those who continue the blockade of Armenia and Nagorno Karabagh. We must make known to the world our opposition to such policies. We must fight to defend Section 907, cutting off American aid to those enforcing the embargo. And we must not allow the lure of cheap oil from the Caspian, an illusion, really—lead us away from the path of truth and justice.

To do justice to the memory of those who died we must see to it that justice is done to the living, to those who survived them. That means doing justice to Armenia, as well as to Armenians and other refugees.

Today, I would like to join the Armenian-American community in remembering the horrors of the Armenian Genocide. We all would profit by reflecting on the strength of the Armenian people to persevere through this awful period in history.

But today is not only a day to mourn those lost in this genocide but also a day to celebrate the resilience of the people of Armenia as they build a new democracy. Finally freed from communist imperialism, Armenia has quickly become one of the most democratic of the former Soviet Republics and has made great strides to adopt a market economy. I am gratified at the many cultural exchanges taking place between our two nations.

As chairman of the Immigration Subcommittee I also am gratified at all the wonderful examples of success through hard work that have been provided by Armenian immigrants. Such stories make the argument for a kind and open policy toward refugees, victims of latter-day massacres, much stronger.

I salute all Armenians today, I salute their predecessors who suffered so grievously, and I salute their struggle to let the truth be known.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, yesterday, April 24, marked the 85th anniversary of the beginning of the Armenian genocide. I rise today to acknowledge and commemorate this terrible crime and to help ensure that it will never be forgotten.

On April 24, 1915, the Ottoman Empire launched a brutal and unconscionable policy of mass murder. Over an eight year period, 1.5 million Armenians were killed, and another 500,000 were driven from their homes, their property and land confiscated.

As Americans, we are blessed with freedom and security, but that blessing brings with it an important responsibility. We must never allow oppression and persecution to pass without condemnation. By commemorating the Armenian genocide, we renew our commitment always to fight for human dignity and freedom, and we send out a message that the world can never allow genocide to be perpetrated again.

Even as we remember the tragedy and honor the dead, we also honor the living. Out of the ashes of their history Armenians all across the world have clung to their identity and have prospered in new communities. My State of California is fortunate to be home to a community of Armenian-Americans a half a million strong. They are a strong and vibrant community whose members participate in every aspect of civic life, and California is richer for their presence.

Let us never forget the victims of the Armenian genocide; let their deaths not be in vain. We must remember their tragedy to ensure that such crimes can never be repeated. And as we remember Armenia's dark past, we can take some consolation in the knowledge that its future is bright with possibility.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise today to commemorate the 85th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. Each year we need to remember and honor the victims, and pay respect to the survivors we are blessed to have with us today.

During the 8-year period from 1915 to 1923, approximately 1.5 million Armenians were killed and hundreds of thousands were driven from their homes. April 24, 1915 serves as a marking point for the government-orchestrated carnage that took place under the Turkish Ottoman Empire. On this date, over 5,000 Armenians were systematically hunted down and killed in Constantinople. This number includes some 600 Armenian political and intellectual leaders who were taken to the interior of Turkey and systematically murdered.

A Polish law professor named Raphael Lemkin was the first to call the atrocities committed upon the Armenian people during period of 1915 to 1923 the ''Armenian Genocide.'' Lemkin is also credited with coining the word ''genocide'' and making genocide a crime under international law. In 1939, Professor Lemkin escaped Poland during the Nazi invasion. Lemkin would ultimately lose 49 members of his family during the Holocaust. Until his death in 1959, Lemkin worked for the adoption of the U.N. Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the crime of Genocide, which was ratified by the United States in 1988. Through this individual, these dark periods of Jewish and Armenian history have been joined in the important cause of remembrance.

Each year we vow that the incalculable horrors suffered by the Armenian people will not be in vain. That is surely the highest tribute we can pay to the Armenian victims and a way in which the horror and brutality of their deaths can be given redeeming meaning. I ask my colleagues to join me in remembering the Armenian Genocide.

FAIR PAY FOR LOW INCOME WORKERS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as we continue to wage our ongoing battle in Congress for a fair increase in the minimum wage for millions of workers across America, it is important to understand that low-income workers in all parts of the country are doing all they can themselves to obtain fair increases in pay from their employers.

One of the most important examples in recent weeks has been the strike by janitors in Los Angeles, who were seeking a long overdue reasonable increase in wages during this time of remarkable prosperity for most Americans.

At the beginning of last week, an excellent column by respected journalist David S. Broder appeared in The Washington Post and many other newspapers across the country, calling national attention to the strike, and emphasizing the issues of fundamental fairness at the heart of this dispute. Mr. Broder noted recent reports of the lavish salary and bonus packages totaling millions or even tens of millions of dollars a year available to the top executives of major firms across the country, and he compared these extraordinary benefits with the low salaries of the janitors in this dispute, whose lives ''are lived on the ragged edge of poverty.''

I had the opportunity to meet with many of the striking workers and their union leaders on a visit to Los Angeles during the recess, and to express my support for them in their battle and to commend them for their courage.

Fortunately, a tentative agreement on the issues in the strike was reached over the weekend, and a settlement granting a significant pay increase and other benefits was overwhelmingly approved by a vote of the workers yesterday. The President of the local union called the agreement ''the beginning of a new era for organized labor.''

Justice for these janitors means progress toward justice for all working men and women across America. Their cause was just, and because of timely and important articles like David Broder's, more and more people across America are becoming aware of these fundamental issues and their extraordinary importance for our society.

I commend Mr. Broder for his eloquent analysis and insight, and I ask unanimous consent that his column in The Washington Post on April 16, entitled ''Of Janitors and Billionaires,'' be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the column was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, April 16, 2000]

OF JANITORS AND BILLIONAIRES

(By David S. Broder)

LOS ANGELES—The janitors on strike at the office buildings near the downtown hotel where I stayed for a couple days last week were the most polite picketers I have ever seen. The largely Latino groups of men and women standing on the plaza from which several of the city's highest office towers rise greeted visitors with elaborate courtesy and seemed genuinely grateful when anyone accepted one of their handouts explaining why they had stopped using their brushes and brooms.

It was about money, they said, about struggling to support their families and themselves at a pay scale ranging from $7 to $8 an hour—about $300 a week before taxes.

The Service Employees International Union, representing about 8,500 janitors, called the strike to back up its demand for raises of $1 an hour each year for the next three years. If granted, that would allow members of these overnight crews to make the magnificent sum of about $21,000 a year in 2003.

The janitorial service companies that have contracts with these towering buildings, filled with banks, law firms and corporate offices, were counter-offering raises of about one-third that size, also spread over three years.

This is part of the overlooked reality of this era of record prosperity—a story that receives far less attention in the press and on television than the gyrations of the Nasdaq. Understandably so, for the Nasdaq determines the value of the stock options held by the high-tech millionaires who are the ''masters of the universe'' in the new economy, the stars whose spectacular success draws envious glances from those Americans who cannot imagine enjoying such riches, unless they hit the lottery or have a spectacular run of luck on one of the TV game shows.

As Shawn Hubler, a Los Angeles Times columnist, noted last week, ''the janitors' strike . . . has brought to the surface something deeply resonant about the lives, now, of all 1.3 million of the region's working poor.'' Hubler described how the janitors arrive to begin their tedious, wearying chores just after most of the tenants have left the building, and how she watched one late-working executive push open the door to a freshly cleaned bathroom, with nary a nod of acknowledgment to the woman janitor who had her equipment cart just a few feet away. ''There is a dimension now,'' Hubler wrote, ''in which whole human beings can be rendered invisible, just erased.''

Ralph Ellison described the phenomenon as experienced by black folks in his novel of the last generation, ''Invisible Man.'' But we imagine we have become more sensitive, more aware in our time. Not so. There are millions of people whose work makes our life easier, from busboys in the restaurants we patronize to orderlies in the hospitals we visit, but whose own lives are lived on the ragged edge of poverty. Most of us never exchange a sentence with these workers.

Meanwhile, the rich get steadily richer. The wall Street Journal, not exactly a radical publication, printed its annual survey of executive pay on April 6. Reporter Joann S. Lublin cited a study of 350 major firms, conducted by William M. Mercer Inc., a New York compensation consulting firm. It found that the median salary and bonus package for the top executives of those firms in 1999 was $1,688,088. That's about $120,000 higher than it was in 1998 and just about what 80 of the striking janitors combined would make three years from now—if they got what they are asking. But it's only one-hundredth as much as the $170 million in salary, bonuses and stock options the highest-paid executive in the survey, L. Dennis Kozlowski of Tyco International, made in 1999.

How do you justify those extremes? the Journal quotes Jeffrey D. Christian, head of a Cleveland executive recruiting firm, as explaining that the business heads he meets ''all want the same opportunity for extreme wealth creation and legacy creation as their dot-com counter-parts. It's billionaire envy.''

Another article in the special section—and remember this is the Wall Street Journal, not Mother Jones—reported about the increasing use of bonus guarantees to recruit or retain executives. One boss named Thomas Evans ''will collect as much as $10 million if his vested stock options would yield a profit of less than that by August 2002,'' the Journal said. And then there are the sweetheart deals, in which outside directors on a firm's compensation committee grant lavish salary increases or stock options to the CEO, who in turn arranges lucrative consulting contracts for those same directors.

It's doubtful many of the striking janitors have read the Journal's special section. If they did, they wouldn't be quite so polite.

NATIONAL READING PANEL

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. President, on April 13, 2000, the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education received the report of the National Reading Panel. The subcommittee also heard testimony from Dr. Duane Alexander, Director of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development; Dr. Kent McGuire, Assistant Secretary of Education, Office of Educational Research and Improvement; and Dr. Donald N. Langenberg, Chairman of the National Reading Panel and Chancellor of the University System of Maryland.

The National Reading Panel was created as a result of legislation I introduced in 1997, titled the ''Successful Reading Research and Instruction Act.'' Subsequently, the report accompanying the Fiscal Year 1998 Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies Appropriations Act called on the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development and the Department of Education to form a panel to evaluate existing research on the teaching of reading to children, identify proven methodologies, and suggest ways for dissemination of this information to teachers, parents, universities and others.

I was convinced at the time that there was an absence of consensus on a national strategy for teaching children to read. Meanwhile, we had statistics which showed that 40 to 60 percent of elementary students were not reading proficiently and there seemed to be no plan to help remedy the situation.

The Health Research Extension Act of 1985 had mandated research on why children have difficulties learning to read. The National Institute of Child Health and Human Development had conducted this research and in 1997, they had some answers. However, Congress hadn't asked for the results and the information was literally trapped in the academic and research world.

Since 1997, we've made some progress. Today more people know that reading research exists, but very few of us are able to decipher what it means, or how to translate it into meaningful practice.

Mr. President, what most parents want to know is simple, ''How can I make sure my child will learn to read?'' Until now, the response to that question was often vague, and the so-called ''expert'' or ''research based'' methods were conflicting. Consequently, there is a great deal of confusion among parents, teachers and school administrators about improving reading skills of children. Meanwhile, the Federal government has spent nearly $100 million on programs which one researcher described as, ''at best, it shouldn't hurt.''

The National Reading Panel identified over 100,000 studies on a variety of topics related to reading instruction. It held regional hearings to receive testimony from teachers, parents, students, university faculty, educational policy experts and scientists who represented the population that would ultimately be the users of its findings. The panel used the information from these hearings and their preliminary research to identify five topics for intensive study: alphabetics; fluency; comprehension; teacher education and reading instruction; and computer technology and reading instruction.

The panel then narrowed its review to materials which met a defined set of rigorous research methodological standards. It is the development of these standards which the panel describes as ''what may be its most important action.'' By finding successful techniques that meet the same kind of scientific review that are used to test medical treatments, the panel presents its recommendations with a confidence that has never before been applied to the teaching of reading.

One of the National Reading Panel's objectives was to ensure that good research results were readily available. On April 13, the report was sent to every Senator and Member of Congress. Within the next few weeks, the report and supporting documentation will be delivered to state education officials, colleges and universities, and public libraries. A long-term strategic plan that will address wider dissemination and classroom implementation will be ready by next fall. It is my hope that the report of the National Reading Panel will guide us in making informed decisions on reading issues.

I commend the efforts of the National Reading Panel and I hope educators will implement their recommendations and use the new teaching methods and programs outlined in the report.

ROLE OF INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY IN COUNTERING PROLIFERATION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, this week the sixth Nonproliferation Treaty Review Conference opened in New York.

At the last conference five years ago countries agreed to extend indefinitely the treaty. I recently introduced, along with Senators BAUCUS, KERRY, ROTH, BINGAMAN, KERREY, KOHL, and SCHUMER, Senate Concurrent Resolution 107, expressing support for another successful review conference. A similar bipartisan resolution will be introduced in the House. I hope my colleagues on the Foreign Relations Committee will consider this resolution as quickly as possible.

Some delegates to the conference have suggested that the United States is not as strongly committed as it once was to arms control, citing as examples the Senate failure to ratify the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty (CTBT) and Administration negotiations with the Russians to modify the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. I wish, as do many of my distinguished colleagues, that the CTBT had been ratified. I hope that it will be. Nevertheless, I believe all my colleagues, regardless of their position on this issue, share a strong and abiding interest in pursuing arms control agreements and making the world more secure from threats from weapons of mass destruction.

As Secretary of State Madeleine Albright observed in her address to the delegations to the conference ''the United States is part of the international consensus on nuclear disarmament.'' We have taken considerable steps with our allies to reduce our nuclear weapons arsenal and have made a commitment to further reductions with the Russians.

I share the United Nations Secretary General Kofi Annan's concern—expressed at the Review Conference—that ''nuclear conflict remains a very real and very terrifying possibility at the beginning of the 21st century.'' The nuclear weapons testing by India and Pakistan in 1998 are added reasons to be worried.

Equally disturbing are reports that Iran is still pursuing secretly a nuclear weapon and long range missile program. While we develop a national missile defense program to protect us against limited attacks, we must strengthen those arms control regimes which help to contain the spread of weapons systems to states who may wish to harm us.

One of the steps that the United States and other states can take is to strengthen the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). The Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) made the IAEA safeguards system the verification arm of the NPT. While the IAEA does provide some technical assistance to countries for the peaceful use of nuclear technology, it also inspects the nuclear inventories of non-nuclear weapon members of the NPT to ensure there are no diversions to weapons use.

The Gulf War disclosed for the first time an Iraq nuclear weapons program which was being carried out despite IAEA inspections. This disclosure provided new impetus to strengthening the IAEA inspection system. The IAEA has developed a strengthened safeguards program which consists of more intrusive and aggressive inspections. The agency also proposes a new inspection protocol giving its inspectors more authority to collect information. Some 46 countries have signed the protocol which the United States helped develop.

But the increase in membership in the IAEA and the strengthened inspection system has meant more demands on IAEA inspectors and facilities. I asked the Congressional Research Service to prepare a brief on the IAEA to explain its new functions. Zachary Davis, CRS's Specialist in International Nuclear Policy, is to be commended for his work on this subject. I urge my colleagues to read his analysis—''Nuclear Weapons: Strengthening International Atomic Energy Agency Inspections.'' I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD in full, following my remarks. The IAEA deserves our full support and the NPT Review Conference deserves our full attention. Again, I urge my colleagues to express their support by co-sponsoring S. Con. Res. 107.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NUCLEAR WEAPONS: STRENGTHENING INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY AGENCY INSPECTIONS

(By Zachary S. Davis, Specialist, International Nuclear Policy Resources, Science and Industry Division)

SUMMARY

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) is an international organization established to achieve two goals. First, it operates an international inspection system to provide assurances that nuclear materials and technology in use for civilian purposes are not diverted to make nuclear weapons. Second, the IAEA provides assistance in civilian applications of nuclear technology for energy, agriculture, medicine and science. The IAEA is strengthening its inspection system to cope with countries such as Iraq and North Korea that established covert nuclear weapons programs and refused to cooperate with inspections, despite their membership in the Nonproliferation Treaty.

The strengthened safeguards system provides IAEA inspectors with greater access to a wider range of nuclear activities. New technologies will improve inspectors' ability to detect undeclared nuclear activities. A new protocol to the standard IAEA inspection agreement gives inspectors more information and access. However, these improvements will require additional resources from member states. This report outlines the IAEA mission and describes efforts to improve it. It will be updated as events merit.

BACKGROUND: IAEA INSPECTIONS AND THE ''NUCLEAR BARGAIN''

The IAEA was established in 1957 as part of President Eisenhower's Atoms for Peace program to provide independent assurances that the spread of civilian nuclear technology did not also promote the spread of nuclear weapons. Exporters of nuclear technology such as the United States asked the IAEA to apply safeguards on nuclear technologies, such as reactors, and materials, such as nuclear fuel, to make sure that the purchasers did not use them to make nuclear weapons. The IAEA gained new responsibilities in 1970 when the Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) designated the IAEA safeguards system as the global verification mechanism for the NPT. The Agency also provides technical assistance for countries to use nuclear technology for energy, medicine, agriculture, and scientific research. The balance between technical assistance and nuclear safeguards is often referred to as the ''nuclear bargain:'' in return for receiving civilian nuclear technology, recipient nations agreed to international safeguards.

Organization. The Director General of the IAEA is Mohomed ElBaradei, a U.S.-trained, Egyptian diplomat who served many years as head of the IAEA legal department. The main policy-making body is the Board of Governors, which has 35 members, including states with advanced nuclear programs. The General Conference of all 131 members meets annually to debate Agency positions, programs and priorities.

Inspections Based on Inventories, Not Risk of Diversion. All non-nuclear weapon members of the Nonproliferation Treaty agree to allow the IAEA to inspect their nuclear inventories. Each country provides an initial declaration and regular reports on its inventory, which the IAEA then inspects on a regular basis. The amount of inspection efforts is determined by how much nuclear material a country has. Under this formula, countries with large civil nuclear programs such as Japan, Germany, South Korea, and Canada receive the most attention, while countries possessing much smaller amounts of nuclear material such as Iran and Iraq receive much less attention.

The Agency's members and its founding statutes do not allow it to shift inspection resources from currently trusted countries that possess large amounts of nuclear material, such as Japan, to focus on countries with small but growing nuclear programs that are considered to be proliferation risks, such as Iran. One way to address this problem is through across-the-board increases in the Agency's global inspection system, although IAEA members have insisted for many years on maintaining a zero-growth budget.

Weapons States and Non-NPT Members. The five legally recognized nuclear weapon states (Britain, France, China, Russia, United States) are not obligated to accept inspections, but in practice do allow some access to some facilities on a voluntary basis. Nearly all non-weapon states that possess nuclear capabilities accept comprehensive safeguards. Only a few countries (India, Israel, Pakistan, Cuba) have not joined the NPT, but even these are members of the IAEA and accept safeguards at selected facilities.

Numbers of inspections. The IAEA conducts thousands of inspections annually. In 1998 the Agency performed 2,507 safeguards inspections at 897 facilities and other locations worldwide. At the end of 1998, 222 safeguards agreements were in force in 138 states (and Taiwan). This includes safeguards agreements with 126 states pursuant to the NPT. (The NPT has 187 member states, but many of these are developing countries that do not posses nuclear material or facilities that need to be inspected.) The quantities of nuclear materials and numbers of facilities under IAEA safeguards are growing steadily. As a result of growing stocks of nuclear materials, IAEA resources are being stretched thinner and may not keep pace with this growing demand.

SUCCESSES AND FAILURES

A few NPT member states have violated their obligations and diverted civilian nuclear technology and materials to covert weapons programs.

Iraq. Iraq was a party to the NPT for many years, but used its civil nuclear program to disguise an extensive nuclear weapons program. IAEA inspectors did not learn the full nature and extent of Iraq's nuclear weapons program until the Gulf War, when Allied forces attacked many undeclared nuclear installations. After the war, the United Nations Security Council created the Special Commission on Iraq (UNSCOM) to account for and eliminate Iraq's nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons and missiles. The IAEA headed the nuclear inspections. Iraq quit cooperating with UNSCOM in 1999; efforts to reestablish inspections in Iraq have been blocked by Russia and France in the Security Council, although IAEA inspectors were allowed to inspect nuclear material remaining in Iraq in January 2000.

North Korea. North Korea acceded to the NPT in 1985, but refused to accept safeguards until 1992. When North Korea finally allowed safeguards inspections, it provided incomplete and contradictory information and then blocked IAEA access to key sites. The IAEA quickly discovered the discrepancies and reported Pyongyang's noncompliance to the United Nations Security Council, which urged North Korea to comply, but took no further action. North Korea refused access and threatened to quit the NPT. Nevertheless, North Korea remains obligated under the NPT to allow IAEA inspections, despite its noncompliance. The IAEA has repeatedly called upon North Korea to comply with its NPT safeguards obligations. Under the 1994 Agreed Framework between the United States and North Korea, the IAEA monitors the shut-down of North Korea's declared nuclear facilities, but is not able to apply full safeguards. However, North Korea must fully comply and allow the IAEA to resolve all outstanding inspection questions before the Agreed Framework can be fully implemented.

Inspections in Iraq and North Korea provide many lessons for strengthening the IAEA safeguards system. Inspections in South Africa after that country declared in 1991 that it had dismantled its 6 nuclear weapons and joined the NPT also helped the Agency learn how to improve its ability to detect hidden nuclear activities and account for undeclared activities such as those possessed by South Africa. Many analysts expect the IAEA to be tested next in Iran, which has a growing nuclear program but denies any interest in acquiring nuclear weapons.

HOW SAFEGUARDS WORK

Each non-weapons member of the NPT signs an agreement with the IAEA authorizing the Agency to keep track of the nuclear materials in the country and provides the IAEA with an inventory of its nuclear materials. IAEA inspectors verify the declared inventories and make periodic visits to make sure all the material can be accounted for. Agency inspectors check records and take samples at reactors, fuel storage facilities, and other nuclear installations to verify the accuracy and completeness of each country's declared inventory. Inspectors take a variety of measurements of nuclear materials to verify their content (see below). The Agency has a laboratory near its headquarters in Vienna, Austria, where samples are analyzed. It also sends samples to approved laboratories in several countries, including the United States, for expert analysis. Inspectors attach seals and tags to critical equipment to detect unauthorized access. The Agency also installs video cameras to monitor activities at nuclear facilities throughout the world.

When questions arise about a country's nuclear inventory, the Agency can request additional information and/or more access to facilities. Normally, additional information can resolve questions. However, in the past, inspectors have not always pressed member states to resolve outstanding issues, and states like Iraq and North Korea have attempted to take advantage of the Agency's disinclination to confront member states about incomplete or incorrect information. Recent improvements in IAEA safeguards, however, are intended to fill gaps and correct past deficiencies.

STRENGTHENED SAFEGUARDS

Since the early 1990s, the IAEA has been upgrading its safeguards system to prevent a repeat of problems encountered in Iraq and elsewhere. Most importantly, the Agency is taking steps to detect undeclared nuclear activities such as found in Iraq. Strengthened Safeguards, formerly referred to as the 93+2 Program, consists of legal, technical, and political measures which are outlined below.

Information. Inspectors rely on information provided by the states themselves, on information collected by the Agency from the states and from open source information, and information provided to the Agency by member states. Prior to the Gulf War, member states had not provided intelligence information to the IAEA. However, the Agency has increasingly received and used intelligence provided by member states, as well as expanding its use of open source information from a variety of sources. Those types of information were critical in detecting discrepancies in North Korea's initial declaration of its inventory of nuclear material and in uncovering the full extent of Iraq's nuclear program. Recently the Agency has begun to use commercial satellite imagery to augment its information data bases.

Access. One problem highlighted by the Agency's failure to detect Iraq's extensive covert nuclear weapon program was the limitations that member states put on its access to facilities. In the past, the IAEA focused almost exclusively on accounting for nuclear material, and did not pay much attention to related equipment and installations. The IAEA has reasserted its authority to gain access to all facilities housing nuclear activities. However, additional authority is needed and would be authorized by the new protocol inspection agreement (see below).

Technology. The Agency is upgrading its inspection equipment with the help of the United States and other member states. Upgrades include new cameras and remote monitoring equipment, more accurate measuring tools, and new methods of detecting minute quantities of nuclear material in soil, water, plants and air that can be collected from numerous locations. The IAEA is also beginning to use commercial satellite imagery to monitor developments at nuclear installations.

Political and Financial Support. The IAEA depends on support from member states to be effective. Contributions to the regular budget are apportioned on the United Nations scale of assessments. Most of the technology and equipment it uses is contributed by members. Its budget is limited and divided among several missions that are popular with certain members, such as nuclear safety and technical assistance. Given its budget constraints, the Agency depends on special voluntary contributions to support programs of particular interest to certain members, including advanced safeguards and arms control.

Enforcement. Even when the IAEA discovers noncompliance, it can only report to the United Nations Security Council. Enforcement is a political decision of the Security Council and its members.

ADDITIONAL SAFEGUARDS PROTOCOL

An important part of the Strengthened Safeguards effort is a new inspection protocol that gives Agency inspectors more authority to collect more information about a wider range of nuclear activities (uranium mining, imports, exports, etc.), to use more intrusive inspection methods, and to expand their access to undeclared activities. The additional information and access is required to reduce the risk of undeclared nuclear activities going undetected, as they did in Iraq.

The United States, which played a primary role in formulating the new inspection protocol, agreed to accept some of the new measures on selected U.S. activities to persuade others to sign it. The four other nuclear weapon states also agreed to sign the protocol and implement it. The United States, as a nuclear weapons state under the NPT, is not obligated to open its facilities for inspection and can exclude any sites it chooses from IAEA inspection. By early 2000, 46 countries had signed the Additional Protocol. The U.S. version of the Protocol will be submitted to the Senate for its consent to ratification before taking effect in the United States.

NEW INSPECTION MISSIONS: EXCESS WEAPONS MATERIALS AND FISSILE MATERIAL CUTOFF TREATY

In addition to the growing number of civil nuclear facilities and growing stockpiles of materials under IAEA safeguards, the IAEA is being assigned new missions to support arms control agreements.

Excess Weapon Materials: The Trilateral Initiative. The United States and Russia each have many tons of excess nuclear weapons materials—highly enriched uranium and plutonium. The stockpiles of excess materials are growing as more nuclear weapons are dismantled under the terms of arms control agreements. The United States and Russia each declared hundreds of tons of weapons materials as excess and asked the IAEA to verify that this material is not reused to make nuclear weapons. The IAEA agreed to work with Russian and U.S. experts to develop a special verification arrangement to allow the Agency to verify the materials without revealing sensitive weapons-related information. The arrangement, called the Trilateral Initiative, is funded by the Departments of Energy and State. The Trilateral Initiative can support arms control agreements such as START II and a proposed START III by providing independent verification that weapons materials are removed from military stockpiles and are not reused for nuclear explosives.

Fissile Material Cutoff Treaty (FMCT). The Clinton Administration proposed negotiating a multilateral treaty to stop further production of highly enriched uranium or plutonium for use in nuclear explosives. Such a treaty would cap the amount of weapons materials, and therefore limit the number of weapons that could be made from existing stocks. The IAEA is widely viewed as the most likely inspection agency for such a treaty. Although an FMCT has broad international support, negotiations are stalled at the Conference on Disarmament, a branch of the United Nations located in Geneva, Switzerland. New funding would be required.

IAEA BUDGET AND BUDGET PROBLEMS

The IAEA annual budget is about $226 million. The budget is divided among several major programs including safeguards, safety, and technical assistance. Member states' contributions are determined by the United Nations scale of contributions and are combined in the Agency's annual budget. The Agency also receives voluntary contributions from member states targeted to support specific programs or projects.

U.S. Contribution. The United States provides about 25% of the IAEA regular budget. In 1999 the U.S. assessed contribution was $49 million. The United States also provided a voluntary contribution of $40 million, mainly to support activities related to the Strengthened Safeguards System. The United States also provided less than $1 million from the Nonproliferation and Disarmament Fund to upgrade IAEA inspection equipment. U.S. contributions to the IAEA are funded through the State Department's 050 account.

Stretching the Resources. While the members of the IAEA are tasking it with additional responsibilities, many resist providing additional funds to pay for Strengthened Safeguards, expanding inspections, improving nuclear safety, and for new arms control missions such as the Trilateral Initiative. The U.S. practice of paying its dues at the end of the U.S. fiscal year (instead of by calendar year, as requested by the IAEA) puts further strain on the Agency. With stocks of nuclear material growing in many countries, some of which pose proliferation concerns, at some point the IAEA's resources may be stretched so far that the Agency can not fulfill all of its functions. Declining credibility of IAEA safeguards could weaken their deterrent and detection functions and possibly undermine nuclear nonproliferation efforts.

LEGISLATION

Congress has consistently supported the IAEA and has authorized and appropriated funds for the Agency since its inception in 1956. In recent years Congress has continued support for strengthening the safeguards system and through voluntary contributions. However, legislation has also been proposed to withhold portions of the voluntary U.S. contribution to the IAEA to signal displeasure with IAEA programs that benefit particular member states such as Iran and Cuba.

PROTESTS AT IMF-WORLD BANK MEETINGS

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I rise today to comment on some important events that took place here in Washington last week while many of us were back home meeting with our constituents.

For the past 25 years, we've had an annual Spring ritual in Washington. I'm not referring to the cherry blossoms. Every April, the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank hold their joint meeting. Bankers and finance ministers from around the world travel to Washington to talk about the global economy, exchange rates, poverty reduction, and the so-called "international financial architecture."

These are tremendously important subjects. But the talks are highly technical, and the results are shrouded in the vague language of diplomatic communiques. The meetings don't produce startling breakthroughs. For most people they are hard to understand. So the annual IMF-World Bank meetings in Washington have rarely generated much news, and the participants liked it that way.

This year was different. A coalition of activists vowed to descend on Washington to disrupt the meetings. More than 1,700 journalists registered to cover the event. Few of those journalists came to report on IMF discussions of extended funds facilities or economic stabilization criteria. They were hoping for the kind of news that protesters made at last year's WTO meetings in Seattle when they closed the city down.

But those who came to Washington hoping for Seattle-style violence were disappointed. Both the police and the demonstrators are to be commended for that. Those who came here hoping to throw the meetings off track were also disappointed. Unlike the WTO ministerial in Seattle, the IMF meetings did not attract a big crowd of protestors. The labor unions stayed home. The big environmental groups were absent. So the meeting took place pretty much as scheduled, albeit with some inconvenience and no dramatic events. Business as usual.

There was one underlying theme among those who did come: a feeling that international economic institutions undermine the interests of ordinary citizens. I heard that on the streets of Seattle last December, when protestors took aim at the world's main trade body. And I heard it again last week when they focused on the IMF and the World Bank. The demonstrators had no confidence that those institutions are moving in the right direction.

This lack of confidence concerns me greatly. It exists not only here at home, but also in many other countries. I believe that America must lead an effort to restore faith in the economic institutions we have worked so hard to build over the past fifty years, economic institutions that have served our country and our people. The World Trade Organization. The IMF. The World Bank. And we in the Congress should lead that effort.

Look at the evidence here at home. In the trade arena, I've seen a rapid decline in the domestic consensus in favor of open markets. One result is that we've been unable to renew the President's fast track trade negotiating authority. Morever, the lack of a domestic consensus has undermined our ability to lead in the WTO. It has weakened our bargaining power. Other members, especially the EU and Japan, take advantage of our weakened position and resist opening up their markets to the production of American workers and farmers.

In the financial arena, last week's demonstrations showed that Americans are losing faith. They don't think that the IMF and the World Bank serve the needs of the people, especially the most vulnerable here and in other countries. Instead, they believe that the institutions serve the needs of the big and the rich. The IMF and the World Bank stand accused of mismanaging the Asian financial crisis through misguided policies which needlessly lowered the living standards of millions of people, throwing many of them back into poverty. They stand accused of mismanaging the Russian economy.

Are these criticisms justified? It's difficult for Americans to judge. These institutions do not operate in the daylight of public scrutiny. Although they exist on taxpayer funds, they do not hold themselves accountable to taxpayer concerns. America is the biggest shareholder in both the IMF and the World Bank. And the lack of transparency has seriously undermined American public confidence in both the IMF and the World Bank.

Over the past week I've read and heard a number of condescending remarks about the protestors. They've been called naive, poorly informed, misguided. But the concerns they express are real and are shared by many Americans who did not march down Pennsylvania Avenue. We need to take these concerns seriously, because they express a strong undercurrent in American thinking.

In my talks with representatives from the business, environmental and labor communities, I find that strong centrist elements seek practical solutions. We in the Congress can supply the political leadership to firm up this middle ground on the issues of trade and finance, trade and labor, trade and the environment, and restore confidence in the international trade and financial system. It is an important undertaking. America's ability to lead the world into an era of global prosperity benefitting rich and poor alike requires us to firm up and expand the middle ground to reforge our domestic consensus.

U.S. POLICY TOWARD LIBYA

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on behalf of Senate Resolution 287, expressing the sense of the Senate regarding U.S. policy toward Libya. It is of grave concern to me that the United States is currently considering a change in its "Travel Ban" policy with Libya, prior to the resolution of the Pan-Am 103 Bombing trial.

Libya is a state sponsor of terrorism and a global agent of instability. Two Libyan intelligence operatives, with prior terrorist activity convictions, are now on trial for the explosion of Pan Am flight 103 in 1988 and the loss of 270 lives, 180 of them Americans. Libya is engaged in one the most advanced Bio-Chemical efforts in the third world, including the acquisition of delivery vehicles. It has repeatedly engaged U.S. military forces, including an attempted missile attack on U.S. military installations in Italy in 1986.

Taking into account its past behavior, we all agree that Libya has a long way to go to become a member of the family of law-abiding nations. Libya must take concrete actions to provide its sincerity. It must show complete adherence to the Pan Am 103 Judicial Authorities in Hague. If a conviction is reached, Libya must accept responsibility for any court judgement and make full payment to all judgement creditors. It is my sense that Libya must prove its vigilant and sincere cooperation in anti-terrorism efforts.

U.S. policy towards Libya must remain balanced. The ''Travel Ban'' is an important tool and should not be abandoned without clear justification. A verdict is not yet at hand; I urge you to await the conclusion of the Pan Am 103 trial, and calculate our steps from there.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Monday, April 24, 2000, the Federal debt stood at $5,711,905,996,688.11 (Five trillion, seven hundred eleven billion, nine hundred five million, nine hundred ninety-six thousand, six hundred eighty-eight dollars and eleven cents).

Five years ago, April 24, 1995, the Federal debt stood at $4,839,548,000,000 (Four trillion, eight hundred thirty-nine billion, five hundred forty-eight million).

Ten years ago, April 24, 1990, the Federal debt stood at $3,066,631,000,000 (Three trillion, sixty-six billion, six hundred thirty-one million).

Fifteen years ago, April 24, 1985, the Federal debt stood at $1,731,710,000,000 (One trillion, seven hundred thirty-one billion, seven hundred ten million).

Twenty-five years ago, April 24, 1975, the Federal debt stood at $514,446,000,000 (Five hundred fourteen billion, four hundred forty-six million) which reflects a debt increase of more than $5 trillion—$5,197,459,996,688.11 (Five trillion, one hundred ninety-seven billion, four hundred fifty-nine million, nine hundred ninety-six thousand, six hundred eighty-eight dollars and eleven cents) during the past 25 years.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TUFTS UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF CITIZENSHIP AND PUBLIC SERVICE

• Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today I applaud Tufts University for furthering the values of leadership, citizenship, and public service, by founding a University College of Citizenship and Public Service. By creating this new college, Tufts' President, Dr. John DiBiaggio, is fostering an attitude of ''giving back'' to supplement the University's vision that 'active citizen participation' is essential to freedom and democracy.

Tufts has a history of commitment to civic education, having founded the Lincoln Filene Center for Citizenship and Public Affairs over 50 years ago. The largest student organization on the Medford campus is the Leonard Carmichael Society, a community service group, which boasts about 1,000 members. Recently, Tufts has hatched the ''United Leaders for a Better Tomorrow,'' a new student organization that aims to encourage young people to pursue careers in public service. With chapters starting across the country, this group of young leaders seeks to re-enlist those Americans interested in public service in using public office as a vehicle for change.

Tufts University is now renewing its commitment to public service with an entrepreneurial spirit. Tufts is not adding a stand-alone college, composed of its own buildings and faculty. Instead, the university is creating a 'virtual college,' one ''without walls;'' challenging itself to infuse all classroom instruction with the ideas of citizenship and public service.

According to Tufts' President Dr. John DiBiaggio, the tangible impact will mean that a major in child development who is mentoring kindergarten kids in a poor community could also participate in legislative advocacy to improve conditions in that community or, a Tufts student who wants to be a chemist will have an opportunity to measure pollution in nearby waterways, determine the sources of this pollution and then create a local team to clean them up.

The need for a college of public service has never been greater. While Tufts students, Massachusetts residents, and citizens nationwide are volunteering at record rates, voter participation rates continue to fall. Just two stops away on the T's red line, the ''Vanishing Voter Project'' at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government measures the depth of the public's cynicism and apathy towards public service. Last week, according to the Vanishing Voter Project's Voter Involvement Index, only 19% of the American public paid any attention to the Presidential race. In fact, at no time during the Presidential Primaries—one of the most hotly contested races in years—did the number of Americans paying attention to the race rise above 46%. In the world's leading democracy, in an age where limitless information is available at our fingertips, we can do better.

More than ever, it is critical that we restore and maintain civil society. We need voters that are educated and engaged. Tapping the cutting edge of the New Economy's budding e-commerce, Tufts is partnering with eBay founder, Pierre Omidyar. eBay, is now the world's leading person-to-person online trading community. Omidyar's ten million dollar investment in the College of Public Service includes financial aid packages for 24 undergraduates every year, enhanced public and private sector internship opportunities, citizenship-based career workshops, and a senior honors program in civic activism. Mr. President, Tufts University's College of Citizenship and Public Service and its partnership with eBay's Pierre Omidyar illustrates the possibilities provided by technological innovation. The promise of a technology based digital democracy is that billions of people will engage in business, receive their news, and even vote, directly and instantly. Our challenge for this new age is to continue to foster values of public service, community, and citizenship, in order to constantly renew and re-engage our citizenry and our democracy.•

RETIREMENT OF THE CHANCELLOR OF VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, JOE B. WYATT

• Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, on April 29 the Vanderbilt University community will honor Joe B. Wyatt, who will retire this summer after a long and distinguished career as Chancellor of that prestigious university. I rise today to pay tribute to Chancellor Wyatt. His significant contributions have not only benefitted the Nashville campus, but also have had a very positive impact on the State of Tennessee and, indeed, our entire nation.

Joe Wyatt's tenure as head of Vanderbilt, which extends back to 1982, has been marked by substantial growth at the University: new construction and renovation on campus; tremendous expansion of the renowned Medical Center; major increases in the levels of research grants; and a quantum leap in the university's endowment.

Today, Vanderbilt University and Medical Center is the largest private employer in Middle Tennessee and the second largest in the state. It generates an estimated annual economic impact of more that $2.2 billion to the area. Among the 19,000 Vanderbilt alumni who live in Middle Tennessee are numerous leaders in business, government, law, education and medicine.

And many of these young men and women were handed their diplomas by Joe Wyatt before moving on to make a mark in their chosen fields.

Equally important, Mr. Wyatt's stewardship has been marked by the academic and intellectual growth of the University. He has helped attract a world-class faculty that is consistently recognized nationally and internationally for its research and teaching excellence. In addition, he recognized, earlier than most, the potential impact of new technology on our society and education, and he facilitated the development of research programs that cut across various academic disciplines, reflecting changes in the real world and maximizing the University's academic resources.

Personally, in making my own decision of whether to come to Vanderbilt to join the staff at Vanderbilt University Medical Center as Assistant Professor in cardiothoracic surgery, it was Joe Wyatt's support of a vision of establishing a multi-organ, multi-disciplinary transplant center at Vanderbilt that encouraged me to come back to Nashville. His commitment to seeing that vision become a reality led to the establishment of the Vanderbilt Transplant Center which since that time has served thousands of patients throughout the Southeast.

During Joe Wyatt's 18 years of service at Vanderbilt, the university has evolved steadily from a highly regarded regional institution to a truly national institution, widely known for its excellence in a wide array of undergraduate and graduate fields. Today, it is among the top ranks of research universities in the United States, with a student body that represents all 50 states and more than 90 foreign countries.

Chancellor Wyatt is widely regarded today as a senior statesman of the research university community. His deep commitment to higher education issues is exemplified by his participation in, and leadership of, many national advisory groups and policymaking organizations. For example, he has served the last two years as chairman of the Government-University-Industry Research Roundtable of the National Academy of Sciences. He also is the current chairman of the Universities Research Association and chairs a blue ribbon panel on quality standards for the non-profit organization, New American Schools. In addition, he serves on the Business Higher Education Forum, the Council on Competitiveness and the Advisory Committee of the Public Agenda Foundation.

Mr. President, Joe B. Wyatt has made contributions in many areas, but I think his greatest legacies will be in the following three areas:

First, he has fostered greater communication and cooperation among the three sectors most involved in our nation's unique research enterprise—universities, the federal government and industry.

Chancellor Wyatt is the Chairman of a group at NSF devoted to bringing government, universities and businesses together in a collaborative effort to improve our nation's research effort.

Second, he has promoted increased awareness of the great responsibility of our schools of education to ''teach the teachers'' who prepare America's youth for the challenges of tomorrow.

Chancellor Wyatt supported a controversial provision in the Higher Education Act of 1998 to hold colleges of education accountable for their students' performance as teachers. This provision, and Chancellor Wyatt's deep commitment to improving our nation's colleges of education, will have a lasting impact not just on higher education, but on our entire elementary and secondary school system.

Third, he has generated, through personal example, renewed commitment to volunteer community service by all members of the university community.

Today, Vanderbilt undergraduates are engaged in volunteer programs in unprecedented numbers. It was no accident that, when they recently came to say farewell to Vanderbilt alumni in the Washington, DC, area, Joe and Faye Wyatt spent the day at an inner-city elementary school, working alongside 75 alumni in a reading and storytelling program with local third-graders.

I include for the RECORD an article from the Vanderbilt Register On-Line. The article further details Joe B. Wyatt's many accomplishments over a span of nearly two decades as Chancellor of the University. Throughout this period, he has maintained a sharp focus on two things that really matter . . . two things that are enduring in our society: quality education of our nation's youth and service to the broader community. And he has done so with honor, decency and credibility.

We wish Joe and Faye Wyatt the very best, and give them heartfelt thanks for their service to Vanderbilt University.

The article follows:

JOE B. WYATT, VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY CHANCELLOR, 1982–2000

When Alexander Heard retired in 1982, the board named Joe B. Wyatt to succeed him. As Chancellor, Wyatt sought to place Vanderbilt in the very top tier of American universities.

Wyatt, a Texan, holds degrees in mathematics from Texas Christian University and the University of Texas. He was vice president for administration at Harvard University—and father of a Vanderbilt sophomore—when he was selected as Vanderbilt's sixth Chancellor. As a computer scientist and executive, he brought to the University his concept that information technology is a strategic resource of accelerating global importance in education, research and patient care.

In addition to his influence in technology, Wyatt pushed the University community to unprecedented levels of involvement in volunteer community service. Alternative Spring Break was founded in 1987 by a handful of students with Wyatt's support. In spring 1999, more than 300 undergraduates participated in the program's 22 domestic and three international sites. With funding from the Chancellor's discretionary fund, the non-profit Break Away: The Alternative Break Connection was founded in 1991 by Vanderbilt graduates to help colleges across the country start alternative spring breaks. Today, half of all Vanderbilt undergraduates are engaged in volunteer programs, and the number of service organizations has exploded.

The term ''national university'' has taken on an expanded meaning under Wyatt. He has led a national effort to improve elementary and secondary education in the nation's public and private schools, and at home he has made the Vanderbilt student body the most diverse in history. Students hail from all 50 states and 91 foreign countries. Minority enrollment in Vanderbilt's four undergraduate schools has nearly tripled in the past 10 years. In the fall of 1999, minority students accounted for almost 20 percent of the undergraduate population, as compared to slightly less than 7 percent in 1987, while the overall enrollment has remained fairly constant. Over the same period, the number of minority students in the graduate and professional schools continued to increase.

In 1989, for the first time, Vanderbilt's undergraduate programs were ranked among the top 25 national universities overall in the U.S. News & World Report survey, placing 24th. Vanderbilt continues to be ranked in the top 25, placing 20th in 1999. In U.S. News' 1999 graduate school rankings, Peabody College was ranked sixth among schools of education; the Owen Graduate School of Management was ranked 25th among business schools; the law school was ranked 16th; and the School of Medicine was ranked 16th.

During Wyatt's term as Chancellor, the Medical Center expanded most dramatically, now accounting for more than 70 percent of the University's income and expenses and employing almost half of the full-time faculty, more than half of the part-time faculty, and the majority of staff.

Since 1982, Vanderbilt has acquired or built one-third of the campus—more than four million square feet of mostly new construction. This does not include the one million additional square feet of renovations to existing facilities, and major projects on the drawing board.

Wyatt spent much of the early '90s working with trustees and staff in The Campaign for Vanderbilt, the most ambitious fund-raising effort in the institution's history. This latest campaign, which ended in 1995, raised $560 million. Now, because of the work of Wyatt and others, Vanderbilt has an endowment of $1.8 billion. Its operating budget has grown to $1.3 billion. Sponsored research has more than quadrupled since 1981, from $42 million to $214 million, placing Vanderbilt 33rd among U.S. colleges and universities in federal research and development funding, according to the National Science Foundation.

One of Wyatt's most significant accomplishments as Chancellor has been the improvement in the quality of Vanderbilt's faculty. The criteria for faculty appointment, promotion and tenure have been strengthened twice during his administration, making it clear that excellence in scholarship, teaching and service are required for all members of the faculty. The number of endowed faculty chairs has increased from 39 in 1982 to more than 100 today, and faculty salaries have continuously increased as well.

On April 23, 1999, Wyatt announced that he would retire as Chancellor in July 2000.●

TRIBUTE TO INNOVATORS IN FIVE VERMONT HIGH SCHOOLS

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President. I rise today to pay tribute to educators in five Vermont high schools whose collaborative work in school improvement will help high school teachers and administrators across the country understand how to support high school reform. The high schools and their educators include: Montpelier High School—Owen Bradley, David Gibson, and Charlie Phillips; Otter Valley High School in Brandon—Nancy Cornell, Ellie Davine, and Bill Petrics; South Burlington High School—Tim Comoli, Sheila Mable, and Janet Bossange; Essex High School—Kevin Martell, Sue Pasco, and Brian Nelligan; and Mount Abraham High School in Bristol—Tom Tailer, John Vibber, David Royce and Mary Sullivan.

These people are outstanding educators who understand how to build partnerships between the community and school that enrich the experience of their students. All five of these high schools have Professional Development School partnerships with the University of Vermont, collaborating to prepare new teachers and support veteran teachers on behalf of school renewal. Each of them has learned to use local resources to bring high school students into meaningful contact with adults in the surrounding community, making learning a part of life. All five schools are discovering how to link local innovations with the national effort to help all high school students meet high standards of performance. The Northeast and Islands Regional Educational Laboratory at Brown University (LAB), a program of The Education Alliance at Brown University, with the support of the U.S. Department of Education will publish and disseminate a description of their work and the results of the work in The Dynamics of Change in High School Teaching: Instructional Innovation in Five Vermont Professional Development Schools, which will be released this summer. (Clarke, et al, 2000)

The Montpelier Story, a publication excerpted from the book and available now through the LAB, is the story of the success of dedicated educators in collaboration with community partners and other resources in providing new, student-centered learning opportunities to the young people they serve.

At Montpelier High School, Owen Bradley, David Gibson, Charlie Phillips and the entire faculty have redesigned the curriculum to support Personal Learning Plans for each student in the school. Montpelier students use their Personal Learning Plans to select courses and to develop community-based learning projects that help them meet graduation requirements and carry them toward their individual goals in ways that fit their unique talents and aspirations. The work at Montpelier has already inspired schools across Vermont and spilled over the borders to Maine and beyond, where it serves as a model for redevelopment of curricula and advising to increase contact between students and adults.

Under the leadership of Nancy Cornell, Ellie Davine and Bill Petrics formed a team at Otter Valley High School with the purpose of designing a standards-based course for students in the school who needed to understand how geography and local decision making affect land use in Vermont. By giving each student a topographic map of 100 acres in the State and leading them through the process of land-use assessment and planning required by Vermont's environmental laws, they illustrated the application of knowledge and skills in local community development efforts.

Over a period of 15 years at South Burlington High School, Tim Comoli and Sheila Mable, both of the English Department, developed a state-of-the-art media lab that engages students in designing multi-media presentations of professional quality for public service organizations in their community. Development of the media lab provoked a complete revision of the district's technology education plan, creating a model technology program for the State.

At Essex High School, Kevin Martell, Sue Pasco and Brian Nelligan have worked for more than a decade to design and refine an integrated course in history and English that engages students in examining the evolution of human culture from 10,000 BC to the present. By fitting course assignment to the individual learning styles of the students who fill their classrooms, they have been able to create a challenging course in which high school students teach each other, and learn to express their views in a wide variety of media.

Tom Tailer, John Vibber and a host of partners at Mount Abraham Union High School developed a physics unit on Newton's Laws that they expanded over a decade into a simulation of armed, global aggression. Having made ''weapons'' that launch tennis balls over great distances, Mt. Abraham's physics students play out the implications of an unequal distribution of global power on the school's athletic fields, then compare their struggle to current wars and conflicts around the globe. The ''Physics War'' is part of a complete redesign of Mt. Abraham's science curriculum that bases student learning on performance measured against common standards.

Each of these projects demonstrates that high school change occurs when individuals reach across the boundaries that separate them into departments and bureaucratic layers, forming partnerships that empower all participants to learn and grow through shared effort on behalf of a common goal: improved learning for young people.●

RECOGNITION OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETIRED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES WEEK

● Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, Governor Don Sundquist of the State of Tennessee has proclaimed April 16–22, 2000, as ''National Association of Retired Federal Employees Week'' in order to focus attention on the many accomplishments of Tennessee's retired Federal employees. In recognition of the important public service performed by Federal retirees, I ask my colleagues to join Governor Sundquist and me in acknowledging the contributions retired Federal employees have made to this Nation and their continued dedication to our communities.

Beginning in 1882, a non-partisan civil service system was established granting Federal employees the protections of a merit system, eliminating the spoils system and basing Federal employment decisions on merit rather than political connection. It is in this spirit that Federal employees, over the course of almost 120 years, have served the public interest. Their professional lives have been dedicated to performing and carrying out the responsibilities of the Federal Government.

In an effort to improve the civil service, and in recognition of civil servants' efforts on behalf of the Federal Government, Congress enacted in 1920 the first comprehensive employer-sponsored retirement plan - the Civil Service Retirement System. This system has served the country well since then and its successor, the Federal Employee Retirement System, serves as a benchmark in evaluating pension and retirement plans.

As the chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, I can attest to the effectiveness of NARFE members in making the case for equitable retirement and health benefits for the more than two million federal retirees and their survivors.

My State of Tennessee is home to more than 37,000 Federal retirees. These folks, like all federal retirees, served their country through their commitment to public service. Federal retirees deserve our Nation's thanks for the dedication they have shown. I hope all my colleagues will join me today saluting Federal retirees for a job well done.●

THE GREATER DETROIT BUILDING AND CONSTRUCTION TRADES COUNCIL RECEIVES 2000 GENDER AND RACE DIVERSIFICATION EXCELLENCE AWARD

• Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on May 2, 2000, the Great Lakes Construction Alliance will hold its annual Gender and Race Diversification Excellence Awards dinner. Each year, the G.A.R.D.E. Awards are given to labor owners and contractor organizations which have made significant efforts in improving the recruitment and retention of women and people of color in the unionized construction industry. Each award winner has developed, or engaged in, some substantial program with the goal of furthering opportunities for women and people of color, which is one of the fundamental principles upon which the Great Lakes Construction Alliance was founded.

Nominees are judged by a jury of construction industry representatives. To be considered for the G.A.R.D.E. Award, programs must show documentation, including numbers for minorities and women, of the number of people added to the organization's labor force, and promote quality, acceptable construction practices. Ultimately, the awards are given to those programs which have made significant efforts to improve the recruitment and retention of women and people of color in the unionized construction industry. The recipients of the 2000 G.A.R.D.E. Awards are the Human Rights Department of the City of Detroit, the Greater Detroit Building and Construction Trades Council, and the Comerica Park Construction Management Team.

The Greater Detroit Building and Construction Trades Council, with Barton-Malow acting as program manager, formed twenty construction management teams, which together coordinated over 750,000 hours of service during the Detroit Public Schools Summer Emergency Maintenance Program. 130 minority students, thirty-seven percent of whom were female, participated in the Summer Emergency Maintenance Program. The twenty construction management teams provided these students with the opportunity to work directly with prime contractors in a multitude of capacities, including administrative activities, painting, electrical, mechanical, and plumbing. Students were also assigned a mentor who helped them develop objectives and document their work experiences. The construction management teams also prepared outcome reports, which provided guidance for educators to continue support of the students' interests once the school year began.

Mr. President, I applaud the Greater Detroit Building and Construction Trades Council, and the members of the twenty construction management teams, for their willingness to help these students. Undoubtedly, their efforts had a profound impact on the lives of each and every one of them. Furthermore, this is the type of work that must be done if the revitalization of Detroit is truly to come about. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate the Greater Detroit Building and Construction Trades Council on receiving the 200 Gender and Race Diversification Excellence Award.•

THE BATTLE CREEK ENQUIRER HONORS MS. ROBIN TRUMBULL

• Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize Ms. Robin Trumbull, whom the Battle Creek Enquirer will present with a George Award Tomorrow evening. These awards are given annually to individuals who ''Don't wait around for George to do it.'' Recipients are recognized for their leadership, and they are usually individuals who have spearheaded projects. Ms. Trumbull is being honored because she is the volunteer founder and president of Amber Alert of Michigan, a nonprofit organization in Battle Creek which works to create an effective communication system between local police and radio stations to immediately alert community members in the event of a child abduction.

The first few hours after an abduction has occurred are the most crucial in recovering the child, and the implementation of this effective emergency broadcast plan has the potential to save the lives of many children. The organization, which started in the Dallas/Fort Worth area in the memory of Amber Hagerman, has since spread throughout the country. It has done so because of the incredible efforts of individuals like Robin Trumbull.

I have had the privilege of working with Ms. Trumbull on this worthwhile cause, and I think I can safely say that all residents of Michigan owe her a debt of gratitude for the work she has done to save children from being abducted, and to help recover those who have been abducted as quickly as possible. Because of her efforts, and her dedication to the children of Michigan, the Amber Alert program has been kicked off successfully.

I applaud Ms. Trumbull for bringing this wonderful program to the State of Michigan. I also applaud the Battle Creek Enquirer for acknowledging her tireless efforts to do so. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate Ms. Robin Trumbull on receiving her George Award. I could not imagine a more deserving recipient.•

COMERICA PARK CONSTRUCTION MANAGEMENT TEAM RECEIVES 2000 GENDER AND RACE DIVERSIFICATION EXCELLENCE AWARD

• Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on May 2, 2000, the Great Lakes Construction Alliance will hold its annual Gender and Race Diversification Excellence Awards dinner. Each year, the G.A.R.D.E. Awards are given to labor owners and contractor organizations which have made significant efforts in improving the recruitment and retention of women and people of color in the unionized construction industry. Each award winner has developed, or engaged in some substantial program with the goal of furthering opportunities for women and people of color, which is one of the fundamental principles upon which the Great Lakes Construction Alliance was founded.

Nominees are judged by a jury of construction industry representatives. To be considered for the G.A.R.D.E. Award, programs must show documentation, including numbers for minorities and women, of the number of people added to the organization's labor force, and promote quality, acceptable construction practices. Ultimately, the awards are given to those programs which have made significant efforts to improve the recruitment and retention of women and people of color in the unionized construction industry. The recipients of the 2000 G.A.R.D.E. Awards are the Human Rights Department of the City of Detroit, the Greater Detroit Building and Construction Trades Council, and the Comerica Park Construction Management Team.

Comercia Park is the new home of the Detroit Tigers. It is a breathtaking, state-of-the-art facility. In my somewhat biased opinion, it is not only the newest, but also the nicest, stadium in the Major Leagues. Its construction would not have been possible were it not for the efforts of the many people who helped to build it. The construction of Comerica Park was a conglomerate effort, which was led by the Construction Management Team of Hunt, Turner, and White, Tigers General Manager John McHale, Jr., and aided by many Detroit City organizations: the Downtown Development Authority, the Minority Business Development Council, the African American Association of Business Contractors, and the Majority Business Initiative.

The Comerica Park project, with the cooperation of the aforementioned individuals and organizations, and also Detroit residents, targeted specific groups for participation in its completion. The program resulted in the participation of 25 percent minority businesses, five percent women-owned businesses, 34 percent Detroit-based businesses, and 25 percent small businesses. Workforce utilization resulted in minorities comprising 38.15 percent of employees constructing the stadium. Women comprised 4.28 percent, and another 30.53 percent were residents of Detroit.

Mr. President, I applaud the diverse group of people who were responsible for the building of Comerica Park. The stadium stands as a symbol of the hope that I think many Detroit residents now feel for their city. More importantly, all Michigan residents can take pride not only in the final product, but in the production itself. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate the Comerica Park Construction Management Team on receiving a Gender and Race Diversification Excellence Award.●

THE WAVERLY WARRIORS WIN THE MICHIGAN HIGH SCHOOL ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION CLASS A BOYS BASKETBALL CHAMPIONSHIP

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to congratulate the members of the Waverly Warriors Boys Basketball Team, who defeated Detroit Pershing 75–63 to win the Michigan High School Athletic Association Class A State Championship. This victory brought Waverly High School its first ever state title. More importantly, it brought the entire west side of Lansing together, as it was an experience enjoyed not only by the players on the team, or even the students of the school, but by the entire community.

Coach Phil Odlum's team went 25–2 on its way to capturing the state title. The Warriors were led by seniors Marcus Taylor and Cortney Scott, who will attend, respectively, Michigan State University and the University of Iowa on basketball scholarships in the fall. Seniors Terry Reddick, Melvin White, and Chris Miller rounded out the starting five. These five players were backed by an extremely solid bench, both in the remaining players on the team and in the community support they received.

In the hierarchy of athletic competition, Mr. President, high school athletics represent the last time a community is able to look out onto the playing field, or, in this case, court, and say, ''These are our kids.'' There is an attachment there, and also, I think, a certain level of pride, that cannot be found at higher levels of play. A community can embrace a team as its own because that is what it truly is. And the west side of Lansing did embrace these kids. Clad in bright yellow t-shirts, a large band of Waverly supporters staked a claim on the northernmost side of the Breslin Center in East Lansing, Michigan, and cheered on their Warriors.

This community spirit and support played a large role, perhaps not in the on the court success of the team, but definitely in the overall enjoyment of their accomplishment. I am sure that the championship was made all the more special for the players when their victory lap was halted by a sea of yellow shirts. And for all the students and community members who occupied those yellow shirts, I am sure it was just as wonderful an experience seeing kids that they grew up with, or watched grow up, successfully complete their run for the title. And this, Mr. President, is the aspect of high school athletics that is truly irreplaceable.

Mr. President, I applaud both Lansing Waverly and Detroit Pershing on the completion of very successful seasons. And, on behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate the Waverly Warriors on winning the 2000 M.H.S.A.A. Class A Boys Basketball Championship.●

LATIN AMERICANS FOR SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT, INC., ANNUAL RECOGNITION LUNCHEON

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize Latin-Americans for Social and Economic Development, Inc., a nonprofit, community based organization which has served Southwest Detroit area individuals and businesses with a variety of social and self-help services for the past thirty-one years. On May 2, 2000, LA SED will hold its annual Recognition Luncheon, an event which provides the organization the opportunity to acknowledge the efforts of outstanding Hispanic citizens of the Detroit community.

It is appropriate that the theme of this year's luncheon is, ''21st Century: Hispanics Count in Detroit's Future.'' Since its founding in 1969, LA SED has been instrumental in ensuring that Hispanic citizens play a large role in the Detroit community. And now, Mr. President, there is finally an excitement about the future of the city of Detroit that has not been evident for quite some time. There is a real feeling that the city's future is going to look brighter than the past. And groups like LA SED, who outwardly display their own optimism for the future of Detroit, and for the integral role that Hispanics can play, and have played, in this picture of success, are a large reason for the excitement.

Mr. President, as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Immigration, it has been my pleasure to hold hearings on the positive contributions immigrants make to this country in areas such as science, the arts, and the armed forces. It was my pleasure to sponsor legislation awarding the Congressional Medal of Honor to Alfred Rascon, a Mexican immigrant who heroically saved the lives of men in his platoon during the Vietnam War. And though I have my critics, their unfounded attacks will have no impact on my defense of America's tradition as a nation of immigrants. Organizations like LA SED illustrate to me everyday that in this regard, I am doing the right thing.

Mr. President, I extend my warmest regards and appreciation to Jane Garcia, chairperson of the luncheon, and also a wonderful friend whom I have had the pleasure of working with over the years. I would also like to acknowledge Mr. Anthony F. Early, President and C.E.O. of Detroit Edison, who will be the keynote speaker of the Recognition Luncheon. Finally, I thank everyone who is involved in making LA SED such a tremendous and effective organization. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I wish LA SED continued success in the future.●

THE HUMAN RIGHTS DEPARTMENT OF THE CITY OF DETROIT RECEIVES 2000 GENDER AND RACE DIVERSIFICATION EXCELLENCE AWARD

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on May 2, 2000, the Great Lakes Construction Alliance will hold its annual Gender and Race Diversification Excellence Awards dinner. Each year, the G.A.R.D.E. Award, programs must show documentation, including numbers for minorities and women, of the number of people added to the organization's labor force, and promote quality, acceptable construction practices. Ultimately, the awards are given to those programs which have made the greatest efforts to improve the recruitment and retention of women and people of color in the unionized construction industry. The recipients of the 2000 G.A.R.D.E. Awards are the Human Rights Department of the City of Detroit, the Great Detroit Building and Construction Trades Council, and the Comerica Park Construction Management Team.

In 1998, the City of Detroit's Human rights Department, which is responsible for promoting and enforcing a construction workforce diversity program through its administration of Executive Order 22, recognized an increasing number of construction projects coupled with a shortage of qualified skilled trades people. Their solution to this problem was to implement a Construction Workforce Diversity Program, altering the monitoring guidelines of Executive Order 22. The new guidelines aim at maximizing the number of Detroit residents, minorities, and women in the construction industry while maintaining the quality of the end product. They have achieved success in this regard through increased enrollment in pre-apprentice and apprentice programs; through the establishment of partnerships with residents, business leaders, trade associations, unions, and ecumenical community city agencies; through the development of an internal information network; and through the review and validation of certified payrolls, skilled trade reports and subcontractor reports.

Mr. President, I applaud the efforts of the Human Rights Department to diversify the City of Detroit's workforce. Their efforts serve as a wonderful example to other agencies in Detroit and throughout the State of Michigan. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate the Human Rights Department of the City of Detroit on receiving this year's Gender and Race Diversification Excellence Award.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Williams, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM–455. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin relative to the Federal Meat Inspection Act and the Federal Poultry Products Inspection Act; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 13

Whereas, currently, federal law prohibits cattle, sheep, swine, goat, chicken, turkey, duck, goose and guinea fowl products that are inspected under state meat inspection programs from being shipped across state lines, while federal law allows state-inspected ostrich, venison, buffalo and pheasant to be shipped across state lines; and

Whereas, foreign meat products may be shipped freely among the states; and

Whereas, Wisconsin has 300 state-inspected plants, none of which is allowed to market products in interstate commerce due to an outdated federal law; and

Whereas, Wisconsin and the United States are currently suffering from a hog market crisis, including a closure of packing facilities and a reduction in slaughter activity, due in part to these outdated interstate restrictions; and

Whereas, the Federal Meat Inspection Act and the Federal Poultry Products Inspection Act are restricting the opportunity for these small plants to expand their markets across state lines, provide additional slaughter capacity for pork producers and increase the demand for their products; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate, the assembly concurring, That the members of the Wisconsin legislature request Congress to address problems in the meat-processing industry concerning packing, processing and marketing capacities; and, be it further

Resolved, That the members of the Wisconsin legislature request Congress to amend the Federal Meat Inspection Act and the Federal Poultry Products Inspection Act to allow for interstate shipment of all state-inspected meats; and, be it further

Resolved, That the senate chief clerk shall provide copies of this joint resolution to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the senators and representatives from Wisconsin.

POM–456. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Tennessee relative to ethnicity categories for educational data reporting; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 71

Be it resolved by the senate of the one hundred first General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, the house of representatives concurring, That this General Assembly hereby memorializes the United States Congress to study the need to increase the number and specificity of ethnicity categories used for the reporting of educational data.

Be it further resolved, That an enrolled copy of this resolution be transmitted to the President and the Secretary of the U.S. Senate, the Speaker and the Clerk of the U.S. House of Representatives and the each member of Tennessee's Congressional Delegation.

POM–457. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Virginia relative to the proposed ''Keep Our Promise to Military Retirees Act''; to the Committee on Armed Services.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 35

Whereas, millions of men and women of the uniformed services have served with honor, valor, and courage in protecting our nation's freedom and peace; and

Whereas, many recruited for the uniformed services prior to 1956 were reportedly promised free lifetime health care upon retirement if they served for 20 years or more in the service, although no health care statute existed; and

Whereas, in 1956, the Dependent Medical Care Act was passed, entitling those who entered the service on or after June 7, 1956, and retired with a minimum of 20 years of service, to medical and dental care in any medical facility of the uniformed services, subject to the availability of space and facilities, and capabilities of the medical staff; and

Whereas, the Military Medical Benefits Amendments of 1966 created the Civilian Health and Medical Program of the Uniformed Services (CHAMPUS), the first fee-based program for military health care recipients that included treatment by civilian providers; and

Whereas, the 1966 amendments further stipulated that any person entitled to hospital insurance benefits under Title I of the Social Security Amendment of 1965 would not be eligible for CHAMPUS benefits; and

Whereas, provider choice became more limited after the passage of the Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1991, which lowered the CHAMPUS reimbursement rate to the level of Medicare, leading to the exodus of many physicians from the CHAMPUS program; and

Whereas, the Defense Authorization Acts of Fiscal Year 1994 and Fiscal Year 1995 created a Health Maintenance Organization model (TRICARE) as an option for military health care and imposed enrollment fees for military managed care plans; and

Whereas, a series of recent base closures between 1988 and 1995 and further drawdowns of remaining military medical treatment facilities has made access to health care in military medical treatment facilities extremely difficult for many military retirees; and

Whereas, CHAMPUS and the TRICARE managed care programs that have evolved from CHAMPUS do not provide the adequate health care promised to military retirees and are inferior to care available to other federal retirees; and

Whereas, on September 28, 1999, H.R. 2966, ''The Keep Our Promise to America's Military Retirees Act,'' was introduced to provide all Medicare-eligible military retirees the opportunity and option to either enroll in the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program (FEHBP–65) or remain in TRICARE past age 65; and

Whereas, a key component of the legislation would make military retirees who entered the service prior to CHAMPUS eligible for health care under the Federal Employee Health Benefits Program, with the government paying the full cost of enrollment; and

Whereas, restoring adequate health care coverage to military retirees is long overdue; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, the House of Delegates concurring, That the Congress of the United States be urged to enact ''The Keep Our Promise to America's Military Retirees Act''; and, be it

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the Senate transmit copies of the resolution to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and the members of the Congressional Delegation of Virginia in order that they may be apprised of the sense of the General Assembly of Virginia in this matter.

POM–458. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the Commonwealth of Virginia relative to the selection of Fort Belvoir as the site of the United States Army Museum; to the Committee on Armed Services.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 92

Whereas, the Department of the Army has been granted approval by the Congress to establish a national United States Army Museum; and

Whereas, among the sites being considered for the United States Army Museum is Fort Belvoir, Virginia; and

Whereas, located near the nation's capitol, with its wealth of historic sites, Fort Belvoir would prove a worthy addition to the Washington area's attractions; and

Whereas, Northern Virginia is home to many sites of military and historic significance, among them Arlington Memorial Cemetery and the Iwo Jima Memorial; and

Whereas, the home of the nation's first commander-in-chief, George Washington, lies almost adjacent to Fort Belvoir at Mount Vernon; and

Whereas, many residents of Northern Virginia are collectors of military memorabilia dating back to the American Revolution, and their willingness to lend such material to the Army Museum would be enhanced by its proximity to their homes; and

Whereas, the United States Army Museum would prove an asset to the Northern Virginia area, and a Fort Belvoir location would make the museum a convenient stop for the many Americans interested in the nation's military history; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate, the House of Delegates concurring, That the General Assembly hereby respectfully request that Fort Belvoir be given favorable consideration as the site of the United States Army Museum; and, be it

Resolved further, That the Clerk of the Senate transmit copies of this resolution to the Secretary of the Army, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the President of the United States Senate, and the members of the Virginia Congressional delegation so that they may be apprised of the sense of the General Assembly of Virginia.

POM–459. A joint resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Maine relative to the Republic of Cyprus; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

JOINT RESOLUTION

Whereas, this year marks the 26th anniversary of the Turkish invasion and occupation of Cyprus; and

Whereas, the Republic of Cyprus has been divided and occupied by foreign forces since 1974 in violation of United Nations resolutions; and

Whereas, the international community and the United States government have repeatedly called for the speedy withdrawal of all foreign forces from the territory of Cyprus; and

Whereas, there are internationally acceptable means to resolve the situation in Cyprus, including the demilitarization of Cyprus and the establishment of a multinational force to ensure the security of both communities in Cyprus; and

Whereas, a peaceful, just and lasting solution to the Cyprus problem would greatly benefit the security and the political, economic and social well-being of all Cypriots and contribute to improved relations between Greece and Turkey; and

Whereas, the United Nations has repeatedly stated the parameters for such a solution, most recently in United Nations Security Council Resolution 1217, adopted on December 22, 1998 with United States support; and

Whereas, United Nations Security Council Resolution 1218, adopted on December 22, 1998, calls for a reduction of tensions in the island through a staged process aimed at limiting and then substantially reducing the level of all troops and armaments in Cyprus, ultimately leading to the demilitarization of the Republic of Cyprus; and

Whereas, President Clinton wholeheartedly supported resolution 1218 and committed himself to taking all necessary steps to support a sustained effort to implement it; now, therefore, be it

Resolved: That We, your Memorialists, hereby endorse President Clinton's commitment to undertake significant efforts in order to promote substantial progress towards a solution of the Cyprus problem in 2000; and be it further

Resolved: That suitable copies of this resolution, duly authenticated by the Secretary of State, be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States and to each Member of the Maine Congressional Delegation.

POM-460. A resolution adopted by the City Council of the City of Cape May, New Jersey relative to the dumping of contaminated dredge materials in the Atlantic Ocean; to the Committee on Environmental and Public Works.

POM-461. A resolution adopted by the Town Council of the Town of Haysi, Virginia relative to the proposed construction of a dam and reservoir in the area; to the Committee on Appropriations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Ms. SNOWE:

S. 2455. A bill to enhance Department of Education efforts to facilitate the involvement of small business owners in State and local initiatives to improve education; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

SMALL BUSINESS EMPLOYMENT AND EDUCATION ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2000

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce legislation, the Small Business Employment and Education Act of 2000, which is designed to enhance federal efforts to facilitate the involvement of small business owners and entrepreneurs in state and local initiatives to improve the quality of education programs for our young people.

Mr. President, last year, the Small Business Committee, of which I am a member, held a hearing on the challenges facing the small business community as a result of the failure of many of our educational institutions to teach students the basic skills that are necessary to succeed in today's work environment. The committee heard testimony from a number of small businesses and organizations about this growing problem.

And just how big is the problem? A 1999 American Management Association survey on workplace testing found that approximately 36 percent of employees tested for basic skills were found to be deficient in these skills, and small businesses reported deficiency rates well above the national average. Sixty percent of AMA-member companies reported that the availability of skilled manpower was scarce, and 67 percent believe that the shortages will continue.

A 1999 NFIB report found that 18 percent of NFIB members report that finding qualified labor is the single most important problem facing their business today.

Likewise, a 1999 poll of U.S. Chambers of Commerce found that 83 percent reported the ability—or lack thereof—to find qualified workers was among their biggest concerns, and 53 percent said education is the single most pressing public policy issue to them.

This information clearly illustrates that the business community, and small businesses in particular, have an important stake in the education of our youth. One of the most fundamental needs that any growing business faces is the need for employees with basic skills, and concerns have been expressed by the small business community that many students are not graduating with the basic skills in reading, writing, mathematics, and science—skills that need to succeed in today's workplace or become the entrepreneurs of tomorrow.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. President, the growth of high-skilled jobs is outpacing growth in all other fields. We must not allow basic skills to slip away if we are to remain competitive in an increasingly aggressive and technology-based global market.

Small business is the driving force behind our economy, and as we authorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, we must take into account the needs of businesses, and small businesses in particular. To that end, locally-driven initiatives are crucial. In order to create jobs, we must encourage small business expansion and foster small business entrepreneurship, and I believe that education initiatives are key to this.

Under the Small Business Employment and Education Enhancement Act, the Department of Education would disseminate information and facilitate the sharing of information designed to assist small businesses in working with school systems to improve our education institutions. For example, the agency would publish guidance materials, best practices, checklists and other materials on the World Wide Web, in Department of Education publications and articles, letters, links to related World Wide Web sites, public service announcements, and through other means at the Department's disposal.

The Department of Education would establish a centralized database of materials and act as a clearinghouse for information on initiatives that have proven successful.

The Secretary of the Department of Education would also establish an Office of Small Business Education to promote efforts to address the needs of small businesses through education programs. This division would work to remove any existing impediments to partnerships between school systems and small businesses, and propose solutions to education-related problems facing small businesses.

The goal of the bill I am introducing today is to facilitate partnerships between communities and businesses. I believe it should be easy for communities that are interested in designing business/school partnerships to get the information they need on how to do so. With access to kinds of sources envisioned in this legislation, communities would be able to model a program after a proven approach.

In addition, my bill authorizes technical assistance to be administered by the Office of Small Business Education to be used to provide guidance to small businesses, small business organizations, schools systems, and communities working cooperatively to enhance the teaching of basic skills.

The bill would also establish tax credits to encourage companies to provide work study, internship, or fellowship opportunities for students and teachers.

Finally, the bill includes a provision directing the Department of Education to conduct a study and report to Congress on the challenges facing small businesses in obtaining workers with adequate skills; an assessment of the impact on small businesses of the skills shortage; the costs to small businesses associated with this shortage; and the recommendations for the Secretary on how to address these challenges.

Mr. President, I hope this legislation will provide a foundation for cooperative initiatives between small businesses and school systems, and I look forward to working with the Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee and others as we prepare to reauthorize the elementary and secondary education act.

By Mr. FEINGOLD (for himself and Mr. KOHL):

S. 2458. A bill to designate the facility of the Unites States Postal Service located at 1818 Milton Avenue in Janesville, Wisconsin, as the "Les Aspin Post Office Building"; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

LEGISLATION NAMING THE JANESVILLE POST OFFICE IN MEMORY OF LES ASPIN

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to rename the United States Post Office in my home town of Janesville, Wisconsin in honor of Les Aspin. I am joined by my colleague from Wisconsin, Senator

KOHL. This bill is a companion to legislation introduced in the House by Congressman PAUL RYAN, who represents the First District of Wisconsin, which includes Janesville.

This year marks the thirtieth anniversary of Les' first campaign for the First Congressional District seat in Wisconsin. I was a junior at Janesville Craig High School at the time, and I signed up as a volunteer on Les' campaign. He won that election after a tough recount in the primary, defeating the incumbent Congressman.

Following the campaign, I interned in his district office in Janesville during the summers of 1971 and in 1972. I am proud to say that during the next 25 years, Les and I had a continuing friendship, as he carved out a distinguished career in the United States House of Representatives, eventually rising to become the Chairman of the Armed Services Committee, while I prepared for and began my own career.

Les Aspin served his country ably in many capacities. As an Army captain, he worked as an analyst in the Pentagon; he served on the staff of President John F. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisors; he represented Wisconsinites for 22 years in Congress; he enthusiastically took on the giant task of steering the Defense Department into the uncharted waters of the post-Cold War era. Mr. Aspin served as Secretary of Defense under President Clinton and, at the time of his death in 1995, he was the chair of the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, working on needed reforms in our intelligence communities.

Mr. President, Les Aspin was a man I deeply respected and admired, and I felt a profound sense of loss at his passing. Renaming the Janesville post office in his honor is a fitting way to remember a man who spent his life serving the people of Wisconsin and of the United States. I hope my colleagues will support this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2458

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION OF LES ASPIN POST OFFICE BUILDING.

(a) DESIGNATION.—The facility of the United States Postal Service located at 1818 Milton Avenue in Janesville, Wisconsin, shall be known and designated as the ''Les Aspin Post Office Building''.

(b) REFERENCES.—Any reference in a law, map, regulation, document, paper, or other record of the United States to the facility referred to in subsection (a) shall be deemed to be a reference to the ''Les Aspin Post Office Building''.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues from Wisconsin in introducing this legislation to honor the memory of Les Aspin. Long before I entered politics, Les Aspin was a good friend of mine. I had the good fortune to serve with Les Aspin in Congress and to work with him when he served as Secretary of Defense. Les Aspin was truly dedicated to public service. He was genuinely challenged by the policy making process, and he was not hesitant in bringing his great intellectual gifts to bear on the problems of our time. He was a master of the Sunday morning talk shows, expounding on the issues of the day with his trenchant analyses. As chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, Les Aspin was one of the most influential voices on U.S. defense policy.

His ascension to the chairmanship of the House Armed Services Committee was not without rancor, but even those who disagreed with Les respected his verve and determination.

When we lost Les Aspin, we lost a man of great vision. He was one of the few who realized that we needed a completely new way of thinking about national security policy in the post-cold-war era. He had the capacity to think through the difficult issues involved in developing such a policy. And, he was unrelenting in making us deal with those issues.

Even though Les Aspin became a powerful national figure, he never forgot his roots. Les represented the 1st Congressional District for 22 years and he cared deeply about the people of his district. He was aggressive in pursuing projects that would benefit the people of Wisconsin and he left no stone unturned in helping resolve constituent problems. He especially recognized the importance of reliable postal service in small and big towns alike. He was known to become personally involved in responding to complaints from constituents about postal service, often attending meetings across the district on postal issues. Les became intimately involved when the Janesville Postal Office was moved from downtown, working to ensure that service was retained for all, especially small businesses and other postal patrons who relied on the downtown post office. Thus, naming the Janesville Post Office after Les Aspin is a most fitting tribute to his many years of service to the people of the First Congressional District.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and hope for its speedy passage.

By Mr. COVERDELL (for himself, Mr. LOTT, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. HELMS, Mr. WARNER, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. HATCH, Mr. LUGAR, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. HUTCHINSON, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. ASHCROFT, Mr. INHOFE, Mr. BURNS, Mr. SESSIONS, Mr. KYL, Mr. GRAMS, Mr. MACK, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. FITZGERALD, Mr. ABRAHAM, Mr. ENZI, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. GORTON, and Mrs. HUTCHISON):

S. 2459. A bill to provide for the award of a gold medal on behalf of the Congress to former President Ronald Reagan and his wife Nancy Reagan in recognition of their service to the Nation; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

THE REAGAN CONGRESSIONAL GOLD MEDAL

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, it is with a deep sense of honor that I rise today to introduce legislation awarding former President and Mrs. Ronald Reagan the Congressional Gold Medal. Very few Americans have had as profound an impact upon this Nation and the world as this remarkable couple have.

In his eight years in office, President Reagan restored American's sense of pride and set us squarely on the course of prosperity we still enjoy today. He was instrumental in the collapse of the Soviet Empire that brought an end to the Cold War. Who could forget his ringing challenge from Berlin's Bradenburg Gate, ''Mr. Gorbachev, tear down this Wall!'' By 1989, to the amazement of the world, Germany was unified, and the Wall became a memory. Reagan's character, wit, and eloquence as the ''Great Communicator'' brought honor to the Office of the President and endeared him to us all.

As First Lady, Nancy Reagan's contributions were equally significant in their own right. She not only bestowed elegance and grace upon the White House, but she also brought critical leadership to righting the scourge of illegal drugs. Tirelessly encouraging our Nation's youth to ''Just Say No,'' Mrs. Reagan was instrumental in successfully reducing the rate of illegal drug use among our children.

The Reagans have continued to inspire us even after their years in the White House. President and Nancy Reagan have confronted his Alzheimer's disease with the same dignity and bravery they displayed in office. Their fight inspires hope in millions of Americans who also must struggle with this disease. Our thoughts and best wishes for them are constant.

The leadership and dedication that President and Mrs. Reagan provided this Nation will undeniably endure throughout the course of human events. It is now time for a grateful people and Nation to say, ''Thank you.'' I am very appreciative of my many colleagues who join me today in sponsoring this legislation and invite others to join us in honoring President and Nancy Reagan.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of this bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2459

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds the following:

(1) Both former President Ronald Reagan and his wife Nancy Reagan have distinguished records of public service to the United States, the American people, and the international community.

(2) As President, Ronald Reagan restored ''the great, confident roar of American progress, growth, and optimism'', a pledge which he made before being elected to office.

(3) President Ronald Reagan's leadership was instrumental in uniting a divided world by bringing about an end to the cold war.

(4) The United States enjoyed sustained economic prosperity and employment growth during Ronald Reagan's presidency.

(5) President Ronald Reagan's wife Nancy not only served as a gracious First Lady but also as a proponent for preventing alcohol and drug use among the Nation's youth by championing the ''Just Say No'' campaign.

(6) Together, Ronald and Nancy Reagan dedicated their lives to promoting national pride and to bettering the quality of life in the United States and throughout the world.

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL GOLD MEDAL.

(a) PRESENTATION AUTHORIZED.—The Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President Pro Tempore of the Senate shall make appropriate arrangements for the presentation, on behalf of the Congress, of a gold medal of appropriate design to former President Ronald Reagan and his wife Nancy Reagan in recognition of their service to the Nation.

(b) DESIGN AND STRIKING.—For the purpose of the presentation referred to in subsection (a), the Secretary of the Treasury (in this Act referred to as the ''Secretary'') shall strike a gold medal with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions, to be determined by the Secretary.

SEC. 3. DUPLICATE MEDALS.

Under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, the Secretary may strike and sell duplicates in bronze of the gold medal struck pursuant to section 2 at a price sufficient to cover the costs of the medals (including labor, materials, dies, use of machinery, and overhead expenses) and the cost of the gold medal.

SEC. 4. NATIONAL MEDALS.

The medals struck under this Act are national medals for purposes of chapter 51 of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 5. FUNDING AND PROCEEDS OF SALE.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—There is hereby authorized to be charged against the United States Mint Public Enterprise Fund an amount not to exceed $30,000 to pay for the cost of the medals authorized by this Act.

(b) PROCEEDS OF SALE.—Amounts received from the sale of duplicate bronze medals under section 3 shall be deposited in the United States Mint Public Enterprise Fund.

By Mr. FEINGOLD:

S. 2460. A bill to authorize the payment of rewards to individuals furnishing information relating to persons subject to indictment for serious violations of international humanitarian law in Rwanda, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

EXPANSION OF REWARDS PROGRAM TO INCLUDE RWANDA

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill to authorize payment of rewards to individuals furnishing information relating to persons subject to indictment for serious violations of international humanitarian law in Rwanda. This bill would add the masterminds of the Rwandan genocide to the list of individuals our rewards program is helping to track down, and this legislation will send those individuals a clear message—that there is no impunity for genocide, that the world will not forget, and that they cannot evade justice forever.

Six years ago today, a headline ran on the front page of the New York Times reading—''Rwandan Refugees Describe Horrors After a Bloody Trek.'' The lead-in read as follows:

> Their clothes are blood-soaked, and their wounds are eerily similar. Pursued by fear, the 450 or so men, women and children in the makeshift hospital here made the same journey across the border from Rwanda, nursing the deep gouges made by the machetes that struck their skulls, necks and hands.

Six years ago today the media was just waking up to the horror unfolding in Rwanda, although the killing had been going on for weeks. Six years ago today, the reporters filing their stories from Burundi and Zaire were still cautious about the word ''genocide.'' They still referred to ''ancient tribal hatreds'' as the source of the incomprehensible violence engulfing the tiny central African country. Six years ago today, the death toll in the Rwandan genocide continued to mount while the international community stood by and watched, despite clear warnings, and despite the International Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide that committed signatories to act. Six years ago, U.S. leadership failed, the international community floundered, and the global bond of basic human decency broke, leaving the people of Rwanda to face terror alone.

Mr. President, we know today that the genocide was not a series of spontaneous acts; it was not about crowds gone wild or tribal bloodlust. It was carefully planned and centrally directed. Extra machetes had been imported, militias groups were in place, and incitements to murder had become a regular element of programming on the hate-radio station. The planners targeted not only ethnic Tutsis, but also politically moderate Hutus who threatened their grip on power. We know today that individual people—leaders and planners—are responsible for the deaths of some 800,000 people, and that the blame for these atrocities cannot be heaped on some imagined cultural failing or the flaws of the human heart in general.

Holding those individuals responsible for the genocide accountable for their actions is the only remaining opportunity for the international community to do the right thing with regard to the events of 6 years ago. For this reason, I have consistently supported the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, known as the ICTR. The ICTR was created by the United Nations Security Council in November 1994 to prosecute persons responsible for genocide and other serious violations of international humanitarian law committed in Rwanda during 1994. Its structure mirrors that of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia, the ICTY.

I have come to this floor in the past to raise the issue of parity between the ICTY and the ICTR. In particular, I have pointed out that whereas the ICTY has the authority to prosecute individuals for serious violations of international humanitarian law committed since 1991 through the present, the ICTR's mandate covers only those acts committed within Rwandan borders during 1994. Last year, the Senate approved an amendment that I offered to the State Department authorization bill requiring a report on the merits of expanding the mandate to the ICTR in space and time, both to deter further abuses and to hold the perpetrators of the continuing atrocities in the Great Lakes accountable for their actions.

Even if we accept the confines of the current mandate, I fear that the ICTR is being given short shrift. Under current U.S. law, the Secretary of State can confer with the Attorney General and, through the rewards program that offers incentives to turn in terrorists and other international villains, pay a reward to any individual furnishing information leading to the arrest or conviction in any country of any person who is the subject of an indictment of the ICTY. Similarly, the reward may be made to any individual furnishing information leading to the transfer to or conviction by the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. But there is no such provision for the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda.

It is situations like these that feed perceptions of a double-standard in American foreign policy, wherein African lives are somehow less valuable than European ones, and African atrocities are somehow more acceptable. That perceived double-standard undermines American credibility and casts doubt on our commitment to the values we hold most dear, the values at the very foundation of our national identity.

The ICTR is not perfect, but it has been responsible for the first convictions for the crime of genocide ever to be issued by an international court. It has been the first international body to recognize rape as a crime of genocide. And knowledgeable observers agree that it has made a great deal of progress since its early days, and that it has gone further to bring ''big fish'' to justice than the ICTY. But more needs to be done. I will submit for the RECORD an article from the most recent issue of The Economist, headlined ''Still Wanted,'' which details some of the challenges the international community faces in bringing the perpetrators of the Rwandan genocide to justice. The United States should assist in these efforts. And the existing law that I propose amending ensures that the State Department and the Department of Justice—not the U.N.—will govern the offering, administration, and payment of rewards. Six years after the Rwandan genocide, six years after the slaughter of 800,000 people, including those indicted by the ICTR in the rewards program is the very least we can do.

I yield the floor, and ask unanimous consent that the bill and article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2460

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXPANSION OF REWARDS PROGRAM TO INCLUDE RWANDA.

Section 102 of the Act of October 30, 1998 (Public Law 105–323) is amended—

(1) in the section heading, by inserting or ''RWANDA'' after ''YUGOSLAVIA'';

(2) in subsection (a)(2), by inserting ''or the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda'' after ''Yugoslavia''; and

(3) in subsection (c)-

(A) by inserting ''(1)'' immediately after ''REFERENCE.—''; and

(B) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) For the purposes of subsection (a), the statute of the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda means the statute contained in the annex to Security Council Resolution 955 of November 8, 1994.''.

[From the Economist, Apr. 22, 2000]

STILL WANTED

Will Felicien Kabuga or Tharcisse Renzaho ever be brought to justice? They are still at large, among several hundred other senior Rwandans who in 1994 planned and promoted the genocide of up to 1m people. Mr. Kabuga was a businessman who financed the murderous Hutu militias, supplied them with machetes and was part owner of Radio Mille Collines, the radio station that broadcast the orders for genocide. Colonel Renzaho was the governor of the capital, Kigali. He directed the killing squads there, ordering them to make sure that ''none can escape'', and he was a member of the committee that coordinated the slaughter throughout the country.

So far, 44 people have been detained by the International Criminal Tribunal for Rwanda, based in Arusha in Tanzania. Seven have been convicted, of whom six are on appeal. The prosecutor is still looking for about 35 people. Although names are not published for fear of alerting men on the run, Mr. Kabuga and Colonel Renzaho are almost certainly on the list. Arrested or hunted, they are still only a small proportion of the people who planned and executed the fastest and most orderly genocide in history.

While the UN tribunal grinds on in Arusha, the Rwandan government is busy bringing genocide criminals before its own courts. If the main perpetrators are to be caught, and the evidence found to convict them, the two should co-operate. But their relationship, though it now shows signs of improvement, has long been unhappy. The government objects, among other things, to the money spent on the tribunal, which it feels could have been better used to rebuild a justice system in Rwanda.

The government has so far detained more than 120,000 people accused of genocide, of whom over 2,000 have been convicted and 300 sentenced to death. At the end of last year, it produced a list of 2,133 people suspected of planning or directing the genocide. Most of them are still at large.

Many of the missing villains are in Congo. Senior military officers fled there after their genocidal government was defeated by the Rwandan Patriotic Front, which now rules the country. In Congo, they regrouped soldiers and militiamen responsible for the killing. Since Rwanda became involved in Congo's civil war, many of the Rwandan militiamen are fighting on the side of president Laurent Kabila, against the Congolese rebels who, in their turn, are backed by the Rwandan government. So long as Congo's fighting continues, the missing Rwandans will be difficult to arrest—and they are making sure that the war continues.

Others are in Tanzania. Hutus from both Rwanda and Burundi are well established in the administration of western Tanzania from where, probably without the knowledge of the central government, they protect some of the killers. Others, again, are scattered around the world, some with false identities. Mr. Kabuga was said to have been spotted in Switzerland but is now thought to be in Kenya. Colonel Renzaho is probably in Congo. Governments do not seem to be making much effort to find them. Those who have been discovered—in Britain, America, France, Belgium and Denmark—have often been unmasked by journalists.

By contrast, western security services expend considerable energy on tracking down war criminals from the conflicts in former Yugoslavia. The Yugoslav war-crimes tribunal in The Hague has so far issued over 90 indictments, and arrested more than 40 suspects, of whom 15 have been sentenced. It has named 29 people it is still looking for. So far as is known, they are all still in the region, either in power in Serbia or hiding in Bosnia.

It is much harder to find the dispersed Rwandans. Moreover, even if they were caught and sent to the tribunal, gathering evidence to prosecute them would be difficult. Persuading witnesses to leave their homes and come to Arusha to give evidence, and then providing them with protection when they return, is fraught with trouble. The horrible fact is that the only living witnesses to some of the worst Rwandan massacres are the perpetrators themselves.

By Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Mr. BREAUX):

S. 2462. A bill to provide for the establishment of the Cat Island National Wildlife Refuge in West Feliciana Parish, Louisiana; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING THE CAT ISLAND NATIONAL WILDLIFE REFUGE

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from Louisiana, Senator JOHN BREAUX, in introducing legislation that would establish the Cat Island National Wildlife Refuge in West Feliciana Parish, Louisiana. Cat Island is one of the last remaining tracts in the Lower Mississippi River Valley that is still influenced by the natural dynamics of the river. The 36,500 acre site supports one of the largest densities of virgin bald cypress trees in the entire Mississippi River Valley. The site is also the home of the nation's largest cypress tree. Cat Island is important habitat for several declining species of songbirds and thousands of wintering waterfowl. The site is also home to the Louisiana black bear and high populations of deer, squirrel, turkey, and furbearing mammals such as mink and bobcats. We introduce this important legislation with the purpose of preserving and enhancing this valuable natural resource for our nation and generations to come.

Mr. President, I recently had the good fortune of visiting Cat Island with Senator BREAUX and representatives from the U.S. Department of the Interior, and I must tell you I was overwhelmed by the breathtaking beauty and bountiful natural resources of this site. Cat Island truly represents one of the most valuable and productive wildlife habitats in the United States. The site has high value for public uses such as outdoor recreation, environmental education, ecotourism, hunting, and fishing.

There has been a tremendous amount of enthusiasm for protecting and enhancing the natural resources of Cat Island. Citizens and elected officials from the State of Louisiana, representatives from national environmental conservation organizations and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service have supported our efforts in developing this important legislation. The Police Jurors of West Feliciana Parish, Louisiana, have passed a resolution in support of establishing the Cat Island National Wildlife Refuge. The Governor of Louisiana and the Secretary of the Louisiana Department of Wildlife and Fisheries have endorsed creating the refuge. The Nature Conservancy of Louisiana has generously agreed to underwrite the operation and maintenance cost for the Fish and Wildlife Service during the first three years of operation of the refuge. The conservation organization will also facilitate the acquisition of the site and the transfer of ownership to the Fish and Wildlife Service. Most recently, the President allocated $4 million in his fiscal year 2001 budget for land acquisitions at the Cat Island site.

Mr. President, Cat Island clearly represents one of the best examples of Louisiana's unique natural heritage and is deserving of inclusion in the National Wildlife Refuge System. This legislation supports the aims of the Lower Mississippi River Aquatic Resources Management Plan and the Lower Mississippi Valley Joint Venture under the North American Wetlands Conservation Act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2462

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) as the southernmost unleveed portion of the Mississippi River, Cat Island, Louisiana, is 1 of the last remaining tracts in the lower Mississippi Valley that is still influenced by the natural dynamics of the river;

(2) Cat Island supports some of the highest densities of virgin bald cypress trees in the Mississippi River Valley, including the champion cypress tree of the United States, which is 17 feet wide and has a circumference of 53 feet;

(3) Cat Island is important habitat for several declining species of forest songbirds and supports thousands of wintering waterfowl;

(4) Cat Island supports high populations of deer, turkey, and furbearing mammals, such as mink and bobcats;

(5) forested wetland on Cat Island—

(A) represents 1 of the most valuable and productive wildlife habitats in the United States; and

(B) has high recreational value for hunters, fishermen, birdwatchers, nature photographers, and others; and

(6) protection and enhancement of the resources of Cat Island through the inclusion of Cat Island in the National Wildlife Refuge System would help meet the habitat protection goals of the North American Waterfowl Management Plan, signed by the Minister of the Environment of Canada and the Secretary in May 1986.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) REFUGE.—The term ''Refuge'' means the Cat Island National Wildlife Refuge established by section 3(a).

(2) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of the Interior, acting through the Director of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT AND ACQUISITION OF REFUGE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There is established a unit of the National Wildlife Refuge System to be known as the ''Cat Island National Wildlife Refuge'' in West Feliciana Parish, Louisiana.

(b) INCLUSIONS.—The Refuge shall consist of the land and waters (including any interest in the land or waters) acquired by the Secretary for the Refuge under—

(1) subsection (d); or

(2) any other law.

(c) NOTICE OF ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall publish a notice of the establishment of the Refuge—

(1) in the Federal Register; and

(2) in publications of local circulation in the vicinity of the Refuge.

(d) ACQUISITION.—The Secretary shall seek to acquire for inclusion in the Refuge, by purchase, exchange, or donation, approximately 36,500 acres of land and adjacent waters (including interests in the land or adjacent waters) of Cat Island, Louisiana, as depicted on the map entitled ''Cat Island National Wildlife Refuge, Proposed'', dated February 8, 2000, which shall be available for inspection in the appropriate offices of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service.

SEC. 4. PURPOSES OF REFUGE.

The purposes of the Refuge are—

(1) to conserve, enhance, and restore the native bottomland community characteristics of the lower Mississippi alluvial valley (including associated fish, wildlife, and plant species);

(2) to conserve, enhance, and restore habitat to maintain and assist in the recovery of animals (such as the Louisiana black bear) and plants that are listed as endangered species or threatened species under the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1531 et seq.);

(3) to conserve, enhance, and restore habitats as necessary to contribute to the migratory bird population goals and habitat objectives as established through the Lower Mississippi Valley Joint Venture under the North American Wetlands Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 4401 et seq.);

(4) to achieve the habitat objectives of the Lower Mississippi River Aquatic Resources Management Plan, prepared by the Lower Mississippi River Conservation Committee;

(5) to authorize the Secretary, through consultation with Federal, State, and local agencies and adjacent landowners, to assist in the restoration of forest habitat linkages between refuge land and other land to reverse past impacts associated with habitat fragmentation on wildlife and plant species;

(6) to provide compatible opportunities for hunting, fishing, wildlife observation and photography, and environmental education and interpretation; and

(7) to encourage the use of volunteers and to facilitate partnerships among the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, local communities, conservation organizations, and other non-Federal entities to promote public awareness of the resources of the Cat Island National Wildlife Refuge and the National Wildlife Refuge System (including public participation in the conservation of those resources).

SEC. 5. ADMINISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall administer all land and waters (including any interest in land or waters) acquired under section 3(d) in accordance with—

(1) the National Wildlife Refuge System Administration Act of 1966 (16 U.S.C. 668dd et seq.);

(2) Public Law 87–714 (commonly known as the ''Refuge Recreation Act'') (16 U.S.C. 460k et seq.); and

(3) the purposes of the Refuge described in section 4.

(b) USE OF OTHER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary may use such additional statutory authority as is available to the Secretary to conduct projects and activities at the Refuge in accordance with this Act, including projects or activities to conserve or develop—

(1) wildlife and natural resources;

(2) water supplies;

(3) water control structures;

(4) outdoor recreational activity programs; and

(5) interpretive education programs.

SEC. 6. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary such sums as are necessary for—

(1) the acquisition of interests in land and waters described in section 3(d)(1); and

(2) the development, operation, and maintenance of the Refuge.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator LANDRIEU in offering legislation to establish the Cat Island National Wildlife Refuge in West Feliciana Parish, Louisiana.

The Mississippi River has provided for the commerce, transportation, and nourishment that has sustained Louisianians for over 300 years. Over time, communities have adapted to the unique environment that exists near the River. Today marks a milestone in the effort to preserve one of the last remaining tracts in the lower Mississippi Valley that is still influenced by the natural dynamics of the great River.

The area known as Cat Island is the southernmost unleveed portion of the Mississippi River. It is actually a peninsula of bottomland hardwood forest adjacent to the River and located thirty miles north of our state capital at Baton Rouge. It supports one of the highest densities of virgin bald cypress trees in the entire Mississippi River Valley, including the nation's champion cypress tree, which is 17 feet wide and 53 feet in circumference. By designating this area as a National Wildlife Refuge, we aim to protect the habitat of several declining species of forest songbirds, thousands of wintering waterfowl, and breeding ground for Wood Ducks. The area also supports high populations of deer, squirrel, turkey, and furbearers such as bobcat and mink.

The Cat Island Project represents a collaborative effort among several entities who have remained committed to its conservation. The Nature Conservancy spearheaded the effort, marshaled public support from Louisianians of all stripes, and worked diligently to secure the necessary funding for the initial acquisition of land from commercial and private landowners in the area. In fact, the Migratory Bird Commission provided the seed money to begin the acquisition process. Senator LANDRIEU and I have worked hard to find appropriate sources of federal funding to contribute to the cause, and we are delighted that the President has included $4 million for the Cat Island Project in his budget request for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. We have enjoyed the support of officials from the Department of the Interior as well. Assistant Secretary David Hayes visited the site of the planned refuge along with Senator LANDRIEU and me in February. As I said, this project is the result of the good faith, dedication and continued cooperation of many players. I express my sincere gratitude and congratulations to all who have been involved.

The final piece in the completion of this project is the designation of the land as a National Wildlife Refuge. I am proud to offer legislation that will ensure the conservation of wild Louisiana for future generations to experience.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 20

At the request of Mr. LAUTENBERG, the name of the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. REED) was added as a cosponsor of S. 20, a bill to assist the States and local governments in assessing and remediating brownfield sites and encouraging environmental cleanup programs, and for other purposes.

SENATE RESOLUTION 294—DESIGNATING THE MONTH OF OCTOBER 2000 AS "CHILDREN'S INTERNET SAFETY MONTH"

Mr. ABRAHAM (for himself and Mr. MCCAIN) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 294

Whereas the Internet is one of the most effective tools available for purposes of education and research and gives children the means to make friends and freely communicate with peers and family anywhere in the world;

Whereas the new era of instant communication holds great promise for achieving better understanding of the world and providing the opportunity for creative inquiry;

Whereas it is vital to the well-being of children that the Internet offer an open and responsible environment to explore;

Whereas access to objectionable material, such as violent, obscene, or sexually explicit adult material may be received by a minor in unsolicited form;

Whereas there is a growing concern in all levels of society to protect children from objectionable material;

Whereas the technological option for parents or guardians to filter, block, or review objectionable Internet material is available and effective;

Whereas information on Internet filtering or blocking technology is unavailable to many parents or guardians; and

Whereas the Internet is a positive educational tool and should be seen in such a manner rather than as a vehicle for entities to make objectionable materials available to children: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates October 2000 as "Children's Internet Safety Month" and supports its official status on the Nation's promotional calendar; and

(2) supports parents and guardians in promoting the creative development of children by encouraging the use of the Internet in a safe, positive manner with the aid of Internet filtering and blocking technologies.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to offer a resolution designating October 2000 as "Children's Internet Safety Month" on our national promotional calendar. This resolution, which I am submitting along with my colleague, Senator MCCAIN, recognizes the valuable information and opportunities for creative development provided by the Internet. It supports parents and guardians as they work to promote children's intellectual growth by encouraging safe, positive internet use with the aid of Internet filtering and blocking technologies.

Filtering and blocking technologies can help parents and guardians protect their children from objectionable material. This is particularly important in those frequent instances when such material is obtained by accident, via unsolicited correspondence. With more than 5,000 new web sites appearing on the Internet each day, we must recognize the problems raised by the significant number of sites containing objectionable material (defined as material that is violent, obscene or sexually explicit). Unfortunately, one-third of all Internet web sites are devoted to objectionable material. This presents our nation with a moral challenge: to find the means to sustain the wonderful freedom of the Internet while protecting children from unwanted and potentially harmful Internet material.

By designating October 2000 as "Children's Internet Safety Month" on the nation's promotional calendar, we can help parents, guardians, and concerned community leaders in their efforts to provide responsible Internet protection for our children. We can focus public attention on this important issue and encourage development of positive, community based programs and events highlighting the need to protect children from objectionable Internet material.

This resolution will help empower the young people of the Internet Generation to share ideas and dreams; and to do so free from unwanted and intrusive, objectionable Internet material.

SENATE RESOLUTION 295—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT THE CARRYING OF FIREARMS INTO PLACES OF WORSHIP OR EDUCATIONAL AND SCHOLASTIC SETTINGS SHOULD BE PROHIBITED

Mr. LIEBERMAN (for himself Mr. DASCHLE, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. SCHUMER, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. KOHL, Mr. DODD, Mr. KERRY, Mr. REED, Mr. BAYH, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. REID, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. BREAUX, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. ROBB, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. AKAKA, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. SARBANES, and Mr. LEAHY) submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 295

Whereas repeated incidents of senseless and horrific gun violence have led many Americans to conclude that neither they nor their children can feel completely secure anywhere at anytime anymore;

Whereas the epidemic of gun violence in our Nation has invaded schools, youth sporting events, places of worship, and other spaces that the American people once thought of as sanctuaries of safety;

Whereas these shootings have shattered the confidence of parents and educators and clergy in their ability to protect children from the increasingly dangerous world around them;

Whereas in response to this trend, Congress previously acted to protect America's children by prohibiting the possession of firearms in school zones;

Whereas no American adult or child should have to fear for their safety when studying, praying in their places of worship, or participating in any other activities at or related to their schools or places of worship;

Whereas it is the obligation of America's elected leaders to do all they can to protect our children from harm and ensure that adults and children alike can learn, play, or pray in safety; and

Whereas there is no rational reason for anyone other than a law enforcement officer to carry a gun into a place of worship, a school, or a school-related event: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the carrying of firearms into places of worship or educational and scholastic settings should be prohibited.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, the first anniversary of the Columbine massacre has been a time for great contemplation and reflection—contemplation of the horror and tragedy of that event, and reflection on what has become of the safety and security so many of us once took for granted. From Paducah, Kentucky, to Jonesboro, Arkansas, to Springfield, Oregon, to Mount Morris Township, Michigan, to Littleton, Colorado, the surreal has too often become mortally real. Senseless, horrific and seemingly random gun violence has invaded all corners of our nation. These incidents have shattered our collective sense of security. What's worse, they have done so with respect to the very places where we and our children have the right to feel most secure: our schools and our places of worship.

There are many facets to this problem—a media culture that desensitizes our children to violence, a feeling of hopelessness that invades too many of our children and the often too easy accessibility of firearms. We must address all of these problems, and I hope we soon will start to do so by taking action on the long-stalled juvenile justice bill with its several sensible gun-safety provisions and its measures aimed at the culture of violence surrounding our children.

But there is one more thing we can do for ourselves and our children: restore a sense of sanctuary and safe haven to spaces where guns have no place. Ask parents, educators or congregants, and they'll say every community is entitled to at least a few sites of sanctuary, where they can honor their families and their God without fearing for their safety or their lives. But the reality is that at least 22 states permit gun owners to carry concealed weapons into places of worship, and many allow them at school events off campus.

Why does anyone other than a law enforcement or security officer need to carry a firearm into these spaces? Why at this moment of such concern about gun violence do we want to add to it the potential for more terror and tragedy in what should be our safest places? Why after at least a dozen shootings in American churches and synagogues over the last five years do we want to invite another?

Making clear that guns have no place in what are supposed to be sanctuaries would put the law on the right side of reason. It would help diminish the odds that another Columbine is around the corner. And it would reassure the American people that it is possible for us to come together on common ground to fight this threat to our safety and security.

With these thoughts in mind, and with the Million Mom March against gun violence soon to occur in Washington, I am today joining a coalition of more than 25 Members in submitting a resolution expressing our support for prohibitions on firearms in schools, scholastic settings, and places of worship. This resolution would make a clear statement that, like most Americans, we in the Senate believe that Saturday Night Specials do not belong in Sunday School classes or any other place where families are learning, playing or praying.

This in the end is not an ideological or constitutional issue, but a question of common sense. We can respect the rights of law-abiding gun owners while also acknowledging that bullets and Bibles don't mix. This is not a hard line to take. Nor should it be a hard line to draw, in order to provide safe havens for our families.

It is time for the Senate to go on record and say that there are certain places in our society that must be safe havens from even the threat of violence, spaces where we and our children can go to pray and play with the confidence that safety and security will follow. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this resolution.

SENATE RESOLUTION 296—DESIGNATING THE FIRST SUNDAY IN JUNE OF EACH CALENDAR YEAR AS ''NATIONAL CHILD'S DAY''

By Mr. GRAHAM (for himself, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. CRAPO, Mr. BYRD, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. VOINOVICH, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. BOND, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. CRAIG, Mr. KOHL, Mr. WARNER, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. ABRAHAM, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. ENZI, Mr. KERRY, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. SMITH of Oregon, Mr. CLELAND, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. GRAMS, Mr. BAYH, Mr. MACK, Mr. BRYAN, Mr. REID, Mr. JOHNSON, Mrs. LINCOLN, Mrs. MURRAY, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mrs. BOXER, and Mr. WELLSTONE) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

S. RES. 296

Whereas the first Sunday of June falls between Mother's Day and Father's Day;

Whereas each child is unique, a blessing, and holds a distinct place in the family unit;

Whereas the people of the United States should celebrate children as the most valuable asset of the United States;

Whereas the children represent the future, hope, and inspiration of the United States;

Whereas the children of the United States should be allowed to feel that their ideas and dreams will be respected because adults in the United States take time to listen;

Whereas many children of the United States face crises of grave proportions, especially as they enter adolescent years;

Whereas it is important for parents to spend time listening to their children on a daily basis;

Whereas modern societal and economic demands often pull the family apart;

Whereas, whenever practicable, it is important for both parents to be involved in their child's life;

Whereas encouragement should be given to families to set aside a special time for all family members to engage together in family activities;

Whereas adults in the United States should have an opportunity to reminisce on their youth to recapture some of the fresh insight, innocence, and dreams that they may have lost through the years;

Whereas the designation of a day to commemorate the children of the United States will provide an opportunity to emphasize to children the importance of developing an ability to make the choices necessary to distance themselves from impropriety and to contribute to their communities;

Whereas the people of the United States should emphasize to children the importance of family life, education, and spiritual qualities;

Whereas because children are the responsibility of all people of the United States, everyone should celebrate children, whose questions, laughter, and dreams are important to the existence of the United States; and

Whereas the designation of a day to commemorate the children will emphasize to the people of the United States the importance of the role of the child within the family and society: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) designates the first Sunday in June of each year as ''National Child's Day''; and

(2) requests the President to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to submit a resolution that designates the first Sunday in June as National Child's Day.

Our children are our future. I believe that most of my colleagues would agree that our children are, indeed, this nation's most precious resource—a resource that should be cherished and protected.

Sadly, Mr. President, over five million of America's children go to bed hungry at night.

In the last ten years there has been a 60 percent increase in the number of children in or in need of foster care services.

Many children in America face crises of grave proportions, especially as they enter their adolescent years.

We must make a commitment to reverse these trends. We must take the initiative to make each child in this nation a child who is loved, cared for and appreciated for his or herself.

The establishment of a National Child's Day will give all of us the unique opportunity to focus on our children's needs and to recognize their accomplishments.

National Child's Day will encourage families to spend more quality time together and will highlight the special importance of the child in the family unit.

This simple, yet important, resolution will foster family togetherness and ensure that our children receive all of the love, support, and attention that they deserve.

I urge my colleagues to join me in establishing National Child's Day this year and for years to come.

AMENDMENT SUBMITTED

MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY RELIEF ACT OF 2000

BAYH (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 3102

(Ordered to lie on the table)

Mr. BAYH (for himself and Mr. DURBIN, Mr. JOHNSON, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. EDWARDS, and Mrs. MURRAY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H.R. 6) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to eliminate the marriage penalty by providing that the income tax rate bracket amounts, and the amount of the standard deduction, for joint returns shall be twice the amounts applicable to unmarried individuals; as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Targeted Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act of 2000".

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(c) SECTION 15 NOT TO APPLY.—No amendment made by section 2 shall be treated as a change in a rate of tax for purposes of section 15 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 .

SEC. 2. MARRIAGE CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25A the following new section:

"SEC. 25B. MARRIAGE CREDIT.

"(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—In the case of a joint return under section 6013, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the lesser of the amount determined under subsection (b) or (c) for the taxable year.

"(b) AMOUNT UNDER SUBSECTION (b).—For purposes of subsection (a), the amount under this subsection for any taxable year with respect to a taxpayer is determined in accordance with the following table:

"Taxable year:	Amount:
2001	$500
2002	$900
2003	$1,300
2004 and thereafter	$1,700.

"(c) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the amount determined under this subsection for any taxable year with respect to a taxpayer is equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the joint tentative tax of such taxpayer for such year, over

"(B) the combined tentative tax of such taxpayer for such year.

"(2) JOINT TENTATIVE TAX.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(A)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The joint tentative tax of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the tax determined in accordance with the table contained in section 1(a) on the joint tentative taxable income of the taxpayer for such year.

"(B) JOINT TENTATIVE TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the joint tentative taxable income of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the excess of—

"(i) the sum of—

"(I) the earned income (as defined in section 32(c)(2)) of such taxpayer for such year, and

"(II) any income received as a pension or annuity which arises from an employer-employee relationship (including any social security benefit (as defined in section 86(d)(1)) which is includible in gross income of such taxpayer for such year, over

"(ii) the sum of—

"(I) either—

"(aa) the standard deduction determined under section 63(c)(2)(A)(i) for such taxpayer for such year, or

"(bb) in the case of an election under section 63(e), the total itemized deductions determined under section 63(d) for such taxpayer for such year, and

"(II) the total exemption amount for such taxpayer for such year determined under section 151.

"(3) COMBINED TENTATIVE TAX.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(A)—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The combined tentative tax of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the sum of the taxes determined in accordance with the table contained in section 1(c) on the individual tentative taxable income of each spouse for such year.

"(B) INDIVIDUAL TENTATIVE TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the individual tentative taxable income of a spouse for any taxable year is equal to the excess of—

"(i) the sum of—

"(I) the earned income (as defined in section 32(c)(2)) of such spouse for such year, and

"(II) any income received as a pension or annuity which arises from an employer-employee relationship (including any social security benefit (as defined in section 86(d)(1)) which is includible in gross income of such spouse for such year, over

"(ii) the sum of—

"(I) either—

"(aa) the standard deduction determined under section 63(c)(2)(C) for such spouse for such year, or

"(bb) in the case of an election under section 63(e), one-half of the total itemized deductions determined under paragraph (2)(B)(ii)(I)(bb) for such spouse for such year, and

"(II) one-half of the total exemption amount determined under paragraph (2)(B)(ii)(II) for such year.

"(C) INCLUDIBLE SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFIT.—For purposes of subparagraph (B)(i)(II), the amount of social security benefit (as so defined) which is includible in gross income of a spouse for any taxable year is equal to—

"(i) the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount of social security benefit determined under paragraph (2)(B)(i)(II) for such year, as

"(ii) such spouse's total social security benefit for such year bears to the total social security benefit for both spouses for such year.

"(d) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount which would (but for this subsection) be taken into account under subsection (a) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the amount determined under paragraph (2).

"(2) AMOUNT OF REDUCTION.—The amount determined under this paragraph is the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount which would be so taken into account as—

"(A) the excess of—

"(i) the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for such taxable year, over

"(ii) $120,000, bears to

"(B) $20,000.

"(e) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxable year beginning after 2004, the $1,700 amount referred to in subsection (b) and the $120,000 amount referred to in subsection (d)((2)(A)(ii) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

"(A) such dollar amount, multiplied by

"(B) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section (1)(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, by substituting '2003' for '1992'.

"(2) ROUNDING.—If the $1,700 amount (as so referred) and the $120,000 amount (as so referred) as adjusted under paragraph (1) is not a multiple of $25 and $50, respectively, such amount shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $25 and $50, respectively.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25A the following new item:

"Sec. 25B. Marriage credit."

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 3. MARRIAGE PENALTY RELIEF FOR EARNED INCOME CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 32(b) (relating to percentages and amounts) is amended—

(1) by striking ''PERCENTAGES.—The credit'' in paragraph (1) and inserting ''PERCENTAGES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the credit'',

(2) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following new subparagraph:

''(B) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, the phaseout percentage determined under subparagraph (A)—

''(i) in the case of an eligible individual with 1 qualifying child shall be decreased by 1.87 percentage points, and

''(ii) in the case of an eligible individual with 2 or more qualifying child shall be decreased by 2.01 percentage points.'',

(3) by striking ''AMOUNTS.—The earned'' in paragraph (2) and inserting ''AMOUNTS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the earned'', and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

''(B) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, the phaseout amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be increased by $2,000.''.

(b) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—Paragraph (1)(B) of section 32(j) (relating to inflation adjustments) is amended to read as follows:

''(B) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, determined—

''(i) in the case of amounts in subsections (b)(2)(A) and (i)(1), by substituting 'calendar year 1995' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) thereof, and

''(ii) in the case of the $2,000 amount in subsection (b)(2)(B), by substituting 'calendar year 2000' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) of such section 1.''.

(c) ROUNDING.—Section 32(j)(2)(A) (relating to rounding) is amended by striking ''subsection (b)(2)'' and inserting ''subsection (b)(2)(A) (after being increased under subparagraph (B) thereof)''.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public that a hearing has been scheduled before the Subcommittee on National Parks, Historic Preservation, and Recreation of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. The purpose of this hearing is to receive testimony on S. 1438, a bill to establish the National Law Enforcement Museum on Federal land in the District of Columbia; S. 1921, a bill to authorize the placement within the site of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial of a plaque to honor Vietnam veterans who died after their service in the Vietnam war, but as a direct result of that service; S. 2231 and H.R. 2879, bills to provide for the placement at the Lincoln Memorial of a plaque commemorating the speech of Martin Luther King, Jr., known as the ''I Have A Dream'' speech; S. 2343, a bill to amend the National Historic Preservation Act for purposes of establishing a national historic lighthouse preservation program; S. 2352, a bill to designate portions of the Wekiva River and associated tributaries as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System: H.R. 1749, a bill to designate Wilson Creek in Avery and Caldwell Counties, North Carolina, as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers Systems; and H.R. 3201, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to study the suitability and feasibility of designating the Carter G. Woodson Home in the District of Columbia as a national historic site, and for other purposes.

The hearing will take place on Thursday, April 27, 2000, at 2:30 p.m. in room SD–366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

Because of the limited time available for the hearing, witnesses may testify by invitation only. However, those wishing to submit written testimony for the hearing record should send two copies of the testimony to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, United States Senate, SD–364 Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC 20510–6150.

For further information, please contact Jim O'Toole or Kevin Clark of the committee staff at (202) 224–6969.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, HOUSING, AND URBAN AFFAIRS

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, April 25, 2000, to conduct a hearing on ''Delays in Funding Mass Transit.''

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to meet to conduct a hearing on Tuesday, April 25, 2000, at 9:30 a.m., in SD–226.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL TRADE AND FINANCE

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on International Trade and Finance of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Thursday, April 27, 2000, to conduct a hearing on ''The International Monetary Fund and International Financial Institutions.''

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON WATER AND POWER

Mr. KYL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Water and Power of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, April 25 at 2:30 p.m. to conduct a hearing. The subcommittee will receive testimony on S. 2239, a bill to authorize the Bureau of Reclamation to provide cost sharing for the endangered fish recovery implementation programs for the Upper Colorado River and San Juan River basins.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NRC FAIRNESS IN FUNDING ACT OF 1999

On April 13, 2000, the Senate amended and passed S. 1627, as follows:

S. 1627

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''NRC Fairness in Funding Act of 2000''.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.

TITLE I—FUNDING

Sec. 101. Nuclear Regulatory Commission annual charges.
Sec. 102. Nuclear Regulatory Commission authority over former licensees for decommissioning funding.
Sec. 103. Cost recovery from Government agencies.

TITLE II—OTHER PROVISIONS

Sec. 201. Office location.
Sec. 202. License period.
Sec. 203. Elimination of NRC antitrust reviews.
Sec. 204. Gift acceptance authority.
Sec. 205. Carrying of firearms by licensee employees.
Sec. 206. Unauthorized introduction of dangerous weapons.
Sec. 207. Sabotage of nuclear facilities or fuel.

TITLE I—FUNDING

SEC. 101. NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION ANNUAL CHARGES.

Section 6101 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 2214) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(3), by striking ''September 30, 1999'' and inserting ''September 20, 2005''; and

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) in paragraph (1), by inserting ''or certificate holder'' after ''licensee''; and

(B) by striking paragraph (2) and inserting the following:

''(2) AGGREGATE AMOUNT OF CHARGES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The aggregate amount of the annual charges collected from all licensees and certificate holders in a fiscal year shall equal an amount that approximates the percentages of the budget authority of the Commission for the fiscal year stated in subparagraph (B), less—

''(i) amounts collected under subsection (b) during the fiscal year; and

''(ii) amounts appropriated to the Commission from the Nuclear Waste Fund for the fiscal year.

''(B) PERCENTAGES.—The percentages referred to in subparagraph (A) are—

''(i) 98 percent for fiscal year 2001;

''(ii) 96 percent for fiscal year 2002;

''(iii) 94 percent for fiscal year 2003;

''(iv) 92 percent for fiscal year 2004; and

''(v) 88 percent for fiscal year 2005.''.

SEC. 102. NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION AUTHORITY OVER FORMER LICENSEES FOR DECOMMISSIONING FUNDING.

Section 161i. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2201(i)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''and (3)'' and inserting ''(3)''; and

(2) by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: '', and (4) to ensure that sufficient funds will be available for the decommissioning of any production or utilization facility licensed under section 103 or 104b., including standards and restrictions governing the control, maintenance, use, and disbursement by any former licensee under this Act that has control over any fund for the decommissioning of the facility''.

SEC. 103. COST RECOVERY FROM GOVERNMENT AGENCIES.

Section 161w. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2201(w)) is amended—

(1) by striking '', or which operates any facility regulated or certified under section 1701 or 1702,'';

(2) by striking ''483a'' and inserting ''9701''; and

(3) by inserting before the period at the end the following: '', and, commencing October 1, 2000, prescribe and collect from any other Government agency any fee, charge, or price that the Commission may require in accordance with section 9701 of title 31, United States Code, or any other law''.

TITLE II—OTHER PROVISIONS

SEC. 201. OFFICE LOCATION.

Section 23 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2033) is amended by striking ''; however, the Commission shall maintain an office for the service of process and papers within the District of Columbia''.

SEC. 202. LICENSE PERIOD.

Section 103c. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2133(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''c. Each such'' and inserting the following:

''c. LICENSE PERIOD.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Each such''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) COMBINED LICENSES.—In the case of a combined construction and operating license issued under section 185(b), the initial duration of the license may not exceed 40 years from the date on which the Commission finds, before operation of the facility, that the acceptance criteria required by section 185(b) are met.''.

SEC. 203. ELIMINATION OF NRC ANTITRUST REVIEWS.

Section 105 of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2135) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(d) APPLICABILITY.—Subsection (c) shall not apply to an application for a license to construct or operate a utilization facility under section 103 or 104(b) that is pending on or that is filed on or after the date of enactment of this subsection.''.

SEC. 204. GIFT ACCEPTANCE AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 161g. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2201(g)) is amended—

(1) by inserting ''(1)'' after ''(g)'';

(2) by striking ''this Act;'' and inserting ''this Act; or''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(2) accept, hold, utilize, and administer gifts of real and personal property (not including money) for the purpose of aiding or facilitating the work of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.''.

(b) CRITERIA FOR ACCEPTANCE OF GIFTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 14 of title I of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2201 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 170C. CRITERIA FOR ACCEPTANCE OF GIFTS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Commission shall establish written criteria for determining whether to accept gifts under section 161g.(2).

''(b) CONSIDERATIONS.—The criteria under subsection (a) shall take into consideration whether the acceptance of the gift would compromise the integrity of, or the appearance of the integrity of, the Commission or any officer or employee of the Commission.''.

(2) CONFORMING AND TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—The table of contents of chapter 14 of title I of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. prec. 2011) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''Sec. 170C. Criteria for acceptance of gifts.''.

SEC. 205. CARRYING OF FIREARMS BY LICENSEE EMPLOYEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 14 of title I of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2201 et seq.) (as amended by section 204(b)) is amended—

(1) in section 161, by striking subsection k. and inserting the following:

''(k) authorize to carry a firearm in the performance of official duties such of its members, officers, and employees, such of the employees of its contractors and subcontractors (at any tier) engaged in the protection of property under the jurisdiction of the United States located at facilities owned by or contracted to the United States or being transported to or from such facilities, and such of the employees of persons licensed or certified by the Commission (including employees of contractors of licensees or certificate holders) engaged in the protection of facilities owned or operated by a Commission licensee or certificate holder that are designated by the Commission or in the protection of property of significance to the common defense and security located at facilities owned or operated by a Commission licensee or certificate holder or being transported to or from such facilities, as the Commission considers necessary in the interest of the common defense and security;'' and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''SEC. 170D. CARRYING OF FIREARMS.

''(a) AUTHORITY TO MAKE ARREST.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—A person authorized under section 161k. to carry a firearm may, while in the performance of, and in connection with, official duties, arrest an individual without a warrant for any offense against the United States committed in the presence of the person or for any felony under the laws of the United States if the person has a reasonable ground to believe that the individual has committed or is committing such a felony.

''(2) LIMITATION.—An employee of a contractor or subcontractor or of a Commission licensee or certificate holder (or a contractor of a licensee or certificate holder) authorized to make an arrest under paragraph (1) may make an arrest only—

''(A) when the individual is within, or is in flight directly from, the area in which the offense was committed; and

''(B) in the enforcement of—

''(i) a law regarding the property of the United States in the custody of the Department of Energy, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, or a contractor of the Department of Energy or Nuclear Regulatory Commission or a licensee or certificate holder of the Commission;

''(ii) a law applicable to facilities owned or operated by a Commission licensee or certificate holder that are designated by the Commission under section 161k.;

''(iii) a law applicable to property of significance to the common defense and security that is in the custody of a licensee or certificate holder or a contractor of a licensee or certificate holder of the Commission; or

''(iv) any provision of this Act that subjects an offender to a fine, imprisonment, or both.

''(3) OTHER AUTHORITY.—The arrest authority conferred by this section is in addition to any arrest authority under other law.

''(4) GUIDELINES.—The Secretary and the Commission, with the approval of the Attorney General, shall issue guidelines to implement section 161k. and this subsection.''.

(b) CONFORMING AND TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—The table of contents of chapter 14 of title I of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. prec. 2011) (as amended by section 204(b)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''Sec. 170D. Carrying of firearms.''.

SEC. 206. UNAUTHORIZED INTRODUCTION OF DANGEROUS WEAPONS.

Section 229a. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2278a(a)) is amended in the first sentence by inserting ''or subject to the licensing authority of the Commission or to certification by the Commission under this Act or any other Act'' before the period at the end.

SEC. 207. SABOTAGE OF NUCLEAR FACILITIES OR FUEL.

Section 236a. of the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2284(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2), by striking ''storage facility'' and inserting ''storage, treatment, or disposal facility'';

(2) in paragraph (3)—

(A) by striking ''such a utilization facility'' and inserting ''a utilization facility licensed under this Act''; and

(B) by striking ''or'' at the end;

(3) in paragraph (4)—

(A) by striking ''facility licensed'' and inserting ''or nuclear fuel fabrication facility licensed or certified''; and

(B) by striking the period at the end and inserting ''; or''; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

''(5) any production, utilization, waste storage, waste treatment, waste disposal, uranium enrichment, or nuclear fuel fabrication facility subject to licensing or certification under this Act during construction of the facility, if the person knows or reasonably should know that there is a significant possibility that the destruction or damage caused or attempted to be caused could adversely affect public health and safety during the operation of the facility.''.

ORDERS FOR WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 2000

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 10 a.m. on Wednesday, April 26. I further ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, and the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, tomorrow morning when the Senate convenes, it is expected that the veto message on the nuclear waste bill will arrive. Under the rule, when the Senate receives the veto message, the Senate will immediately begin debate on overriding the President's veto. It is hoped that an agreement can be made with regard to debate time on this important legislation.

The cloture motion on the substitute amendment to the marriage penalty tax bill is still pending. That vote will occur immediately following the adoption of the motion to proceed to the victims' rights resolution. Therefore, a few votes could occur tomorrow afternoon or evening.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT

Mr. THOMPSON. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order following the remarks of Senator DORGAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

ARMS CONTROL

Mr. DORGAN. Today, in the Washington Post, there was a story headlined ''U.S. Arms Policy is Criticized at the United Nations.'' The occasion of the criticism comes at the beginning of the conference to review the status of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty which opened yesterday at the United Nations in New York. This conference occurs once every 5 years. It is a conference on the status of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. I would like to read the first paragraph of the story in the Washington Post because it is really quite a sad day when our country is described in the following way:

> After years of championing international attempts to halt the spread of nuclear weapons, the United States found itself on the defensive today as a broad alliance of arms control advocates, senior United Nations officials, and diplomats from nonnuclear countries charged that Washington is blocking progress toward disarmament.

Well, that is not something any of us aspires to hear. I hope and I believe that many of my colleagues want the United States to be seen as a leader in trying to stop the spread of nuclear weapons and in trying to reduce the number of nuclear weapons in this world. Regrettably, others view the actions of the United States—especially in the last few years—as actions that are not actions of a leader in trying to stop the spread of nuclear weapons.

We have made some progress over recent years in reducing the number of nuclear weapons. I want to describe how because I think it is important to understand it.

I ask unanimous consent to show two items on the floor of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, this is a piece of metal that comes from the wing strut of a Russian TU–160 Backfire bomber. This bomber carried nuclear weapons during the height of the cold war. This bomber was a threat to the United States of America.

How is it that I stand on the floor of the Senate holding a piece of a wing strut from a Russian bomber? Did we shoot it down? No. It was actually sawed off the wing. Giant, rotating metal saws cut the wings off this bomber. Why? Because we negotiated an agreement with the Russians to reduce the number of bombers and missiles and nuclear warheads in Russia. We reduced our stockpile and our delivery mechanisms, and they reduced theirs. So without shooting down a bomber that carried nuclear bombs that threatened America, I now have in my hand a piece of a wing from a Russian bomber—because arms control works. We know it works.

This chart shows what arms control has done in recent years. In the 1980s we ratified the Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces Treaty, and in the 1990s we ratified the first Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty, or START I. When we started the process in the mid-1980s, the Russians—or then the Soviet Union—had about 11,000 nuclear weapons on long range missiles. Today Russia has about 5,000. That means that 6,000 warheads are now gone. Many of those warheads were probably carried in the Russian Backfire bomber this piece comes from. So 6,000 warheads no longer threaten the United States of America.

Do you know what that represents—6,000 warheads with the kind of strength and power of the nuclear warheads the Russians used to build? That is equal to 175,000 Hiroshima bombs. Let me say that again. We have actually negotiated the reduction of nuclear warheads in the Russian arsenal, and 6,000 warheads are gone. Those 6,000 warheads represented the equivalent of 175,000 atomic bombs dropped on Hiroshima. That is quite remarkable.

This is a small container of ground-up copper wire. This copper wire used to run through a Russian ballistic missile submarine. This type of submarine, a Typhoon class submarine that snaked under the waters throughout the world carrying 20 missiles, with 10 nuclear warheads on the tip of each of those missiles, aimed at the United States of America. This copper wire, before it was ground up, used to course through this Typhoon submarine. But now I have the wire from a Typhoon submarine ground up in a small vial. How did I get that? Did we sink this submarine? Did we go to war with Russia and sink this submarine? No. This was dismantled, brought up to the port, and then engineers, carpenters, and others took this apart piece by piece, and this submarine doesn't exist anymore.

This submarine was taken apart as part of the Nunn-Lugar program to reduce delivery systems and nuclear weapons in the old Soviet Union and in what we now refer to as Russia. We have spent $2.5 billion on the Nunn-Lugar program. We have actually paid for the destruction of Russian bombers. We have paid for the destruction of Russian intercontinental ballistic missiles, 5,000 nuclear warheads, 471 ICBMs, and 354 ICBM silos, 12 ballistic missile submarines.

I have had charts on the Senate floor that show a plot of ground in the Ukraine where a missile silo existed with a nuclear warhead aimed at the United States of America, and now the silo is gone. I have held up a piece of metal from the hinge of the silo on the floor of the Senate. That hinge and that missile silo are now scrap metal. The silo is gone, the missile is gone, the warhead doesn't exist, and there is now a plot of ground with sunflowers. Where a nuclear missile used to rest, sunflowers now grow. That is progress. That is real progress in reducing the threat of nuclear weapons.

What about the future? If this is what has happened and this is success, what about the future? Well, this success occurred under decisions by Congress—not in the last several years, but years before that—in which we said: We are the leaders in arms reduction and arms control. Our country wants to provide leadership. We want to reduce the number of warheads, reduce the number of bombers and missiles, reduce the tensions. And we have done that.

But in the last several years, something dramatic has changed in the Congress. No. 1, we saw the Senate defeat the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty. It was almost unthinkable to me, but this Senate said: This country doesn't want to ratify a Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty even though we have already decided that the United States is not going to test nuclear weapons. We decided that unilaterally some 6 or 7 years ago. So we are not testing nuclear weapons. A treaty that has been signed by over 150 nations, negotiated over many years, ratified by most of our allies, was not ratified by the Senate because we have Senators who say, no, we don't think that is in the country's interest.

Well, if it is not in this country's interest to reduce the stockpile of nuclear weapons and to stop the testing of nuclear weapons, stop the spread of nuclear weapons around the world, what on earth is in this country's interest? After the Senate failed to ratify that treaty, those who voted against the treaty blamed everyone but themselves. That treaty languished in the committee here in the Senate for over 2 years without a day of hearings—not one. Then it was brought to the floor on a preemptory basis, given short shrift in debate, and killed.

Those who killed that treaty should not have taken much pleasure in putting this country in the position of failing to exert leadership with respect to the nonproliferation of nuclear weapons and the ban on testing nuclear weapons all around the world.

Last week, the Russian Duma ratified START II. Prior to that, the Russians passed the Comprehensive Nuclear Test-Ban Treaty. While that is happening, this country is talking about building a national missile defense system and trying to negotiate with Russia changes in the anti-ballistic missile system which in many ways is the linchpin for all of this progress in arms control and arms reduction.

And what happens? Yesterday at the United Nations we have diplomats looking at Russia and saying: You are making a lot of progress here, Russia. You have passed the Comprehensive Nuclear Test-Ban Treaty. You ratified that treaty, you passed START II, congratulations.

And the United States: You have lost your edge, you are not doing much. You seem to be retreating on the question of whether you care about arms control. You seem to be stepping back from your commitment of stopping the spread of nuclear weapons and working as hard as you worked previously to reduce the number of delivery vehicles and reduce the number of nuclear weapons.

I regret that is the case. That should not be the case. It cannot be a judgment of conservatives or liberals or Democrats or Republicans to believe that somehow it falls to someone else to be a leader in the world, to stop the spread of nuclear weapons. Do we worry that the nuclear club—a rather small club in this world consisting of nations that possess nuclear weapons—do we worry that is going to proliferate, there will be more and more nations that possess nuclear weapons, and more and more nations that have the mechanism or the wherewithal to deliver those nuclear weapons? We should certainly worry about that.

Even with START II, the U.S. and Russia will each have about 3,500 nuclear weapons. Hopefully we will begin negotiations of START III and agree to much lower levels. As we do that, we have people in this Chamber who want to focus not on arms control but on building some kind of a national missile defense system, some sort of a shield to prevent America from being attacked by a rogue nation.

We need to understand the only country in the world that possesses the strength and the nuclear power to destroy our way of life is Russia. They still have thousands of nuclear weapons. We ought to engage with them in an aggressive START III negotiation and continue the progress of bringing down the number of nuclear weapons in the two major nuclear superpowers—Russia and the United States. We ought to continue that.

I know we have people here who don't sleep at night because they are worried that North Korea might threaten a small slice of the United States. But they should realize that, No. 1, a national missile defense, if deployed, will be horribly costly. No. 2, it will not protect this country against this kind of a threat. Those people say to the American people that Congress will fund a national missile defense program to defend against a rogue nation—North Korea, they suggest, Iraq or Iran. The fact is, the least likely threat is that a rogue nation would have access to an intercontinental ballistic missile. If it acquires access to a nuclear weapon, it is far more likely to deploy it as a suitcase bomb put in the trunk of a rusty Yugo car at a dock in New York City, rather than putting it on the tip of an intercontinental ballistic missile and having any notion of being able to fire it with accuracy.

It is much more likely they would acquire a cruise missile, which would be easier to acquire, much less costly, and not as technically difficult to deploy. Of course, the national missile defense system wouldn't do anything to defend against that. It is much more likely a rogue nation would find it more attractive to use a deadly vial of chemical or biological agents to threaten a superpower.

We face a myriad of threats. There is no question about that. The biggest threat, in my judgment, is this country stepping away from its responsibility to lead and stop the spread of nuclear weapons around the world, and this country stepping away from its responsibility to decrease the number of nuclear weapons and decrease the launchers and delivery systems for those nuclear weapons.

My fervent hope is that we will agree that last year's vote by which the Senate defeated ratification of the Comprehensive Nuclear Test-Ban Treaty should not signal to anyone in the world that this country is no longer interested in these issues. We must decide again, even though there is not an appetite by some in the Senate to do so, we must decide again that leadership in arms control is this country's responsibility. It is upon our shoulders that this responsibility falls. No one else can exert this leadership with the capability of the United States.

If we don't exert leadership, what we will end up building new nuclear weapons, building new defensive systems.

We will start a new arms race. We will see more spending on nuclear weapons by China. We will see more spending on offensive weapons by Russia. We will see other countries joining the nuclear club because they will believe they should acquire nuclear weapons to represent their interests. We will see our allies depart from us on these issues because they believe abrogation of the ABM Treaty is very unwise.

I think the majority of the American people believe the biggest threat to our future is the nuclear threat, the threat of a nuclear attack by an ever-increasing number of countries who acquire nuclear weapons.

We know what works. Arms control works, negotiation works, destroying another superpower's bombers through negotiation by sawing off the wings, dismantling submarines that carry nuclear weapons: we know that works. It is far better to do that than to engage in the horror of a nuclear war from which this world will not, in my judgment, survive.

Think for a moment about the devastation visited upon Nagasaki and Hiroshima and go back to what I discussed earlier—the reduction in 6,000 nuclear warheads that has been negotiated and accomplished. That is just the first step, a big step, but just the first step. It represents the reduction in nuclear warheads equivalent to 175,000 bombs the size of the bomb that was dropped on Hiroshima.

The reason I come to the floor at the end of the day is simply to say we ought not take any pride as a country in seeing an article in the press of the United States suggesting somehow we have lost our will to lead on this issue. We can come to the floor and debate 100 things in 100 days. Some of them are big; some of them are small. None are more important, in my judgment, than addressing the issue of the spread of nuclear weapons. Just because we have people now serving in Congress who have an unending appetite to keep building new weapons, an unending appetite to spend more money on new weapons, does not mean those who believe in arms control and believe real progress in arms control will make this a safer world in which to live, should step aside and say: Yes, you win; go build your weapons.

We ought not do that, but we ought to wage the fight for a safer world by having this country exhibit the leadership it needs to exhibit, that it should responsibly exhibit, for the safety of all the people who live in this world.

I will have more to say about this subject at another time. But on the eve of the meeting of the NPT Review Conference in New York, I wanted to talk about these issues. I want to say that some in Congress believe very strongly and feel very deeply that the future of our children and grandchildren and the future of this country rests on those who believe in arms control prevailing in this Senate, despite the recent events, despite the debate we have heard in the last couple of years. This issue is not over. Those of us who believe as I do are not going to go away. We hope this country will assume some sensible mantle of leadership in this important area.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak in morning business for 7 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE NUCLEAR WASTE BILL

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. President, I understand at this time the President is considering vetoing the nuclear waste bill that passed here by a substantial majority. That is very troubling to me. It is time for us to dispose of nuclear waste. We have the capability. The citizens of America, through their electric bills, have paid billions of dollars to build this waste disposal area out in the Nevada desert to place this nuclear waste—which is not explosive. It is simply radioactive and it is placed in the right kind of containers and will be placed in the ground of the desert of Nevada where we exploded 1,000 bombs on top of the ground in developing our nuclear bombing capability. But every nuclear electric-generating plant in America produces some waste. That waste is being stored on site. We agreed some years ago to create this fund and to store this waste. Now, every time we come to this Senate, every time this debate comes up for a vote, a majority votes for it and the President ends up vetoing it and we fall just short of the number of votes to override that veto.

Through an unusual number of circumstances, I have become somewhat familiar with the concerns involving energy and nuclear power in America. I formed a very clear opinion of what we have to do if we are going to meet the demands for power and the demand to clean up the atmosphere. The Kyoto treaty, which the President signed and the Vice President supported, the executive branch made an amazing agreement that we would reduce our greenhouse gas emissions by 7 percent from 1990 levels by 2012 or 2010—the exact year escapes me.

Since that time, our demand for energy has increased. Since 1990, our emissions of greenhouse gases have increased by 8 percent. By the year 2012, if we were to comply with the agreement the President tried to commit us to, we would have to reduce, from this day, 15 percent of our greenhouse gas emissions when we know our demands for energy are going to increase between now and 2010. This is a box we cannot get out of; not under present plans.

There was a marvelous 2-hour show on Sunday night on public television's ''Frontline'' on greenhouse gases and the potential of global warming. They went over all the issues at that time. I think it was tilted slightly more than the science indicates that we are in a period of global warming, but it does appear we may be. We need to be thinking about that. But the scientists and experts I have talked with say we cannot meet those goals without nuclear power.

Mr. President, 20 percent of the electricity in this country is produced by nuclear power, but we have not approved a new plant since the 1970s. France has over 60 percent—soon to be 80 percent—of its power generated by nuclear power. Japan also has a large percentage generated by it. In the United States, we have never lost a life as a result of nuclear power. Nuclear power produces, as you know, no pollution for the atmosphere—zero. Huge amounts—20 percent—of our electric power is produced by nuclear power with no emissions out there.

We have a crisis in our energy policy with regard to fuel oil and our domestic production since 1992, when this administration took office. The reason I am talking about that is I believe there is a no-growth, antienergy policy that is made a part of our American policy under the Clinton-Gore administration. They do not believe in production of greater amounts of energy. We have reduced our domestic production of oil by 17 percent since 1992. Yet our demand for oil and gasoline has increased 14 percent. That is a shocking figure. That is why we are so much more dependent on the Middle East, OPEC, for oil and gas. That is why they are able to demand higher prices. Maybe the gas companies added a few cents on a gallon, but almost all of that was a direct result of their demand for oil from the Middle East and Venezuela and the OPEC nations, and we virtually pay double for it.

What that means is if your gasoline has gone up from $1 to $1.45 at the gas pump, that extra 45 cents is going outside of America to one of these OPEC nations. It is a drain on the wealth of this country, and I submit it does suggest it could threaten the economic prosperity we are enjoying today.

How can we meet our environmental goals? How can we do that without thinking broadly about what is occurring? We heard recently the Vice President saying, with regard to nuclear power, that he does not support an increased reliance on nuclear power for electricity generation. He does not support an increased reliance on nuclear power for electricity generation, but he would keep open the option of relicensing existing nuclear plants. I think that is a stunning statement. That is a no-growth policy. We are going to limit greenhouse emissions but we are not going to allow any increase in nuclear power.

Another one of his stunning proposals is to not drill any further for natural gas in the deep Gulf of Mexico. There are great reserves of natural gas there. Natural gas, even if it breaks out of our pipeline, does not pollute as does oil. It is not sticky. It evaporates. It is not a real dangerous pollutant. And when it burns, it is the most efficient burning of all fossil fuels and produces the least amount of pollution. If we move to a cleaner energy source, natural gas is it. But the Vice President, who opposes nuclear power, now is opposing drilling for natural gas in the Gulf of Mexico. That he explicitly stated during his campaign in New Hampshire. In fact, he said he would consider rolling back the leases that have already been issued. So this is a dangerous time for us.

I hope we are not moving to make unwise decisions that would, in effect, result in the drying up of our supply of energy and raising the price of energy for every American and having that money go overseas to foreign nations. We need to produce more nuclear power. I will be talking more about that in the future.

My plea is to the President: Do not veto this bill. Let's keep America as a strong nuclear-powered country.
