''(5) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—An implementation grant under this subsection shall be made on the condition that non-Federal sources provide the remainder of the costs of implementing the management mechanisms during the fiscal year.

''(6) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Administrative costs shall not exceed 10 percent of the annual grant award.

''(7) REPORTING.—On or before October 1 of each fiscal year, the Administrator shall make available to the public a document that lists and describes, in the greatest practicable degree of detail—

''(A) all projects and activities funded for the fiscal year;

''(B) the goals and objectives of projects funded for the previous fiscal year; and

''(C) the net benefits of projects funded for previous fiscal years.

''(f) FEDERAL FACILITIES AND BUDGET COORDINATION.—

''(1) SUBWATERSHED PLANNING AND RESTORATION.—A Federal agency that owns or operates a facility (as defined by the Administrator) within the Chesapeake Bay watershed shall participate in regional and subwatershed planning and restoration programs.

''(2) COMPLIANCE WITH AGREEMENT.—The head of each Federal agency that owns or occupies real property in the Chesapeake Bay watershed shall ensure that the property, and actions taken by the agency with respect to the property, comply with the Chesapeake Bay Agreement, the Federal Agencies Chesapeake Ecosystem Unified Plan, and any subsequent agreements and plans.

''(3) BUDGET COORDINATION.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—As part of the annual budget submission of each Federal agency with projects or grants related to restoration, planning, monitoring, or scientific investigation of the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem, the head of the agency shall submit to the President a report that describes plans for the expenditure of the funds under this section.

''(B) DISCLOSURE TO THE COUNCIL.—The head of each agency referred to in subparagraph (A) shall disclose the report under that subparagraph with the Chesapeake Executive Council as appropriate.

''(g) CHESAPEAKE BAY PROGRAM.—

''(1) MANAGEMENT STRATEGIES.—The Administrator, in coordination with other members of the Chesapeake Executive Council, shall ensure that management plans are developed and implementation is begun by signatories to the Chesapeake Bay Agreement to achieve—

''(A) the nutrient goals of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement for the quantity of nitrogen and phosphorus entering the Chesapeake Bay and its watershed;

''(B) the water quality requirements necessary to restore living resources in the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem;

''(C) the Chesapeake Bay Basinwide Toxins Reduction and Prevention Strategy goal of reducing or eliminating the input of chemical contaminants from all controllable sources to levels that result in no toxic or bioaccumulative impact on the living resources of the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem or on human health;

''(D) habitat restoration, protection, creation, and enhancement goals established by Chesapeake Bay Agreement signatories for wetlands, riparian forests, and other types of habitat associated with the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem; and

''(E) the restoration, protection, creation, and enhancement goals established by the Chesapeake Bay Agreement signatories for living resources associated with the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem.

''(2) SMALL WATERSHED GRANTS PROGRAM.—The Administrator, in cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council, shall—

''(A) establish a small watershed grants program as part of the Chesapeake Bay Program; and

''(B) offer technical assistance and assistance grants under subsection (d) to local governments and nonprofit organizations and individuals in the Chesapeake Bay region to implement—

''(i) cooperative tributary basin strategies that address the water quality and living resource needs in the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem; and

''(ii) locally based protection and restoration programs or projects within a watershed that complement the tributary basin strategies, including the creation, restoration, protection, or enhancement of habitat associated with the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem.

''(h) STUDY OF CHESAPEAKE BAY PROGRAM.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than April 22, 2000, and every 5 years thereafter, the Administrator, in coordination with the Chesapeake Executive Council, shall complete a study and submit to Congress a comprehensive report on the results of the study.

''(2) REQUIREMENTS.—The study and report shall—

''(A) assess the state of the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem;

''(B) compare the current state of the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem with its state in 1975, 1985, and 1995;

''(C) assess the effectiveness of management strategies being implemented on the date of enactment of this section and the extent to which the priority needs are being met;

''(D) make recommendations for the improved management of the Chesapeake Bay Program either by strengthening strategies being implemented on the date of enactment of this section or by adopting new strategies; and

''(E) be presented in such a format as to be readily transferable to and usable by other watershed restoration programs.

''(i) SPECIAL STUDY OF LIVING RESOURCE RESPONSE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Administrator shall commence a 5-year special study with full participation of the scientific community of the Chesapeake Bay to establish and expand understanding of the response of the living resources of the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem to improvements in water quality that have resulted from investments made through the Chesapeake Bay Program.

''(2) REQUIREMENTS.—The study shall—

''(A) determine the current status and trends of living resources, including grasses, benthos, phytoplankton, zooplankton, fish, and shellfish;

''(B) establish to the extent practicable the rates of recovery of the living resources in response to improved water quality condition;

''(C) evaluate and assess interactions of species, with particular attention to the impact of changes within and among trophic levels; and

''(D) recommend management actions to optimize the return of a healthy and balanced ecosystem in response to improvements in the quality and character of the waters of the Chesapeake Bay.

''(j) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $30,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2000 through 2005.''.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered as read.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may postpone a request for a recorded vote on any amendment, and may reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the time for voting on any postponed question that immediately follows another vote, provided that the time for the voting on the first question shall be a minimum of 15 minutes.

Are there any amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. . SENSE OF CONGRESS; REQUIREMENT REGARDING NOTICE

(a) PURCHASE OF AMERICAN-MADE EQUIPMENT AND PRODUCTS.—In the case of any equipment or products that may be authorized to be purchased with financial assistance provided under section 117 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act. It is the sense of the Congress that entities receiving such assistance should, in expending the assistance, purchase only American-made equipment and products.

(b) NOTICE TO RECIPIENTS OF ASSISTANCE.—In providing financial assistance under such section, the head of each Federal agency shall provide to each recipient of the assistance a notice describing the statement made in subsection (a) by the Congress.

(c) NOTICE OF REPORT.—Any entity which receives funds under such section shall report any expenditures on foreign-made items to the Congress within 180 days of the expenditure.

Mr. TRAFICANT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is the same as the amendment offered on the last bill.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I understand this is the new and improved version of the amendment which we have previously accepted. We are pleased to accept this, as well.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, we have reviewed the gentleman's amendment. It is in conformity with the rules of the House, and it is a sense of Congress buy American amendment. We are happy to support Mr. Buy America.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I urge an aye vote on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Are there further amendments to the bill.

If there are no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. CRANE) having assumed the chair, Mr. GUTKNECHT, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3039) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to assist in the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 470, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 2328 and H.R. 3039.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will now put each question on which further proceedings were postponed in the following order: Passage of H.R. 2328, by the yeas and nays; passage of H.R. 3039, by the yeas and nays; and a motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2884.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first such vote in this series.

THE CLEAN LAKES PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of the passage of the bill, H.R. 2328, on which further proceedings were postponed.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 420, nays 5, not voting 9, as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon, I was unavoidably detained by a Hawaii Congressional delegation meeting with the Secretary of Interior, and I consequently was unable to vote on three recorded votes. Had I been present, I would have voted as follows: Rollcall 120, to pass H.R. 2328, to reauthorize the Clean Lakes Program—"yes"; rollcall 121, to pass H.R. 3039, Chesapeake Bay water restoration—"yes"; rollcall 122, to pass H.R. 2884, to extend the Strategic Petroleum Reserve program—"yes."

PROVIDING FOR ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE ON THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 2000 OR FRIDAY APRIL 14, 2000 UNTIL TUESDAY, MAY 2, 2000; AND PROVIDING FOR RECESS OR ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE ON THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 2000 OR FRIDAY, APRIL 14, 2000 UNTIL TUESDAY, APRIL 25, 2000

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 330) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 303

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on the legislative day of Thursday, April 13, 2000, or Friday, April 14, 2000, on a motion offered pursuant to this concurrent resolution by its Majority Leader or his designee, it stand adjourned until 12:30 p.m. on Tuesday, May 2, 2000, for morning-hour debate, or until noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first; and that when the Senate recesses or adjourns at the close of business on Thursday, April 13, 2000, or Friday, April 14, 2000, on a motion offered pursuant to this concurrent resolution by its Majority Leader or his designee, it stand recessed or adjourned until noon on Tuesday, April 25, 2000, or such time on that day as may be specified by its Majority Leader or his designee in the motion to recess or adjourn, or until noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first.

SEC. 2. The Speaker of the House and the Majority Leader of the Senate, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the House and the Majority Leader of the Senate, shall notify the Members of the House and the Senate, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3439, RADIO BROADCASTING PRESERVATION ACT OF 2000

Mr. LINDER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 106–575) on the resolution (H. Res. 472) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3439) to prohibit the Federal Communications Commission from establishing rules authorizing the operation of new, low power FM radio stations, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4199, DATE CERTAIN TAX CODE REPLACEMENT ACT

Mr. LINDER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 106–576) on the resolution (H. Res. 473) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4199) to terminate the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1824

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1824.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

ST. PETER'S MASS HOSTED BY REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, today's mass at St. Peter's will be hosted by the Republican Conference. The homily will be given by the House Chaplain and he will speak in support of the H.R. 4199, to abolish the Tax Code by the year 2004. Does that sound ridiculous to my colleagues? It sure does to me as a Catholic Member of this House.

But let me review for my colleagues what transpired yesterday. There was a mass at St. Peter's hosted by the Republican National Committee to honor and to introduce the new chaplain of the House followed by a reception in the church basement.

We were told that all Members were invited to mass. But in reality, only 26 Republicans were given the invitation.

Mr. Speaker, masses have been conducted in this world by Catholic clergy for centuries; and never, never in my recollection have they been hosted by a political party.

I think it is wrong. I think it is misdirected. And I am told at the mass itself speaking to the congregation was the chairman of the Republican National Committee, Mr. Nicholson, and a former Member of this House who headed up the campaign committee.

I think the Republicans have gone too far this time. For those of my colleagues who do not know the background, the chaplain of the House announced he was retiring. The Speaker appointed a bipartisan Search Committee made up of nine Republicans and nine Democrats to find a new chaplain. They interviewed 37 clergymen, and they came up with the top choice of a Catholic priest.

But that was not to be. The Republicans would not stand still for a Catholic, the first in the history of this country to be chaplain of this House. So they bypassed him for the man who came in number three. Then a big uproar occurred.

Catholics throughout the country were just totally up in arms, and they knew they were going to lose the Catholic vote this November. So what do they do? They bring a resolution to the floor praising the Catholic schools.

I am a product of that Catholic education. I do not need my Republican colleagues telling me how good the education is. They kept slipping with the Catholics. Then they found Cardinal O'Connor in New York. So one day we had a resolution to give him a gold medal and that still did not help the slippage with the Catholic vote.

So then the Speaker swallowed his pride and he himself appointed a Catholic priest from Chicago who was not interviewed by the committee but he was a Catholic, and he thought that would stop the hemorrhage of the loss of the Catholic vote; and everything was quiet for a couple weeks and we started to heal. And then, out of the blue, comes a mass at St. Peter's sponsored by the Republican National Committee.

Mr. Speaker, today the only word that my colleagues could come up with was this is ''disgusting.'' The Catholic celebration of mass does not need promotion from my colleagues, guys. We go there voluntarily. If it was the Democratic party pulling this nonsense, I would be on this floor tonight.

When is this going to stop? Are they going to ridicule my entire religion? Have they bought into the notion from Bob Jones University that we are a cult, that the Pope is anit-Christ?

In the press reports today on this debacle, we are told by a spokesman for the Republican National Committee that he is sorry that some Democrats were finding fault with this event, with this ''event.''

The mastermind who they dusted off, a former ambassador to the Vatican, stated in this article, I have been to events sponsored by lots of organizations, including Democrats, and there has never been any problem.

Is this an event? Is this like a college football bowl game where there is a sponsor, the Rose Bowl is brought to us buy Microsoft, today's mass is brought to us by some foundation?

Mr. Speaker, the Republicans in the House have gone over the line. I have asked the Catholic Bishop's Conference to review this matter. I believe that what they have done is turn this Catholic chaplain into a Republican poster-priest.

ANSWERS FROM NATIONAL READING PANEL ON AMERICAN CHILDREN'S READING LEVELS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Ms. NORTHUP) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. NORTHUP. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is an important day for all of our schoolchildren and all of our children across this country.

When I came to Congress 3½ years ago, the rate of children that could not even read at basic level in our schools across this country was 40 percent. Forty percent of all schoolchildren in the fourth grade could not even read at basic levels.

Clearly, as we have poured resources, we have poured time and attention and research into making sure our children all learn to read, we were missing the mark with some our children.

I am sure all of us do not need to be reminded how important it is that children learn to read. They learn to read first in kindergarten and first grade so that they can go on about in fourth grade to other things: science, health, geography, social studies, all other subjects that require good reading skills.

We also know from research that if a child does not learn to read by the beginning of fourth grade, there is a very strong probability that that child will never learn to read at their capacity. Because, in those early years, children are at the stage of brain development where they can learn to read, learn to read quickly, and accurately, learn fluency, and learn to put what they see on the written page into understanding ideas and convert it and learn that information.

That is a time in their lives where they are particularly adept at that; and if they miss that opportunity, they are going to find it very difficult at any age and with any amount of work to learn to read at their capacity.

So it is a serious problem in this country that we confront today as so many of our children miss this time in their lives when they learn to read.

We know that everybody means for children to read, and we believe that all children can learn at a high level. And so, it was important that we ask the question, what are we doing that is not right? What are we missing? The questions that need to be answered are, how do children learn to read? At what age do children go through the stages of learning to read? We need to know at what time we need to intervene when children are not going through those stages and are not learning to read as we hope they will. And what kind of intervention works best?

Three years ago, Congress put into the appropriations bill for the education appropriation and health education a research requirement that the Department of Education and the National Institute of Child Health and Development together look at all research that has been done on how children learn to read to give us a better road map, answer the questions that have so confounded us for so many of our children.

Today, I am thrilled to know that tomorrow the National Reading Panel is going to give us their answers. They are going to tell us what all the research together tells us about how children learn to read. They are going to answer many of the questions that we have, many of the questions that our teachers around this country want so that they can have a better road map as they approach reading in ways that are the most effective.

I am here today to share with the American people and with the Congress the importance that, number one, we have this information; number two, that we make sure that our teachers in our schools around the country get this information and that it is incorporated into our lessons as we go forward in our efforts to make sure that every child learn and learn at a high level; number 3, that we make sure that all future research is done according to standards that will give us the feedback we need to answer additional questions that we have.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that our children are waiting for us to have this answer. They only get to be 6 years old once in their life. They only get to be in that time of their life once where they can learn to read and they can learn to read well. After that, it is a struggle.

And so, for every child that today is in the first grade, for every child that tomorrow and next year will be in the first grade, let us make sure that we listen to what the scientists can tell us. They can give us a good road map on what we are doing right and what we are doing wrong. And may we please not be so closed minded or set in our ways that we cannot change and adjust and incorporate in our schools and in our children's lives this information that we have waited so long for.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) for organizing this special order this evening on the Armenian genocide.

The leadership on this issue of importance to Armenian people has been vital. It is with some sadness that I know this will be the last statement of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PORTER) on the Armenian genocide in this body, and I thank the gentleman for all his fine work.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to take note of the tragic occurrences perpetrated on the Armenian people between 1915 and 1923 by the Ottoman Turkish Empire.

During this relatively brief time frame, over 1½ million Armenians were massacred and over 500,000 were exiled. Unfortunately, the Turkish Government still has not recognized these brutal acts as acts of genocide, nor come to terms with its participation in these horrific events.

I believe that by failing to recognize such barbaric acts, one becomes complicit in them. That is why as a New York State assemblyman, I was proud to support legislation adding lessons on human rights and genocide to the State education curricula. I am also a proud cosponsor of H. Res. 398, the United States Training on and Commemoration of the Armenian Genocide Resolution.

H. Res. 398 calls upon the President to provide for appropriate training and materials to all foreign service officers, officials of the Department of State, and any other executive branch employee involved in responding to issues related to human rights, ethnic cleansing, and genocide by familiarizing themselves with the U.S. record relating to the Armenian Genocide.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this very important resolution.

April 24 is recognized as the anniversary date of the Armenian Genocide. The history of this date stretches back to 1915, when on April 24, 300 Armenian leaders, intellectuals and professionals in Constantinople were rounded up, deported and killed, beginning the period known as the Armenian Genocide.

Prior to the Armenian Genocide, these brave people with the history of well over 3,000 years old were subject to numerous indignities and periodic massacres by the Sultans of the Ottoman Empire. The worst of these massacres occurred in 1895 when as many as 300,000 Armenian civilians were brutally massacred and thousands more were left destitute. Additional massacres were committed in 1909 and 1920. By 1922, Armenians had been eradicated from their homeland.

Yet, despite these events, the Armenian people survived as a people and a culture in both Europe and the United States. My congressional district has a number of Armenians, especially in the Woodside community, and their community activism is extraordinary, to say the least.

Mr. Speaker, I make note of this because of a statement by Adolph Hitler when speaking about the ''final solution,'' when he said who remembers the Armenians. Mr. Speaker, I remember the Armenians and so do many of my colleagues speaking here this evening.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROGAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROGAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join so many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle tonight to rise in support of House Resolution 398 commemorating the Armenian Genocide. House Resolution 398 is a necessary step for our government to take, a recognition of the historical truth of one of history's cruelest acts against a great and good people.

Between 1915 and 1923, over 1 million Armenians whose ancestors had inhabited their homeland since the time of Christ were displaced, deported, tortured and killed at the hands of the Ottoman Empire. Families were slaughtered. Homes were burned. Villages were destroyed and lives were torn apart.

Regrettably in the years since, officials from what is now Turkey have denied this history and failed to recognize the truth, the historical truth of the Armenian Genocide.

Mr. Speaker, as their loved ones were killed, many right before their very eyes, more than 1 million Armenians managed to escape and establish a new life here in the United States. I am honored to have a large portion of the Armenian American community residing in my district in and around Glendale, California.

The Armenian people suffered a horrific tragedy in the first part of the 20th century. Today, our government can work to ensure that the 21st century is a century free both from genocide, and also free from lies.

We must not stray from our work to embrace democracy and build a world that is free from suffering on this immense scale, but that building can never happen as long as we allow one of the worst slaughters in world history to continue to go being unrecognized.

Mr. Speaker, I went through 4 years of college and never once heard about the Armenian Genocide in public schools. We have whole generations of people that have been raised not knowing anything about it because it is not politically correct to teach it in our schools, because we are afraid it might offend an oil-producing Nation with whom we have commercial or military ties.

I just think that that is a wrongheaded approach. It is a disgrace for our Congress. And the purpose of House Resolution 398 is to take a major step toward right and toward morality and recognizing this historical truth.

Today on the eve of the anniversary of the Armenian Genocide, I ask my colleagues to join with our bipartisan group that you have already heard from tonight and will hear from again in support of House Resolution 398 to commemorate the Armenian Genocide.

Having visited the Republic of Armenian and also Nagorno-Karabakh just a few short months ago, I can attest that the Armenian people have triumphed over tragedy and are building a prosperous democracy. It is a nation that we should be proud to lock arms with and stand with in the greater cause of good, and it is for that reason that I urge my colleagues to join us and support this important resolution.

EXCHANGE OF SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to claim the time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Texas?

There was no objection.

JOINT RESOLUTION SUPPORTING DAY OF HONOR 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, first let me certainly acknowledge the eve of the Armenian genocide anniversary and say to my colleagues that all of us should acknowledge such tragic loss of life. But today I rise to introduce a House Joint Resolution, H.J. Res. 98, to designate May 25, 2000, as a national day of honor for minority veterans of World War II.

Seventy-three of my colleagues have already joined me in cosponsoring this resolution. I want to extend my thanks to Senator EDWARD KENNEDY of Massachusetts for joining me by introducing an identical resolution in the United States Senate. I am also very proud that the Day of Honor 2000 Project, a nonprofit organization based in Massachusetts, has helped enlist the support of many Americans to make this resolution possible. In fact, those who are working to propose the World War II veterans memorial here in Washington, D.C. have acknowledged their support for this very special day. Without the support of the Day of Honor Project 2000, this resolution could have never been possible.

The purpose of this joint resolution is to honor and recognize the service of minority veterans in the United States armed forces during World War II. The resolution calls upon communities across the Nation to participate in celebrations to honor minority veterans on May 25, 2000, and throughout the year 2000. Our goal is that the Nation will have an opportunity to pause on May 25, leading up to Memorial Day, to express our gratitude to the veterans of all minority groups who served the Nation so ably. The day will be special because we honor those who fought for the preservation of democracy and our protection of our way of life.

Unfortunately, many minority veterans never obtained the commensurate recognition that they deserve. We honor all veterans. We certainly honor all veterans in World War II, but it is important to designate and to honor those who during those times as they returned did not receive the fullest of honor. When we look back to the darkest days of World War II we remember and revere the acts of courage and personal sacrifice that each of our soldiers gave to their Nation to achieve Allied victory over Nazism and fascism.

In the 1940s, minorities were utilized in the Allied operation just as any other Americans. My father-in-law in fact was part of the Tuskegee Airmen. Yet we have never adequately recognized the accomplishments of minority veterans. During the war, at least 1.2 million African American citizens either served or sacrificed their lives. In addition, more than 300,000 Hispanic Americans, more than 50,000 Asians, more than 20,000 Native Americans, more than 6,000 native Hawaiians and Pacific islanders, and more than 3,000 native Alaskans also served their country or sacrificed their lives in preserving our freedom during World War II.

Despite the invidious discrimination that many minority veterans were subjected to at home, they fought honorably along with all other Americans including other nations. An African American had to answer the call to duty as others, indeed, possibly sacrifice his life; yet he or she enjoyed a separate but equal status back home. This is something that we can readily correct and with this resolution with the number of cosponsors, I believe that we can move toward seeing this honor come to fruition on the floor of the House.

I would ask my colleagues to readily sign on to H.J. Res. 98 to be able to honor these valiant and valuable members of our society for all that they have done. They are American heroes that deserve recognition for their efforts. For this reason the resolution specifically asks President Clinton to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to honor these minority veterans with appropriate programs and activities. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce a House Joint Resolution 98 to designate May 25, 2000, as a national Day of Honor for minority veterans of World War II. 73 of my colleagues have already joined me in cosponsoring this resolution.

I want to extend my thanks to Senator EDWARD KENNEDY of Massachusetts for joining me by introducing an identical resolution in the U.S. Senate.

I am also very proud that The Day of Honor 2000 Project, a non-profit organization based in Massachusetts, has helped enlist the support of many Americans to make this resolution possible. Without the support of The Day of Honor Project 2000, this resolution could have never been possible.

The purpose of this joint resolution is to honor and recognize the service of minority veterans in the U.S. Armed Forces during World War II. The resolution calls upon communities across the nation to participate in celebrations to honor minority veterans on May 25, 2000, and throughout the year 2000. Our goal is that the nation will have an opportunity to pause on May 25th to express our gratitude to the veterans of all minority groups who served the nation so ably.

The day will be special because we honor those who fought for the preservation of democracy and our protection of our way of life. Unfortunately, many minority veterans never obtained the commensurate recognition that they deserve.

When we look back to darkest days of World War II, we remember and revere the acts of courage and personal sacrifice that each of our soldiers gave to their nation to achieve Allied victory over Nazism and fascism. In the 1940s, minorities were utilized in the allied operations just as any other American.

Yet, we have never adequately recognized the accomplishments of minority veterans. During the war, at least 1,200,000 African Americans citizens either served or sacrificed their lives. In addition, more than 300,000 Hispanic Americans, more than 50,000 Asians, more than 20,000 Native Americans, more than 6,000 Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders, and more than 3,000 Native Alaskans also served their country or sacrificed their lives in preserving our freedom during World War II.

Despite the invidious discrimination that most minority veterans were subjected to at home, they fought honorably along with all other Americans, including other nations. An African American had to answer the call to duty, indeed possibly sacrifice his life, yet he or she enjoyed separate but equal status back home.

Too often, when basic issues of equality and respect for their service in the war arose, Jim Crow and racial discrimination replied with a resounding "no." This is a sad but very real chapter of our history.

This all happened, of course, before the emergence of Dr. Martin Luther King, Sr. in America. As a nation, we have long since recognized the unfair treatment of minorities as a travesty of justice. The enactment of fundamental civil rights laws by Congress over the past half-century have remedied the worst of these injustices. And this has given us some hope. But, as we all know, we have yet to give adequate recognition to the service, struggle, and sacrifices of these brave Americans who fought in World War II for our future.

For many of these minority veterans, the memories of World War II never disappear. When we lose a loved one, whether it is a mother, father, sibling, child, or friend, we often sense that we lose a part of ourselves. For each of us, the loss of life—whether expected or not—is not easily surmountable.

Minority veterans had to overcome a great deal after the war. They not only came back to a nation that did not treat them equally, but they were never recognized for the uniqueness of their efforts during the war. Like of many of us, they adapted to changes or were the engines of social change. But they have suffered and sacrificed so much that few of us will ever understand.

Veterans are dying at a rate of more than 1,000 a day. It is especially important, therefore, for Congress and the administration to do their part now to pay tribute to these men and women who served so valiantly in that conflict.

The minority veterans from World War II represent a significant part of what has been called America's Greatest Generation. They are American heroes that deserve recognition for their efforts. For this reason, the resolution specifically asks President Clinton to issue a proclamation "calling upon the people of the United States to honor these minority veterans with appropriate programs and activities."

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this resolution.

The text of the joint resolution is as follows:

H.J. RES. 98

Whereas World War II was a determining event of the 20th century in that it ensured the preservation and continuation of American democracy;

Whereas the United States called upon all its citizens, including the most oppressed of its citizens, to provide service and sacrifice in that war to achieve the Allied victory over Nazism and fascism;

Whereas the United States citizens who served in that war, many of whom gave the ultimate sacrifice of their lives, included more than 1,200,000 African Americans, more than 300,000 Hispanic Americans, more than 50,000 Asian Americans, more than 20,000 Native Americans, more than 6,000 Native Hawaiians and Pacific Islanders, and more than 3,000 Native Alaskans;

Whereas because of invidious discrimination, many of the courageous military activities of these minorities were not reported and honored fully and appropriately until decades after the Allied victory in World War II;

Whereas the motto of the United States, "E Pluribus Unum" (Out of Many, One), promotes our fundamental unity as Americans and acknowledges our diversity as our greatest strength; and

Whereas the Day of Honor 2000 Project has enlisted communities across the United States to participate in celebrations to honor minority veterans of World War II on May 25, 2000, and throughout the year 2000: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Congress—

(1) commends the African American, Hispanic American, Asian American, Native American, Native Hawaiian and Pacific Islander, Native Alaskan, and other minority veterans of the United States Armed Forces who served during World War II;

(2) especially honors those minority veterans who gave their lives in service to the United States during that war;

(3) supports the goals and ideas of the Day of Honor 2000 in celebration and recognition of the extraordinary service of all minority veterans in the United States Armed Forces during World War II; and

(4) authorizes and requests that the President issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to honor these minority veterans with appropriate programs and activities.

REQUEST TO CLAIM SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to claim my special order time now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE COMMEMORATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KNOLLENBERG) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to talk about the Armenian genocide commemoration. I am going to talk a little bit about Armenia. There are many positive things happening in Armenia today that give us confidence that progress is being made. Armenia has made remarkable, stable strides toward becoming a democratic free market economy even in the face of the setbacks, including the tragic assassinations of Armenian Prime Minister Vazgen Sarksyan and other Parliament members last October. I had gotten to know Mr. Sarksyan before this tragedy and found him to be a man of immense ideas.

It was a tragedy that frankly we all look at with horror. It is behind us now. The government is strong. They have been able to go on in spite of this tragedy, and they have strengthened the situation to a point where it will prevent any future happening of this kind.

Tonight, I would like to talk not so much about what is going on in Armenia and how it is growing but, rather, to talk about a dark period in the remembrance of the genocide that took place back in 1915. When most people hear the word genocide, they immediately think of Hitler and his persecution of the Jews during World War II.

Many individuals are unaware that the first genocide of the 20th century occurred during World War I and was perpetrated by the Ottoman Empire against the Armenian people. Concern that the Armenian people would move to establish their own government, the Ottoman Empire embarked on a reign of terror that resulted in the massacre of over a million and a half Armenians. This atrocious crime, as I mentioned, began on April 15, 1915, when the Ottoman Empire arrested, exiled, and eventually killed hundreds of Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders.

Once they had eliminated the Armenian people's leadership, they turned their attention to the Armenians serving in the Ottoman Army. These soldiers were disarmed and placed in labor camps where they were either starved or executed. The Armenian people, lacking political leadership and deprived of young, able-bodied men who could fight against the Ottoman onslaught were then deported from every region of Turkish Armenia. The images of human suffering from the Armenian genocide are graphic and as haunting as the pictures of the Holocaust.

Why then, it must be asked, are so many people unaware of the Armenian genocide? I believe the answer is found in the international community's response to this disturbing event. At the end of World War I, those responsible for ordering and implementing the Armenian genocide were never brought to justice. And the world casually forgot about the pain and suffering of the Armenian people. This proved to be a grave mistake. In a speech before his invasion of Poland in 1939, Hitler justified his brutal tactics with the infamous statement, "Who today remembers the extermination of the Armenians?"

Six years later, 6 million Jews had been exterminated by the Nazis. Never has the phrase "those who forget the past will be destined to repeat it" been more applicable. If the international community had spoken out against this merciless slaughtering of the Armenian people instead of ignoring it, the horrors of the Holocaust might never have taken place.

As we commemorate the 85th anniversary of the Armenian genocide, I believe it is time to give this event its rightful place in history. This afternoon and this evening, let us pay homage to those who fell victim to the Ottoman oppressors and tell the story of the forgotten genocide. For the sake of the Armenian heritage, it is a story that must be heard.

SPECIAL TRIBUTE TO CENTRALIA COLLEGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to an outstanding institution of higher education located in Washington's Third Congressional District.

This month we celebrate the 75th anniversary of the founding of Centralia College in Centralia, Washington. Throughout its proud history as the oldest continuously operating community college in the State of Washington, Centralia College has consistently demonstrated a deep commitment to learning. I am proud of Centralia's novel programming and flexible learning options. These features reveal that at Centralia, scholarship is indeed a priority.

In addition to its 44 associate degree and 14 certificate programs, Centralia offers several invaluable courses of study for the Southwest Washington community. The continuing Education Department provides community classes and business training classes, helping people learn new skills at any age. The workforce training and worker retraining courses teach essential job skills. These skills help the unemployed find new work and they help those facing the possibility of layoffs enhance their existing skills. Centralia also offers farm study and ranch and record keeping study to help our agricultural leaders of today and tomorrow.

One of Centralia's most innovative programs targets gifted high school students. Participation in their ''Running Start'' program allows 11th and 12th grade students to get the opportunity to take college level classes for both high school and college credit. Not only does this program provide challenges to students to achieve, but it allows them to do so free of charge. Through school district and State payment plans, Centralia ensures that all students get an equal chance to participate.

In addition to providing financial support, Centralia offers other areas to expand access to higher education. Their comprehensive distance learning campaign offers students all of the benefits of attending college, even if they cannot physically attend. From correspondence courses to videotape lectures or telecourses, to on-line classes, to interactive video programs, Centralia will find a way to teach eager students, regardless of their location.

For the 3,000 students enrolled, Centralia's serious educational commitment translates into results. Recently, for example, 9 of the 11 Centralia graduates who interviewed at the Intel company earned positions on the staff. Recruiters of such technology firms regularly visit Centralia, saying they always look forward to seeing the high quality of candidates who come from that college. They go on to say that the students' capability is a reflection of both a high quality college and a high quality electronics department. As we move into the 21st Century, the superiority of Centralia's technology education can only serve to benefit both students and employers.

Another benefit to students emphasized by the Centralia administration, faculty, and staff is diversity. Recognizing the need for students to interact with people of different cultures and backgrounds, Centralia strives to incorporate diversity into its student body and programs wherever possible. The college knows that exposing its students to diverse ideas and people will enhance their educational experience. In today's increasingly close-knit and diverse world, bringing together people from different backgrounds is a necessity, not a luxury.

Mr. Speaker, education is a necessity for all Americans. It prepares young people to face the challenge of the future, and makes the lives of older Americans more fulfilling. For the past 75 years, Centralia College has prepared its students to be the leaders of tomorrow, and, for that, we all owe Centralia College our gratitude and our congratulations.

I urge my colleagues in the 106th Congress to join me today in paying special tribute to this outstanding college, and may its next 75 years of service be every bit as successful as the first.

REMEMBERING THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE OF 1915–1923

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with those who are taking a few minutes today to remember and pay tribute to those Armenians who lost their lives and national identity during one of history's most tragic examples of persecution and intolerance, the Armenian genocide of 1915 to 1923.

Many Armenians in America, particularly in Indiana, are the children or grandchildren of survivors. In Fort Wayne, we do not have very many Armenians, to be precise, one, sometimes two. But my friend Zohrab Tazian is a classic example of many of the Armenians in America whose family was chased out of Turkey and down into Lebanon, who moved around, having, as a child, to live in a tent, because he saw his family members slaughtered and chased from their homeland; coming over to America where they had a chance to succeed with an American dream, as Armenians actually throughout world history who have been persecuted because of their successes as merchants, and often their very success has led to persecution in many lands that they have been over time. He came to America to the Indiana Institute of Technology, like many other foreign students who came in, learned engineering, and became a very successful engineer in our hometown.

I first saw a slide presentation on the facts of this terrible genocide about 20 years ago when I was a young businessman in Fort Wayne belonging to the Rotary Club. Mr. Zohrab Tazian made a presentation that will forever be burned into my mind about the terrible persecution; not just discrimination and not just random persecution, but the attempt to exterminate an entire people.

The facts, as we have heard a number of times, but I think it is important that we have these burned into our head, on April 24, that is the particular day we commemorate the tragedy, because it marks the beginning of the persecution and ethnic cleansing by the Ottoman Turks.

On April 24, 1915, Armenian political, intellectual, and religious were arrested, forcibly moved from their homeland and killed. The brutality continued against the Armenian people as families were uprooted from their homes and marched to concentration camps in the desert where they would eventually starve to death.

By 1923, the religious and ideological persecution by the Ottoman Turks resulted in the murder of 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children and the displacement of an additional 500,000 Armenians. In our lifetime, we have witnessed the brutality and savagery of genocide by despotic regimes seeking to deny people of human rights and religious freedoms. That is Stalin against the Russians, Hitler against the Jews, Mao Tse-tung against the Chinese, Pol Pot against the Cambodians, and Mobutu against the Rwandans.

But genocide has devastating consequences on society as a whole because of the problems created by uprooting entire populations. The survivors become the ones who carry the memory of suffering and the realization that their loved ones are gone. They are the ones who no longer have a home and may feel ideological and spiritual abandonment.

Part of the healing process for Armenian survivors and families of survivors involves the acknowledgment of the atrocity and the admission of wrongdoing by those doing the persecution. It is only through acknowledgment and forgiveness that it is possible to move past the history of the genocide and other sins.

Unfortunately, those responsible for ordering the systematic removal of the Armenians were never brought to justice and the Armenian genocide became a dark moment in history, as we heard earlier, quoted by Hitler and others, who then proceeded to use it as an example to commit genocide on others, to be slowly forgotten by those in America and the international community.

It is important that we remember this tragic event and show strong leadership by denouncing the persecution of people due to their differences in political and religious ideology. By establishing a continuing discourse, we are acknowledging the tragedies of the past and remembering those awful moments in history so they will not be repeated.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank all of my colleagues, those Members who have supported this resolution, as well as all the Armenian organizations in this country and throughout the world who have worked so hard to establish an understanding for their remembrance.

REMEMBERING THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, I join my other colleagues today to discuss one of the greatest unrecognized tragedies of the 20th Century, you have heard it by the previous speakers, that is the Armenian genocide.

April 24th marks the 85th anniversary of the start of the first genocide of the 1900's. Before the Holocaust there was the Armenian genocide. It took place between 1915 and 1923 in the Ottoman Empire.

In April of 1915, a weak Ottoman Empire ordered mass deportations of Armenians. This was carried out swiftly and systematically on official orders from the government of the Ottoman Empire. Forced marches resulted in the deaths of over 1 million Armenians. Armenian men of military age were rounded up, marched for several miles and shot dead throughout eastern Anatolia. Women, children, and the elderly, many subjected to rape, were forced to leave their homeland and move to relocation centers in the Syrian desert. During these long marches, no food, water, or shelter was provided. Many died of disease or exhaustion, and survivors were subjected to forcible conversion to Islam.

The annihilation of such a large portion of Armenians in the Ottoman Empire led to the loss of many lives and the dream of an Armenian homeland. Surviving Armenians fled to the then Soviet Union, the United States, and other parts of the world in pursuit of their basic freedoms. Many Armenians live and work in my congressional district in San Diego. Their history and story need to be shared and embraced.

Today, our NATO ally, Turkey, has repeatedly denied the execution of over 1 million Armenians. The denial of this atrocity has proved beneficial for Turkey's foreign policy. The murder of Armenians, a massacre based on cultural and religious beliefs, goes on officially unnoticed, and the United States maintains a favorable relationship and strategic partnership with Turkey.

Mr. Speaker, because of these reasons, I have joined my colleagues in cosponsoring House Resolution 398, the United States Training on and Commemoration of the Armenian Genocide Resolution. This resolution provides training and educational materials to all Foreign Service and State Department officials concerning the Armenian genocide.

It is time for our country to stand up and recognize this tragic event. When Hitler conceived of the idea to exterminate the Jewish population, he noted the lack of consequences by saying, ''Who, after all, speaks today of the annihilation of the Armenians?''

Mr. Speaker, today I and my colleagues speak of the annihilation of the Armenians, and we ask our other colleagues to join in this cause. The story of the Armenian genocide, the forgotten genocide, deserves to be told and understood. We owe it to the Armenians. We owe it to mankind.

COMMEMORATING THE 85TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. BERMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 85th anniversary of the start of the Armenian genocide, one of the most horrific episodes of human history.

In early 1915, Britain and Russia launched major offensives intended to knock the Ottoman Empire out of the first World War. In the east, Russian forces inflicted massive losses on the Ottomans, who reacted by lashing out at the Armenians, whom they accused of undermining the Empire.

On April 24, 1915, the Turkish government began to arrest Armenian community and political leaders suspected of harboring nationalist sentiments. Most of those arrested were executed without ever being charged with crimes.

The government then moved to deport most Armenians from eastern Anatolia, ordering that they resettle in what is now Syria. Many deportees never reached that destination. The U.S. Ambassador in Constantinople at the time, Henry Morgenthau, wrote "When the Turkish authorities gave the orders for these deportations, they were merely giving the death warrant to a whole race."

From 1915 to 1918, more than a million Armenians died of starvation or disease on long marches, or were massacred outright by Turkish forces. From 1918 to 1923, Armenians continued to suffer at the hands of the Turkish military, which eventually removed all remaining Armenians from Turkey.

We mark this anniversary each year because this horrible tragedy for the Armenian people was a tragedy for all humanity. We must remember, speak out and teach future generations about the horrors of genocide and the oppression and terrible suffering endured by the Armenian people.

Sadly, genocide is not yet a vestige of the past. In recent years we have witnessed the ''killing fields'' of Cambodia, mass ethnic killings in Bosnia and Rwanda, and "ethnic cleansing" in Kosovo. We must renew our commitment to remain vigilant and prevent such assaults on humanity from occurring ever again.

Even as we remember the tragedy and honor the dead, we also honor the living. Out of the ashes of their history, Armenians all over the world have clung to their identity and prospered in new communities. Hundreds of thousands of Armenians live in California, where they form a strong and vibrant community. The strength they have displayed in overcoming tragedy to flourish in this country is an example for all of us.

Surrounded by countries hostile to them, to this day the Armenian struggle continues. But now with an independent Armenian state, the United States has the opportunity to contribute to a true memorial to the past by strengthening Armenia's emerging democracy. We must do all we can through aid and trade to support Armenia's efforts to construct an open political and economic system.

Adolf Hitler, the architect of the Nazi Holocaust, once remarked "Who remembers the Armenians?" The answer is, we do. And we will continue to remember the victims of the 1915–23 genocide because, in the words of the philosopher George Santayana, ''Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it."

SAY NO TO COMMERCIAL WHALING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. METCALF) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, 2 days ago a mighty 35-foot long gray whale washed up on the beach in front of my home on Whidbey Island in Washington State. As a vociferous opponent of killing whales or the expansion of whaling worldwide, and as a lifelong advocate for the environmental health of Puget Sound, this recent event has been the cause of some amount of discussion and publicity in the region surrounding my district. Out of the 1,000 miles of coastline in Washington State, it was certainly an interesting coincidence that the body lodged right on the beach in front of my house.

The death of this gray whale should call our attention to those who would like to reverse the will expressed in Congress and by an overwhelming majority of the American people who oppose allowing the hunting of whales, particularly for commercial purposes.

As I have been predicting from the well of this House and across America for several years, the push for resumption of worldwide commercial whaling is on in earnest. And it is not about heritage, it is all about money. We have heard that a gray whale can be sold in Japan for $1 million.

Those who want to end the ban on commercial whaling have been using the pretext of restoring whaling rights to indigenous people to expand the scope of whaling worldwide. But if we allow people to use the excuse of historic whale hunting for resumption of whale hunting worldwide, you have got to remember many nations, most nations with coastlines, hunted whales. Japan and Norway definitely would have, as good as anybody, an historic whale hunting opportunity. Japan and Norway are the most notorious now for going ahead and hunting whales.

Newsweek Magazine reported, April 17, information I have already given this body that Japan has been quietly packing the International Whaling Commission with small nations willing to do their bidding, willing to vote for the resumption of commercial whaling.

Mr. Speaker, we are dangerously close to a renewal of the barbaric practice of commercial whaling. To millions of Americans, including myself, this is totally unacceptable. When the Clinton-Gore administration last year financed the Makah tribal whale hunt and colluded with the pro-whaling nations of the International Whaling Commission, our Nation's government lost its moral authority to lead the fight against killing whales for profit.

This was truly a tragedy. Whales were hunted almost to extinction in the late 1800s.

Mr. Speaker, we must not allow the clock to be turned back to past days of barbarism. Republicans and Democrats in this body must stand with the American people and stop this conspiracy against these magnificent creatures. We must not return to commercial whaling.

THE 85TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in commemoration of the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide, a horrible period in our history that took the lives of 1.5 million Armenians and led to the exile of the Armenian nation from its historic homeland.

My colleagues and I join with the Armenian-American community, and with Armenians throughout the world, to remember one of the darkest periods in the history of humankind. We owe this commemoration to those who perished because of the senseless hatred of others, and we need this commemoration because it is the only way to prevent such events in the future.

We have already learned the lessons of forgetting. The Armenian Genocide, which began 15 years after the start of the twentieth century, was the first act of genocide this century, but it was far from the last. The indifference of the world to the slaughter of 1.5 Armenians laid the foundation for other acts of genocide, including the Holocaust, Stalin's purges, and, most recently, ethnic cleansing in Kosovo.

The lessons of the destruction that results when hatred is left unchecked have been too slowly learned. The world's indifference to the Armenian Genocide proved to Adolf Hitler that his plans to annihilate the Jewish people would encounter little opposition and would spur no global outcry. The post-Holocaust directive "zachor," remember—lest history repeat itself, came too late for 1.5 million Armenians and 6 million Jews. It came too late for millions of victims around the world.

Today we recall the Armenian Genocide and we mourn its victims. But we also renew our pledge to the Armenian nation to do everything we can to prevent further aggression, and we renew our commitment to ensuring that Armenians throughout the world can live free of threats to their existence and prosperity.

Unfortunately, we still have to work toward this simple goal. Azerbaijan continues to blockade Armenia and Nagorno-Karabagh, denying the Armenian people the food, medicine, and other humanitarian assistance they need to lead secure, prosperous lives. And as long as this immoral behavior continues, I pledge to join my colleagues in continuing to send the message to Azerbaijan that harming civilians is an unacceptable means for resolving disputes.

Mr. Speaker, after the Genocide, the Armenian people wiped away their tears and cried out, "Let us always remember the atrocities that have taken the lives of our parents and our children and our neighbors."

As the Armenian-American author William Saroyan wrote, "Go ahead, destroy this race . . . Send them from their homes into the desert . . . Burn their homes and churches. Then see if they will not laugh again, see if they will not sing and pray again. For, when two of them meet anywhere in the world, see if they will not create a New Armenia."

I rise today to remember those cries, and to pay tribute to the resilience of the Armenian people, who have contributed so much to our world. Those who have perished deserve our commemoration, and they also deserve our pledge to ensure that such an horrific chapter in history is never repeated again.

THE NATIONAL MUSEUM OF THE AMERICAN INDIAN COMMEMORATIVE COIN ACT OF 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LUCAS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, my home State of Oklahoma has a strong heritage in our Nation's Native American history and culture. In fact, the name ''Oklahoma'' means ''Land of the Red People'' in the Choctaw language. So nowhere else in this country is there more appreciation than in Oklahoma that a museum dedicated to preserving this legacy is being constructed in Washington, D.C.

The National Museum of the American Indian was established as an act of Congress in 1989 to serve as a permanent repository of Native American culture. The groundbreaking took place in September of 1999, and it is scheduled to open in the summer of 2002.

Because of the historic significance and importance of this museum to the people of Oklahoma, I am introducing a bill today that will commemorate its opening. The National Museum of the American Indian Commemorative Coin Act of 2000 will call for the minting of a special $1 silver coin intended to raise funds for the museum and celebrate its completion.

As part of the highly respected Smithsonian institution, which is now the world's largest museum complex, the National Museum of the American Indian will collect, preserve, and exhibit Native American objects of artistic, historical, literary, anthropological, and scientific interest. Also important is that it will provide for Native American research and study programs.

The coin my bill proposes will be of proof quality and be minted only in the year 2001. Sales of the coin could continue until the date that the stock is depleted. The coin would be of no net cost to the American taxpayer, and the proceeds from its sale will go towards funding the opening of the National Museum of the American Indian. The proceeds would also help supplement the museum's endowment and educational outreach funds.

Based on past sales of coins of this nature, we are likely perhaps to raise roughly in the range of $3.5 million for the museum. The coin will be modeled after the original 5 cent buffalo nickel designed by James Earl Fraser and minted from 1913 to 1938, which portrays a profile representation of a Native American on the obverse, and an American buffalo, American bison, on the coin's reverse side.

Mr. Speaker, as an Oklahoman, I was proud to have led the effort in Congress to designate the Roger Mills County site of the November, 1868 Battle of the Washita, yes, some might more accurately describe it as a massacre, as a national historic site. This site in Western Oklahoma, where Lieutenant Colonel George Custer and the 7th U.S. cavalry attacked the Cheyenne Peace Chief Black Kettle's village.

Now I am pleased to introduce the National Museum of the American Indian Commemorative Coin Act of 2000. A like version of this bill is already making its way through the Senate, having been introduced there by United States Senator BEN NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL of Colorado and Senator DANIEL INOUYE of Hawaii.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my fellow colleagues in the House to take this opportunity to recognize the importance to our Nation of the National Museum of the American Indian by becoming a cosponsor of my bill.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to speak about one of the 20th century's early atrocities, the Armenian genocide. It is a subject that is very near and dear to my heart as my own grandfather was a witness to the bloodshed firsthand.

While the genocide began well before the turn of the past century, April 24 marks an important date that we as citizens and human beings need to remember. It was when 254 Armenian intellectuals were arrested by Turkish authorities in Istanbul and taken to the provinces of Ayash and Chankiri, where many of them were later massacred.

Throughout the genocide, Turkish authorities ordered the evacuations of Armenians out of villages in Turkish Armenia and Asia Minor. As the villages were evacuated, men were often shot immediately. Women and children were forced to walk limitless distances to the south where, if they survived, many were raped and put into concentration camps. Prisoners were starved, beaten, and murdered by unmerciful guards.

This was not a case for everyone, though. Not everyone was sent to concentration camps. For example, many innocent people were put on ships and then thrown overboard into the Black Sea.

The atrocities of the Armenian genocide were still being carried out in 1921 when Kemalists were found abusing and starving prisoners to death. In total, approximately 1.5 million Armenians were killed in a 28-year period. This does not include the half million or more who were forced to leave their homes and flee to foreign countries.

Together with Armenians all over the world and people of conscience, I would like to honor those who lost their homes, their freedom, and their lives during this dark period.

Many survivors of the genocide came to the United States seeking a new beginning, my grandfather among them. The experiences of his childhood fueled his desire for freedom for his Armenian homeland in the First World War, so he returned there, where he was awarded two Russian Medals of Honor for bravery in the fight against fascism.

It is important that we not forget about these terrible atrocities, because as Winston Churchill said, those who do not learn from the past are destined to repeat it.

Since the atrocity, Armenia has taken great strides, achieving its independence over 8 years ago. Then it was a captive Nation struggling to preserve its centuries-old traditions and customs. Today the Republic of Armenia is an independent, freedom-loving Nation and a friend of the United States and to the democratic world.

Monday, April 24, will mark the 85th anniversary of one of the most gruesome human atrocities in the 20th century. Sadly, it was the systematic killing of 1.5 million Armenian men and women. Ironically, Mr. Speaker, it was none other than Adolph Hitler who began to immortalize the Armenian atrocities when he, questioning those who were questioning his own determination to commit his own atrocities and his own genocide, he said, After all, who will remember the Armenians?

As we do not ignore the occurrence of the Nazi Holocaust, we must not ignore the Armenian genocide. Many people across the world will concede this is a very tender and difficult event to discuss, but in order for us to discontinue the mistakes of the past we must never forget it happened, and we must never stop speaking out against such horrors.

As a strong and fervent supporter of the Republic of Armenia, I am alarmed that the Turkish government is still refusing to acknowledge what happened and instead is attempting to rewrite history. It is vital that we do not let political agendas get in the way of doing what is right.

Mr. Speaker, I call upon the Turkish government to accept complete accountability for the Armenian genocide. To heal the wounds of the past, the Turkish government must first recognize its responsibility for the actions of past leaders. Nothing we can do or say will bring back those who perished, but we can honor those who lost their homes, their freedom, their lives, by teaching future generations the lessons of this atrocity.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order tonight, which is the Armenian genocide.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, as my colleagues and I do every year at this time, in a proud but solemn tradition to remember and pay tribute to the victims of one of history's worst crimes against humanity, the Armenian genocide of 1915 to 1923.

This evening my colleagues will be discussing various aspects of this tragedy, including what actually happened, how it affected the victims, the survivors and their descendents, how the perpetrators and their descendants have responded, the reaction of the United States and other major nations, and what lessons the Armenian genocide teaches us today.

Since we are constrained by time limitations, I will also be submitting for the RECORD some additional information.

Mr. Speaker, the Armenian genocide was the systematic extermination, the murder of 1.5 Armenian men, women, and children during the Ottoman Turkish empire. This is of the first genocide of the 20th century, but sadly, not the last. Sadder still, at the dawn of the 21st century we continue to see the phenomenon of genocide. Such is the danger of ignoring or forgetting the lessons of the Armenian genocide.

April 24 marks the 85th anniversary of the unleashing of the Armenian genocide. On that dark day in 1915, some 200 Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders from the Turkish capital of Constantinople, now Istanbul, were arrested and exiled in one fell swoop, silencing the leading representatives of the Armenian community in the Ottoman capital.

This was the beginning of the genocide. Over the years from 1915 to 1923, millions of men, women, and children were deported, forced into slave labor, and tortured by the government of the Young Turk Committee, and 1.5 million of them were killed.

The deportations and killings finally ended with the establishment of the Republic of Turkey in 1923, although efforts to erase all traces of the Armenian presence in the area continued. To this day, the Republican of Turkey refuses to acknowledge the fact that this massive crime against humanity took place on soil under its control and in the name of Turkish nationalism.

Not only does Turkey deny that the genocide ever took place, it has mounted an aggressive effort to try to present an alternative and false version of history, using its extensive financial and lobbying resources in this country.

Recently the Turkish government signed a $1.8 million contract for the lobbying services of three very prominent former members of this House to argue Turkey's case in the halls of power here in Washington. While the major focus of their efforts is trying to secure a $4 billion attack helicopter sale, two of these lobbyists and former Congressmen, according to the April 8 edition of the National Journal, were recently here on Capitol Hill trying to persuade leaders of this House not to support legislation affirming U.S. recognition of the genocide.

Mr. Speaker, the sponsors of that legislation, House Resolution 398, the gentleman from California (Mr. RADANOVICH) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR), will also be speaking tonight. I want to praise them for taking the lead on this bipartisan initiative which currently has 38 cosponsors and which has obviously caused some concern within the Turkish government.

I regret to say that the United States still does not officially recognize the Armenian genocide. Bowing to strong pressure from Turkey, the U.S. State Department and American presidents of both parties have for more than 15 years shied away from referring to the tragic events of 1915 through 1923 by the word ''genocide'', thus minimizing and not accurately conveying what really happened beginning 85 years ago.

This legislation is an effort to address this shameful lapse in our own Nation's record as a champion of human rights and historical fact.

Mr. Speaker, the Armenian people are united in suffering and the spirit of remembrance with the Jewish people, who were, of course, also the victims of genocide in the 20th century. I wanted to cite a letter from Mrs. Rima Feller-Varzhapetyan, president of the Jewish community of Armenia.

In a letter to the Congress of the United States, which I will submit for the RECORD, Mrs. Varzhapetyan wrote, ''Had the world recognized and condemned the genocide at the time, it is unlikely that the word Holocaust would have become known to the Jewish people.''

She also states, ''We believe that what happened to Armenians at the beginning of the century is not an issue for only Armenians. It is a cruel crime against humanity.'' She concludes, ''Believing that Turkey's membership in the European Union should require its acknowledgment of responsibility for the Armenian genocide, which will benefit the Turkish people as well, the Jewish community of Armenia urges the Congress of the United States to speak up in support of the interests of the Armenians, and to recognize the genocide of Armenians as they recognize the Jewish Holocaust.''

Mr. Speaker, there is additional information that I will include in my statement for the RECORD, but I wanted to conclude by praising the work of the Armenian American community in keeping the flame of memory burning. This week members of the Armenian Assembly of America held an advocacy day on Capitol Hill in which they urged the Members of Congress on several key issues, including the recognition of the genocide.

On Sunday, April 16, the annual commemoration will be held in Times Square in New York City, and on Tuesday, May 2, after Congress returns from our spring recess, the Armenian National Committee will host the sixth annual Capitol Hill observance and reception marking the anniversary of the genocide.

I am pleased to report that the Armenian Assembly has recently acquired a building not far from the White House here in Washington to use as the future site of the Armenian Genocide Museum.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the letter from Ms. Varzhapetyan.

The letter referred to is as follows:

JEWISH COMMUNITY OF ARMENIA, REPUBLIC OF ARMENIA,
Yerevan 375051, 2/1 Griboyedov St., off. 49.

Congress of The United States of America

On 24 April, 2000, 85-th anniversary of the Genocide of Armenians—a horrifying crime, which occurred at the beginning of this century—will be commemorated.

Had the world recognized and condemned the Genocide at the time, it is unlikely that the word Holocaust would have become known to the Jewish people. Today the world is not safeguarded against genocide. It can be repeated anywhere in the world.

We believe that what happened to Armenians at the beginning of the century is not an issue for only Armenians. It is a cruel crime against humanity.

Taking into consideration that the Armenian Genocide was recognized by the United Nations Human Rights Subcommission in 1985, that it was recognized by member states of the European Union in 1987, and by the Ottoman military tribunal in 1919, the Jewish Community of Armenia believes that the recognition of the 1915–1923 Armenian Genocide will positively impact the resolution of a number of issues in the Caucasus.

Believing that Turkey's membership in the European Union should require its acknowledgment of responsibility for the Armenian Genocide—which will benefit the Turkish people as well—the Jewish Community of Armenia urges Congress of The United States of America to speak up in support of the interests of the Armenians and to recognize the Genocide of Armenians, as they recognized the Jewish Holocaust.

RIMA VARZHAPETYAN,
Chairman of the JCA.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of the one and a half million Armenians who perished in the Armenian Genocide of 1915–1923.

The Armenian Genocide was one of the most awful events in history. It was a horrible precedent for other twentieth-century genocides—from Nazi Germany to Cambodia, Bosnia, and Rwanda.

This great tragedy is commemorated each year on April 24. On that day in 1915 hundreds of Armenian leaders in Constantinople were rounded up to be deported and killed.

In the following years, Ottoman officials expelled millions of Armenians from homelands they had inhabited for over 2,500 years. Families—men, women, and children—were driven into the desert to die of starvation, disease, and exposure. Survivors tell of harrowing forced marches and long journeys packed into cattle cars like animals. In 1915, the New York Times carried reports of families burned alive in wooden houses or chained together and drowned in Lake Van.

Mr. Speaker, the murder of innocent children can never be an act of self-defense, as the Ottomans claimed. As Henry Morgenthau, Sr., the United States Ambassador to Turkey, cabled to the U.S. Department in 1915, the actions of the Ottoman Government constituted "a campaign of race extermination * * * under pretence of a reprisal against rebellion."

Documents in the archives of the United States, Britain, France, Austria, the Vatican, and other nations confirm Ambassador Morgenthau's assessment. While the Turkish government claims it resources show otherwise, Turkey has never opened its archives to objective scholars.

It is time for the world to deal honestly and openly with this great blemish on our common history.

The United States can be proud of its role in opposing the genocide while it was taking place.

Ambassador Morgenthau, with State Department approval, collected witness accounts and other evidence of atrocities, calling international attention to the genocide. A Concurrent Resolution of the United States Senate encouraged the President to set aside a day of sympathy for Armenian victims. Congress and President Wilson chartered the organization of Near East Relief, which provided over $100 million in aid for Armenian survivors and led to the adoption of 132,000 Armenian orphans as foster children in the United States.

Yet the international community failed to take decisive action against the criminals who planned and instigated this tragedy.

After World War I, courts-martial sentenced the chief organizers of the Armenian Genocide to death, but the verdicts of the courts were not enforced. International standards were not asserted to hold Ottoman officials accountable.

I have cosponsored legislation that would help redress this tragedy.

H. Res. 398 would take steps to ensure that all Foreign Service officers and other United States officials dealing with human rights issues are familiar with the Armenian Genocide and the consequences of the failure to enforce judgments on the responsible officials.

It would also recognize the seriousness of these events by calling on the President to refer to the deaths of 1.5 million Armenians following 1915 as "genocide."

In 1939, when Adolf Hitler was issuing orders for German "Death Units" to murder Polish and Jewish men, women, and children, he noted, "After all, who remembers the extermination of the Armenians?"

Mr. Speaker, the Congress of the United States remembers the Armenians. I urge my colleagues to join me in condemning genocide and honoring the memory of 1.5 million innocent victims. Cosponsor H. Res. 398.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to join with so many of my colleagues in recalling the horrors visited upon the Armenian people and to take a stand against those who would deny the past in order to shape the future. The Armenian Genocide, which occurred between 1915 and 1923, resulted in the deliberate death of 1.5 million human souls, killed for the crime of their own existence.

A shocking forerunner of still greater slaughter to come in the 20th century, the Armenian Genocide marked a critical point in history, when technology and ideology combined with the power of the state to make war on an entire people. The Ottoman Empire's campaign to eliminate the whole of the Armenian population existing within its borders was no accident, no mistake made by a minor functionary. Genocide was official policy and 1.5 million corpses were the result. The innocent, the harmless, the blameless, without regard to age, sex or status, they were the victims of deportation, starvation and massacre.

When we here, in the House of Representatives, recall the deaths of the innocent of Armenia, we stand as witnesses to history and recognize the common bond of humanity. We acknowledge not just Armenians, but all the victims of vicious nationalism, ethnic and religious hatred, and pathological ideologies. The double tragedy of the Armenian Genocide, is first, that 1.5 million lives were snuffed out, and second, that the world, including the United States, not only did nothing, but again stood by as genocide took place on an even vaster scale across Europe only 16 years later.

"Never again." This is the simple lesson we as a nation have learned from the unprecedented slaughter of the innocent in the last century. Our armed forces are serving nobly around the world to make this dictum more than just words. If we are to be a just and honorable nation, we must do more than shrug our shoulders at atrocities. We, as a nation, must bear witness to history, and having acknowledged the horrors of the past, commit ourselves to preventing their repetition.

Mr. Speaker, I am here today for one simple reason: to recall publicly that eighty-five years ago one-third of the Armenian people were put to death for the crime of their own existence. To deny this reality is to murder them again. We can not, we must not, allow their deaths to be stripped of meaning by allowing the crime committed against them to slowly slip into the mists of lost memory.

Thanks to the strength and commitment of America's citizens of Armenian descent, their memory will not be lost. The victims of the Armenian Genocide will not be forgotten. I'd also like to commend and thank my colleagues Congressmen JOHN PORTER and FRANK PALLONE, the co-chairmen of the Congressional Caucus of Armenian Issues. Thanks to their leadership, this House has again honorably fulfilled America's commitment to memory and justice.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am honored that my colleagues have invited me to join in today's special order commemorating the tragic events that began in 1915.

I know how important this commemoration is to those Armenian-Americans descended from the survivors of the massacres carried out during World War I, almost eighty-five years ago.

Indeed, hundreds of thousands of Armenians died at that time as a result of brutal actions taken by the Turkish Ottoman Empire.

While the men and women who died during those tragic days would not live to see it, the Armenian nation has now re-emerged, despite the suffering its people endured under the Ottoman Empire and during the following eight decades of communist dictatorship under the former Soviet Union.

As I have said before, the independent state of Armenia stands today as clear proof that indeed the Armenian people have survived the challenges of the past—and will survive the challenges of the future as well.

Through assistance and diplomatic support, the United States is helping Armenia to build a new future.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join us in looking to the past and in commemorating those hundreds of thousands of innocents who lost their lives some eighty-five years ago.

Mr. DOOLEY of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in remembrance of the Armenian Genocide.

This terrible human tragedy must not be forgotten. Like the Holocaust, the Armenian Genocide stands as a tragic example of the human suffering that results from hatred and intolerance.

One and a half million Armenian people were massacred by the Ottoman Turkish Empire between 1915 and 1923. More than 500,000 Armenians were exiled from a homeland that their ancestors had occupied for more than 3,000 years. A race of people was nearly eliminated.

It would be an even greater tragedy to forget that the Armenian Genocide ever happened. To not recognize the horror of such events almost assures their repetition in the future. Adolf Hitler, in preparing his genocide plans for the Jews, predicted that no one would remember the atrocities he was about to unleash. After all, he asked, "Who remembers the Armenians?"

Our statements today are intended to preserve the memory of the Armenian loss, and to remind the world that the Turkish government—to this day—refuses to acknowledge the Armenian Genocide. The truth of this tragedy can never and should never be denied.

And we must also be mindful of the current suffering of the Armenian, where the Armenian people are still immersed in tragedy and violence. The unrest between Armenia and Azerbaijan continues in Nagorno-Karabakh. Thousands of innocent people have already perished in this dispute, and many more have been displaced and are homeless.

In the face of this difficult situation we have an opportunity for reconciliation. Now is the time for Armenia and its neighbors to come together and work toward building relationships that will assure lasting peace.

Meanwhile, in America, the Armenian-American community continues to thrive and to provide assistance and solidarity to its countrymen and women abroad. The Armenian-American community is bound together by strong generational and family ties, an enduring work ethic and a proud sense of ethnic heritage. Today we recall the tragedy of their past, not to place blame, but to answer a fundamental question, "Who remembers the Armenians?"

Our commemoration of the Armenian Genocide speaks directly to that, and I answer, we do.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide.

After decades of ethnic and religious persecution, Armenians living within the Ottoman Empire joined together with the purpose of restoring freedom and self-determination to the Armenian people. In retaliation, the Sultan ordered the mass deportation of over 1,750,000 Armenians from their villages and homes and towards Mesopotamia. They left behind all they had known for a dozen generations and began a horrifying trek across an uninhabitable desert. These innocent families were either slaughtered by their captors, or died from dehydration and exhaustion by the hundreds of thousands. An estimated 1,500,000 men, women and children died during the course of this deadly exodus.

This upcoming April 24 we will pause, as we do each year, to remember those innocents who were so viciously murdered. We will join with all Armenian Americans and Armenians throughout the world in recognizing this horrifying genocide of their people, and by remembering we will make the promise to Armenians everywhere that this atrocity will never be repeated.

I have introduced H. Res. 398, commemorating the Armenian Genocide Resolution and insuring that no one further will deny this brutal chapter in human history. I ask that you join with me as I express my profound sorrow for the lost lives of millions, and as I celebrate the lives of their children and grandchildren who live on today. For by honoring the living, we most faithfully remember those who suffered a merciless death in the desert some 85 years ago.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I want to lend my voice to this important debate remembering the Armenian Genocide. While Turkey's brutal campaign against the Armenian people was initiated almost a century ago, its impact lives on in the hearts of all freedom-loving people. That is why we must continue to speak about it. We must remind the American people of the potential for such atrocities against ethnic groups, because history lessons that are not learned are too often repeated.

After suffering three decades of persecution, deportation and massacre under the Ottoman Turks, the Armenian people were relieved when the brutal reign of Ottoman Turks Sultan Abdul Hamid came to an end in 1908. But that relief was short-lived, as the successor Young Turk dictators were working on a far more aggressive plan to deal with the Armenian people. By 1914, they were laying plans to eliminate the country's minorities—starting with the Armenian people. Segregating Armenians in the military, the Turks were able to work these people to death. That year, the government also organized other military units comprised of convicts for the express purpose of annihilating Armenian people.

By the spring of 1915, the Turkish dictators were ready to execute their final solution: they began ordering massive deportation and massacres of Armenian people. April 24 marked the fruition of this plan, with the murder of nearly 200 Armenian religious, political and intellectual leaders—which set off the full scale campaign to eliminate the Armenian people. Men, women, and children alike were subjected to torture, starvation and brutal death—and every kind of unspeakable act against humanity—in the name of Turkish ethnic cleansing. 1.5 million Armenian people perished at the hands of this brutal regime.

The U.S. has some of the most extensive documentation of this genocide against the Armenian people, but there has been no shortage of corroboration by other countries. The Armenian genocide has been recognized by the United Nations and around the globe, and the U.S. came to the aid of the survivors. But perhaps we were not vociferous enough in holding the perpetrators of this genocide accountable, and for shining the light of international shame upon them. For it was only a few decades later that we saw another genocide against humanity: the Holocaust. That is why we must continue to tell the story of Armenian genocide. It is a painful reminder that such vicious campaigns against a people have occurred, and that the potential for such human brutality exists in this world. We must remain mindful of the continued repression of Armenians today, and challenge those who would persecute these people. If we do not, future generations may be destined to relive such horrors against humanity.

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the memory of those who lost their lives during the Armenian Genocide.

The Armenians are an ancient people, having inhabited the highland region between the Black, Caspian, and Mediterranean seas for almost 3,000 years. Armenia was sometimes independent under its national dynasties, autonomous under native princes, or subjected to foreign rulers. The Armenians were among the first groups of people to adopt Christianity and to have developed a distinct national-religious culture.

Turkey invaded Armenia in the beginning of the 11th century, AD and conquered the last Armenian kingdom three centuries later. Most of the territories which had formed the medieval Armenian kingdoms were incorporated into the Ottoman Empire in the 16th century. While the Armenians were included in the Ottoman Empire's multi-national and multi-religious state, they suffered discrimination, special taxes, prohibition to bear arms, and other second-class citizenship status.

In spite of these restrictions, Armenians lived in relative peace until the late 1800's. When the Ottoman Empire started to strain under the weight of internal corruption and external challenges, the government increased oppression and intolerance against Armenians. The failure of the Ottoman system to prevent the further decline of its empire led to the overthrow of the government by a group of reformists known as the Young Turks. It would be under the Young Turks' rule between 1915 and 1918 that Armenians would be forcibly taken from their homeland and killed.

Hundreds of thousands of Armenian men were rounded up and deported to Syria by way of train and forced caravan marches. Armenian women and children were subjected to indescribable cruelties prior to losing their lives as well. While many Armenians survived the conditions of the packed cattle cars, they did not survive the Syrian desert. Killed by bandits or conditions from desert heat and exhaustion, most victims of the forced caravan marches did not even reach the killing centers in Syria. While others perished in the concentration camps in the Syrian desert where disease, starvation, and other health conditions brought about their demise.

This genocide, which was preceded by a series of massacres in 1894–1896 and in 1909 and was followed by another series of massacres in 1920, essentially dispersed Armenians and removed them from their historic homeland. The persecution of the Armenian people has left psychological scars among the survivors and their families. No person should have to endure the trauma and horrors that they have.

On May 2, 1995, I had the honor of meeting the former Armenian Ambassador to the United States, Rouben Robert Shugarian, at a Congressional reception commemorating the 80th anniversary of the Armenian genocide. Ambassador Shugarian introduced me to several survivors of the 1915 genocide. This experience was a deeply moving and personal reminder of the 1.5 million Armenians who perished during the systematic extermination by the Ottoman Empire.

It is important that we not only commemorate the Armenian Genocide, but honor the memory of those who lost their lives during this time. We must never forget this horrific and shameful time in world history so that it will never be repeated again.

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in commemorating the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide.

The spirits of 1.5 million Armenian men, women and children who perished at the hands of the Ottoman Turks cry out for justice. The collective weight of their deaths hangs like the Sword of Damocles over Turkey's refusal to recognize the sins of its past.

Mr. Speaker, eighty-five years after the brutal decapitation of the political, religious and economic leadership of Armenian society; eighty-five years after the forced marches of starvation; eighty-five years after its genocidal campaign against its Armenian population, the Turkish Government continues to deny the undeniable.

Mr. Speaker, the Armenian Genocide is an historical fact—a fact that has been indelibly etched in the annals of history. It cannot be wiped away from our collective conscience. It cannot be denied. The systematic slaughter of 1.5 million Armenians stands as one of the darkest and bloodiest chapters of the twentieth century. From 1915 to 1923, the government of the Ottoman Empire carried out a calculated policy of mass extermination against its Armenian citizens.

The Turkish Government has a moral obligation to acknowledge the Armenian Genocide. Just as Germany has come to grips and atoned for the Jewish Holocaust, Turkey must recognize and atone for the Armenian Genocide. To heal the open wounds of the past, Turkey must come to terms with its past. Turkey must also come to terms with its present hostile actions against the Republic of Armenia.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of Turkey should immediately lift its illegal blockade of Armenia. In addition, Turkey must stop obstructing the delivery of United States humanitarian assistance to Armenia. This is not only unconscionable but it also damages American-Turkish relations. Turkey is indeed an important ally of the United States. However, until Turkey faces up to its past and stops its silent but destructive campaign against the republic of Armenia, United States-Turkey relations will not rise to their full potential.

Mr. Speaker, the United States must continue to be a strong ally of Armenia. We must target our assistance to promote Armenian trade, long-term economic self-sufficiency, and Democratic pluralism. We must also continue to support section 907 of the Freedom Support Act, which is aimed at penalizing countries like Azerbaijan that prevent the transshipment of United States humanitarian relief through their territory.

Finally, our government must speak with one voice when it comes to the matter of the Armenian Genocide. While Congress has used the word genocide to describe the actions of the Ottoman Government against its Armenian population, the United States Government has not been as forthcoming. It is time for the President to put diplomatic niceties and Turkish sensitivities aside, and speak directly to the American people and to the world. Genocide is the only word that does justice to the memory of 1.5 million Armenian men, women and children that were victimized by the implementation of a deliberate, premeditated plan to eliminate them as a people from the face of the Earth. I stand here tonight to say that they have not been forgotten.

Mr. WEYGAND. Mr. Speaker, I come before you today to recognize the Armenian Genocide. Over a period of nine years, more than one million Armenians were systematically persecuted, expelled, and displaced from their homeland in eastern Turkey. The horrific shadows of this prejudicial, killing campaign continues to haunt us. May this day of remembrance and the stories shared here reverberate through the Nation so that history is not able to repeat itself.

Unfortunately, too few Americans know much about the suffering of the Armenian people from 1915 to 1923. During these years, the Young Turk government of the Ottoman Empire attempted to eradicate all traces of the Armenian people and their culture from Turkey. To expedite their demise, the government ordered direct killings, instituted starvation initiatives, participated in torture tactics, and forced death marches. By all accounts, this persecution was purposeful and deliberative.

Such outrageous behaviors and insurmountable prosecution can only be deemed appropriately by the term ''genocide'', for a genocide implies complete annihilation and destruction. For political reasons, the United States government has long refused to accept this extermination and expulsion as such, fortunately that is rapidly changing.

As we remember those whose lives were lost, let us also pay tribute to those whose lives continue to thrive in spite of this dark history. The individuals that constitute the large Armenian-American population in our country continue to offer their communities valuable services and significant contributions both locally and nationally. The Armenian people continue to aggressively transform tragedy into triumph, and I salute the power of their spirit.

As we mark the anniversary of these horrific events, we need to heed the lessons learned and accept nothing less than absolute intolerance for this sort of behavior. Not only will we continue to remember and mourn the loss of so many Armenians, but we must also take notice and cease this action immediately worldwide. We must ensure that such a tragedy will never again be visited upon any people in the world.

Mr. ROTHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to join my colleagues in honoring the memory of the 1.5 million martyrs of the Armenian Genocide. I want to begin by thanking the co-chairs of the Armenian Caucus, Representatives JOHN PORTER and FRANK PALLONE, for organizing this special order which pays tribute to the victims of one of history's most terrible tragedies.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of H.R. 398, the ''United States Training on and Commemoration of the Armenian Genocide Resolution.'' This bill rightly calls upon the President of the United States to provide for appropriate training and materials to all U.S. Foreign Service officers, officials of the Department of State, and any other executive branch employee involved in responding to issues related to human rights, ethnic cleansing, and genocide by familiarizing them with the U.S. record relating to the Armenian Genocide. Further, H.R. 398 calls on the President to issue an annual message commemorating the Armenian Genocide on or about April 24, to characterize in this statement the systematic and deliberate annihilation of 1,500,000 Armenians as genocide, and also to recall the proud history of U.S. intervention in opposition to the Armenian Genocide.

Mr. Speaker, since my election to Congress in 1966, I have worked to affirm the historical record of the Armenian Genocide and have sought to respond directly to those who deny what was the first crime against humanity of the 20th century. As the eminent historian Professor Vahakn Dadrian wrote in a brief prepared on the Armenian Genocide last year for the Canadian Parliament, ''When a crime of such magnitude continues to be denied, causing doubt in many well-meaning and impartial people, one must refute such denial by producing evidence that is as compelling as possible.'' I share this belief and for that reason I strongly support the goals laid out in H.R. 398. I look forward to working hard to secure this worthwhile bill's passage by the House International Relations Committee and further, by working to ensure that it secures broad, bipartisan support when it is considered by the full House of Representatives.

Again, I thank Representatives PORTER and PALLONE for organizing this special order and I urge all my colleagues to cosponsor H.R. 398.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I join today with many of my colleagues in remembering the victims of the Armenian Genocide.

From 1915 to 1923, the world witnessed the first genocide of the 20th century. This was clearly one of the world's greatest tragedies—the deliberate and systematic Ottoman annihilation of 1.5 million Armenian men, women, and children.

Furthermore, another 500,000 refugees fled and escaped to various points around the world—effectively eliminating the Armenian population of the Ottoman Empire.

From these ashes arose hope and promise in 1991—and I was blessed to see it. I was one of the four international observers from the United States Congress to monitor Armenia's independence referendum. I went to the communities in the northern part of Armenia, and I watched in awe as 95 percent of the people over the age of 18 went out and voted.

The Armenian people had been denied freedom for so many years and, clearly, they were very excited about this new opportunity. Almost no one stayed home. They were all out in the streets going to the polling places. I watched in amazement as people stood in line for hours to get into these small polling places and vote.

Then, after they voted, the other interesting thing was that they did not go home. They had brought covered dishes with them, and all of these polling places had little banquets afterward to celebrate what had just happened.

What a great thrill it was to join them the next day in the streets of Yerevan when they were celebrating their great victory. Ninety-eight percent of the people who voted cast their ballots in favor of independence. It was a wonderful experience to be there with them when they danced and sang and shouted, 'Ketze azat ankakh Hayastan'—long live free and independent Armenia! That should be the cry of freedom-loving people everywhere.

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in solemn memorial to the estimated 1.5 million men, women, and children who lost their lives during the Armenian Genocide. As in the past, I am pleased to join so many distinguished House colleagues on both sides of the aisle in ensuring that the horrors wrought upon the Armenian people are never repeated.

On April 24, 1915, over 200 religious, political, and intellectual leaders of the Armenian community were brutally executed by the Turkish Government in Istanbul. Over the course of the next 8 years, this war of ethnic genocide against the Armenian community in the Ottoman Empire took the lives of over half the world's Armenian population.

Sadly, there are some people who still deny the very existence of this period which saw the institutionalized slaughter of the Armenian people and dismantling of Armenian culture. To those who would question these events, I point to the numerous reports contained in the United States National Archives detailing the process that systematically decimated the Armenian population of the Ottoman Empire. However, old records are too easily forgotten—and dismissed. That is why we come together every year at this time: to remember in words what some may wish to file away in archives. This genocide did take place, and these lives were taken. That memory must keep us forever vigilant in our efforts to prevent these atrocities from ever happening again.

I am proud to note that Armenian immigrants found, in the United States, a country where their culture could take root and thrive. In my district in Northwest Indiana, a vibrant Armenian-American community has developed and strong ties to Armenia continue to flourish. My predecessor in the House, the late Adam Benjamin, was of Armenian heritage, and his distinguished service in the House serves as an example to the entire Northwest Indiana community. Over the years, members of the Armenian-American community throughout the United States have contributed millions of dollars and countless hours of their time to various Armenian causes. Of particular note are Mrs. Vicki Hovanessian and her husband, Dr. Raffi Hovanessian, residents of Indiana's First Congressional District, who have continually worked to improve the quality of life in Armenia, as well as in Northwest Indiana. Two other Armenian-American families in my congressional district, Heratch and Sonya Doumanian and Ara and Rosy Yeretsian, have also contributed greatly toward charitable works in the United States and Armenia. Their efforts, together with hundreds of other members of the Armenian-American community, have helped to finance several important projects in Armenia, including the construction of new schools, a mammography clinic, and a crucial roadway connecting Armenia to Nagorno Karabagh.

In the House, I have tried to assist the efforts of my Armenian-American constituency by continually supporting foreign aid to Armenia. This last year, with my support, Armenia received over $100 million of the $240 million in U.S. aid earmarked for the Southern Caucasus. I strongly oppose the Administration's efforts to increase aid to other Southern Caucasus nations at the expense of Armenia.

The Armenian people have a long and proud history. In the fourth century, they became the first nation to embrace Christianity. During World War I, the Ottoman Empire was ruled by an organization known as the Young Turk Committee, which allied with Germany. Amid fighting in the Ottoman Empire's eastern Anatolian provinces, the historic heartland of the Christian Armenians, Ottoman authorities ordered the deportation and execution of all Armenians in the region. By the end of 1923, virtually the entire Armenian population of Anatolia and western Armenia had either been killed or deported.

In order to help preserve the memory of these dark years in Armenian history, I am a proud supporter of efforts by Representatives GEORGE RADANOVICH and DAVID BONIOR to promote the use of the recorded history of these events to demonstrate to America's Foreign Service officers and State Department officials the circumstances which can push a nation along the path to genocide. Their measure, H. Res. 398, the United States Training on and Commemoration of the Armenian Genocide Resolution, would also call upon the President to characterize this policy of deportation and execution by the Ottomans as genocidal, and to recognize the American opposition and attempts at intervention during this period.

While it is important to keep the lessons of history in mind, we must also remain committed to protecting Armenia from new and more hostile aggressors. In the last decade, thousands of lives have been lost and more than a million people displaced in the struggle between Armenia and Azerbaijan over Nagorno-Karabagh. Even now, as we rise to commemorate the accomplishments of the Armenian people and mourn the tragedies they have suffered, Azerbaijan, Turkey, and other countries continue to engage in a debilitating blockade of this free nation.

Section 907 of the Freedom Support Act restricts U.S. aid for Azerbaijan as a result of this blockade. Unfortunately, as Armenia enters the eleventh year of the blockade, the Administration is again asking Congress to repeal this one protection afforded the beleaguered nation. I stand in strong support of Section 907, which sends a clear message that the United States Congress stands behind the current peace process and encourages Azerbaijan to work with the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe's Minsk Group toward a meaningful and lasting resolution. In the end, I believe Section 907 will help conclude a conflict that threatens to destabilize the entire region and places the Armenian nation in distinct peril.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues, Representatives JOHN PORTER and FRANK PALLONE, for organizing this special order to commemorate the 58th Anniversary of the Armenian genocide. Their efforts will not only help bring needed attention to this tragic period in world history, but also serve to remind us of our duty to protect basic human rights and freedoms around the world.

Mr. CAPUANO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. I am a proud cosponsor of H. Res. 398 which commemorates the victims of the Armenian Genocide by calling on the President to honor the 1.5 million victims of the Armenian Genocide and to provide educational tools for our Foreign Diplomats responsible for addressing issues of human rights, ethnic cleansing, and genocide.

Throughout three decades in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, Armenians were systematically uprooted from their homeland of three thousand years, and millions were deported or massacred. From 1894 through 1896, three hundred thousand Armenians were ruthlessly murdered. Again in 1909, thirty thousand Armenians were massacred in Cilicia, and their villages were destroyed.

On April 24, 1915, two hundred Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were arbitrarily arrested, taken to Turkey and murdered. This incident marks a dark and solemn period in the history of the Armenian people. From 1915 to 1923, the Ottoman Empire launched a systematic campaign to exterminate Armenians. In eight short years, more than 1.5 million Armenians suffered through atrocities such as deportation, forced slavery, and torture. Most were ultimately murdered.

The tragedy of the Armenian Genocide has been acknowledged around the world, in countries like Argentina, Belgium, Canada, Cyprus, France, Great Britain, Greece, Lebanon, Russia, the United States, and Uruguay, as well as international organizations such as the Council of Europe, the European Parliament, and the United Nations.

Yet, despite irrefutable evidence, Turkey has refused, for over 85 years, to acknowledge the Armenian Genocide. Even in present day, Turkey continues to have inimicable relations with Armenia. In addition to denying the crimes committed against the Armenian people, Turkey continues to block the flow of humanitarian aid and commerce to Armenia.

I personally admire the dedication and perseverance of the Armenian-American community, and their ever present vigil to educate the world of their painful history. In spite of their historic struggles, children and grandchildren of the survivors of the Armenian Genocide have gone on to make invaluable contributions to society, while at the same time preserving their heritage and unique identity. Over 60,000 Armenian-Americans live in the greater Boston area. Within Massachusetts, many of these Armenians have formed public outreach groups seeking to educate society about Armenia's culture.

I made the observation last year about how sad and frustrating it was that at the beginning of this century, Armenians were murdered en masse and now, at the end of the 20th century, the same type of brutal killing of innocent people continues. The human race has now entered a new millennium, and we must be more vigilant about holding governments accountable for their actions. Last September, in East Timor, thousands of men, women, and children were mercilessly slaughtered; in Sierra Leone, thousands of children have been brutally maimed; and in Chechnya, hundreds of women and children have been forced to flee their homes, the number of deaths remain unknown. By acknowledging and commemorating the Armenian Genocide, the U.S. and many other countries are sending a message that governments cannot operate with impunity towards our fellow man.

Let me end by saying, that as a member of the Congressional Armenian Caucus, I will continue to work with my colleagues and with the Armenian-Americans in my district to promote investment and prosperity in Armenia. We must continue to be vigilant, we must preserve the rich identities of Armenians, and we must work towards ending crimes against all humanity.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to join my colleagues in Congress to commemorate the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide.

Between 1894 and 1923, approximately two million Armenians were massacred, persecuted, and exiled by the Turk government of the Ottoman Empire. This campaign of murder and oppression, perpetrated by the Turk government attempted to systematically wipe out the Armenian population of Anatolia, their historic homeland.

Even though the Turk government held war crime trials and condemned to death the chief perpetrators of this heinous crime against humanity, the vast majority of the culpable were set free. To this day, the Turk government denies the Armenian Genocide ever took place.

Indeed, the government of Turkey goes even further calling the Armenians "traitors" who collaborated with the enemies of the Ottoman Empire during war. We cannot permit such blatant disregard and denial to continue. Genocide is genocide, no matter how, when, or where it happens.

Mr. Speaker, there are many living survivors in my district. The memory of their tragedy still haunts them. They participate each year in commemoration ceremonies with the hope that the world will not forget their anguish. They hope that one day the Turkish government will show signs of remorse for a crime committed by their ancestors.

To me, Mr. Speaker, the Armenian Genocide is not just a footnote in history. It is something that people all over the world feel very deeply about. It is an issue above politics and partisanship. It is a question of morality.

Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that each of us works to ensure that our generation and future generations never again witness such inhuman behavior and suffering. The crime of genocide must never again be allowed to mar the history of mankind, and today we stand with our Armenian brothers and sisters, to remember and commit ourselves to a better future in their memory.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to join with my colleagues in this solemn remembrance of the Armenian genocide. It is vitally important that we never forget the Armenian people who died in that tragedy, and all those who were persecuted in those difficult years that followed.

As we know, on April 24, 1915, Turkish officials arrested and exiled more than 200 Armenian political, intellectual and religious leaders. This symbolic cleansing of Armenian leaders began a reign of terror against the Armenian people that lasted until 1923, and resulted in the death of more than 1.5 million Armenians. Over that eight year period another 500,000 Armenians were displaced from their homes.

Mr. Speaker, many of the survivors of the Armenian genocide came to the United States, and have made countless contributions to our society. We know them well as our friends and neighbors. For years, these survivors and their descendants have told the painful story of their past, which often fell on deaf ears. I am glad to lend my voice, along with so many other of my colleagues today, to show the world how important the Armenians' story is to our history—and our future. It is amazing how often history will repeat itself, and how often we don't listen to the past. The memory of the Armenian Genocide, no matter how cruel and brutal, must serve as a lesson to us all to never ignore such actions again.

Mr. FORBES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with solemn reflection to remember one of the most inhumane episodes of the 20th Century, the Armenian Genocide. From 1915 to 1922, the Ottoman Empire, ruled by Muslim Turks carried out a policy to exterminate its Christian Armenian minority. The genocide started with a series of massacres in 1894–1896, and again in 1909. This was followed by another series of massacres, which began in 1920. By 1922 the Armenians had been eradicated from their historic homeland.

There were three prevailing aspects of the Armenian Genocide: the deportations, the massacres, and the concentration camps. The deportations affected the majority of Armenians in the Turkish Empire. From as far north as the Black Sea and as far west as European Turkey, Armenians were forcibly removed and transported to the Syrian Desert. At many of these relocation sites, large-scale massacres were carried out. The few survivors were dispersed across Syria, Iraq, and as far south as Palestine.

Winston Churchill once observed that "In 1915 the Turkish Government began and ruthlessly carried out the infamous general massacre and deportation of Armenians in Asia Minor. There can be no reasonable doubt that this crime was planned and executed for political reasons."

Our former Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire (1913–16) Henry Morgenthau stated that "when the Turkish authorities gave the orders for those deportations, they were merely giving the death warrant to a whole race; they understood this well, and, in their conversations with me, they made no particular attempt to conceal this fact."

We must keep in mind the historical perspective of this terrible tragedy. Over 1.8 million Armenian civilians perished at the hands of their Turkish persecutors. We must educate our children to tolerate each other's differences and embrace a healthy respect for humanity. Only by instilling future generations with an understanding of these terrible events in the past may we prevent them from reoccurring in the future. We must not fail to live up to our collective responsibilities; the victims of this terrible tragedy deserve nothing less.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, today, we commemorate the Armenian Genocide of April 24th 1915, and in so doing honor the memories of those who survived and those who were killed on that tragic night. It is hard to talk about that date and many would prefer not to, but if we cannot recognize the tragedies of the past, how can we avoid them in the future? Ethnic violence and genocide have marred our collective history from its earliest days, challenging generations throughout time. Yet we cannot forget these events; we cannot cover up, ignore, or rewrite history so that these crimes against humanity disappear.

Our Nation's connection to the Armenian people is great, as has been their contribution to the United States. In my home state of Rhode Island, we have one of the largest populations of Armenians in the country and the State is blessed with the gifts of the Armenian community. To truly honor those gifts, we must take time every year to understand what that community has been through, and the part of their history that is the Armenian Genocide. That is why on this day we remember the unjustifiable, unprovoked, and undeniable massacre of Armenians by the Ottoman Empire. What the Ottoman Empire began that night 85 years ago was a policy of ethnic cleansing. It can be called nothing else.

Today, brave American men and women serve in our Armed Forces across the globe. They do more than protect nations, they serve as reminders to the world and ourselves of what our country stands for. The Armenian Genocide should also serve as a reminder, of what will happen if we do nothing in the face of potential tragedies. It serves as a reminder that we must do better to protect peace and stability and human rights around the world.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, the sick man of Europe had been dying a slow death. It was a particularly dark time in Europe when the sick man finally succumbed, and an empire collapsed. During World War I—a tumultuous, revolutionary time of great societal transformations and uncertain futures on the battlefields and at home—desperate Ottoman leaders fell back on the one weapon that could offer hope of personal survival. It is a weapon that is still used today, fed by fear, desperation, and hatred. It transforms the average citizen into a zealot, no longer willing to listen to reason. This weapon is, of course, nationalism. Wrongly directed, nationalism can easily result in ethnic strife and senseless genocide, committed in the name of false beliefs preached by immoral, irresponsible, reprehensible leaders.

Today I rise not to speak of the present, but in memory of the victims of the past, who suffered needlessly in the flames of vicious, destructive nationalism. On April 24, 1915, the leaders of the Ottoman government tragically chose to systematically exterminate an entire race of people. We gather in solemn remembrance of the result of that decision, remembering the loss of one-and-a-half million Armenians.

The story of the Armenian genocide is in itself appalling. It is against everything our government—and indeed all governments who strive for justice—stands for; it represents the most wicked side of humanity. What makes the Armenian story even more unfortunate is history has repeated itself in all corners of the world, and lessons that should have been learned long ago have been ignored.

We must not forget the Armenian genocide, the Holocaust, Rwanda, or Bosnia. Today, on this grim anniversary, we must remember why our armed forces fought in the skies over Yugoslavia last year.

We must not sit idly by and be spectators to the same kind of violence that killed so many Armenians; we must not watch as innocent people are brutalized not for what they have done, but simply for who they are. Ethnic cleansing is genocide and can not be ignored by a just and compassionate country. We owe it to the victims of past genocides to stamp out this form of inhumanity.

It is an honor and privilege to represent a large and active Armenian population, many who have family members who were persecuted by their Ottoman Turkish rulers. Michigan's Armenian-American community has done much to further our state's commercial, political, and intellectual growth, just as it has done in communities across the country. And so I also rise today to honor the triumph of the Armenian people, who have endured adversity and bettered our country.

But again, Mr. Speaker, it is also my hope that in honoring the victims of the past, we learn one fundamental lesson from their experience: Never Again!

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the opportunity to honor the memory of the one and a half million Armenians who were massacred and the over 500,000 Armenian survivors who fled into exile during the 1915–to–1923 genocide carried out by Ottoman Turkey.

As Henry Morgenthau, Sr., the U.S. Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire stated, "I am confident that the whole history of the human race contains no such horrible episode as this. The great massacres and persecutions of the past seem almost insignificant when compared to the suffering of the Armenian race in 1915."

The new century marks the 85th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. I would have liked to proclaim that the United States and the international community now recognize this tragic historic event with official commemorations. I would have liked to announce that the Government of Turkey officially acknowledges the Genocide. Unfortunately, we enter the year 2000 with continuing acts of denial that this Genocide took place, efforts to re-write the historical record, and the refusal by many governments, including the United States, to use officially the word "genocide" to describe the deliberate murder of hundreds of thousands of Armenians.

Entire villages were destroyed. Entire families were exterminated. There can be no forgiveness, no peace for the dead, no comfort for the families of survivors, until Turkey and the nations of the world officially acknowledge this Genocide.

Surely as we enter the new millennium, the United States, Turkey and the international community should make this simple, but profound, statement of fact.

I'm very proud to say that Central Massachusetts, and especially the City of Worcester, has been diligent in keeping the history of the Armenian Genocide alive and contemporary. A series of lectures to study genocide issues and present them to the general public have been organized over the past year by the Center for Holocaust Studies of Clark University, the Center for Human Rights at Worcester State College, and the Armenian National Committee of Central Massachusetts. It was my pleasure to participate in one of these forums looking at the tragedy of East Timor and its relation to past genocides.

Last month, the forum brought Dr. Israel Charny, executive director of the Institute on the Holocaust and Genocide, and professor of psychology and family therapy at Hebrew University in Israel, to speak at Worcester State College.

Dr. Charny is recognized as a leading Holocaust and genocide scholar. He is credited as one of the primary figures in the development of the field of Comparative Genocide Studies, which approaches particular genocides, including the Holocaust, as part of an ongoing history of many genocides. This field strives to understand and prevent genocide as a human rights problem and a social phenomenon that concerns all people.

In his lecture at Worcester State College, Dr. Charny spoke of his growing concern about denials of known genocides. He describes denial as "the last stage of genocide," "political and psychological warfare," and "a killing of the record of history."

Charny goes on to describe some of the methods of denial. For example, there is ''malevolent bigotry,'' or a sloppy out and out expression of hateful denial. Another tactic is ''definitionalism,'' which insists on defining particular cases of mass murder as not genocide. And yet another is ''human shallowness,'' or a dulling of the genuine sense of tragedy and moral outrage toward such acts. Sadly, we have seen all of these, even on American college campuses, used to undermine the historical record of the Armenian Genocide.

We are blessed in Worcester to have the united efforts of Clark University, Worcester State College and the Armenian National Committee of central Massachusetts to combat such attempts to deny history.

Last Sunday, on April 9th, ANC of Central Massachusetts sponsored a lecture in Worcester by Dr. Hilmar Kaiser, who is a noted scholar on the Armenian Genocide. Dr. Hilmar also spent the weekend in Franklin, Massachusetts, at Camp Haiastan to participate in the Genocide Educational Weekend for the Armenian Youth Federation.

I am also looking forward to attending the memorial service on April 24th, organized by the Worcester Armenian churches, to commemorate the 85th Anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. That service will be held at the Church of Our Savior on Salisbury Street in Worcester.

Mr. Speaker, it is not just for our past, but for our future, that we remember and commemorate the tragedy of the Armenian Genocide—and not just annually, but every day of the year. I am proud to be a cosponsor of H. Res. 398, introduced by my colleagues Congressman RADANOVICH and Congressman BONIOR, to ensure that U.S. diplomatic personnel and other executive branch officials are well-trained in issues related to human rights, ethnic cleansing and genocide.

I am proud to be a cosponsor of H. Res. 155 to have the U.S. government share its collection and records on the Armenian Genocide with the House International Relations Committee, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum, and the Armenian Genocide Museum in Armenia.

We must all share the information, share the history, and keep the memory of the Armenian Genocide alive. Central Massachusetts is doing its part. I call upon my President to ensure the U.S. government does all it can to honor and officially recognize the Armenian Genocide.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today and join with my colleagues in remembering the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. I would like to thank the other members of the Congressional Caucus on Armenian Issues, and particularly the co-chairmen, Mr. PORTER and Mr. PALLONE, for their tireless efforts in organizing this fitting tribute.

Eighty-five years ago Monday, April 24, 1915, the nightmare in Armenia began. Hundreds of Armenian religious, political, and educational leaders were arrested, exiled, or murdered. These events marked the beginning of the systematic persecution of the Armenian people by the Ottoman Empire, and also launched the first genocide of the 20th century. Over the next eight years, 1.5 million Armenians were put to death and 500,000 more were exiled from their homes. These atrocities are among the most cruel and inhumane acts that have ever been recorded.

As we reflect today on the horrors that were initiated 85 years ago, I cannot help but be disturbed by those who wish to deny that these deeds occurred. Despite the overwhelming evidence to the contrary—eyewitness accounts, official archives, photographic evidence, diplomatic reports, and testimony of survivors—they reject the claim that genocide, or any other crime for that matter, was perpetrated against Armenians. Well, History tells a different story.

Let me read a quote from Henry Morgenthau, Sr., U.S. Ambassador to the Ottoman Empire at the time: ''When the Turkish authorities gave the orders for these deportations, they were merely giving the death warrant to a whole race; they understood this well, and, in their conversations with me, they made no particular attempt to conceal the fact. . . .''

The world knows the truth about this tragic episode in human affairs. We will not allow those who wish to rewrite History to absolve themselves from responsibility for their actions. This evening's event here in the House of Representatives is testament to that fact. We can only hope that the recognition and condemnation of this, and other instances of genocide, will prevent a similar instance from happening again in the 21st Century.

In addition, I also encourage my colleagues to join me and the 37 other members who have cosponsored H. Res. 398, offered by Representative RANDANOVICH. This resolution will help affirm the record of the United States on the Armenian Genocide and will play a role in educating others about the atrocities that were committed against the Armenian people. It is critical that we continue to acknowledge this terrible tragedy to ensure that it is neither forgotten nor ignored.

I would like to once again thank the organizers of this event and I would like to once again reaffirm my sincere thanks for being given the opportunity to participate in this solemn remembrance.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in commemorating the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide.

On April 24, 1915, the Ottoman government unleashed an eight-year assault against its Armenian population. During this brutal campaign, one and a half million innocent men, women, and children were murdered, Armenian communities were systematically destroyed, and over one million people were forcibly deported.

The pain of these atrocities is only compounded by the Turkish government's revisionism and denial of the tragic events that took place. This is what Elie Wiesel has called a ''double killing''—murdering the dignity of the survivors and the remembrance of the crime. It is incumbent upon us to stand up against these efforts and make United States records documenting this period available to students, historians, and the descendants of those who survived.

This somber anniversary is a tribute to the memory of the victims of the Armenian Genocide, and a painful reminder that the world's inaction left a tragic precedent for other acts of senseless bloodshed. The road from Armenia to Auschwitz is direct. If more attention had been centered on the slaughter of these innocent men, women, and children, perhaps the events of the Holocaust might never have taken place.

Today, we vow once more that genocide will not go unnoticed and unmourned. We pledge to stand up against governments that persecute their own people, and declare our commitment to fight all crimes against humanity and the efforts to hide them from the rest of the world.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. Speaker, today I join with my colleagues in what has become an annual event in which none of us take great joy in. Today, the Turkish government still denies the Armenian genocide and it does so to its own detriment. All of us would like to see the denial in Ankara end. The Armenian genocide happened. The historic fact, Mr. Speaker, is that 1.5 million Armenians were killed and over 500,000 deported from 1894 to 1921.

On April 24, 1915, 300 Armenian leaders, writers and intellectuals were rounded up, deported and killed. 5000 other poor Armenians were killed in their homes. The Turkish government continues to deny the Armenian genocide and claims that Armenians were only removed from the eastern war zone. America has been enriched in countless ways from the survivors of the Armenian genocide who have come here. As a representative from Michigan, I want to especially highlight that we have been blessed by the contributions of the Armenian communities.

Today I rise to call upon the Republic of Turkey, an ally of the United States, to admit what happened. Mr. Speaker, we want Turkey to see its history for what it is so it can see its future for what it can be. Let us all rise today to commemorate the Armenian genocide and hope that events like it never happen again.

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleagues to acknowledge the horrific events that occurred during the Armenian Genocide from 1915 to 1923, the final days of the Ottoman Empire.

The horror of the Genocide is seared in the minds of Armenians around the world. Beginning in 1915 the Ottoman Empire, ruled by Muslim Turks, carried out a series of massacres in order to eliminate its Christian Armenian minority. By 1923, 1.5 million Armenians were brutally killed, while another 500,000 were deported. Stateless and penniless. Armenians were forced to move to any country that afforded refuge. Many found their way to the United States, while others escaped to countries such as Russia and France.

Future generations must be made aware of this historic event in our world history. It is unfortunate that the Republic of Turkey refuses to acknowledges the genocide against the Armenians. Innocent people were deprived of their freedom and senselessly killed because of their religious or political beliefs.

Armenia has made great strides to become an independent state. In 1992 the newly independent republic of Armenia, became a member of the United Nations, and in 1995 held their first open legislative elections.

Since the genocide, various acts of human rights violations have continued to take place around the world. If we ever hope to prevent further genocides we must never forget the atrocities endured by the Armenian people.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PORTER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, today I come to the floor to commemorate the anniversary of one of the darkest stains on the history of Western Civilization—the genocide of the Armenian people by the Ottoman Turkish Empire. I greatly appreciate the strong support of so many of our colleagues in this effort, especially the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. PALLONE, my fellow co-chairman of the Armenian Issues Caucus.

I wish, as every Member does, that this Special Order did not have to take place. But every year, I return to the floor in April to speak out about the past. To fail to remember the past, not only dishonors the victims and survivors—it encourages future tyrants to believe that they can commit such heinous acts with impunity. Unfortunately, we have seen over and over the tragic results of hatred and ignorance: the Holocaust, the Rwandan Genocide, the ethnic cleansing in the former Yugoslavia, the continued mass killing in the Sudan and the massacres in East Timor last fall. And far too often the so-called civilized nations of the world turned a blind eye.

On April 24, 1915, over 200 Armenian religious, political and intellectual leaders were arrested in Istanbul and killed, marking the beginning of an 8-year campaign which resulted in the destruction of the ethnic Armenian community which had previously lived in Anatolia and Western Armenia. Between 1915 and 1923, approximately 1.5 million men, women and children were deported, forced into slave labor camps, tortured and eventually exterminated.

The Armenian Genocide was the first genocide of the modern age and has been recognized as a precursor of subsequent attempts to destroy a race through an official systematic effort. Congress has consistently demanded recognition of the historical fact of the Armenian Genocide. The modern German Government, although not itself responsible for the horrors of the Holocaust, has taken responsibility for and apologized for it. Yet, the Turkish Government continues to deny that the Armenian genocide ever took place.

The past year has seen small steps of progress concerning Turkey's relationship with its neighbors. The devastating earthquakes of last summer in Turkey and subsequently Greece, allowed various nations in the region, including Armenia, to work together on humanitarian grounds. Turkey's EU candidacy is forcing it to face its problems both with its neighbors Greece, and Cyprus as well as internal problems such as its continuing human rights violations.

Although I am encouraged by these small steps, Turkey has yet to show the world that it is serious about solving the human rights problems within its borders. Remaining in jail are the Kurdish parliamentarians who were arrested over six years ago as well as numerous human rights workers. At the end of 1999, Turkey had the second highest number of journalists in jail—eighteen—the only country in the world with more was China. I sincerely hope Turkey's desire to become part of the EU community will require Turkey to improve its internal human rights problems as well as face its past and acknowledge its role in one of the 20th centuries greatest tragedies—the Armenian Genocide.

Armenians will remain vigilant to ensure that this tragic history is not repeated. The United States should do all that it can in this regard as well, including a clear message about the historical fact of the Armenian Genocide. We do Turkey no favors by enabling her self-delusion, and we make ourselves hypocrites when we fail to sound the alarm on what is happening today in Turkey.

Armenia has made amazing progress in rebuilding a society and a nation—a triumph of the human spirit in the face of dramatic obstacles. Armenia is committed to democracy, market economics and the rule of law. Even in the face of the tragedy which befell the Armenian Government last October, where eight people were murdered in the parliament including the Prime Minister Sarkisian, the Armenian Government and its people remain committed to freedom and democracy. I will continue to take a strong stand in Congress in support of these principles and respect for human rights, and I am proud to stand with Armenia in so doing. We must never forget what happened to the Armenians 85 years ago, just as we must never overlook the human rights violations which are happening today in all corners of the world.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF THE ARMENIAN HOLOCAUST

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to commemorate one of the most tragic events in the 20th century and that is, of course, the Armenian Genocide of 1915 to 1923. It ranks amongst the most tragic episodes. It was the first but unfortunately not the last of the incidents of ethnic genocide that the world experienced during the last century. More than one and a half million innocent Armenians had their lives ended mercilessly.

It is staggering to even contemplate the idea of one and a half million people having their lives ended so arbitrarily, but we must remember the victims of this genocide as they were, not numbers but mothers and fathers and sons and daughters, brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles, cousins and, of course, friends. Each and every victim had hopes, dreams, and a life that deserved to be lived to the fullest.

It is our duty to remember them today and every day. As we stand here today at the beginning of a new century and a new millennium, we should take a moment to speak about the need that that tragic event serves as a constant reminder for us to be on guard against the repression of any people, particularly any oppression based on their race or their religion.

Unfortunately, during the genocide, the world turned a blind eye to the horrors that were inflicted. Too often during the last century the world stood silent while whole races and religions were attacked and nearly annihilated. As the saying goes, those who forget history are doomed to repeat it. We must never forget the important lessons of the Armenian Genocide.

As a member, Mr. Speaker, of the Congressional Armenian Caucus, I join many others in the House of Representatives working hopefully to bring peace and stability to Armenia and its neighboring countries. Division and hatred can only lead to more division and hatred, as has too often been proved. Hopefully the work of the caucus and of others committed to the same cause will help ensure that an atrocity such as the genocide will never happen again in Armenia or elsewhere.

While I might not be Armenian, Mr. Speaker, my wife is and many, many of our friends, which causes me, of course, to say "yes odar empaytz seerdus high e."

I am not Armenian but my heart is, and we all should have our heart with them on this particular occasion.

WE MUST REMEMBER THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE SO THAT IT NEVER HAPPENS AGAIN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues, I rise to remember the Armenian Genocide which took place over several years, but the remembrance day is to remember an event 85 years ago, so this is a particularly important anniversary of that genocide.

We are asked why it is so important to come to this floor again and again to remember. We must remember so that it never happens again, and we must remember because there is an organized effort to hide and to disclaim this genocide; and we must overcome that effort, and we must never forget.

Let us look at the historical record. The American ambassador to the Ottoman Empire in 1919 was an eyewitness. In his memoirs, he said, "When the Turkish authorities gave the order for these deportations they were merely giving the death warrant to an entire race. They understood this well and in their conversations with me made no particular attempt to conceal this fact."

He went on to describe what he saw at the Euphrates River, and he said, as our eyes and ears in the Ottoman Empire, because that is the role an ambassador plays, in the year 1919, ''I have by no means told the most terrible details, for a complete narration of the sadistic orgies of which they, the Armenian men and women, are victims can never be printed in an American publication. Whatever crimes the most perverted instincts of the human mind can devise, whatever refinements of persecution and injustice the most debased imagination can conceive, became the daily misfortune of the Armenian people.''

As other speakers have pointed out, this was the first genocide of the 20th century, and it laid the foundation for the Holocaust to follow.

We can never forget that 8 days before he invaded Poland, Adolf Hitler turned to his inner circle and said, ''Who today remembers the extermination of the Armenians?'' The impunity with which the Turkish government acted in annihilating the Armenian people emboldened Adolf Hitler and his inner circle to carry out the Holocaust of the Jewish people. Unfortunately, today there is an organized effort to expunge from the memory of the human race this genocide, and it focuses on our academic institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I am a proud graduate of UCLA; and a few years ago UCLA was offered a million dollars to create a special chair that would be under the partial control of the Turkish government, a chair in history that would have been used to cover up and to disclaim and to deny the first genocide of the 20th century.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud of UCLA for many things. I was there when Bill Walton led us to the NCAA championship, but I was never prouder of my alma mater than when UCLA said no to a million dollars; and it is important that every American academic institution say no to genocide denial.

It is also important that the State Department go beyond shallow, hollow reminders and remembrances of this day and step forward and use the word genocide in describing the genocide of the Armenian people at the hands of the Turks.

It is time for Turkey to acknowledge this genocide, because only in that way can they rise above it. The German government has been quite forthcoming in acknowledging the Holocaust, and in doing so it has at least been respected by the peoples of the world for its honesty. Turkey should follow that example rather than trying to buy chairs at American universities to deny history.

Mr. Speaker, we must go beyond merely remembering the Armenian Genocide and also insist that the survivors of that genocide are treated justly, that the people of Armenia and Artsakh enjoy freedom and independence; and we must end the blockade of Armenia imposed by Turkey.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to this genocide, we must say, and say loudly, never again and never forget.

WHAT DO WE WANT CHINA TO BE 20 YEARS FROM NOW OR EVEN 50 YEARS FROM NOW?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the remarks of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, remembering the genocide of the Armenians, but I would like to add this: that there are Armenian children dying today in Armenia. While other nations brutalize Armenia, the White House and State Department cut funds for Armenia. They are not the only White House and State Department to do so, but there is enough of us, instead of making just a resolution, to make a binding resolution for the White House to do something about it.

Also, I should speak to another event I had not planned on speaking to tonight, but I actually resent some of the statements made earlier tonight. My wife and daughters attend Catholic mass at Saint James Parish, and the speaker of this House took the well and shamed those Democrats that would use religion for political gain. I heard this again tonight. I ask the minority leader to ask to put an end to their side of using religion for politics. It does not belong in this Chamber. I have attended events at synagogues, at parishes and churches, but what I would not attend is a fund-raiser at a Buddhist temple.

The real reason I came tonight, Mr. Speaker, was to talk about PNTR for China. I would like to present some thoughts. China is a rogue nation. The issue generates strong-held opinions on both sides and both Republicans and Democrats are split on this particular issue. Even myself, I personally struggled, knowing what a rogue nation that China is, the human rights violations, the national security threats, and what does it mean applying PNTR to China.

Communication is the shortest distance between two points of view, and I know that my mother, my children and many Americans, if they never hear some of the positive points, they are most likely not going to support trade with China.

I would like to present a couple of those ideas. I recently traveled to Vietnam with the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) and some of my Democrat colleagues. We were there at the request of Pete Peterson, a fellow member that used to reside in this House, is now the ambassador to Vietnam. I was asked to help raise the flag over North Vietnam for the first time in 25 years. It was very difficult; but while we were there, we stopped in Hanoi, and we had a chat with the Communist minister, the head of Vietnam.

I asked a question. I said, Mr. Minister, why will you not engage in trade with Vietnam? And his answer was pretty forthcoming. He said, Congressman, trade to a Communist means that people will start privatizing and having their own things; and if trade is followed through in Vietnam, then we as Communists will no longer have power.

At that moment I said, trade is good.

What do we want China to be 20 years from now or even 50 years from now, Mr. Speaker? I was in China some 20 years ago, and I want to say they have come a long way in 20 years, and it is not the same China as it was before. One sees democracy sprouting up. One sees things like Tianenmen Square and people fighting for democracy. Democracy and freedom are viruses to the Communist Chinese. The more that we can inject that into China, the more that their leaders go along with a better economy.

China is riding a tiger. There are still those that want, by totalitarian rule, to control with national defense and hold people under the state command; but also the dictatorship there today understands that the economy is important to China. Taiwan supports trade in PNTR. Why? Taiwan knows that it will bring China more toward the United States and more toward a democracy instead of more toward Communism. It is in their best interest, and Taiwan supports it.

We just attended a brief, many of us, by Brent Scowcroft. He said there are no downsides to PNTR; that this is about U.S. products going to China. China's products already come to the United States, and there is a trade deficit.

What do we want 20 years from now if we do not trade with China? It will be a negative, and we foster Communism instead of a good economy for both.

EXCHANGE OF SPECIAL ORDER TIME

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to claim the special order time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, as a proud member of the Congressional Caucus on Armenian Issues and the representative of a large and vibrant community of Armenian Americans, some of whom lost their loved ones in the genocide, I rise today to join my colleagues in the sad commemoration of the Armenian Genocide.

I would like to thank my colleagues and cochairs of the Armenian Caucus, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PORTER), for their dedication and their hard work on this issue and other issues of human rights.

Today, we pause to remember the tragedy of the Armenian Genocide. More than 1.5 million Armenians were systematically murdered at the hands of the young Turks and more than 500,000 more were deported from their homes. Monday, April 24, will mark the 85th anniversary of the beginning of the Armenian genocide. It was on that day in 1915 that more than 200 Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were arrested in Constantinople, now Istanbul, and killed. This was the beginning of a brutal, organized campaign to eliminate the Armenian presence from the Ottoman Empire that lasted for more than 8 years, but Armenians are strong people, and their dreams of freedom did not die.

More than 70 years after the genocide, the new Republic of Armenia was born as the Soviet Union crumbled. Today, we pay tribute to the courage and strength of a people who would not know defeat; yet independence has not meant an end to their struggle. There are still those who question the reality of the Armenian slaughter. There are those who have failed to recognize its very existence; and my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) spoke earlier about efforts at UCLA to buy a chair that would really focus its time and attention to erasing the existence of this horrible occurrence.

I join him in applauding UCLA and other institutions that have turned down this request to put forward a lie.

As a strong supporter of human rights, I am dismayed that the Turkish government continues to deny the systemic killing of 1.5 million Armenians in their country.

We must not allow the horror of the Armenian genocide to be either diminished or denied, and we must continue to speak out and preserve the memory of the Armenian loss.

We can never let the truth of this tragedy be denied. Nothing we can do or say will bring back those who perished. But we can hold high the memories with everlasting meaning by teaching the lessons of the Armenian genocide to future generations. We will not forget. We will continue to bring this to the floor every single year. We will not forget.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROYCE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ROYCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the leaders of the Armenian Caucus for bringing us together to honor the memory of a tragedy, not just in Armenian history, but a tragedy in world history, a tragedy that holds for us an important historical lesson and one that should be acknowledged.

As discussed, it was 85 years ago that the Ottoman Empire set out on a deliberate campaign to exterminate the Armenian people. Over a period of years, between 1915 and 1923, as they went house to house, village to village, they massacred men, women, and children, a total of 1.5 million, and a half million deported from their homelands to escape their terror.

At the end of these 8 years, the Armenian population in certain areas in Turkey, in Anatolia, in Western Armenia, that population was virtually eliminated.

At the time, as we have heard from our colleagues, Henry Morgantheau, the U.S. ambassador to the Ottoman Empire, depicted the Turkish order for deportations as a death warrant to a whole race.

Our ambassador recognized that this was ethnic cleansing. It is unfortunate that the Turkish government to this day does not recognize that this was ethnic cleansing. Let me just say that willful ignorance of the lessons of history doom people to repeat those same actions again and again.

We have also heard from our colleagues tonight how Adolph Hitler learned that same lesson, as he said, who remembers the Armenian genocide? Well, it is important for us to remember these genocides. It is important that we learn the lesson from this 85-year-old tragedy.

In my home State of California, the State Board of Education has incorporated the story of the Armenian genocide in the social studies curriculum, and this is the right thing to do.

I am a cosponsor of House Resolution 398, which calls upon the President of the United States to provide for appropriate training and materials on the Armenian genocide to all foreign service officers and all State Department officials.

Why is this important? Because we want them to better understand genocide wherever it threatens to erupt. We want them to understand the nature and origins of genocide. We want them to help raise the world's public opinion against genocide, wherever it starts to foment.

By recognizing and learning about the crime against humanity, specifically about the Armenian genocide, we can begin to honor the courage of its victims and commemorate the strides made by its survivors and hope that others will not have to go down the track following the experiences that were suffered by the people of Armenia, only to be followed by the Jewish genocide and other genocides that we have seen, such as the one going on in Southern Sudan today.

So, again, let me commemorate and let me thank the Armenian Caucus for bringing this issue to us on this anniversary of that genocide.

COMMEMORATION OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. NAPOLITANO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. NAPOLITANO. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues today to remember one of the worst atrocities of the twentieth century—the Armenian Genocide. April 24 will be the eighty-fifth anniversary of the beginning of the Armenian Genocide. Since that date falls during the April recess and the House will be out of session, I have chosen to make my remarks today.

From 1915 to 1923, one-and-a-half million Armenians died and countless others suffered as a result of the systematic and deliberate campaign of genocide by the rulers of the Ottoman Turkish Empire. Half a million Armenians who escaped death were deported from their homelands, in modern-day Turkey, to the harsh deserts of the Middle East.

We cannot let succeeding generations forget these horrible atrocities, nor deny that they ever happened. Therefore it is important for the U.S. Government to recognize the Armenian Genocide and do what it can to ensure that the genocide's historical records are preserved, just as the artifacts of the nazi holocaust are preserved. By keeping memories alive through preserving history, we and our children can learn about the chilling consequences of mass hatred, bigotry and intolerance. And hopefully, by teaching and reminding ourselves of past atrocities, humanity will not be doomed to repeat them.

The Armenian-American communities throughout the United States, as well as all people of goodwill, stand firm in our resolve not to let the world forget the Armenian Genocide. In solidarity with the victims of the Jewish Holocaust, the Cambodian massacres, the Tutsi Genocide in Rwanda, and ethnic cleansing in the Balkans, we must continually recognize these crimes against humanity and steadfastly oppose the use of genocide anywhere in the world.

In closing, I hope that every American will stand in solidarity with our Armenian sisters and brothers to commemorate the eighty-fifth anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. Let us honor all victims of torture and genocide by paying tribute to their memory, showing them compassion, and never forgetting the suffering they have endured.

REMEMBERING THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening with all of my colleagues that have come to the floor, members of the Armenian Caucus here in the House of Representatives, on the occasion of the anniversary of the 1915 Armenian genocide to remember the 1½ million human beings, the women, the children, the men who were killed, and the 500,000 Armenians forcibly deported by the Ottoman Empire during an 8-year reign of brutal repression.

Armenians were deprived of their homes, their humanity, and ultimately their lives. Yet, America, as the greatest democracy and the land of freedom, has not yet made an official statement regarding the Armenian genocide.

Today, there are some in Congress, some in our country that ignore the lessons of the past by refusing to comment on the events surrounding the genocide. They are encouraging new hardships for Armenia by moving to lift sanctions against Azerbaijan caused by their continuing blockade of Armenia.

I am very proud, Mr. Speaker, of my heritage. I am part Armenian and part Assyrian. I believe the only Member of Congress both in the House and the Senate to claim these heritages. I came to this understanding, not just when I arrived in the Congress, as so many of us at the knees of our grandparents and the elders in our family, we were told firsthand the stories of the hardship and the suffering.

That is how I come to this understanding and this knowledge and why I bring this story and this understanding to the floor of the House and, indeed, to the House of Representatives.

I am very proud of this heritage and the contributions which my people have made to this great Nation. They have distinguished themselves in the arts, in law, in academics, in every walk of life in our great Nation, and they keep making important contributions to the life of this Nation.

It is inconceivable to me that this Nation would choose in some quarters to keep its head in the sand by not stating in the strongest terms our recognition of the genocide and our objection to what took place.

Why do I say this? Because I think it is very important to express very publicly, not only acknowledge what happened, but also understand that when we acknowledge that we are then teaching present and future generations of the events of yesteryear. As we move to educate today's generation about these lessons, we also express to them what we have learned.

To deny that a genocide occurred places a black mark on the values that our great Nation stands and fights for. I am proud to be a cosponsor, of course, of responsible legislation that brings the tragedies in Armenia's history out of the shadows and into the light.

House Resolution 155, the U.S. Record on the Armenian Genocide Resolution, directs the President to provide a complete collection of all United States records related to the Armenian genocide to document and affirm the United States record of protest in recognition of this crime against humanity.

House Resolution 398, the U.S. Training on and Commemoration of the Armenian Genocide Resolution would affirm the U.S. record on the genocide and would very importantly educate others about the atrocities committed and the lessons we can learn from this tragedy against the people of Armenia. These are but two important steps we in the Congress can immediately take today.

I urge my colleagues to support these efforts to pass these bills.

In closing, I want to pay tribute to all of my colleagues that come to the floor every year on this. For those of my colleagues that are tuned into C-SPAN, Republicans, Democrats of all backgrounds from different States, communities across our Nation who recognize what took place, and come to the floor in humble tribute to those that gave their lives.

But it is up to us that really are entrusted with the life and the well-being of our Nation. Yes, to acknowledge and to pay tribute and to say how important this is. But as we do, understand that we do it for the enlightenment of our young people and to remind ourselves that wherever anything like this raises its head around the globe that we, as Members of the United States Congress, and as citizens of this great Nation, that we will give voice to that.

So I pay tribute to all of my colleagues. Those people who are resting in peace, perhaps where they are looking from are smiling and saying thank you to Members of the Congress for recognizing this. It is a sad time, but the recognition is well deserved.

PROJECT EXILE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to speak about a piece of legislation passed on the floor of this House yesterday, Project Exile. Project Exile will send $100 million to qualifying States who require a minimum 5-year sentence for criminals who use guns. This will send a clear message to criminals that, if they use a gun, they will go to jail, and they will go to jail for 5 years.

Project Exile will reverse the current situation and put criminals behind the bars of justice rather than law-abiding citizens of America being behind bars on the windows of their own homes.

Today, the average gun felon is locked up for about 18 months then they are free to ravage our neighborhoods and our communities, our children's playgrounds, and our schools. I say, if they are going to do the crime, they need to do the time.

Project Exile finally focuses prosecution on criminals rather than laying the blame on firearms. Laws on guns only affect law-abiding citizens. Criminals, by their very nature, do not obey laws. We need common sense enforcement of existing law.

For decades, the anti-second amendment lobby has attacked gun manufacturers and law-abiding citizens, demanding laws and restrictions that further impede the inalienable rights of Americans to protect themselves, their loved ones, and their property. The anti-second amendment lobby has used a series of lies and half truths to spew a message and strike fear in the hearts of America.

David Kopel recently wrote an excellent piece in the April 17 issue of the National Review. He listed many of the prominent lies of the anti-gun crowd.

I believe it is critical in any debate that we discuss the merits of any issue based on fact, not on myth. Today I want to correct some of the misinformation that is out there so that we can base our decisions on fact alone.

The first myth is that, up to 17 children are killed every day in gun violence. I agree that even one child killed by a gun is one too many. Parents who choose to have guns in their home need to be cautious, conscientious, and aware of the gun, where it is, and absolutely certain that no child has access to it.

However, this statistic that 17 children die of gun violence every day is not exactly a fact. For that to be true, one has to include 18- and 19-year-olds as well as even some young adults. Nearly all of the deaths that are counted in this statistic are members of gangs, those in the act of committing a crime, or, unfortunately, those committing suicide. The actual gun death rate for children under the age of 14 is less than the rate of children who drown in swimming pool accidents.

The second lie is the so-called gun-show loophole. If any individual is engaged in the business of selling firearms, no matter where the sale takes place, whether it be in a store, his home, or a gun show, the seller must file a government registration form on every buyer and clear the sale through the FBI's National Instant Check System.

To hear the President and Vice President say it, and other anti-second amendment people, one would think that 98 percent of crimes occur with guns that were bought at gun shows. In reality, according to the 1997 National Institute of Justice study, only 2 percent of guns used in crimes were purchased at gun shows.

The third lie is that the average citizen is committing many of these gun crimes out there and that Americans are too ill tempered to be trusted with guns. But as my colleagues might guess, the facts tell a different picture. Seventy-five percent of murderers have adult criminal records. And a large portion of the other 25 percent have arrests and convictions as juveniles that are sealed under the cloak of youth offender protections, or they are actually teenagers when they kill.

Another interesting note is that 90 percent of adult murderers have adult criminal records. Why do we pretend, when we discover that criminals commit crimes, why do we pretend to be shocked? Over 99 percent of the gun owners in America responsibly use the guns that they have for hunting or protection. Why does the liberal anti-second amendment crowd want to continue placing burden upon burden on the 99 percent of gun owners who are law-abiding citizens?

With the passage of Project Exile: The Safe Streets and Neighborhoods Act, we are trying to protect law-abiding citizens from these hardened gun-shooting criminals, criminals who have no respect for life nor for any other individual. Americans for too long have been held hostage by the thugs and drug dealers, the robbers and the gang members, and the lawless and the outlaw. We must reclaim our streets and reclaim our communities and reclaim our American heritage. We need to move forward with other important legislation like this.

WORKER COMPENSATION FOR NATIONAL LABORATORY EMPLOYEES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. UDALL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. UDALL of New Mexico. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to talk about the issue of worker compensation. Today, the administration, Secretary Richardson, President Clinton, and Vice President GORE announced a worker compensation program for workers at the national laboratories all across this country.

This has been a very sad chapter in the history of the United States. Workers have worked at these nuclear establishments and plants for many years, and they have been injured as a result, many of them have been injured, the Department now acknowledges, as a result of occupational exposures. The Department has decided to turn over a new leaf, and I applaud their position on that; and I rise today to put a piece of legislation in the hopper to deal with this situation.

In New Mexico, about 3 weeks ago, I attended a hearing in my district where workers came forward. They talked about how patriotic they were; they talked about how they were serving their country for many, many years and, as a result of their work, they believed they came down with cancers, with beryllium disease, with asbestosis, with a variety of other illnesses. They were very heart-wrenching stories.

Today, I introduce a piece of legislation that will be comprehensive legislation. It will deal with all of these injuries that occurred and that were talked about at Los Alamos. It is comprehensive in the sense that it will cover beryllium, it will cover radiation, it will cover asbestos, and it will cover chemicals that these workers were exposed to.

The legislation provides that the workers will be able to come forward, very similar to the Workmen's Compensation program that is in place for the Federal Government. They will be able to demonstrate their exposure and what the illness was.

My legislation will also provide that during the 180-day period, while their claim is pending, that they will be able to get health care for free at the nearest Veterans Hospital.

And the burden is on the Government, because many of these individuals came forward and talked about how they had worked their whole life, and they knew there were exposures; but then, at the end of their period of time, they asked for their records and there were no records. Their records were lost. So under those circumstances, we clearly have to put the burden on the Government.

So I would urge my colleagues today, while my bill is specifically directed to New Mexico, I know there are many other colleagues around the country that have this same situation in their district. There are Democrats and Republicans. All areas of the United States are represented. So I think this is a great issue for us to join together in a bipartisan way and craft a solution to this problem at the national level.

The reason I think it is so important is that these workers were true patriots. They were people that loved their country and cared about their country and worked for it at a very crucial time for us, so we need now to do something for them.

COMMEMORATION OF THE LIFE OF HERMAN B. WELLS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. WILSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PEASE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PEASE. Madam Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the life of Herman B. Wells, the 12th president of Indiana University, and the only person to serve that institution on three different occasions as its chief executive officer.

In 1937, he was appointed acting president. From 1938 to 1962, he was president; in 1968 he was interim president; and from 1968 to 2000 he served as chancellor. He died in Bloomington on March 18 and was buried the next week in Jamestown, Indiana, his ancestral home.

Part of Monroe County, where Indiana University is located, and all of Boone County, where Chancellor Wells was laid to rest, are in my district, the seventh, of Indiana. As the representative of that district in Congress, it is my privilege, indeed my honor, to mark with pride the life and contributions of this amazing son of Indiana. As one whose personal life was also touched by this wonderful man, I am humbled by the realization that it was in part his influence on my life that made it possible for me to be here in the well of the House to share these thoughts.

Though he would undoubtedly object to the personal characterization, observing the work of so many others, Herman B. Wells transformed Indiana University from a modest Midwestern State institution of 11,000 students to a world-class institution of research, service, and teaching with more than 30,000 students in Bloomington, the main campus, and more than 80,000 students on eight campuses across the State. His insistence on academic excellence from faculty and from students, and his willingness to actively support the excellence he encouraged, resulted in the development of one of the world's finest schools of music, the attraction of eminent scholars, including Nobel laureates, the development of one of the finest collections of rare books in the world, and much more. He was a fierce defender of academic freedom, as witnessed among other things by his steadfast support of the Kinsey Institute, at its time one of the most controversial research centers in the Nation.

He has served on more national and international cultural, educational, and development commissions and agencies and been honored by more national governments, nongovernmental organizations, and international entities than I can list in the time allotted me today. Suffice it to say that he was a man of incredible vision, equally incredible talent, and a commitment to humanity that transcended race, gender, religion, and national borders.

Yet he never lost the personal touch, grounded in his intense interest in each human being he met as simply a person and, thereby, imbued with an innate dignity that warranted treatment with respect. And that is, in the final analysis, what made this man a giant in American education and culture.

Chancellor Wells once listed what he calls his ''Maxims for a Young College President, or How to Succeed Without Really Trying.'' His autobiography, ''Being Lucky,'' derived its title from the list, where he said, ''My first maxim is, be lucky.''

Perhaps he was, though I suspect that he made more of his luck than just happened to come his way. I know this, though, that those of us who attended his Indiana University, and especially those of us who, like me, came to know him personally, were most assuredly lucky; and our lives have been enriched in ways we could never before have imagined as a consequence of our contact with him.

From the nationally and internationally recognized faculty in whose classes I studied, to the fraternity system based on the finest traditions of ethical behavior that he fostered and from which I benefited, to an enduring idealism and assuredness in the future that imbued the IU campus, even in the midst of the difficulties of the late 1960s and early 1970s, my life has been shaped in many ways by my experiences at Indiana University. And everyone who experienced Indiana University was touched by Herman Wells.

Chancellor Wells often said that it is not what you do that counts; it is what you help others to do that makes progress. I know no finer example of this maxim than the chancellor himself. Indiana has lost one of its greatest sons. I have lost a mentor and friend. And yet our grief at this inestimable lost is assuaged by the realization that the university he helped build endures as one of the world's great institutions, stamped with his principles and personality. And for those of us who knew him personally, there is the memory of the sparkle in the eye, the engagement of the intellect, and the smile in the heart that was and remains Herman B. Wells.

With apologies to the lyrics of our alma mater for this temporary emendation, ''He's the pride of Indiana.'' We loved him, we will miss him, we are better because of him.

COMMEMORATING THE LIFE OF LANCE CORPORAL SETH G. JONES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WALDEN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Madam Speaker, I rise today with profound sadness to honor the short, yet exceptional life of Lance Corporal Seth G. Jones, who perished last Saturday, along with 18 fellow Marines, in an aircraft crash near Marana, Arizona.

Madam Speaker, Lance Corporal Jones was only 18 years of age. A native of Bend, Oregon, and a graduate of Mountain View High School, he joined the Marine Corps in February of 1999. After graduating from the Marine Corps Recruit Depot in San Diego, California, Seth fulfilled his long-held dream of serving in the infantry. At the time of his death, he served as an assaultman assigned to the 3rd Battalion, 5th Marines, stationed at Camp Pendleton, California.

Remembered by friends and family alike as a motivated young American with a steadfast sense of patriotism and duty, Lance Corporal Jones was, quite simply, what parents want their children to grow up to be. His high school ROTC instructor remembered him as ''more than enthusiastic, energetic and intense. Seth was turbocharged.'' Seth's hockey coach recalled meeting him after he completed basic training and saying, ''In that short time he had gone from a teenager to an adult. He had grown up.''

Madam Speaker, nothing is more tragic than a life so full of promise cut short before its time. And there is no worse grief than that suffered by parents who must bury their child, because it is not the way life's journey is supposed to go.

Lance Corporal Jones answered his country's call and he knew the meaning of the word duty. While he did not die in a hail of gunfire, Seth gave his life for his country nonetheless. Training for the day when he might be called upon to defend his native land, he gladly shouldered a responsibility few of us can fully appreciate. In an age when most kids are worried about what they are going to wear on Saturday night, Seth was jumping out of helicopters and practicing hostage rescue.

Madam Speaker, surrounded by the luxury of our system of government that is afforded us, we often forget that there are still people among us whose job it is to carry rifles into battle, who shoot at our enemies and are in turn shot at, so that we may continue to live as a free people. There are men like Lance Corporal Jones who are familiar with the chill of a night spent in a foxhole and the exhaustion of a forced march who protect those of us who are not.

John Stuart Mill once wrote, ''A man who has nothing he cares about more deeply than his personal safety is a miserable creature who has no chance of being free, unless made and kept so by the exertions of better men than himself.'' Lance Corporal Jones, and the Marines who lost their lives, were the very guardians of our liberty, Madam Speaker, the men whose exertions keep us free. To his family, to his country, and to his Corps, Lance Corporal Jones, like his fellow fallen Marines, was as the Marine Corps motto reads: Always faithful.

While the cause of this tragic accident is still unknown, this morning I met with Lieutenant General Fred McCorkle, deputy chief of staff for the Marine Corps Aviation, to underscore the need for a full investigation to be undertaken to ensure that the equipment used by our men and women in uniform does not subject them to unnecessary risks.

In this time of grief, my deepest sympathy goes out to the family of Lance Corporal Jones as it does to the entire Marine Corps family.

COMMEMORATING ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. WILSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. RADANOVICH) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. RADANOVICH. Madam Speaker, I am thankful for the opportunity to speak on this most important occasion.

I am proud to be here this evening to honor my Armenian friends—particularly on the eve of the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. I want to associate my comments with an article that I recently read in the Jerusalem Post, which said . . . "The 1915 wholesale massacre of Armenians by the Ottoman Turks remains a core experience of the Armenian nation . . . While there is virtually zero tolerance for Holocaust denial, there is tacit acceptance of the denial of the Armenian genocide in part because 'the Turks have managed to structure this debate so that people question whether this really happened . . .' " Well we know that the death of 1.5 million Armenians by execution or starvation really happened, and we know that we must not tolerate this denial.

In fact we have an obligation to educate and familiarize Americans with the U.S. record on the Armenian Genocide. As Members of Congress, we must ensure that the legacy of the genocide is remembered so that this human tragedy will not be repeated. Toward that end I have sponsored H. Res. 398, the "United States Training on and Commemoration of the Armenian Genocide Resolution."

This bipartisan resolution calls upon the President to provide for appropriate training and materials to all Foreign Service officers, officials of the Department of State, and any other Executive Branch employee involved in responding to issues related to human rights, ethnic cleansing, and genocide. As we have seen in recent years, genocide and ethnic cleansing continues to plague nations around the world, and as a great nation, we must always be attentive and willing to stand against such atrocities.

My resolution also calls upon the President in the President's annual message commemorating the Armenian Genocide to characterize the systematic and deliberate annihilation of the 1.5 million Armenians as genocide, and to recall the proud history of the United States intervention in opposition to the Armenian Genocide.

I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this important legislation.

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HORN. Madam Speaker, I stand before my colleagues today, as I have in times past, to recognize and pay tribute to those who perished during the Armenian Genocide that began almost nine decades ago.

Turkey's continued refusal to acknowledge the atrocities committed against the Armenian people of the Ottoman Empire during the first World War has long been of great concern to me as an educator, a United States representative, and simply as a member of the global community.

Each year many colleagues take this special opportunity to recognize the fact that more than a million and a half Armenians were killed. In addition, much of the Armenian population was forcibly deported. This day coming up, April 24, is an opportunity to remind all Americans to join with the Armenians at home and in the United States in commemoration and memory of those who lost their lives because of the tragic events that took place from 1915 to 1918 and again from 1920 to 1923.

As an educator, it is important to emphasize the role education should play nationally, as well as globally, in ensuring that we do not continue to see racial intolerance or religious persecution which has in so many cases led to so-called ethnic cleansing by murderous and perverted butchers. What an outrage for humans to treat other humans such human killers of small children.

Genocide is not just a chapter in the history of humankind that has been sealed and closed forever. It continues to be a progressively alarming problem today, as our world grows smaller and our population doubles every few years.

Events during the last two decades, Cambodia, Rwanda, Kosovo attest to this fact. We must, therefore, strive to teach our children tolerance. Our future generations must not forget those darker moments of history in the 21st century. The million and a half Armenians, the 6 million Jews murdered by Adolph Hitler's orders, the 2 million Cambodians murdered by Pol Pot's orders.

As long as Turkey continues to deny that millions of Armenians were killed simply because of their ethnic identification, we will continue to stand here and take this important opportunity to ensure that the memory of the Armenian Genocide is not forgotten.

Madam Speaker, educators around the country should use April 24, a day that a group of Armenian religious, political, and intellectual leaders were arrested in Constantinople and brutally murdered by Turkish killers. It is essential to cultivate awareness in our children of the past tragedies that have occurred.

If we do not see the future dangers that will exist, if we refuse to acknowledge, understand and vigorously oppose racial and religious intolerance, wherever it arises, it would be shame on us and it shall not be.

HIGH COSTS OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BERRY. Madam Speaker, I rise once again to address the high costs of prescription drugs in this country, and the recently released Republican plan that will do absolutely nothing to help the people of this country, especially our senior citizens, who are struggling with these high prescription drug prices.

The Republicans have finally released that the seniors in their districts and across this country are struggling with these high prescription drug prices. So they came up with a plan, a phony plan, one that does not guarantee our seniors affordable prescription drugs. It does provide a plan to protect the profits of the prescription drug manufacturers in this country. They say that the seniors will be able to buy private prescription drug plans. Do these private plans mean that seniors will be able to afford their medicines?

Madam Speaker, there is nothing in their plan that does that. The GAO proposal creates a brand new bureaucracy, a very inefficient counterproductive system for providing and subsidizing a drug benefit. We know that we need to provide a drug benefit for our senior citizens, particularly those on Medicare.

A recently released White House report shows that 43 percent of rural residents on Medicare have no prescription drug coverage. Those without coverage pay nearly twice as much out of pocket as anyone else. The report is just another justification that seniors need a good prescription drug benefit under Medicare. They need access to lower-priced prescription drugs, like all the rest of the world has. Americans without a prescription drug benefit spend more for their medicine than anyone else in the world.

The prescription drug manufacturers are now running ads under the guise of Citizens for Better Medicare. This is a front group for the manufacturers. This ad claims that if you allow a reasonably-priced prescription drug to be sold in this country at relatively the same price that it sold in other countries that you threaten the research and development, the fact is, in countries where they sell these products for half as much as they do in America, they are increasing their research and development faster than they are in the United States. This just simply does not make any sense.

They say that to allow Americans to purchase prescription drugs at reasonable prices and at fair prices, like all the rest of the world has, that it would create a situation where our health care system would be in danger and that we would end up with a bad system. There is nothing to that.

This is just an attempt to frighten the senior citizens to think that they may not have access at all to good medication. The fact is what the fright should be, what the fright is, the manufacturers are fearful that they will lose their exorbitant profits that they squeeze from the pockets of our senior citizens in this country every day. Their new ad claims that their intention is to import Canada's government controls.

The truth is, Canada is now utilizing the purchasing power of the U.S. government. One way the Canadian government keeps brand name drug companies from price gauging is to see at what price drug companies sell their products in other countries.

In Canada, the price cannot exceed the median price charged in other developing countries. Starting this year, the U.S. price Canada will use in the international comparisons is the U.S. Federal supply schedule price. We now have Canadians benefitting from the purchasing power of the United States Government. But Americans cannot benefit from that. This is an outrage that Canadians can benefit from U.S. Government discount that we refuse to give our own Medicare recipients.

I have introduced legislation that would give U.S. seniors access to lower prescription drug prices that seniors in all other countries enjoy, the International Prescription Drug Parity Act. The senior citizens in the district that I am fortunate to represent and in every district know that they are simply being robbed.

Senior citizens across this country expect every Member of Congress to address this situation. Addressing the issues of cost and affordability for prescription drugs as well as finding a reasonable approach to offering drug coverage to Medicare recipients is absolutely essential.

TRAGIC LOSS OF U.S. MARINES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Madam Speaker, this past Saturday evening, we suffered a tragic loss in America when a Marine Corps V–22 Osprey crashed in a test mode and killed all 19 Marines on board the aircraft, a tragic loss of life.

All America has joined with the Commandant of the Marine Corps, General

Jones; the leaders in the Pentagon; and the President in mourning the loss of these brave Americans.

This tragic incident is now under full investigation. Today I arranged for a full briefing for our colleagues where the Marine Corps presented a full up-to-date assessment as to what has taken place, what facts we know about the incident, and what initial thoughts are occurring in terms of what caused the accident.

It is obviously too early to tell, but we expect that within a few weeks we will know the basis upon which a decision can be made about the cause of this terribly tragic accident.

But, Madam Speaker, before we even removed all of the remains of these brave Marines, we have political opportunists around the country taking shots at the program and making wild and outlandish statements.

One such person, Madam Speaker, is a former Reagan Republican officeholder who served as Assistant Secretary of Defense by the name of Lawrence Korb. Mr. Korb wrote an op-ed in The New York Times on April 11 that is filled with misinformation factually incorrect, is a disservice to the Marine Corps, and to all brave Americans who wear the colors of this Nation.

He is the defense equivalent of an ambulance chaser. Before the investigation has even begun, he is trashing what General Jones calls the number-one priority of the Marine Corps, a capability to replace an aircraft, the CH–46 helicopter, that is 50 years old, was built for the Vietnam War, and which is suffering severe problems because of its age and because of its extended use well beyond the original life expectancy of the program.

In his article, Mr. Korb makes some gross statements that really are a disservice to the Corps and to all brave Marines serving this country. He says that this program was objected to by all senior officials from the Reagan, Bush, and Clinton administrations. That is absolutely incorrect. In fact, it was former Navy Secretary John Dalton would led the fight to keep the V–22 Osprey program alive for the Marine Corps and eventually all of our services.

He says in an article that these aircraft cost $80 million each. When, if he would have checked his facts, he would have found that the cost is closer to $40 million per copy and would be lower if we were buying an adequate buy of these aircraft as opposed to having them stretched out at a very low-rate buy. He assesses that Congress only supported the saving of this program because of the jobs that would be retained in America.

Well, I would say to Mr. Korb, either get his facts straight or keep his mouth shut. In fact, it was General Al Gray, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, who testified before Congress that he would never subject his warriors to what the opponents of the V–22 called a dual-sling option.

They said we will bolt two helicopters together and we will ask Marines to fly in those two helicopters to achieve the medium range over the rising capability that the V–22 offers.

Madam Speaker, the kind of rhetoric coming from people like Lawrence Korb is really a disgrace to the American service person and Mr. Korb ought to be ashamed of himself.

What we now need is, first of all, to mourn these families of these brave Marines. We need to let them know that we are going to do everything possible to take care of them and their loved ones and we are going to get to the bottom of what caused this incident. We will overturn every stone and we will use every bit of capability that we have to find out the cause of this terribly tragic accident. And we will relay this information to the families first, to Members of Congress, and then to the American public.

And then once we have all that data, we will make a decision, we will make a decision based upon information and facts, not rhetoric to allow some columnist to score political points in the New York Times.

Madam Speaker, for the RECORD, I insert the following news release of the Marine Corps dated April 9; the statement of General Fred McCorkle, Deputy Chief of Staff for Aviation for the Marine Corps, dated April 11; and an updated information packet on the mishap, dated April 11 so that the American people can see the real facts of what occurred here as opposed to listening to incompetent people like Lawrence Korb.

MV–22 MISHAP INVESTIGATION

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS, WASHINGTON, DC.—The Marine Corps is sending an aircraft mishap investigation team, headed by Colonel Dennis Bartels of Headquarters, Marine Corps, to Marana, AZ to determine the cause of Saturday night's crash of an MV–22 Osprey that took the lives of all 19 Marines aboard.

''The entire Marine Corps family grieves for the Marines we've lost in this tragedy and our thoughts and prayers go out to their families,'' said Gen. James Jones, Commandant of the Marine Corps. ''We have sent an expert team to Arizona to quickly investigate the circumstances surrounding this mishap.''

Secretary of the Navy Richard Danzig today released the following statement, ''Evaluating new equipment and training for war, like war itself, puts life at risk. In peace and war, Marines accept that risk—it is a bond between us. In that spirit, we grieve today for our nineteen lost Marines and embrace their families.''

The MV–22 was conducting a training mission in support of Operational Evaluation (OPEVAL) when it went down near Marana, AZ. During the mission, the crew and Marines conducted Non-combatant Evacuation Operations (NEO) exercises as part of the Weapons and Tactics Instructor course, with Marines embarking and disembarking the aircraft. The mission was conducted at night utilizing night vision goggles (NVGs) and forward-looking infrared radar (FLIR) to enhance night operational capability.

Operational Evaluation is a test phase to determine the operational suitability of the aircraft for the Marine Corps. It began in October 1999 and is scheduled to conclude in June 2000.

To date, the four Ospreys involved in Operational Evaluation have completed more than 800 flight hours. During March, the OPEVAL aircraft flew nearly 140 flight hours, an average of 35 hours per aircraft.

The mishap aircraft was part of the Multiservice Operational Test Team, based at Patuxent River, MD, but was temporarily attached to Marine Aviation Weapons and Tactics Squadron–1 at Marine Corps Air Station Yuma, AZ.

The names of the deceased are being withheld pending notification of next of kin.

NAMES OF ACCIDENT VICTIMS RELEASED

HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS, WASHINGTON, DC.—Marine Corps officials are expressing condolences to the families of 19 Marines killed approximately 8 p.m. last night when an MV–22 Osprey crashed near Marana, Ariz.

Killed in the accident were:

Sgt. Jose Alvarez, 28, a machinegunner assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Uvalde, Texas.

Maj. John A. Brow, 39, a pilot assigned to Marine Helicopter Squadron-1, of California, Md.

PFC Gabriel C. Clevenger, 21, a machinegunner assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Picher, Okla.

PFC Alfred Corona, 23, a machinegunner assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of San Antonio, Texas.

Lance Corporal Jason T. Duke, 28, a machinegunner assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Sacramento, Calif.

Lance Corporal Jesus Gonzales Sanchez, 27, an assaultman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of San Diego, Calif.

Maj. Brooks S. Gruber, 34, a pilot assigned to Marine Helicopter Squadron-1, of Jacksonville, NC.

Lance Corporal Seth G. Jones, 18, an assaultman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Bend, Ore.

2nd Lieutenant Clayton J. Kennedy, 24, a platoon commander assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Clifton Bosque, Texas.

Cpl. Kelly S. Keith, 22, aircraft crew chief assigned to Marine Helicopter Squadron-1, of Florence, SC.

Cpl. Eric J. Martinez, 21, a field radio operator assigned to Marine Wing Communications Squadron 38, Marine Air Control Group 38, of Coconino, Ariz.

Lance Corporal Jorge A. Morin, 21, an assaultman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of McAllen, Texas.

Corporal Adam C. Neely, 22, a rifleman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Winthrop, Wash.

Staff Sgt. William B. Nelson, 30, a satellite communications specialist with Marine Air Control Group-38, of Richmond, Va.

PFC Kenneth O. Paddio, 23, a rifleman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Houston, Texas.

PFC George P. Santos, 19, a rifleman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Long Beach, Calif.

PFC Keoki P. Santos, 24, a rifleman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Grand Ronde, Ore.

Corporal Can Soler, 21, a rifleman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Palm City, Fla.

Pvt. Adam L. Tatro, 19, a rifleman assigned to 3d Battalion, 5th Marine Regiment, 1st Marine Division, of Brownwood, Texas.

''The entire Marine Corps family grieves for the Marines we've lost in this tragedy and our thoughts and prayers go out to their families,'' said Gen. James Jones, Commandant of the Marine Corps. PREPARED STATEMENT ON MV–22 MISHAP BY LTGEN FRED MCCORKLE, HEADQUARTERS MARINE CORPS (APRIL 11, 2000)

First and foremost, I would like to say that our thoughts and prayers are with the families of our Marines who were tragically taken from us Saturday night. Obviously, there are no words that can express our sadness and sense of loss in this situation. Our Marine Corps is a tight-knit family, and each of us feels the loss of these Marines. We are with the families now and we will continue to assist them in the difficult days ahead. Our number one concern at this time is their well-being.

While the mishap is currently under investigation, there are some things I would like to relay to you and then I will answer whatever questions I can.

The Commandant has sent Col Dennis Bartels from our staff to lead the expert investigation team. I spoke with Col Bartels last night and he has assured me that the investigation is well underway. There is, however, no determination at this time as to the cause of the mishap. Let me emphatically state that we are committed to finding the truth. One thing I want to clarify from my comments yesterday, the incident was observed on an F/A–18 FLIR but it was not videotaped.

The aircraft was the second in a flight of two aircraft conducting a simulated evacuation operation. It was one of four MV–22s participating in this exercise to support Operational Evaluations (OpEval). OpEval is a DOD requirement specifically designed to validate an aircraft's operational capability to support USMC missions. It requires flights in operational configurations to include flights with embarked troops.

Our most precious asset is our Marines and their welfare is the primary concern of all Marines in leadership positions. Numerous senior service members and members of Congress have flown in the aircraft. I have flown the aircraft and believe it to be safe. It is important to stress that the MV–22 is not an experimental test aircraft. The MV–22 is a proven technology. The Osprey has already completed extensive flight testing that included:

Almost 1200 flight hours of Full Scale Development (1–6), and 1600 flight hours of Engineering/Manufacturing Development (7–10).

The mishap aircraft was one of five production aircraft delivered to the Marine Corps for operational use. The four aircraft participating in OpEval, all delivered in the past 11 months, have accumulated over 840 flight hours conducting operational flights in support of OpEval. This particular aircraft was delivered to the Marine Corps in January of this year and had been flown over 135 hours to date. The total amount of flight time accumulated by MV–22s to date is over 3600 hours.

The two pilots flying the aircraft were very experienced, veteran pilots from Marine Helicopter Squadron One. One had nearly 3800 hours and the other had over 2100 hours. Both pilots were approaching 100 hours of flight time in the MV–22 and had over 100 MV–22 simulator hours. Additionally, the aircraft was crewed by two of our very finest enlisted Marines.

The aircraft is equipped with a Crash Survivable Memory Unit (CSMU) that records 227 separate aircraft parameters that should provide invaluable insight into the cause of this mishap. These parameters include aircraft performance data (airspeed, altitude, heading, etc), engine performance data and information on any potential system malfunctions indicated. Efforts to retrieve this component from the aircraft are ongoing.

We are distributing a photo of the Marana Northwest Regional Airport that depicts the intended point of landing for the flight of the two aircraft involved. This package also contains a data sheet and information relating to the exercise being conducted.

Throughout this tragic and challenging time, we have been supported by a number of local law enforcement agencies, fire departments and National Guard and reserve units in Arizona. The American Red Cross continues to provide support on the scene. We truly appreciate their superb support in these efforts to take care of our Marines.

Our work as Marines comes with some danger and risks, but we strive to do everything we can to minimize those risks. As Secretary Danzig so aptly stated Sunday, ''Evaluating new equipment and training for war, like war itself, puts life at risk. In peace and war, Marines accept that risk—it is a bond between us. In that spirit we grieve today for our lost Marines.''

Finally, I would like to conclude by again saying that our thoughts and prayers are with the families of our fallen Marines. We are taking care of the families now and will continue to assist them in every way possible in the difficult days ahead. I will now answer what questions I can at this point.

MV–22 MISHAP INFORMATION

The MV–22 mishap occurred approximately 8 p.m. Saturday night 8 April when a MV–22 Osprey crashed near Tucson, Arizona. The MV–22 was conducting a training mission in support of Operational Evaluation (OPEVAL). Aircraft was second aircraft in two ship flight inbound Marana Northwest Regional Airport (encl 1) about 15 miles NW of Tucson, Arizona. The landing site was a hard surface concrete pad area, free of obstacles and parallel to a 6,900′ runway. Safety personnel had conducted a safety site survey and a daytime landing there to ensure suitability.

This mishap aircraft was part of the Multiservice Operational Test Team (MOTT), based at Patuxent River, Md., but was temporarily attached to Marine Aviation Weapons and Tactics Squadron-1 (MAWTS–1) at Marine Corps Air station Yuma, Ariz. OPEVAL commenced in November 1999 with planned completion data of June 2000. OPEVAL is being conducted by the MOTT under the auspices of Commanding Officer, HMX–1, the Marine Corps' aviation OPEVAL agency. In this capacity, CO, HMX–1 reports to Commander Operational Test and Evaluation Force. OPEVAL determines aircraft effectiveness and suitability and must be conducted to the maximum extent possible under the most realistic conditions (DOD 5000.2).

During the mission, the crew and Marines conducted Non-combatant Evacuation Operations (NEO) exercises as part of the Weapons and Tactics Instructor (WTI) Course, with Marines embarking and disembarking the aircraft. The mission profile called for the utilization of the latest version of Night Vision Goggles, (ANVIS–9) and Forward-Looking Infrared Radar to enhance night operational capability. Flight was undertaken in good weather conditions with 17 percent illumination. The flight also served as a training vehicle for the MAWTS current WTI course designated as Assault Support Mission 3 (encl 2). Non-aircrew personnel aboard were part of the Evacuation Control Center for the simulated NEO.

The mishap aircraft was not an experimental aircraft. The aircraft was the fourth of five production aircraft delivered to the Marine Corps. Formal developmental testing of the MV–22 was conducted on the Full Scale Development aircraft (aircraft 1–6) flying 1184 flt hrs and the Engineering and Manufacturing Development aircraft (aircraft 7–10) flying 1600 flt hrs. The mishap aircraft was a Low Rate Initial Production aircraft (aircraft 11–15). The LRIP aircraft have flown a total of 840 flt hrs conducting operational/mission training and evaluation. The MV–22 fleet have flown a total of 3624 flt hrs. The mishap aircraft had flown 135.5 flight hrs since it was delivered to the Marine Corps on 17 Jan 00.

The two previous MV–22 testing mishaps demonstrated the risks inherent in any flight test development program, but the mishap causes were not unique to ''tiltrotor technology.'' The last mishap was in July 1992. The identified design deficiencies were corrected and incorporated in all production aircraft. The MV–22 fleet has flown over 2400 hours (2/3 of all hours) since the last mishap in 1992.

A complete Aviation Mishap Board (AMB) has been convened in Tucson under in accordance with OPNAVINST 3750 under the direction of Col Dennis Bartels from Dept of Avn, HQMC. Team is being supported by joint agencies and the entire Naval Aviation establishment.

Although MV–22s have not been grounded by Commander Naval Air Systems Command, operations have been suspended in order to evaluate the current situation and determine the most appropriate course of action and safe flight operations.

REMAINS—8 REMAINS HAD BEEN RECOVERED BY 1500, 11 APRIL 2000

—The recovery of remains will be done as quickly as possible given the circumstances and requirements to properly identify the Marines and preserve evidence at the crash site.

—15 Aviation Mishap Board personnel on scene.

—15 Naval Aviation Center Personnel on scene.

—Human Resources Personnel from Davis-Monthan.

—Counselors on site to assist.

—HMX–1 Flight Surgeon on site.

—Marine Reserve Unit providing security (6th Eng Spt BN Det A Bulk Fuel).

—Locals have constructed a memorial with flowers.

—There are two Armed Forces Medical Examiners on site.

—10 Trained mortuary affairs personnel from the U.S. Air Force and Armed Forces Institute of Pathology arrived from Washington, DC, Monday.

—Recovery efforts began 0800 this morning.

—Once remains have been properly removed, they will be transferred to Davis-Monthan Air Force Base for shipment to Dover Air Force Base, Delaware.

—Dover serves as the Port Mortuary for all Services.

—At Dover, the remains will be met by Marines from the Marine Barracks Washington, DC.

—After the remains have been identified, they will be assigned an escort (either someone from the Marines' unit or someone designated by the family).

—Memorial services will be held at NAS Patuxent River, MD next week and Camp Pendleton on Monday 17th. Exact times and dates are being coordinated.

—MCAS New River has tentatively scheduled a memorial for the four aircrew at 1400 this Friday.

—If DNA analysis is required, a sample will be taken from the remains at Dover and testing will be done at Rockville, Maryland Institute of Pathology.

—All Marines on board are entitled to be buried at Arlington National Cemetery if the family so desires.

MAWTS–1—ASSAULT SUPPORT TACTICS THREE

Assault Support Tactics Three (AST III) is a long range (180 NM radius) multiple site Noncombatant Evacuation Operation (NEO) conducted at night (on NVGs) in the Phoenix and Tucson Arizona areas. A ''real world'' scenario forms the two day evolution which is the culmination of the AST Common flight phase of the Weapons and Tactics Instructors (WTI Course) taught at Marine Aviation Weapons and Tactics Squadron One. Additionally, the NEO completes the WTI course's Military Operations in an Urban Terrain (MOUT) package introduced earlier during the Common academics phase.

This particular WTI mission requires a sizeable airborne package consisting of mostly helicopters. Specific numbers for WTI 2–00 are; (7) CH–46Es, (5) CH–53Es, (2) CH–53Ds, (5) AH–1Ws, 1 UH–1N, (3) FA–18Ds, (4) MV–22s, (3) KC–130s for a total of 30 aircraft supporting the NEO. Besides the aircraft required to support the mission a Forward Operating Base (FOB) is established at Gila Bend Air Force Auxiliary Airfield. The FOB is guarded by Stinger Teams, facilitates a Marine Air Traffic Control Mobile Team (MMT), a MWCS Communications Detachment using high power HF, VHF SINGARS, and SATCOM. A Forward Arming and Refueling Point (FARP) is also established at the FOB employing KC–130's Rapid Ground Refueling (RGR) systems. The Tactical Bulk Fuel Dispensing System (TBFDS) is also employed on a CH–53E at a separate austere site to refuel the AH–1Ws and UH–1N.

During the execution, three separate task forces pull evacuees from three different sites located in Phoenix and Tucson. The American citizens once evacuated and repositioned at the FOB where a complete Evacuation Control Center (ECC) completes the processing. Once processing is complete, the KC–130s lift the evacuees back to Yuma, AZ. MAWTS–1 staff members make up the Forward Command Element (FCE). An infantry company that supports WTI make up the security elements and man the ECC at the FOB's consolidation site. Additional Marines dressed in civilian attire make up the noncombatants—totaling up to eighty evacuees. As the mission progresses, all information is relayed through the established command and control system including a Direct Air Support Center (DASC) and DASC(A), an Assault Support Coordinator Airborne (ASC(A)) assists in control of the mission while 'real time' information is fed back to the Tactical Air Command Center (TACC). Situational awareness is maintained in the TAC—nearly two hundred miles from the further site!

The NEO training received at MAWTS–1, during the WTI course, is critical since no where else in the FMF are NEOs practiced to such an extent and magnitude—except during a real contingency.

CMC MISHAP UPDATE FOR 11 APR 2000

AVIATION

—Recovery of remains started 0800 this morning

—Ten bodies recovered as of 1500 11 April

—Should get at least 4 more today

—Crew chief identified by equipment and uniform

—Expect to be complete by 12 April

—Remains to be flown from Davis-Monthan AFB to Dover

—Autopsies and DNA sampling to commence upon return to East Coast

—All Aircraft Mishap Board members and augmentees on site at Marana, AZ

—Armed Forces Institute of Pathology—12 personnel

2 Medical Examiners

10 Mortuary Affairs personnel

—JAG Manual investigators (LtCol Morgan and LtCol (Sel) Radich) from Quantico on scene 11 April

—MOTT (85 Pax) to be transported by C–9 from MCAS Yuma to Pax River Wednesday; C–130 to return team from memorial service at New River to Yuman on Saturday, Pending aircraft status, original test plan called for OPEVAL to resume at China Lake on Sunday

—Aircraft presently cleared for ground turns and taxiing as of 11 April

LEGISLATIVE AFFAIRS

—Briefing requested by Rep. Curt Weldon (R, PA 7th Dist.) and others by LtGen. McCorkle set for 1000, 12 April —Offer made by OLA to Senate side for similar briefing in PM on 12 April if desired

PUBLIC AFFAIRS

—Have received over 1000 media inquiries since the mishap

—LtGen. McCorkle's preliminary press conference 1630 on 10 April

—LtGen. McCorkle gave statement and answered reporters questions at DOD nationally televised press conference at 1330 on 11 April

—Once barriers erected at crash site, most press departed

V–22 ''OSPREY'' KEY FACTS

The V–22 OSPREY is a joint service, multi-mission, vertical/short take-off and landing tiltrotor aircraft. It performs a wide range of VTOL missions as effective as a conventional helicopter while achieving the long-range cruise efficiencies of a twin turboprop aircraft. The MV–22 will be the Marine Corps' medium lift aircraft, replacing the aging fleet of CH–46 and CH–53D helicopters. The Air Force variant, the CV–22, will replace the MH–53J and MH–60G and augment the MC–130 fleet in the USSOCOM Special Operations mission. The V–22, which is jointly produced by Bell Helicopter Textron and the Boeing Company, is the world's first production tiltrotor aircraft.

FEATURES AND BENEFITS

• Incorporates mature, but advanced technologies in composite materials, survivability, airfoil design, fly-by-wire controls, digital cockpit and manufacturing.

• Has two 38-foot diameter ''prop-rotors.'' Engine/transmission nacelles mounted on the end of each wing rotate through 95 degrees. Combines vertical takeoff and landing of a helicopter with the long range, high speed and efficiency of a turboprop airplane.

• This unique aircraft transitions from the helicopter flying mode to a fixed wing flying mode in less than 20 seconds.

• Speed, range, and payload expand capabilities beyond the limits of helicopter technology.

• Self deployable worldwide, ferry range of 2,100 NM with one aerial refueling.

• Can fly at speeds from hover to 300 knots, cruises at 250 knots.

• Increased speed, maneuverability and reduced vulnerability make it much more survivable in combat than the helicopters it is replacing.

• Carries up to 24 fully combat loaded Marines internally or 10,000 pounds externally.

• Performs missions relevant to post Cold War era:

Amphibious landing

Noncombatant evacuation

Tactical recovery of aircraft and personnel

Humanitarian relief

Transporting troops into combat

Long-range special operations night/all weather

Provides all the above faster from further distances with more survivability than a helicopter

SCHEDULE

• Marine Medium Tiltrotor Training Squadron (VMMT–204) designated June 1999

• Initial operational capability for the Marine Corps—2001

• First USMC fleet squadron scheduled deployment—2003

- USAF Initial operational capability—2004
- Service buys: Marine Corps 360 MV–22s, Air Force 50 CV–22s, Navy 48 HV–22s

ARMENIAN GENOCIDE COMMEMORATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. WILSON). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Madam Speaker, every year we come to the House floor to commemorate and pay tribute to the 1.5 million victims of the Armenian Genocide. Sadly, 85 years after the tragedy began, Turkey still refuses to recognize the Armenian Genocide and apologize for the atrocious acts it committed. Since 1923, Turkey has denied the Armenian Genocide despite overwhelming documentation, and since 1923 there has been no justice for the victims and the families of the victims of the Armenian Genocide.

To those who continue to resist the truth, I can only believe that they have chosen to ignore the hard evidence or to indulge their shame by ignoring the facts. Like the Holocaust, denying the Armenian Genocide cannot erase the tragedy, the lives that were lost, or compensate for driving people from their homeland. For the people of Armenia, the fight continues today, particularly for the Armenians of Nagorno-Karabagh, who are impacted by modern day Turkey and Azerbaijan's aggression toward Armenia in the form of the Azeri blockade against Nagorno-Karabagh. But their actions are not without consequences.

I believe the Congress will continue to provide assistance to the people residing in Nagorno-Karabagh, and we will continue to uphold section 907 of the Freedom Support Act that denies assistance to Azerbaijan until they end their stranglehold on Nagorno-Karabagh. Our message to Turkey and Azerbaijan must be loud and clear. We will not stand by as you once again seek to threaten the Armenian people.

For my part, I will continue to support assistance to improve the lives of all Armenians; I will continue to remember those who have lost their lives, and continue to commemorate this somber occasion. Lastly, I will continue to hold the Turkish and Azeri governments responsible for their actions past and present. For this reason, I have joined as a cosponsor of House Resolution 398, commemorating the genocide and calling on the President to characterize in his annual message commemorating the Armenian Genocide, the systematic and deliberate annihilation of 1.5 million Armenians as genocide and to recall the proud history of the United States intervention in opposition to that genocide.

I am hopeful that we will see the day when peace, stability, and prosperity are realized for the people of Nagorno-Karabagh and for all Armenians. But until then, the United States Congress must continue to be on the side of what is right, what is just and continue to assist to make sure that history does not repeat itself.

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentlewoman from Michigan (Ms. STABENOW) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Ms. STABENOW. Madam Speaker, I come today to talk about what I believe is one of the most challenging if not the most challenging issues affecting our seniors and affecting many families across the country. This was spoken to a while ago by the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY), who spoke very eloquently about the challenges of seniors related to the cost of prescription drugs.

What we have seen over the years is a system that started in 1965 under Medicare that has been a great American success story. In 1965, half of our seniors could not find insurance or could not afford health care insurance. Now we have a system for health care for seniors. The challenge before us is that health care has changed, the way we provide health care has changed. In 1965 we were predominantly providing health care in hospitals with surgeries, and the use of drugs was limited to the hospital.

Today, we know that care has changed; and we see home health care, we see outpatient care, and a great reliance on new prescription drugs, wonderful medications that we are very pleased and proud to have developed in the United States. But at the same time we are seeing a growing disparity and a horrible situation for too many seniors who literally on a daily basis are deciding do I buy my food today, do I get my medications, do I pay the electric bill, how can I keep going and remain healthy and well by having access to my medications? Because Medicare does not currently cover the costs of prescription drugs.

I rise today to urge my colleagues as quickly as possible, we are long overdue, in correcting this problem. We have economic good times. There is no reason that we cannot at this time get it right for Medicare, modernize Medicare, to cover the way health care is provided today; and that means covering the cost of prescription drugs. We are in economic good times, and I believe in these times we have obligations to pay our bills and pay our debts and to keep our commitments.

One of the most important commitments that we have made to older Americans is Medicare, health care for them. Social Security is another commitment, health care for our veterans, all important commitments that we have made. But because of the challenge that I have heard from too many of my constituents all across Michigan, I began months ago putting together something called the Prescription Drug Fairness Campaign. I have asked seniors and families to share with me their stories, if they are having difficulty paying for their medications to call a hotline that I set up for them to share their stories with me, or for them to send me letters and copies of their high prescription drug bills so that we can put a real face and a name and a situation on this problem.

This is not an issue made up by people on the floor of this House or by other politicians. This is an issue that is real for every senior and every family in this country. One of the things that disturbs me the most is the fact that we see such a disparity in pricing. As the gentleman from Arkansas mentioned earlier, we have a situation where if you go to another country, in my State we are right next to Canada in Michigan, I included a bus trip, I invited a number of seniors to join me, to go across the Ambassador Bridge from Detroit to Windsor; and we dropped their costs by 53 percent by crossing the bridge.

There is something wrong when there can be such a disparity. And when you add to that the fact that we are precluded by American law from bringing those drugs, mail order or bringing those medications routinely across the border without seeing a Canadian physician first and going through the Canadian process, we cannot reimport those drugs back into the United States, American-made FDA approved, because of protections that were put into the law in 1987 to protect our own pharmaceutical drug companies who are making the drugs here and benefiting from our research and development and the institutions that we have, the tax system we have that provides tax incentives and tax write-offs, which I support, I think it is important and good public policy for us to have an R&D tax credit, I think we need to keep it; but they benefit from that, sell to other countries, and then people are not even allowed to bring that back, to reimport it, without going through the process of seeing a Canadian physician and going through the Canadian health system.

I have also done other studies in my district that have shown that if you have insurance, if you have an HMO or other kinds of insurance, you are paying half on average what an uninsured senior or uninsured person is paying for their medical care, for their medicines. So we see seniors who use two-thirds of the medications in this country who do not have insurance and then because others get discounts because they are negotiating group discounts, they do not get those discounts, so they not only do not have insurance but they pay more on top of that, paying twice as much as somebody with insurance. It is crazy.

We have done another comparison as some others of my colleagues have that have shown that there are medications that are provided for animals as well as for people where in those cases where there is arthritis medication, heart medication, high blood pressure medication, we compared eight different medications to find that the same name, the same drug, the same quality controls and it costs half if you go to get it for your pet than it does for you to walk into the pharmacy, and we see the same medication. There is something wrong with this picture. We need to make sure that Medicare covers costs of prescription drugs, we modernize it to cover the way health care is provided, and then we need to get busy to make sure that we are lowering the cost of prescription drugs for all of our families.

I would like to share this evening three different letters that I have received from people around Michigan sharing their stories. I have made a commitment to the seniors of Michigan that I will come to this floor, I will share stories once a week every week until we fix this. Let me share with my colleagues this evening starting with Delores Graychek from Indian River, Michigan. Delores writes and sends me information as follows:

''I heard you talk on TV on January 26 and something does need to be done to help all of us out here that's on seven or eight medications like I am and have no help to pay for them. I picked up six of my seven meds yesterday. The total came to $274.78. That is more than my Social Security check. More than my Social Security check. Each month we get deeper in debt and soon we will be like a lot of other older people. We won't have anything left. We also are paying on hospital bills for me. I had open heart surgery last November. So by the time all of our bills come in, our Social Security checks are gone. I think it's a shame our golden years aren't golden after all. Thank you for what you're trying to do.

Truly, Delores Graychek, Indian River, Michigan.''

I want to thank Delores. She is right. Her golden years should be golden. It is up to us in the Congress to step up and to get it right. If we do not do this in economic good times, we never will. Now is the time to step up and cover prescription drugs under Medicare.

Let me cover another letter that I want to thank Joseph and Ethyl Korn from Marquette, Michigan, in the great upper peninsula of Michigan for writing and sharing this with me.

Dear Congresswoman Stabenow:

My husband and I have an enormous hardship with our prescription bills. Joe, who's a World War II veteran, fought to save our country. He has Parkinson's, mini-strokes, diverticulosis and deep depression. I have high blood pressure and I take my medicine, when I can afford it, including Premarin for my bones. Here is our prescription bill for what we can afford, and you can see I don't get all of mine. Oh, yes, I also have glaucoma and I need eye drops. This is Joseph and Ethyl M. Korn at the Snowbury Heights Retirement Home in Marquette, Michigan.

Mr. COBURN. Madam Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. STABENOW. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. COBURN. I think it is important for us to know, the lady you just described is on Premarin which in this country, a generic has been waiting to be approved by the FDA for 5 years to sell at 20 percent of the price of what she is paying right now, the exact same drug.

Ms. STABENOW. I would reclaim my time and thank my colleague for that information and would be happy to join with him in the issue of generic drugs, as well, as we look at how we lower the costs of prescriptions, because there are a number of different strategies that need to happen today, that need to address how we bring more competition with generics, how we allow the prices to go down because we have Medicare negotiating a group discount.

Right now seniors do not have anybody. If they do not have private insurance, a senior citizen today does not have anybody negotiating a group discount for them while others do have people, whether it is insurance coverage or their HMO.

Let me also share the information: I do have enclosures that I appreciate Joe and Ethyl sending me their expenditures from January 1, 1999, until November 6, 1999. Mr. Korn's total prescription drug cost for this 10-month period was $1,515.36. The total cost for Ethyl, who admits she cannot afford everything she needs, was $324.02.

One of my concerns I hear from friends of mine who are physicians are concerns that people are not purchasing what they need, or that they are taking it the wrong way. I had a physician in Michigan join me at an event and share the fact that he had lost a patient because she was taking her medication every other day, instead of when she needed it, every day.

I have had stories of individuals talking to me about cutting their pills in half so they will last longer. This does not make sense. In our country, with the greatest innovations, the greatest health care innovations, the best research, we need to make sure that our seniors have access to these new medical options that are available, and are not picking between their food, paying their bills and their medicines, and that is what is happening with too many people today.

I want to share one more story, and that is Donald Booms from Lake City, Michigan. I very much appreciate Mr. Booms sharing his story with me as well.

Dear Congresswoman, recently I saw a story on TV about seniors not having insurance for prescription drugs. I am one of those people. I take three prescriptions daily and they cost about $200 a month. My wife is currently on Blue Cross. She goes on Medicare in April of this year, which means she, too, will be without insurance for prescription drugs. She is a diabetic and takes seven prescriptions a day. Her costs will be about $260 a month. Together we will be paying nearly $500 a month for our prescription drugs. Together our Social Security checks are about $1,100, minus $300 for Medicare and Medigap insurance payments, and we have $800 a month to live on. There surely does need to be something done with prescription drugs for seniors.

Thank you, Mr. Booms. There is something wrong when you are having to take $500 out of $800 a month in order to pay for your medications. Once again we are talking about a story of a couple on a fixed income, prior to retirement having access to health care and coverage, going into Medicare and retiring, and then finding themselves in the situation where they are taking the majority of the money that comes in every month just to pay for their medications.

I have hundreds of stories like this, hundreds of stories of people who are struggling every day to pay for their medications and to remain healthy.

When we took our trip to Canada, from Detroit to Windsor, there was a gentleman on the bus named George who is 79 years old, almost 80 years old. He continues to work in order to pay for $20,000 a year in prescription and other health care costs for his wife. His wife is on 16 different medications, and he continues to work so that she can ''live,'' as he puts it, so that she can remain with him. As he was telling me, there were tears in his eyes talking about how he had to keep working so that he could make sure his wife would remain with him and would be alive.

Another gentleman shared with me the fact that he takes one pill a month, and, because of our wonderful new innovations, which we are very appreciative of, that one pill allows him not to have open heart surgery, but the one pill costs $400.

When a pharmaceutical drug company comes forward and says that in order to be able to cover the cost of prescription drugs and address these high costs for seniors we would lose our research, that is just baloney. Twenty cents on every dollar that Mr. Booms or that the Korns are paying, 20 cents on every dollar is going to research.

What we are seeing today is a whole new effort of advertising so that, as my colleague who talked about generic drugs said, the companies want to make sure we ask for the brand name. So we are paying more for advertising than for research.

So the reality is there is a way to get this right if we have the political will to do it. I believe, and I want to call on my colleague from Maine in a moment who has been such a leader as well in this issue, but I believe if we can solve Y2K, because it was a serious issue and we could not afford to let the lights go out and could not afford to let the computers go down, and brought all the American ingenuity together to fix what needed to be fixed, we did it. The lights were on January 1. Why can we not bring this same American ingenuity to help our seniors? Why can we not lower the cost of prescriptions and modernize Medicare to get it right? We can. I am going to be down here every week until we do it.

I yield now to my good friend the gentleman from Maine (Mr. ALLEN).

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding, and I want to thank the gentlewoman for her leadership on this issue. This is something that she and I have been working on now for, well, pretty close to 2 years, pretty close to 2 years, trying to bring the stories of these people, seniors all across this country and others who do not have prescription drug insurance, to the attention of this Congress. Although the issue is rising in terms of its coverage around the country, this Congress has yet to act.

I thought what I would do is talk about a few stories. A few of the stories were the stories that basically I heard when I first began, and they were simple stories, such as a retired firefighter in Sanford, Maine, standing up and telling me I spend $200 a month now on my prescription medication. My doctor just told me I need another prescription. It costs $100 a month, and I am not going to take it, because he could not possibly afford it.

Or the woman who wrote to me in July of 1998, the first of many, with a long list of her prescription drugs. She said in her letter here is a list of the medications that my husband and I are supposed to take. The bottom line was $650. She said here is a copy of our two Social Security checks, which is all the monthly income we have. The bottom line was $1,350.

That math does not work. You cannot have people who are taking in $1,300 a month total income, expected to spend $650 of that for prescription drugs alone. They have got rent, food, heat, and utilities; and it does not work.

I have had women write to me and say I do not want my husband to know, but I am not taking my prescription medication because he is sicker than I am and we cannot both afford to take our medication.

It should not be like that in this country, and there is no reason why it should, but the truth is that 37 percent of all seniors have no coverage at all for prescription medication. Another 16 percent are in these wonderful HMOs that were supposed to provide free prescription drug coverage, and every year the benefits go down, the cap goes down, the premiums go up, and people are left paying more and more of their prescription coverage out of their own pockets.

About 8 percent of people have Medigap prescription drug coverage, but often the cap is about $1,000 a year. That does not do much good for a lot of seniors in this country, who have several thousand dollars of prescription drug expenses in any one year.

Let me tell you about what we did in my district. I sent out a newsletter devoted entirely to health care. It dealt with veterans' care; it dealt with small businesses who were having trouble paying their premiums. It dealt with the veterans' health care, it dealt with seniors, it dealt with prescription drugs.

We got back 5,269 respondents, actually somewhat more than that. But we had a question in a questionnaire attached to this newsletter, and the question was, one of them, do you or your family member take a prescription drug on a regular basis? 4,089 people said yes. Of those 4,089, 1,726 said yes to the question do you have any difficulty paying for the drugs you or your family need? The truth of the matter is, people cannot do it.

We got back comments in response to those questionnaires. Here is one. A woman writes, ''Dear Mr. Allen, do I need help. My Social Security check is $736 a month. My medication is $335 to $350 a month. My Blue Cross, the supplemental insurance, is $106 a month.''

So she did the math. $736 minus $106 for Blue Cross, minus the $350 for medication, left her $280 to live on. And she said ''my husband passed away last July.''

Another woman wrote, ''I am a site manager here at an elderly housing project. I have approximately 110 tenants. We are in low-income housing. It is a crime to see how many people forego their groceries to buy a prescription or forego the prescription so they can eat. Several of my folks here do not have any supplemental insurance and won't go for Medicaid, as they think it is welfare.

''Last March, my husband had an aneurism and had to have surgery. He survived it and was given 2 prescriptions. When I got to the pharmacy I found they came to $300. Needless to say, I didn't have that kind of money. I called his doctor. My doctor is very kind and gives me samples when he can. Otherwise, I would not have them, as we just don't have the financial income to cover everything.''

Another woman writes, ''Since I am self-employed, I cannot afford the expensive health plans, and since I am a diabetic, I should have medication, but I cannot afford medication because that is too expensive. I can't even afford the doctor because they are also too expensive. You have to see a doctor to get the medication. Hopefully there is an answer for me and people like me. I have a question: How can Canada sell the same medication for half the price? They must be doing something right.''

One more story. ''At age 64,'' age 64, remember this, just before Medicare, ''at age 64 my wife is severely disabled by rheumatoid arthritis and is heavily reliant on at least 5 expensive prescription drugs. Over the past 3 years her total costs for those drugs has averaged just over $7,500, of which I have paid just over $2,000 out-of-pocket each year. I am fortunate to be able to cover that cost without sacrifice, but I am very concerned about what our situation will be when my wife turns 65, is forced to give up the private major medical policy which I now buy for her, and has to rely on Medicare and Medigap.''

When she is over 65, she is on Medicare and she no longer has outpatient prescription drug coverage, and the Medigap policies that I mentioned earlier typically have caps of $1,000, $1,200, or, at most, $1,500.

The truth is, the most profitable industry in the country is charging the highest prices in the world to people in this country who do not have health insurance that covers their prescription drugs. Twelve percent of the population is seniors. They buy 33 percent of prescription drugs. In my State of Maine, because there is no significant amount of managed care, I can tell you that just about 50 percent of the seniors in Maine have no coverage at all for their prescription medication, no coverage at all, and we know that over 80 percent of seniors take some prescription drugs, 83, 85 percent, something like that. So they are all taking prescription drugs.

In this context, what we have done on the Democratic side of the aisle is we have a plan, the President's plan for a Medicare prescription drug benefit, a start to help cover prescription medications for seniors who do not have the money to afford it right now.

We also have a bill that I have offered, and the gentlewoman has been a cosponsor from the beginning, which would provide a discount. If there are people who think a Medicare prescription drug benefit is too expensive for us now, we can do a discount, no new bureaucracy, no significant Federal expense, but a discount of up to 40 percent in the prices that seniors pay today for their prescription medications.

The Republicans in this House will not adopt either proposal, will not bring either proposal to the floor. What we hear this week is they are about to bring a proposal forward that is great for the pharmaceutical industry, but it is a disaster for seniors, because it relies on private insurance.

I would ask my friends on the Republican side of the aisle, why is it so difficult to strengthen Medicare? Why is it so difficult to update Medicare and add a prescription drug benefit?

The private sector plans that are out there have prescription drug benefits: Aetna, Signa, United. The major private health care plans around this country have prescription drug benefits. Why not Medicare? Is it that hard?

The answer is, it is not that hard. We could do it, and we could do it now. We could give relief to the seniors who have been writing me, who have been writing the gentlewoman, who have been talking to Democrats all across this country. It is a national scandal that we do not do something about it, and we must before we adjourn this fall.

I just want to say to the gentlewoman from Michigan (Ms. STABENOW) how much I appreciate the gentlewoman's determination, her persistence, her leadership on this issue. She is really doing us all proud. I thank the gentlewoman very much.

Ms. STABENOW. I thank my colleague, who has been a terrific leader, really a pioneer, in this effort. He has been down here making the case.

As the gentleman says, there is more than one strategy. There is a discount by allowing pharmacies to purchase directly from the Federal price schedules. There is opening up the borders to allow people to bring drugs back in, or to do mail order.

Fundamentally what I believe is the long-term solution that we have to come to is taking the health care system for our seniors in the country today and modernizing it to cover the costs of medications. That is the way health care is provided today. We have an opportunity, a once-in-a-generation opportunity where we have choices we can make with a good economy.

In the long run, this saves money by making sure that we keep people healthy and out of the hospital, and allow them to be able to continue to live vigorous lives and be able to have their health care needs met. It makes no sense not to do it right. I want to thank the gentleman for joining me.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK), who has been a terrific leader in Northern Michigan, in the Upper Peninsula. He has been doing studies and meeting with people weekly to hear their concerns. I know the gentleman shares our concern and determination.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for her leadership on this issue.

I was in my office doing some work and I heard the gentlewoman's statements, and statements the gentlewoman has received from around Michigan. She has been a leader around the Nation to try to get prices lower for all our constituents in Michigan. Some have been from Marquette Michigan, the area I represent.

I certainly share the gentlewoman's sentiments. In September of 1998, we had the Committee on Government Reform also do a study in my district, which as the gentlewoman said is the Upper Peninsula, Northern and lower Michigan.

We found that the most favored customers and the big HMOs, those who have insurance coverage, pay about half of what an uninsured senior would have to pay for prescription drug coverage. Not only is there inherent discrimination here, where we make those who can least afford it pay the most because they do not have the purchasing power behind them of a big HMO or a big insurance company.

What we have found also in further follow-up studies, and I know the gentlewoman has mentioned it tonight, in Mexico, Canada, the same drugs, the same companies, the same number of pills in that vial, and they pay 50 to 60 percent less.

Our seniors go to Canada up in our neck of the woods, or if they are in the South, they go to Mexico and get it for half the price.

I saw an article recently in Congress Daily where they said, Well, those countries do not allow us to put our true cost out there, and therefore, those countries have price controls over their prescription drugs. But in the United States, since we do not make any kind of controls or try to rein in these pharmaceutical companies, they charge basically whatever they want.

When we look at these studies, take the study from my district in 1998, they show the return on that investment on that prescription drug for those pharmaceutical companies, a 26.7 percent profit.

When inflation is 3 percent, their profit margin for that year, 1997, the most recent statistics we had, was 26.7 percent. For total profit after all the advertising, after all the research, it was $28 billion.

I do not mind them making a profit, but I do not think in this time of low inflation we should have 26.7 percent profit or $28 billion in profits and not help out those seniors who really need the help.

Take a look at it. I have a letter here from a lady from my district. I am going to be doing town halls for the next two weeks, and the gentlewoman will be also, in Michigan. We are going to hear a lot more about this.

She writes, ''Dear sir, my only income is social security, a check of $685. I live in a L'Anse housing apartment. I pay $147 a month. I had to sell my car. I really do need the help.'' She sends me her prescription drugs. There is $54.39, $50.51, $15.53, $12.74. These are monthly. Add that up.

Here is another one from another lady from L'Anse. She says, ''Dear sir, I am enclosing receipts for medicine I had to take for pneumonia. My husband died December 11, 1998, and I have $634 to live on for the month. I pay $137.64 for Blue Cross insurance. I am 73½ years old and I still work, so I can continue with Blue Cross-Blue Shield and prescriptions. But even with the allowance, I still have to pay about $20 for each prescription I take, and I do it for a month. So even though I have Blue Cross-Blue Shield, I still have to pay another $80 in co-pay. I ask you, I don't have enough to go around. I sure hope something can be done on the price of prescription medicine.''

Again, she made me copies from Primo Pharmacy of all of her parmaceuticals.

Here is another individual from Cheboygan, Michigan. ''In response to your AARP article concerning drug prices for seniors, I am 88 years old, a widow, living on a social security benefit of $814 a month. I am enclosing receipts for my drugs for just 1 month, every month. Some months it is more. The total is $446.36 a month. Seniors really need help with drug prices.'' She signs her letter.

The issue here is, seniors do need help with drug prices, with the costs of their drugs. There are three bills: the Allen bill from the gentleman from Maine, which takes the purchasing power of the Federal government to try to drive down the prices of prescription drugs for seniors who do not have any type of insurance coverage; the Stark bill, which actually says, make it part of Medicare, have universal service. There is the President's bill, which does a little bit of both.

I know the Republican party will be bringing forth a bill, and I look forward to it, but I hope they understand one thing. We have to stop the price discriminatory practices by the pharmaceutical companies and make it universal coverage. In this country, there is no reason why not.

In my district, about 40 percent of seniors do not have any prescription drug coverage. Why should they pay twice, twice as much as someone who happens to have a prescription drug coverage or is part of a large HMO?

As the gentlewoman knows, in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan there are no HMOs. In lower Michigan there is now one left. A very small part of my district can take advantage of an HMO to get prescription drug coverage.

Again, we do not mind them making a buck, but when their return is 26.7 percent, that is better than the market right now. Even after paying all the research, all the advertising, and whenever we open up the magazine it is full of advertising for this drug and that drug, they are still making $28 billion a year. We do not mind a profit, but do not gouge our uninsured seniors to make a profit.

The Democrat party would like to see universal coverage, and stop the predatory price discriminatory practices of the pharmaceutical companies.

I must say, we have to thank the pharmacists throughout the State who have brought this to our attention and have helped us in these studies to show us what they have to pay. It is not their fault. The local pharmacist is doing the best they can. They get the price. If the customer is with Blue Cross/Blue Shield, they pay one price, with Aetna they pay a different price, with the Federal system they pay a different price. That is passed on from the pharmaceutical companies. The markup is very, very small, 1 or 2, 3 percent at most. These are the prices being set by the pharmaceutical companies.

I think in this day and age there is no reason why we cannot have prescription drug coverage for our seniors, especially those who, like these widows that I have brought these letters from, they have written to me, they did not have insurance policies. They did not have insurance plans. Their husbands are deceased. They live on social security. That is it.

No one would devise a Medicare plan nowadays without prescription drugs. Prescription drugs are wonderful. They save lives. We should have it. We should have it for everyone.

I want to thank the gentlewoman for her leadership. I look forward to working with her over the Easter break. I am sure we will be doing more town hall meetings. I am sure we will see more and more discussion about prescription drug coverage. But I thank the gentlewoman for having this special order tonight. It is an issue very near to the seniors in my district and throughout this country.

We reach out to our Republican friends. Together we can solve this problem. I hope that we will be joined by our friends across the aisle to put forth a program to just use the purchasing power of the Federal government under the Federal supply service, pass that on to those uninsured seniors, and we can cut the price in half for those seniors. That is not asking too much. I think we could do that. I hope they will join us with that.

Ms. STABENOW. I thank the gentleman very much for his efforts. I know this adds another dimension in our rural parts of the country in Michigan, up north in the UP, where it is more difficult to get to a hospital or other facilities as well. We need to really be strengthening our home health care and medications so people can be living at home and living with family, and having the opportunity to be independent. They have longer distances as well to drive, and it complicates health care provision, I know.

I want to thank the gentleman for all of his work. He is at the front end of what is happening, and I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. STUPAK) for that.

Mr. Speaker, let me just stress again that we have within our means the ability to solve this problem. Medicare was started in 1965 because half of our seniors could not find insurance or could not afford it. It has now become a great American success story of having a promise that every senior has some basic health care available to them once they reach age 65 or if they are disabled.

What we have today, though, is a false promise, because we cannot provide the kind of health care or access to the kind of health care that is practiced today. That is predominantly through our prescription drug strategies for providing health care. More and more of health care is provided through medications, and if the health care plan does not cover medications, people are in very tough shape.

Our goal is to modernize Medicare to cover the way health care is provided today. That is it. We are hoping that our colleagues will want to do that. My greatest fear is that there will be proposals put forward to subsidize the high cost, help seniors pay for the high prices, but not do anything to get a handle on the prices or bring some accountability to those prices.

We need to have somebody negotiating on behalf of seniors through Medicare to get the same kind of group discounts that people do if they go through a private insurance company or through an HMO. That is what can happen. The purchasing power of Medicare can make that happen, if we act this year. We have the ability to act, we have the resources to act, and we can do that on behalf of all of our seniors if we have the political will to make it happen. We did it with Y2K and we can do it with Medicare and prescription drugs for our seniors.

Mr. Speaker, I know the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) has been from northern Ohio, bordering right on Michigan, and we have a lot of ways in which we work together fighting for our seniors, for our families. She has also been a champion on this issue, as well.

I will just say in conclusion that we are going to keep going every week, every week, every week, until this gets fixed, because we can do no less for our seniors.

CONGRESS SHOULD NOT APPROVE PERMANENT NORMAL TRADE STATUS FOR THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

IN SUPPORT OF PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE FOR SENIORS

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to thank my very able colleague, the gentlewoman from Michigan (Ms. STABENOW), for taking out this special order tonight on the important issue of prescription drugs. I would like to lend my verbal support and moral support to everything she is trying to do in taking on this great leadership challenge for our Nation.

This past weekend I visited one of my dear friends back home who was denied coverage for prescription drugs, and was told that if he were to try to save his life in a cancer treatment, he and his wife would have to cough up $1,500 a week. How would Members like to have to face that decision as they are trying to save their lives, and their family is surrounding them at one of the most difficult times it has ever faced?

So I am with the gentlewoman in her efforts here to do what is right for our senior citizens as well as our families. The people in the room in the hospital were from all ages, all the relatives. Here they had to contend with these insurance companies and all these prescription drug problems when they were trying to deal with a life and death situation.

I thank the gentlewoman from Michigan. We admire the gentlewoman's work and she has our support.

Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to advise my colleagues about one more reason that this Congress should not approve a blank check that will be before us in about 5 weeks called ''Approving Permanent Normal Trade Status for the People's Republic of China.''

I want Members to know, and I am placing in the RECORD the story of another one of my constituents from near Toledo, Ohio, in the village of White House. I hope the message I give tonight will reach the White House here in Washington.

□ 1915

This is the story of Ciping Huang, a Chinese American at the University of Toledo, married to a gentleman from my community. She has been harassed, detained, interrogated, and expelled from China because of her association as a member of the Independent Federation of Chinese Students and Scholars in our Nation. She has been refused reentry into China to visit her ill father who is suffering from cancer, and I can think of no better example of the callous disregard for human rights exhibited daily by the government of the People's Republic of China than her story. I will read her letter to you, and I hope to bring her to Washington as this debate ensues.

She says, ''Dear Congresswoman, my name is Ciping Huang and I am a council member of the Independent Federation of Chinese Students and Scholars in the United States.''

She has been an elected officer in that organization, which was established in 1989, after the Tiananmen Square massacre.

''Unfortunately,'' she writes, ''our involvement, our association's involvement, in democracy and freedom for China has resulted in harsh treatment by the Chinese Communist government, in particular on our student members as they try to return to their homeland. Whether a Chinese citizen or an American citizen, our members can be harassed, detained, threatened or kicked out of China because of our activities. And what are our activities? Consistent delivery of overseas donations to the June 4 massacre victims and families from Tiananmen Square.

We support and have supported conditional yearly renewal of the most favored nation trade status for China, and because we lobby the United States Congress to provide protection for Chinese students and scholars from punishment by the Chinese Government due to their roles in fighting for democracy since 1989.

She says, ''Take my story as an example. In 1998, while I went home to visit my aging parents in China, I was taken away by the secret police for interrogation on many details related to our student association and the activities of other Chinese Democratic groups and organizations.

For several days, they tried to force me to do things I did not want to do, including signing a confession letter. On the fifth day I was given 20 minutes to pack my luggage and say good-bye to my scared parents and was forced into Hong Kong. Still, the secret police told me they had treated me leniently because I am married to an American.

He had contacted his congressional representative, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR), in order to protect me. The government told me I must cooperate with them afterwards and do what they wanted me to do if I ever wanted to return home to visit my parents again.

Last September, I learned my father had a 102 degree fever for several days and was diagnosed with cancer. I decided to take a trip back home immediately. However, about 20 police stopped me at the Shanghai International Airport. They searched my luggage and would not let me make phone calls or even go to the bathroom.

In the airport I asked them to respect the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which the Chinese President had just signed, and let me go visit my ill father, but my plea was simply ignored. I was put on the airplane back to Tokyo, even though they knew that the hospital had sent us a critical condition notice which stated that my father could die any minute.

In Tokyo, I repeatedly appealed to the Chinese authorities to allow me into China for basic humanitarian reasons but to no avail. Up until this day, I still have not been able to visit my poor father.

''For a long time,'' she says,

I have viewed America, its people and its government as the ones who hold the moral flags high who would be willing to help and sometimes sacrifice themselves for the people in the rest of the world to gain their basic human rights and dignity, and for humanitarian reasons.

Now for this permanent normal trade status, as well as admission to the WTO, the World Trade Organization, I wish you could prove that again. I wish you could answer this question correctly: Is business more important than the principles we live by? Do we care about the human rights condition of more than 1.2 billion human lives

In the past, the annual congressional conditional renewal of most favored nation to China was able to provide some leverage for Chinese human rights improvement, such as the release of some political prisoners and the relaxation of the political atmosphere within China. Unfortunately, as you all know, without the attachment of the human rights improvement, conditions in China have deteriorated in the last few years.

Mr. Speaker, at this point I would like to insert the remainder of this letter in the RECORD, and I will come to the floor again to read the conclusion.

The Chinese Communist government has not and will not learn democracy and respect human dignity from the PNTR. They would only take its passage as an advantage and signal that it is OK to continue their miserable, poor record on human rights and democracy.

But, if America could care less about people far away (look at what they have done to FaLun Gong members and Taiwan recently), I hope you do realize that the PNTR would do no more benefit for American workers, especially those in the trade Unions where people earn a living wage with health and retirement benefits. In China, there are no real workers unions; thus, it puts American workers in a much more disadvantaged position to compete with.

Let me stress, I wish that America will protect the human rights of its own people. Furthermore, America should help to protect the human rights of its own people by helping to protect the human rights of the people in the other countries. Only when these countries have human rights and democracy, shall the world be in peace. And I wish we could hold morality above money, but not the other way around. And I wish none of us, including our democratic government, would have to kneel in front of a dictatorial government for money, or mercy, or the human rights we deserve to have. And finally, with all of your conscience and help, I wish that in the near future, I would be able to visit my ill father in my homeland.

Thank you all.

Sincerely,

CIPING HUANG.

WHAT CAN BE DONE TODAY TO CHANGE THE CURRENT CLIMATE AS FAR AS PRESCRIPTION DRUGS FOR SENIORS IN THIS COUNTRY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. REYNOLDS). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. COBURN) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to address the American public and Members of the House tonight. I find myself in a minority in Washington, both among the Republicans and the Democrats. I am a practicing physician that normally practices and sees patients on Mondays and Fridays when I am not in Washington, and I see before us a situation much like a patient who would come to me with a fever, chills and night sweats, and the treatment we are about to give to that patient is to tell them to take an aspirin and cover up in a blanket and go home and they will get better, when the underlying problem is that they have pneumonia. Without totally diagnosing their disease, what I have done is committed inappropriate care and have actually harmed the patient.

If one is a senior citizen tonight, I want them to listen very carefully to what I am going to explain to them about Medicare, and the tack that I am going to take is not necessarily going to be appreciated by most of the Members of this body.

I also happen to be a term-limited Member of Congress. I am not running for reelection, and I want to say that in my heart, knowing how severe the problems are for my patients with prescription drugs, the worst thing we can do for seniors is to add a costly prescription benefit drug to the Medicare program.

I am going to spend the next hour outlining why that is the case and why it ignores what the real problems are in the drug industry and the physician practices that now many of our seniors find themselves involved with.

I also want everyone to know that Medicare has been abused by the Members of this body, the other body and previous Presidents, because most workers in this country, as a matter of fact all workers in this country except if they are a Federal employee, are paying 1.45 cents out of every dollar they earn, no matter how much money they earn, into the Medicare part A trust fund.

As they pay that 1.45 cents, so does their employer. So that is almost 3 cents out of every dollar that is earned by every employee is paid into the Medicare part A trust fund.

The Congress, with the consent of the Presidents over the last 20 years, have stolen $166 billion of that money. What they have done is they have put an IOU in there and said we will pay this back some day in the future, but they took that money and spent it on other programs. They did not say we need to raise taxes to do this good program. They did not say we are going to take the Medicare money and spend it on this program. They just very quietly took $166 billion out of that trust fund for a hospital trust fund and spent it on other programs.

Now that is not a partisan statement. That is Republicans and Democrats alike.

So we now find that as of 2 weeks ago, that trust fund is going to be totally bankrupt by the year 2015.

Now we had some good news this last week. That has advanced to 2023; that is, if we do not do anything with Medicare.

We know that at least 17 cents out of every dollar that is paid out for Medicare is inappropriate. Where is the reform for Medicare? Where is the fix to the very program that is supposed to be supplying the needs of our seniors?

I see every day that I am in practice seniors who have a difficult time accomplishing what I want them to do as far as their drugs. I see seniors, and we have had described tonight, that have to make a choice between whether they are going to eat a meal or take a medicine. That is not all because there is not a prescription drug benefit because of Medicare, and what I want to outline is some of the deeper problems that are associated with the pricing of drugs in this country, the overprescribing of drugs in this country, the lack of review of drugs that seniors are taking in this country, and what we can do about it to fix it before we ever start adding another program.

The reason that that is important, because if we add another benefit now the people who are going to pay for that is our grandchildren. It is not going to be 3 cents out of every dollar. It is going to be 9 cents out of every dollar, and what is really being said is the grandchildren's standard of living, if we establish a Medicare drug benefit, because that is who is going to pay for it because it is going to start in the year 2023 and there is going to be a significant price to pay, and that price is going to be manifested in the fact that their standard of living is going to be far less. They will not buy a new home because they are going to be paying 6 percent additional out of their income for a Medicare program.

What can we do today to change the current climate as far as prescription drugs in this country? I say there is a lot we can do. The first thing we can do is we can ask the President to instruct the FDA to get on the ball as far as generic drugs. The gentlewoman from Michigan mentioned that she had somebody write in and say she was taking Premarin. For 5 years there has been an application pending for an identical drug to Premarin that the vast majority of women over 50 years of age in this country are taking that will sell for one-sixth the cost that Premarin presently sells for.

Premarin sells for, a month, about $30 average in this country. The same drug made in the same plant in Europe, not Canada and Mexico because they have price controls, in Europe sells for $6.95. How is it that we are subsidizing the drug consumption of the rest of the world? There is something wrong with the market.

So it is not a nonconservative position to ask that competition be restored. The first thing we do is we get the FDA to approve more generic drugs.

I might also note that there was a recent release March 16 on four drug companies where the FTC found that two drug companies had paid two other drug companies to delay the release of their generics. In other words, they fixed prices. What that says to us is the Justice Department in this country ought to have an aggressive policy that is going to attack anticompetitive practices in the drug industry. If we do not fix that and we create a Medicare drug benefit, what we are going to do is waste money in Medicare, besides supplying the need for our seniors which is very real. I do not deny that.

If we do not fix that underlying pneumonia in this program and in the drug industry, all we are going to do is pay more money for it.

Those companies, and this can be found on the FTC Web site as of March 16, 2000, if anyone is interested in knowing, clear evidence that there is price fixing that is ongoing in the drug industry today; clear evidence that the Justice Department is not doing its job to make sure that there is competition among the drug industry.

The other thing that is important is 2 years ago, which I voted against and very few of us did, this Congress and this President passed FDA reform which allowed prescription drug companies to advertise prescription-only medicines on television. This year they will spend $1.9 billion on television advertising for medicines that can only be gotten if a doctor writes a prescription for someone.

Who is paying for that? We are paying for it. It is not necessarily more effective for the patient. It does not necessarily make us healthier. It just creates a brand name under which that drug company can sell more of a particular brand of drug without necessarily inuring any health benefit to us as a Nation. We ought to reverse that.

There is no reason to advertise prescription drugs on television. That is $1.9 billion that would drop out of the price of drugs tomorrow. That is expected to go to $5 billion next year. So we can take $5 billion next year out of the cost of drugs.

This year, the average wholesale price of existing drugs in this country rose 12 percent. That is the year 1999. Not new drugs, drugs that were already out there. The costs associated to those drug companies for those was 1.8 percent. So they had a six-fold increase in price for existing drugs with a 1.8 percent increase in price.

That to me tells us that there is no competition in the drug industry. When the average cost of living was less, the increases all across the board were 3 percent, and prescription drugs, not new drugs, not new benefits, not things that were breakthroughs, increased four times the rate of inflation, we have to ask the question, what is going on in the drug industry?

Do not get me wrong. I believe in the free enterprise system. I believe in competition. I believe competition allocates scarce resources very effectively. But we do not have competition in the drug industry today.

A third thing that can happen is we ought to put a freeze, no additional mergers in the drug industry until there is a blue ribbon panel that says there is, in fact, competition to make sure that there is true competition.

A drug was recently introduced that competes with a drug that is on TV, everybody knows it as the purple pill. It is called Prilosec. A new drug, does the same thing slightly different, one would think they would want to get market share. One would think they would want to introduce that new drug at a price lower so that people might switch to that one to use it. Guess what the average wholesale price? Exactly the same as Prilosec. Why is that? Because there is no competition in the drug industry.

Now, the statements I am making on the floor tonight will be met with hardball politics tomorrow by the drug industry, my colleagues can bet it. But unless America wakes up and does not go to sleep saying the problem to solve drugs for our seniors is to create a new program on a bankrupt program and charge it to our grandchildren, we will never solve the problems. The problems are severe.

There is another thing that could happen tomorrow that would help almost every person that has been mentioned in the hour before I started speaking. Almost every drug company in this country has an indigent drug program. They will give drugs free to indigent seniors, but it takes a little work. The doctor has to fill out something. It has to be mailed to the drug company. They will mail them a 30-day supply. One has to keep doing it if one wants them to keep getting it.

The drug companies are willing to do that, but the physicians in this country, because they are already overworked because of the overburdened system of managed care, do not really have the time to take advantage of that.

So here we have a benefit that would lower the cost, would make available drugs to many of our seniors, but it is not being utilized because of the mandated system and lack of competition and the lack of freedom associated with the health care system that we have.

There is still another thing that we could do, and this one my physician friends are not going to like. But we heard comments that a senior was on 17 medicines. Well, I will tell my colleagues any person in this country on 17 medicines is not feeling well. One of the reasons they are not feeling well is the medicines are making them not feel well.

Most good doctors were trained to do a medicine review at least every couple of months on somebody taking 17 medicines. One of the things that makes me happiest when I see seniors, they come to see me, and I look at the medicines they are on, if they are a new patient, the first thing I do is take them off three or four, and they think I am a hero. I am not a great doctor. It is just common sense that if one is on too many medicines, one is not going to feel good.

The second thing is, if one is on 17 medicines, one is not going to be taking them right. So they are not going to be effective.

The third thing is doctors have to pay attention to what medicines cost. Guess what? Most physicians are not doing that. They are writing a prescription. Our goal ought to be, as physicians, is if we are going to help somebody get well, we ought to make sure we can give them a prescription for a drug they can afford to take.

Now, that may not always be the best drug. It may be one that works 95 percent as well. But if they are taking the one that costs $5 that works 95 percent as well compared to the one that costs four or five times as much and worked 99 percent instead of 95, which would one rather have one's mother and father on. I would rather have them on the one they are going to take.

So I think there are a lot of common sense things that ought to be approached before we ever start talking about sacrificing the future of our grandchildren by expanding a new Medicare program.

Now, let me give my colleagues a little history on Medicare. We talked about all the things. The closest the Federal Government, the best the Federal Government has ever done in estimating the cost of a new Medicare benefit they missed by 700 percent. So when my colleagues hear a new drug program is going to cost $40 billion, it is going to cost $280 billion at the least, $280 billion.

Instead of this program being bankrupt in 2023, it is going to be bankrupt in 2007, 2008. Now, politically, if one is running for office, it does not take much courage to say one will vote for a Medicare benefit. But it takes a whole lot of courage to say, I do not think that is the best thing for all of us as a society as a whole.

Why do we not fix the real problems associated with the delivery of medicine and drugs and competition within the health care industry. By ignoring it, that patient I talked about that had pneumonia is going to die, and that is what is going to happen to Medicare. We will not let it die because the career politicians do not have the courage to challenge the system. It was last year that we finally got the Congress to stop touching Social Security money. But this year, if you will notice these charts, you can see how the Medicare money comes in. Medicare trust money comes in, it goes to the Federal Government. They use it, the excess money they put an IOU in there and the IOU is credited to the Medicare trust fund. Here is what is going to happen for the next 2 years.

These are not my numbers. These are Congressional Budget numbers as of 2 weeks ago. This year, the surplus in the Medicare part A trust fund is $22 billion. The surplus in the fiscal year 2000, right now, as estimated by the CBO is $23 billion. So $22 billion of the $23 billion that the politicians in Washington are going to call surplus is actually coming from Medicare trust fund.

Mr. Speaker, how about us not touching that? How about us not spending that on something else? How about us retiring outside debt, so that when it comes time for us to use that, we will have the money, that we will not have to go borrow it from our children and grandchildren.

Year 2001, the same thing, $22 billion of the surplus which is projected right now at $22 billion, it is all Medicare part A money. So we can claim we have a surplus, but we have to wink and nod at you and say, well, it really is part A trust fund money, but we are going to borrow it, because we cannot control the appetite of the Federal bureaucracies. We cannot make them efficient to do what they need to do it, and we cannot meet the needs of the commitments that we have made to the rest of America by making sure government is at least as efficient as the private sector, what we are going to do is we are going to steal the money.

Instead of $166 billion that we owe, we are going to go to $189 billion this year, and then we are going to go to $211 billion next year. And then pretty soon, it is going to tail right back off, because as we add a drug program, the numbers are going to be uncontrollable.

So we have major problems ahead of us, and they are confused because the only thing that the people in Washington want to talk about is answering the easy political problem. A senior has problem buying drugs, so, therefore, we create a Federal program that buys drugs. That is not the answer that our children deserve. That is not the answer that you deserve when you elect people to come up here.

We need to make the hard choices, even if it means we do not get reelected, we need to make the hard choices to fix the programs so they work effectively.

I notice a friend of mine has shown up, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT), and I would welcome him and recognize him now and yield to him.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. COBURN) for yielding and for this special order and I thank our colleagues earlier for talking about this problem, because it is a major problem. And, unfortunately, for both the administration and some of the leadership here in Congress, what we are talking about is solving what some people say is the problem, and that is that seniors are not getting the prescription drugs or a benefit that some people feel they should, when the real problem is runaway prices, and as the gentleman indicated earlier, a tendency to overprescribe.

Mr. Speaker, I am not certain what we can do in terms of influencing the medical professionals as it relates to overprescribing, but I think we need to take an honest and sober look at how much Americans pay for prescription drugs relative to the rest of the world. Now, I do not believe in price controls. I believe in markets. I believe at the end of the day that markets are more powerful than armies.

Last Saturday night, I was privileged to attend a dinner and the last leader of the Soviet Union, Mikhail Gorbachev, spoke to us; and it was interesting, because as he talked for an hour and 12 minutes, he went through sort of his metamorphosis and where he finally came to the acknowledgment that they could not compete with the United States, that a market economy was much more efficient than a controlled government-run economy.

He finally reached the point where he realized that both militarily, economically, and, perhaps, even socially and culturally, that the West had won, and they had to do something else. I believe in markets.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the idea of having a big government bureaucracy trying to control prices and make certain that everybody gets the right drugs, I think that is ridiculous; and frankly, if anything, here in Washington, we ought to be restricting the power of the Health Care Finance Agency and of the FDA.

Let me just run through this. There is a group, I believe they are out of Utah. I owe them a big debt of gratitude William Faloon has put out a brochure, and this is available to any Member or anyone else who wants to call my office, we will send them out a copy of this. They have done an interesting study on the differences between prescription drug prices here and in Europe.

We have a tendency to still think of Europe as being sort of our adolescent child. After World War II, the United States basically made certain that the European economy was rebuilt, but today the European Union has a bigger economy, in terms of gross domestic product, than we do. It is interesting in respects, we continue to subsidize what is happening in Europe, whether it is militarily and even in drugs.

Let me just run through a few of these drugs. And frankly the gentleman probably knows better than I do what these drugs are prescribed for, but these are some of the most commonly prescribed drugs in the world. One the gentleman mentioned earlier is Premarin. The average price in the United States, according to a study done by the Life Extension Foundation, Mr. Faloon's organization, the average price in the United States last year was $14.98 for a 28-day supply. The average price in Europe is $4.25.

Mr. COBURN. For one third of the price?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Less than a third of the price.

Mr. COBURN. The same drug?

Mr. GUTKNECHT. The same drug made by the same company in the same plant under the same FDA approval.

Mr. Speaker, let me run through a few more. Synthroid, now that is a drug that my wife takes. In the United States, the average price for a 50-tablet supply of 100 milligrams, the average price in the United States $13.84. In Europe, it is $2.95. Cumadin, that is a drug that my dad takes. He has a heart condition. It is a blood thinner I understand. Cumadin, 25 capsules, 10 milligrams, the average price in the United States $30.25; the average price in Europe $2.85.

Let us take Claritin, which is a commonly prescribed drug in America today, and they advertise quite heavily, as the gentleman indicated earlier, the average price in the United States for a 20-tablet supply of 10 milligrams is $44. In Europe that same drug made in the same plant by the same company, same dose everything is $8.75.

Augmentin, and I do not know what Augmentin is for perhaps the gentleman does.

Mr. COBURN. Augmentin is a very effective antibiotic.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. For Augmentin, a 12-tablet supply of 500 milligram here in the United States we pay an average of $49.50. In Europe, for exactly the same drug, the price is $8.75.

□ 1945

Glucophage. Perhaps the gentleman can share with us what this is.

Mr. COBURN. That is an anti-diabetic drug.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Apparently it is commonly prescribed; 850 milligram capsules, quantity of 50. The average price in the United States is $54.49. The average price in Europe is $4.50.

And this is a group in Minnesota that has done this study. Another commonly prescribed drug, Prilosec, the average price here in the United States is around $100 for a 30-day supply. That same 30-day supply, if a person happened to be vacationing in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and they take their prescription into a drugstore there, they will pay $50.80 for the drug that sells in the United States for roughly a hundred dollars.

But here is what is even more troubling. I will use that term. What is more troubling is that if we were to buy that same drug, same company, same FDA approval, but we purchase it in Guadalajara, Mexico, that same drug sells for $17.50.

Now, I do not believe in price controls. I do not believe we should have a new agency to try to control drug prices. I believe that markets are more powerful than armies. But let me just say this. A few years ago this Congress passed the North American Free Trade Agreement; and we allow corn, we allow beans, we allow lumber, we allow cars, we allow steel, and we allow all kinds of goods to go back and forth across the border between the United States and Canada and between the United States and Mexico. That is what free trade is all about. But there is one exception. We do not allow prescription drugs to go across those borders.

And, really, to give an analogy, and it is the best analogy that I have come up with, let us just say that there are three drugstores. One is on the north side of town, one is on the south side of town, and one is downtown. Now, there is over a 50 percent difference in the prices that those three stores charge, but our own FDA, our own Federal Government, the Food and Drug Administration, says, Oh, you American consumers can only buy your drugs from the most expensive store.

Now, I asked a businessperson this morning. I said, Suppose you are in a business, and you find out that you are the largest customer of a particular supplier, and yet you also find out that they are selling exactly the same thing to some of your friends that are in the business cheaper than they are selling to you, even though you are their biggest customer. How long do my colleagues think that would last? But that is exactly what is happening in the drug industry.

The FDA, and I believe really without any legislative approval, has decided that they will unilaterally stop the importation of drugs into the United States which are otherwise approved in the United States. And to me that is outrageous. We should not stand idly by as a Congress and allow our own FDA to stand between American consumers in general and American seniors in particular. We should not allow our own FDA to stand between them and lower drug prices.

And the one great thing about markets, whether we are talking about oil or we are talking cotton or we are talking about prescription drugs, I do not care what it is, the great thing about markets is they have a way of leveling themselves.

In southeastern Oklahoma, I will bet that if the gentleman goes to any of the elevators in his district, he will find that the elevator in Enid—well, Enid is not in the gentleman's district. I am trying to think of one of the towns. I have been to virtually every town in the gentleman's district. But if the gentleman were to go to one town in southern Oklahoma, the wheat price might be X amount today. And if the gentleman called over to another elevator, it might be a different price. The chances are the prices would be different.

But over time, what would happen? Those prices would tend to self-regulate. Because the farmers start figuring out that if the elevator in Enid, Oklahoma, is paying a higher price than the one in Muskogee, they will all start going to Muskogee. And what happens is the prices start to level. That is the way markets work. The unfortunate thing is that our Federal Government has been standing in the way of allowing those markets to work.

And so, again, I would say that Members who would like a copy of this brochure, and I must say that I had nothing to do with writing this, but this brochure, put out by the Life Extension Foundation, is a reprint of their February Year 2000 brochure, which tells the whole story. It gives an excellent chart of how much more American consumers are paying.

Now, again, I do not want price controls. But this is what I say to my seniors: we should not have ''stupid'' tattooed across our foreheads. It is outrageous that Americans are paying upwards of 40 percent more than the rest of the world for prescription drugs, and it seems to me that we have a moral obligation, particularly now that we are having this discussion about opening up, in effect, perhaps a new entitlement, if we do that without dealing with the real problem, which is runaway prices, then I say, shame on us.

I yield back to my colleague from Oklahoma.

Mr. COBURN. Well, I thank the gentleman for making the point on competition, and I think that is the question I would ask of the seniors and those that are out there working today and those that are going to be working tomorrow. Would it not make sense to try to fix competition within the industry, improve the quality of our health care and increase the efficiency and accuracy of the system before we go solve the problem?

The question is can we make sure our seniors have available to them the drugs that they need, that will give them effective treatment, and can we do that in a compassionate way so that they are not passing up supper to take a pill or they are not missing a pill to get supper? Can we do that without creating a big government program?

I can tell my colleague that I believe we can. It will not be easy, because we will have to attack our friends. We are going to have to say there is not good competition. We are going to have to go back in and make sure that the branches of government that are involved in assuring competition in the drug industry are there.

That is not to say that the drug companies do not do a wonderful job in their research. And it is not to say that they are not going to be doing an even better job as we have all these genetically engineered drugs that will come about in the next 10 years. But we hear the drug companies say that they will not be able to do this because all these prices are based on the fact that we spend all this money on R&D. Well, the fact is the pharmaceutical industry spends more money on advertising than they do on research. They have a cogent argument as soon as that number on advertising drops significantly below the amount of money that they are spending on research. Until then, they do not have an argument that holds any water.

So our seniors out there tonight that are having trouble getting prescription drugs and affording it, the first thing they need to do is to ask their doctor to make an application for them for the indigent drug program that almost every drug company has. That way they can at least have the drugs.

Number two, they should ask their doctor if in fact there is not a generic drug that could be used that will be almost as effective and that will save a significant amount of money each year.

Number three, they should ask the doctor if he or he is sure that every medicine they are taking they have to be taking. That way we can make sure that the patients are getting medicines that they need today; that the medicines that they are taking are as effective and cost effective as well, and that they truly need them.

That takes care of part of the demand. The other thing they can do is insist that their representatives ask the Justice Department to look aggressively at collusion and anti-competitive practices within the drug industry. They should ask their elected representative to reverse the bill 2 years ago that allowed drug companies to advertise prescription drugs on television. Because we could save at least $2 billion this year, $5 billion next year in terms of the cost of drugs.

Finally, they should ask that their representative not steal one penny from Medicare this year to run the Government. And if in fact we do those things, we can meet the needs of our seniors, we can preserve Medicare and extend its life, and we can assure that our children and our grandchildren are not going to be burdened with another program that is inefficient, underestimated in cost, and really does not solve the underlying problem associated with prescription drugs for our seniors.

I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for any additional comments.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Well, I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. COBURN).

I would only say that I think what the gentleman is really saying is, and this is really an interesting debate, that at the end of the day it is about fundamental fairness. It is, from a generational perspective, wrong for us to borrow from the next generation.

But it is also wrong for the drug companies to require Americans to pay the lion's share of all the research and development cost as well as footing most of the cost for their profit. And the dirty little secret is that that is what is happening in the world today. We have a world market, but the drug companies have realized that they can get most of their profit, most of their research and development money, from the American market.

Now, I think Americans should pay their fair share of research cost. I think that is important. I agree with the gentleman that I am not certain Americans should have to pay advertising costs. Ultimately, it really should be the decision of the doctor more than being market driven and having almost a pulling effect through the marketplace by advertising, by broadcasting on television, radio, and so forth. I am sure that that is an issue that we need to address.

But I want to come back to just how much more we pay. It is not just us saying this. This is a study done by the Canadian Government. If people forget everything that I have said tonight, remember a couple of numbers. One of the most important numbers is 56. By their own study, the Canadian government says that Americans pay 56 percent more for their prescription drugs than Canadians do.

Now, 56 is important, too, because over the last 4 years prescription drugs in the United States have gone up 56 percent, 16 percent just in the last year. One of the biggest driving costs in terms of the cost of insurance over the last several years has been the increasing cost of prescription drugs.

Now, again, that is important. We need prescription drugs. We need to make certain that we are doing what we can so that the next generation of drugs can come online. I believe in research, and I believe part of the reason we enjoy the high standard of living that we do in America today is because of the research that has been done in the past. So we do not want to cut that. We do not want to create a new bureaucracy. But we also do not want to steal from our kids, and we do not want to ''solve this problem'' by creating a whole new entitlement.

Here is another fact. Last year, according to the Congressional Budget Office, we, the American people, we the taxpayers, the Federal Government, spent over $15 billion on prescription drugs. Now, that is through Medicare, Medicaid, the VA, and other Federal agencies.

Mr. COBURN. Let me clarify that for a minute, because I want to be sure all our colleagues understand that. That is Federal payments for prescription drugs.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Just Federal payments. Now, there is a match with Medicaid, there is a match with some of the other programs, and of course in some of those cases the individuals themselves had some kind of a copayment. But that is what the Federal Government spent for prescription drugs last year, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

Now, virtually every study I have seen, independent studies, say that Americans are paying at least 40 percent more than the world market price for those drugs. Now, I am not good at math, and I demonstrated that this morning; But let us say 30 percent. Let us say we are already getting some discounts. And I suspect we are. I do not think we are paying full retail at the Federal level for our prescription drugs. So let us say we are getting some discounts. But let us just say we could bring our prices somewhere near the world average price for these same drugs. If we could save 30 percent times $15 billion, that is over $4 billion.

That would go a long ways to solving our problem, to making certain that people on Medicare all have the opportunity to get the drugs that they need and, again, that they do not have to make the choice that the gentleman talked about earlier. They do not have to choose between eating supper on Friday or taking the drugs they need, not only to preserve their health but to preserve their quality of life. Because drugs are important in that regard. It is not just about extending our life, it is about improving the quality of our life.

And drugs are wonderful things. And I certainly do not want to take anything away from the pharmaceutical companies. But as I say, I do not think we should be required to pay more than our fair share of the cost of developing those drugs, of making those drugs, of getting those drugs approved, and then plowing more money back into the next generation.

So I think we are on the same page. I just want to finally say this. This is a matter of basic fairness. As I said earlier, I do not think we should allow our own FDA to stand between American consumers and more reasonable drug prices, because that is what is happening today.

Finally, not hearing most of the discussion from our friends that spoke before us, this is not a debate between the right versus the left. It is not even a debate between Republicans versus Democrats. This is really a debate about right versus wrong. And it is simply wrong for us to shovel billions of more dollars into an industry who right now is charging Americans billions of dollars more than they would normally pay in terms of a world market price.

The answer is not to steal more from our kids to give more money to the big pharmaceutical companies. The answer is coming up with a market-based system that allows some kind of competitive forces to control the price of the drugs and therein creating the kinds of savings which will make it much easier for us and for those seniors to get the drugs that they need.

And so, my colleague is absolutely right, this is not an unsolvable problem. If we will work together, if we will listen to each other, if we will be willing to tackle some of those tough problems, and if we are willing to take on some of the entrenched bureaucracies, whether it is at the FDA or the large pharmaceutical company, the Department of Justice, and even some of our friends in the medical practice, if we are willing to ask the tough questions, force them to have to work with us to find those answers, this is a very solvable problem.

I just hope we do not make the mistake of creating a new expensive bureaucracy, a new expensive entitlement and, at the very time we ought to be doing more to control the prices of prescription drugs, have the net practical effects of driving them even higher. That would be a terrible mistake not just for this generation but for the next, as well.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

In closing, the next time my colleagues hear a politician from Washington talk about prescription drugs, ask themselves why they are not treating the pneumonia that this industry has, ask themselves why they are not saying there needs to be competition in drugs, ask themselves why they are not saying the FDA needs to be approving more generics, ask themselves why they are not speaking about the underlying problems associated with delivery of health care and medicines to our seniors instead of creating a new program which our children will pay for but, most importantly, will be twice as expensive as what it should be because we have not fixed the underlying problems.

I want to leave my colleagues with one last story. I recently had one of my senior patients who had a stroke. She was very fortunate in that she had no residuals. But the studies of her carotid arteries proved that she had to be on a medicine to keep her blood from clotting.

One of my consulting doctors wanted to put her on a medicine called Plavix. It is a great drug. It is a very effective drug. The only problem is it costs over $200 a month. The alternative drug that does just as well but has a few more risks, which she had taken before in the past, is Coumadin.

Now, the difference in cost per month is 15-fold. I could have very easily written her a prescription for Plavix. She would have walked out of the hospital, not been able to afford the Plavix, and had another stroke, or I could have done the hard work and said, this is going to do 95 percent of it. It is going to be beneficial. It has a few risks. Here is what this costs. What do you think? She chose to take the Coumadin because that gives her some ability to have some control of her life.

So these are complex problems; and I do not mean to oversimplify them, and I do not mean to derange either the physicians, the patients, or the drug companies, other than to say that our whole economy is based on a competitive model and, when there is no competition, there is price gouging.

Today I honestly believe in the drug industry there is price gouging. We need to fix it, and we need to fix that before we design any Medicare benefit to supply seniors with drugs, especially since there are free programs out there that are not being utilized that are offered by the drug companies.

DIFFERENCES IN APPLICABILITY OF WATER USAGE IN WEST AS COMPARED TO EAST

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALDEN of Oregon). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, this evening in my night-side chat I would like to take the opportunity really to talk about three subjects.

The first subject is the subject that is very important to all of us, obviously. It is the only way that we can survive. But in the West there is a lot of differences on the applicability of it as compared to the East. And that is water.

The second issue that I would like to talk about tonight is also a doctrine that has particular specifics in regards to the West. It is called the Doctrine of Multiple Use.

The third subject I hope I get an opportunity this evening to talk about is on the issue of education.

Mr. Speaker, it seems, as my colleagues know, last evening I spoke about education. I spoke about discipline in the classroom. I spoke about the fact that we need to assist our teachers out there by having some consequences of misbehavior in the classroom. And apparently I hit a soft spot with some people because I heard from some people overnight say, how dare you talk about discipline in the classroom.

I could not believe it. Some of these people were very antagonistic. I am pleased to say I did not get many letters out of the West. I got them out of the East. And I am sure I got them, in my opinion, from some pretty liberal people that, for some reason, think that we should follow political correctness when we talk about classroom discipline, that, for some reason, classroom discipline really is not a problem in today's school system. So I hope I have an opportunity to come back to that subject because it is something I believe very firmly in.

Education is so fundamental for the survivability of this country. It is so fundamental for our country to remain the superpower in this world that we have to give it all of the attention that we can give to it. But it also means that we have got to be ready to face the music. And when we have problems with discipline in our school system, sometimes we cannot be politically correct. Sometimes we have got to go right directly to the problem. I hope we have an opportunity to talk about that.

But let us talk and begin, first of all, by talking about water. Water in the West is very critical. One of the concerns I have is here in the East. In fact, when I came to the East for the first time, I was amazed at the amount of rain that we get in the East. In the West, we are in a very arid region, and we do not have that kind of rainfall. It does not rain in the western United States like it rains in the eastern United States. As a result of that, we have different problems that we deal with in regards to water.

My district is the Third Congressional District of Colorado, as my colleagues know. It is a mountain district. The district actually geographically is larger than the State of Florida. And if any of my colleagues here have ever skied in Colorado, if they have ever gone into the 14,000-foot mountains, with the exception of Pike's Peak, they are in my district in Colorado.

Water is very critical, as it is everywhere else. But we are going to talk about some of the different aspects of water, about the spring runoff, about water storage, about water law in general, about how we came about to preserve and to store our water through water storage projects.

But let us begin I think with an appropriate quote from a gentleman named Thomas Hornsberry Ferrell. He said, speaking about Colorado, ''Here is a land where life is written in water. The West is where water was and is father and son of an old mother and daughter following rivers up immensities of range and desert, thirsting the sundown, ever crossing the hill to climb still drier, naming tonight a city by some river a different name from last night's camping fire. Look to the green within the mountain cup. Look to the prairie parched for water. Look to the sun that pulls the oceans up. Look to the cloud that gives the oceans back. Look to your heart, and may your wisdom grow to the power of lightning and the peace of snow.''

Let us say a few basic facts so that we understand really some fundamental things about water. First of all, I have got a chart and I know it is somewhat small, but I hope that my colleagues are able to see it. Let me go through it. It talks about water usage. It is very interesting, very few people realize how much water it takes for life to exist, how much water it takes to feed a person three meals a day, how much water it takes to feed a city, for example, their drinking water or their cleaning water or their water for industrial purposes. But this chart kind of gives us an idea.

The chart is called ''water usage.'' I would direct the attention of my colleagues to my left to the chart. Americans are fortunate, we can turn on the faucet and get all the clean, fresh water we need. Many of us take water for granted.

Have my colleagues ever wondered how much water we use every day? This is direct usage of water on a daily basis, our drinking and our cooking water. Now, this is per person. Our drinking and our cooking water, two gallons of water a day. Flushing of our toilets on a daily basis, five to seven gallons per flush. That is on an average. We now have some toilets that have reduced that usage somewhat. Washing machines, 20 gallons per load. Now, remember, this is daily. Twenty gallons per load. Dishwasher, 25 gallons every time we turn on that dishwasher. Taking a shower, 7.9 gallons per minute. In essence, eight gallons every minute a person is in the shower. Eight gallons of water.

Now, growing foods takes the most consumption of water. As I said earlier, water is the only natural resource that is renewable. But in our foods, growing foods, the actual agriculture out there is the largest consumer of water in the Nation. And here is why growing foods takes the most water.

One loaf of bread takes 150 gallons of water. From the time they till the field, to watering the field, to harvest the wheat, to take care of the industrial production of the bread, to actually have the bread mix made and have it delivered, 150 gallons of water for one loaf of bread.

One egg. To produce one egg through the agriculture market, it takes 120 gallons of water. One quart of milk, 223 gallons of water. One pound of tomatoes. One pound of tomatoes takes 125 gallons of water. One pound of oranges, 47 gallons of water. One pound of potatoes, 23 gallons of water. Those are pretty startling statistics.

We go down a little further. Did my colleagues know it takes more than a thousand gallons of water a day to produce three balanced meals for one person? So, in one day, for one person to have three balanced meals, when we total up all the water necessary to provide for that, it is a thousand gallons of water a day.

What happens to 50 glasses of water? On the chart here on my left that I direct my colleagues to, we have 50 glasses of water. Forty-four glasses of water are used for agriculture. Two glasses are used by the cities for domestic water. And a half a glass is used for rural housing. But we can see, out of the 50, 44 glasses of water are used just for agriculture.

Now, there is some very interesting things about water in the world. Keep in mind these statistics. Ninety-seven percent of the water supply in this world is salt water. And today's technology, although we have a very expensive process for desalinization of plants, essentially, we really do not have an economical process to take salt water and convert it to drinking water. Ninety-seven percent of the water in the world today is salt water. Of the remaining three percent, we have three percent left, 75 percent of that remaining three percent is water tied up in the ice caps. Of all the water we have, only .05 percent of that water is in our streams and in our lakes. So it gives us an idea of the challenge that we face.

Now, in the United States, when we take a look at what is the lay of the water, we find that 73 percent of the stream flow in the United States is claimed by States east of the line drawn north to southeast of Kansas.

So 73 percent of the water in the United States lies in this part of the Nation. Now, when we take a look at the Pacific Northwest, in the Pacific Northwest there is about 12 percent of the water. Over here we have 73 percent of the water essentially in the East. Up in the Pacific Northwest, we have about 12, 13 percent of the water. The balance of the water which is about 14 percent, is water that is shared by 14 States in the West. This is the arid region of the United States, those 14 States. They include States like Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah, Arizona, Colorado, Nevada. Those are the dry States in our country.

Now, Colorado is the highest State in the Nation. In fact, the Third Congressional District which I represent in Colorado is the highest congressional district in the Nation. So as a result of that, we have a lot of variance over, say, a lower elevation. For example, our evaporation. We have about an 85 percent factor of evaporation at that kind of altitude; and we have a lot of water, as Members know. We have a lot of snow that comes down, but we have to deal with evaporation at a very high percentage.

When we talk about Colorado, what I am going to do instead of talking about all of the States of the West, I thought I would focus specifically, obviously, on the area I know the best, and that is Colorado. Let us talk about the characteristics of Colorado and the different problems and issues that we deal with water in Colorado.

On average in Colorado, we get about 16, 16½ inches of water every year. We do not have much rainfall. If Members have been out to the mountains of Colorado, which as I said earlier is the district that I represent, they know that in the springtime and throughout the summer we have rains, but those rains are very brief. Our typical rainstorm comes in, lasts 20 minutes, and it goes away, comes back the next day and generally in the mountains.

Out in the plains we may not see it for a long time. We do not have heavy rains as you do here in the East. But we have a lot of variances. For example, in my particular district, in the region of the mountains, we have 80 percent of the water. Eighty percent of the population in Colorado lives outside those mountains, in cities like Denver and Colorado Springs and Fort Collins and Pueblo. Now, in Colorado because we do not have much rainfall, we depend very heavily on the snows during the wintertime and for a period of about 60 to 90 days called the spring runoff when the snow melts off our highest peaks and comes down, for that period of time we have all the water we can handle. But after that period of time in Colorado, if we do not have the capability to store our water, to dam our water, we lose the opportunity to utilize that water.

Now, the rivers and streams throughout this Nation have a lot of history to them. When we take a look at the frontiersmen that went out into the West, for example, to settle the West, remember the old saying, go West, young man, go West. When we take a look at it through these wilderness areas, and everything was wilderness in the West, really your path, your highway through the wilderness were the rivers and the streams. It is where life really centered around, the communities were built around it, the trappers. The trappers trapped by the rivers and the streams. Even the miners and the minerals when they discovered minerals in the Rocky Mountains of Colorado, for example, it centered around streams. That is why when you go through Colorado, most of your communities are built there near the streams.

But what is unique about Colorado is we are the only State in the union where all of our free-flowing water goes out of the State. Colorado is the only State in the union that has no free-flowing water coming into the State that we are able to utilize. So as you can guess, as they say, water runs thicker than blood in Colorado and that applies to the other mountain States and the West in general.

Now, Colorado is called the mother of rivers. Why? Because we have four major rivers that have their headwaters in the State of Colorado. We have the Colorado River, and I will come back to the Colorado River in a moment. We have the South Platte River, and the South Platte River drains the most populous section of the State and serves the area with the greatest concentration of irrigated agricultural lands in Colorado. That is the South Platte.

We have the Arkansas River. That begins up near Ledville, Colorado. It flows south and then east through southern Colorado and then down towards the Kansas border. We also have the Rio Grande River. That Rio Grande drainage basin is located in south central Colorado. It is comparatively small compared to the other rivers and has less than 10 percent of the State's land area in it.

Let us talk about the Colorado River. That is a very important river for the entire Nation. Twenty-five million people get their drinking water out of the Colorado River. The Colorado River drains over one-third of the State's area. And although only about 20 percent of the Colorado River basin exists in the State of Colorado, the State of Colorado puts about 75 percent of the water into that basin.

The Colorado River provides a lot of things besides water. It provides clean hydropower, for example. Just out of the Colorado River alone, we irrigate over 2 million acres of agricultural land throughout that river basin. Now, the river is very unique. As Members know as I described earlier in the West, everybody is trying to grab for water. And so as a result of that, there are a lot of what we call ''compacts.'' They are in essence treaties, how do we agree how the water is going to be shared.

And, of course, we also have to remember there are some basic things about water. Remember I said earlier that water is the only natural resource that renews itself. In other words, what logically follows is one person's water waste could be another person's water. For example, some people have said in Colorado, why don't you go and line your ditches, let's put concrete on the bottom of your ditches and therefore you avoid seepage; the water doesn't seep out of the ditch. Well, you have to be careful about that because that water seepage may be the very water that provides water for the spring or the well or the aquifer many, many miles away.

Someday technologically, I hope in our lifetime, we will be able to pull up on a computer screen the map, the water map as, for example, in the State of Colorado where all of those little fingers of water, where they all begin, where they all move, how they move, at what speed they move, and what kind of cleansing process they go through. It is very interesting if you really want to get into it.

But water on its face is a pretty tough product to sell an interest in. Why? I do not mean property interest. I mean, people do not worry much about water as long as they turn on the faucet and the water is there, number one, and, number two, the water is clean. Therefore, it is an obligation of the leaders of our country, leaders such as you and myself, it is our obligation to assure that we have quantity of water and that we have clean water for the future.

Let us go back to the Colorado River basin for a moment. The Colorado River basin really has compacts on it, and because the Colorado River goes down throughout and actually ends up in the Gulf of Mexico, the Colorado River really goes to Mexico, ends up in the Gulf of Mexico, we have several compacts. The major compact, the Colorado River compact, is between the upper basin States and the lower basin States. The upper basin States, for example, would be Colorado, Utah, New Mexico. Lower basin States would be like Arizona, California, Nevada. And we have an agreement on the Colorado River on this Colorado River compact which says that the upper basin States and the lower basin States are each entitled to 7½ million acre/feet per year. An acre/foot is enough to feed a family of four. It would be about a foot of water over a football field, enough water that should feed a family of four for a year. 7½ million acre/feet per year is how that is divided.

I am going to get into a little more about that, but first of all let us talk a little about Colorado water law. I am just going to summarize and give some very basics to it, Mr. Speaker, because the law here in the East is really based on the riparian doctrine. Our doctrine is based on what is called the Colorado doctrine in the State of Colorado. The history of the doctrine came about in the California gold rush days, when all of a sudden we had a lot of settlers going out to the mountains about 1849. And because the water in Colorado, because of the aridness of the Colorado, we came up with the doctrine that no matter how far away you are from the river, our doctrine is first in use, first in rights. So the first one to go to the river and use the water, no matter how far away they live from the river, if they are first to use it, they get first right. If they are second to use it, they fall in priority to second place; if they are third to use it, they fall in priority to third place. That is basically known as the doctrine of prior appropriation.

Now, as I said, the eastern States primarily follow the riparian doctrine. Now, the Colorado constitution, in addition to having the doctrine of prior appropriation, also recognizes uses in priority. The highest priority or the preference of water use with the highest priority in Colorado is domestic use for your home, the second use is agricultural use in priority, and the third use is industrial use.

In Colorado, we also have a unique situation. We are pretty proud of this because we are very conscious of the environment out there. Obviously, if you have been out to the district, you have been out to Colorado, you have a deep appreciation of why we are proud of our environment out there, what we have to protect out there. One of the things that we have discovered throughout the years is there is a lot of damage to an environment if you run the creek dry. So what we have done in Colorado is we have appropriated in-stream rights, minimum stream flows over thousands of miles of stream beds so that we guarantee that a minimum amount of water will remain in those streams so that we can mitigate and minimize the environmental impact.

Now, clearly we are always going to have some impact. If you are going to take water out and drink it, you are going to have less water in the stream or in the creek. So you are going to have an impact. We have to have a balance there. We think in Colorado we reach a pretty good balance. Now, clearly we have some people that object to that. We have some people, especially located in the East, things like Ancient Forests and some of the Earth First and some of those type of people, the National Sierra Club, those people that want all of our dams taken down.

In fact, the National Sierra Club, their number one priority is to take down Lake Powell. Lake Powell has more shoreline than the entire Pacific West Coast. Lake Powell is a major power producer, hydropower, clean power. Lake Powell is the major flood control dam we have in the West. Lake Powell is the main family recreational area for many States around it. Now, the only people that would want to take down Lake Powell are people that do not have, in my opinion, a lot of, one, appreciation for the uniqueness of the West and the needs of the West; two, do not have a lot of appreciation for human needs; and, three, frankly maybe they do not care about the needs of the West.

But let us go back to our subject here at hand. We have given a brief outline of the prior appropriation. Now, let us talk about water storage. As I mentioned to you earlier, we just talked a little about Lake Powell, but water storage is critical for us in the West. We have to have these dams. The Federal Government recognized this many years ago. Great governmental leaders like Wayne Aspinall, a Congressman from the State of Colorado, helped authorize these projects. And we had support frankly from Congresspeople, colleagues of ours that preceded us, colleagues from the East, colleagues from across the Nation that recognized that out in the West we had to have water storage.

I hope that many of my colleagues, while tonight you may not be particularly interested in Western water problems, I hope that tonight's comments give you an opportunity that when some questions arise, for example, about Lake Powell or water storage projects, you remember the reason that these were put up. In the West, we did not just go out willy-nilly and say, let's put a dam here and let's put a dam there. That did not happen. There are reasons that those dams are there. There are reasons that we have to store that water. And so I urge my colleagues, as the issues of water and storage of water in the West come in front of you, take a deep look at why those projects were built in the first place, why those projects are important for the West.

We have a project we are going to talk about this year, the Animas La-Plata project, a very interesting project. I am going to spend a couple minutes with you right now talking about that.

Years ago, when the population in the East and our leaders back here in the East wanted to settle the West, they ran into a number of different problems. One of the problems were the Indians. My gosh, there are people on this land that we want.

Well, the response to it was, we will push them off it. What do we do with them? Essentially what they did when they got to Colorado is they took the Indians and said, look, we are going to shove you into the mountains. We want the plains. We want the large herds of buffalo. We want the agricultural lands out there. So sorry, Indians, there is not room for you. We are going to shove you into the mountains. So they shoved them into the mountains.

Then what happened was they began to discover minerals in the mountains. The white men found there were gold in the streams, in the creeks. There were massive mineral deposits in those mountains. Those mountains all of a sudden became valuable.

So, what did they do? Time for the Indians to move again. They took the Indians and they moved them down to the southwestern part of Colorado, down into the desert. And, mercifully, somebody in the administration or in the leadership back then said, look, there is no water down there. There is not water for those people in those desert lands. We need to provide some water for them.

So that is exactly what they did. The government provided water rights, and promised the Native Americans, the Indians, as they were called back then, promised water rights for their lands.

Well, years ago when the water projects for the West were authorized, the government agreed with the Native Americans to go ahead and help develop those water rights. Those were water rights owned by the Native Americans pursuant to treaty.

So as a part of the development of those water rights so the Native Americans could utilize the water they had been promised, that they had contracted for, in order to help them develop it, they promised certain water storage projects, one of them being the Animas La-Plata.

Then what happened was the government began to stall, so the Native Americans decided to sue the Federal Government in the courts, because, as they said, rightfully so, wait a minute, United States Government, we made a deal in Washington. We made a deal. You gave us these water rights in exchange for our lands. You signed a contract. You made a treaty with us to build our water storage project, yet you continue to delay and delay and delay.

So the best government lawyers came in and advised the government leaders at the time, you are going to lose this case. You need to do what you said you were going to do with the Native Americans. You need to build that project.

So the government went to the Native Americans and said let's settle the case. So they settled it. The Native Americans accepted less than they were entitled to, but they were willing to live with that compromise, because they wanted the wet water. They did not want cash, they did not want trinkets, they wanted wet water, water they could put their hands in and feel the wetness.

Well, lo and behold, pretty soon some environmental organizations started suing, and pretty soon there is an effort to stop the building of the Animas La-Plata water project down in Southwestern Colorado.

Once again, who loses? The Native Americans. So the Native Americans come back again, and once again they make an agreement to get even less than what they got the first time they made the agreement and the second time they made the agreement.

Now what do we see in the last couple of years? Once again the United States is continuing to stall and delay. In fact, there have been proposals by some organizations out there, do not give them any water at all. Let us just pay them with some cash. Give them some trinkets. Give them cash.

They do not want cash, they want their water. Fortunately, I think we have come to agreement with the administration this year to move the Animas La-Plata project into reality. It has taken a lot of effort, and I must compliment my colleague, Senator NIGHTHORSE CAMPBELL. This is a big issue out in the West. A lot of effort has been put into it, and hopefully we can get this storage project in the west put together.

Now, when we speak about water it leads us to another issue that I think is important to understand about the West, and that is the concept of use. If you were ever in Colorado, and there are still a few signs, or actually out in the mountains, out in the West, you still see some of these signs on national lands, and the sign might say, for example, ''Welcome, you are entering the White River National Forest.'' But underneath that sign is another little sign, and it says ''The land of many uses.'' ''The land of many uses.''

Let us talk a little history. What does multiple use mean? Multiple use means exactly what it says, that the lands out there are not intended for one singular use, that the survivability of many different things, of humans, of animal species, of the environment, it depends on a balanced approach on how to use those lands, and the balanced approach is what is called multiple use.

Now, how did multiple use come about and how is it that the Federal land ownership is so massive out in the West and almost minimal, and ''minimal'' would be a pretty generous description, in the East?

In order to have an accurate reflection of what I am talking about, I have got a map for you here which shows the United States, obviously. You will see, I ask my colleagues to divert their attention over to the map for a moment, if you really go down this line, which is down the Colorado border, down the Wyoming border, down to Montana, you go down that line, through eastern Colorado, clear down and go along the border there over to New Mexico and around the border of Texas, you will see that practically from this point to the east, from that point to the Atlantic Ocean, Federal Government ownership of land is minimal.

Now, you have got some blocks of land out here in the Appalachians, the Catskill Mountains, some down in the Everglades and some up here in the northeastern section. But take a look at the eastern United States and land ownership there by the government, and compare it with land ownership in the West. In the West, as you can see, most of the land is owned by the Federal Government. In fact, in 11 states here in the West, in 11 states, 47 percent of that land is owned by the Federal Government.

Now, remember, that is not all the government owns, because you have state government lands, you have municipal land, you have special district lands. So there is a lot besides that 47 percent. But because of the fact that you have such massive ownership of public lands, or they call it public lands, such massive ownership by the Federal Government, it creates by its own consequence a lot of differences between the West land uses and land uses in the East.

Now, how did this come about? Why did our leaders not many many years ago who preceded us many, many generations ago, why did they not spread this land ownership out throughout the country more evenly?

Here is what happened. In the West, when they were settling the rest of the country, and I say the West, really anything West of, you get out here of New York, of South Carolina, Kentucky, out into this country, they decided in those days ownership of land was not simply just a deed. The fact you owned a deed to the land did not mean a lot out here in the wilderness, out in the wild areas of the country. In fact, back then possession really was nine-tenths of the law. You have heard that quote many time. ''Well, possession is nine-tenths of the law.'' That is where it came from.

In the early days of the settlement by the white man out here in the West, possession was nine-tenths of the law. So the leaders in the East decided hey, we have got to provide some kind of incentive, we have got to give an incentive for people to move into the West, to settle this land. We have got to get our citizens in possession of that land, the land they had purchased, for example, through the Louisiana purchase. We have got to get people on the land. How do we do it? Because, frankly, life in the city is fairly comfortable. Life in the West is pretty rough. They have to go on horseback, a wagon. It is pretty rough.

Somebody came up with the idea, well, let us do this. Let us tell these settlers that if they go out there, we will give them land. And the American dream has always been to own your own piece of land. Today, for our constituents, the young people, the old people, the middle age people, we all dream of owning our own little piece of land. Ownership of land is American.

So what they said was hey, what stronger incentive can we give to these people to encourage them to become settlers and move to the West than to offer to give them land?

So they said all right, what kind of land should we give? Let us call it, they said, the Homestead Act or any number of other acts, and let us give them 160 or 320 acres. And if they go out and they possess that land and they work that land for a period of time, say 3 years or 5 years, depending on the act, we will let them have the land free. It is their land. It is their land forever.

Well, that worked okay, until you hit the mountains, until you hit the arid areas of the West. When you got into the states like Kansas and Nebraska and Ohio and the Dakotas, you know, you could take 160 acres in that rich farmland of Ohio or Nebraska and you could raise a family on it. That is very fertile ground.

But what was happening was the settlers were coming out here, and all of a sudden they stopped. They were not going into the mountains. Maybe some would go around the mountains and try to find gold in the California area, out here where you do not see much government land ownership in California. They were going around it.

So the problem came back to Washington. Hey, we are doing okay, again referring to this map, doing okay in the eastern United States, everything east, let us say of Denver, Colorado. People are settling, were possessing the land. But where the Colorado Rockies start, from north to south, west, the people are not going in there. What do we do?

The problem came up, well, you know, to raise a family in Nebraska, for example, on the rich fertile land out there, it is 160 acres. To do the equivalent in the Colorado Rockies, for example, and I keep referring to Colorado, obviously other states share the Rockies, so I am really referring to the mountain West, but to do the equivalent in the mountains, instead of 160 acres, you may need 1,600 acres, or 2,000 acres, or 3,000 acres. The leaders in Washington said wow, we cannot give away that kind of land. We cannot go out there and tell people we are going to give thousand and thousands of acres to one person if they go out and live on and work that land. What do we do?

That is where the birth of the concept of multiple use came about. The Federal Government decided the answer to this, to encourage settlers to go out, is, look, the Federal Government will retain ownership. The Federal Government will continue to own these lands out here, but you are going to be allowed to go out there and use them. You can go out there and use them for ranching, you can go out there and use them for minerals. As time went on, you can go out there and use them to build your communities and your towns and later on your cities. Now, today we can use these lands to help protect our environment, to help preserve a lot of these lands.

Multiple use means a lot of things. To give you an idea of what the multiple use concept is and why Federal ownership differs here in the West than in the East, in the East, for example, let us think about it. If you wanted to build something in your local community here in, let us say Kentucky or out here in Illinois or some of these states more towards the East, you wanted to build something, what do you do? You have to get a permit. And if you get a permit, where do you go? You go to your local planning and zoning. You go down to the city hall, or maybe the county offices, and you go to your local planning and zoning.

Well, here in the West, where the Federal Government owns so much land, if we want to build, for example, a water canal, we do not go to our local planning and zoning. We have to have our planning and zoning done in Washington, D.C., 1,500 miles away, in an area where it rains. It does not rain very much in the West.

It does not rain much in the West. In an area where they have very little Federal ownership of lands, in an area where a lot of people do not even know what the term ''use'' means, yet they are the ones who dictate, they are the ones who dictate our planning and zoning in the West. That is a big difference. That is why we have sensitivities out there in the West. That is why it is important that we protect the concept of multiple use.

Let me read just a couple of things. The Federal government owns, as I said earlier, 47 percent of the land in the 11 public lands States all located in the western United States. In four States, the Federal government owns more than half of the land: In Idaho, in Nevada, in Oregon, and Utah. In Colorado, more than one-third of the land is owned by the Federal government.

Are we dependent on these lands? We are absolutely dependent on these lands. Humans could not live out in the West without the permission of the Federal government to use those lands.

Some would say, well, is that not kind of an exaggerated statement? The fact is that it is not exaggerated at all. Think about it. Take any community in my district. Glenwood Springs, Colorado. If you have not been there, go visit; a beautiful community, my hometown. In Glenwood Springs, or a town more that my colleagues might be acquainted with, Aspen, Colorado, take Aspen, Colorado, every road into Aspen, Colorado, comes across government lands. Every drop of water in Aspen, Colorado, either comes across, originates, or is stored on Federal lands unless it is a spring, and then it still originates somewhere on Federal lands. All of their cable, all of their power lines, all of their transportation needs, their airport, their air corridors, all of that comes across Federal lands.

If we begin to shut down the access across Federal lands, we lock out these communities. Many, many of the communities, not only in my district but throughout the U.S., throughout the West, are locked in by Federal lands.

Now, ''locked in'' is not too harsh a word if we are allowed access to utilize these lands. We take a lot of pride in those lands. That is our birthplace. A lot of us have many, many generations of family history out there. We care about that land. We have worked that land. We know that land.

There are some sensitivities when we deal with people, for example, out of Washington, D.C., some think tank, that thinks they ought to be able to or that they know a little more about the dictates of living in the West, about the issues of these lands.

Multiple use is a very, very important concept for us. That is why we are so ardent in our protection of the right to use these lands. I think this map is a good reflection. Again, I would direct my colleagues to take a look at it.

One thing they will notice down here, it is not in proportion, obviously, is the State of Alaska. I think the State of Alaska is somewhere around 96 percent owned by the government. Ninety-six percent of that land is owned by the government. Think of the impact that that has on the everyday lifestyles of people; of the resources that they use, of the transportation that they use.

So multiple use is a very, very important concept for us, and I hope that my comments tonight have given Members a little idea about this. There are a lots of exciting things that go on in the West in regard to our land use.

Over the last 25 or 30 years, we have recognized the technology that allows us to utilize our lands in such a way that they can become more environmentally friendly. We have figured out how to use water in a more environmentally sensitive form. There is a lot of progressive movement in the West on these lands to help preserve our environment, because many of those communities out there are almost totally dependent on a clean, healthy environment.

If Aspen, Colorado, for example, or Beaver Creek or Telluride or Vail or Glenwood Springs or Durango, if they had a dirty environment, would Members go out to visit it? Of course not. We have lots to lose out there. We have a lot at risk with our environment out there. That is why we take no shame in the positions that we advocate for the protection of our lands out there, for the protection of the water out there.

I hope my colleagues here recognize that. I hope as the different issues come up, whether they relate to Alaska or whether they relate to the western United States, remember, especially if Members are from the East, that the issues are different. The issues will require that we look into the history. They will require that we study the differences of a State without much Federal land and a State with Federal land, that we study how dependent we are on the resources of those Federal lands, and why the doctrine of multiple use is a well-thought-out and now a well-practiced historical use of those lands. Multiple use should be protected.

There are some areas where we have set aside what we call wilderness areas. I am a sponsor of a wilderness called the Spanish Peaks Wilderness. That is my bill passed out of this House. We expect to put a wilderness out there. We have other wilderness. Senator Armstrong, Hank Brown from years ago, they put in the Flat Tops Wilderness bill.

In some of these areas we take away multiple use, but it is a focused, well-thought-out move. It is a move that allows some lands to be set aside as if humans had never touched them. So in some areas we have actually surrendered the doctrine of multiple use for protection, for the maximum possible, with little flexibility, protection.

But before, and I say this to my colleagues, before Members jump on the bandwagon and take a paintbrush and paint in all of this wilderness designation, please understand the impact that it has to the local people, to the people who live off those lands, to the people who depend on those lands. Frankly, anybody that lives in the West is dependent upon those Federal lands.

EDUCATION

Enough for issues about water and lands. Now I want to move to an issue that is very important to me. It is important to my colleagues here. I want to talk for a few minutes about some areas of education.

I do not know anyone who is anti-education. I find with interest in a political season how political layouts are made saying one person is anti-education. Granted, in this room of 435 Congress people, we have 435 different ideas, and many of them are uniform, but we have 435 different ideas about education: How do we improve education? How do we get the biggest bang for our buck out of education? How do we get the best teachers, the most qualified teachers we can into the field of education? How do we make the profession of teaching one of the highest professions in our country?

There is lots of debate about that, but I have not found anybody on the Democratic side and I certainly have not found anybody on the Republican side that is anti-education.

So I urge my colleagues, as this election year gets into a very heated process very rapidly, that they not buy into that argument that their opponent or somebody else out there is anti-education. I do not know one person, I have never met a person in my political career, I have never met one person that is anti-education. In fact, I have met very few people, I could probably count them on one hand, the people, if I were to ask them the five or ten most important things in our society, that they would not list education among the very top.

We all recognize that education is fundamental for the strength of this country. Now that we all can come to the agreement that we all agree that education is important, let us talk about different subjects.

There are lots of areas we could talk about. We could talk about the budget on education, about how much more money is needed, how do we have accountability for the money, how do we test, what kind of testing, and should we track scores and the money spent, whether the money should be local money, whether the money should be State money, whether the money should be Federal money; and if it is Federal or State money for a local school, what kind of flexibility should be given to the Federal government or the State government to determine what programs are offered in the local school?

We can talk about the issues of sex education in schools: What level do we offer sex education, should we have it in the schools? We can talk about the school facilities. We can talk about bonding issues. There are lots of things in education that many in this room have much more expertise than I do. We could have lengthy discussions about it. There is a lot of money, billions and billions of dollars spent in this country every year to try and figure out how we have a better educational product.

But one of the areas I like to talk about in education is personal responsibility, consequences for behavior that is classified as misbehavior. I think throughout the years, and this is where I got some negative calls, and I would love to have some of those people to debate, Mr. Speaker, who in my opinion seem to think that the discipline, the direction we are going in discipline is the right direction to take.

I do not think it is. I think one of the problems that we have today in turning out a better educational product is responsibility in the classroom. We find responsibility in the classroom not only through accountability of measurement, and whether a student is learning, and the responsibility of a student if they want to participate in the class, they have to do their assignments. But I am talking about classroom discipline.

It is interesting, if we take a look at the discipline problems, and I think there is a book out there called It All Happened in Kindergarten or something like that. I will actually have it next week. But in that particular book, as my memory serves me, if it is correct, they did some comparisons about discipline problems 40 years ago in our classrooms and the discipline problems today in our classrooms.

Part of the difference in those discipline problems, back then, for example, chewing gum was a discipline problem, or talking out of turn, interrupting your teacher, being tardy. Today it is drugs, violence. We go down the list and there is a dramatic difference.

Part of it is the shift in society. Part of it, and we can track it to a lot of different things, the lack of two-parent families, a number of different things. But one of those elements that I think we need to look at is we have got to give our teachers the ability and the tools to have discipline in their classroom.

Not too many years ago I think it was 60 Minutes went in and did a secret filming I think in one of the major cities of a classroom and the discipline, and the frustrated teacher who could not control those students.

Can most teachers control most students? The answer is yes. Are most students responsible young people, young adults? The answer is yes. In the past, were teachers able to have much more control for those few students who became discipline problems? The answer was yes.

Has that authority had handcuffs placed on it? Has that authority been kind of cornered or reduced in today's classroom? The answer is yes. We need to take a serious look at allowing discipline back into the classroom.

Think about it. I have a sister who is a counsellor. Her name is Kathleen. She has spent her career in teaching and she is now a counselor. Several years ago when I was in the State legislature, and in Colorado most of the money provided for schools is provided at the State level, back then about 63 cents out of every dollar of the general fund of the State of Colorado's budget was provided for education, but we consistently heard complaints about, we need more money for education.

We hear it from every department, by the way. The military says it needs more money. In fact, I have never found a department yet throughout my years of public service that says, whoa, we have enough money. We can do the job for what you have given us. We have enough money. So that is a pretty common complaint.

Anyway, back to my sister, Kathy. I asked her one day, I said, Kathy, if I could do one thing politically as a leader, if I could do just one thing to help improve the education product for you as a schoolteacher, what would it be? I expected her to say, we need more money.

She did not say that. She said, if you could do just one thing, allow me to have discipline back in my classroom. Allow me to have discipline back in my classroom.

That is where I really begin. That answer caught me a little off guard. That is where I began to really focus on discipline in the classroom and tolerance in our schools. Clearly, when we speak of tolerance, there are many different applications that that term can have. There are a lot of things that we have taught, good behavior through more tolerance of certain behaviors.

However, we also need to take a look at misbehavior that we are ignoring because it is not politically correct, perhaps, to stand up to it, or you are going to get criticism for drawing a line in the sand and saying, if your behavior crosses that line, you are out of school.

At some point we have to go back and cater to the majority of students, the students that are behaving. I am not talking about ethnic issues and so on, I am talking about the majority of students that behave. We have to meet their needs. Those needs, in my opinion, take a higher priority than a student who on a consistent basis, not a one- or two-time basis where we have correctable attitudes, but on a consistent basis continues to defy the teacher and continues to defy the rules of the classroom.

For example, not too many months ago I saw some film footage, and some of my colleagues may have seen it, where there was a fight in the school and the students were disciplined.

This school board, I wanted to pat each one of them on the back. It is about time somebody stood up to these students and kicked them out of school; good for you. Teach them a lesson. Of course there was a lot of argument and debate about whether this was too harsh a punishment for kicking these students out of school. Then they begin to look into the background of the students, and it was the first time I had ever heard the term ''third year freshman.'' So I asked my sister Kathy, what is a third year freshman?

Oh, a third year freshman, she says, that is somebody who has been in high school for 3 years and has yet to get enough credits to get out of the freshman class.

In this particular case that I was referring to, they had some students there who did not have any credits and had been in school for 2 or 3 years; no credits. Then they went and they took a look and investigated and revealed how many days they had been absent from school, and the fundamental question that came to me was not whether or not they still are in school; the fundamental question came to me is why did you not kick them out earlier? How much time and how much effort and how many resources have you spent taking care of these students who are not willing to accept responsibility, who have behavioral problems that are not able to be corrected on a short-term basis and you have kowtowed to them, so to speak, been politically correct to them, at the expense of the students who are following the rules, at the expense of the students, and it is clearly, clearly the strong majority of students who want to learn, who want to get something out of their education, what is wrong out there?

Well, I can say this, that I think as government officials we need to pledge to our local teachers, to our school administrators that, look, within the bounds, within legitimate bounds, and I can say I think the legitimate bounds have a historical basis, I think we can find them, that within those bounds you are going to receive support from us. It may be that you are having to discipline the most popular kid in the town. We have to promise support to these people. These teachers have tough jobs. These administrators have tough jobs. But we cannot really expect them to stand up to this discipline problem if we, starting on this House Floor, do not back them up. There are times where discipline cannot be politically correct. There are times where discipline can be absolutely correct. In my opinion, if we can get discipline back to the classroom, Mr. Speaker, if we can do something to help our local districts, give them the support and to watch very carefully any legislation we pass out of the U.S. House of Representatives to make sure that we are not infringing on the right for a schoolteacher to have discipline in their classroom, it is worth it. That is how we can get a better product. That is how we can give more opportunities to our students.

As I said earlier, in my opinion education is the most fundamental pillar that we can have that holds this great country together. Now, there are other strong pillars. We have to have a strong military. We have to have a strong economy. We have to have a strong health care delivery system. There are other pillars that help hold this building up but education is one that gets a lot of attention, deserves a lot of attention and it is going to get a lot more attention.

Now teachers, I think, themselves want accountability. I read an article in USA Today, December 1999, and it was issued by the Albert Shanker Institute. They found that teachers support standards. Teachers support accountability. Even in low income neighborhoods, teachers believe that standards and accountability are important.

I think most teachers believe in personal responsibilities. I think most teachers want us to give them the tools that create consequences for misbehavior in the classroom, that allow the teachers to reward good behavior because there are two ways to take care of misbehavior. One is punish the misbehavior and have consequences for the misbehavior and two is to reward the good behavior, take the positive drive.

The study shows that the longer teachers work with standards the happier they are to have them. Accountability measures can include repeating a grade or having to pass a test to graduate. Accountability measures can include discipline in the classroom. For school officials, accountability could come in the form of removing teachers and principals from schools that do not meet those standards.

Seventy-three percent of the teachers and 92 percent of the principals favor the standards movement.

Mr. Speaker, let me just conclude by saying that we all want better education. Let us bring discipline back to the classroom.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 5 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

SEC. 103. RECONCILIATION IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

(a) SUBMISSIONS PROVIDING TAX RELIEF.—The House Committee on Ways and Means shall report to the House a reconciliation bill—
(1) not later than July 14, 2000; and
(2) not later than September 13, 2000,
that consists of changes in laws within its jurisdiction sufficient to reduce the total level of revenues by not more than: $11,600,000,000 for fiscal year 2001, and $150,000,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

(b) SUBMISSIONS REGARDING DEBT HELD BY THE PUBLIC.—The House Committee on Ways and Means shall report to the House a reconciliation bill—
(1) not later than July 14, 2000, that consists of changes in laws within its jurisdiction sufficient to reduce the debt held by the public by $7,500,000,000 for fiscal year 2001; and
(2) not later than September 13, 2000, that consists of changes in laws within its jurisdiction sufficient to reduce the debt held by the public by not more than $19,100,000,000 for fiscal year 2001.

SEC. 104. RECONCILIATION OF REVENUE REDUCTIONS IN THE SENATE.

The Senate Committee on Finance shall report to the Senate a reconciliation bill—
(1) not later than July 14, 2000; and
(2) not later than September 13, 2000,
that consists of changes in laws within its jurisdiction sufficient to reduce the total level of revenues by not more than: $11,600,000,000 for fiscal year 2001, and $150,000,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

TITLE II—BUDGET ENFORCEMENT AND RULEMAKING

Subtitle A—Budget Enforcement

SEC. 201. LOCK-BOX FOR SOCIAL SECURITY SURPLUSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—
(1) under the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990, the social security trust funds are off-budget for purposes of the President's budget submission and the concurrent resolution on the budget;
(2) the social security trust funds have been running surpluses for 17 years;
(3) these surpluses have been used to implicitly finance the general operations of the Federal Government;
(4) in fiscal year 2001, the social security surplus will be $166 billion;
(5) this resolution balances the Federal budget without counting the social security surpluses;
(6) the only way to ensure that social security surpluses are not diverted for other purposes is to balance the budget exclusive of such surpluses; and
(7) Congress and the President should take such steps as are necessary to ensure that future budgets are balanced excluding the surpluses generated by the social security trust funds.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that legislation should be enacted in this session of Congress that would enforce the reduction in debt held by the public assumed in this resolution by the imposition of a statutory limit on such debt or other appropriate means.

(c) POINT OF ORDER.—
(1) IN GENERAL.—It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any revision to this resolution or a concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002, or any amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that sets forth a deficit for any fiscal year.
(2) DEFICIT LEVELS.—For purposes of this subsection, a deficit shall be the level (if any) set forth in the most recently agreed to concurrent resolution on the budget for that fiscal year pursuant to section 301(a)(3) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(d) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (c)(1) shall not apply if—
(1) the most recent of the Department of Commerce's advance, preliminary, or final reports of actual real economic growth indicate that the rate of real economic growth for each of the most recently reported quarter and the immediately preceding quarter is less than 1 percent; or
(2) a declaration of war is in effect.

(e) SOCIAL SECURITY LOOK-BACK.—If in fiscal year 2001 the social security surplus is used to finance general operations of the Federal Government, an amount equal to the amount used shall be deducted from the available amount of discretionary spending for fiscal year 2002 for purposes of any concurrent resolution on the budget.

(f) WAIVER AND APPEAL.—Subsection (c)(1) may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.

SEC. 202. DEBT REDUCTION LOCK-BOX.

(a) POINT OF ORDER.—It shall not be in order in the House of Representatives to consider any reported bill or joint resolution, or any amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that would cause a surplus for fiscal year 2001 to be less than the level (as adjusted) set forth in section 101(4) for that fiscal year.

(b) SPECIAL RULE.—The level of the surplus for purposes of subsection (a) shall take into account amounts adjusted under section 314(a)(2)(B) or (C) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

SEC. 203. ENHANCED ENFORCEMENT OF BUDGETARY LIMITS.

(a) PROHIBITION ON USE OF DIRECTED SCOREKEEPING.—(1) It shall not be in order in the House to consider any reported bill or joint resolution, or amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that contains a directed scorekeeping provision.
(2) As used in this subsection, the term ''directed scorekeeping'' means directing the Congressional Budget Office or the Office of Management and Budget how to estimate any provision providing discretionary new budget authority in a bill or joint resolution making general appropriations for a fiscal year for budgetary enforcement purposes.

(b) PROHIBITION ON USE OF ADVANCE APPROPRIATIONS.—(1) It shall not be in order in the House to consider any reported bill or joint resolution, or amendment thereto or conference report thereon, that would cause the total level of discretionary advance appropriations provided for fiscal years after 2001 to exceed $23,500,000,000 (which represents the total level of advance appropriations for fiscal year 2001).
(2) As used in this subsection, the term ''advance appropriation'' means any discretionary new budget authority in a bill or joint resolution making general appropriations for fiscal year 2001 that first becomes available for any fiscal year after 2001.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section shall cease to have any force or effect on January 1, 2001.

SEC. 204. MECHANISMS FOR STRENGTHENING BUDGETARY INTEGRITY.

(a) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term ''budget year'' means with respect to a session of Congress, the fiscal year of the Government that starts on October 1 of the calendar year in which that session begins.

(b) POINT OF ORDER WITH RESPECT TO ADVANCE APPROPRIATIONS.—
(1) IN GENERAL.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill, resolution, amendment, motion or conference report that—
(A) provides an appropriation of new budget authority for any fiscal year after the budget year that is in excess of the amounts provided in paragraph (2); and
(B) provides an appropriation of new budget authority for any fiscal year subsequent to the year after the budget year.
(2) LIMITATION ON AMOUNTS.—The total amount, provided in appropriations legislation for the budget year, of appropriations for the subsequent fiscal year shall not exceed $23,500,000,000.

(c) POINT OF ORDER WITH RESPECT TO DELAYED OBLIGATIONS.—
(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that contains an appropriation of new budget authority for any fiscal year which does not become available upon enactment of such legislation or on the first day of that fiscal year (whichever is later).
(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to appropriations in the defense category; nor shall it apply to appropriations reoccurring or customary.

(d) WAIVER AND APPEAL.—Subsections (b) and (c) may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.

(e) FORM OF THE POINT OF ORDER.—A point of order under this section may be raised by a Senator as provided in section 313(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(f) CONFERENCE REPORTS.—If a point of order is sustained under this section against a conference report, the report shall be disposed of as provided in section 313(d) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(g) PRECATORY AMENDMENTS.—For purposes of interpreting section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, an amendment is not germane if it contains predominately precatory language.

(h) ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTION.—The Chairman of the Committee on the Budget in the Senate may instruct the Senate Committee on Finance to report legislation to reduce debt held by the public in an amount consistent with section 103.

(i) SUNSET.—Except for subsection (g), this section shall expire effective October 1, 2002.

SEC. 205. EMERGENCY DESIGNATION POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.

(a) DESIGNATIONS.—

(1) GUIDANCE.—In making a designation of a provision of legislation as an emergency requirement under section 251(b)(2)(A) or 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the committee report and any statement of managers accompanying that legislation shall analyze whether a proposed emergency requirement meets all the criteria in paragraph (2).

(2) CRITERIA.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The criteria to be considered in determining whether a proposed expenditure or tax change is an emergency requirement are—

(i) necessary, essential, or vital (not merely useful or beneficial);

(ii) sudden, quickly coming into being, and not building up over time;

(iii) an urgent, pressing, and compelling need requiring immediate action;

(iv) subject to subparagraph (B), unforeseen, unpredictable, and unanticipated; and

(v) not permanent, temporary in nature.

(B) UNFORESEEN.—An emergency that is part of an aggregate level of anticipated emergencies, particularly when normally estimated in advance, is not unforeseen.

(3) JUSTIFICATION FOR FAILURE TO MEET CRITERIA.—If the proposed emergency requirement does not meet all the criteria set forth in paragraph (2), the committee report or the statement of managers, as the case may be, shall provide a written justification of why the requirement should be accorded emergency status.

(b) POINT OF ORDER.—When the Senate is considering a bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report, a point of order may be made by a Senator against an emergency designation in that measure and if the Presiding Officer sustains that point of order, that provision making such a designation shall be stricken from the measure and may not be offered as an amendment from the floor.

(c) WAIVER AND APPEAL.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.

(d) DEFINITION OF AN EMERGENCY REQUIREMENT.—A provision shall be considered an emergency designation if it designates any item an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) or 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(e) FORM OF THE POINT OF ORDER.—A point of order under this section may be raised by a Senator as provided in section 313(e) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(f) CONFERENCE REPORTS.—If a point of order is sustained under this section against a conference report, the report shall be disposed of as provided in section 313(d) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

(g) EXCEPTION FOR DEFENSE SPENDING.—Subsection (b) shall not apply against an emergency designation for a provision making discretionary appropriations in the defense category.

SEC. 206. MECHANISM FOR IMPLEMENTING INCREASE OF FISCAL YEAR 2001 DISCRETIONARY SPENDING LIMITS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds the following:

(1) Unless and until the discretionary spending limit for fiscal year 2001 is increased, aggregate appropriations which exceed the current law limits would still be out of order in the Senate and subject to a supermajority vote.

(2) The functional totals contained in this concurrent resolution envision a level of discretionary spending for fiscal year 2001 as follows:

(A) For the discretionary category: $600,296,000,000 in new budget authority and $592,773,000,000 in outlays.

(B) For the highway category: $26,920,000,000 in outlays.

(C) For the mass transit category: $4,639,000,000 in outlays.

(3) To facilitate the Senate completing its legislative responsibilities for the 106th Congress in a timely fashion, it is imperative that the Senate consider legislation which increases the discretionary spending limit for fiscal year 2001 as soon as possible.

(b) ADJUSTMENT TO ALLOCATIONS AND OTHER BUDGETARY AGGREGATES AND LEVELS.—Whenever a bill or joint resolution becomes law that increases the discretionary spending limit for fiscal year 2001 set out in section 251(c) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, shall increase the allocation called for in section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 to the appropriate Committee on Appropriations and shall also appropriately adjust all other budgetary aggregates and levels contained in this resolution.

(c) LIMITATION ON ADJUSTMENT.—An adjustment made pursuant to subsection (b) shall not result in an allocation under section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 that exceeds the total budget authority and outlays set forth in subsection (a)(2).

SEC. 207. SENATE FIREWALL FOR DEFENSE AND NONDEFENSE SPENDING.

(a) DEFINITION.—In this section, for purposes of enforcement in the Senate for fiscal year 2001, the term ''discretionary spending limit'' means—

(1) for the defense category, $310,819,000,000 in new budget authority and $297,650,000,000 in outlays; and

(2) for the nondefense category, $289,477,000,000 in new budget authority and $327,430,000,000 in outlays.

(b) POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—After the adjustment to the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Appropriations is made pursuant to section 213 and except as provided in paragraph (2), it shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that exceeds any discretionary spending limit set forth in this section.

(2) EXCEPTION.—This subsection shall not apply if a declaration of war by Congress is in effect.

(c) WAIVER AND APPEAL.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by an affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.

Subtitle B—Reserve Funds

SEC. 211. MECHANISM FOR ADDITIONAL DEBT REDUCTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—If any of the legislation described in subsection (b) is vetoed (or does not become law) or any legislation described in subsection (b)(1) or (b)(2) does not become law on or before October 1, 2000, then the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may adjust the levels in this concurrent resolution as provided in subsection (c).

(b) LEGISLATION.—Any adjustment pursuant to subsection (a) shall be made with respect to—

(1) the reconciliation legislation required by section 103(a) or section 104;

(2) the medicare legislation provided for in section 214 or 215; or

(3) any legislation which reduces revenues and is vetoed.

(c) ADJUSTMENTS TO BE MADE.—The adjustment pursuant to subsection (a) shall be—

(1) with respect to the legislation required by section 103(a) or section 104, to decrease the balance displayed on the Senate's pay-as-you-go scorecard and increase the revenue aggregate by the amount set forth in section 103(a) or section 104 (as adjusted, if adjusted, pursuant to section 213) less the amount of any reduction in the current level of revenues which has occurred since the adoption of this concurrent resolution and to decrease the level of debt held by the public as set forth in section 101(6) by that same amount;

(2) with respect to the legislation provided for in section 214 or section 215, to decrease the balance displayed on the Senate's pay-as-you-go scorecard by the amount set forth in section 214 or section 215 (less the amount of any change in the current level of spending or revenues attributable to section 215) and to decrease the level of debt held by the public as set forth in section 101(6) by that same amount and make the corresponding adjustments to the revenue and spending aggregates and allocations set forth in this resolution; or

(3) with respect to the legislation described by subsection (b)(3), decrease the balance on the Senate's pay-as-you-go scorecard and increase the revenue aggregate for the cost of such legislation and decrease the level of debt held by the public as set forth in section 101(6) by that same amount.

SEC. 212. RESERVE FUND FOR ADDITIONAL TAX RELIEF AND DEBT REDUCTION.

Whenever the Committee on Ways and Means or the Committee on Finance reports any bill, or an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, that would cause the level by which Federal revenues should be reduced, as set forth in section 101(1)(B) for such fiscal year or for such period, as adjusted, to be exceeded, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may increase the levels by which Federal revenues should be reduced by the amount exceeding such level resulting from such measure, but not to exceed $1,000,000,000 for fiscal year 2001 and $25,000,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005 and make all other appropriate conforming adjustments (after taking into account any other bill or joint resolution enacted during this session of the One Hundred Sixth Congress that would cause a reduction in revenues for fiscal year 2001 or the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005).

SEC. 213. RESERVE FUND FOR ADDITIONAL SURPLUSES.

(a) REPORTING ADDITIONAL SURPLUSES.—If the report provided pursuant to section 202(e)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the budget and economic outlook: update (for fiscal years 2001 through 2010) estimates an on-budget surplus for any of fiscal years 2001 through 2005 that exceeds the on-budget surplus set forth in the Congressional Budget Office's March 2000 budget and economic outlook (for fiscal years 2001 through 2010), the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may make the adjustments as provided in subsection (b).

(b) ADJUSTMENTS.—The chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may make the following adjustments in an amount not to exceed the difference between the on-budget surpluses in the reports referred to in subsection (a):

(1) Reduce the on-budget revenue aggregate by that amount for such fiscal year.

(2) Adjust the instruction in section 103 or 104 to—

(A) increase the reduction in revenues by that amount for fiscal year 2001;

(B) increase the reduction in revenues by the sum of the amounts for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005; and

(C) in the House only, increase the amount of debt reduction by that amount for fiscal year 2001.

(3) Adjust such other levels in this resolution, as appropriate and the Senate pay-as-you-go scorecard.

(c) ADDITIONAL DEBT REDUCTION IN THE HOUSE.—If the Congressional Budget Office estimates an on-budget surplus for fiscal year 2000 in excess of the level set forth in this resolution, then the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House may—

(1) reduce the levels of the public debt and debt held by the public by the amount of such increased on-budget surplus; and

(2) direct the Committee on Ways and Means to report by a date certain an additional reconciliation bill that reduces debt held by the public by such amount.

SEC. 214. RESERVE FUND FOR MEDICARE IN THE HOUSE.

Whenever the Committee on Ways and Means or Committee on Commerce of the House reports a bill or joint resolution, or an amendment thereto is offered (in the House), or a conference report thereon is submitted that reforms the medicare program and provides coverage for prescription drugs, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House may increase the aggregates and allocations of new budget authority (and outlays resulting therefrom) by the amount provided by that measure for that purpose, but not to exceed $2,000,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2001 and $40,000,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005 (and make all other appropriate conforming adjustments).

SEC. 215. RESERVE FUND FOR MEDICARE IN THE SENATE.

(a) PRESCRIPTION DRUGS.—Whenever the Committee on Finance of the Senate reports a bill or joint resolution or a conference report thereon is submitted, which improves access to prescription drugs for medicare beneficiaries, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the Senate may revise committee allocations and other appropriate budgetary levels and limits to accommodate such legislation, provided that such legislation will not reduce the on-budget surplus or increase spending, by more than $20,000,000,000 over the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005 and will not cause an on-budget deficit in any fiscal year.

(b) MEDICARE REFORM.—Whenever the Committee on Finance of the Senate reports a bill or joint resolution, or a conference report thereon is submitted, which improves the solvency of the medicare program without the use of new subsidies from the general fund and improves access to prescription drugs (or continues access provided pursuant to subsection (a)) for medicare beneficiaries, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the Senate may change committee allocations and other appropriate budgetary levels and limits to accommodate such legislation, provided that such legislation will not reduce the on-budget surplus or increase spending by more than $40,000,000,000 (less any amount already provided by the chairman pursuant to subsection (a)) over the period of fiscal years 2001 to 2005 and will not cause an on-budget deficit in any fiscal year.

SEC. 216. RESERVE FUND FOR AGRICULTURE.

If the Committee on Agriculture of the House or the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate reports a bill on or before June 29, 2000, or an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, that provides assistance for producers of program crops and specialty crops, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may increase the allocation of new budget authority and outlays to that committee for fiscal year 2000 by the amount of new budget authority (and the outlays resulting therefrom) provided by that measure for that purpose not to exceed $5,500,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2000 and $1,640,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2001.

SEC. 217. RESERVE FUND TO FOSTER THE HEALTH OF CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES AND THE EMPLOYMENT AND INDEPENDENCE OF THEIR FAMILIES.

If the Committee on Commerce of the House or the Committee on Finance of the Senate reports a bill, or an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, that facilitates children with disabilities receiving needed health care at home, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may increase the allocation of new budget authority and outlays to that committee by the amount of new budget authority (and the outlays resulting therefrom) provided by that measure for that purpose not to exceed $25,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2001 and $150,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

SEC. 218. RESERVE FUND FOR MILITARY RETIREE HEALTH CARE.

If the Committee on Armed Services of the House or the Senate reports the Department of Defense authorization legislation to fund improvements to health care programs for military retirees and their dependents in order to fulfill the promises made to them, or an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may increase the allocation of new budget authority and outlays to that committee by the amount of new budget authority (and the outlays resulting therefrom) provided by that measure for that purpose not to exceed $50,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2001 and $400,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005 if the enactment of such measure will not cause an on-budget deficit for fiscal year 2001 and the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

SEC. 219. RESERVE FUND FOR CANCER SCREENING AND ENROLLMENT IN SCHIP.

If the Committee on Commerce of the House or the Committee on Finance of the Senate reports a bill, or an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, that accelerates enrollment of uninsured children in medicaid or the State Children's Health Insurance Program or provides medicaid coverage for women diagnosed with cervical and breast cancer through the screening program of the Centers for Disease Control, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may increase the allocation of new budget authority and outlays to that committee by the amount of new budget authority (and the outlays resulting therefrom) provided by that measure for that purpose not to exceed $50,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2001 and $250,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

SEC. 220. RESERVE FUND FOR STABILIZATION OF PAYMENTS TO COUNTIES IN SUPPORT OF EDUCATION.

(a) ADJUSTMENT.—If the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Resources of the House or the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate reports a bill, or an amendment thereto is offered or a conference report thereon is submitted, that provides additional resources for counties and complies with paragraph (2), the chairman of the Committee on the Budget of the House or Senate, as applicable, may increase the allocation of new budget authority and outlays to that committee by the amount of new budget authority (and the outlays resulting therefrom) provided by that measure for that purpose not to exceed $200,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2001 and $1,100,000,000 in new budget authority and outlays for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

(b) CONDITION.—Legislation complies with this section if it provides for the stabilization of receipt-based payments to counties that support school and road systems and also provides that a portion of those payments would be dedicated toward local investments in Federal lands within the counties.

SEC. 221. TAX REDUCTION RESERVE FUND IN THE SENATE.

In the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget may reduce the spending and revenue aggregates and may revise committee allocations for legislation that reduces revenues if such legislation will not increase the deficit or decrease the surplus for—

(1) fiscal year 2001; or

(2) the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

SEC. 222. APPLICATION AND EFFECT OF CHANGES IN ALLOCATIONS AND AGGREGATES.

(a) APPLICATION.—Any adjustments of allocations and aggregates made pursuant to this resolution shall—

(1) apply while that measure is under consideration;

(2) take effect upon the enactment of that measure; and

(3) be published in the Congressional Record as soon as practicable.

(b) EFFECT OF CHANGED ALLOCATIONS AND AGGREGATES.—Revised allocations and aggregates resulting from these adjustments shall be considered for the purposes of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 as allocations and aggregates contained in this resolution.

(c) BUDGET COMMITTEE DETERMINATIONS.—For purposes of this resolution—

(1) the levels of new budget authority, outlays, direct spending, new entitlement authority, revenues, deficits, and surpluses for a fiscal year or period of fiscal years shall be determined on the basis of estimates made by the Committee on the Budget of the House of Representatives or the Senate, as applicable; and

(2) such chairman, as applicable, may make any other necessary adjustments to such levels to carry out this resolution.

Subtitle C—Miscellaneous Rulemaking Provisions

SEC. 231. COMPLIANCE WITH SECTION 13301 OF THE BUDGET ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 1990.

(a) In the House, notwithstanding section 302(a)(1) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the joint explanatory statement accompanying the conference report on any concurrent resolution on the budget shall include in its allocation under section 302(a) of such Act to the Committee on Appropriations amounts for the discretionary administrative expenses of the Social Security Administration that are off-budget pursuant to section 13301 of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 (even though such amounts are not included in the conference report on any concurrent resolution on the budget pursuant to such section 13301).

(b) In the House, for purposes of applying section 302(f) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, estimates of the level of total new budget authority and total outlays provided by a measure shall include any discretionary amounts provided for the Social Security Administration.

SEC. 232. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FEDERAL RESERVE SURPLUSES.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to ensure that transfers from nonbudgetary governmental entities, such as the Federal reserve banks, shall not be used to offset increased onbudget spending when such transfers produce no real budgetary or economic effects.

(b) BUDGETARY RULE.—In the Senate, for purposes of points of order under this resolution and the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, provisions contained in any bill, resolution, amendment, motion, or conference report that affects any surplus funds of the Federal reserve banks shall not be scored with respect to the level of budget authority, outlays, or revenues contained in such legislation.

SEC. 233. REAFFIRMING THE PROHIBITION ON THE USE OF TAX INCREASES FOR DISCRETIONARY SPENDING.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to reaffirm Congress' belief that the discretionary spending limits should be adhered to and not circumvented by allowing increased taxes to offset discretionary spending.

(b) RESTATEMENT OF BUDGETARY RULE.—For purposes of points of order under this resolution and the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, provisions contained in an appropriations bill (or an amendment thereto or a conference report thereon) resulting in increased revenues shall continue to not be scored with respect to the level of budget authority or outlays contained in such legislation.

SEC. 234. EXERCISE OF RULEMAKING POWERS.

Congress adopts the provisions of this title—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they shall be considered as part of the rules of each House, or of that House to which they specifically apply, and such rules shall supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change those rules (so far as they relate to that House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

TITLE III—SENSE OF CONGRESS, HOUSE, AND SENATE PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Sense of Congress Provisions

SEC. 301. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON GRADUATE MEDICAL EDUCATION.

It is the sense of Congress that funding for graduate medical education for children's hospitals is a high priority in this resolution.

SEC. 302. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON PROVIDING ADDITIONAL DOLLARS TO THE CLASSROOM.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) strengthening America's public schools while respecting State and local control is critically important to the future of our children and our Nation;

(2) education is a local responsibility, a State priority, and a national concern;

(3) a partnership with the Nation's governors, parents, teachers, and principals must take place in order to strengthen public schools and foster educational excellence;

(4) the consolidation of various Federal education programs will benefit our Nation's children, parents, and teachers by sending more dollars directly to the classroom; and

(5) our Nation's children deserve an educational system that will provide opportunities to excel.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) Congress should enact legislation that would consolidate 31 Federal K–12 education programs; and

(2) the Department of Education, the States, and local educational agencies should work together to ensure that not less than 95 percent of all funds appropriated for the purpose of carrying out elementary and secondary education programs administered by the Department of Education are spent for our children in their classrooms.

Subtitle B—Sense of House Provisions

SEC. 311. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON WASTE, FRAUD, AND ABUSE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(1) while the budget may be in balance, it continues to be ridden with waste, fraud, and abuse;

(2) just last month, auditors documented more than $19,000,000,000 in improper payments each year by such agencies as the Agency of International Development, the Internal Revenue Service, the Social Security Administration, and the Department of Defense;

(3) the General Accounting Office (GAO) recently reported that the financial management practices of some Federal agencies are so poor that it is unable to determine the full extent of improper Government payments; and

(4) the GAO now lists a record number of 25 Federal programs that are at ''high risk'' of waste, fraud, and abuse.

(b) SENSE OF THE HOUSE.—It is the sense of the House that the Committee on the Budget has created task forces to address this issue and that the President should take immediate steps to reduce waste, fraud, and abuse within the Federal Government and report on such actions to Congress and that any resulting savings should be dedicated to debt reduction and tax relief.

SEC. 312. SENSE OF THE HOUSE REGARDING EMERGENCY SPENDING.

It is the sense of the House that, as part of a comprehensive reform of the budget process, the Committees on the Budget should develop a definition of, and a process for, funding emergencies consistent with the applicable provisions of H.R. 853, the Comprehensive Budget Process Reform Act of 1999, that could be incorporated into the Rules of the House of Representatives and the Standing Rules of the Senate.

SEC. 313. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON ESTIMATES OF THE IMPACT OF REGULATIONS ON THE PRIVATE SECTOR.

(a) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(1) the Federal regulatory system sometimes adversely affects many Americans and businesses by imposing financial burdens with little corresponding public benefit;

(2) currently, Congress has no general mechanism for assessing the financial impact of regulatory activities on the private sector;

(3) Congress is ultimately responsible for making sure agencies act in accordance with congressional intent and, while the executive branch is responsible for promulgating regulations, Congress should curb ineffective regulations by using its oversight and regulatory powers; and

(4) a variety of reforms have been suggested to increase congressional oversight over regulatory activity, including directing the President to prepare an annual accounting statement containing several cost/benefit analyses, recommendations to reform inefficient regulatory programs, and an identification and analysis of duplications and inconsistencies among such programs.

(b) SENSE OF THE HOUSE.—It is the sense of the House that the House should reclaim its role as reformer and take the first step toward curbing inefficient regulatory activity by passing legislation authorizing the Congressional Budget Office to prepare regular estimates on the impact of proposed Federal regulations on the private sector.

SEC. 314. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON BIENNIAL BUDGETING.

It is the sense of the House that there is a wide range of views on the advisability of biennial budgeting and this issue should be considered only within the context of comprehensive budget process reform.

SEC. 315. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON ACCESS TO HEALTH INSURANCE AND PRESERVING HOME HEALTH SERVICES FOR ALL MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES.

(a) ACCESS TO HEALTH INSURANCE.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(A) 44.4 million Americans are currently without health insurance, and that this number is expected to rise to nearly 60 million people in the next 10 years;

(B) the cost of health insurance continues to rise, a key factor in increasing the number of uninsured; and

(C) there is a consensus that working Americans and their families will suffer from reduced access to health insurance.

(2) SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON IMPROVING ACCESS TO HEALTH CARE INSURANCE.—It is the sense of the House that access to affordable health care coverage for all Americans is a priority of the 106th Congress.

(b) PRESERVING HOME HEALTH SERVICE FOR ALL MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(A) the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 reformed medicare home health care spending by instructing the Health Care Financing Administration to implement a prospective payment system and instituted an interim payment system to achieve savings;

(B) the medicare, medicaid, and SCHIP Balanced Budget Refinement Act, 1999, reformed the interim payment system to increase reimbursements to low-cost providers and delayed the automatic 15 percent payment reduction until after the first year of the implementation of the prospective payment system; and

(C) patients whose care is more extensive and expensive than the typical medicare patient do not receive supplemental payments in the interim payment system but will receive special protection in the home health care prospective payment system.

(2) SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON ACCESS TO HOME HEALTH CARE.—It is the sense of the House that—

(A) Congress recognizes the importance of home health care for seniors and disabled citizens;

(B) Congress and the Administration should work together to maintain quality care for patients whose care is more extensive and expensive than the typical medicare patient, including the most ill and infirmed medicare beneficiaries, while home health care agencies operate in the interim payment system; and

(C) Congress and the Administration should work together to avoid the implementation of the 15 percent reduction in the prospective payment system and ensure timely implementation of that system.

SEC. 316. SENSE OF THE HOUSE REGARDING MEDICARE+CHOICE PROGRAMS/REIMBURSEMENT RATES.

It is the sense of the House that the Medicare+Choice regional disparity among reimbursement rates is unfair, and that full funding of the Medicare+Choice program is a priority as Congress considers any medicare reform legislation.

SEC. 317. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON DIRECTING THE INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE TO ACCEPT NEGATIVE NUMBERS IN FARM INCOME AVERAGING.

(a) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(1) farmers' and ranchers' incomes vary widely from year-to-year due to uncontrollable markets and unpredictable weather;

(2) in the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, Congress enacted 3-year farm income averaging to protect agricultural producers from excessive tax rates in profitable years;

(3) last year, the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) proposed final regulations for averaging farm income, which failed to make clear that taxable income in a given year may be a negative number; and

(4) this IRS interpretation can result in farmers paying additional taxes during years in which they experience a loss in income.

(b) SENSE OF THE HOUSE.—It is the sense of the House that legislation should be considered during this session of the 106th Congress to direct the Internal Revenue Service to count any net loss of income in determining the proper rate of taxation.

SEC. 318. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON THE IMPORTANCE OF THE NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(1) the year 2000 will mark the 50th Anniversary of the National Science Foundation;

(2) the National Science Foundation is the largest supporter of basic research in the Federal Government;

(3) the National Science Foundation is the second largest supporter of university-based research;

(4) research conducted by the grantees of the National Science Foundation has led to innovations that have dramatically improved the quality of life of all Americans;

(5) grants made by the National Science Foundation have been a crucial factor in the development of important technologies that Americans take for granted, such as lasers, Magnetic Resonance Imaging, Doppler Radar, and the Internet;

(6) because basic research funded by the National Science Foundation is high-risk, cutting edge, fundamental, and may not produce tangible benefits for over a decade, the Federal Government is uniquely suited to support such research; and

(7) the National Science Foundation's focus on peer-reviewed merit based grants represents a model for research agencies across the Federal Government.

(b) SENSE OF THE HOUSE.—It is the sense of the House that the function 250 (Basic Science) levels assume an amount of funding which ensures that the National Science Foundation is a priority in the resolution; and that the National Science Foundation's critical role in funding basic research, which leads to the innovations that assure the Nation's economic future, and cultivate America's intellectual infrastructure, should be recognized.

SEC. 319. SENSE OF THE HOUSE REGARDING SKILLED NURSING FACILITIES.

It is the sense of the House that the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission should continue to carefully monitor the medicare skilled nursing benefit to determine if payment rates are sufficient to provide quality care, and that if reform is recommended, Congress should pass legislation as quickly as possible to assure quality skilled nursing care.

SEC. 320. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON SPECIAL EDUCATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(1) all children deserve a quality education, including children with disabilities;

(2) the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act provides that the Federal, State, and local governments are to share in the expense of educating children with disabilities and commits the Federal Government to pay up to 40 percent of the national average per pupil expenditure for children with disabilities;

(3) the high cost of educating children with disabilities and the Federal Government's failure to fully meet its obligation under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act stretches limited State and local education funds, creating difficulty in providing a quality education to all students, including children with disabilities;

(4) the current level of Federal funding to States and localities under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act is contrary to the goal of ensuring that children with disabilities receive a quality education;

(5) the Federal Government has failed to appropriate 40 percent of the national average per pupil expenditure per child with a disability as required under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act to assist States and localities to educate children with disabilities; and

(6) the levels in function 500 (Education) for fiscal year 2001 assume sufficient discretionary budget authority to accommodate fiscal year 2001 appropriations for IDEA, at least $2,000,000,000 above such funding levels appropriated in fiscal year 2000.

(b) SENSE OF THE HOUSE.—It is the sense of the House that—

(1) function 500 (Education) levels assume at least a $2,000,000,000 increase in fiscal year 2001 over the current fiscal year to reflect the commitment of Congress to appropriate 40 percent of the national per pupil expenditure for children with disabilities by a date certain;

(2) Congress and the President should increase fiscal year 2001 funding for programs under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act by at least $2,000,000,000 above fiscal year 2000 appropriated levels;

(3) Congress and the President should give programs under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act the highest priority among Federal elementary and secondary education programs by meeting the commitment to fund the maximum State grant allocation for educating children with disabilities under such Act prior to authorizing or appropriating funds for any new education initiative;

(4) Congress and the President may consider, if new or increased funding is authorized or appropriated for any elementary and secondary education initiative that directs funds to local educational agencies, providing the flexibility in such authorization or appropriation necessary to allow local educational agencies the authority to use such funds for programs under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act; and

(5) if a local educational agency chooses to utilize the authority under section 613(a)(2)(C)(i) of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act to treat as local funds up to 20 percent of the amount of funds the agency receives under part B of such Act that exceeds the amount it received under that part for the previous fiscal year, then the agency should use those local funds to provide additional funding for any Federal, State, or local education program.

SEC. 321. SENSE OF THE HOUSE REGARDING HCFA DRAFT GUIDELINES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(1) on February 15, 2000, the Health Care Financing Administration within the Department of Health and Human Services issued a draft Medicaid School-Based Administrative Claiming (MAC) Guide; and

(2) in its introduction, the stated purpose of the draft MAC guide is to provide information for schools, State medicaid agencies, HCFA staff, and other interested parties on the existing requirements for claiming Federal funds under the medicaid program for the costs of administrative activities, such as medicaid outreach, that are performed in the school setting associated with school-based health services programs.

(b) SENSE OF THE HOUSE.—It is the sense of the House that—

(1) many school-based health programs provide a broad range of services that are covered by medicaid, affording access to care for children who otherwise might well go without needed services;

(2) such programs also can play a powerful role in identifying and enrolling children who are eligible for medicaid, as well as the State Children's Health Insurance programs;

(3) undue administrative burdens may be placed on school districts and States and deter timely application approval;

(4) the Health Care Financing Administration should substantially revise the current draft MAC guide because it appears to promulgate new rules that place excessive administrative burdens on participating school districts;

(5) the goal of the revised guide should be to encourage the appropriate use of medicaid school-based services without undue administrative burdens; and

(6) the best way to ensure the continued viability of medicaid school-based services is to guarantee that the guidelines are fair and responsible.

SEC. 322. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON ASSET-BUILDING FOR THE WORKING POOR.

(a) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(1) 33 percent of all American households and 60 percent of African American households have either no financial assets or negative financial assets;

(2) 46.9 percent of children in America live in households with no financial assets, including 40 percent of Caucasian children and 75 percent of African American children;

(3) incentives, including individual development accounts, are tools demonstrating success at empowering low-income workers;

(5) middle and upper income Americans currently benefit from tax incentives for building assets; and

(6) the Federal Government should utilize the Federal tax code to provide low-income Americans with incentives to work and build assets in order to permanently escape poverty.

(b) SENSE OF THE HOUSE.—It is the sense of the House that the provisions of this resolution assume that Congress should modify the Federal tax law to include Individual Development Account provisions in order to encourage low-income workers and their families to save for buying a first home, starting a business, obtaining an education, or taking other measures to prepare for the future.

SEC. 323. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON THE IMPORTANCE OF SUPPORTING THE NATION'S EMERGENCY FIRST-RESPONDERS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The House finds that—

(1) over 1.2 million men and women work as fire and emergency services personnel in 32,000 fire and emergency medical services departments across the Nation;

(2) over 80 percent of those who serve do so as volunteers;

(3) the Nation's firefighters responded to more than 18 million calls in 1998, including over 1.7 million fires;

(4) an average of 100 firefighters per year lose their lives in the course of their duties; and

(5) the Federal Government has a role in protecting the health and safety of the Nation's fire fighting personnel.

(b) SENSE OF THE HOUSE.—It is the sense of the House that—

(1) the Nation's firefighters and emergency services crucial role in preserving and protecting life and property should be recognized, and such Federal assistance as low-interest loan programs, community development block grant reforms, emergency radio spectrum reallocations, and volunteer fire assistance programs, should be considered; and

(2) additional resources should be set aside for such assistance.

SEC. 324. SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON ADDITIONAL HEALTH-RELATED TAX RELIEF.

It is the sense of the House that the reserve fund set forth in section 213 assumes $446,000,000 in fiscal year 2001 and $4,352,000,000 for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005 for health-related tax provisions comparable to those contained in H.R. 2990 (as passed by the House).

Subtitle C—Sense of Senate Provisions

TITLE III—SENSE OF THE SENATE PROVISIONS

SEC. 331. SENSE OF THE SENATE SUPPORTING FUNDING LEVELS IN EDUCATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES ACT.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that of the amounts provided for elementary and secondary education within the Budget Function 500 of this resolution for fiscal years 2001 through 2005, such funds shall be appropriated in proportion to and in accordance with the levels authorized in the Educational Opportunities Act, S. 2.

SEC. 332. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON ADDITIONAL BUDGETARY RESOURCES.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels contained in this resolution assume that—

(1) there are billions of dollars in wasted expenditures in the Federal Government that should be eliminated; and

(2) higher projected budget surpluses arising from reductions in government waste and stronger revenue inflows could be used in the future for additional tax relief or debt reduction.

SEC. 333. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON REGARDING THE INADEQUACY OF THE PAYMENTS FOR SKILLED NURSING CARE.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that—

(1) the Administration should identify areas where they have the authority to make changes to improve quality, including analyzing and fixing the labor component of the skilled nursing facility market basket update factor; and

(2) while Congress deliberates funding structural medicare reform and the addition of a prescription drug benefit, it must maintain the continued viability of the current skilled nursing benefit. Therefore, the committees of jurisdiction should ensure that medicare beneficiaries requiring skilled nursing care have access to that care and that those providers have the resources to meet the expectation for high quality care.

SEC. 334. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON VETERANS' MEDICAL CARE.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume an increase of $1,400,000,000 in veterans' medical care appropriations in fiscal year 2001.

SEC. 335. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON IMPACT AID.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that the Impact Aid Program strive to reach the goal that all local educational agencies eligible for Impact Aid receive at a minimum, 40 percent of their maximum payment under sections 8002 and 8003.

SEC. 336. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON TAX SIMPLIFICATION.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that the Joint Committee on Taxation shall develop a report and alternative proposals on tax simplification by the end of the year, and the Department of the Treasury is requested to develop a report and alternative proposals on tax simplification by the end of the year.

SEC. 337. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON ANTITRUST ENFORCEMENT BY THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE AND FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION REGARDING AGRICULTURE MERGERS AND ANTICOMPETITIVE ACTIVITY.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that—

(1) the Antitrust Division and the Bureau of Competition will have adequate resources to enable them to meet their statutory requirements, including those related to reviewing increasingly numerous and complex mergers and investigating and prosecuting anticompetitive business activity; and

(2) these departments will—

(A) dedicate considerable resources to matters and transactions dealing with agri-business antitrust and competition; and

(B) ensure that all vertical and horizontal mergers implicating agriculture and all complaints regarding possible anticompetitive business practices in the agriculture industry will receive extraordinary scrutiny.

SEC. 338. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING FAIR MARKETS FOR AMERICAN FARMERS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that—

(1) the United States should take steps to increase support for American farmers in order to level the playing field for United States agricultural producers and increase the leverage of the United States in World Trade Organization negotiations on agriculture as long as such support is not trade distorting, and does not otherwise exceed or impair existing Uruguay Round obligations; and

(2) such actions should improve United States farm income and restore the prosperity of rural communities.

SEC. 339. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON WOMEN AND SOCIAL SECURITY REFORM.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that—

(1) women face unique obstacles in ensuring retirement security and survivor and disability stability;

(2) social security plays an essential role in guaranteeing inflation-protected financial stability for women throughout their old age;

(3) Congress and the Administration should act, as part of social security reform, to ensure that widows and other poor elderly women receive more adequate benefits that reduce their poverty rates and that women, under whatever approach is taken to reform social security, should receive no lesser a share of overall federally funded retirement benefits than they receive today; and

(4) the sacrifice that women make to care for their family should be recognized during reform of social security and that women should not be penalized by taking an average of 11.5 years out of their careers to care for their family.

SEC. 340. USE OF FALSE CLAIMS ACT IN COMBATTING MEDICARE FRAUD.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that chapter 37 of title 31, United States Code (commonly referred to as the False Claims Act) and the qui tam provisions of that chapter are essential tools in combatting medicare fraud and should not be weakened in any way.

SEC. 341. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING THE NATIONAL GUARD.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in the resolution assume that the Department of Defense will give priority to funding the Active Guard/Reserves and Military Technicians at levels authorized by Congress in the fiscal year 2000 Department of Defense authorization bill.

SEC. 342. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING MILITARY READINESS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the functional totals in the budget resolution assume that Congress will protect the Department of Defense's readiness accounts, including spares and repair parts, and operations and maintenance, and use the requested levels as the minimum baseline for fiscal year 2001 authorization and appropriations.

SEC. 343. SENSE OF THE SENATE SUPPORTING FUNDING OF DIGITAL OPPORTUNITY INITIATIVES.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that the Committees on Appropriations and Finance should support efforts that address the digital divide, including tax incentives and funding to—

(1) broaden access to information technologies;

(2) provide workers and teachers with information technology training;

(3) promote innovative online content and software applications that will improve commerce, education, and quality of life; and

(4) help provide information and communications technology to underserved communities.

SEC. 344. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON FUNDING FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that funds to improve the justice system will be available as follows:

(1) $665,000,000 for the expanded support of direct Federal enforcement, adjudicative, and correctional-detention activities.

(2) $50,000,000 in additional funds to combat terrorism, including cyber crime.

(3) $41,000,000 in additional funds for construction costs for the Federal Bureau of Prisons and the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center.

(4) $200,000,000 in support of Customs and Immigration and Nationalization Service port of entry officers for the development and implementation of the ACE computer system designed to meet critical trade and border security needs.

(5) Funding is available for the continuation of such programs as: the Byrne Grant Program, Violence Against Women, Juvenile Accountability Block Grants, First Responder Training, Local Law Enforcement Block Grants, Weed and Seed, Violent Offender Incarceration and Truth in Sentencing, State Criminal Alien Assistance Program, Drug Courts, Residential Substance Abuse Treatment, Crime Identification Technologies, Bulletproof Vests, Counterterrorism, Interagency Law Enforcement Coordination.

SEC. 345. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING COMPREHENSIVE PUBLIC EDUCATION REFORM.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that the Federal Government should support State and local educational agencies engaged in comprehensive reform of their public education system and that any public education reform should include at least the following principles:

(1) Every child should begin school ready to learn.

(2) Training and development for principals and teachers should be a priority.

SEC. 346. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON PROVIDING ADEQUATE FUNDING FOR UNITED STATES INTERNATIONAL LEADERSHIP.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that additional budgetary resources should be identified for function 150 to enable successful United States international leadership.

SEC. 347. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING THE HIV/AIDS CRISIS.

It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the functional totals underlying this resolution on the budget assume that Congress has recognized the catastrophic effects of the HIV/AIDS epidemic, particularly in sub-Saharan Africa, and seeks to maximize the effectiveness of the United States' efforts to combat the disease through any necessary authorization or appropriations;

(2) Congress should strengthen ongoing programs which address education and prevention, testing, the care of AIDS orphans, and improving home and community-based care options for those living with AIDS; and

(3) Congress should seek additional or new tools to combat the epidemic, including initiatives to encourage vaccine development and programs aimed at preventing mother-to-child transmission of the disease.

SEC. 348. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING TRIBAL COLLEGES.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this resolution assume that—

(1) the Senate recognizes the funding difficulties faced by tribal colleges and assumes that priority consideration will be provided to them through funding for the Tribally Controlled College and University Act, the 1994 Land Grant Institutions, and title III of the Higher Education Act; and

(2) such priority consideration reflects Congress' intent to continue work toward current statutory Federal funding goals for the tribal colleges.

SEC. 349. SENSE OF THE SENATE TO PROVIDE RELIEF FROM THE MARRIAGE PENALTY.

It is the sense of the Senate that the level in this budget resolution assume that Congress shall—

(1) pass marriage penalty tax relief legislation that begins a phase down of this penalty in 2001; and

(2) consider such legislation prior to April 15, 2000.

SEC. 350. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON THE CONTINUED USE OF FEDERAL FUEL TAXES FOR THE CONSTRUCTION AND REHABILITATION OF OUR NATION'S HIGHWAYS, BRIDGES, AND TRANSIT SYSTEMS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the functional totals in this budget resolution do not assume the reduction of any Federal gasoline taxes on either a temporary or permanent basis.

SEC. 351. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING THE PRICE OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS IN THE UNITED STATES.

It is the sense of the Senate that the budgetary levels in this resolution assume that the cost disparity between identical prescription drugs sold in the United States, Canada, and Mexico should be reduced or eliminated.

SEC. 352. SENSE OF THE SENATE AGAINST FEDERAL FUNDING OF SMOKE SHOPS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the budget levels in this resolution assume that no Federal funds may be used by the Department of Housing and Urban Development to provide any grant or other assistance to construct, operate, or otherwise benefit a smoke shop or other tobacco outlet.

SEC. 353. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING INVESTMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the assumptions underlying the functional totals in this resolution assume that the Federal Government should not directly invest contributions made to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund established under section 201 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401), or any interest derived from those contributions, in private financial markets.

SEC. 354. SENSE OF THE SENATE ON MEDICARE PRESCRIPTION DRUGS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the levels in this budget resolution assume that among its reform options, Congress should explore a medicare prescription drug proposal that—

(1) is voluntary;

(2) increases access for all medicare beneficiaries;

(3) is designed to provide meaningful protection and bargaining power for medicare beneficiaries in obtaining prescription drugs;

(4) is affordable for all medicare beneficiaries and for the medicare program;

(5) is administered using private sector entities and competitive purchasing techniques;

(6) is consistent with broader medicare reform;

(7) preserves and protects the financial integrity of the medicare trust funds;

(8) does not increase medicare beneficiary premiums; and

(9) provides a prescription drug benefit as soon as possible.

SEC. 355. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING FUNDING FOR NEW EDUCATION PROGRAMS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the budgetary levels in this resolution assume that Congress' first priority should be to fully fund the programs described under part B of the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (20 U.S.C. 1411 et seq.) at the originally promised level of 40 percent before Federal funds are appropriated for new education programs.

SEC. 356. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING ENFORCEMENT OF FEDERAL FIREARMS LAWS.

It is the sense of the Senate that the assumptions underlying the functional totals in this concurrent resolution on the budget assume that Federal funds will be used for an effective law enforcement strategy requiring a commitment to enforcing existing Federal firearms laws by—

(1) designating not less than 1 Assistant United States Attorney in each district to prosecute Federal firearms violations and thereby expand Project Exile nationally;

(2) upgrading the national instant criminal background system established under section 103(b) of the Brady Handgun Violence Prevention Act (18 U.S.C. 922 note) by encouraging States to place mental health adjudications on that system and by improving the overall speed and efficiency of that system; and

(3) providing incentive grants to States to encourage States to impose mandatory minimum sentences for firearm offenses based on section 924(c) of title 18, United States Code, and to prosecute those offenses in State court.

SEC. 357. SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT ANY INCREASE IN THE MINIMUM WAGE SHOULD BE ACCOMPANIED BY TAX RELIEF FOR SMALL BUSINESSES.

It is the sense of the Senate that the functional totals underlying this resolution on the budget assume that the minimum wage should be increased as provided for in amendment number 2547, the Domenici and others amendment to S. 625, the Bankruptcy Reform legislation.

SEC. 358. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING FUNDING FOR THE PARTICIPATION OF MEMBERS OF THE UNIFORMED SERVICES IN THE THRIFT SAVINGS PLAN.

It is the sense of Congress that the levels of funding for the defense category in this resolution—

(1) assume that members of the Armed Forces are to be authorized to participate in the Thrift Savings Plan; and

(2) provide the $980,000,000 necessary to offset the reduced tax revenue resulting from that participation through fiscal year 2009.

SEC. 359. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING UNINSURED AND LOW-INCOME INDIVIDUALS IN MEDICALLY UNDERSERVED COMMUNITIES.

It is the sense of the Senate that the functional totals underlying this resolution on the budget assume that—

(1) appropriations for consolidated health centers under section 330 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 254b) should be increased by 100 percent over the next 5 fiscal years in order to double the number of individuals who receive health care services at community, migrant, homeless, and public housing health centers; and

(2) appropriations for consolidated health centers should be increased by $150,000,000 in fiscal year 2001 over the amount appropriated for such centers in fiscal year 2000.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 290), establishing the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2001, revising the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2000, and setting forth appropriate budgetary levels for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2005, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment that is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clerical changes.

The conferees intend that to the extent that the legislative text in the conference report is the same as in the House or Senate-passed resolutions, the corresponding sections in the House Report 106–530 and Senate Report 106–251 remain a source of legislative history of the drafters' intent on the concurrent resolution.

DECLARATION

House resolution

The House resolution revises the budgetary levels for fiscal year 2000 and establishes the appropriate levels for fiscal year 2001, and for fiscal years 2002, 2003, 2004, and 2005.

Senate amendment

The Senate resolution revises the budgetary levels for fiscal year 2000 and establishes the appropriate levels for fiscal year 2001, and for fiscal years 2002, 2003, 2004, and 2005.

Conference agreement

The Conference Agreement revises and replaces the budgetary levels for the current year, fiscal year 2000, as established by the report accompanying H. Con. Res. 68, the Concurrent Resolution on the Budget for Fiscal Year 2000 (H. Rept. 106–91); establishes the levels for the budget year, fiscal year 2001; establishes levels and for each of the 4 out-years, fiscal years 2002, 2003, 2004, and 2005.

The authority to revise the current year levels is set forth in section 304 of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 [Budget Act]. These revised levels supersede those established and adjusted pursuant to H. Con. Res. 68 for all purposes under the Budget Act, including to enforce sections 302(f) and 311(a) of the Budget Act with respect to fiscal year 2000.

DISPLAY OF LEVELS AND AMOUNTS

RECOMMENDED LEVELS AND AMOUNTS

The required contents of the concurrent resolution on the budget are set forth in section 301(a) of the Budget Act.

House resolution

The House resolution includes amounts for the following budgetary totals required pursuant to section 301(a) of the Budget Act: totals of new budget authority, outlays, revenue, the levels by which revenues should be reduced, surpluses, and public debt.

Senate amendment

Title I of the Senate amendment contains a provision to focus attention on levels of debt held by the public. Section 101(6) provides advisory debt held by the public levels. These debt held by the public levels reflect the fact that the resolution devotes the entire Social Security surplus to the reduction of debt held by the public.

Section 101(c) shows (for informational purposes only) the level of budget authority and outlays for Social Security administrative expenses. These expenses, as is the case with all expenditures from the Social Security trust funds, are off-budget; however for scoring purposes they are counted against the discretionary spending limits because they are provided annually in appropriations acts.

Title I of the Conference Agreement includes the amounts required for both the House and Senate by section 301(a) of the Budget Act.

For purposes of enforcement in the Senate of section 311(a)(3) of the Budget Act, the Conference Agreement also includes the unified totals for revenue and outlays for the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance and Disability Insurance Trust Funds.

The Conference Agreement includes appropriate levels for debt held by the public as were included in the Senate amendment with an amendment modifying the amounts.

BUDGET FUNCTION LEVELS

Pursuant to section 301(a)(3) of the Budget Act, the budget resolution must set appropriate levels for each major functional category based on the 302(a) allocations and the budgetary totals.

The respective levels of the House resolution, the Senate amendment, and the conference report for each major budget function are as follows:

FUNCTION 050: NATIONAL DEFENSE

Major Programs in Function—The National Defense function includes funds to develop, maintain, and equip the military forces of the United States. Roughly 95 percent of the funding in this function goes to Department of Defense—Military activities, including funds for ballistic missile defense. That component also includes pay and benefits for military and civilian personnel; research, development, testing, and evaluation; procurement of weapons systems; military construction and family housing; and operations and maintenance of the defense establishment. The remaining funding in the function goes toward atomic energy defense activities of the Department of Energy, and other defense-related activities.

House Resolution—The House resolution revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $288.9 billion in budget authority [BA] and $282.5 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $306.3 billion in BA and $297.6 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $1,586.3 billion in BA and $1,554.7 billion in outlays.

Senate Amendment—The Senate amendment revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $291.6 billion in BA and $288.1 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $309.8 billion in BA and $296.7 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $1,589.2 billion in BA and $1,555.1 billion in outlays. These amounts reflect $4.0 billion in additional resources added to 2001 during the Senate's consideration of S. Con. Res. 101. This addition assumes that no such amount is added to 2000. The total amount also includes $10 million in BA and outlays in 2001 and $27.5 million in BA and outlays over 2000–2005. This latter amount was adopted by a vote of 99–0 and was explicitly assumed to supplement the compensation of enlisted personnel in the military who currently receive food stamps.

Conference Agreement—The Conference Agreement revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $291.6 billion in BA and $288.1 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $309.9 billion in BA and $296.7 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $1,589.8 billion in BA and $1,555.9 billion in outlays.

The Conference Agreement adopts the assumptions of the Senate amendment with respect to the addition of $4.0 billion in BA and commensurate outlays. It also adopts the Senate amendment assumption regarding enlisted military personnel on food stamps.

FUNCTION 150: INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Major Programs in Function—Funds distributed through the International Affairs function provide for international development and humanitarian assistance; international security assistance; the conduct of foreign affairs; foreign information and exchange activities; and international financial programs. The major departments and agencies in this function include the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, and the Agency for International Development.

House Resolution—The House resolution revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $20.1 billion in budget authority [BA] and $15.5 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $19.5 billion in BA and $17.3 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $94.4 billion in BA and $80.6 billion in outlays.

Senate Amendment—The Senate amendment revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $22.0 billion in BA and $16.0 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $20.1 billion in BA and $18.6 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $107.0 billion in BA and $89.8 billion in outlays.

Conference Agreement—The Conference Agreement revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $22.0 billion in BA and $16.0 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $19.8 billion in BA and $18.3 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $100.7 billion in BA and $85.9 billion in outlays.

FUNCTION 250: GENERAL SCIENCE, SPACE, AND TECHNOLOGY

Major Programs in Function—The General Science, Space, and Technology function consists of funds in two major categories: general science and basic research, and space flight, research, and supporting activities. The general science component includes the budgets for the National Science Foundation [NSF], and the fundamental science programs of the Department of Energy [DOE]. But the largest component of the function—about two-thirds of its total—is for space flight, research, and supporting activities of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration [NASA] (except for NASA's air transportation programs, which are included in Function 400).

House Resolution—The House resolution revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $19.3 billion in budget authority [BA] and $18.5 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $20.3 billion in BA and $19.4 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $103.1 billion in BA and $100.1 billion in outlays.

Senate Amendment—The Senate amendment revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $19.3 billion in BA and $18.4 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $19.7 billion in BA and $19.2 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $99.8 billion in BA and $97.9 billion in outlays.

Conference Agreement—The Conference Agreement revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $19.3 billion in BA and $18.4 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $20.3 billion in BA and $19.4 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $103.1 billion in BA and $100.1 billion in outlays.

FUNCTION 270: ENERGY

Major Programs in Function—The Energy function reflects the civilian activities in the Department of Energy. Through this function, spending is provided for energy supply and fossil energy R&D programs; rural electricity and telecommunications loans administered through the Department of Agriculture; and electric power generation and transmission programs for the three Power Marketing Administrations. The function also includes the Strategic Petroleum Reserve; energy conservation programs, including the Partnership for the Next Generation of Vehicles; Clean Coal Technology; Nuclear Waste Disposal; and the operations of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

FUNCTION 800: GENERAL GOVERNMENT

Major Programs in Function.—The General Government function consists of the activities of the Legislative Branch; the Executive

Office of the President; general tax collection and fiscal operations of the Department of Treasury (including the Internal Revenue Service, which accounts for almost two-thirds of the spending in this function); the property and personnel costs of the General Services Administration and the Office of Personnel Management; general purpose fiscal assistance to States, localities, the District of Columbia, and territories of the United States; and other general activities of the Federal Government.

House Resolution.—The House resolution revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $13.9 billion in budget authority [BA] and $14.7 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, the resolution sets forth $13.6 billion in BA and $14.2 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $67.8 billion in BA and $69.0 billion in outlays.

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $13.7 billion in BA and $14.7 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $14.4 billion in BA and $14.3 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $68.8 billion in BA and $69.4 billion in outlays.

Conference Agreement.—The Conference Agreement revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $13.7 billion in BA and $14.7 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth $14.0 billion in BA and $14.3 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides $68.4 billion in BA and $69.4 billion in outlays.

FUNCTION 900: NET INTEREST

Major Programs in Function.—Net Interest is the interest paid for the Federal Government's borrowing minus the interest income received by the Federal Government. Interest is a mandatory payment, with no discretionary components.

House Resolution.—The House resolution revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget levels to $284.6 billion in budget authority [BA] and outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth on-budget levels of $288.5 billion in BA and outlays. Over 5 years, it provides on-budget amounts of $1,420.5 billion in BA and outlays.

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget levels to $284.7 billion in BA and outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth on-budget levels of $289.0 billion in BA and outlays. Over 5 years, it provides on-budget amounts of $1,431.7 billion in BA and outlays.

Conference Agreement.—The Conference Agreement revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget levels to $284.6 billion in BA and outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth on-budget levels of $288.6 billion in BA and outlays. Over 5 years, it provides on-budget amounts of $1,427.3 billion in BA and outlays.

FUNCTION 920: ALLOWANCES

Major Programs in Function.—The Allowances function is used for planning purposes to address the budgetary effects of proposals or assumptions that cross various other budget functions. Once such changes are enacted, the budgetary effects are distributed to the appropriate budget functions.

House Resolution.—The House resolution revises the fiscal year 2000 levels to $8.5 billion in budget authority [BA] and $11.5 billion in outlays. For fiscal year 2001, the resolution sets forth −$4.7 billion in BA and −$8.7 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides −$18.1 billion in BA and −$20.2 billion in outlays.

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment has no effect on fiscal year 2000 levels. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth −$6.0 billion in BA and −$5.6 billion in outlays; and over 5 years, −$8.0 billion in BA and −$26.6 billion in outlays.

Conference Agreement.—The Conference Agreement has no effect on the fiscal year 2000 levels. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth −$5.5 billion in BA and −$4.6 billion in outlays. Over 5 years, it provides −$15.0 billion in BA and −$23.0 billion in outlays.

FUNCTION 950: UNDISTRIBUTED OFFSETTING RECEIPTS

Major Programs in Function.—Receipts recorded in this function are either intrabudgetary (a payment from one Federal agency to another, such as agency payments to the retirement trust funds) or proprietary (a payment from the public for some kind of business transaction with the Government). The main types of receipts recorded in this function are: the payments Federal employees and agencies make to employee retirement trust funds; payments made by companies for the right to explore and produce oil and gas on the Outer Continental Shelf; and payments by those who bid for the right to buy or use public property or resources, such as the electromagnetic spectrum. These receipts are treated as negative spending.

House Resolution.—The House resolution revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget levels to -$34.1 billion in budget authority [BA] and outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth on-budget levels of -$38.4 billion in BA and outlays. Over 5 years, it provides on-budget amounts of -$197.7 billion in BA and outlays.

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget levels to -$34.3 billion in BA and outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth on-budget levels of -$38.4 billion in BA and outlays. Over 5 years, it provides on-budget amounts of -$200.6 billion in BA and outlays.

Conference Agreement.—The Conference Agreement revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget levels to -$34.3 billion in BA and outlays. For fiscal year 2001, it sets forth on-budget levels of -$38.3 billion in BA and outlays. Over 5 years, it provides on-budget amounts of -$197.6 billion in BA and outlays.

REVENUES

Section 301(a)(2) of the Budget Act requires the budget resolution to include the total Federal revenues and the amount, if any, by which the aggregate levels of Federal revenues should be increased or decreased.

House Resolution.—The House resolution revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget revenue level to $1,465.5 billion. It sets forth on-budget revenues of $1,504.8 billion in fiscal year 2001 and $8,022.4 billion over 5 years.

Senate Amendment.—The Senate amendment revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget revenue level to $1,464.6 billion. It sets forth on-budget revenues of $1,501.8 billion for fiscal year 2001 and $8,025.4 billion over 5 years.

Conference Agreement.—The Conference Agreement revises the fiscal year 2000 on-budget revenue level to $1,465.5 billion. It sets forth on-budget revenues of $1,503.2 billion in fiscal year 2001 and $8,022.4 billion over 5 years.

The revenue levels in the Conference Agreement can accommodate tax relief and fairness legislation that has already begun to move in the current session of the 106th Congress. In addition, the revenue levels in the Conference Agreement would accommodate the revenue effects from legislation that would permit members of the Armed Forces to participate in the Thrift Savings Plan.

RECONCILIATION INSTRUCTIONS

Under section 310(a) of the Budget Act, the budget resolution may include directives to the committees of jurisdiction to make revisions in law necessary to accomplish a specified change in new budget authority or revenue. If the resolution includes directives to only one committee of the House or Senate, then that committee is required to directly report to its House legislative language of its design that would implement the spending or revenue changes provided for in the resolution. Any bill considered pursuant to a reconciliation instruction is subject to special procedures set forth in section 310(b), (c), (d), and (e) and section 313 of the Budget Act.

House resolution

Section 4 contains two sets of instructions to the Committee on Ways and Means: one for tax relief, and the other for debt reduction. The reporting schedule for the tax bills is as follows: first bill, May 26; second bill, June 23; third bill, July 28; and fourth bill, September 22. The bills providing for a reduction in debt held by the public coincide with the first and last tax bills on May 26 and September 22. The Committee assumes it will be unnecessary to consider the second debt reduction bill if the President agrees to the earlier reconciliation bills.

Subsection (a) directs the Committee on Ways and Means to report legislation that will achieve a reduction in revenue of $10 billion in fiscal year 2001 and $150 billion over 5 years. Although the budget resolution assumes a year-to-year distribution of the revenue reduction for the tax bills, the Ways and Means Committee bill may be higher or lower than these year-to-year levels as long as the net revenue loss does not exceed the first-year and five-year totals.

Subsection (b) directs the Committee on Ways and Means to report two bills that would reduce the level of debt held by the public: the first bill must reduce debt by $10 billion in fiscal year 2001 and the second bill must reduce debt by no more than $20 billion in fiscal year 2001.

Senate amendment

The Senate amendment contains a reconciliation instruction to reduce revenues by not more than $13.033 billion for fiscal year 2001 and by not more than $147.087 billion for the sum of the fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

The Senate Finance Committee would be required to report reconciliation legislation by September 22, 2000.

Section 103 of the Conference Agreement includes instructions to the Committee on Ways and Means to report two bills that reduce revenue by a total of $11.6 billion for fiscal year 2001 and $150 billion for the period of fiscal year 2001 through 2005. The Committee on Ways and Means is required to report the first bill to the House on July 14 and the second bill on September 13.

In addition, the Conference Agreement directs the Committee on Ways and Means to report two separate bills that reduce debt held by the public. The first bill must reduce debt held by the public by $7.5 billion and the second by up to $19.1 billion. The conferees intend for the second bill to lock in for debt reduction any part of the amounts assumed for tax relief if the tax bills do not become law. These bills are to be reported by July 14 and September 13, respectively. While the reporting dates for these two bills coincide with the deadlines for the two tax bills, they are to be reported as separate freestanding bills.

Section 104 of the Conference Agreement provides for two reconciliation bills in the Senate (the first, reported from the Senate Finance Committee by July 14, 2000, and the second reported from the Senate Finance Committee by September 13, 2000). The sum of the bills (if both were to be enacted) may not exceed $11.6 billion for 2001 and $150 billion for fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

302(a) ALLOCATIONS

As required in section 302(a) of the Budget Act, the joint statement of managers includes an allocation, based on the Conference Agreement, of total budget authority and total outlays for each House and Senate committee.

Conference Agreement

The joint statement of managers establishes allocations that are consistent with the budgetary totals and functional levels in Title I. The joint statement establishes allocations for the budget year, fiscal year 2001, and each of the out-years covered by the budget resolution, fiscal years 2001 through 2005. In addition, the joint statement provides a revised allocation for fiscal year 2000.

In the House, the 302(a) allocation to the Appropriations Committee is also divided into separate categories for general purpose discretionary, mass transit and highways. The allocations to the authorizing committees in the House are also divided into current law, assumed discretionary action levels, and reauthorizations.

As required under section 302(a), the allocations for the House and the Senate are also displayed in three separate discretionary categories that are consistent with the limits set forth in section 250(c)(4) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 [Deficit Control Act]: general purpose discretionary, mass transit, and highways.

Although this resolution revises the levels for fiscal year 2000, new allocations to Senate Committees are not displayed herein because there is no further change from current law assumed for 2000 in this resolution that needs to be allocated.

The 302(a) allocations are as follows:

IMPLEMENTATION AND ENFORCEMENT OF LEVELS

Section 301(b)(4) of the Budget Act permits the resolution to ''. . . require such other procedures, relating to the budget, as may be appropriate to carry out the purposes of this Act.'' Authority for Congress to determine its own rules is set forth in Section 5 of Article I of the United States Constitution. Under these authorities, budget resolutions have formulated congressional procedures to enforce budgetary limitations, accommodated legislation with costs not reflected in the resolution, and implemented the levels and assumptions set forth by the resolution.

ENFORCEMENT PROCEDURES

The Budget Act establishes procedures to enforce the levels set forth in the budget resolution. The budget resolution also can establish additional rules to enforce the budgetary levels it sets forth. Most budget-related rules so established are enforced through points of order that can be raised by any Member of the appropriate House immediately prior to the consideration of legislation. Usually such points of order may be raised against any bill or joint resolution, amendments thereto or a Conference Agreement thereon. In some cases, the points of order apply to certain motions.

House resolution

Section 5 extends an existing point of order established to prevent Social Security surpluses from being reduced. Subsection (a) provides various findings relating to the budgetary status of Social Security.

Subsection (b) establishes a freestanding rule prohibiting the consideration in the House or the Senate of any budget resolution that sets forth an on-budget deficit. It recognizes that if the budget resolution provides for an on-budget deficit, it is implicitly relying on Social Security to finance the general operations of the Federal Government. Paragraph (2) clarifies that, for purposes of that section, deficit levels are those set forth in the resolution pursuant to section 301 of the Budget Act.

Section 6 prohibits the House from considering legislation that would reduce the surplus below the levels set forth in section 2(4) of the resolution (as adjusted for the reserve funds). The reason for this new rule is to ensure that the portion of the surplus reserved for tax cuts is used to pay down the debt if the tax reductions do not become law. Under current law, committees can circumvent the allocations, aggregates and discretionary limits by simply designating legislation an emergency. This designation results in a dollar-for-dollar increase in the allocations, aggregates, and discretionary spending limits. As one committee recently observed in a report accompanying a bill, the only real constraint on such committees is the adverse publicity that would result if the emergency-designated appropriations resulted in an on-budget deficit.

This restriction is enforced by a point of order which, if sustained, would preclude further consideration of an offending measure. The point of order would apply to both tax and spending bills. With respect to spending bills, the point of order would apply to both direct spending bills reported by authorizing committees and appropriations bills reported by the Appropriations Committee. For the purpose of the point of order, the surplus is the amount established in section 2(4). These levels are adjusted for the revenue legislation set forth in the reconciliation instructions in section 4 and are subject to the adjustments and reserve funds provided for in the resolution.

Section 31 establishes two new restrictions designed to prevent the House from considering legislation that circumvents the allocations and aggregates set forth in the budget resolution. Both restrictions are enforceable through points of order that preclude consideration of an offending measure. The points of order may be raised against any reported bill, joint resolution, amendment to such a measure or any resulting Conference Agreement. They are applicable in both the House and the Senate. These two restrictions are outlined below.

Subsection (a) prohibits the consideration of legislation that would direct the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] or the Office of Management and Budget [OMB] to estimate the costs of a measure in a specified manner. This subsection assumes that any type of directed scoring is intended to circumvent a committee's allocation, the budget resolution's aggregate levels of budget authority and outlays, or the discretionary spending limits set forth in the Deficit Control Act. In the absence of such directed scoring, CBO and OMB are required to adhere to scoring conventions set forth in sections 257 of the Deficit Control Act and the joint statement of managers accompanying the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 (H. Rept. 105–217).

Subsection (b)(1) prohibits the consideration of legislation that would provide an amount of advance discretionary spending exceeding $23 billion. Subsection (b)(2) defines an advance appropriation as any general appropriation for fiscal year 2001 that would provide budget authority first made available in fiscal year 2002 or later. A significant level of advanced appropriations is permitted because in some programmatic areas, such as education, the planning cycle of State or local government recipients does not coincide with the Federal budget cycle. These governments need to know in advance how much they will receive from the Federal Government in order to accurately develop their budgets.

The Committee assumes that in order to advise the presiding officer on a point of order, the chairman will monitor the current level of enacted advanced appropriations in conjunction with the Current Level reports required by sections 302(f), 311(a), and Rule 26 of the Rules of Procedure for the House Budget Committee.

Section 201: Congressional Lockbox for Social Security Surpluses. The Senate amendment contains language which is very similar to section 201 of the Conference Agreement on the fiscal year 2000 budget resolution. This ''Social Security lockbox,'' as it is known, provides a point of order in both the House of Representatives and the Senate against a budget resolution that sets forth an on-budget deficit for any fiscal year. This ensures that Social Security surpluses can not be used to finance deficit spending.

The point of order will now be permanent and in the Senate will require 60 votes for a waiver or to sustain an appeal. In addition, a ''double lock'' is now attached to this lockbox point of order by adding a ''lookback''. The ''lookback'' requires that after the end of the fiscal year, in its next budget resolution, Congress must look back to see if any deficit spending has occurred and make the Social Security trust fund whole in the subsequent year by reducing future discretionary spending by an equivalent amount.

Section 207: Emergency Designation Point of Order in the Senate. The Senate amendment contains language which provides a 60–vote point of order in the Senate against any legislation (including Conference Agreements) that contains an emergency designation with respect to any spending or revenues. Subsection (g) contains an exception for all discretionary defense spending. This section is very similar to section 206 of the Conference Agreement on the fiscal year 2000 budget resolution with one exception: the point of order is now permanent. As was the case last year, the point of order would operate similar to the Senate's Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Budget Act) in that if the point of order is sustained, the offending language (in this case the emergency designation) can be excised from the bill, amendment or Conference Agreement, leaving the remainder intact. This is likely to result in the remaining language then being subject to some other Budget Act point of order because the additional spending would then be scored against either the discretionary spending limits, the section 311 aggregates, or a committee's allocation.

Section 208: Reserve Fund Pending the Increase of fiscal year 2001 Discretionary Spending Limits. Section 312(b) of the Budget Act provides a 60–vote point of order in the Senate against any legislation that exceeds the discretionary spending limits set forth in section 251 of the Deficit Control Act. This point of order applies to a concurrent resolution on the budget as well as substantive legislation. Sustaining the current discretionary spending limits is not feasible based on recent budget submissions by President Clinton and congressional action.

The Senate amendment envisions a level of discretionary spending which exceeds the current statutory limits. However, because of the restrictions of section 312(b), the functional totals and spending aggregates contained in this resolution technically indicate a level of discretionary spending that adheres to the current-law limits. The section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Appropriations is also in compliance with the current limits. This is achieved by assuming a reserve amount within function 920 (allowances).

The Senate amendment contains language which provides the chairman of the Committee on the Budget in the Senate with the authority to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Appropriations up to the level of discretionary spending envisioned by the resolution, only after legislation has been enacted that increases the statutory discretionary spending limits. For the purposes of this section, the Senate amendment assumes that only the fiscal year 2001 limits will be increased. No assumption is made with respect to the appropriate level for fiscal year 2002. The Senate amendment also intends that in order to maintain mathematical consistency and accurate enforcement of the budget resolution, the chairman will also be authorized to adjust the aggregates contained in the resolution. Therefore it will be necessary to amend the language of section 208 to provide the chairman with this additional authority.

Section 209: Congressional Firewall for Defense and Non-Defense Spending. The Senate amendment contains language that, upon the enactment of legislation which increases the discretionary spending limits for fiscal year 2001, establishes a ''firewall'' between defense and nondefense discretionary spending in the Senate. This firewall consists of limits on the overall level of both defense and nondefense spending. The nondefense portion includes the outlays for both highways and mass transit. These limits will be enforced by a 60-vote point of order against a measure that exceeds the limits.

Section 210: Mechanisms for Strengthening Budgetary Integrity. The Senate amendment contains language establishing two new points of order in the Senate, one with respect to advanced appropriations and the other with respect to delayed obligations. Both points of order require 60–votes for a waiver or to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair. Similar to the emergency designation point of order in section 207 of the Senate amendment, these points of order also operate like the Byrd Rule: if the point of order is sustained, the offending language will be excised from the measure—including the Conference Agreement. Both points of order expire at the end of fiscal year 2002 in keeping with the lifetime of the current discretionary spending limits.

Section 210(b) of the Senate amendment provides a point of order against any appropriation that results in the sum of all advances from fiscal year 2001 into fiscal year 2002 (or into any subsequent fiscal year) in excess of the amounts that were advanced from fiscal year 2000 into fiscal year 2001 for education programs ($23 billion).

Section 210(c) of the Senate amendment provides a point of order against the use of any delayed obligations in an appropriations bill with specific exceptions for any delays in the defense category and any reoccurring or customary delays (including a date and a dollar limitation) that are listed in this section. These specified delays total approximately $11.2 billion.

Section 210(g) of the Senate amendment provides guidance for interpreting the germaneness requirement found in section 305(b)(2) of the Budget Act . Section 305 requires that all amendments offered on the floor to a budget resolution or a reconciliation bill must be germane to the underlying legislation and is enforced by a 60-vote point of order in the Senate. The Senate amendment states that an amendment will be considered not germane if it contains only precatory (non-binding) language. This is designed to place a 60–vote hurdle with respect to what is commonly referred to as ''sense of the Senate'' amendments. Note that it is not meant to preclude the inclusion of ''purpose'' or ''findings'' language that is part of an otherwise substantive amendment.

Section 201 of the Conference Agreement extends section 201 of H. Con. Res. 68, which prohibits the consideration in both the House and the Senate of any budget resolution that sets forth an on-budget deficit. Subsection (a) makes various findings regarding the relationship between the Social Security surplus and the Federal budget. This section is enforceable by a point of order that may be waived by a majority vote in the House and a three-fifths vote in the Senate. The rule applies to any budget resolution establishing levels for fiscal year 2002 or revising the levels set forth in this resolution for fiscal year 2001. It also applies to amendments or Conference Agreements on such resolutions. As with other budget-related points of order, determinations of the appropriate levels are made by the Budget Committee of the appropriate House. The Conference Agreement includes the exception contained in the Senate amendment for periods of war or low economic growth.

Section 202 of the Conference Agreement establishes a procedure for preserving the surpluses set forth in the resolution. This procedure applies only to the House. Section 202 specifically prohibits the consideration of any measure in the House that would reduce the surplus below the level set forth in section 101(4) (as appropriately adjusted). It is enforced by a point of order which, if sustained, would preclude consideration of the measure. The House conferees intend for determinations of whether a measure would cause the surplus to be less than the levels in the budget resolution in the same manner as such determinations are made under Section 311(a) of the Budget Act.

In order to enforce this provision, the House Budget Committee will monitor the current level of the surplus, which is a function of enacted spending and tax legislation, and the surplus levels set forth in the budget resolution.

This point of order will not preclude the consideration of legislation assumed in the appropriate surplus levels for which adjustments are made pursuant to sections 214 through 220.

The House conferees intend this mechanism to ensure that the surpluses reserved for either tax relief or debt reduction are not used to finance higher spending. Under current law and the terms of recent budget resolutions, there is nothing to prevent spending and tax legislation from eroding the surplus set forth in the resolution. A measure may implicitly tap into this surplus by providing an appropriation for any program or purpose enumerated in section 314 of the Budget Act. Doing so automatically increases the levels in the budget resolution above their original amounts, thereby reducing the current level of the surplus. This mechanism is designed to prevent this from happening.

Section 203 of the Conference Agreement provides for the enhanced enforcement of budgetary limits. It applies only to the House. Subsection (a) prohibits consideration in the House of appropriation bills containing directed scoring language. A directed scoring provision is defined as legislative language that directs CBO or OMB how to estimate the discretionary new budget authority of a provision for budget enforcement purposes. The House conferees intend for appropriate scoring conventions to be used to enforce the budget resolution under the Budget Act, and the appropriations caps and pay-as-you-go [PAYGO] requirements set forth in the Deficit Control Act. The conferees recognize it may be necessary to occasionally waive this provision in order to assure that costs are scored to the appropriate committee in omnibus appropriations bills. This subsection expires on January 1, 2001.

Subsection (b)(1) prohibits the consideration in the House of legislation that would provide an amount of advance discretionary spending exceeding $23.5 billion. Subsection (b)(2) defines an advance appropriation as any general appropriation for fiscal year 2001 that would provide budget authority first made available in fiscal year 2002 or later. This subsection also expires on January 1, 2001.

Section 204 of the Conference Agreement contains language establishing two new points of order in the Senate, one with respect to advance appropriations and the other with respect to delayed obligations. Total advances are limited to $23.5 billion and permissible delays include only those which are recurring or customary or relate to discretionary defense spending. Both points of order require 60–votes for a waiver or to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair. Similar to the emergency designation point of order in section 207 of the Senate amendment, these points of order also operate like the Byrd Rule: if the point of order is sustained, the offending language will be excised from the measure—including any conference agreement. Both points of order expire at the end of fiscal year 2002 in keeping with the lifetime of the current discretionary spending limits. The Conference Agreement also retains the provision from section 210(g) of the Senate Amendment with a modification.

Section 205 of the Conference Agreement retains the language from section 207 of the Senate amendment which establishes a 60-vote point of order in the Senate against legislation (including Conference Agreements) that contains an emergency designation with respect to any spending or revenues. Subsection (g) contains an exception for all discretionary defense spending. This section is very similar to section 206 of the Conference Agreement on the fiscal year 2000 budget resolution with one exception: the point of order is now made permanent. As was the case last year, the point of order would operate similarly to the Senate's Byrd Rule (section 313 of the Budget Act) in that if the point of order is sustained, the offending language (in this case the emergency designation) can be excised from the bill, amendment or Conference Agreement, leaving the remainder in tact. This is likely to result in the remaining language then being subject to some other Budget Act point of order because the additional spending would then be scored against either the discretionary spending limits, the section 311 aggregates, or a committee's allocation.

Section 206 of the Conference Agreement retains the language from section 208 of the Senate amendment and establishes a mechanism in the Senate for implementing an increase in fiscal year 2001 discretionary spending limits. This provision permits the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Budget to revise the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Appropriations (and other appropriate budgetary levels), once an increase in the discretionary spending limits for fiscal year 2001 is enacted.

Section 207 of the Conference Agreement retains the language of section 209 of the Senate amendment and provides that, upon the enactment of legislation increasing the discretionary spending limits for fiscal year 2001, there is established a ''firewall'' between defense and nondefense discretionary spending in the Senate. This firewall consists of limits on the overall level of both defense and nondefense spending. The nondefense portion includes the outlays for both highways and mass transit. These limits will be enforced by a 60–vote point of order against a measure that exceeds the limits.

The Senate's PAYGO point of order was modified in section 207 of the Conference Agreement on the fiscal year 2000 budget resolution to make clear that spending of on-budget surpluses would not violate the PAYGO rule. This rule continues in effect, unchanged by this resolution, and is reprinted below:

PAY-AS-YOU-GO POINT OF ORDER IN THE SENATE

See Section 207 of H. Con. Res. 68 (106th Cong. 1st Sess.)

(a) PURPOSES.—The Senate declares that it is essential to—

(1) ensure continued compliance with the balanced budget plan set forth in this resolution; and

(2) continue the pay-as-you-go enforcement system.

(b) POINT OF ORDER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—It shall not be in order in the Senate to consider any direct spending or revenue legislation that would increase the on-budget deficit or cause an on-budget deficit for any one of the three applicable time periods as measured in paragraphs (5) and (6).

(2) APPLICABLE TIME PERIODS.—For purposes of this subsection the term ''applicable time period'' means any one of the three following periods:

(A) The first year covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget.

(B) The period of the first 5 fiscal years covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget.

(C) The period of the 5 fiscal years following the first 5 fiscal years covered by the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget.

(3) DIRECT-SPENDING LEGISLATION.—For purposes of this subsection and except as provided in paragraph (4), the term ''direct-spending legislation'' means any bill, joint resolution, amendment, motion, or Conference Agreement that affects direct spending as that term is defined by and interpreted for purposes of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

(4) EXCLUSION.—For purposes of this subsection the terms ''direct-spending legislation''and ''revenue legislation'' do not include—

(A) any concurrent resolution on the budget; or

(B) any provision of legislation that affects the full funding of, and continuation of, the deposit insurance guarantee commitment in effect on the date of enactment of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990.

(5) BASELINE.—Estimates prepared pursuant to this section shall—

(A) use the baseline used for the most recently adopted concurrent resolution on the budget; and

(B) be calculated under the requirements of subsections (b) through (d) of section 257 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 for fiscal years beyond those covered by that concurrent resolution on the budget.

(6) PRIOR SURPLUS.—If direct spending or revenue legislation increases the on-budget deficit or causes an on-budget deficit when taken individually, then it must also increase the on-budget deficit or causes an on-budget deficit when taken together with all direct spending and revenue legislation enacted since the beginning of the calendar year not accounted for in the baseline under paragraph (5)(A), except that the direct spending or revenue effects resulting from legislation enacted pursuant to the reconciliation instructions included in that concurrent resolution on the budget shall not be available.

(c) WAIVER.—This section may be waived or suspended in the Senate only by the affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members, duly chosen and sworn.

(d) APPEALS.—Appeals in the Senate from the decisions of the Chair relating to any provision of this section shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided between, and controlled by, the appellant and the manager of the bill or joint resolution, as the case may be. An affirmative vote of three-fifths of the Members of the Senate, duly chosen and sworn, shall be required in the Senate to sustain an appeal of the ruling of the Chair on a point of order raised under this section.

(e) DETERMINATION OF BUDGET LEVELS.—For purposes of this section, the levels of new budget authority, outlays, and revenues for a fiscal year shall be determined on the basis of estimates made by the Committee on the Budget of the Senate.

(f) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 23 of House Concurrent Resolution 218 (103d Congress) is repealed.

(g) SUNSET.—Subsections (a) through (e) of this section shall expire September 30, 2002.

The Senate amendment assumes that the on-budget surplus be placed on the Senate's PAYGO scorecard. The baseline on-budget surpluses are shown on the table below:

[In billions of dollars]

	Fiscal year—
	2001	2002	2003	2004	2005	2006	2007	2008	2009	2010	5 yr.	10 yr.
Baseline on-budget surplus	26.509	54.330	77.487	105.636	132.475	197.085	248.281	290.469	348.599	410.089	396.437	1,890.961

RESERVE FUNDS

Reserve funds are special procedures for adjusting the levels in the budget resolution to accommodate specified classes of legislation. Usually the cost of these bills is not assumed in either the total revenue and spending levels or the appropriate committee's 302(a) allocations. In the absence of the adjustments, any reported bill would exceed the reporting committees' allocations in violation of section 302(f) of the Budget Act, subjecting it to a point of order which could preclude the applicable House from considering the measure. The adjustments are usually automatically triggered by the consideration of a measure on the House or Senate floor. In the case of the reserve funds set forth herein, the adjustments may be made at the discretion of the Budget Committee chairman of the House in which the measure is being considered and are subject to various limitations.

Section 7 establishes several procedures to ensure that an amount equal to the revenue reduction assumed for tax relief is used for that purpose, or, if the tax legislation is not enacted into law, used to reduce the public debt. Subsection (a) directs the Budget Committee chairman to reduce the aggregate by the amount that Federal revenues should be changed for fiscal year 2001 ($150 billion over 5 years) to zero. In subsection (b), this level is then increased as each of the reconciliation bills is considered by Congress. Because only specified bills would cause the adjustment to be made, any other bill that would use the revenue for other purposes would be subject to a point of order.

Section 8 provides a reserve fund of $50 billion that may be used for tax relief or debt reduction. Any part of this reserve fund used for tax relief would be in addition to the tax relief assumed in section 2(1). If the Committee on Ways and Means reports legislation reducing revenue by an amount in excess of its reconciliation instructions, subsection (b) allows the Budget Committee chairman to increase the aggregate level of revenue reduction by that amount. The total increase under this section, however, may not exceed $5.155 billion in fiscal year 2001 and $50 billion over 5 years.

Section 9 provides for an adjustment in the appropriate levels of the budget resolution if the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] releases a report projecting an increase in the on-budget surplus. If there is an increase in the surplus relative to the CBO estimates underlying the budget resolution, the Budget Committee chairman has the option to choose among any combination of the following: increasing the allocations to the authorizing committees; increasing the allocation of debt held by the public; and increasing the amount of revenue reduction. The sum of the adjustments may not exceed the projected increase in the surplus for fiscal year 2000 and for the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005 included in the updated CBO report. Additionally, section 9 permits the Budget Committee chairman to direct the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill reducing debt held by the public by an amount equal to any increase in the surplus for fiscal year 2000.

Section 10 establishes a reserve fund for certain Medicare-related legislation. The Budget Committee chairman has the option to increase the allocations of budget authority and outlays to the Committees on Ways and Means and Commerce, and the aggregates for legislation providing for Medicare reform and prescription drug coverage. The adjustments are in the amounts provided by the bill for the specified purpose, but not to exceed $2 billion in budget authority and outlays in fiscal year 2001 and $40 billion in budget authority and outlays over the 5–year period. The reserve fund assumes that this legislation will not be included in a reconciliation bill.

Section 11 establishes a reserve fund for agriculture for fiscal year 2000. The Budget Committee chairman is authorized to increase the allocations of budget authority and outlays to the Committee on Agriculture for legislation that provides income assistance to farmers and farm producers. The reserve fund is based on the assumption that the legislation will be reported by the Committee on Agriculture as a freestanding bill, rather than included in a supplemental appropriations bill, as has been the case in previous years. The chairman of the Budget Committee may make the adjustment by whatever amount of budget authority and resulting outlays are provided by the bill, but in no event may the adjustment exceed $6 billion in fiscal year 2000. The resolution assumes all of the budget authority will be obligated and paid out of the Treasury in fiscal year 2000.

Section 12 provides a reserve fund for risk management or income support legislation in fiscal year 2001 similar to that included in last year's budget resolution. The reserve fund authorizes the Budget Committee chairman to increase the allocations of budget authority and outlays to the Committee on Agriculture for legislation related to crop insurance or other income support measures. The adjustment is at the option of the chairman, but must be in the amount of budget authority and resulting outlays provided by the bill, but may not exceed $1.355 billion in budget authority and $595 million in outlays in fiscal year 2001, and $8.539 billion in budget authority and $7.223 billion in outlays over the 5-year period. The committee notes that a crop insurance bill, H.R. 2559, passed the House last year with a comparable adjustment in the fiscal year 2000 budget resolution (H. Con. Res 68) and has yet to be taken up by the Senate.

Section 13 sets forth the procedures for making adjustments pursuant to the reserve funds. Subsections (a)(1) and (2) provide that the adjustments are made only during the interval that the legislation is under consideration and do not take effect until the legislation is enacted. The treatment of these reserve funds is consistent with the treatment of adjustments for emergencies and other programs and initiatives under section 314 of the Budget Act.

Subsection (a)(3) provides that in order to make the adjustments for the reserve funds, the chairman must insert appropriate language in the Congressional Record.

Subsection (b) clarifies that any adjustments made under any of the reserve funds in the resolution have the same effect as if they were part of the original levels set forth in section 3. In other words, the adjusted levels, after they are made, are used to enforce points of order against legislation that is inconsistent with the budget resolution's allocations and aggregates.

Subsection (c) clarifies that the Committee on the Budget determines the estimates used to enforce points of order, as is the case for enforcing budget-related points of order pursuant to section 312 of the Budget Act.

Senate amendment

Section 202: Reserve Fund for Medicare. The Senate amendment contains language in section 202 establishing a two-part reserve fund for Medicare legislation.

Subsection (a) permits the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Finance, and the aggregates and other appropriate budgetary levels for legislation that provides a Medicare prescription drug benefit if the cost of the legislation does not exceed $20 billion over the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2003 and the legislation does not cause an on-budget deficit in any of these years.

Subsection (b) provides that if the Committee on Finance fails to report such legislation prior to September 1, 2000, the adjustments permitted by subsection (a) shall be made with respect to any legislation considered in the Senate containing a prescription drug benefit.

Subsection (c) permits the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Finance and the spending aggregates for legislation which provides an additional $20 billion for fiscal years 2004 and 2005 if the Committee on Finance reports legislation that extends the solvency of the Medicare Hospital Insurance trust fund without the use of new subsidies from the general fund, without decreasing beneficiaries' access to health care, and excludes the cost of extending and modifying the prescription drug benefit crafted pursuant to the first part of the reserve fund. The Committee assumes that Medicare reform efforts will ensure adequate reimbursement for Medicare providers. The allocation of this $20 billion cannot cause an on-budget deficit in either 2004 or 2005.

Section 203: Reserve Fund for the Stabilization of Payments to Counties in Support of Education. The Senate amendment contains language providing a reserve fund that would allow the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Energy and Natural Resources Committee for legislation providing additional mandatory spending for the stabilization of receipt-based payments to counties that support school and road systems and also provides a portion of those payments toward local investments in Federal lands within those counties. Adjustments may also be made for amendments that bring the reported legislation into compliance with the terms of this reserve fund. The reserve fund requires that the committee report this legislation and that the cost shall not exceed $200,000,000 in the first year and not more than $1,100,000,000 for fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

Section 204: Reserve Fund for Agriculture. The Senate amendment contains language providing a reserve fund that would allow the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the section 302 allocation to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry for legislation providing for additional mandatory spending for assistance for producers of program crops and specialty crops, enhancement for agriculture conservation programs, and perhaps other programs within the committee's jurisdiction. The reserve fund can only be triggered if the committee reports legislation to the Senate on or before June 29, 2000. Adjustments may also be made for amendments that bring the reported legislation into compliance with the terms of this reserve fund. The cost of such legislation shall not exceed $5,500,000,000 for fiscal year 2000; $1,640,000,000 for fiscal year 2001; and $3,000,000,000 for fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

Section 205: Tax Reduction Reserve Fund in the Senate. The Senate amendment contains language providing a reserve fund that allows the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the spending and revenue aggregates for legislation that reduces revenues as long as the legislation does not cause an on-budget deficit for the first year or the sum of the 5 years covered by this resolution.

Section 206: Mechanism for Additional Debt Reduction. If either or both of the tax reconciliation bills envisioned by section 104 of the Senate amendment or the Medicare/Prescription drug legislation envisioned by section 202 of the Senate amendment do not become law (because they are never enacted by the Congress or the President vetoes the measures), the Conference Agreement contains language which would allow the chairman of the Budget Committee to reduce the balances available on the Senate's pay-go scorecard and adjust the aggregates and committee allocations to prevent these ''reconciled'' or ''reserved'' amounts from being used for anything other than reduction of debt held by the public. In addition, the debt held by the public levels shown in section 101(6) of this resolution will be reduced by those same amounts to make clear that these funds are dedicated to debt reduction.

Section 214: Reserve Fund to Foster the Health of Children with Disabilities and the Employment and Independence of Their Families. The Senate amendment contains language that provides a reserve fund that would allow the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Finance and the spending aggregate for legislation which facilitates children with disabilities receiving needed health care at home while still allowing their families to become or remain employed. The reserve fund can only be triggered if the committee reports legislation to the Senate. Adjustments may also be made for amendments that bring the reported legislation into compliance with the terms of this reserve fund. This will permit such legislation to make use of any on-budget surpluses. However, the cost of such legislation shall not exceed $50,000,000 for fiscal year 2001; and $300,000,000 for fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

Section 216: Reserve Fund for Military Retiree Health Care. The Senate amendment contains language providing a reserve fund that would allow the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Armed Services, and other budgetary aggregates and limits, for legislation that funds improvements to health care programs for military retirees and their dependents in the fiscal year 2001 Department of Defense authorization legislation. The reserve fund can only be triggered if the committee reports such legislation to the Senate. The cost of such legislation may not cause an on-budget deficit for fiscal year 2001 or the sum of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

Section 217: Reserve Fund for Early Learning and Parent Support Programs. The Senate amendment contains language that provides a reserve fund that would allow the chairman of the Committee on the Budget in the House and Senate to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Education and the Workforce of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions in the Senate, and other budgetary aggregates and limits, for legislation that improves opportunities at the local level for early learning, brain development, and school readiness and offers support programs for their families. The cost of such legislation may not cause an on-budget deficit and may not exceed $8.5 billion in budget authority for the sum of fiscal years 2001 through 2005.

Section 211 of the Conference Agreement establishes a procedure to ensure that if any of the reconciliation bills pursuant to sections 103(a) and 104, Medicare reform/prescription drug bills pursuant to sections 214 and 215, and other freestanding tax bills are not enacted into law, then the amount of the surplus reserved for these bills will be used to reduce debt. This will be displayed by permitting the chairmen to reduce the advisory levels of debt held by the public. The chairmen of the Budget Committees are authorized to increase the revenue aggregates by the difference between the assumed tax cut and the amount of any tax cuts actually enacted after the date of the adoption of this resolution. In the same fashion, each Chairman may reduce the spending aggregates by the difference between the amount assumed for Medicare reform/prescription drugs and the amount of spending provided by any such enacted legislation. If any changes in the aggregates are made under this section, then the Senate Budget Committee chairman is authorized to make the appropriate changes in the Senate's PAYGO balances. This section would also reduce any adjustment made under section 213 to the extent that the adjustments exceed the costs of enacted legislation as of the date the Chairmen make the adjustments under this section.

Section 212 of the Conference Agreement establishes a reserve fund to accommodate an additional $25 billion in tax relief or debt reduction. This section applies to both the House and the Senate. Under this section, the Budget Committee chairman of the appropriate House may adjust the revenue aggregate by the amount the legislation reduces revenue in excess of the reconciled $11.6 billion in fiscal year 2001 and $150 billion over 5 years (when all other legislation reducing revenues enacted after the adoption of this concurrent resolution has been taken into account), but not to exceed the $1 billion in fiscal year 2001 and $25 billion in fiscal years 2001 through 2005. This amount is in addition to any adjustment triggered by CBO's update to The Budget and Economic Outlook referred to in section 213.

Section 213 of the Conference Agreement establishes a reserve fund to accommodate additional tax relief or debt reduction if the estimates of the projected on-budget surplus increases. It applies to both the House and the Senate. The Budget Committee chairman of each House may increase the aggregate level of revenue reduction, and adjust the reconciliation instructions accordingly, by an amount not to exceed the projected increase in the on-budget surplus as estimated in the next update to The Budget and Economic Outlook published by the Congressional Budget Office [CBO]. This increase is relative to the corresponding levels as reported in The Budget and Economic Outlook published by CBO in March 2000 which underlie this budget resolution. If these additional surpluses are not applied to additional tax reduction, the level of debt held by the public will be automatically reduced. If CBO projects an increase in the surplus for fiscal year 2000, this section authorizes the House Budget chairman to reduce the debt levels and direct the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill reducing debt held by the public by the amount of the increase in the surplus for that fiscal year.

Section 214 of the Conference Agreement establishes a reserve fund for legislation that provides for Medicare reform and prescription drug coverage. This reserve fund applies only in the House. The Budget Committee chairman is authorized to increase the appropriate allocations of budget authority and outlays to the House Ways and Means Committee and the House Commerce Committee, and aggregates if necessary, by the amount of budget authority and outlays provided by the measure for the specified purpose. In no event may the amount of the adjustment exceed $2.0 billion in budget authority and outlays in fiscal year 2001 and $40 billion in budget authority and outlays over 5 years.

Section 215 of the Conference Agreement establishes a reserve fund for Medicare in the Senate. It contains language which establishes a two-part reserve fund for Medicare legislation.

Subsection (a) permits the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Finance, and the aggregates and other appropriate budgetary levels for legislation which provides a Medicare prescription drug benefit if the cost of the legislation does not exceed $20 billion over the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005 and the legislation does not cause an on-budget deficit in any of these years.

Subsection (b) permits the chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the section 302(a) allocation to the Committee on Finance and other aggregates for legislation which provides $40 billion for fiscal years 2001 through 2005 if the Committee on Finance reports legislation which improves the solvency of the Medicare program without the use of new subsidies from the general fund and improves access to prescription drugs (or continues access provided under subsection (a)). The amount provided under this subsection will be reduced by any amount provided for legislation considered in the Senate under subsection (a). The allocation of this $40 billion may not cause an on-budget deficit in any fiscal year.

Section 216 of the Conference Agreement establishes a reserve fund for legislation that provides assistance for producers of program and specialty crops. It applies in both the House and the Senate. The Budget Committee chairman of the appropriate House is authorized to increase the 302(a) allocations for fiscal years 2000 and 2001 for the House Committee on Agriculture and the Senate Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry by the amount of budget authority and resulting outlays provided by the measure for the specified purpose. In no event may the amount of the adjustment exceed $5.5 billion in budget authority and outlays in fiscal year 2000, and 1.64 billion in budget authority and outlays in fiscal year 2001. The conferees have based this reserve fund on the assumption that it will be considered as part of a freestanding bill reported by the authorizing committees rather than incorporated into an appropriations measure.

Section 217 of the Conference Agreement establishes a reserve fund to accommodate legislation for health programs designed to allow children with disabilities to obtain access to home health services and enable their parents to seek employment. This reserve fund applies to both the House and Senate. The Budget Committee chairman of the appropriate House may make adjustments to the 302(a) allocations of the House Commerce Committee and the Senate Finance Committee by the amount of budget authority and outlays provided by the bill. In no event may the amount of the adjustment exceed $25 million in budget authority and outlays in fiscal year 2001 and $150 million in budget authority and outlays over 5 years.

Section 218 of the Conference Agreement establishes a reserve fund for legislation that improves military retiree health care programs. It applies in both the House and Senate. The Budget Committee chairman of the appropriate House may increase the 302(a) allocations for the House and Senate Committees on Armed Services by the amount of budget authority and outlays provided by the bill for the specified purpose. In no event may the amount of the adjustment exceed $50 million in budget authority and outlays in fiscal year 2001 and $400 million in budget authority and outlays over 5 years. In addition, the chairman may not make an adjustment if the enactment of the legislation would cause an on-budget deficit in fiscal year 2001 or the 5 year period.

Section 219 of the Conference Agreement establishes a new reserve fund for legislation that accelerates enrollment of uninsured children in Medicaid and the State Children's Health Insurance Programs or provides Medicaid coverage for women diagnosed with breast or cervical cancer through the screening programs of the Centers for Disease Control. It applies in both the House and the Senate. The Budget Committee chairman of the appropriate House is authorized to increase the 302(a) allocations to the House Commerce Committee and the Senate Finance Committee by the amount of budget authority and outlays provided by the bill. In no event may the amount of the adjustment exceed $50 million in budget authority and outlays for fiscal year 2001 and $250 million in budget authority and outlays for the 5 year period.

Section 220 of the Conference Agreement establishes a reserve fund for legislation providing for stabilization of payments to counties in support of education. It applies in both the House and Senate. The Budget Committee chairman of the appropriate House may increase the 302(a) allocations for the House Committees on Agriculture and Resources and the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources by the amount of budget authority and outlays provided by the bill for the specified purpose. In no event may the amount of the adjustment exceed $200 million in budget authority and outlays in fiscal year 2001 and $1.1 billion in budget authority and outlays over 5 years. In addition, the section requires that, for the adjustment to be made, the legislation must provide for the stabilization of receipt-based payments to counties that support school and road systems and must also provide for a portion of those payments to be dedicated toward local investments in Federal lands within the counties.

Section 221 of the Conference Agreement is similar to the language included in the Senate amendment which provides for a reserve fund that allows the Senate chairman of the Committee on the Budget to adjust the spending and revenue aggregate for legislation that reduces revenues as long as the legislation does not cause an on-budget deficit for the first year or the sum of the 5 years covered by this resolution. The House has standing authority to consider such legislation under Section 302(g)(1)(B) of the Budget Act.

Section 222 of the Conference Agreement sets forth the procedures by which the Budget Committee chairman may make the adjustments for the reserve funds established under this subtitle. Subsection (a) clarifies that the adjustments are made only when the measure is considered and become permanent only when the measure is enacted. Subsection (b) provides that the adjusted levels are used to enforce subsequent budget-related points of order. Subsection (c) reiterates the role of the Budget Committee in advising the presiding officer of the House regarding the budgetary effects of legislation subject to such points of order.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Under 301(b)(4) of the Budget Act and its standing authority under the U.S. Constitution, the budget resolution includes enforcement-related provisions other than points of order and reserve funds. These provisions include various directives relating to scoring conventions and a reaffirmation of the rule making authority of the U.S. Congress.

House resolution

No house provisions are included in this section.

Senate amendment

Section 211: Prohibition on the use of Federal Reserve Surpluses. The Senate amendment contains language that is designed to ensure that transfers from non-budgetary governmental entities such as the Federal Reserve banks shall not be used to offset increased on-budget spending when such transfers produce no real budgetary effects. It has long been the view of the Committee on the Budget that transfers of Federal Reserve surpluses to the Treasury are not valid offsets for increased spending. Nonetheless, such transfers have been legislated in the past—as recently as the fall of 1999. The purpose of this section is to establish a scoring rule to make clear that such transfers will not be taken into account when determining compliance with the various Budget Act and Senate pay-go points of order.

Section 212: Reaffirming the Prohibition on the use of Revenue Offsets for Discretionary Spending. The Senate amendment contains language that is intended to emphasize the longstanding view of the Congressional Budget Committees and the Congressional Budget Office that changes in revenues shall not be scored in appropriations legislation. This means that tax increases shall not be used as offsets for increased discretionary spending. The Committee on the Budget finds it necessary to set this forth in this budget resolution in response to the President once again asserting in his fiscal year 2001 budget that an increase in tobacco taxes can be used to offset huge increases in discretionary spending.

Section 213: Application and Effect of Changes in Allocations and Aggregates. The Senate amendment contains language that is similar to the language found in section 208 of the Conference Agreement on the fiscal year 2000 budget resolution. This language clarifies how and when any adjustments to the allocations or aggregates or pay-go balances permitted by the various reserve funds contained in the Conference Agreement may be made.

Section 215: Exercise of Rule making Powers. The Senate amendment contains language regarding the rule making authority of each of the Houses of Congress.

Conference Agreement

Section 231 of the Conference Agreement, which applies to the House only, reflects the Senate treatment for function 650, which consists of on-budget payments by the Treasury Department to the OASDI Trust Funds for income taxes on Social Security benefits. In a significant departure from the House bill and from conference reports since 1991, the function 650 levels do not include the administrative expenses that were included in the House resolution and in recent conference reports in previous years. These expenses were not included in the function out of a belated recognition that such expenses were taken off budget by the Budget Enforcement Act [BEA] of 1990. Section 13301 of that Act provided, in part:

''(A) EXCLUSION OF SOCIAL SECURITY FROM ALL BUDGETS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the receipts and disbursements of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Disability Insurance Trust Fund shall not be counted as new budget authority, outlays, receipts, or deficit or surplus for purposes of * * * (2) the congressional budget''.

Nevertheless, Congress continued to include administrative expenses for Social Security in function 650 because they were clearly discretionary—that is, they are controlled through the annual appropriations process. Because section 302(a) of the Budget Act provides that the allocation must be ''consistent'' with the functional levels and aggregates, it was originally considered necessary to include these amounts in the function 650 levels and the aggregate.

The other reason for changing the treatment of Social Security is that the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] already excludes Social Security administrative expenses from its budgetary projections of on-budget revenue, spending, and surplus or deficit levels. As a consequence, CBO projections have not been comparable to the levels underlying the House and Senate budget resolutions. This has caused confusion among Members of Congress who have sought to make comparisons between CBO's projections and the levels set forth in the budget resolution.

To comply with the BEA and standardize congressional scoring for Social Security, section 231 of the conference report provides clear authority to include administrative amounts in the 302(a) allocation to the Appropriations Committee, even though such levels will no longer be included in the on-budget totals and function levels.

Subsection (b) clarifies that any determination under section 302(f) of the Budget Act include any amounts provided in the measure for discretionary administrative expenses of the Social Security Administration.

Section 232 of the Conference Agreement retains the language of section 211 of the Senate amendment. It contains language that is designed to ensure that transfers from non-budgetary governmental entities such as the Federal Reserve banks shall not be used to offset increased on-budget spending when such transfers produce no real budgetary effects. It has long been the view of the Committee on the Budget that transfers of Federal Reserve surpluses to the Treasury are not valid offsets for increased spending. Nonetheless, such transfers have been legislated in the past—as recently as the fall of 1999. The purpose of this section is to establish a scoring rule to make clear that such transfers will not be taken into account when determining compliance with the various Budget Act and Senate pay-go points of order.

Section 233 of the Conference Agreement is similar to section 212 of the Senate amendment. It contains language that is intended to emphasize the longstanding view of the congressional Budget Committees and the Congressional Budget Office that changes in revenues included in appropriations legislation shall nonetheless be scored on the PAYGO scorecard. This means that tax increases shall not be used as offsets for increased discretionary spending. The Committees on the Budget find it necessary to set this forth in this budget resolution in response to the President once again asserting in his fiscal year 2001 budget that an increase in taxes can be used to offset increases in discretionary spending.

Section 234 of the Conference Agreement adopts the language contained in section 215 of the Senate amendment. This provision restates that the rules set forth in this budget resolution are considered a part of the rules of each House or the House to which they specifically apply. This section further recognizes the constitutional right of each House to change provisions of the resolution through subsequent rule making.

ECONOMIC ASSUMPTIONS

Section 301(g)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act requires that the joint explanatory statement accompanying a conference report on a budget resolution set forth the common economic assumptions upon which the joint statement and conference report are based. The conference agreement is built on the economic assumptions developed by the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] and presented in CBO's The Budget and Economic Outlook: Fiscal Years 2001–2010.

House Resolution.—CBO's economic assumptions were used.

Senate Amendment.—CBO's economic assumptions were used.

Conference Agreement.—CBO's economic assumptions were used.

DELETIONS OF SPONSORS FROM PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 7 of rule XII, sponsors were deleted from public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 1824: Mr. KUCINICH.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 8 of rule XVIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 3439

OFFERED BY: MR. BARRETT OF WISCONSIN

AMENDMENT NO. 1: Page 4, beginning on line 9, strike paragraph (2) through line 20 and insert the following:

(2) REQUIRED DURATION OF MODIFICATION; PERMANENT CONDITIONS.—The Commission shall not modify such rules to eliminate or reduce the minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels required by paragraph (1)(A) until 6 months after the date on which the Commission submits the report required by subsection (b)(3). No such elimination or reduction may remove such separations with respect to third-adjacent channels occupied by stations that provide a radio reading service to the public. The Commission shall not extend the eligibility for application for low-power FM stations beyond the organizations and entities as proposed in MM Docket No. 99–25 (47 C.F.R. 73.853).

Page 6, line 19, insert before the period the following: '', or 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later''.

OFFERED BY: MRS. ROUKEMA

AMENDMENT NO. 2: At the end of the bill add the following new section:

SEC. 3. ADDITIONAL MODIFICATIONS.

In prescribing the modifications required by section 2(a), the Federal Communications Commission shall—

(1) permit FM commercial translators located in counties where there is no allocated commercial FM station, to locally originate commercial FM programming on an unlimited basis;

(2) require such translators to abide by the same rules as full service (high power) FM stations; and

(3) permit such translators to increase their radiated power to 100 watts, using a directional antenna, if necessary, to protect co-channel and first-adjacent channel stations.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

INTRODUCTION OF THE PREDATORY LENDING CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2000, H.R. 4250

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be joined this morning by my friend and Senate colleague, Senator PAUL SARBANES of Maryland, in introducing legislation to address the problem of abusive practices in high-cost mortgage refinancings, home equity loans and home repair loans.

I would also like to take this opportunity to introduce a number of the representatives of national consumer, senior citizen, community and civil rights organizations that are with us today. Many have worked with us since we completed work on Financial Modernization last Fall to develop this legislation.

The problem of so-called ''predatory'' lending has reached near epidemic proportions in recent years, robbing millions of American households of the equity in their homes and undermining the economic vitality of our neighborhoods.

Our legislation, the ''Predatory Lending Consumer Protection Act,'' responds to widespread evidence that so-called ''subprime''—or high cost—lenders are systematically targeting homeowners with low incomes or damaged credit histories (subprime borrowers). These offers seek to trap borrowers in unaffordable debt, strip the equity from their home and, too often, put the home in foreclosure. ''Predatory'' loans tend to have a number of abusive practices in common: interest rates far above conventional loan rates; excessive fees and points, often hidden in the mortgage financing; up-front payment of credit insurance; balloon payments; frequent refinancings; huge prepayment penalties; arbitrary call provisions, and other practices.

Predatory lending is somewhat akin to Justice Brennan's definition of ''pornography'': it might be difficult to define, but you certainly know it when you see it. In my own district, for example, there is Florence McKnight, a 84-year-old Rochester widow who, while heavily sedated in a hospital bed, signed a $50,000 loan secured by her home for only $10,000 in new widows and other home repairs. Under the loan she would have to pay over $72,000 over 15 years, and still face a balloon payment of $40,000. Mrs. McKnight's home is now in foreclosure.

There are many more examples. These include, for example—

The West Virginia widow who had her mortgage refinanced seven times within 15 months, only to lose it in foreclosure.

The disabled Portland, Oregon woman who was charged more than 30 percent of the amount of her mortgage financing in fees and credit life insurance.

The 68-year-old Chicago woman whose mortgage was refinanced three times in 5 years and ended up with monthly payments that exceed her income.

These are not isolated examples. The problem of predatory lending has been the focus of recent statements by all the federal financial regulators. Comptroller of the Currency, Gerry Hawke; Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, Ellen Seidman and the Chair of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Donna Tanoue, have all denounced these practices.

Two weeks ago, Federal Reserve Board Alan Greenspan announce a task force to address predatory lending. Last week, HUD Secretary Cuomo organized working groups to come up with recommendations. Yesterday, Fannie Mae announced its own guidelines to exclude purchases of predatory loans, with Fannie's Chairman and CEO, Frank Rains, issuing a statement today supporting the need for legislation. Also today, Treasury Secretary Summers has issued a statement indicating his concerns about this problem and supporting our efforts.

What exactly does our legislation do? Very briefly, the bill expands and fills the gaps in the 1994 Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act (HOEPA) that Congress enacted in response to the initial wave of abusive home equity loans ten years ago. HOEPA established an important framework for combating predatory practices, but it did not go far enough. The legislation strengthens and expands HOEPA protections in a number of ways:

It lowers HOEPA's interest rate and total fee ''triggers'' to extend needed protections to greater numbers of high cost mortgage refinancings, home equity loans and home improvement loans.

It expands HOEPA to restrict practices that facilitate mortgage ''flipping'' and equity ''stripping''—restricting the financing of fees and points, prepayment penalties, single-premium credit insurance, balloon payments and call provisions.

It prevents lenders from making loans without regard to the borrower's ability to repay the debt, encourages credit and debt counseling and requires new consumer warnings on the risks of high-cost secured borrowing.

It encourages stronger enforcement of consumer protections by strengthening civil remedies and rescission rights and increasing statutory penalties for violations.

The bill deals directly, and I believe effectively, with the primary abuses that encourage and facilitate such predatory practices as loan ''flipping'' and equity ''stripping.'' By restricting the tools that make these practices profitable, and by enhancing private remedies and civil penalties to deter violations, we can prevent the American dream of home ownership from becoming a nightmare at the hands of predatory lenders.

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE LAKE OF THE OZARKS SERVICE CORPS OF RETIRED EXECUTIVES (SCORE) CHAPTER FOR HAVING BEEN NAMED THE NATIONAL SCORE CHAPTER OF THE YEAR, 2000

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I was recently informed by the Administrator of the Small Business Administration that the Lake of the Ozarks SCORE Chapter has been selected the National SCORE Chapter of the Year.

As you know, SCORE is a nonprofit association dedicated to entrepreneur education and the formation, growth, and success of small businesses throughout this country. SCORE, which is a resource partner with the Small Business Administration, has thousands of volunteers in 389 chapters who serve as ''Counselors to America's Small Business.'' Working and retired executives and business owners in local SCORE chapters, like the one at the Lake of the Ozarks, donate their time and expertise as volunteer business counselors and provide confidential counseling and mentoring free of charge. SCORE, which was founded in 1964, assists approximately 300,000 entrepreneurs annually.

Each year, the SCORE Chapter of the Year is honored during Small Business Week, which this year is May 21–26, 2000. I know that my colleagues in the House will be pleased to join me in recognizing the outstanding work of the men and women who volunteer their time to this year's SCORE Chapter of the Year—the Lake of the Ozarks Service Corps of Retired Executives.

CARL SITTER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask that we all pause a moment to remember a true American hero, Mr. Carl Sitter. Though he is gone, he will live on in the hearts of all who knew him and be remembered for long years by many who didn't.

During the Koren War, Sitter fought for our country while he served in the Marine Corps. His relentless effort and valiant leadership led to a succesful defeat of the Korean Army. Mr. Sitter's bravery as a Captain in the Korean War led to him becoming the first of Pueblo's four Medal of Honor recipients. Despite grenade burns to his face, arms and chest, Mr. Sitter kept his position during the two day battle at Hagaru-Ki, in November 1950.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Sitter was a model American, embodying patriotism, strength, gentleness and service throughout his lifetime. Carl will be missed by all of us. Hopefully, we can learn from the example that Carl Sitter has set.

CONGRATULATING ASSEMBLYMAN JOHN ROONEY

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, today I congratulate New Jersey State Assemblyman John E. Rooney on receiving the New Jersey Conference of Mayors' prestigious Legislator Award. Assemblyman Rooney is one of the most outstanding and respected members of our State Legislature. He is a trusted friend and advisor whose counsel I value greatly. This award recognizes the landmark work he has done in the New Jersey Assembly, particularly initiatives he has sponsored that have helped hold down municipal property taxes.

Assemblyman Rooney's dedicated career in public service began in 1976, when he was elected councilman in his hometown of Northvale. In 1979 he became the borough's first Republican mayor in a quarter century—serving and subsequently brought about the first Republican majority on the Borough Council in more than a decade. He was elected to the State Assembly in 1983 and has been re-elected every two years since then.

As an assemblyman, he has authored a number of landmark bills, including the legislation that established the Division of Developmental Disabilities and the law giving firefighters the right to know the location of toxic materials at industrial sites. He also sponsored the constitutional amendment eliminating expensive special elections, instead allowing county political committees to fill legislative vacancies. His work in challenging the state's authority over solid waste disposal has saved municipalities millions of dollars and, in turn, helped control property taxes.

Born in Brooklyn, New York, Assemblyman Rooney first came to New Jersey to attend Rutgers University, where he graduated magna cum laude with a degree in business management. He also holds a master's degree in marketing from Rutgers, masters in political science and history from the University of Maryland, and a degree in language from Syracuse University. He served in the Air Force as a Russian linguist, where he won commendations from the National Security Agency for outstanding intelligence work. He has made his professional career as a sales executive in the electrical motor and control industry.

Active in government, professional and civic organizations, Assemblyman Rooney has been a member of the New Jersey Conference of Mayors, the American Legion, Vietnam Veterans for America, Elks, the Water Pollution Control Federation and the American Management Association. He is a former chairman of the Northern Valley Community Development Program, a former president of the Northern Valley Mayors' Association, and a commissioner of the Bergen County Utilities Authority.

Assemblyman Rooney and his wife, Martha, have two adult children, Beth and Patrick. His family has always been supportive, and made it possible for Assemblyman Rooney to serve in this distinguished way.

I ask my colleagues in the House of Representatives to join me in congratulating this outstanding public servant, who has helped improve the lives not only of his hometown as Councilman and Mayor but the entire State of New Jersey as a leading legislator. He most certainly has made his community and the State of New Jersey a better place to work, own a home and raise a family.

HONORING THE ITALIAN AMERICAN WAR VETERANS POST #26

HON. RON KLINK

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. KLINK. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the Italian American War Veterans Post #26 of western Pennsylvania and its past commanders for their efforts in honoring our war heroes. Through picnics and other social functions, these distinguished individuals have helped many veterans remain connected to their colleagues in the New Castle area. They honor our fallen veterans by placing flags on their graves on Memorial Day, and they help our veterans by donating their time and resources to the Hospice of New Castle Hospital. By serving as department commanders and in state and national offices, the Italian American War Veterans have proven their commitment to improving the lives of their fellow veterans.

I would especially like to recognize the past commanders of the Italian American War Veterans Post #26. Without their hard work and leadership, many of these accomplishments would not have been possible: Ben Rizzo, Fred Mancini, Frank Minice, P.D.C., Carl Cialella, John Russo, Jr., Frank Bonfield, P.D.C., Richard Veri, and Anthony Toscano.

Once again, I ask my colleagues to join me in recognizing the members of the Italian American War Veterans Post #26 for their dedication to our nation's veterans. Because of their efforts, these great Americans will never be forgotten.

TRIBUTE TO RETIRING COACH DELBERT BEST

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that Delbert Best will retire as the athletic director and track coach on June 30, 2000, after 25 years of coaching and teaching at Wellington-Napoleon High School in Missouri.

Delbert grew up in my hometown of Lexington, Missouri, and graduated from high school in 1966. Shortly after graduation, he joined the Marines and served a tour in Vietnam during his three years on active duty. In 1969 he returned to civilian life and enrolled at Central Missouri State University at Warrensburg where he also was a member of the track team. He graduated in 1974 with a bachelor's degree in education. After completing his student teaching at Odessa High School, Delbert worked for the local water company in Lexington while waiting for a permanent teaching position to become available.

In January 1975, Delbert took a job teaching science in the Wellington-Napoleon School District. That spring, he began his association with the varsity high school track team as their assistant coach. He was named head coach the next year and the school won its first I–70 Conference boys track meet and the school's first district track championship the year after that. He coached the boy's track team to the state championships in 1985, 1987 and 1991. They took second place in 1986 and 1987, and third place in 1993 and 1996. The girls' track teams took second at the state championships in 1992 and third in 1993.

Delbert has been honored for his commitment to coaching many times. He was named the State 1A Boys Track Coach of the Year eight times and the State 1A Girls Track Coach of the Year three times. In 1994, he was recognized as the Region 5 National Boys Track Coach of the Year, which included not only Missouri, but six other midwestern states. In 1998, Delbert was inducted into the Missouri Track and Cross Country Coaches Association Hall of Fame during ceremonies at Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, Delbert Best has dedicated 25 years to teaching and motivating talented young people. I wish him and his family all the best in the days ahead, and I am certain that the Members of the House will join me in paying tribute to this fine Missourian.

JOE CARPENTER

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to recognize a great man, Mr. Joe Carpenter. On April 13, 2000, Mr. Carpenter will be retiring from his position as the Garfield/Pitkin County Veteran. He has been an asset to both Colorado and our great nation.

In 1942, Mr. Carpenter was drafted into the military. After the completion of basic training his company was sent to the South Pacific, however, due to bad vision, Joe was not able to fulfill his dream of coming face to face with the enemy, and had to stay behind. He was then assigned to ordnance and with special training became an Ordnance NCO. There, Joe handled tons of ammunition and explosives and loaded weaponry on aircraft.

In 1999, on the anniversary of Pearl Harbor Day, at the Normandy celebration that I held, he was instrumental in locating those Normandy Veterans who received recognition. He is a model American that embodies patriotism, strength and service to his country. Hopefully we can learn from the example of Joe Carpenter and will try to be a little more like him.

BUSINESS CHECKING MODERNIZATION ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. MARGE ROUKEMA

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4067, the Business Checking Modernization Act.

I agree that repealing the prohibition on paying interest on business checking is clearly the right public policy. This prohibition—which is anti-small business—is a relic of Depression era banking laws. This legislation has been in bills which I've introduced and worked on in both the 105th and 106th Congresses. Both the NFIB and U.S. Chamber support repeal as well as most of the banking industry—the American Bankers Association, America's Community Bankers and others. The real question is—and continues to be—what is the appropriate time frame for repeal.

Mr. LEACH, I appreciate your willingness to accommodate me in this regard. As introduced, H.R. 4067 provided a 1 year transition period, which I believe was just too short for many of our small bankers to adjust to. While some members have argued for a 6 year transition period I don't believe that long a period is warranted. The 3 year period which is in H.R. 4067 is fair. This period of time will permit banks and thrifts to rework their arrangements with business customers so that no one is significantly disadvantaged.

In addition, I'd like to thank you for including a provision in the bill which immediately permits banks and thrifts to provide their business customers with up to 24 sweep transactions a month. Adding this provision provides flexibility which will assist both banks and their customers. Again, it is similar to a provision from my Regulatory Burden Relief bills from both the 105th and 106th Congresses. The provision would permit banks and thrifts to sweep idle cash out of a corporate checking account each business day in a month. It is both appropriate and helpful.

The Business Checking Modernization Act is a good bill. It strikes a reasonable balance between the interests of small banks and small businesses. I encourage my colleagues to strongly support this excellent piece of legislation.

HONORING HAZEL L. UNDERWOOD'S 16 YEARS OF SERVICE AS EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR OF THE JESSAMINE COUNTY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

HON. ERNIE FLETCHER

OF KENTUCKY

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, it's an honor to speak today on behalf of a dear friend and active civic leader in the 6th Congressional District of Kentucky. For 16 years, Hazel L. Underwood has been the Executive Director of the Jessamine County Chamber of Commerce. Hazel is a caring lady, who has worked hard to ensure that Jessamine County is and always will be a wonderful place to live, work and raise a family. There is no doubt in my mind, or the minds of the folks who live in Jessamine County, that today the community is a better place due to Hazel's hard work and dedication.

Within our many communities, there exist organizations and civic groups that provide invaluable services and activities for its citizens. The leaders of these organizations dedicate countless hours of service to ensure that the organization is well represented and accomplishing all that it can within our communities. Hazel has been this kind of Executive Director and she has achieved all of her organizational goals in a courteous, respectful manner that will be remembered by the Jessamine County Chamber and community for many, many years to come.

I salute Hazel for her years of dedicated service to the Jessamine County Chamber of Commerce. She has been the kind of leader that every organization wishes for—a leader who knows how to get things done right and work continuously to assure all aspects of every situation are covered. Hazel, thanks for your many years of dedicated service, remarkable accomplishments and many successes.

ENERGY POLICY AND CONSERVATION ACT REAUTHORIZATION

SPEECH OF

HON. RON KLINK

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. KLINK. Mr. Speaker, I am in support of H.R. 2884, reauthorizing the Energy Policy and Conservation Act, and the President's authority to draw down the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. The reserve contains 570 million barrels of oil to be used in a national emergency and it is critical that the Senate pass H.R. 2884 and that the President sign it into law as quickly as possible.

I am pleased that it establishes a ''Northeast Home Heating Oil Reserve.'' This will help everyone, including people in Pennsylvania, persons paying home heating oil bills, diesel truck drivers, farmers who must operate tractors, and drivers of regular cars. If we have an emergency or severe winter weather, 2 million barrels of oil will be available on reserve and diesel fuel will not be confiscated to use as home heating oil. This will keep prices down for home owners, especially senior citizens and the poor, and for drivers of cars, trucks, and for farmers driving tractors.

Along with helping Pennsylvania, the Northeast Home Heating Oil Reserve will be available for Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York and New Jersey.

It is my hope that, with this reserve, our constituents will not have to suffer high payments for home heating oil and gasoline as they did this past winter. For example, a constituent in Pennsylvania, Jim Luchini of Kirk Trucking in Delmont, Pennsylvania, sent me figures back in January, showing that prices at the diesel fuel pumps increased in some places by 10 cents in 24 hours. For home heating oil, it was especially painful for our constituents who are senior citizens, or who are poor, to have paid over $2.00 a gallon. None of our constituents should have to make a choice between heating their homes or buying food or medicine.

On March 21, 2000 I introduced H. Con. Res. 291, asking that the President draw down the Strategic Petroleum Reserve if the OPEC nations did not decide to increase production so as to bring prices down. I was pleased that OPEC did agree to increase production and bring relief to our nation. I want to thank several of my colleagues from Pennsylvania for co-sponsoring H. Con. Res. 291: Mr. MURTHA, Mr. ROBERT BRADY, Mr. HOLDEN, Mr. MASCARA, and Mr. COYNE. I would further like to thank my colleagues from Maryland and several New England states, Mr. WYNN, Mr. BALDACCI, Mr. OLVER, Mr. SANDERS, Mr. GEJDENSON, Mr. WEYGAND, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. MALONEY for co-sponsoring the resolution.

But relying on OPEC is inadequate. H. Con. Res. 291 also asked that the President and Secretary of Energy should prepare for future threats to the economy and the energy supply of the United States by developing methods to increase the quantity of crude oil in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve in an economically reasonable manner, and maximize the use of domestic energy resources.

We need to establish a sound energy policy in this country, so that we do not have to rely on OPEC: an efficient manner of oil production, clean coal technology, since coal is so abundant in Pennsylvania and many other states across the nation, and we must give a sincere effort to establishing renewable energy as a source of fuels. As a member of the Renewable Energy Caucus, I have worked to increase appropriations to fund renewable energy research and development programs—solar, wind, biomass, hydrogen, geothermal, and hydropower.

In order to meet the most immediate needs of our constituents in alleviating the high prices they pay to heat their home and fuel their vehicles, the Northeast Home Heating Oil Reserve is a first step in the right direction, and I urge that the Senate pass it as quickly as possible.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. SUE WILKINS MYRICK

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, due to necessary medical treatment, I was not present for the following votes. If I had been present, I would have voted as follows:

April 11, 2000:

Rollcall vote 116, on the motion to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4163, the Taxpayer Bill of Rights, I would have voted ''yea.''

Rollcall vote 117, on the motion to suspend the rules and pass H. Res. 467, expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that the tax and user fee increases proposed by the Administration in the FY 2001 budget should be adopted, I would have voted "nay."

Rollcall vote 118, on the motion to instruct Conferees to H.R. 1501, the Juvenile Justice Reform Act, I would have voted "yea."

CONGRATULATIONS TO VICE ADMIRAL ROBERT J. NATTER

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that Vice Admiral Robert Natter will receive the Distinguished Graduate Leadership Award from the United States Naval War College on May 1, 2000.

The Distinguished Graduate Leadership Award is presented to a former student of the Naval War College whose accomplishments as a military leader and outstanding service in the national interest have brought honor to his country, the Armed Services and the Naval War College.

Vice Admiral Natter enlisted in the Naval Reserve at the age of 17 as a Seaman Recruit. Following one year of reserve enlisted service and four years at the United States Naval Academy, he graduated and was commissioned in June 1967.

Vice Admiral Natter's service at sea included department head tours in a Coastal Minesweeper and Frigate and Executive Officer tours in two Amphibious Tank Landing Ships and a Spruance Destroyer. He was Officer in Charge of a Naval Special Warfare detachment in Vietnam and commanded U.S.S. Chandler (DDG996), U.S.S. Antietam (CG 54) and the United States 7th Fleet.

His shore assignments included Company Officer and later Flag Secretary to the Superintendent at the Naval Academy; Executive Assistant to the Director of Naval Warfare in the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations; staff member for the House Armed Services Committee of the 100th Congress of the United States; Executive Assistant to the Commander in Chief, U.S. Pacific Fleet; Executive Assistant to the Vice Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff, during Operation Desert Storm; Assistant Chief of Naval Personnel for officer and enlisted personnel assignments; Chief of the Navy's Legislative Affairs organization; and the Chief of Naval Operations' Director for Space, Information Warfare, Command and Control. Vice Admiral Natter currently is the Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Plans, Policy and Operations.

His personal decorations include the Silver Star, two awards of the Distinguished Service Medal, Defense Superior Service Medal, five awards of the Legion of Merit, Bronze Star Medal with Combat V, Purple Heart, two awards of the Meritorious Service Medal, Navy Commendation Medal with Combat V, Navy Achievement Medal with Combat V, and various unit and campaign awards.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my congratulations to Vice Admiral Natter for this most deserved award. His life is an example to all Americans, most particularly students—past, present and future—of the United States Naval War College.

IN RECOGNITION OF CYBERANGELS

HON. BOB FRANKS

OF NEW JERSEY

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. FRANKS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise before you today to recognize an outstanding organization that is aggressively fighting crimes against children on the Internet.

Tragically, in increasing numbers, our children are being exploited over the Internet. Everyday, pedophiles are contacting our children via the Internet in those places where we want to believe they are most secure—in our homes, our schools, and our libraries. Our law enforcement agencies, both local and federal, are working overtime to apprehend these cybermolesters. And, now they are receiving help from an unexpected source—citizen volunteers organized through a group called Cyberangels.

Cyberangels is an exemplary, New Jersey-based Internet safety group that helps to keep our children safe while they use the Internet. Cyberangels is well-known for their advice on child Internet safety, but recently they have taken a more active role in combating Internet crimes against children through their cybersleuthing—tracing individuals over the Internet. This noble group of volunteers has already reunited three families with their children who were victims of cybermolesters.

Most recently these volunteers aided the family of a 13-year-old girl in the town Fanwood, New Jersey, a town in my Congressional District. This young girl left her home to meet an 18-year-old man that she met on the Internet. Through the technical sleuth work of Cyberangels—tracking the man through his E-mail address—the girl and her family were reunited in little more than a day.

Cyberangels sets an excellent example of how private citizens and law enforcement agencies can work together to reduce Internet crimes. It is my hope that Congress will soon do their part in protecting our children by enacting legislation to filter harmful material out of schools and libraries and ensure that cybermolesters receive the punishment they deserve.

In the meantime, Mr. Speaker I hope that you will join me in commending Cyberangels for their superb efforts to keep our children safe while they roam the vast resources on the Web. I also encourage everyone to visit Cyberangels on the web at www.cyberangels.com.

HONORING DR. EDWARD S. ORZAC

HON. CAROLYN McCARTHY

OF NEW YORK

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mrs. McCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, today I honor one of the most outstanding doctors on Long Island, Dr. Edward S. Orzac. In 1941, Dr. Orzac graduated from the University of Virginia Medical School and interned at Wilkes-Barre General Hospital in Pennsylvania. Shortly after his internship, Dr. Orzac served his country in the United States Army. They assigned him to a combat infantry division during World War II.

After the war, Dr. Orzac finished his residency and postgraduate education at Morrisania City Hospital and New York University Bellevue Graduate School of Medicine. From 1947 until 1948, Dr. Orzac was the chief resident at Morrisania City Hospital. When he completed his residency, Dr. Orzac established and ran a private practice from 1948 until 1981.

Though Dr. Orzac's private practice kept him busy, he served on many professional boards and had many professional fellowships. Between the boards and fellowships, he also had various hospital assignments. Furthermore, he taught at a variety of universities that include New York University School of Medicine, NYU Graduate School of Medicine, State University New York at Stony Brook Medical School, Adelphi University and St. John's University. Dr. Orzac still teachers at SUNY Stony Brook, Adelphi and St. John's.

Dr. Orzac's talents, however, are not limited to practicing medicine and to teaching. He writes, raises money for many Jewish causes and organizations, participates in the Boy Scouts of America, is a trustee, a founder, a visiting specialist, to name a few. In the midst of these pursuits, Dr. Orzac received a bachelor's degree in history and a master's degree in Asian Studies.

Throughout his life, Dr. Orzac's work has been recognized and rewarded. The Army bestowed the first of many medals, honors and awards. The City of Chicago, a Chicago law school, a college, the United Jewish Appeal, the Long Island Otolaryngological and Maxillofacial Society and the Boy Scouts of America join the long list of organizations that have honored Dr. Orzac's incredible talents. But his acclaim reaches beyond the United States. Afghanistan, India and Indonesia have honored Dr. Orzac's unfailing contributions and selfless devotion in providing medical services to their countries.

Standing with him through these years is Beatrice, his wife, and their three children, Carolyn, Virginia and Elizabeth. They gave him the nurturing and caring support for such a long and distinguished career. If a tree's roots provide life-giving support, then Dr. Orzac's family are his roots.

Dr. Orzac, thank you for the tireless work, endless hours, countless patients, lost sleep. Long Island has immeasurably benefitted from your talents and care. We hold you in highest esteem and use your community service as a model to follow.

TRIBUTE TO FRANK S. PRIESTLEY

HON. HELEN CHENOWETH-HAGE

OF IDAHO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mrs. CHENOWETH-HAGE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay special tribute to Frank Priestley, President of the Idaho Farm Bureau Federation and the Farm Bureau Insurance Companies of Idaho, who was recently elected to the American Farm Bureau Federation's Board of Directors. This is a tremendous honor, especially since this is the first time in nearly three years that an Idahoan has served on this prestigious board.

Mr. Speaker, Frank began his illustrious career when he started his own hay bailing business at the age of 14. Through his vision and entrepreneurial spirit he was able to establish a successful family farm operation. He and his wife, Susan, today run a heifer replacement operation and grow alfalfa, corn and barely in southeastern Idaho.

When Frank is not busy on the farm, he, Susan and their 6 children attend church and actively participate in youth group activities. Clearly, we are fortunate to have someone like Frank serve the people of Idaho, and I personally want to wish him a heartfelt thanks for his dedicated service.j

HONORING GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY

HON. DEBBIE STABENOW

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 179th Greek Independence Day. On March 25, 1821, the Greek people started a battle that would lead to independence after more than 400 years of Ottoman rule.

Fortunately, Greek culture survived the Ottomans. Greek civilization inspired the framers of our constitution. The Greek political tradition had profound influence on our founding fathers and helped shape America's political foundation. The pursuit of freedom is just one of the many ideals which have historically bound us together.

Greek-Americans have made such a enormous contribution to American culture and American life. Today, Greek culture flourishes in America—in places like Detroit, Michigan and elsewhere in the Great Lakes States.

As a member of the Congressional Caucus on Hellenic Issues, I want to take this opportunity to salute the Greek people on their historic achievement. Greece is a dedicated U.S. ally.

I congratulate Greece for 179 years of independent rule and for a legacy that will last forever. My fellow colleagues, please join me in honoring Greek Independence Day.

HONORING THE LEXINGTON LIONS CLUB FOR 79 YEARS OF SERVICE TO THE COMMUNITY

HON. ERNIE FLETCHER

OF KENTUCKY

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge the accomplishments of an outstanding organization within the community of Lexington, Kentucky. With a motto of ''We Serve'', the Lexington Lions Club has been serving folks in the Lexington community for the past 79 years.

Its members always give freely of their time and labor to serve our nation, our state and local community. Their dedication to the ideals of service and high standards promotes good citizenship and the welfare of our neighborhoods. The members of the Lexington Lions have worked tirelessly to produce positive change and as a result, their efforts have helped many over the years.

I believe their hard work and dedication is obvious, as the Lexington Lions Club will come together on Friday, April 28, 2000 to celebrate its ''Million Dollar Decade''. Since 1990, this organization has worked to raise the necessary funds to serve the needs of our community. Their efforts to prevent blindness and their dedication to serving young people have touched and improved the lives of so many—I salute this remarkable organization for its many achievements, accomplishments and years of dedicated service.

Mr. Speaker, today I recognize an outstanding organization that has made so many contributions throughout its 79 years of service. It is an honor to share with my colleagues and the American people how the Lexington Lions Club has constantly given to make Lexington and Kentucky a better place.

IN SUPPORT OF METHAMPHETAMINES LEGISLATION

HON. MARY BONO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mrs. BONO. Mr. Speaker, it is time to declare war against methamphetamines. Meth is a powerful and dangerous drug that harms innocent families and ruins neighborhoods and communities.

This dangerous drug is a threat to our society and our prosperity and it is time we take responsibility for solving this problem.

I rise to support Congressman CALVERT's legislation that will ensure that law enforcement officials are fully equipped with the resources to battle this destructive drug.

Meth has become the drug of choice in California and in my district. Worse, it is easy to manufacture and acquire. In fact, in Fiscal Year 1999, there were over 700 meth labs seized in Riverside and San Bernardino counties alone at a cost of $1.3 million dollars to taxpayers.

Many anti-government forces believe that the war on drugs is a failure and that we should stop the fight. As a concerned parent, I strongly believe that it is our responsibility to not run and hide, but rather to step up to the plate and increase our commitment to the war against drugs. This legislation represents this continued commitment.

HONORING TORRANCE CITY COUNCIL MEMBERS HARVEY HORWICH, DON LEE, AND MAUREEN O'DONNELL

HON. STEVEN T. KUYKENDALL

OF CALIFORNIA

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. KUYKENDALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor three distinguished individuals from the City of Torrance, Council members Harvey Horwich, Don Lee, and Maureen O'Donnell. Today they are being honored for their service to the community as their tenure on the City Council comes to an end.

All three individuals have exhibited a strong commitment to the local community. They have extensively volunteered their time for the betterment of the community. I commend their selfless contributions to the City of Torrance.

Councilman Horwich has been an active volunteer in the community for over 20 years. He has been involved with the Torrance Civic Center Authority, the Parks and Recreation Commission, and the Planning Commission. A local small businessman, Harvey was appointed to the City Council in November of 1998.

A lifelong resident of the South Bay, Councilman Lee was first elected to the City Council in 1992. Prior to his service on the Council, Don Lee was a Planning Commissioner and a Parks and Recreation Commissioner for the City of Torrance. He is actively involved in the Torrance Rotary Club, YMCA, and Chamber of Commerce.

Councilwoman O'Donnell is a standout educator, teacher of American government and U.S. History at Gardena High School. She has been active in local politics and served on the Torrance Human Resources Commission prior to her election to the City Council in 1992. She was selected as the Torrance YWCA Woman of the Year in 1994, and has been involved with the Torrance Historical Society, YWCA, and the Salvation Army.

Council members Horwich, Lee, and O'Donnell have been invaluable members of the Torrance community. On behalf of the City of Torrance, I thank you for your service. You have served the Torrance community with respect and honor.

INTRODUCTION OF THE CYBER SECURITY INFORMATION ACT OF 2000

HON. THOMAS M. DAVIS

OF VIRGINIA

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to introduce legislation with my good friend and colleague from northern Virginia, Representative JIM LORAN, that will facilitate the protection of our nation's critical infrastructure from cyber threats. In the 104th Congress, we called upon the Administration to study our nation's critical infrastructure vulnerabilities and to identify solutions to address these vulnerabilities. The Administration has, through the President and participating agencies, identified a number of steps that must be taken in order to eliminate the potential for significant damage to our critical infrastructure. Foremost among these suggestions is the need to ensure coordination between the public and private sector representatives of critical infrastructure. The bill I am introducing today is the first step in encouraging private sector cooperation and participation with the government to accomplish this objective.

The critical infrastructure of the United States is largely owned and operated by the private sector. Critical infrastructures are those systems that are essential to the minimum operations of the economy and government. Our critical infrastructure is comprised of the financial services, telecommunications, information technology, transportation, water systems, emergency services, electric power, gas and oil sectors in private industry as well as our National Defense, and Law Enforcement and International Security sectors within the government. Traditionally, these sectors operated largely independently of one another and coordinated with government to protect themselves against threats posed by traditional warfare. Today, these sectors must learn how to protect themselves against unconventional threats such as terrorist attacks, and Cyber attack. These sectors must also recognize the vulnerabilities they may face because of the tremendous technological progress we have made. As we learned when planning for the challenges presented by the Year 2000 rollover, many of our computer systems and networks are now interconnected and communicate with many other systems. With the many advances in information technology, many of our critical infrastructure sectors are linked to one another and face increased vulnerability to cyber threats. Technology interconnectivity increases the risk that problems affecting one system will also affect other connected systems. Computer networks can provide pathways among systems to gain unauthorized access to data and operations from outside locations if they are not carefully monitored and protected.

A cyber threat could quickly shutdown any one of our critical infrastructures and potentially cripple several sectors at one time. Nations around the world, including the United States, are currently training their military and intelligence personnel to carry out cyber attacks against other nations to quickly and efficiently cripple a nation's daily operations. Cyber attacks have moved beyond the mischievous teenager and are being learned and used by terrorist organizations as the latest weapon in a nation's arsenal. In June 1998 and February 1999, the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency testified before Congress that several nations recognize that Cyber attacks against civilian computer systems represent the most viable option for leveling the playing field in an armed crisis against the United States. The Director also stated that several terrorist organizations believed information warfare to be a low cost opportunity to support their causes. Both Presidential Decision Directive 63 (PDD–63) issued in May 1998, and the President's National Plan for Information Systems Protection, Version 1.0 issued in January 2000, call on the legislative branch to build the necessary framework to encourage information sharing to address cyber security threats to our nation's privately held critical infrastructure.

Recently, we have learned the inconveniences that may be caused by a cyber attack or unforeseen circumstance. Earlier this year, many of our most popular sites such as Yahoo, eBay and Amazon.com were shutdown for several hours at a time over several days by a team of hackers interested in demonstrating their capability to disrupt service. While we may have found the shutdown of these sites temporarily inconvenient, they potentially cost those companies significant amounts of lost revenue, and it is not too difficult to imagine what would have occurred if the attacks had been focused on our utilities, or emergency services industries. We, as a society, have grown increasingly dependent on our infrastructure providers. I am sure many of you recall when PanAmSat's Galaxy IV satellite's on-board controller lost service. An estimated 80 to 90% of our nation's pagers were inoperable, and hospitals had difficulty reaching doctors on call and emergency workers. It even impeded the ability of consumers to use credit cards to pay for their gas at the pump.

Moreover, recent studies have demonstrated that the incidence of cyber security threats to both the government and the private sector are only increasing. According to an October 1999 report issued by the General Accounting Office (GAO), the number of reported computer security incidents handled by Carnegie-Mellon University's CERT Coordination Center has increased from 1,334 in 1993 to 4,398 during the first two quarters of 1999. Additionally, the Computer Security Institute reported an increase in attacks for the third year in a row based on responses to their annual survey on computer security. GAO has done a number of reports that give Congress an accurate picture of the risk facing federal agencies; they cannot track such information for the private sector. We must rely on the private sector to share its vulnerabilities with the federal government so that all of our critical infrastructures are protected.

Today, I am introducing legislation that gives critical infrastructure industries the assurances they need in order to confidently share information with the federal government. As we learned with the Y2K model, government and industry can work in partnership to produce the best outcome for the American people. The President has called for the creation of Information Sharing and and Analysis Centers (ISACs) for each critical infrastructure sector that will be headed by the appropriate federal agency or entity, and a member from its private sector counterpart. For instance, the Department of Treasury is running the first ISAC for the financial services industry in partnership with Citigroup. Many in the private sector have expressed strong support for this model but have also expressed concerns about voluntarily sharing information with the government, and the unintended consequences they could face for acting in good faith. Specifically, there has been concern that industry could potentially face antitrust violations for sharing information with other industry partners, have their shared information be subject to the Freedom of Information Act, of face potentially liability concerns for information shared in good faith. My bill will address all three of these concerns. The cyber Security Information Act also respects the privacy rights of consumers and critical infrastructure operators. Consumers and operators will have the confidence they need to know that information will be handled accurately, confidentially, and reliably.

The Cyber Security Information Act of 2000 is closely modeled after the successful Year 2000 Information and Readiness Disclosure Act by providing a limited FOIA exemption, civil litigation protection for shared information, and an antitrust exemption for information shared within an ISAC. These three protections have been previously cited by the Administration as necessary legislative remedies in Version 1.0 of the National Plan and PDD–63. This legislation will enable the ISACs to move forward without fear from industry so that government and industry may enjoy the mutually cooperative partnership called for in PDD–63. This will also allow us to get a timely and accurate assessment of the vulnerabilities of each sector to cyber attacks and allow for the formulation of proposals to eliminate these vulnerabilities without increasing government regulation, or expanding unfunded federal mandates on the private sector.

PDD–63 calls upon the government to put in place a critical infrastructure proposal that will allow for three tasks to be accomplished by 2003:

(1) The Federal Government must be able to perform essential national security missions and to ensure the general public health and safety;

(2) State and local governments must be able to maintain order and to deliver minimum essential public services; and

(3) The private sector must be able to ensure the orderly functioning of the economy and the delivery of essential telecommunications, energy, financial, and transportation services. This legislation will allow the private sector to meet this deadline.

We will also ensure the ISACs can move forward to accomplish their missions by developing the necessary technical expertise to establish baseline statistics and patterns within the various infrastructures, become a clearinghouse for information within and among the various sectors, and provide a repository of valuable information that may be used by the private sector. As technology continues to rapidly improve industry efficiency and operations, so will the risks posed by vulnerabilities and threats to our infrastructure. We must create a framework that will allow our protective measures to adapt and be updated quickly.

It is my hope that we will be able to move forward quickly with this legislation and that Congress and the Administration can move forward in partnership to provide industry and government with the tools for meeting this challenge. A Congressional Research Service report on the ISAC proposal describes the information sharing model one of the most crucial pieces for success in protecting our critical infrastructure, yet one of the hardest pieces to realize. With the introduction of the Cyber Security Information Act of 2000, we are removing the primary barrier to information sharing between government and industry. This is landmark legislation that will be replicated around the globe by other nations as they too try to address threats to their critical infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Cyber Security Information Act of 2000 will help us address critical infrastructure cyber threats with the same level of success we achieved in addressing the Year 2000 problem. With government and industry cooperation, the seamless delivery of services and the protection or our nation's economy and well-being will continue without interruption just as the delivery of services continued on January 1, 2000.

COMMEMORATING THE DAY OF HONOR 2000 FOR AMERICA'S MINORITY VETERANS OF WORLD WAR II

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I join with many of my colleagues today to honor and give thanks to America's minority veterans—the soldiers, the sailors, the men and women of the Air Force, and, of course, my fellow Marines. More of the world is free today than ever before, thanks in no small part to their valor and sacrifice half a century ago.

The twentieth century began with much of the globe dominated by militaristic empires. In the First World War, our armed forces were the lever that pried these colonial empires apart.

In their ruin, the hideous forces of totalitarianism grew to great power, threatening to engulf us all. In the dark hour, American GIs of every color, of every national origin and creed, left the safety of their homes and began the struggle of the century. In World War II, American forces joined with freedom-loving people from Europe, Africa and Asia to defeat the Axis—that misspent laboratory for human cruelty.

The cost was extraordinarily high. Over one and one-half million minority Americans gave their lives to this cause. Some 1.2 million were African Americans, for whom racial slavery was no hypothetical concept. Over 300,000 were Hispanic Americans and another 50,000 were Asian Americans, willing to look past the discrimination they endured toward a better day that only democracy could bring. More than 20,000 Native Americans died for this country in World War II, along with more than 5,000 Native Hawaiians and over 3,000 Native Alaskans.

This week the House echoed the words of General Colin Powell, former Chairman of the Joints Chief of Staff, who wrote last year that among those who best exemplified courage, selflessness, exuberance, superhuman ability, and amazing grace during the past 200 years was the American GI.

". . . In this century," General Powell said, "hundreds of thousands of GIs died to bring to the beginning of the 21st century the victory of democracy as the ascendant political system of the face of the earth. The GIs were willing to travel far away and give their lives, if necessary, to secure the rights and freedoms of others. Only a nation such as ours, based on a firm moral foundation, could make such a request of its citizens. And the GIs wanted nothing more than to get the job done and then return home safely. All they asked for in repayment from those they freed was the opportunity to help them become part of the world of democracy. . . . Near the top of any listing of the most important people of the 20th century must stand, in singular honor, the American GI."

The American GI who served during World War II came in many colors and represented many cultures. Those of us who grew up in my generation, and went on to serve in another dark time, have taken courage in the stories of the Tuskeegee Airmen, the Nisei soldiers in Italy, the Navajo code-talkers in the Pacific, the Hispanic fighters who head the roll of the Medal of Honor and others. The diversity of these heroic men and women, and their determination to show what they could do, was a source of their strength. It still is today.

In light of the accomplishments of the Armed Forces of the United States during World War II both of defeating the forces of tyranny and dictatorship and in embodying a sense of honor, decency, and respect for mankind, I join in saluting our minority American GIs.

But no tribute to the courage and dedication of America's minority veterans should stop with 1945. Having fought for their country, these diverse and courageous men and women could no longer be contained by the brutal rules they had known as children. They were also the footsoldiers and leaders of the civil rights movements that followed World War II. They went home and took on careers and bought homes, set up businesses, entered the professions and all the walks of life that had been barely imaginable for them before the war. They had defended democracy as servicemembers and wanted nothing less than full participation in the democratic institutions they had preserved.

I am proud to honor our nation's brave minority veterans. I salute them and thank them for a job well done.

ENERGY POLICY AND CONSERVATION REAUTHORIZATION

SPEECH OF

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, today the House of Representatives passed an important reauthorization bill, the Energy Policy and Conservation Act. This bill does a number of important things including reauthorizing the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, but it does one thing in particular that is very important to Connecticut: it sets up a home heating oil reserve for the Northeast based on legislation Congressman BERNIE SANDERS introduced and I cosponsored.

The bill calls on the federal government to create a 2 million barrel home heating oil reserve which could be released by the President when oil prices rise rapidly, when there is a disruption in supply or when there is a regional crisis like the cold snap Connecticut and other Northeastern states faced last winter. This will help our region deal with uncertainties in the market and will stabilize oil prices in the future.

As we all remember this past winter, the average price of home heating oil increased by almost 50 percent in less than one month, and at its peak, the price of oil was double what it has been the previous year. Many of my constituents were in situations where they could not afford to fill their tanks to heat their homes. Some were choosing between eating their meals or heating their homes. We cannot allow that to happen in the future.

The creation of this home heating oil reserve will prevent these disruptions and will provide more stability for my constituents who were forced to pay outrageously high prices to heat their homes, or worse, to make difficult choices between paying bills for food, clothes, doctor visits and heating their homes. It would give the Northeast a tool in combating the type of crisis we faced this winter, when low temperatures and high oil prices forced many people into a situation where they were unable to keep their homes warm for their families. It is imperative that the House and Senate retain this provision when they meet to develop a conference report on the Energy Policy and Conservation Act.

ENERGY POLICY AND CONSERVATION ACT REAUTHORIZATION

SPEECH OF

HON. J.C. WATTS, JR.

OF OKLAHOMA

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am in strong support of H.R. 2884, the Strategic Petroleum Reserve Reauthorization. This important legislation takes the necessary steps to address the current policy of reliance on foreign oil which is threatening our national security.

I would like to share with you an important quote. It's a quote from President Clinton. He said, and I quote directly:

"I am today concurring with the Commerce Department's finding that the nation's growing reliance on imports of crude oil and refined petroleum products threaten the nation's security because they increase U.S. vulnerability to oil supply interruptions."

That statement was made by the President in 1994 when imported oil was less than 51% of American consumption. Here we are today, 6 years later, and not only have we not reduced that demand for foreign oil, not only have we not stabilized that demand, we have actually increased that demand to over 56% of our consumption.

Dependence on foreign oil is an ever-growing threat to America's security. President Clinton stated that fact six years ago, but the facts also show the Clinton-Gore Administration has been AWOL when it comes to encouraging the development of the domestic energy supply that would decrease our reliance on foreign product.

The legislation before us is a step in the right direction toward the development of our domestic energy supply. This provision gives the Energy Secretary discretionary authority to purchase oil from domestic sources as opposed to the current practice of only buying foreign oil. H.R. 2884 authorizes, at the discretion of the Energy Secretary, the purchase of oil from these marginal ''stripper'' wells whenever the price of oil dips below $15 dollars per barrel. This is vital to the improvement of our energy policy in the United States today. This legislation also takes a major step in improving the economic situation for the small, independent producers in America, while, at the same time, strengthening our national security.

There are more than 6,000 independent producers nationwide, many working out of their homes with few employees. Yet they drill 85% of domestic oil and natural gas wells in America, contributing close to half of our nation's domestic oil and gas output.

Mr. Speaker, we must develop a national energy policy that protects our security interests while, at the same time, improving the production economy in America. The passage of H.R. 2884 will be an important step in that direction. I urge my colleagues in the House to join me in casting their vote in favor of this very important legislation.

PARTIAL-BIRTH ABORTION BAN ACT OF 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. SPENCER BACHUS

OF ALABAMA

Wednesday, April 5, 2000

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, when the Partial Birth Abortion Ban Act was before this body last year, opponents accused proponents of the legislation of bad taste, of offensive conduct. What was that offensive conduct? It was giving an admittedly accurate description of the gruesome act by which a baby's body is dismantled and mutilated and its young life painfully and unjustifiably ended. There is agreement. What a sorry spectacle. Unfortunately, ironically, there is no agreement—no consensus on an even sorrier spectacle, an even greater outrage. That outrage is not a description of a partial birth abortion, it is the partial birth abortion itself. Imagine a society too humane and too caring to permit the discussion of such a heinous act, but one which at the same time not only permits, but defends this outrageous offense against humanity, liberty and justice.

Do not all of us have the compassion to agree that this should never happen to any human being? A violation of our God given dignity. Is not every partial birth abortion an offense against humanity: does it not weaken our conscience, harden our heart, and dull our mind. I submit to you that every innocent life taken by this procedure makes America less caring, less respectful of others, and leaves behind only feelings of guilt. Each procedure leaves scars that can last forever in our memory, in our hearts, and in our consciences.

[We in America like to consider ourselves a compassionate people. We pride ourselves on wanting to protect the weak, to help those in need. But we refuse to acknowledge the suffering of a baby whose skull is cracked and whose brain is sucked out. Yet this happens at least 5,000 times each year in America. That means that every day 14 babies die hidden from our view. Babies need our protection, our care, and our concern. We have been elected to protect those who need our help, to make a difference in the lives of others. I, for one, feel the weight of knowing that all of those babies suffer so much and so needlessly. We have the power to stop their suffering, and to end this barbaric procedure.]

A mother's womb is where a baby should feel safest, free from all harm and literally surrounded by love. Every partial birth abortion is a failure of love. Every partial birth abortion is a failure of justice. And every partial birth abortion is an unnecessary procedure. Not only are these types of brutal degradations not required, the AMA says they should never happen in a medically advanced country like ours.

Let us all agree to go beyond partisan ways of thinking and consider what is really at stake: the life of an innocent, weak, and defenseless human being who needs our protection. Does not justice and conscience and respect for life cry out for passage of this legislation?

MONMOUTH MEDICAL CENTER PRESENTS THE PINNACLE AWARDS

HON. FRANK PALLONE, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, April 15, 2000, Monmouth Medical Center in Long Beach, NJ, will present the sixth biannual Physician Recognition Dinner and the presentation of the Pinnacle Awards. The event will be held at the Oyster Point Hotel in Red Bank, NJ.

Mr. Speaker, these awards will be presented in recognition of six physicians whose contributions have helped to establish Monmouth Medical Center as one of the foremost community teaching hospitals in New Jersey. The six outstanding physician recipients of the Pinnacle Award for 2000 have been leaders and achievers. Each has devoted a lifetime of faithful service to Monmouth Medical Center, exemplifying the ideals and traditions of the practice of medicine. More importantly, they have devoted a lifetime of service to the care and healing of innumerable grateful patients.

The Pinnacle Awards are presented on behalf of the entire household family, by authority of the administration of Monmouth Medical Center and the Medical and Dental Staff. The recipients of the Pinnacle Awards are:

Richard A. Daniels, M.D. Besides practicing medicine, Dr. Daniels has had another love for the past 49 years—teaching it. Although he officially retired from his internal medicine practice last year, he can still be seen on the patient floors of Monmouth Medical Center, providing one-to-one instruction to medical school students and medical residents. Dr. Daniels has been actively involved in Monmouth's medical education program since the early 1960s. Throughout his career, he's placed a major focus on cardiology, serving as president of the Monmouth County Heart Association. Later, he combined that interest with geriatric medicine, becoming board certified in that specialty.

A 1955 graduate of the State University of New York, Dr. Daniels completed his residency in internal medicine at Mount Sinai Hospital, New York, serving as chief resident in his final year of training. He then spent two years in the military as chief of medicine at the Air Force Hospital in Minot, ND. He joined Monmouth's attending staff in 1961, and entered into private practice the same year. Since 1968, he has been an associate clinical professor at MCP Hahnamann School of Medicine, the teaching affiliate of Monmouth Medical Center. Dr. Daniels is a diplomat of the American Board of Internal Medicine, a fellow of the American College of Physicians and the American Society of Internal Medicine, and a member of the Teachers of Family Practice and an associate of the American College of Cardiology. His research work has been published in the Annals of Internal Medicine, American Journal of Medicine and New Jersey Medicine.

Dr. Daniels and his wife Norma divide their time between Long Beach and Vermont. They have two sons, Steven and Jeffrey, both of whom are doctors—as is one of their sons-in-laws. They also have two daughters, Cathy Zukerman, an architect, and Barrie Markowitz, a director at American Express. Their four children have presented Dr. and Mrs. Daniels 12 grandchildren.

Barry D. Elbaum, D.D.S. Since joining Monmouth Medical Center's Medical and Dental Staff in 1996, Dr. Elbaum, an oral and maxillofacial surgeon, has been a driving force in the growth of the Department of Dentistry. For the past 11 years, Dr. Elbaum has served as department chairman. Under his leadership, the number of dentists on the attending staff has quadrupled to 80 dentists. Having established his discipline as a major department that holds a permanent seat on the hospital's Medical Executive Committee, Dr. Elbaum is credited with changing the attending staff's official name to the Medical and Dental Staff. The dentists on the staff, under Dr. Elbaum's guidance, provide instruction to four resident dentists each year, providing hands-on training in one of the busiest facilities of its kind in the state. He has also offered direction in bringing in the most advanced dental and oral techniques. He has also helped to raise significant funds to establish the Samuel Elbaum Continuing Dental Education Program. He is also in private practice at several locations in Monmouth County.

Born in Poland, Dr. Elbaum is a Holocaust survivor who was 12 years old when he came to the United States in 1950. During his three-month stay at Ellis Island, he mastered both the English language and table tennis, which he later won a championship in. He graduated from the New York University College of Dentistry in 1962. After a four-year residency at Mount Sinai Hospital in New York, he established his practice in Asbury Park, NJ. He became chairman of the oral and maxillofacial surgery and dental implantology, Dr. Elbaum is a fell of the American and International Sciences of oral and Maxillofacial Surgery and of the American Dental Society of Anesthesiology. He is also a former board member of the Jewish Community Center and the United Jewish Federation.

Dr. Elbaum's wife Libbie, a certified public accountant, has been involved in the bookkeeping and financial activities of her husband's practice. Their son, Jeffrey Elbaum, D.D.S., and their daughter, Gayle Elbaum Krost, D.D.S., have both followed in their father's footsteps. Gayle's husband, Brian Krost, D.M.D., is also a practicing dentist. Their other daughter, Rochelle Matalon, has completed a master's degree in social work, and her husband, Albert Matalon, M.D. is completing a fellowship at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center. The Elbaum's, who live in Ocean Township, NJ, have nine grandchildren.

Carlos G. Garcia, M.D. In 1963, Dr. Garcia fled Cuba with his pregnant wife, young son and sister-in-law. Thirteen years later, he opened a private practice in cardiology in Long Branch, and has gone on to become one of the most well respected cardiologists in the region, having served as director of Cardiology at Monmouth Medical Center for 15 years before his retirement last year.

Dr. Garcia began his medical training in Cuba, where he also worked as an EKG technician for a cardiologist. The political unrest and the intolerable social and political pressures of the Castro communist dictatorship compelled him to seek a better life in the U.S. After a brief stay in Miami, Dr. Garcia and his family moved to New York. He eventually found a job at Mount Sinai Hospital, and then continued his studies in Spain. After earning his medical degree, he returned to the U.S. to continue his postgraduate education at Monmouth Medical Center, where he completed an internship and residency in internal medicine. He entered private practice in 1970, the same year he became a member of Monmouth Medical Center's Medical and Dental Staff. Three years later, the Garcias became naturalized U.S. citizens. In 1984, Dr. Garcia was named acting director of Cardiology at Monmouth Medical, and he soon assumed that post in a permanent capacity. During his tenure, the Department made major strides, providing the full range of services to patients, from the first signs of a heart attack through treatment, recovery and rehabilitation. One of the highlights of his tenure was the 1996 opening of the Cardiac Catheterization Laboratory.

Dr. Garcia and his wife Josephine are longtime residents of West Long Branch, NJ. Their daughter Maria is a registered nurse and lactation consultant, and their son Carlos is president of a managed care brokerage. They have five grandchildren. Dr. Garcia's brother, Juan Garcia, M.D., is also a practicing physician in the Central New Jersey area. The Garcias have relatives in Miami and some in Cuba, whom they hope to see soon.

H. Lawrence Karasic, M.D. During his 35 years with Monmouth Medical Center's Department of Anesthesiology, Dr. Karasic has witnessed much change among his ranks on the surgical floor. The department has grown from a staff of four to 20 anesthesiologists, many of whom completed their residency training at Monmouth Medical. Monitoring equipment has become more sophisticated and anesthetic agents are more effective. The surgeons they support are also becoming ever more effective in saving lives, treating illnesses and reducing recovery times. Throughout those years, Dr. Karasic has remained committed to medical education, a dedication that was recognized when he received the 1999 Alumnus of the Year Award from MCP Hahnemann School of Medicine, which provides clinical training for more than 300 Hahnemann students each year. Since 1982, he has served as associate clinical professor of anesthesiology at Hahnemann.

Dr. Karasic earned his medical degree from Philadelphia-based medical school, where he completed his internship and residency. He spent two years in the military, as the head of anesthesiology at the U.S. Naval Hospital in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, before joining Monmouth's attending staff in 1965. He served as coordinator of medical education in anesthesia and became instrumental in establishing the hospital's fully accredited anesthesiology residency program in 1982. For the next four years, he filled a dual role as department chairman and residency program director. Throughout his career, he has served on many clinical, educational and peer-related committees of Monmouth Medical Center, Hahnemann and the American Society of Anesthesiologists. From 1993 to 1996, he was clinical director or anesthesia for O.R. operations at Monmouth. He is a diplomat of the American Board of Anesthesiology and a fellow of the American College of Anesthesiologists.

Dr. Karasic's wife, Honey Karasic, owns and operates the Back Relief and Comfort Store in Oakhurst, NJ. Mrs. Karasic's business often provides much needed relief for the doctor after he engages in two of his favorite activities, downhill skiing and racquetball. The Karasics have four children—Robert, Shara, Leslie and Neal—and two grandchildren—Zachary and Emily.

Albert A. Rienzo, M.D. The opening last year of the Cranmer Ambulatory Surgery Center at the Monmouth Medical Center campus last year marked the beginning of a new era in otolaryngology. For Dr. Rienzo, the center's debut marked the culmination of years of hard work to bring state-of-the-art surgical systems to the region, paving the way for him and his colleagues to perform the latest procedures in treating disorders of the ears, nose and throat. The center is now performing three of the most advanced procedures offered at any medical facility in the nation, employing high-tech equipment and techniques to achieve an unprecedented degree of precision, safety, painlessness and non-invasiveness.

A member of Monmouth's Medical and Dental Staff for 25 years, Dr. Rienzo has served as section chief of Ear, Nose and Throat since 1980, participating in the many initiatives that have shaped this surgical specialty over the past two decades. Under his leadership, otolaryngologists at Monmouth became the first in the region to perform endoscopic functional sinus surgery to treat chronic sinus disease. They also pioneered the removal of benign or malignant lesions from the larynx with minimally invasive techniques. During the early 1990s, Dr. Rienzo established the Department of Rehabilitation Services' Vocal Dynamics Laboratory. He also served as director of Monmouth's cochlear implant program, which was one of only three designated by the state to perform the surgical procedure, which involves placing an electrical device in the inner ear of a profoundly deaf patient to restore hearing.

A 1966 graduate of the University of Bologna School of Medicine in Italy, Dr. Rienzo completed his internship and surgical residency at Monmouth. He also served in the military, serving for a year as director of the ENT clinic at the U.S. Army Hospital at Fort Devens, MA. After continued training at the Newark Eye and Ear Infirmary, he returned to Monmouth Medical Center in 1974, and also established private practice in Long Branch. He has been active in the medical education program, and is a clinical senior instructor at MCP Hahnemann School of Medicine. Dr. Rienzo is a member of the American Academy of Otolaryngology and the International Society of Otolaryngologists.

A resident of Rumson, NJ, Dr. Rienzo has three children—Anthony, Caroline and Benedetta. His daughter Elsa died three years ago. He is one of six physicians in the Rienzo family.

Charles Sills, M.D. Dr. Sills has been at the forefront of the high technology boom that continues to revolutionize the field of surgery. Since joining the Medical and Dental Staff of Monmouth Medical Center in 1968, Dr. Sills, a thoracic surgeon, has played a major role in maintaining Monmouth's leadership position in New Jersey for excellence in the field. During the mid-1980s, Dr. Sills introduced laser surgery to Monmouth and Ocean counties as the first to perform endobronchial laser surgery. Since then, Monmouth Medical has been on the cutting edge of bringing to the region minimally invasive procedures, allowing for procedures to be performed on internal organs without the trauma of open surgery.

For the past nine years, after spending a year as vice president of the Medical and Dental Staff, Dr. Sills has been chairman of the Department of Surgery and director of the general surgery residency program, which provides training to resident physicians who plan to enter the surgical field or to those who seek surgery training for preparation to enter other medical specialties. In 1994, he guided a multidisciplinary medical team that earned Monmouth the distinction of being the only hospital in New Jersey to participate in the Lung Volume Reduction Surgery study, which provides significant relief to emphysema patients.

A 1967 graduate of Chicago Medical School, Dr. Sills completed a five-year residency program in general surgery at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York. He received fellowship training in surgery from the National Institutes of Health before embarking on cardiothoracic surgery training there and at Montefiore Hospital in New York. After joining Monmouth in 1968, he entered private practice five years later. Since 1975, he has been a clinical associate professor of surgery at MCP Hahnemann School of Medicine. He is a fellow of the American College of Surgeons and the American College of Chest Physicians. He is also a member of the Society of Thoracic Surgeons, the American Society of Laser Surgery, and other professional societies.

Not content to have mastered one field, Dr. Sills is an undergraduate student at Rutgers University Mason Gross School of Fine Arts, and plans to seek his master of fine arts degree there. His sculpture has been exhibited in New Jersey and New York. Dr. Sills and his wife Caryl, chairman of Monmouth University's English Department, live in Rumson, NJ. They have three sons—Peter, Keith and Adam—and two grandsons—Liam and Zachary.

IN SUPPORT OF THE ''JENNIE FUND''

HON. GERALD D. KLECZKA

OF WISCONSIN

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, today I highlight this Saturday's Jennie Ramus Memorial Benefit to be held at Thomas More High School, in Milwaukee, WI. Jennie Ramus, the daughter of Wayne and Theresa Ramus, was a Thomas More senior whose life was cut short by a drunk driver in December of 1998.

The Jennie Fund, an initiative to create a $100,000 endowment fund, was established in January 1999 at Thomas More High School to provide scholarships for students seeking financial assistance and willing to take an active role in the Students Against Destructive Decisions (SADD) program and support community awareness and prevention of drinking and driving, drug abuse and violence. Thanks to the support and generosity of many, the fund has received over $80,000 to date.

Saturday's event, sponsored by the Wisconsin Polka Hall of Fame and Thomas More High School, will begin with a Mass to be followed by a community music festival, dancing, SADD and Jennie Fund presentations.

I commend the Jennie Fund and SADD for their efforts and the Thomas More High School community for their financial contributions and prayers in memory of this once vibrant former student.

IN HONOR OF THE WEST CARTER GIRLS BASKETBALL TEAM

HON. KEN LUCAS

OF KENTUCKY

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. LUCAS of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, today I congratulate some terrific young constituents from Kentucky's Fourth District, the girl's basketball team at West Carter High School. These small-town girls beat all the odds this season, bringing the state championship to Olive Hill, Kentucky, for the first time since the girls' team began at West Carter in 1974. It is also the first Sweet Sixteen win for the 16th region of northeastern Kentucky as well. I hope that this will be only the first of many championships for this community.

The Lady Comets set a wonderful example for young people all over Kentucky. Their hard work, dedication, and athleticism are evident, as are the many hours they spent in practice to earn the state title. I would like to take this opportunity to enter their names into the RECORD: Leah Frasier, Shelsa Hamilton, Cassondra Glover, Jenise James, Mandy Sterling, Megen Gearhart, Cathy Day, Kandi Brown, Shanna Shelton, Kayla Jones, Brooke Mullis, Nicki Burchett, Meghan Hillman, and Robin Butler. Kandi Brown was named the Tournament Most Valuable Player, and joining her on the All-Tournament Team were Megen Gearhart and Mandy Sterling.

I also salute Head Coach John ''Hop'' Brown who worked so hard for these young women, as well as the assistant coaches, Von Perry and Dana Smith. I also congratulate the people of Olive Hill who have strongly supported their team and so richly deserve this honor.

Mr. Speaker, this year's Sweet Sixteen set a record for attendance. over 40,000 people attended the four-day event, a record in the tournament's 39-year history. This bodes well for women's athletics in Kentucky, and it is good news for our daughters and granddaughters as well. I am pleased to commend these young women to the House of Representatives, and I couldn't express better than the words of one fan, who stated, ''They're just a super bunch of girls.''

HONORING DAN MISNER OF WISCONSIN

HON. PAUL RYAN

OF WISCONSIN

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, today I honor a true civic hero from Wisconsin's First Congressional District—Mr. Dan Misner. Dan Misner retired last month after dedicating 40 years of his life to public education in Walworth, Wisconsin.

Dan Misner grew up near Beloit, Wisconsin. He credits a dedicated high school teacher for giving him the inspiration to go to college and enter the field of education. He was the first of seven children in his family to attend college and earn a degree.

Dan's teaching career started in 1959 at Big Foot High School, where he also coached the men's football, baseball and golf teams. Within ten years, he ascended to the position of Director of Instruction for the Big Foot Area Schools Association. In addition, he also served as the principal of Fontana High School. He concluded his four decades in public education by serving two terms on the Big Foot School Board, including one term as president of the board.

When asked what motivated his interest in education, Dan replied that it was his passion for knowledge and children. Dan's commitment to children and education serves as an inspiration to us all. He is truly a role model for anyone seeking a career in teaching. I am honored to recognize him for his contributions in improving the lives and education of children in Wisconsin's First Congressional District.

In his retirement, Dan plans to continue his volunteer work and spend more time with his family. I wish Dan Misner and his family the best of success and thank him for his dedicated service to his community.

IN HONOR OF HERMAN SPERO

HON. DENNIS J. KUCINICH

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, today I honor Herman Spero, the Executive Producer of UPBEAT an ''American Bandstand'' type television show produced in Cleveland, OH.

April 13, 2000 will be considered UPBEAT Day in Cleveland. On this day, the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum will be unveiling their third in a series of their Rock and Roll Landmarks at WEWS TV, where UPBEAT was taped every Saturday night from 1964–1971. The show was syndicated in over one hundred cities and featured every major recording artist from the rock, jazz, and the rhythm and blues world. UPBEAT featured the first ever TV appearance of Simon & Garfunkle as well as the last appearance of Otis Redding. Other famous acts appearing in UPBEAT included the Beatles and the Rolling Stones.

We all know that it takes an immense amount of passion, hard work and dedication to make dreams come true. We are grateful to Mr. Spero for having an overwhelming amount of all three. He was instrumental to the success of Rock and Roll and had a historical role in its development. When the history of Rock and Roll is written, Herman Spero will have a fitting and appropriate mention. Herman Spero, through his unique combination of vision, common touch, and entertainment flair, is certainly deserving of this well-earned recognition.

I ask you, fellow colleagues, to join me in honoring a Cleveland legend, Herman Spero, who has given the city yet another reason why it is the Rock and Roll Capitol of the World.

A TRIBUTE TO MRS. DORIS SMALLWOOD

HON. ROBERT A. BRADY

OF PENNSYLVANIA

Wednesday, April 12, 2000

Mr. BRADY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor Doris Smallwood, a dedicated teacher with 36 years of experience in the Philadelphia School System. Unfortunately for us, Mr. Speaker, this year marks the last in which she will be educating our children at the Hunter School. Her retirement at the end of this school year deserves recognition not only for the longevity which her career achieved, but for the special impact she has had on the students and teachers she has encountered over the years. As Mrs. Smallwood moves to the next chapter of her life, it is incumbent upon us to reflect back and praise her for the extraordinary service she has provided to our community.

Mrs. Smallwood has been called a ''teacher's teacher'' by her peers. As an exemplary instructor of the 3rd grade with a keen interest in math, it was not uncommon to find Mrs. Smallwood conducting math lessons for her fellow teachers after school. Her dedication to mathematics resulted in the development of assessment standards which ensured that teachers were up to par in that field. Mrs. Smallwood, in effect, raised the bar for qualifications of teachers and did this solely out of her innate desire to better educate our youth.

Mrs. Smallwood prepared her students for the world to come not through rudimentary lesson plans, but through an engaging relationship that spanned beyond the classroom walls. When the technology boom occurred, it was Mrs. Smallwood who developed the grant to provide a computer lab for the Hunter School. It is no wonder that it was also she who became Technology Specialist after earning her certification in technology at the college level. Her proficiency in computers allowed for Internet training of Mentally Gifted students and for basic computer training of kids starting as early as kindergarten. Furthermore, Mrs. Smallwood understood the important link between home and school. She has been instrumental in the design and success of the Parent Partnership Program which prepares both parent and child for the transition from home to the school community.

The citizens of Philadelphia will sorely miss the heart-felt dedication that Mrs. Smallwood displayed during her tenure as a teacher with the Hunter School. She has defended the belief that all students can and will learn. She has also proclaimed that the only barrier to success is indifference, something she has never allowed herself or those around her to experience. She is a master teacher who has perfected her craft yet continues to choose learning as an avenue to life. She truly is, in every essence of the word, a teacher. We can only hope that others will emulate her commitment to excellence and her pursuit for the educational advancement of all students.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, April 13, 2000 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, April 13, 2000

The House met at 10 a.m.

Rabbi Jacob J. Schachter, the Jewish Center, New York, New York, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we express our deep gratitude to You for the gift that is the United States of America. Like millions of others in this exceptional land, all four of my grandparents came to these blessed shores from countries far away to create a better life for themselves and their families. Like millions of others, my father served in the armed forces of this wonderful country and fought to make the world safe for democracy and human freedom. Help us, O Lord, to continue to make these United States a center for justice and decency, integrity and opportunity.

Our country is blessed with unprecedented power, plenty and prosperity. Grant us the wisdom, O Gracious God, to appreciate these gifts and use them wisely for the benefit of all who live in our midst and to ensure that peace and security reign in this great Nation and throughout the entire world.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 365, nays 49, answered ''present'' 1, not voting 19, as follows:

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Mr. LARSON. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 123, I was out of the building on legislative matters. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, during rollcall vote No. 123 on April 13, 2000, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Will the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM JOHNSON) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment concurrent resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. Con. Res. 278. Concurrent resolution authorizing the use of the Capitol Grounds for the 19th annual National Peace Officers' Memorial Service.

H. Con. Res. 279. Concurrent resolution authorizing the use of the Capitol Grounds for the 200th birthday celebration of the Library of Congress.

H. Con. Res. 281. Concurrent resolution authorizing the use of the East Front of the Capitol Grounds for performances sponsored by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

The message also announced that the Senate has passed a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles in which concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2323. An act to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to clarify the treatment of stock options under the Act.

S.J. Res. 40. Joint resolution providing for the appointment of Alan G. Spoon as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

S.J. Res. 41. Joint resolution providing for the appointment of Sheila E. Widnall as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

S.J. Res. 42. Joint resolution providing for the appointment of Manuel L. Ibáñez as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair advises the Members that it will entertain one 1-minute request only from the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER). All other 1-minute requests will be postponed until the end of the day.

HONORING RABBI JACOB J. SCHACHTER

(Mr. NADLER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor this morning's guest chaplain, Rabbi Jacob J. Schachter of the Jewish Center in New York City whom I have known for almost 20 years.

Rabbi Schachter has been the spiritual leader of the Jewish Center since 1981. Under his leadership the Jewish Center has tripled in its membership. Rabbi Schachter has brought enthusiasm for Jewish life to the synagogue and to the local community throughout his tenure.

Rabbi Schachter received Rabbinic ordination from Mesvita Torah Vodaas and holds a Ph.D. in Near East languages from Harvard University. Among his many accomplishments, Rabbi Schachter is an accomplished author, having collaborated on ''A Modern Heretic and a Traditional Community, Orthodoxy, and Americana Judaism'' and is the founding editor of the Torah u-Madda Journal. He is also the founding president of the Council of Orthodox Jewish Organizations of Manhattan, is a much sought after speaker on interdenominational dialogue under the auspices of the Jewish Community Center and the 92nd Street Y, and is a member of the Board of Governors of the New York Board of Rabbis.

Unfortunately, Rabbi Schachter will soon be leaving the Jewish Center to become the dean of the Rabbi Joseph Soloveitchik Institute in Brookline, Massachusetts, where his daily insights, wisdom and leadership will be invaluable to the State of Massachusetts and to the Jewish community, especially in Massachusetts. I want to wish him well in his new endeavors and thank him for all that he has done for the Jewish Center, for the Jewish community, and for the entire community in New York over the last 20 years.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 290, CONCURRENT RESOLUTION ON THE BUDGET, FISCAL YEAR 2001

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 474 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 474

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 290) establishing the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2001, revising the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2000, and setting forth appropriate budgetary levels for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2005. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read. The conference report shall be debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Budget.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 474 is a straightforward typical rule providing for the consideration of the annual budget resolution conference report. The rule waives all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration and provides that the conference report be considered as read. The rule further provides for 1 hour of debate, equally divided and controlled between the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on the Budget.

The two Chambers have come to a speedy agreement on the fiscal year 2001 budget resolution, sorting out differences between the Houses in a responsible manner. I am pleased to note that the conference report to be considered today adheres to the six major principles that we outlined when this process began, including continuing our historic achievement of paying down the national debt, protecting 100 percent of the Social Security trust fund, boosting our national defense, providing for prescription drug coverage and Medicare reform, offering tax relief, and supporting our localities in the all-important arena of education of our youth.

In each of these areas, the budget package we have before us today keeps the faith with our pledge to the American people. We are delivering on our promise to make the government work better for taxpayers, while managing this extraordinarily blue sky fiscal period in a very responsible manner.

In this budget we are reaffirming our commitment to maintaining fiscal discipline, something that can prove even harder to do when times are good than when times are bad. Yet, in this budget we have provided for $1 trillion, $1 trillion, in payment on the national debt. That is something that we are doing that will benefit every American today and, of course, all of our children and grandchildren for years to come.

$1 trillion in debt reduction. That is a concept that was totally unimaginable for most of us just a few short years ago when deficits were soaring and the debt was mounting at a terrifying pace. What a long way we have come.

Mr. Speaker, this budget document outlines an important set of priorities that highlight preservation of the programs Americans count on most; reinforcement of our ability to defend the national security in today's ever more dangerous world and the necessity of enhancing tax fairness for families and businesses.

I would like to emphasize the importance of the defense and security component of this budget which would, of course, include intelligence. Last night in the Committee on Rules, we discussed the significance of the investment this budget makes in our defense, not for fancy or high-priced or untested projects, but rather for the core capabilities that have been so underfunded and so severely tested in recent years.

I applaud those who fought for and won the increase in funding, and I stand ready to work to make sure we put those resources where they will matter the most in our personnel, in our readiness, in our basic equipment, in our eyes and ears, that is our intelligence, and in our training to make sure our military folks are the best trained in the world and can take the best possible care of themselves.

Unlike the budget presented to us by the President, we have here today a budget that realistically meets the needs and the challenges of the coming year, without returning to the bad old days of spending for today without any eye to the future at all.

I am proud of our Committee on the Budget Members and the leadership for their efforts in this budget blueprint. Specifically I would like to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH), our courageous Committee on the Budget chairman, for all his work, not just this year, but throughout his distinguished tenure in the House. I know there will be many accolades to come for the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman KASICH), as this is the final act of his official House budget career, all of them well deserved.

Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will join me in voting for this budget, and, in the meantime supporting this fair and appropriate rule, so we can get to the debate.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule because I oppose the hasty process that this rule embraces. This resolution waives the rule that requires the availability of conference reports for 3 days before their consideration. This House rule, an important rule, allows Members time to read and study the report before they cast their votes. Since this conference report has been available to most Members for less than 12 hours, I have grave doubts that most Members have any real knowledge of about what it includes.

From what I can tell, the conference report once again repeats the follies of the leadership's continued obsession with large tax cuts. It does little to extend the solvency of Social Security or Medicare and cuts funding for critical education and housing programs.

I wish my colleagues would drop the charade and reflect for a moment. These surpluses on our horizon, if they materialize, offer an extraordinary opportunity. They allow us to pay down the large public debt, thereby providing the ultimate tax cut for our constituents in the form of lower interest rates.

The surpluses allow us to make Social Security and Medicare sound and solvent for future generations. They mean that we can close the gaping hole in the Medicare coverage and provide a true prescription drug benefit. They make it possible for us to do more for education at all levels. But this document squanders that opportunity and instead we continue to pass billion dollar tax breaks for wealthy special interests.

The conference agreement suffers from the same fundamental flaws as the House-passed resolution. The $170 billion tax cut is so large that it pushes aside Social Security and Medicare solvency, debt reduction, education, and all other national priorities.

The conference agreement is a political gesture, rather than a credible budget plan that would provide a meaningful guide for subsequent budget legislation. The spending cuts are so deep and unrealistic and the tax cuts so large that the resolution puts us on a track for another appropriations train wreck in September.

Like the House-passed resolution, the conference agreement puts the budget on course to spend the Social Security surplus. Even taking at face value this budget's implausible cuts in non-defense programs, it skates along the edge of on-budget deficits for the first 5 years and invades the Social Security surplus after 2008, if not sooner.

Moreover, the conference report puts funds for education and training on hold. In 2001, the conference agreement provides $4.8 billion less than the Democratic alternative budget, and $4.7 billion less than the President's budget for appropriations for education, training, and social services. This low funding level will require the majority to cut current education programs or to eliminate the President's proposals to renovate the crumbling schools, to hire and train more teachers, to add $1 billion to Head Start and to double the amount for after-school programs. Outlays for 2001 actually are $400 million below a freeze at last year's level.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to focus for a moment on how the measure came up short on Medicare prescription drugs. The conference agreement allows a prescription drug benefit of up to $40 billion over 5 years, but only if accompanied by unspecified Medicare reforms. By contrast, the Democratic alternative budget required that a full $40 billion be devoted to a prescription drug benefit, with or without other changes in Medicare.

In both 1998 and 1999, the American people rejected these same unrealistic cuts in essential Federal spending and excessive tax cuts. Why on Earth would anyone believe that the American people will suddenly change their minds and reject essential government services like Social Security and Medicare in favor of tax cuts?

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), the chairman of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, my friend and colleague.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, if you care about building America, this is a rule and budget resolution that one can support. In fact, it is one of the best budget resolutions that we have seen in many a day.

I want to commend the leadership of the Committees on the Budget of both the House and Senate for honoring their commitments to fully fund transportation. The conference report allocates sufficient transportation function funds so that we can fully fund TEA 21, the highway and transit legislation, including the adjustments resulting from the increased revenues going into the gas tax collections into the Highway Trust Fund.

It also fully funds AIR 21 capital programs and it fully funds the President's request for FAA operations, which is at the full AIR 21 level. In addition, there are no cuts in Coast Guard or in Amtrak, despite the predictions of the critics during our debate and consideration over AIR 21. So those predictions simply have not come to pass in this budget resolution.

The conference report keeps faith with the American people. The taxes collected for highways and transit improvements will go into the Highway Trust Fund for highway and transit improvements. The taxes collected for aviation will go to aviation improvements. Gone are the days of using trust funds to mask the size of the deficit.

The budget resolution restores honesty to the budget process. This is a budget resolution which we can be proud to support, because it is a budget resolution which helps build America.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT).

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, this is another rule that was passed late at night to bring to the floor a conference report that, in all due respect, does not deserve the name. It is hard to call this a conference report when nobody has conferred. We have had no consultation. There is no mutuality in the process, so it is not hard to believe that there will be no mutuality, no common ground, in the final result.

I am not just saying this because I am miffed at being left out of the process. If you cannot take rejection, you better not be in politics. But we set a model 3 years ago for how to do this. We sat down and tried to negotiate a common agreement, given the fact that we have a divided government, and, when we got to the end, it was a pretty good product. We called it the Balanced Budget Agreement of 1997. We have not had such mutuality, such collegiality, since, and certainly not in this result here.

As I said, I am not miffed, but we have meritorious arguments to make. We made them on the House floor, we made them in the committee markup. I am not sure they were heard in either place, but if we could have made them in conference, I think we could have improved this product, because in conference if we had had a conference, we would have said you are asking for $121.5 billion now in real reduction and budget authority for non-defense programs over the next 5 years. Is this realistic?

Let us look at the last 5 years that have gotten the attention in conference. Let us look at the last 5 years. The reduction in the increase in the last 5 years was 2.5 percent.

That was a time when we had caps, spending caps. That was a time when we were coping with the deficit and trying to reduce the deficit.

Now we have surpluses and no spending caps, because that is one of the omissions of this bill, it does not reset the spending caps at all. It simply assumes, with no enforcement mechanism, that we can achieve what we have not achieved over the last 10 years, $121.5 billion in real reduction in our defense spending. Too bad we did not have an opportunity to look at that argument realistically in conference.

This bill calls for $175 billion in tax reduction. We showed on the House floor how if we do $40 billion for Medicare and a $200 billion tax cut, we will wipe out the surplus in 1 year and thereafter have a zero balance, no cushion whatsoever. In case there is a downturn we are back in deficit. We are back into the social security count, putting the budget on thin ice, perilously close to deficit for the next 5 years.

They have mitigated that. I think they maybe after all read our chart, and mitigated that to the tune of $25 billion. They say they want to pay down the national debt. That means over 5 years we will pay it down by $12 billion by our calculation, over 10 years by $1 billion.

Why is that? What looks like a more moderate tax cut than last year, what looks like a moderate tax cut, a tax cut of $175 billion, over a 10-year period of time works out to a tax cut of $929 billion, by our calculation.

Last year the tax cut was $156 billion over 5 years, and $792 billion over 10. This year, if we do $176 billion, the outyear implications are $929 billion of revenue reduction plus debt service adjustment. It literally puts us back in deficit.

But they conveniently did not run the budget out 10 years, in this case. That is another thing we could have done in conference, give us a 10-year run-out of the budget, not a 5-year runout, because in the second 5 years it becomes harder to defend.

These are some major issues we did not touch on. We certainly did not touch on Medicare and prescription drugs. There is a time-honored tool that is put in the Budget Act in 1974 that the Committee on the Budget uniquely can use. If it wants to see something done, it can say to the committee of jurisdiction, you have the authority and the obligation, and here is the money to report out a prescription drug benefit by a date certain so that the House can vote on it.

But every time we mention that, they dodge. This bill right here not only dodges again, because it does not have reconciliation mandates in it. This particular resolution does not even resolve the issue. There is $40 billion for Medicare reform and prescription drugs if the Committee on Ways and Means gets around reporting such a bill, and then in the Senate, there is a totally different prescription.

The idea of a conference report is to bring the two bodies together. On this most critical issue, which is at the top of the chart, they fail to do it. We do not have a clear course and we do not have a mandate to get it done.

I know what we will hear today is the budget resolution is on time, we are going to pass it by April 15. I am going to tell the Members what I said last year, it is on time for a train wreck that will be coming in September. That is what this budget resolution will do for us.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have been on the Committee on the Budget for a full 7 years. This is my eighth year. This will be only the second budget that we have passed on time by April 15 during that time. In fact, in the total history of the Committee on the Budget, this will only be the third time that we have passed a timely budget resolution.

So I would like to compliment the Committee on Rules, certainly the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) on the Committee on the Budget. If we look at where we were 7 years ago, we were looking at deficits as far as the eye could see, between $200 billion and $300 billion a year. We have come a long ways.

We made the decision last year that we are not going to spend any of the social security trust fund surpluses on anything except social security. This has been a huge change, huge progress. We have agonized as we have tried to hold down spending to make sure ultimately that our kids and grandkids are not going to be saddled with a huge burden of Medicare and social security.

If there is one disappointment in this budget, and I met and talked to John Podesta this morning from the White House, it is that we could not get leadership from the White House to move ahead on social security reform. It is going to come up and be a tremendous disadvantage to our kids and our grandkids if we do not attack and face up to the huge problems of resolving the unfunded liability of social security and Medicare and the entitlement programs.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, this budget resolution sort of reminds me of one of those good news-bad news jokes. The good news is that this law says that we should pass a budget resolution by April 15. We are going to do that. That is the good news. The bad news is that it is a joke.

If we look at this and listen to what the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) said, the gentleman is one of the most thoughtful, one of the most intelligent people. He actually was a banker once. He knows about money. He gave a very erudite explanation of this budget.

If we listen to the gentleman, the most important thing he said was that this resolution puts us on record for the train wreck in September. We are right on track. We are going to do it all over again this year what we did last year.

We could talk about Medicare, Medicaid, and all those issues, social security and education, all the issues that are not dealt with here. But this budget resolution contains $100 billion more in cuts. We did not do that last year, we added, and we are heading right down the same track.

I know people's eyes kind of glaze over when we talk about the budget resolution. What is this? This is an outline for what is going to happen in this country in this Congress.

One of the issues on $1.9 trillion, that is a figure that is sort of out of the reach of most of us, but let us just take one issue. That is the issue of pharmaceutical prescription drugs; how people, how seniors are going to get that paid for. Everybody says it is a good idea. But when we look at this budget resolution, I have brought this chart here because it really points out what is all about this budget resolution.

The Democratic proposal was for $40 billion locked in for the drug benefit. The Republican budget says, if the Committee on Ways and Means gets around to it, we could spend up to $40 billion. Which would we rather have, have it locked in, or if they happen to get around to it?

Does it require action this year? The Democrats say yes. The Republicans say no. There is no requirement in this budget.

The gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) talked about reconciliation and all those fancy words. What that means is that the Committee on Ways and Means must do something, and it is not in this bill.

Who is covered? In the Democrats' proposal, every senior citizen is covered. In the Republicans' budget, they have to be poor. So we are going to turn this into a welfare program, it is not a Medicare program.

Mr. Speaker, this turns this program, the Republicans', into a welfare program. Senior citizens are not entitled to it, they have to go down and prove at the welfare office that they are poor enough and ask for help, beg for help. What kind of a benefit is that for us to be giving to senior citizens?

The Democratic proposal says all seniors are covered. As an American over 65, you are entitled. But the Republicans do not believe in that.

The benefit? The Democrats define what people are going to get. What the Republicans say is, here is a little money. Why do you not go out and see if you can buy yourself an insurance policy?

The HIAA, the health insurance industry, says that the private insurance market will not sell policies simply for drugs, for pharmaceuticals. They are not going to do it. It is too risky. So the Republicans are giving them the money and saying, okay, folks, go out and find it. But it is not there. They will never find it.

This budget resolution is basically a PR document. Pass it on time, we want to get it done, we will all stand up here and say it is the first time in 29 years that we have had a budget resolution, and all the rest, but the fact is that it is a nonsense piece of paper.

It is really sort of like Alice in the Looking Glass. The more we look at it, and the reason they ran it through at midnight last night, is because they did not want us to have any time to look at it, because it becomes curiouser and curiouser.

I urge Members to vote against this budget resolution.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. GREEN), a member of the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, it is going to be very interesting to watch this debate today. Everyone here today recognizes that some great things have been happening with the economy. Unemployment is at a 30-year low, the economy continues to grow.

Now there are some on the other side who want us to go back to the old days, the days of tax and spend and spend and tax. That is really what they are talking about when they bring out their numbers, their interpolated charts and numbers. That is what they are trying to do. They are trying to move us backward.

Still others want us to sit back and do nothing. They want us to enjoy the fruits of our labor and the fruits of this growing economy.

But the majority budget, the budget we take up today, recognizes that we have a once-in-a-generation opportunity to make progress, to secure America's future. That is what this reform budget does. This budget reinforces retirement security to the social security lockbox.

Secondly, it pays down the debt, reduces it by $1 trillion over 5 years. It eliminates the public debt by the year 2013.

It reinvests in public education, a 9.4 percent increase over last year. It sets in motion a plan for providing prescription drug benefits to seniors. It begins to rescue our military from years of neglect and misuse.

Yes, and I know this is blasphemy to some, yes, it does provide tax relief. It allows Americans to keep more of what they earn.

I hope today will be a good debate. I think it will show the clear differences between the two parties, between those who want to move backwards and those who want to charge ahead. Today should be a good debate.

I urge my colleagues to support this good, open, fair rule. More importantly, I urge my colleagues to vote for this budget. When we go home over the Easter break, I urge them to talk about the great things we are doing, the challenges that we are meeting, and the steps we are taking.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from New York for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to thank the ranking member, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT), for a very detailed analysis of the process. Many of us are concerned about process. But in the course of his defining the process, he really captured the substance of my opposition to this resolution at this time.

The gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) is right, the 1977 budget reconciliation was one of our finest hours. The reason is that some of us agreed with aspects of it, and some of us disagreed. But we found that the synergism of providing a budget surplus was a key element to our support.

We now find ourselves in the year 2000 with a budget surplus, but we also find ourselves with a budget where many of us disagree because the principles of opportunity are denied. We give a tax cut that I imagine is to cater to a candidate running for president of the United States on the Republican ticket.

We do not do anything to deal with extending social security and Medicare. One thing that we certainly throw to the winds and leave it encumbered with all kinds of problems is the senior citizen prescription drug benefit.

Members can imagine in a district like the Eighteenth Congressional District, probably representative of many across the Nation, with a high number of senior citizens, there is not a place that I go that they do not say, what choices do you want me to make, food, housing, or my health care?

I do not see why we are prepared to give a $929 billion tax cut, if we project it over 10 years, to placate the presidential politics when we have individuals in our community who have worked, who have paid taxes, who are living by themselves and cannot provide for their health care, cannot get prescription drugs?

We have a plan. The Democrat plan is unencumbered. Yet, we could not get that resolved in this budget process.

In my State, a mere 20 percent of our young people get college degrees. We are fighting this whole issue of the digital divide, realizing that e-commerce is driving the economy, begging to get our young people educated, needing more teachers professionally developed, needing our crumbling schools being rebuilt, and, yet, this budget does not provide for that in its educational piece.

It slows up on the idea of education. In particular, Mr. Speaker, it does not allow for the President's proposals to renovate crumbling schools. We leave out money to hire and train more teachers. I was in a meeting with members of the e-commerce industry, and one of the things that we noted in that discussion was we appreciate our teachers, but we must make them professionally aware of the technology.

We do not have the money, Mr. Speaker, for Head Start. How many Head Start graduates do we have in leadership positions and owners of small business. There is a definitive measure that we can have to determine that Head Start is a successful program.

So I certainly ask my colleagues and my Republican colleagues, in a time of opportunity, what are we challenged to do? We are challenged to give opportunity to others who may not have walked that walk before. We need to be fiscally responsible, but we did that in 1997, and that is why we are here today.

Now we need to establish priorities. A prescription drug benefit for seniors that is unencumbered, education for our children, compensation for our teachers, the rebuilding of crumbling schools, the protection of Social Security and Medicare, and the heck with the $929 billion tax cut that no one is asking for except presidential politics. We can do better than that, Mr. Speaker. I ask to vote down the resolution and do a better job.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I think we know what this budget resolution conference report is all about. The majority wants to provide the Republican presidential candidate with a budget that he can work with, and that is fine. I read on the front page of the Washington Post today that Presidential Candidate George Bush has recommended another $46 billion of spending this week alone, $13 billion more for education, $25 billion more for defense, and then, of course, he wants a tax cut of over one and a half trillion dollars over the next 10 years.

Well, that is great. We are all for many of those things. But the thing that troubles us the most is that we have what may be a once in a lifetime opportunity to do right by our children's generation. We have an unprecedented surplus ahead of us. Is it right to use that surplus for our own benefit, or is it better to use that surplus to pay off the debt that we incurred so our children do not have to pay it off and so our children do not have to pay the quarter of a trillion dollars in interest costs that are due every year. And those interest costs will be a lot more when they are our age.

We are the ones who had the benefit of running up that enormous deficit during the 1980s. We now have the responsibility to pay it off. First things first. Pay off the $3.7 trillion of our public debt so that our children are not burdened with that debt.

Second thing, provide for our own retirement, provide for our Social Security and Medicare. That is our second responsibility. Do not leave it to them to have to provide for our retirement and our health care when we are no longer working and doing so well.

How wrong a legacy to leave the public debt to our children's generation, to leave it to them to pay for Social Security and Medicare. How right to pay off our debt now, to provide for our own retirement, and, to the extent we can, target tax cuts where they will benefit the economy, where Allan Greenspan will not have to raise interest rates to offset their stimulus effect. Target them and then invest in the next generation in education, prescription drugs research and development, and infrastructure. That is what we should be doing. That should be our legacy for our children.

This conference report does not accomplish that legacy. Let us do the right thing, the responsible thing. Reject this selfish, short term budget policy. We can do better than this. Much better.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I simply rise in strong support of this rule and the budget conference report itself.

We are making history here by, on time, proceeding for the first time in the quarter century since we have had the 1974 Budget Impoundment Act with doing back-to-back budgets on schedule. I believe that that is a very clear signal that this Congress, under the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT) is on track towards doing the kinds of things that he said when he stood in this well in January of 1999. He has proceeded with regular order following with the rules and the structure that we have in place here.

What is it that we are doing? Well, we have established the priorities the American people very much want us to address. Education is a great concern to the people whom I am honored to represent in Southern California. It is a concern all across this country. We need to make sure that, as we deal with this global economy, that the American people have the expertise that is necessary to be competitive. The best way to do that is to enhance the education level that we have in this country. This measure goes a long way towards doing that.

We have a priority. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) who came before the Committee on Rules last night made it very clear in his testimony that, what is it that the Federal Government can do and has the responsibility to do that no other level of government can do whatsoever? That is those very, very important words right in the middle of the preamble of the Constitution, ''provide for the common defense.'' That is exactly what this budget does by dramatically enhancing our ability to deal with our national security and the security of our interests around the world. Ensuring that we get our very brave men and women off of food stamps, that is a priority that we have here.

So as we look at this budget, it is a very, very important conference report.

I will say, since I am standing here in the well and I am looking at the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) who is in the back of the Chamber, that he will be sorely missed. It has been his leadership over the past several years that has played a big role in getting us to the point where we are today, and I look forward to great things from him in the years to come.

The best way that we could send him off when he does leave here months and months from now is to overwhelmingly pass this rule and to pass this budget conference report with strong bipartisan support.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, there were three main issues associated with this conference. First, should we add $4.1 billion to defense spending, increasing overall spending by that amount, and reducing the surplus by that amount? The conference said ''yes'' to that question.

Second question: Should we increase efforts to fight dreaded diseases by increasing spending for NIH by $1.6 billion, which would increase overall spending by that amount? The conferees said ''no'' to that question.

Third: Should we increase student assistance by as much as $200 per grant in order to offset the higher cost of higher education and pay for that by a small cut in the size of tax breaks planned for the high rollers in this society? The conference again said ''no.''

Those are the issues before the conference. Those are the issues before the House today.

This huge Republican tax cut will simply not permit us to do what nearly everybody knows we ought to be doing to help students get the kind of education they need. That reflects what Candidate Bush said in my State last week. He is reported in the Eau Claire newspaper saying as follows: ''George W. Bush gave strong indications Thursday he is not inclined to increase Federal spending to give more grants to students to go to college. Bush, who attended both Yale and Harvard, conceded that some people have complained that loans carry a repayment burden. ''Too bad,'' he said. ''That is what a loan is.'' There is a lot of money available for students and families willing to go out and look for it. Some of you are just going to have to pay it back, and that is just the way it is.'' What this really is is Richey Rich indicating that he does not have a clue about how the other half lives.

What this conference also does today is gut our ability to deal with the problems we need to deal with respect to health problems.

This chart shows the amount by which every appropriation to attack major diseases will be cut from the Senate amendment in order to make room for my colleagues' Republican tax cut today. They have been talking to folks about how they are going to promise to help increase research on diabetes. This says they are going to have to cut $47 million below the amount in the Senate amendment. They are going to have to cut $14 million for Parkinson's disease. They are going to have to cut $350 million for all types of cancer research. They cut $41 million from research that could have taken place on Alzheimer's and $180 million from research that could have taken place on AIDS.

So when my colleagues vote on this conference today, think of the 150 people a day who will be diagnosed with cancer this year, think of those suffering with diabetes and Parkinson's and Alzheimer's, and think of all of the students who are struggling every day to get a decent education who my colleagues will not be able to help.

That may be consistent with the Republican values. It is not consistent with the values of the people I represent.

BUSH AVERSE TO MORE COLLEGE GRANT FUNDING—LET STUDENTS GET LOANS, CANDIDATE SAYS IN EC

(By Doug Mell)

Texas Gov. George W. Bush gave strong indications Thursday he is not inclined to increase federal spending to give more grants to students to go to college.

Instead, Bush said, he has more affinity for giving students loans.

"I support Pell Grants (the federal government's main college grant program)," Bush told reporters after visiting Locust Lane School in Eau Claire. "I support student loans."

Bush, who attended both Yale and Harvard, conceded that some people have complained that those loans carry a repayment burden.

"Too bad," he said. "that's what a loan is."

Bush, the Texas governor and likely GOP presidential nominee, added: "There is a lot of money available for students and families who are willing to go out and look for it.

"Some of it you are going to have to pay back, and that's just the way it is because there is nothing free in society. College is not free."

He also said the federal government should not get involved in setting tuition levels for state colleges and universities.

Here are edited remarks from a question-and-answer session between Bush and reporters after visiting Locust Lane School:

What are your plans to increase school accountability?

We are going to ask the question, are children learning? We are going to say to states, "If you accept federal money, you have to develop an accountability system." I believe a national test will undermine local controls of schools.

Under the Title 1 initiative, it says that after a three-year period, if standards aren't being met for disadvantaged students—in other words, if students remain in failed schools—instead of subsidizing failure, something must happen. You can't have an accountability system, you can't measure, unless ultimately there is a consequence. Otherwise, there is no accountability.

And the consequence is, the parents get to make a different choice. It's funding children and it's battling failure.

I believe if you set high standards and hold people accountable, people will learn. I've seen it with my own eyes.

Is it the school's fault when test scores are low or is it a combination of things?

I think it's the system's fault. When you have kids that can't pass a basic test, it sounds like to me that they have just been shuffled through the system. Because nowhere along the line has someone blown the whistle and said, "Now wait a minute; we are not going to move you through until you know what you are supposed to know."

When you have high school kids who can't pass basic reading comprehension exams, you've got a problem. If a kid can't read when he gets to high school, something is fundamentally wrong with the system.

That's why it is so important to address these problems early, before it is too late.

What has been the response to your proposals from teachers?

I differentiate between the union leaders and the teachers. I think the teachers are helping. I think teachers want the best. I think really good teachers do not care about being held accountable. I think they understand that accountability is not a punishment.

We need to expand the program at the federal level that encourages, trains, pays stipends to, ex-military people who come into classrooms.

I want to increase the teacher training, teacher recruitment aspect of the federal expenditures, but I want to send it back to the states with a lot of flexibility.

One of the cornerstones of the education reform package at the federal level is maximum authority and maximum flexibility back to the states. The more flexibility states have to spend federal money to meet their needs, the more money is freed at the local level as well.

I think there needs to be a teacher protection act, which will say that if teachers uphold standards of discipline in their classrooms, they can't get sued under civil rights statutes.

Could Gov. Tommy Thompson play a role in your administration?

Tommy is a friend, and he's smart and he's capable. He's led the way on a lot of interesting initiatives and education reforms. There is a lot of different roles Tommy could play.

Have you approached anyone concerning being a vice presidential candidate?

No, and I won't with anybody. I obviously have thought about it. People say to me all the time, "Why don't you consider so and so, and why don't you consider this and that?"

But I have yet to put a process in place. Over the next couple of weeks, I will be thinking through the strategy.

I think there is going to be a need to have a different attitude in Washington. There has to be a different type of politics and a different type of attitude about expending political capital.

And I tell people point-blank in this state and every state: If you want four more years of Clinton-Gore, I'm not the right guy. That's really what much of the election is about.

What are your plans on dairy policy?

I'm going to say the same thing that other presidents have: We need to have a national plan, a national dairy policy. Until there is one, until there is one that the country can agree to, there is going to be compacts.

Do you oppose dairy compacts?

I'd like to see a national dairy plan.

That includes something on compacts?

It would include a national plan that all regions of the country could live with. If you had a national dairy plan, hopefully, if it made sense, it would make them moot.

I'm going to be a president for everybody. Surely there is plan that is best for the nation.

Would Wisconsin dairy farmers get a fair break under your administration?

I think what Wisconsin dairy farmers can expect is a fair, even-handed policy that tries to develop a national dairy strategy. I recognize it's going to be difficult to do.

What is your position on the Elian Gonzalez controversy?

He should have his day in a family court in Florida. And the (Clinton) administration has been heavy-handed on this issue, and I disagree with them, I strongly disagree with them.

There needs to be a full hearing, and I hope his dad gets to come over (from Cuba) and testify.

I don't trust Fidel Castro. I don't trust the system. I do not believe we ought to trade with Cuba and Fidel Castro, because foreign trade with Castro becomes an avenue for propping the administration up.

I hope the dad is given the chance to make the decision in a free world, give him a chance to make a decision about his son in a totally free environment. There needs to be a venue to make that decision.

What is your position on trade with China?

I do believe we ought to have China in the World Trade Organization. But as opposed to trading with government entities, most of the trade with China, as a result of the World Trade Organization, will be with private entities.

What is your position on campaign finance reform?

I think we ought to have campaign funding reform. It starts with people being honest about the law. Secondly, I think we ought to ban corporate soft and labor union soft money, so long as you have paycheck protection.

We need instant disclosure who the campaign contributors are and I want full instant disclosure on what went on in the White House when the vice president was there.

I think we can make it more fair, more open and more realistic so people know what is going on.

I'd love to work with Sen. (Russ) Feingold and Sen. (John) McCain on that issue. I would hope he (Feingold) would allow paycheck protection so union members don't have their money spent by union bosses without their permission.

What is the first bill you would send to Congress after you are elected.

First is to go to the Defense Department, the secretary of the defense, and ask for a top-down review, a top-to-bottom review of the strategies in place to reconfigure our military.

I worry about haphazard spending, political spending when it comes to procurement, research and development. And I want there to be a procedure in place to reconfigure how war is fought and war.

Our military needs to be lighter, more lethal, easier to move, harder to find. We need to think 20 or 30 years down the road.

The first bill I would like to see coming out of education is Title 1 reform with flexibility to states.

I would like Congress to pass a tax-relief package, with a tax fairness component, I think we need to get rid of the death tax.

This code we have today penalizes people who live on the outskirts of poverty. If you are a mother making $22,000 a year and you have two children, for every additional dollar you earn, you pay a higher marginal return than someone making $200,000. It's not right.

So my simplification plan drops the bottom rate from 15 percent to 10 percent and increases the child credit, which facilitates upward mobility among people who are struggling.

It may sound strange to hear a Republican talking that way, but I'm passionate about this subject. Al Gore is going to say it's risky.

But what is risky is locking people in place in America. What we ought to believe in is having a tax code that encourages upward mobility, not discourages upward mobility.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) has 18 minutes remaining.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, whenever anybody leaves an institution, an institution is obviously diminished, a little poorer, especially when it is a good person. Obviously people get replaced through the election process and through the hiring process here, but there is still always a sense of loss when we lose one of our spectacular people.

Much has been said about the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman KASICH), and I want to be associated with those remarks, the extraordinary job he has done through the years here today. We acknowledge that.

I know in the general debate, he is going to have the great opportunity to display his brilliance, and we are going to have the opportunity to further thank him.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. GOSS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to point out what the Republicans have done since they took the majority in dramatically increasing the funding for the National Institutes of Health.

□ 1115

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I appreciate the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) bringing that forward.

I was going to make the observation that this is really a debate about the rule, and I think we agree it is a brilliant rule and deserves everybody's support; and we are trying to get to the debate when the distinguished chairman can make the kinds of points that are so relevant to the debate and the final vote on the budget.

But today I also want to recognize and publicly thank an outstanding Hill staffer who has set an admirable standard for the past 12 years and who is now heading for new challenges.

Today's rule is the last piece of legislation that Wendy Selig will handle before she heads off to a leadership position of the American Cancer Society.

Wendy personifies skill and professional competence in her work, whether it is as a press secretary, an administrative assistant, the majority counsel on the Subcommittee on Legislative and Budget Process that I chair, or as a special assistant on the House Committee on Intelligence. All of these jobs she has done at one time or another or sometimes simultaneously.

Wendy brings a special brightness to whatever she touches, as all those who have worked with her knows. We wish her all success in her new endeavor. We will miss her a lot.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 221, nays 205, not voting 8, as follows:

NOT VOTING—8

Mr. SAWYER and Mr. BALDACCI changed their vote from ''yea'' to ''nay.''

Mr. HULSHOF changed his vote from ''nay'' to ''yea.''

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 474, I call up the conference report on the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 290) establishing the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2001, revising the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2000, and setting forth appropriate budgetary levels for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2005.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Pursuant to House Resolution 474, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of April 12, 2000, at page H2206.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) and the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH).

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me one more time run through what this budget proposal and outline does today, because it is, I believe, the right combination and the right direction for our country, although I will tell my colleagues right off the bat, it spends too much. But with what we are working with here, with a narrow margin and a lot of diverse interests, I think we have come up with a very good proposal.

First of all, for the second year in a row, the second time in 40 years, we are not going to touch the Social Security surplus. We are not going to take any money that is in surplus that comes in from the Social Security taxes to pay benefits for our seniors; we are not going to take it and spend it on any other government program. That means that that surplus is going to be available to fix Social Security for the baby boomers and their children. So we will keep our mitts off of that.

Secondly, we are going to strengthen Medicare with a prescription drug program and other Medicare reforms. We think that is important. Now, we hear people on the other side of the aisle criticizing our Medicare proposal. The President first of all cuts Medicare and secondly does not have a prescription drug program until 2003. I like to call it the ''somewhere over the rainbow program.'' We believe we ought to get Medicare reform and prescription drugs today, and we are going to be unveiling our plan to strengthen Medicare.

Thirdly, we are going to retire $1 trillion of the publicly held debt. Now, for so long around here, we talked about passing all this debt on to our children. We are going to pay $1 trillion of the publicly held debt down; and in fact we are on track, if we wanted to, to pay off the public debt by 2013. We are also going to strengthen education and science. Let me just make the point that some folks have said on this House floor that we do not do enough for Pell grants.

Well, we have had a 50 percent increase in Pell grant funding since 1995 when we took charge. As you can see, under a Democrat President and Democrat Congress, Pell grants were not a priority, but under the Republican Congress, starting in 1995, we have significantly increased Pell grants every single year.

Now, I know that some people say it is never enough, but the fact is that we do, in fact, want to accomplish these other missions, having to do with Medicare and retiring debt, and having a small tax cut at the same time. I will get to that in a second.

For those who do not think we make education a priority in this budget, they are wrong. We significantly increase education, primary and secondary, and we continue our march to make Pell grants more available. But I would suggest to many of my colleagues, why do we not have a few conversations with these university presidents who cannot seem to control costs that are going up in higher education by far faster than the rate of inflation? No matter what we do in this body, we cannot solve the problems of the cost of higher education until we get some help on the side of the people who run these institutions who have not been able to manage costs. But let there be no mistake, we have increased the amount of money for Pell grants in this Congress by 50 percent.

In addition to our support of education and basic science, a basic science program that we believe stresses programs like the human genome project, which offers so much hope for everyone in this country for a healthier life for our families; not just extend life, but improve the quality of life with the major breakthroughs that are occurring by the ability to code the human gene.

Mr. Speaker, they say that sometimes advanced technology is indistinguishable from magic, and the fact is when we think about efforts that go on today to decode the human gene system, it is just remarkable. We believe in basic science research in this House.

In addition to that, we are promoting tax fairness for families and farmers and seniors. Let me talk a little bit about this. We have a guarantee of $150 billion in tax cuts out of a $10 trillion budget. I can only define that as puny. The President today is going to say that that is too much of a tax cut. Well, of course it is for the President. He raises taxes. But to cut $150 billion, guaranteed, out of a $10 trillion budget, and to somehow say that is risky and out of line, well, sure it would be for somebody who thinks that we ought to just get our paychecks and send it all to the government. Of course, they think that is too much.

But I tell you, it is interesting when we have votes on things like repealing the earnings test tax, so that seniors can be independent and not get penalized on their Social Security, everybody votes for it. When we put the elimination of the marriage penalty tax on the floor, it is amazing the bipartisan support we get for that.

I will tell you another thing. We bring a bill up here to reduce the inheritance tax, the death tax, on farms, you watch the people that will vote on a bipartisan basis in this House, because, you know what? The day you die, you should not have to visit the IRS and the undertaker on the same day.

The fact is that we need more tax relief. I am disappointed we do not have four times as much tax relief in this bill, because the American people know that America is strengthened from the bottom up, not from the top down; that in this new era, bureaucracy and centralization is not the key. In this new era, it is the power of the individual to compute and to communicate and to re-knit our families together, in our schoolhouses, in our churches, in our synagogues, and community organizations. Let us strengthen them, not strengthen the power of the central government in a far-away place.

Finally, we are going to restore America's defense. We are going to restore it because we do not think that our soldiers and sailors and airmen ought to be in a position where they are on food stamps, where we have spread them out all over the world and not given them the tools they need to be an effective fighting force.

Let us not forget that providing for the common defense is the number one priority of the central government. We need to rebuild our Nation's defense, and, I hope at the same time, to reform our Nation's defense.

Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to come to this floor on a bipartisan basis and we ought to support a budget that saves Social Security, that strengthens Medicare and allows our seniors to have access to prescription drugs, that reduces the publicly held debt by $1 trillion, that gives our children a fighting chance to have a better tomorrow, that strengthens the support for education and basic science, that promotes tax fairness and reduces the tax burden on small business and families and family farms, and restores America's defense establishment. If we can accomplish all of that in one vote today, we should have no reluctance on a bipartisan basis being able to support this.

We should come here with a firm eye and send a message to the American people that we are starting to get it, we are starting to understand them. We want them to have the power, and we want them to have the responsibility to rebuild this country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT).

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, this conference report is essentially the same document as the resolution Republicans had on the floor last month. The Republican budget plan, if implemented, would threaten our record prosperity and undermine the values of middle-class families. This budget reflects the irresistible urge Republicans have to enact massive, irresponsible tax cuts above all other needs and priorities of the American people.

They give tax cuts a higher priority than extending the life of Social Security and Medicare, they are willing to sacrifice a real Medicare prescription drug plan for all seniors, and they are willing to make deep cuts in health and education in order to make their budget add up.

There is not one dime in this budget for Social Security and Medicare. Republicans' unwillingness to do anything to prevent the long-term insolvency of these programs that serve as the bedrock of retirement security for millions of Americans is inexplicable.

This budget pretends that it pays for a prescription drug plan. But, if you look closer, you will see there is not one penny appropriated for a drug plan. The money is ''reserved.'' It is a budget gimmick. It is not real. It will not happen. Talk is cheap; prescription drugs are not. This budget does not solve the problem.

This budget contains Draconian cuts in non-defense appropriations. Nearly $120 billion in cuts need to be made, and, if Republicans have their way, they will cut deep into important priorities like education, health, veterans' affairs, and the environment.

It is clear what the American people want. They want a fiscally responsible budget that will keep interest rates low and the economy growing, they want to strengthen Social Security and Medicare so that retirement security is protected for current and future retirees, they want a drug plan in Medicare that covers all seniors who want it, and they want to invest the surplus in their priorities, like making sure that children get the best public education we can provide.

Mr. Speaker, this budget did not get better in the conference. It probably got worse. It continues to ignore the voices of working families who have made it perfectly clear that they reject the efforts to bleed the surplus dry for political tax cuts instead of investing in Social Security, in Medicare, in paying down the debt, in ensuring the future of this great country.

Vote against this budget. We can do better than this.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. RYAN).

Mr. RYAN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I am a new Member of Congress, but I was not born yesterday, and I hear this rhetoric come to the floor of Congress every time we bring these budgets together. You hear the other side of the aisle castigate each other, as if the world is going to end tomorrow. You hear these inflammatory accusations of what is actually happening.

Mr. Speaker, I would like just to point to the facts. I would like to go over what is actually included in this budget, rather than inflammatory remarks about political posturing.

A budget outlines the priorities of a country. A budget outlines the priorities of Congress. That is what we are achieving in this budget, so it is more than just numbers.

What we are achieving in this budget is really truly historic. This budget, for the first time in 30 years, is stopping the raid on the Social Security trust fund.

Imagine that. In 1969, they passed a bill back then which gave the government the ability to dip into the Social Security trust fund, take the money out, both Republicans and Democrats did it, and then spend it on other government programs that have nothing to do with Social Security. We are putting an end to that. This budget is doing that.

This budget is also strengthening Medicare. It is reserving $40 billion to create a prescription drug plan for seniors beginning next year, not in the year 2003 as the President has been proposing. This budget retires the entire national public debt by the year 2013. It pays off our public debt by the year 2013. It supports education and science. It promotes tax fairness for families, for working families and for seniors, and it does restore our vital national defenses and the quality of life for our military personnel.

What I would like to guide you to is the Social Security part, because this is something that is very important to me. I am a younger Member of Congress, and I fundamentally believe that it is our obligation in this body to make Social Security a program that is not just solvent for this generation, but for the generation after that, which is the baby boomers, and the generation after that. So we have got to act now to prepare for the problems we have coming in Social Security.

Last year the President came to Congress in the State of the Union address and he said, ''Let's dedicate 62 percent of the Social Security surplus back to Social Security and take 38 percent out of Social Security to the government programs.'' He said he would take 38 percent out of Social Security to spend it on the government programs. That is the budget last year that the President brought to Congress. That was the culture in Washington, that was the way things were done.

We countered with a different proposal last year. 100 percent of the Social Security surplus should go to Social Security, and, by golly, we actually accomplished that. Last year, for the first time since 1969, we stopped taking money out of Social Security. This budget stops the raid on Social Security, not just for now, but forever, so we can pay off the debt and preserve Social Security for future generations.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, it is a joke to hear Members of the party that tried to blow up Social Security for 30 years now pretending that they are defending it.

I would like to just make two points: It has been suggested that our comments with respect to National Institutes of Health funding are inaccurate. Does the other side deny that they turned down the Senate amendment that would have added $1.6 billion to NIH?

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I have 1 minute. You can get your own time.

Mr. NUSSLE. You asked a question.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) controls the time.

Mr. OBEY. The gentleman understands the rules.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out with respect to Pell grants, their standard bearer, Richie Rich, or, excuse me, George Bush, said in my state last week when asked if he would help students who have such a huge debt overhang, ''Too bad, that is what a loan is. There is a lot of money available for students and families willing to go out and look for it. Some of you are just going to have to pay back, and that is the way it is.''

Do you disagree with that? Do you disagree with your standard bearer? You certainly cannot tell it from your budget resolution. You specifically eliminated the $600 million the Senate added for Pell grants. I think that makes clear where you stand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) controlling the time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH).

There was no objection.

□ 1200

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT).

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from South Carolina for yielding time to me. I also would like to state how much I appreciate the leadership of the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) in the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see the increase in the budget for research, especially for the National Science Foundation. This bodes well for the fate of the support of research in Congress this year.

Turning to the budget resolution overall, which is supposed to represent our national priorities, I would like to point out how skewed these priorities are contained in this blueprint that we have before us. They are not the ones that the families in New Jersey tell me about.

New Jersey families tell me that the things that are most important to them are shoring up social security, Medicare, education, environmental protection, and they see the benefit, the direct benefit, to them of paying down the national debt.

I would like to point out that the Democratic substitute would have devoted three times as much to paying down the debt as the one that is before us now. The majority's budget resolution has one overriding priority, exorbitant tax cuts at the expense of everything else.

In the Committee on the Budget, I offered an amendment that would have invested more resources in school construction, smaller class sizes, larger Pell grants. It was rejected in favor of enormous tax cuts.

We offered an amendment in committee to pay down our national debt faster. It was rejected in favor of tax cuts.

Earlier this week on the House floor Democrats offered motions, a motion that said simply, let us wait on the enormous tax cuts until Congress has had a chance to pass bipartisan legislation modernizing Medicare. That, too, was rejected.

Make no mistake, there are appropriate tax cuts. I myself have crossed the aisle to support marriage tax relief, estate tax cuts, and other reductions. But the irresponsible tax cuts contained in this legislation are a direct affront to our obligations, I mean the obligations of our society to provide a good education for all of our children, to give access to good health care for all, to protect our air and water and land for those who come after us. This headlong obsession with large tax cuts even puts at risk social security.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that only in Washington would a colleague have the motivation to say that a 2 percent reduction in taxes is an enormous tax cut.

We are going to have $11 trillion in revenue. We are cutting taxes $150 billion, and the gentleman calls that enormous?

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SUNUNU).

Mr. SUNUNU. Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker talked about priorities, that the priorities of this budget should be setting aside the social security surplus.

We set aside every penny of the social security surplus for the third year in a row. This was first proposed last year by Republicans in response to the President's suggestion that we should spend 40 percent of the social security surplus. That is simply wrong.

The speaker suggested that one of the priorities should be providing prescription drug coverage for Medicare beneficiaries. We set aside $40 billion to put together not just prescription drug coverage, but coverage that includes reforms that protect the options and choices of those senior citizens that currently have prescription drug coverage.

There was a suggestion that our priority should be paying down the debt. We do. We are on a glide path to pay down the debt by 2013.

The suggestion was that the priorities should be education and science, and they are. He pointed out specifically the additional funding for the National Science Foundation. Indeed, we also have over $1 billion that is focused toward the special education mandate that burdens cities and towns across the country.

We also have the kinds of tax fairness that the previous speaker suggested that he supported: eliminating the marriage penalty, getting rid of the social security earnings test, getting rid of death taxes for millions of our citizens.

Of course, we promote a strong national defense.

I want to talk specifically, though, about the record on debt reduction. The suggestion was that an alternative had three times the debt reduction that this resolution has. That is quite frankly a fiction, because this resolution has $1 trillion in debt relief over the next 5 years.

Was there any resolution brought to the floor that provides $3 trillion of debt relief over 5 years? Of course not. That is simply not possible.

However, we pay down $1 trillion over the next 5 years. That is not just a pie in the sky projection, because if we look at what we have already done, the achievement is quite significant: $50 billion in debt paid down in 1998, $88 billion in 1999, over $150 billion this fiscal year.

As we debate the budget here on the floor today, we are going to pay down over $170 billion in the next fiscal year, $450 billion in debt reduction over a 4-year period, an historic achievement. It keeps interest rates low, it keeps the economy on the right track.

Certainly we could keep penalizing seniors and pay down a little bit more debt, but that would be wrong. We could keep penalizing married couples and pay down a little more debt, but it would be wrong.

We have a proposal here that sets the right tone for the American economy and achieves the right goals for the taxpayers.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN).

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, the budget before us today is kind of like a decoy budget because it is like putting your duck decoys out in the pond. You have increased defense spending by $4 billion. Now we have locked that in. We know this September that money is now committed and there is no way of going back.

Then they are proposing to cut other spending by $7 billion. That is probably not going to happen because their own members on the Committee on Appropriations on the Republican side are not going to want to do it, but the decoy ploy has worked pretty well.

The budget is well crafted from the standpoint of getting a document done. It is not well crafted from a budget policy standpoint. I think at the end of the day it is going to be a failure, like the other budgets that the Republican Congress has tried to adopt.

We have heard a lot about the social security surplus. I will just say since I have been around here, since fiscal year 1995, the Republicans have been trying to spend the social security surplus on tax cuts. It was not until the economy under the Clinton administration had gotten so strong that we had such surpluses because of the Clinton recovery, and the political beating that they took for their attempts to do that, that now they are able to have this renewal of faith and say that, in fact we support social security and we are not going to touch it.

Their numbers do not add up. They say they want to increase NIH, but they rejected the amendment that the Senate had adopted to increase NIH. The way the function is in the budget, they do not leave any room to increase NIH.

They are going to cut community health, which is contrary to what the standardbearer said yesterday where he wants to increase community health by $4 billion. Their tax cut still works out to be about $800 billion over 10 years, which will probably push this budget, if it were to become law, into spending the social security surplus.

Finally, with respect to prescription drugs, we have yet to see the plan. It reminds me of when I was a boy, kind of, of President Nixon's secret plan, not yet President Nixon, to get us out of Vietnam. It never actually happened. I think that is probably true with the prescription drug plan. The budget resolution still says if, maybe, whenever, but it does not say when like it does with taxes.

We can pass this budget today. We will be here in September writing the real budget.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON).

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report is good if one is among the few who are well off and healthy, but it is bad if one is like so many of our citizens, they are struggling and facing poor health.

This conference report gives a $150 billion tax cut to the wealthy while, in reverse form, Robin-Hood like manner, it takes from the old, the young, the students, families, communities, especially farming communities.

This conference report cuts programs from agriculture at a time when indeed our agriculture communities are struggling. Discretionary spending for agriculture is cut. Resources needed to process claims and make timely loans are cut. Funds for programs to provide vital information to farmers are cut.

Over a 5-year period, this budget resolution cuts the purchasing power of agriculture by 9.1 percent over the next 5 years. It provides $500 less in income assistance to farmers than the House-passed resolution, and that was, indeed, inadequate.

Mr. Speaker, with this conference report education funds are cut, the Head Start program is cut, after school programs are cut, Pell grants are cut, and there is no school repair nor monies provided for more teachers.

Rural seniors indeed need help. Rural seniors on Medicare are over 50 percent more likely to lack prescription coverage for the entire year over urban beneficiaries.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report is good, indeed, for those who need no help. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to reject this conference report. It is bad for America.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, to set the record straight on agriculture, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS).

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, I beg to disagree with the gentlewoman, who is my dear friend and who I work with very closely on the Committee on Agriculture. But as a member of the Committee on the Budget, I just want folks involved in agriculture to know and understand that we worked very hard over the last 2 years to provide money in the budget for real, meaningful crop insurance reform; that we have also provided money in this year's budget in anticipation of a bad year in agriculture for more money to go to our farmers in the form of an additional AMTA payment.

The gentlewoman is probably right, we are going to cut out some of the bureaucratic function of Washington, DC with respect to agriculture, but this budget, which is the best budget our chairman has ever produced, in my opinion, in the 6 years that I have been here, is going to put more money in the pockets of farmers than any other budget we have ever passed in the 6 years that I have been here.

It is at a time when our farmers are in dire straits all across the country, whether it is Georgia or Iowa or whether it is New England. This particular budget is going to go to put more money in the pockets where it is needed.

Sure, it is probably going to take some money out of the bureaucracy, but we are going to put it where it is important.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT), the ranking member, a distinguished and thoughtful man, said earlier today that we are preparing to get the train wreck on schedule. That is what we have in front of us here is the schedule, where it is going to stop on the highway.

The reason I say that is that it is just like the one we did last year and the year before. It has built into it $100 billion worth of cuts in nondefense spending.

Most people say, what does that mean, nondefense spending? Well, I mean FBI agents, they want to cut some of those, or drug enforcement agents, they want to cut them, or maybe it is Pell grants they want to cut, or the National Institutes of Health. That is a nondefense area. There are $100 billion in cuts.

If Members think the level out there right now is too high, we have too many FBI agents, too much at the National Institutes of Health, then Members will think this is a real nice budget.

The only way they are going to get around that is that they are going to have to go over and get that social security money that is sitting there. They say, we have covered it, it is all protected, we have it in a lockbox. But all we have to do is come out here and pass a resolution on the floor and it is gone. It is a lockbox with a hole in the bottom. So we are looking at a budget that has built into it all the seeds of not passing the appropriations acts, and winding up being back here in September, 2 months before the election.

Mr. Speaker, somebody is going to get up here, and I have listened to the debate so far and I have never heard this phrase yet, because it is the favorite Republican phrase, where are we going to find that $100 billion? Fraud, waste, and abuse. That is the one, we get out here and beat our breast, waste, fraud and abuse.

When we start looking at what that really means, it is the Department of Social Health Services.

The Department of Human Services goes out to hospitals in our districts and starts going through the records of the doctors and the hospitals, and the place is flooded with Members back here saying we have to give them back that money.

So when one thinks they are going to find $100 billion in fraud, waste and abuse, they ought to think very carefully about that. What is going to happen is in September the election will be upon us, the Republicans will cave to the President of the United States, and we will get a decent budget.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE).

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest five reasons why our colleagues should vote against this Republican budget resolution.

The first reason is that it contains indiscriminate and risky tax cuts that, under realistic assumptions about defense and nondefense spending, will take up more than the available non-Social Security surplus over the next 5 years. The tax cut in this budget resolution, $175 billion over 5 years, exceeds the total non-Social Security surplus forecast by the Congressional Budget Office under an assumption of discretionary spending frozen at inflation-adjusted levels.

Reason number two, it proposes to significantly undercut nondefense discretionary programs that Americans depend on. Over 5 years, the Republican plan would cut nondefense programs by $122 billion below inflation adjusted levels. That would mean, for example, Pell grants for 316,000 fewer students. It would eliminate Head Start for more than 40,000 children.

Reason number three, the Republican plan does nothing to extend the solvency of Medicare and Social Security. We ought to be using a portion of our surpluses to extend the solvency of these programs, which would have the important added benefit of locking in additional debt reduction.

Reason number four, under the Republican budget resolution's unrealistic spending targets, we are once again headed toward an end-of-the-session train wreck and efforts to circumvent the budget process through new and improved gimmicks. Appropriations leaders in both parties have already given warning that they may not be able to produce passable appropriations bills this year under this budget resolution's spending limits. This is simply more evidence that it is not really the budget process that is out of whack around here. What is needed is a responsible use of that process and a realistic budget resolution.

Finally, reason number five, a vote for this budget resolution would send a message to the American people that the cynicism they feel about Congress and their cynicism about the budget process are, alas, justified. We should be sending our constituents a positive message that in a time of budget surpluses we are going to invest in the future of this country, through affordable and targeted tax cuts, through continued debt reduction, and through adequately funding those programs on which older Americans and working Americans and the most vulnerable among us depend.

Take the responsible course. I urge my colleagues, vote against this irresponsible budget resolution.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT), the Speaker of the House.

Mr. HASTERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this budget conference report, and I applaud the work of the Committee on the Budget. For the second year in a row, under the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH), the Committee on the Budget has produced a quality work on time. If the House will look at this, it is the first time in the history of the House that we have met this budget on time ever.

When the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) first became budget chairman, our government's finances were a mess. We had high taxes. We had expanding government. We had a huge debt and a budget deficit of $200 billion, and I quote the administration, ''as far as the eye could see.'' Today we have a responsible and a balanced budget which keeps America on the right track. Today we have a goal of balancing the budget, paying down the debt, securing Social Security; and, yes, we hear all the ifs on the other side, but that is our goal, that is our target and this budget gets us there.

Those who would like to spend more are not keeping their eye on the target, which is balancing the budget, paying down the debt, protecting Social Security. Also, besides protecting Social Security in this budget, the money that goes into Social Security is reserved for Social Security. We pay down $1 trillion of debt over the next 5 years, $1 trillion of debt. We modernize Medicare by providing $40 billion for a prescription drug benefit so no senior should be forced to choose between putting food on the table or taking life saving prescription drugs.

We provide additional educational spending; additional educational spending. I believe our goal is simple when it comes to education, that every child in this country deserves an opportunity to go to a good school.

We improve our national security by giving our men and women in uniform the resources they need to protect America from the dangerous world outside. We include tax fairness in this common sense budget. We believe it is morally wrong to penalize young couples who want to get married, up to $1,500, simply because they are married as opposed to being single. We believe it is unfair to tax people just because they die, and we believe that the Tax Code must encourage people to save for their children's future education.

Today, my friends, we continue to keep this Nation on the right track. We have balanced the budget; and we have a balanced, responsible approach to govern.

I commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) for his hard work on this budget, to the Committee on the Budget and to this institution and to the American people for the many years of his service. I would say thanks to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH).

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately this budget is not about the past. It is about the future. Any way we want to explain it, the centerpiece of this budget resolution today is a massive tax cut at the expense of debt reduction, Social Security, agriculture and defense. The numbers do not lie.

It is gratifying to hear my friends on the other side adopting the Blue Dog rhetoric about the importance of paying off the debt. I only wished their resolution carried through on what they say. Once they take away all the double counting in this resolution, it would leave only $12 billion of the non-Social Security surplus, approximately 8 percent, for debt reduction over the next 5 years. That is $73 billion less than the Blue Dog budget and $430 billion less debt reduction over the next 10 years, and that is a fact. No rhetoric is going to change that.

I wish they paid more attention to what the tax cut does in 2010 to 2014 when the Social Security system is going to need this money. This budget and this tax cut, if it is implemented, which fortunately I do not believe it will be, will wreck the Social Security program beginning in 2014, and that is irresponsible.

Also, the budget provides money for another short-term agricultural relief package, which we all appreciate; but why did we not take the opportunity, as the Blue Dog budget suggested, of having a 5-year, fix-the-policy, look-at-the-baseline problem? Why are we doing a 1-year fix again? Why can we not find the support on both sides of the aisle to match our rhetoric with the needs of the country?

When we look at the agricultural needs today, this budget comes up tremendously short.

The American people continue to tell us that paying off the debt should be our first priority using the budget surplus. Over and over and over they tell us that. Unfortunately, this budget continues to ignore this message from the American people, and I am very disappointed that once again we have not been able to find a responsible middle ground, but that is what this is all about. If the priorities are a massive tax cut at the expense of debt reduction, Social Security, agriculture and defense, vote for this resolution.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, somebody very wise once said that everybody is entitled to their own opinion but not their own version of the facts. We need to get the facts down here today because the one thing we owe to the public is to have an open and honest debate about exactly what we are doing.

The major fact here that is going unstated is the 10-year price tag associated with this tax cut. Now today there is the admission that we are talking about $175 billion tax cut over 5 years. Last year we debated a $792 billion tax cut over 10 years that was fiscally irresponsible and wildly unpopular, rejected by the American public. By the math we have done over here, what we are debating today, but we are not willing to say, is an $875 billion tax cut over 10 years. It undermines everything that has been said on this floor about paying down the debt and spending.

I would be happy to yield to the chairman of the House Committee on the Budget if he wants to correct me and tell us what the real price tag is over 10 years on this tax cut. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH), I would be happy to yield to him if he would like to tell me what the price tag is over 10 years on the tax cut contemplated by this budget resolution we are going to vote on.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, it is our job to come up with a 5-year number. We believe that the 10-year number will fit. I also want to commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS) for voting for the tax cuts that we have brought to this floor, particularly eliminating the tax on the senior citizens. So it would be good if we could even bring a couple more to the floor that he would vote for, but the point is that we believe it will fit and we will be able to have tax relief plus save Social Security.

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, this remains the dirty little secret about this budget resolution, that we do not have the 10-year price tag associated with the tax cut, and I stand on my assertion it is an $875 billion tax cut which undermines what should be our Nation's highest priority, paying down the debt.

In 1999, we spent $230 billion on interest payments alone on this $3.47 trillion Federal debt. That is 13 percent of our total spending. It is more than we spend on Medicare. It is slightly less than what we spend on national defense. Paying down the Federal debt should be our highest priority. It contributes to lower interest rates. It allows us to preserve the solvency of Social Security and Medicare for the retirement of the baby boomers, and we cannot do that and sustain an $875 billion tax cut. We ought to be willing to talk about it. We ought to be honest with the American public. We ought to do responsible tax cuts, but we ought to pay down the Federal debt first.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPENCE), the chairman of the House Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the fiscal year 2001 budget resolution conference report.

This budget resolution provides $4.5 billion more for national defense than the level requested by the President. With this budget resolution, Congress will have increased the President's defense budget request for over 6 years in a row by a total of nearly $50 billion.

While this is a significant amount of money, it is not enough to offset the drastic cuts in defense we have experienced during the tenure of this administration.

Underscoring this point, the military service chiefs testified before our committee earlier this year that the President's budget, even with a significant increase, still leaves more than $84 billion short over the next 5 years, including a $15.5 billion shortfall in fiscal year 2001.

The budget resolution before us will once again allow us in Congress to step up to the plate. With these additional funds, the Committee on Armed Services has already begun to mark up the fiscal year 2001 defense authorization bill and to address the broad range of shortfalls that result from the President's request, serious shortfalls in military health care, modernization, readiness, and quality of life programs.

I want to thank the leadership for their support in arriving at this defense number; but especially I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. LEWIS), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURTHA), the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. SKELTON), and the 285 other Members who joined with me in passing the amendment to the supplemental appropriations bill. Now is the time to carry through and protect this money. We have it in the budget.

The conference report before us, while not providing everything that is needed, does provide another significant installment payment by Congress toward restoring our military to the level of excellence that the American people expect and that national security requires.

I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this conference report.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR).

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) for his work on this resolution. I thank my colleagues on this side of the aisle for all of their work.

Unfortunately, I do not think this measures up. This budget is an important document, not because of what it says, but because of what it fails to do. This budget could have provided an opportunity to begin to pay down the national debt, but it will not. This budget could have been an opportunity to do some things to strengthen Social Security, but it will not. This budget resolution could have been a chance to provide some sensible Medicare prescription drug benefits for older Americans. It does not do that either.

Of course, it would be one thing if all this resolution did was to ignore the problems facing American families. But the problem here is that it just adds to their problems. It adds to them by failing to extend the solvency of the trust fund by one single day. In fact, this budget plan would even cut the funds Social Security and Medicare needs to perform some basic administrative functions to make it work.

Now, there is one group of Americans in this budget who will get some special help. It is the wealthy who stand to gain hundreds of billions of dollars from this budget.

If this all sounds familiar, it should. Because it is the same budget the leadership tried to sell us last year. It is, in fact, the same platform that George W. Bush is trying to sell the American people this year. It did not make sense then, and it does not now.

America does not need a huge tax cut for the wealthiest individuals in our society. We need a budget that allows us to, one, pay down that debt. With that interest savings we accrue by paying down that debt, strengthen Social Security, strengthen Medicare, invest in education, and invest in prescription drug care for our seniors. We need a budget that would move this country into the future. This budget, I regret to say, throws us back into the past.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, before yielding, can I just reaffirm how much time is remaining on each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS) has 9¾ minutes remaining. The gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) has 8½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE).

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Connecticut for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, while I think I understand what the tactic is on the other side. We have heard about train wrecks today. In fact, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR), the distinguished minority whip, came in and talked about how this is not going to work, how it does not mean the priority. We have heard about the Democrats rushing to the floor saying that, oh, at the end of the year, there is going to be a train wreck.

Well, if there is a train wreck, Mr. Speaker, it is for one reason. It is because the Democrats are in an election year, and they are running for their lives. They are slapping on the camouflage, and they are sneaking up, they are crawling up that hill, going toward that railroad track, and they are planting the dynamite. They are planting the demolition chargers, and they are trying to blow it all up because they know one thing. If this train makes it to the station, they lose.

That is unfortunate. Because in America, it does not have to be win-lose. It can be win-win. When we had our conversation with America, when we went to town meetings across the country, Americans in Iowa, Americans in Minnesota, in Connecticut, in Ohio, South Carolina, all across the Nation said that they wanted to have some goals in this budget put firmly in place.

Protect 100 percent of Social Security. The gentleman form Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) said it did not do that. What is he reading? What is he reading? Strengthen Medicare with prescription drugs. Forty billion dollars, the first time we have ever set up a Medicare lockbox to set aside $40 billion to do that. The previous speaker says it does not do that. What is he reading? Who is he listening to? Who is writing his speeches these days?

At least read the document that my colleagues are going to be voting on today. It not only provides 100 percent set-aside for Social Security so that it is not touched, the first time we have been able to accomplish that, the first time in a row that we have been able to accomplish that; but, under Medicare, we not only set aside $40 billion, but we have a prescription drug benefit.

Now, it is not the one they want. Of course, Democrats have a different philosophy of the way prescription drug benefits ought to be administered. They say, let the government take it over. Give it all to the Health Care Finance and Administration, let them write the plan.

Of course Republicans have a little bit different idea. We say we do not trust the government to run this health care system very well. It has not done a good job. Let us look for some free market ways of doing it. So there is a difference of opinion. But do not say we do not have it when we have it.

Then of course we retire the debt by 2013. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BONIOR) said there is no debt retirement. Again, what is he reading? Three trillion dollars of debt retirement as a result of this bill, and we have to be proud of that, all of us, again, in a win-win situation. Strengthen support for education.

There has been talk today about NIH cuts. There is a $1 billion increase for NIH the last 2 years alone, 13 percent the first, 14 percent the second. Increases in NIH funding, not cuts. So let us vote for this plan, but it does the things that America wants, and it is win-win.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. WEYGAND).

Mr. WEYGAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank our ranking member for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am rising to oppose this resolution and this piece of legislation simply because we have not set our priorities straight.

There will be a lot of rhetoric today about some of the nuances of the bill and the conference report. There will be a lot of rhetoric about the little things that are in there. But let us talk about the broad stroke, the very large issues of priority.

In this bill, the Republicans have determined that their priority is a $175 billion tax cut. They do not hide that. They show that in the full light of the day. They say this is what we want. They also have said what we want is absolutely no money for school reconstruction, absolutely no money to reduce our classroom size, absolutely no money that is truly dedicated to prescription drugs.

Yes, there is some semblance of money that is in there. But if one reads the true fine line, one will find that there is really no money there for any one of those priority items.

Education and health care are simply smoke and mirrors. Tax cuts, they have the full force of law under this resolution, under this conference report. They would prefer to spend the $175 billion over the next 5 years, $800 billion over the next 10 years for tax cuts, but not for prescription drugs, not for reducing our classroom size, or not reconstructing our schools, as most Americans, most Americans, want to have.

Yes, this bill is about priorities. It is about leadership. It is about what the people of America want and do not need. What they do not need are the tax cuts. What they do need are prescription drugs, reconstruction of our schools, and smaller classroom size.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote against this conference report.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) has 6½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this budget resolution was not produced until late last night; and this morning, we found it on our doorsteps. Some Members who have had only a cursory opportunity to look it over may think, well, they have touched it up here, tuned it up here. This resolution runs better than the last vehicle that left the House. But before my colleagues buy it, let me suggest we look under the hood.

It is true that, in this resolution, they have mitigated the unrealistic reduction in nondefense spending that they assumed in the last one, but it is only at the margin. This resolution still requires $121.5 billion real reduction in nondefense discretionary spending. This is not just another number among hundreds of numbers in the documents before us that we can hit or miss with impunity. This whole budget turns on this unrealistic assumption.

If we do not attain it, if we do not cut nondefense discretionary spending by 9.8 percent, on average, over the next 5 years, there is no surplus. There is no debt reduction. The budget is in danger of being in deficit again.

This chart right here in technicolor tells us why. For the last 5 years, if we look on the far side of the chart, we will see that, even though we had a deficit during much of that period of time, and even though we had spending caps on discretionary spending, under Republican dominion here in the House and the Senate, nondefense discretionary spending still grew by 2.5 percent above the rate of inflation.

Now, what we are asked to believe in this resolution is that we can reverse that trend, and in an era of surpluses, not deficits, and without any spending caps, because there is no mechanism for enforcement here, no spending caps extended in this budget, no sequestration, with no enforcement mechanism, we can go from 5 years with real spending growing 2.5 percent a year to 5 years where it declines 9.8 percent on the average over 5 years. I do not believe it will happen. I am not saying it is not possible. I do not believe it. It puts the budget in peril if it does not happen.

Look, tax cuts, same thing. The last time this budget was on the floor, they were proposing a tax cut of at least $200 billion. Here I have to say I think our Republican colleagues listened. Because we came to the floor of the House, and we took their spending numbers and their tax cuts, and we combined them, integrated them into one chart over 5 years. We show it by a chart here in the well of the House that, if this budget were adopted in 1 year, the surplus would vanish, it would be wiped out in 1 year. We challenged our colleagues to counter if we were wrong, and they never countered. They never corrected the numbers. When the debate closed, our chart stood.

I said, and I think the analogy is appropriate, they are going to put the budget on thin ice. No cushion. If anything happens, any reversal in the economy occurs, we are back in deficit, borrowing from Social Security again.

Well, this budget resolution is a bit less risky. That is because, instead of having $200 billion in tax cuts, it has $175 billion in tax cuts. But here is the bottom line on this chart. We have redone the chart. Look at the bottom line. One will see the numbers are very, very small. There is precious little cushion left, if my colleagues pass this resolution, for any kind of downturn in the economy or for the eventuality that $121 billion in real reduction and discretionary spending simply cannot be attained.

Let me tell my colleagues one other thing that is risky about this budget. There is a certain slight of hand here, as the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS) called it a minute ago, it is a dirty little secret. Last year, we had a 10-year price tag. Last year we very honestly ran out the projections of the budget, including the tax cut, over 10 years.

This year, we only have a 5-year projection. Why is that? Because in the first 5 years, the tax cuts seem much, much more modest. This budget, unlike last year's, only goes out 5 years, and it seems that we have got $175 billion tax cut.

But if we run that over 10 years, and if we use the same rate at which last year's proposed tax cut expanded, by our calculation, the total tax cut with debt service adjustment is $929 billion, and look what happens. It is a small number, yes, but we are back in the red again. This budget brings back the deficit.

That is why we say it is risky. After all we have done to get rid of the deficit, that is why we say it is risky.

Let us take Medicare. The gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) here said, what are they reading? I will tell the gentleman what we are reading. We are reading their budget resolution. It has got two different paragraphs. Section 214 and section 215, they say different things. A conference report is supposed to reach agreement between the House and the Senate, but the Senate has one provision and my colleagues have another provision.

Instead of using this time-honored device we call reconciliation, one tool that is unique to the Committee on the Budget to get something done. What do they do? They say, here Committee on Ways and Means, here is $40 billion we are putting aside in reserve fund if you can use it, if you can come up with a prescription drug bill and structurally reform Medicare, then you can report a bill at some particular point in time. No dates are named.

Go back to our resolution, and we show one how to do it. So we do a prescription drug benefit. We say to the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Commerce, go do it.

I do not have time to go through the other details. We have not had time to do it in a budget resolution. But let me tell my colleagues something, look at military health care. We tried to put a little bit of money in there to do something for the retirees, $5.4 billion over the next 5 years. Do my colleagues know what they provide? $400 million.

The Speaker was here talking about education. Well, we looked up the numbers on education. We have got $4.8 billion for next year. They have got a cut in education below a freeze for next year.

Health care, which the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) was talking about. Look at function 550. They are $900 million below a freeze. We are above a freeze for health care.

So for all these reasons this budget resolution ought to be voted down. It ought to be sent back to a real conference where we can do debt reduction, do tax relief, do realistic spending levels, do Medicare prescription drugs, extend the life of Medicare and Social Security.

We can do it better, and we ought to do it better. Vote this resolution down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). All time for the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) has expired.

Does the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) reclaim his time?

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) reclaims his time and yields 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS).

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, let me just say to the ranking member that I was here last year and the year before, and I say to my colleagues that every one of his arguments he has used almost in the same format every year.

Now, what is interesting about his argument this year, it is all predicated upon a 10-year projection. But this is not a 10-year projection. We are talking about 5 years.

The gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS) talked about a dirty little secret. There is no dirty little secret. This tax cut is less than 2 percent. Less than 2 percent. We do not even have accuracy charts around here in Congress that we can guaranty anything less than 2 percent. And for the gentleman to project out on his chart for 10 years, that it is possibly a deficit of $1 billion, is really pushing the numbers.

When we look at this tax cut for Americans, what are the components? It is a marriage penalty tax, a death tax, an education savings account, health care deductibility, community renewal, and pension reform. All these things are for Americans. So I urge passage.

Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak in favor of the budget resolution conference report which outlines our spending priorities for fiscal year 2001.

First of all it provides $150 billion in tax cuts, including repeal of the marriage-penalty tax and small business tax relief. Since Small Businesses produce so many new jobs and are responsible for the state of our economy, we need to make sure this prosperity continues.

This is long overdue and I wholeheartedly support providing America's working men and women the opportunity to keep more of their hard earned dollars.

The fiscal year 2001 Budget Resolution also protects the Social Security surplus by creating a "lock box" and dedicates the $161 billion surplus to the Social Security Trust Fund.

This budget also sets aside $40 billion for Medicare reform and to fund a prescription drug benefit. We should give seniors the same choices that other Americans already have, including Members of Congress and the President.

I believe that we must pay down the debt and this budget resolution dedicates $1 trillion over the next five years toward that end. What's more, by 2013 it will be completely eliminated.

It is vital that the men and women who serve our country are fully equipped and it is our responsibility to make sure that our military is no longer asked to carry out its duties without the necessary resources. The defense budget is increased by $20 billion for fiscal year 2001.

When the men and women who defend our country return home we must not forget them. That is why we have funded the VA at the level requested by he Veterans Committee, which represents $100 million for health care over the President's VA budget proposal.

To sum it up, this budget resolution taxes less, spends less, places restraints on government growth, provides for a strong defense, protects 100 percent of Social Security surplus and reduces the debt.

This is a budget that we can all be proud of and I urge my colleagues to vote for this conference report.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I want to congratulate him on the budget work that he has done over the last number of years.

What we are now taking a look at is we are taking a look at a budget that is not going to steal from Social Security. But perhaps one of the most important things about this budget is that we reinvest in education. We reinvest in education in a way that will make an impact for our kids.

What we do is we take dollars away from a Washington bureaucracy, and we move the rules and regulations away from the process and target getting dollars back to our children. We get the dollars into the classroom. We get the dollars into a school district where the people who are making the decisions for our kids and for the learning process are the people that know the names of our kids. But more importantly, not only do they know the names of our kids, they also know the needs of our kids. They know the needs of the community and the school district.

So what we will get is we will get more effective decision-making, we will get more dollars to the classroom where they actually make a difference.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT).

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I also thank him not only for what he has done for this budget but what he has done over the years to bring some fiscal sanity to this city.

I can remember when I was back in the State legislature and we would marvel at how much the Federal budget would go up every year. It seemed like back in the 1980s that we were talking about budgets going up double, triple, and sometimes almost quadruple the inflation rate. It was no wonder they were piling deficits upon deficits.

Now, we have heard a lot of interesting arguments this morning, but John Adams said something pretty powerful about 200 years ago. He said facts are stubborn things. And if people forget everything else that has been said today, I hope they will remember this: in the fiscal year that we are in today we are going to spend $1,780 billion. In my opinion, that is too much. Under this budget, we are going to spend $1,830 billion. I still believe that is too much. But more importantly, that means that total spending will only increase this year by 2.8 percent. That is less than the inflation rate, and it is almost half the rate the average family budget will go up.

That is a giant step in the right direction. This is a good budget, and I hope the Members will join me in supporting it.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 3¾ minutes.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to just take a moment and, before I finish with the policy, I would like to just spend a few minutes to say that any person who is trying to carry out a program, to run a committee, a committee chairman, cannot be successful without staff. They are the ones who are the least recognized and the hardest working of all the people here.

I do not want to leave anyone out, and I hope I have not, but I wanted to thank Greg Hampton, who came to my congressional office at the Committee on the Budget, the same with Mike Lofgren. Mike an expert on defense, Greg on health care. Jim Bates, who I do not see on the House floor, is a guy who worked until 2, 3 o'clock in the morning to try to be able to make sure that everything, all the T's were crossed and all the I's were dotted and that we followed all the parliamentary procedures. He has a very tough job. And Pat Knudsen, who was in charge of so many activities, including just being able to put together our communication program. And a very special ''thank you'' to my friend and staff director Wayne Struble. I have never known anybody who has come to this government with more conviction, more determination, and more absolute and total consistency to stay on a path to try to make this country a little better.

Now, they never get recognized; and I want their parents to know how important they were to me. They made me a much better leader because of the work that they put in. Oftentimes they are neglected, but they are not neglected with me.

Secondly, I was trying to think back to the members of the Committee on the Budget that have been with me since 1973. I think the gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER), who had contributed a great amount; and to my dear friend, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS), who has sat there through thick and thin, has been on this Committee on the Budget since 1995; and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA), my great friend, who actually went off in order to accommodate another member for a short period of time. It goes without saying that without their support, guidance, and advice we would not have been as effective.

I want to just close the debate by just suggesting that we get some bipartisan support for this product. I think it is a good product. It will allow us ultimately to have the money that we need in order to be able to fix Social Security for three generations.

We will be able to strengthen Medicare and pay down that trillion dollars in the publicly held debt, provide that tax relief, try to provide some more resources for education, and of course rebuild America's defense.

I would be remiss, by the way, if I did not take a second to thank my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HOBSON), who came on the floor and who sat with me in the tough times when we were trying to put these budgets together and make them work.

So let me just say to the membership today, I think we have a great opportunity to make another down payment on our goals. We have a long way to go, but I think we have come a long way and would ask for support for the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to recognize my staff, just as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH), has, before we go to the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for allowing me this opportunity.

Since January, when the budget first began emerging from the White House, through last night, our staff, which is a small staff because we are the minority staff, has worked diligently and really performed Herculean efforts to stay on top of the budget, and I could not ask for more and the House could not either.

My chief of staff is Tom Kahn. Richard Kogan is our policy director. Hugh Brady, Susan Warner, Lisa Irving, Jim Klumpner, Sarah Abernathy, Andrea Weathers, Sheila McDowell, Linda Bywaters, Sandy Clark, Kimberly Overbeek, Pepper Santalucia, Sarah Day, an intern from Winthrop College, and Joseph Ortiz. As I said, they have put in Herculean efforts, wonderful work on the budget; and without them we simply could not have mounted the arguments that we have on the floor.

I thank the gentleman very much for giving me the opportunity to recognize them for their wonderful work.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report on the concurrent budget resolution for Fiscal Year 2001. As has been the case with previous budget resolutions, this budget not only tests the bounds of fiscal reality, but fails the test of fiscal prudence and priority. We all know that as soon as the appropriations process begins in earnest and the depth of the necessary cuts to non-defense programs come into focus, this budget will become irrelevant.

The Majority has chosen to spend virtually all of the budget surplus on tax cuts and on a $21 billion increase to defense spending, while requiring cuts of $7 billion below a freeze in Fiscal Year 2001 in other programs and $121.5 billion below inflation over 5 years. If enacted, this would result in 500 fewer FBI agents, 600 fewer DEA agents, 40,000 fewer kids in Head Start and 300,000 fewer students receiving Pell Grants to go to college. We would also have to cut community development and scale back funding increases for the National Institutes of Health.

Like the House-passed resolution, and other Republican budgets, this proposed budget sacrifices everything in the name of giving the largest possible tax cuts without doing anything to address the long-term needs of Social Security or Medicare. The solvency of Social Security and Medicare are in no way enhanced. Recall that the Democratic alternative budget, which all my Republican colleagues voted against, extended the life of Social Security by as much as 15 years and the life of Medicare by as much as 10 years.

With respect to debt reduction, the conference agreement devotes 8 percent (a mere $12 billion) of the on-budget surplus, over a five-year period, to paying down the national debt. Again, recall that the House Democratic substitute devoted 40 percent of the on-budget surplus to debt reduction over 10 years. When the Republicans claim to care about paying down our nation debt, clearly they are being disingenuous. While the Republicans claim that they will not spend any of the Social Security Surplus, their history indicates otherwise. Since gaining the Majority in 1995, Republican budgets have increased discretionary spending greater than the rate of inflation. If they were to enact their massive tax cut and increase spending as they always have, their budget would eat into the Social Security Surplus and add to the national debt.

Turning to a voluntary prescription drug benefit for Medicare beneficiaries, I am dismayed that Republicans have explicitly provided for tax cuts, particularly for the highest income bracket, but have done nothing to make definite their plans for a Medicare prescription drug benefit. While Medicare has been a tremendously successful program in providing health care for senior citizens and a better quality of life, the rising use and cost of prescription drugs demands congressional action. Prescription drugs now account for about one-sixth of all out-of-pocket heath spending by the elderly. The percent of beneficiaries without coverage who cannot afford to buy their medicine is about five times higher than those with coverage, ten percent compared to two percent. Almost 40 percent of those over age 85 do not have prescription drug coverage. The Republican budget only says there will be a benefit 'if' or 'when' the Ways and Means Committee proposes a plan.

While I opposed the conference report, I am pleased that it includes language from the amendment that I offered with Congresswoman BALDWIN to Republicans included language I proposed to increase access to Medicaid CHIP and fund access to Medicaid coverage for uninsured women diagnosed with breast cancer. In my state of Texas, there are more than 800,000 Medicaid-eligible kids who are not enrolled in the program but still get sick, and we have more uninsured women, whom if they contract breast cancer, are in dire straits.

Taken all together, the only reasonable conclusion I can arrive at is that the Republicans have once again thrown together a haphazard budget scheme that is not fiscally sound, does not pay down the debt, does not extend the life of Social Security or Medicare and provides no meaningful prescription drug benefit. For these reasons, I am compelled to vote against H. Con. Res. 290.

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to this fiscally irresponsible budget resolution conference agreement. Not only is this agreement bad fiscal policy, but it is flawed economic strategy. America has emerged from an era of struggling to eliminate billion-dollar deficits into a new age of setting priorities for an expanding budget surplus. Instead of seizing the opportunity to help American families prepare for the future, this budget resolution proposes deep cuts in domestic programs to make room for a fiscally irresponsible tax cut that could force us to return to spending the Social Security trust fund.

We owe it to our nation's seniors to enact a Medicare prescription drug plan this year. Prescription drugs now account for about one-sixth of all out-of-pocket health spending by the elderly. Ensuring our seniors can afford the prescription drugs they need should be a higher priority than providing tax relief to the wealthiest members of our society.

This conference agreement allows a prescription drug benefit of up to $40 billion over five years but only if accompanied by unspecified Medicare "reforms." Under this agreement, the Republicans have chosen to hold the prescription drug benefit hostage to unspecified Medicare reforms which may or may not be enacted. By contrast, the Democratic alternative budget required that a full $40 billion be devoted to a prescription drug benefit.

We should be focusing on taking care of our elderly, ensuring the long term solvency of Social Security and Medicare, educating our children and paying down the national debt. This agreement sacrifices these national priorities for a massive tax cut. Passing such an irresponsible budget resolution will force the Appropriations Committee to either invent gimmicks that make a sham of the entire budget process or produce bills with significant deficits in funding. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to reject this conference agreement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

Pursuant to clause 10 of rule XX, the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 220, nays 208, not voting 7, as follows:

Ms. DANNER and Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. BARTON of Texas changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on House Concurrent Resolution 290.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

MAKING IN ORDER AT ANY TIME CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3615, RURAL LOCAL BROADCAST SIGNAL ACT

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at any time without intervention of any point of order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 3615) to amend the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 to ensure improved access to the signals of local television stations by multichannel video providers to all households which desire such service in unserved and underserved rural areas by December 31, 2006; that the bill be considered as read for amendment; that in lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committees on Agriculture and Commerce now printed in the bill, the amendment in the nature of a substitute that I have placed at the desk be considered as read and adopted; that the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) 1 hour of debate on the bill, as amended, equally divided among and controlled by the chairmen and ranking minority members of the Committees on Agriculture and Commerce; and (2) one motion to recommit with or without instructions; and that House Resolution 475 be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MAKING IN ORDER AT ANY TIME CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3439, RADIO BROADCASTING PRESERVATION ACT OF 2000

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at any time for the Speaker, as though pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, to declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3439) to prohibit the Federal Communications Commission from establishing rules authorizing the operation of new, low power FM radio stations and that consideration of the bill proceed according to the following order: (1) the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with; (2) general debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed 1 hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce; (3) the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Commerce now printed in the bill shall be considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule and shall be considered as read; (4) points of order against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute for failure to comply with clause 7 of rule XVI are waived; (5) during consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read; (6) the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may: (1) postpone until a time during further consideration in the Committee of the Whole a request for a recorded vote on any amendment, and (2) reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on any postponed question that follows another electronic vote without intervening business, provided that the minimum time for electronic voting on the first in any series of questions shall be 15 minutes; (7) at the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute; (8) the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions; and that House Resolution 472 be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

LAYING ON TABLE HOUSE RESOLUTIONS 356, 375, 382, AND 383

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the following resolutions be laid on the table: H. Res. 356; H. Res. 375; H. Res. 382; and H. Res. 383.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

DATE CERTAIN TAX CODE REPLACEMENT ACT

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 473 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 473

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 4199) to terminate the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. The bill shall be considered as read for amendment. An amendment in the nature of a substitute consisting of the text of H.R. 4230 shall be considered as adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill, as amended, to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate on the bill, as amended, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means; and (2) one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, this is a customary rule for Tax Code-related legislation. It provides for the consideration of H.R. 4199, the Date Certain Tax Code Replacement Act. H.Res. 473 provides that the bill be considered as read and that the text of H.R. 4230 shall be considered as adopted. The rule further provides for 1 hour of general debate equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions, as is the right of minority Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, what we have learned after 87 years of the current system is this: if we had sat down at the beginning of 1913 and asked ourselves how could we build a tax system that would punish people for earning and working hard, a system that would be obstructive of capital formation, we could not have done a better job. Our tax system is the largest impediment to people moving from the first rung of the economic ladder to the second, because the harder you work, the more you save, the more you invest, the more we take. It is a system that is inefficient. We have seen testimony from the Kemp Commission to Harvard studies that says for a small business man or woman to comply with the code and to collect and remit $1 in business income taxes, it costs them anywhere from $4 to $7.

The current code is not understandable. Our own IRS tells us that if you call the IRS for help in filling out your own tax return, 25 percent of the answers they give you will be given in error. Over 50 percent of Americans have to pay others to decipher the Tax Code and do their taxes for them. In an effort to show how complex the IRS code has become, Money magazine created a fictional American family and asked tax professionals to prepare an IRS tax return. Incredibly, every one of the tax professionals came up with a different tax total, and not one of the tax professionals calculated what the editors of Money magazine believed to be the correct income tax.

The current code invades the privacy of every single American citizen. There are 100,000 people at the IRS who know more about us than we are willing to tell our children. I want them out of our lives. These are not bad people. They are people doing the job that this Congress by statute has directed them to do, but we should not have any agency of government that knows how much money you make or how you spend it. That should be none of our business. We should not have anybody who can look into your records and know your history. The government should not be looking over your shoulder counting every dime you earn. Unfortunately, to the IRS we are all presumptive tax criminals, required to open up aspects of our lives to auditors at any given moment.

For all of these reasons, we are here today to debate and pass H.R. 4199.

What the legislation before us today does is to sunset the current Tax Code effective December 31, 2004, and require that Congress approve a replacement system no later than July 4, 2004, to ensure a smooth transition to the new system on the first day of 2005. This legislation also establishes a bipartisan National Commission on Tax Reform and Simplification that is required to report to Congress on a new, fair, simpler Tax Code.

The overall intention of this bill is to do three things: One, sunset the current convoluted Tax Code; two, create a commission to consider alternative tax systems; and, three, foster a national debate on how to create a fair tax system for working Americans.

This is not a jump over the cliff, as some will say. There are several proposals before the Congress now that have been carefully thought out. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) has one that he has written a book about, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) has one that he has pushed for several years, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. ENGLISH) has a very thoughtful proposal, and I have one too. All of these are ready to be placed in place. They are different, but every single one is better than the current system.

Mr. Speaker, my bill, H.R. 2525, that I introduced with my friend the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PETERSON) is a comprehensive tax reform bill. The national retail sales tax would put in place a transparent form of taxation that will end the confusion forever. This bill is known as the Fair Tax. It would repeal the Federal income tax, the capital gains tax, corporate and self-employment taxes, all payroll taxes, including Social Security and Medicare taxes, all estate and all gift taxes. Under the Fair Tax, Americans will be able to see exactly what they are paying in taxes, and the embedded costs of the IRS would be gone, because the IRS would be gone. Americans would be able to take their entire check home with them and the IRS would be shut down. Unlike the relatively simple tax return that you would get if we move toward a flat tax, under our system we would have no tax return at all, and you would never have to keep a receipt or a record, not one.

Let me simply say that any of these proposals, as I said earlier, any of these tax reform changes would be better than the current system.

I welcome the debate that will spread across America as we determine how to install a better system. All of us who introduced the legislation, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. ENGLISH), and I simply want to give Americans a fresh break from a tired and unfair old system.

Also I wanted to commend the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) for his work in crafting this legislation today. The product he has crafted will effectively prompt the national debate on this important issue, and it should be supported in the House today.

Mr. Speaker, this rule was unanimously reported by the Committee on Rules. I urge my colleagues to support the rule so we may proceed with debate and consideration of the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican majority has obviously decided that it is in their best interests to govern by press release rather than to actually work to pass legislation that addresses the most important needs of our great Nation. This bill, the so-called Scrap the Code Act, is a perfect case in point.

Mr. Speaker, there is not a single Member of this body who is not acutely aware that this weekend marks the deadline for the annual ritual Americans hate most. In order to suitably take advantage of the possibilities for press releases that April 15 presents to my Republican friends, this week has seen a schedule jam packed with Tax Code-related legislation. But, Mr. Speaker, why is it that two of the three tax-related measures that have been on the floor this week lend themselves more rapidly to press release, and, in the case of today's bill, a bumper sticker, of course, than to actually doing something that will provide real benefit to real people?

Mr. Speaker, Democrats in this body have said over and over again that the tax policies being pursued by the Republican majority serve the few at the expense of the many. It has been shown again and again that the American public agrees with our assessment. Democrats and the American public should view this latest proposal as the height of fiscal irresponsibility.

This is no benign press release; it is a nightmare waiting to happen. It is a creation of uncertainty in the business world that risks further stock market destabilization, and, with it, derailing of the American economy.

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, if the Republican majority in this body was truly serious about reforming the Tax Code, the past 5½ years have provided ample time to accomplish this. They could have brought a bill to the floor at any time during the last 5 years to change the Code in a sweeping way, and they have chosen not to do so.

Our colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) contends that H.R. 4199 is a vastly improved version of his earlier legislative attempt to scrap the Tax Code. He has provided us with a new name for his legislation, a name that implies by a date certain the current code will indeed be replaced. This is indeed good fodder for a press release or two.

The gentleman from Oklahoma has also provided us with a colorful time line indicating who will act when, including the date July 4th, 2004, when Congress will approve a new Tax Code, thus setting the stage for the demise of the old code on December 31, 2004. The dates also lend themselves quite well to press releases. Of course, sometimes Congress does not act by dates, and what the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) would have us do is establish a date, and, if Congress were not able to act by that date, then there would be no Tax Code in effect at all and the business climate of this country would be substantially interrupted and jeopardized.

Again, let me point out the Republicans have had 5½ years to bring a revision, a rewrite of the code to the floor, and they have not chosen to do so during that time.

Mr. Speaker, I am not here to say that it is impossible for Congress to completely revamp the method by which we fund the important and necessary activities of this country by July 4, 2004. I would merely like to remind my Republican friends that with political will and a lot of hard work, this Congress can accomplish many important tasks that will make our country even better.

So perhaps this might be an appropriate time to ask why there seems to be no political will on the part of the Republican majority to address matters that are also of great importance, like a Patients' Bill of Rights, prescription drug coverage for seniors, public education reform, raising the minimum wage, investing in our future by saving Social Security and Medicare, and paying down the public debt. Resolving these issues will take real solutions and hard work, Mr. Speaker. These issues cannot be resolved by issuing a press release. If the Republican leadership cannot work to find an answer to these pressing questions, how can we expect the Republican leadership to resolve the issue of creating a simple and fair, and the key word is ''fair,'' Tax Code?

Mr. Speaker, this proposal sounds good on paper and in a press release, but you really have to be able to read between the lines to understand the real intent. H.R. 4199 is a classic Trojan horse, Mr. Speaker. To the Republican majority, the bill presented by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) represents an opportunity to force the country into accepting a national sales tax, as the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) would propose, or a flat tax, or some other scheme to risk total chaos in the domestic and world markets.

Let us take a moment to examine what a national sales tax as advocated by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) would mean to working Americans. In order to replace the revenue that will be lost from scrapping the current code, however unwieldy and complicated, the Congress would have to pass a national sales tax of up to 60 percent, and that sales tax would also have to apply to the Internet, something which the Republicans recently have been claiming they do not want to do. By repealing all taxes currently in place, the national sales tax scheme would become the sole funding source for Social Security, which is a big part of the reason the percentage rate would be so high. I am forced to question how fair that kind of a tax would be to American families. In fact, such a tax would be a mammoth aggressive shift of the tax burden in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I have a number of requests for time on this rule, and each of these Members are prepared to detail the bad news that this Republican press release is really peddling. But let me close by saying the scheme behind the proposal of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) could result in 8 million Americans losing health insurance, a 17 percent decline in the value of the U.S. housing market, it could impose a $200 billion per year unfunded mandate on State and local governments, and would dramatically reduce the amount of charitable giving. Mr. Speaker, I doubt if these possibilities will be part of the Republican press releases this weekend.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I regret the gentleman characterized my bill without having read it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) to respond to another inaccuracy of the gentleman.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to respond to one thing that the gentleman from Texas said about the bill, and I would commend reading the bill to the gentleman from Texas. Perhaps he does not have time to read all 10,000 pages of our current Tax Code, but this bill is only 14 pages long, and I think he can wade his way through that.

At the end of the bill it says, ''If a new Federal tax system is not so approved by July 4, 2004, then Congress shall be required to vote to reauthorize the current code.''

If the gentleman from Texas would like to vote to reauthorize the current code, he can do that, thereby assuring all our business community friends that there will be a Tax Code.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman knows that just requiring Congress to vote does not mean that something will pass. Congress votes all the time and defeats legislation. The gentleman would have us vote, but he cannot guarantee that Congress would actually pass anything, and we would be faced with a situation where no Tax Code would be in place.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT).

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the rule and the Date Certain Tax Code Replacement Act. I can think of no other issue that strikes up more anxiety and frustration with the American people than taxes. By passing this rule and this legislation, Congress is committing to the American taxpayer to replace the present code that is commonly viewed as obsolete, burdensome, intrusive and unfair.

I am fully aware that many of my colleagues do not consider this an important issue. We have just heard the arguments once again, it is too risky, it is a scheme, total chaos.

We do not need any more excuses, because a lot of us here in America are wrestling with this modern cyclops, the IRS code, as we speak. We are doing our taxes. The Tax Code is a giant, with more pages than the Bible. It is more complex than the Justice Department's case against Microsoft. It is cold, it is heartless, and it punishes almost everything we consider successful. It costs us $300 billion a year just to prepare our taxes, not to pay our taxes, just to get ready to pay our taxes.

This Tax Code is a ball and chain locked on our leg. But there is hope. There is a solution, and it is in this rule and in this bill. Let us set a specific date to rid ourselves of this ball and chain, the IRS code. That will give us the discipline and the incentive to put in place a fair and flatter system to provide for those things we need.

Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues to vote for this rule and vote for this Date Certain Tax Code Replacement Act.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, all of us who recognize the importance of the new economy and who believe we should encourage its expansion by minimizing regulation and taxes and maximizing the freedom to innovate should join together today to express our concerns.

This cleverly packaged proposal that the Republicans are offering is really the very first vote in this Congress on whether to impose a new Federal tax on electronic commerce. I believe we should resoundingly reject it. Through 3 days of hearings this week before the Committee on Ways and Means, on which I serve, the same Republicans who are here today urging this proposal have been urging us to rely on taxation of electronic commerce as a major new source of Federal revenue.

The Republican-appointed Director of the Joint Committee on Taxation issued a report this very week noting that these new Republican tax proposals assume ''that retail sales through the Internet would be subject to the same Federal tax as other retail sales, notwithstanding the current moratorium.''

This same report notes that in order to maintain the existing level of Federal revenues, the tax that Republicans would impose on Internet sales and on sales across America would be 59.5 percent over 10 years. That is 60 percent. Those are not my numbers, those are the Republican numbers. I know that it sounds unbelievable that a Republican Congress would try to do this, but that is exactly what they are proposing, a 60 percent tax, in addition to any State and local taxes on electronic commerce that might be imposed.

□ 1345

To our Republican colleagues who say they are going to pull the Tax Code up by the roots and replace it with this new e-commerce tax, I want to tell them that Americans who understand the new economy are not going to sit idly by while the Federal government imposes a 60 percent tax, a 60 percent addition on the cost of every online purchase.

I believe that high-tech issues should be truly bipartisan in their consideration.

The problem we have too often experienced from the Republicans on behalf of working together on high technology is that they reject bipartisan approaches. They prefer the politics of division, trying to divide Democrats from high-tech, even on issues as esoteric on digital signatures.

Too often, as is the case here, they bear the burden of all their right wing ideological baggage. They have tied themselves to far right social groups who are endangering our educational system with their insistence on rejecting evolution and the big bang theory of the origin of the universe, and it is those kinds of extremists who come here today insisting that Republicans must adhere to the doctrine that the progressive income tax system upon which this great Nation has relied for almost a century, that any form of this tax system is morally wrong.

As an early supporter myself of the Internet Tax Freedom Act, I believe that if we overburden e-commerce, as they propose, with taxation and regulation in its infancy, it will be stifled. It will never be able to achieve its full economic potential.

The Advisory Commission on Electronic Commerce, which has been meeting this past year, could not achieve agreement on the question of State and local taxation of the Net. But I do not believe that even they considered this much more radical Republican alternative of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) and his colleagues to use the Net as a major new source for Federal taxation.

Imposing too heavy a burden on the Net too soon will have devastating consequences. Do not scrap the Code by scrapping the future of the new economy. Let us reject another misguided doctrinaire Republican proposal.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in a world in which all economists admit that the consumption base is larger than the income base and the average income tax to bring our revenues in is 28 percent, to suggest we have to have a 60 percent larger base is just silliness.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. HEFLEY).

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think this is the very reason for this Code. We have heard the view of the left-wing extremists about the Tax Code. They think the present Tax Code is just real spiffy.

We have also heard the numbers: 17,000 pages, 7 million words, 54,000 changes, $134 billion in earlier compliance costs. Let me state that the last figure, $134 billion in compliance costs, imagine what our families, our small businesses, and even our big corporations could do with $134 billion they are spending on a hopelessly complex Federal Tax Code.

I think this is the greatest legacy this Congress could leave the American people is to scrap the Code we have now, get rid of the IRS as we know it now. Everywhere I go, talk radio, town meetings, when this subject is brought up, there is disagreement on what the new tax system should be, but there is almost no disagreement about getting rid of the present system.

No law-abiding citizen should be intimidated and made fearful by their government. Yet, if one gets an envelope in our mailbox, in our area it is from Ogden Utah, a little brown envelope from Ogden, Utah, we know it is from the IRS and we freeze in utter fear, no matter how honestly and carefully we have filled out our taxes, because we know we are probably about to get an audit.

That is not right. We need a fair, we need a simple code that we can all understand and it will make us not fear our government. We need to pass this bill and we need to pass this rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT).

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, April Fool's day for the Republicans came a couple of weeks late. Every year they try to fool the American people during tax week into thinking that they are really doing something about the tax system that all of us struggle with and none of us are fond of.

Are the American people supposed to believe that the party that is throwing a party for their wealthy friends and supporters with nearly $1 trillion in tax breaks really cares about the tax burden on middle-income families? Do Republicans really think that most Americans would rather throw a party for the wealthiest Americans, instead of using this money to provide a prescription drug benefit for all seniors so that everyone, not just the wealthy, can afford the best health care coverage in the world?

The American people are not fooled by this tired routine. Republicans have controlled Congress now for 5 years, yet during this time they have never, never passed any comprehensive tax reform that would make the lives of Americans easier.

In fact, since the Republicans took over the Congress in 1995, the Tax Code has become more complex, and it takes the average person who files a form 1040 30 percent longer to fill out their forms. They talk about it for a couple of weeks in April, but that is the end of it. There is no follow-through. There is no new code coming into being.

One conclusion from the inaction could be that Republicans actually like a Tax Code that is riddled with special interest exemptions and they want to keep it that way.

This bill proposes ripping out the Tax Code by the roots, but does not put anything in its place. We do not reform the Tax Code by appointing a commission. We do it through the hard work of coming up with real reform, a real alternative, not burning down the current one and just hoping that something might come along.

Many of us have proposed tax simplification. I have done that, and I would like to work a plan through the Congress. That is the responsible way: Put forward a plan, let people criticize it, reform the current system. Republicans would rather pull a stunt to create an illusion that there is reform going on when nothing is actually happening.

What would happen if we just abolished the Code and put nothing in its place? It would be an economic disaster. The Tax Code influences so many economic decisions by businesses and individuals: Whether and when to invest in property, whether or not to save, whether or not to sell stocks. If we rip up the rules with indecision in its place, we create chaos. That is why the National Association of Realtors, the National Association of Manufacturers, have condemned this proposal as irresponsible.

Let us be clear about what we want from a new system. Two prominent Republican proposals, the national sales tax and the flat tax, both would hurt middle-income families in serious ways. If we are going to destroy the Code, let us pledge today that the replacement would be an improvement, not worse than what we have.

Let us join together on a bipartisan basis to declare that the new system should do the following:

First, we should not put a retail sales tax on prescription drugs and other health care services;

Second, that the reform should be fiscally responsible and protect social security;

Third, that it should be less complicated than the current code, and should be fair to people at different income levels;

Fourth, that we should not put a retail sales tax on Internet sales;

Fifth, that we should not shift Federal tax burdens onto State and local governments;

Seventh, we should not jeopardize the ability of people to get employer-paid health care;

Lastly, we should not shift the tax burden to low- and middle-income families.

If Republicans agree with these principles, they should vote for our alternative. If they feel compelled to vote against the alternative of the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), it is fair to ask why they are looking to tax prescription drugs and Internet sales, because that is exactly what the Republican national sales tax would do.

I think it is time to vote for the alternative. If the alternative does not pass, I hope Members will vote down this very bad but often repeated idea.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say, it is hard to take seriously the words of a gentleman who introduced a flat tax with five different levels several years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Wyoming (Mrs. CUBIN).

Mrs. CUBIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the measure under debate today and in support of the rule.

Our Tax Code, the one that we currently live under, has been tweaked and modified and transformed to such a point that all that remains is layer upon layer upon layer of incoherence and inconsistency. We have allowed confusion to replace common sense. Our garden has become so overrun with weeds that we do need to tear it up and start anew.

I have heard several of my colleagues today express their concerns about tearing our Tax Code out by its roots. I guess I cannot fault them for their hesitancy. This is a monumental piece of legislation we are considering. As we work in the coming years to craft a new Tax Code, this legislative body will have no choice but to accept accountability for how much of the American family's paycheck the Federal government collects, and for all of the frustrations that they have to experience in filing their tax returns.

For those Members who prefer big government and increased Federal spending, that will be a heavy burden for them to bear, as well it should be. But please, Mr. Speaker, do not be fooled by those today who try to dismiss this measure that we are debating as a political act. This bill does not establish a new tax policy. We will have plenty of time to determine what policy we should pass once we have begun debate on this bill. Where we will have time to adopt a realistic tax policy.

Committing ourselves to replacing an overwhelming and inconsistent Tax Code is not a political issue, it is about making a promise to the American people that is long overdue. Passage of this measure clearly proclaims to American families in every congressional district that we know this Tax Code is broken, and that we are going to do everything that we can to replace it with one that works.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, let us be very clear what is going on here. We have a group of Fidel Castros and Che Guevaras on the other side. They are revolutionaries. They want to tear down the system, but they have no plan. They do not know how to govern. They have had 5½ years to bring a revision of the Tax Code to the floor and they have not done it. What makes us think they will do it now?

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. ESHOO).

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, we all got here the same way, we campaigned. During the campaigns we waged there were all kinds of political buttons, there were yard signs, there were balloons. Some people had hair combs with their names on, nail files. Of course, there is the traditional bumper sticker.

Today what is being brought to the floor of the House in my view is a political bumper sticker. Why do I say that? Because the American people really want us, once that campaign is over, to come here, to be thoughtful, to work with the kind of earnestness that is going to produce sound public policy for our country.

So what is on the floor? What are we debating for the American people that are tuned in today? Rather than a thoughtful, comprehensive alternative to our Nation's Tax Code, which is complex, which is confusing, and no one likes, we get a bumper sticker. It is flimsy because it is trying to sell a tax plan that taxes the Internet and derails our Nation's new economy.

Yesterday there was a large press conference where the Speaker of the House accepted the report of the Internet Tax Advisory Commission, which recommended that the Internet not be taxed. The Speaker said, we intend to take this report seriously.

Today, at this very moment, while we are here on the floor, the very same time, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is holding a hearing where another Republican Member of Congress is testifying in favor of a national sales tax plan that will tax the Internet.

Representing a good part of Silicon Valley, I want to tell the Members something, my constituents are asking right now, who is on first, who is on third? This is a 59.5 percent sales tax, Federal sales tax, not including State or local taxes, on electronic commerce.

We cannot have it both ways. If we are going to pull something out by its roots, we have to plant thoughtful seeds that are going to produce something else for our Nation. Our Nation's economy, this new economy, is the envy of the entire world. If in fact we pile a 59.5 percent Internet tax on electronic commerce in this country, we will not only sink the Internet, sink the golden goose that is producing something for our Nation, but we will absolutely kill it off.

So I ask my colleagues to reject this political bumper sticker, this ill-conceived plan. Our Nation deserves better.

□ 1400

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say only this: those who choose to not put a sales tax on the Internet are picking winners and losers. The Government ought to be neutral. Our neighbors down the street ought to have the same treatment as the people that sell on the Internet in competition with them.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. GREEN).

Mr. GREEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of both the rule and this bill. Today is a good day because today is the day we learn which party really supports ethics and government reform, because this is where reform truly begins.

One cannot, one cannot, seriously and sincerely be in favor of reforming the so-called iron triangle unless you strike at its heart. What is the iron triangle made out of? The Tax Code. That is why the Democrats and that is why the establishment hate this bill so much, because it goes to the heart of their iron triangle.

Listen to the excuses they make; listen to how they try to change the subject. The truth is, what is it that Washington special interests focus on most? They focus on the Tax Code, because this Byzantine, complicated, confusing and complex Tax Code is such a monstrosity that it is this Tax Code where they can hide their special interest favors. That is why they support the current Tax Code. That is why they do not want the Tax Code scrapped. That is why they want to change the subject.

So I say to my colleagues, if they are truly in favor of ethics reform and government reform and changing the system and changing America, they must support this rule, support this bill, and let us launch ourselves on the real road to reform.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN).

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Committee on Ways and Means and generally do not get terrifically involved in issues of taxation except when I, like all the other Americans, pay my taxes once a year. I know that I join many in America by saying that I do not like the current system. April 15 is not a delightful day, and I think we can agree on that on a bipartisan basis.

However, the fact that the current Tax Code could be improved is really no good reason to propose to simply blow it up and thereby threaten the new economy.

Now when I learned that the Republican-appointed director of the Joint Committee on Taxation had issued a report this week indicating that these proposals would require a 59.5 percent sales tax, well, heck let us round it up to 60 percent sales tax, and that that would have to be including Internet sales, I became actually pretty concerned.

I do not really believe that this measure is going to become law; but if it were at this point, it would have a severe negative impact on the new economy.

There are many who believe that the Internet eventually, the sale of goods on the Internet, will eventually be subject to taxation. I do not have a position on that at this point, but to suggest that a 60 percent taxation rate would be appropriate for the Internet can do no good for the new economy.

Having served 14 years in local government, I would note that this would be on top of whatever local governments do. In my own county of Santa Clara, the Silicon Valley, we have a State sales tax of 6 percent; and we also have some voter-approved sales taxes that the voters have imposed on themselves to do highways and transit. So in Santa Clara County this would be a 68 percent Internet sales tax.

I would urge Members to vote no.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN), from the Committee on Ways and Means, to respond.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to make the point to those in the Chamber and those who might be listening that the folks on the other side of the aisle who are talking about this bill must not have read it. This bill has nothing to do with a sales tax, nothing to do with a 60 percent tax or a 20 percent tax or a 5 percent tax.

This is about forcing Congress to deal with what the gentlewoman just said is a flawed Tax Code. We think it is broken. We think it ought to be fixed. We are not prejudging what it should be. This sets up a commission, which would be an 18-month bipartisan, bicameral commission, including the administration, that would analyze this situation and come back and report to Congress for Congress to make that decision.

I just want to clarify the debate.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I would inquire of the time remaining on each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) has 13 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) has 14½ minutes remaining.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing as absurd as blowing something up if one does not know what they are going to have to replace it. Today, the Committee on Ways and Means is considering a national sales tax as if it is a panacea for complexity and unfairness.

Mr. Speaker, for 6 years I headed the largest sales tax agency in this country, and I am here to testify that the sales tax offers an opportunity at every level for complexity, unfairness, special interest provisions. Everything that is hated about the Internal Revenue Code will be brought in to a sales Tax Code if the reasons for that complexity are not defeated, the reasons for that unfairness, and there is not real campaign finance reform.

What does this closed rule do? It prevents us from bringing section 527 and its unfair rules that hide political activity, prevent disclosure of campaign finance to the American people. So we have a rule designed to facilitate, not reform, but a national sales tax system to be implemented by a Congress put there by secret contributions, secret political organizations.

Mr. Speaker, we should instead be trying to reform our tax laws code section by code section.

This rule and the underlying bill is much sound and fury that will signify nothing, because what does a politician do if they want to do nothing? Appoint a commission. Great. We appoint a commission. It comes through with a national sales tax bill at 59.5 percent. We, of course, do not adopt that; and this Congress will be put in a position, having wasted years, having deflected any effort at real income tax reform, and be in a position where it must either let the Government expire or readopt a flawed Tax Code.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, at the risk of sounding remedial, I would like to point out to the previous speaker that this is not about campaign finance.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Staten Island, New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I think the question that we need to ask ourselves and the question that I think we owe to be answered by the American people is, does anybody in this Nation truly understand the Tax Code? I have yet to find anybody who truly understands the Tax Code.

So then we have to ask a follow-up question: Is that right? Is it right for the American people not to understand their own Tax Code; that the taxi driver or the small business owner or the nurse or the teacher that when they get their tax bills at the end of the year and they are trembling when they have to go see an accountant because they have no idea what they are doing; is that right?

Should the Congress be sending out a signal to the American people, here is the Tax Code and we do not care if they do not understand it? Is it not taken for granted the genius of the American people, the spirit of the American people, the productivity of the American people, the creativity of the American people, and then we give them this Tax Code?

Then we have a reasonable approach that says, know what, Congress has a habit too often of imposing mandates on the private sector, to say to the private sector do this by such and such a date, and we do not care what the costs are, we do not care what they have to do to meet those goals. Congress speaks; they do, they follow.

Well, now Congress, some people in Congress, are urging Congress to impose those standards on itself, to say to the American people we hear their plea, we hear their plea that the Tax Code is too complicated. We are going to give them a Tax Code that they can understand.

What is wrong with that? One would be led to believe that this building is going to crumble, that the world is going to fall apart; but in reality what is going to happen is the responsible people in this House and across our country are going to say give us something simple; give us something that encourages productivity, encourages economic growth and does not penalize the hardworking taxpayers of this country.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker was asking about simplicity and how do we understand all of this.

Let me read a memo from the Joint Committee on Taxation. This ought to be simple enough for the gentleman to understand.

The memorandum is in response to their request for an estimate of the budget neutral tax rate for H.R. 2525. That is the bill of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER), a bill to replace the current U.S. corporate and individual income, estate and gift and Federal income contributions act, payroll taxes, with a flat tax on retail sales of all goods and services.

Then on the second page it has a little chart here, neutral over 5 years, 59.5 percent. That is what they want to do, neutral over 5 years, national sales tax 59.5 percent. I believe the American people can understand that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY).

Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this rule. I represent thousands of Oregonians that work in the high-tech industry. They tell me that the best way to encourage expansion of the new economy is to minimize government regulation and maximize a freedom to innovate. That is why high-tech issues should be considered on a truly bipartisan basis, and to date we have done that.

In October of 1998, we overwhelmingly passed the Internet Tax Freedom Act, a law to keep the heavy hand of government off the Internet. We passed this law because we all know that if e-commerce is overburdened by taxing it and crippling it with government regulations, then it will never achieve its full potential.

Then we turned around and last October overwhelmingly approved another bipartisan measure, the Global Internet Tax Freedom Act, to keep the Internet from being taxed by members of the WTO and the United Nations.

That is why I am so disappointed the House leadership would approve this proposal because it is nothing more than a back-door attempt to impose a new Federal tax on electronic commerce. We have absolutely no business scrapping our Tax Code and replacing it with up to a 59.5 percent national sales tax that would give the IRS jurisdiction over the Internet.

I am not fond of the current system, and I will work to reform it; but this defies all common logic. It is a surefire way to ensure that we cripple the development of our high-tech industry.

I urge my colleagues to reject this rule and support common sense, bipartisan tax relief.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, America was founded by revolutionaries. America has a $300 billion trade deficit. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the Tax Code is designed to modify economic behavior, and that is why we have to throw it out. If the Founders wanted to modify economic behavior, they would have hired someone like Sigmund Freud to write it.

The first Constitution allowed for slavery, treated women like property and Indians like buffaloes; but it had enough good sense to not allow an income tax.

When the income tax was brought forward, the Supreme Court struck it down, and Members of Congress screwed it up with an amendment.

I support the rule. I support the bill.

Now the Linder-Peterson bill may have been scored but they are honest. They throw FICA in. The Tauzin-Traficant 15 percent has not been scored. We leave FICA alone, and so help me God a combination of Linder-Peterson/Tauzin-Traficant will be the law of this land.

Now I can remember coming before the Democrats, and they all laughed at me. The Traficant bill would change the burden of proof in a civil tax case. It required judicial consent. They laughed at me. You never gave me a hearing. The Committee on Ways and Means laughed in my face. I want to thank the Republican Party for including the Traficant bill in the IRS reform.

Now Democrats, listen to what the Republicans did for the American people. In 1997, before the new reform law, there were 3.1 million attachments on wages and accounts.

□ 1415

In 1999, 540,000. Property liens, 1997, 680,000. In 1999, Mr. Speaker, 168,000. But listen to the big one. Life, liberty, and pursuit of property. The last amendment to the document we are talking about was life, liberty, pursuit of happiness, I say to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU). Property seizures, 1997, 10,037. Requiring judicial consent, 161 in 1999.

My colleagues were wrong then. They are wrong now. They are going to be in the minority for a long time if they do not get progressive. Scrap this Tax Code. It will give King Kong a hernia. It rewards dependency. It penalizes achievement. It subsidizes illegitimacy.

What can we do to perfect this bad document? The 15 percent national retail sales tax leaves FICA alone. It exempts all property taxes up to the poverty level. It adjusts the Consumer Price Index that, if it affects seniors, the COLA will be increased. They are scoring it now.

The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. PETERSON) have been honest. They throw FICA in. We do not. We think we have got to study it. We have enough time in 5 years to change this code.

Let me say one last thing to Democrats, 25 percent of a manufactured item's clause is complying with the Tax Code. That Toyota made in Japan has a 25 percent advantage right off the start against my Cavalier in Lordstown. I will have no more of it. Damn it, I want a study. I want it to be known that there is a Democrat involved in the national sales tax that leaves FICA alone for now, and Tauzin-Traficant-Linder-Peterson must get a look, or we will have failed our people.

There is one last thing I would like to say to everybody in this room. We have a $300 billion trade deficit. We are not going to solve it modifying economic behavior.

We abolish the IRS, abolish all income tax, abolish all debt taxes, capital gains taxes, all taxes on savings, all taxes on investment, all taxes on education. Why should we be paying double taxes on an income dollar and then a dollar of savings. Beam me up here.

The American people are going to have to change the Tax Code. My colleagues should make it a part of the presidential debate. Because the Democrats do not have enough anatomy to address the progressive thinking that the American people need.

The Tauzin-Traficant bill is going to be scored. If my colleagues continue to scare people with the 59.5 percent, and, personally, I believe they were smoking dope when they gave it, then they are going to have a hell of a rough time with me.

I urge the Congress to overwhelmingly support this rule and to support this bill. The Democrats who would not listen to the burden of proof and judicial consent, they should pay a little attention and get on board. They might be able to help us make this new scheme a better one for all Americans.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). The gallery is advised that they are not supposed to applaud.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER).

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with everyone who thinks that the current Tax Code is broken. I am on the committee. Let me say at the outset how hard it is to reach a consensus for any change in the Tax Code.

The Republicans know they have been in charge 5½ years now, and it is just not easy when one is running a train to reach a consensus. We cannot reach a consensus on things that the American people seem to have a consensus about. The danger of this approach, in my view, is for that very reason.

If we enacted a bill that did away with, pulled it out by its root, as has been said, on a day certain, and that Congress at that later date could not reach a consensus on what ought to replace it, we will throw, not only this country, but the world into a recession in the likes in which, in my judgment, have never been seen, because of one thing, the uncertainty of the American economy.

As bad as this is, and we must continue every time we meet to work on making it simpler, making it fair, all the things that everybody here agrees on, as bad as that is, the uncertainty injected into the markets, the uncertainty injected into what would happen to the American dollar, the bedrock of international currency if this actually took place is, in my view, appalling.

No sane, rational business person would say scrap it, but then we will just take a look and see whether what we can come up with a consensus on to replace it. That is not a thoughtful way to go about the Nation's business as stewards.

I tell my colleagues, this is a nice exercise in bashing the Tax Code, and I will join in on that one every day. But this approach, when we do not know if we can reach a consensus, in my view, is not only dangerous, but it is counterproductive.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. THUNE).

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, let me just say that this time of year, there are millions of Americans who are sitting in their living rooms and their kitchen tables and going through this process that we do annually, the annual ritual of filling out their tax return and thinking to themselves this is absolutely insane.

There is no justification. It is absolutely indefensible what we ask the American people to do to comply with the Tax Code. One looks at what we spend in terms of resources and time and energy, cost, it costs over $200 billion a year just to comply with the Tax Code in this country. Annually, Americans spend over 5 billion hours filling out IRS forms, equal to about the equivalent of almost 3 million people working full time, doing nothing but complying with IRS paperwork.

There was a poll done about a year ago, Mr. Speaker, which asked the question, ''If you could just choose one person to have audited by the IRS, who would it be? Your mother-in-law? Your boss? Or your congressman?''

The mother-in-law ironically only got 3 percent. The boss got 8 percent. The congressman got 68 percent. People in this country are looking for us to help solve the problem.

If my colleagues cannot take the legislation that has been introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) who has accommodated a lot of the concerns that were raised by our colleagues in the last session of Congress, and address those, they cannot be against that without saying I accept the status quo. The status quo, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, is a national tragedy.

We have to do better because the American people deserve better. They deserve a Tax Code that is simple and clear and fair and in which they do not have to be fearful every year when they go through this process of trying to fill it out that they may be audited by the IRS for something they do not even know about, because we go through the ritual of adding to and the myriad and the Byzantine regulations and the number of laws that are consistently put on the books each year to try to make this thing more complicated.

We have a responsibility to the American people. I urge the adoption of this rule and the passage of the bill.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) has 6½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) has 5½ minutes remaining.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

The other side has used words like absurd, Byzantine, ludicrous to describe the Tax Code. There are a lot of problems with the Tax Code. I would only add one word to that, and I would apply it to the other side, that is ''timid.''

They are too timid to bring a real bill to the floor that actually changes the code. If my colleagues want a change, they control the committee, they control the process here, albeit temporarily, bring a bill to the floor that changes the code.

They do not have, one of the other speakers made some reference to anatomy. I would only say they are very, very timid when it comes to actually solving the problems that face this country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU).

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) for yielding me the time. I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) for his premature recognition. To further discuss what the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) and the gentleman from Ohio mentioned, it is obvious that it was not anatomy that got me here. It was a sound consideration of policy, a measured approach to fiscal responsibility, and basically being responsible and exercising common sense.

Now, I do not like the current Tax Code. I do not know anyone who does. But to toss it out without a replacement is absolutely irresponsible. The business uncertainty that it injects into the economy alone, that uncertainty alone should get this bill tossed.

Even worse, the likely replacement for this, the likely replacement for the current system is a national sales tax.

I would like to say two things about a national sales tax, first of all, its devastating effect on e-commerce. E-commerce is burgeoning right now. It cannot stand the projected 50 percent tax. It would choke e-commerce in its infancy. It would consign e-commerce to an early crib death.

Secondly, and perhaps more importantly to me and to a few other folks, my home State of Oregon does not have a sales tax. We have voted on it several times, and we have repeatedly rejected a sales tax. Alaska does not have a State sales tax. Delaware does not have a State sales tax. Montana does not have a State sales Tax. New Hampshire does not have a State sales tax. My dear State of Oregon does not have a State sales tax.

I will be darned if I will see a Federal Government impose a form of taxation on my State that my constituents have repeatedly rejected.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT), the sponsor of the measure we are about to take up.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that I have been the husband of one wife for 25 years, the father of four children that are productive members of our community, been elected to Congress three times by overwhelming majorities, and I feel like that is some kind of track record on being a responsible person.

But sometimes it takes some irresponsible acts, some radical acts to make some changes that are needed. I would tell my colleagues that there would be many people that were probably in this House Chamber that said that dropping a bomb on Japan to end World War II, at least precipitate the end of World War II, was a radical act, and that we need to think about that, that we need to be more responsible. But, no, sometimes it takes something more radical to make significant changes.

I want to tell my colleagues the IRS and the Tax Code are waging a war on our families, on individuals, on small business, on the business community at large.

My colleagues say it would create uncertainty in the markets. What could be more uncertain than the 6,000 changes that this Congress has made since 1986? That is what is creating the uncertainty is the fact that, every time Congress messes with the Tax Code, it gets longer and it gets more complex. It is time to stop the nonsense.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I suppose, unlike some of the debates we have here in this House, that the amazing thing about this debate is that the comments that our colleagues on the Republican side have made confirm all of our concerns about this measure.

Indeed, they defend the principal sponsor of one of these measures to tax e-commerce. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) defends the taxation of e-commerce as a new Federal revenue source. One of his principal supporters testifying in the committee indicated it would be a major source of future Federal revenue.

No one, until this radical proposal was presented here in Congress, has proposed that the Federal Government should rely on e-commerce to finance the operations of the entire Federal Government. There has been considerable debate over whether there should even be State or local sales tax on e-commerce. That is a debate for another day.

But the idea of imposing on top of State and local taxes a major Federal sales tax on all e-commerce is likely to have a devastating impact on e-commerce. These are young companies. These are start-up companies.

Sometimes the true dream of American capitalism is that one can begin in a garage and grow to be a major part of the American economy. Those are the kinds of little companies that are out there that need to be given room to grow. Americans are finding as consumers that there are many opportunities offered through e-commerce.

These Republicans would come forward and scrap the code by scrapping the new economy, by imposing up to a 60 percent tax on these major participants in our new economy.

Now, they claim that it is not 60 percent; that maybe it is just 20 or 30 percent. Is 20 or 30 percent not enough to alarm anyone who is concerned about whether or not we are going to encourage and develop e-commerce? But it is the Republicans' own analysis by the Joint Tax Committee, issued on April 7 by a Republican-appointed director, who says that the Internet is going to be subject to up to a 59.5 percent tax.

It is the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) who testified in writing to the Committee on Ways and Means yesterday that ''all goods and services for consumption would be taxed at the same rate. No exceptions.'' That means, just like the bill of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER), that there is no exception for e-commerce.

So the proposal we have today before us is one that scraps the code by transferring the burden on to e-commerce. If my colleagues think that is a good idea, if they want to pay 60 percent, maybe just 20 or 30 on top of every e-commerce transaction, sign onto this Scrap the Code because that is what it is all about.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, let us be very clear what this is all about. This is a bumper sticker. That is what we are debating today. We are debating a bumper sticker and a press release. We are not debating action. We are not debating a legislative proposal that would actually help the American public.

I just want to reiterate. If the people on the other side really wanted to change the Tax Code, they have had 5½ years to do it, and they have not brought a proposal to the floor of the House to do that. All they want is the opportunity to give a speech and to issue a press release.

Well, they have had that, and I think the American people should understand that that is all they get out of what is going on today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, the IRS has made criminals of us all, and it is time for it to go away. And that is what this is about, scrapping the code. This is real. Now, it may be a joke for Democrats, who have spent 40 years building up this monstrosity, but this is very real.

And there are some very real proposals to replace it, proposals that have been studied for years. My proposal, which has been ridiculed today, has been studied for over 3½ years, with $15 million spent in universities from Harvard to Boston College to MIT to Stanford to Rice, and none of them came up with a 60 percent tax rate.

Guess who did? A committee whose members have their entire political capital invested, or their intellectual capital invested in the Tax Code. They would lie to get this thing defeated, because we have depreciated their intellectual capital if we get rid of all the income taxes and all the difficulties and the taxes are transparent and easy to understand. They will not be needed any more.

If we get rid of this Tax Code with a single transparent, straightforward, simple sales tax, Americans will know what it costs every time they buy something, what it costs for government. What they are not telling the American public is that currently, as the gentleman from Ohio pointed out, we know that 22 to 25 percent, according to various studies, of what taxpayers currently pay for at retail is the current embedded cost of this tax system.

They would rather have a hidden tax than a transparent tax because they know, if taxpayers saw how much government was costing them, they would rebel and ask us to reduce the role of government in their lives. We are currently paying it. It is hidden. They like that.

This income tax was originally intended and promised to only tax the top 2 percent of the income earners in America. That was the promise that was made in 1913. And indeed, if we think back to the last two tax increases, 1990 and 1993, the promise was made we are only going to raise the taxes on the top 1 percent. Well, guess what? In 1990, the top 1 percent paid $106 billion in taxes. And after the tax increase on them, the following year they paid $100 billion. Because rich people are often smart people, they can find ways to rearrange their income.

But each of these tax increases, that these folks so love, reverberates through the system and we all pay. We all pay. All we want is to get rid of a monstrosity that no one understands; that confuses every taxpayer and keeps hidden what the actual cost of government is, and then let us have a debate on what to replace it with. It may not be my tax bill; perhaps it will be the bill offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) or the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) or the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN). But it will be simpler, more understandable, and it will be fairer.

One of my favorite stories about the 1913 debate on the 16th amendment to impose the income tax was that one of the Senators was ridiculed and laughed off the floor of the United States Senate for saying something absolutely outrageous. He said this: ''Mark my words, before this is over, the government will be taking 10 percent of everything you earn.'' It was considered so outrageous by his colleagues that they ridiculed him off the floor of the Senate.

I feel certain that is what gave fresh meaning to my favorite country western song, ''If 10 Percent Is Enough for Jesus it Ought to be Enough for Uncle Sam.''

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 473, I call up the bill (H.R. 4199) to terminate the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MILLER of Florida). Pursuant to House Resolution 473, the bill is considered read for amendment.

The text of H.R. 4199 is as follows:

H.R. 4199

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Date Certain Tax Code Replacement Act''.

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to set a date certain for replacing the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 with a simple and fair alternative.

SEC. 3. TERMINATION OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986.

(a) IN GENERAL.—No tax shall be imposed by the Internal Revenue Code of 1986—

(1) for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 2004; and

(2) in the case of any tax not imposed on the basis of a taxable year, on any taxable event or for any period after December 31, 2004.

(b) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to taxes imposed by—

(1) chapter 2 of such Code (relating to tax on self-employment income);

(2) chapter 21 of such Code (relating to Federal Insurance Contributions Act); and

(3) chapter 22 of such Code (relating to Railroad Retirement Tax Act).

SEC. 4. NATIONAL COMMISSION ON TAX REFORM AND SIMPLIFICATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is overly complex, imposes significant burdens on individuals and businesses and the economy, is extremely difficult for the Internal Revenue Service to administer, and is in need of fundamental reform and simplification.

(2) Many of the problems encountered by taxpayers in dealing with the Internal Revenue Service could be eliminated or alleviated by fundamental reform and simplification.

(3) The Federal Government's present fiscal outlook for continuing and sustained budget surpluses provides a unique opportunity for the Congress to consider measures for fundamental reform and simplification of the tax laws.

(4) Recent efforts to simplify or reform the tax laws have not been successful due in part to the difficulty of developing broad-based, nonpartisan support for proposals to make such changes.

(5) Many of the problems with the Internal Revenue Service stem from the overly complex tax code the agency is asked to administer.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To carry out the purposes of this section, there is established within the legislative branch a National Commission on Tax Reform and Simplification (in this section referred to as the ''Commission'').

(2) COMPOSITION.—The Commission shall be composed of 15 members, as follows:

(A) Three members appointed by the President, two from the executive branch of the Government and one from private life.

(B) Four members appointed by the majority leader of the Senate, one from Members of the Senate and three from private life.

(C) Two members appointed by the minority leader of the Senate, one from Members of the Senate and one from private life.

(D) Four members appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, one from Members of the House and three from private life.

(E) Two members appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives, one from Members of the House and one from private life.

(3) CHAIR.—The Commission shall elect a Chair (or two Co-Chairs) from among its members.

(4) MEETINGS, QUORUMS, VACANCIES.—After its initial meeting, the Commission shall meet upon the call of the Chair (Co-Chairs, if elected) or a majority of its members. Nine members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum. Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made. Any meeting of the Commission or any subcommittee thereof may be held in executive session to the extent that the Chair (Co-Chairs, if elected) or a majority of the members of the Commission or subcommittee determine appropriate.

(5) CONTINUATION OF MEMBERSHIP.—If—

(A) any individual who appointed a member to the Commission by virtue of holding a position described in paragraph (2) ceases to hold such position before the report of the Commission is submitted under subsection (g), or

(B) a member was appointed to the Commission as a Member of Congress and the member ceases to be a Member of Congress, or was appointed to the Commission because the member was not an officer or employee of any government and later becomes an officer or employee of a government, that member may continue as a member for not longer than the 30-day period beginning on the date that such individual ceases to hold such position or such member ceases to be a Member of Congress or becomes such an officer or employee, as the case may be.

(6) APPOINTMENT; INITIAL MEETING.—

(A) APPOINTMENT.—It is the sense of the Congress that members of the Commission should be appointed not more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) INITIAL MEETING.—If, after 60 days from the date of the enactment of this Act, eight or more members of the Commission have been appointed, members who have been appointed may meet and select the Chair (or Co-Chairs) who thereafter shall have the authority to begin the operations of the Commission, including the hiring of staff.

(c) FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The functions of the Commission shall be—

(A) to conduct, for a period of not to exceed 18 months from the date of its first meeting, the review described in paragraph (2), and

(B) to submit to the Congress a report of the results of such review, including recommendations for fundamental reform and simplification of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as described in subsection (g).

(2) REVIEW.—The Commission shall review—

(A) the present structure and provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, especially with respect to—

(i) its impact on the economy (including the impact on savings, capital formation and capital investment);

(ii) its impact on families and the workforce (including issues relating to distribution of tax burden);

(iii) the compliance cost to taxpayers; and

(iv) the ability of the Internal Revenue Service to administer such provisions;

(B) whether tax systems imposed under the laws of other countries could provide more efficient and fair methods of funding the revenue requirements of the government;

(C) whether the income tax should be replaced with a tax imposed in a different manner or on a different base; and

(D) whether the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 can be simplified, absent wholesale restructuring or replacement thereof.

(d) POWERS OF THE COMMISSION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commission or, on the authorization of the Commission, any subcommittee or member thereof, may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, hold such hearings and sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, receive such evidence, and administer such oaths, as the Commission or such designated subcommittee or designated member may deem advisable.

(2) CONTRACTING.—The Commission may, to such extent and in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, enter into contracts to enable the Commission to discharge its duties under this section.

(3) ASSISTANCE FROM FEDERAL AGENCIES AND OFFICES.—

(A) INFORMATION.—The Commission is authorized to secure directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality of the Government, as well as from any committee or other office of the legislative branch, such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics as it requires for the purposes of its review and report. Each such department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, instrumentality, or committee shall, to the extent not prohibited by law, furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Commission, upon request made by the Chair (Co-Chairs, if elected).

(B) TREASURY DEPARTMENT.—The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on a nonreimbursable basis to provide the Commission with administrative services, funds, facilities, staff, and other support services for the performance of the Commission's functions.

(C) GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION.—The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a nonreimbursable basis such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(D) JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAXATION.—The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation is authorized on a nonreimbursable basis to provide the Commission with such legal, economic, or policy analysis, including revenue estimates, as the Commission may request.

(E) OTHER ASSISTANCE.—In addition to the assistance set forth in subparagraphs (A), (B), (C) and (D), departments and agencies of the United States are authorized to provide to the Commission such services, funds, facilities, staff, and other support services as they may deem advisable and as may be authorized by law.

(5) POSTAL SERVICES.—The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as departments and agencies of the United States.

(6) GIFTS.—The Commission may accept, use, and dispose of gifts or donations of services or property in carrying out its duties under this section.

(e) STAFF OF THE COMMISSION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Chair (Co-Chairs, if elected), in accordance with rules agreed upon by the Commission, may appoint and fix the compensation of a staff director and such other personnel as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III or chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, except that no rate of pay fixed under this subsection may exceed the equivalent of that payable to a person occupying a position at level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of title 5, United States Code. Any Federal Government employee may be detailed to the Commission without reimbursement from the Commission, and such detailee shall retain the rights, status, and privileges of his or her regular employment without interruption.

(2) CONSULTANT SERVICES.—The Commission is authorized to procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed the daily rate paid a person occupying a position at level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code.

(f) COMPENSATION AND TRAVEL EXPENSES.—

(1) COMPENSATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), each member of the Commission may be compensated at not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for a position at level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, for each day during which that member is engaged in the actual performance of the duties of the Commission.

(B) EXCEPTION.—Members of the Commission who are officers or employees of the United States or Members of Congress shall receive no additional pay on account of their service on the Commission.

(2) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703 (b) of title 5, United States Code.

(g) REPORT OF THE COMMISSION; TERMINATION.—

(1) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the first meeting of the Commission, the Commission shall submit a report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate. The report of the Commission shall describe the results of its review (as described in subsection (c)(2)), shall make such recommendations for fundamental reform and simplification of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 as the Commission considers appropriate, and shall describe the expected impact of such recommendations on the economy and progressivity and general administrability of the tax laws.

(2) TERMINATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Commission, and all the authorities of this section, shall terminate on the date which is 90 days after the date on which the report is required to be submitted under paragraph (1).

(B) CONCLUDING ACTIVITIES.—The Commission may use the 90-day period referred to in subparagraph (A) for the purposes of concluding its activities, including providing testimony to committees of Congress concerning its report and disseminating that report.

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the activities of the Commission. Until such time as funds are specifically appropriated for such activities, $2,000,000 shall be available from fiscal year 2001 funds appropriated to the Treasury Department, ''Departmental Offices'' account, for the activities of the Commission, to remain available until expended.

SEC. 5. TIMING OF IMPLEMENTATION.

In order to ensure an easy transition and effective implementation, the Congress hereby declares that any new Federal tax system should be approved by Congress in its final form no later than July 4, 2004.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment in the nature of a substitute, consisting of the text of H.R. 4230, is adopted.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 4230

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Date Certain Tax Code Replacement Act''.

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to set a date certain for replacing the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 with a simple and fair alternative.

SEC. 3. TERMINATION OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1986.

(a) IN GENERAL.—No tax shall be imposed by the Internal Revenue Code of 1986—

(1) for any taxable year beginning after December 31, 2004; and

(2) in the case of any tax not imposed on the basis of a taxable year, on any taxable event or for any period after December 31, 2004.

(b) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply to taxes imposed by—

(1) chapter 2 of such Code (relating to tax on self-employment income);

(2) chapter 21 of such Code (relating to Federal Insurance Contributions Act); and

(3) chapter 22 of such Code (relating to Railroad Retirement Tax Act).

SEC. 4. NATIONAL COMMISSION ON TAX REFORM AND SIMPLIFICATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds the following:

(1) The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is overly complex, imposes significant burdens on individuals and businesses and the economy, is extremely difficult for the Internal Revenue Service to administer, and is in need of fundamental reform and simplification.

(2) Many of the problems encountered by taxpayers in dealing with the Internal Revenue Service could be eliminated or alleviated by fundamental reform and simplification.

(3) The Federal Government's present fiscal outlook for continuing and sustained budget surpluses provides a unique opportunity for the Congress to consider measures for fundamental reform and simplification of the tax laws.

(4) Recent efforts to simplify or reform the tax laws have not been successful due in part to the difficulty of developing broad-based, nonpartisan support for proposals to make such changes.

(5) Many of the problems with the Internal Revenue Service stem from the overly complex tax code the agency is asked to administer.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—To carry out the purposes of this section, there is established within the legislative branch a National Commission on Tax Reform and Simplification (in this section referred to as the ''Commission'').

(2) COMPOSITION.—The Commission shall be composed of 15 members, as follows:

(A) Three members appointed by the President, two from the executive branch of the Government and one from private life.

(B) Four members appointed by the majority leader of the Senate, one from Members of the Senate and three from private life.

(C) Two members appointed by the minority leader of the Senate, one from Members of the Senate and one from private life.

(D) Four members appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, one from Members of the House and three from private life.

(E) Two members appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives, one from Members of the House and one from private life.

(3) CHAIR.—The Commission shall elect a Chair (or two Co-Chairs) from among its members.

(4) MEETINGS, QUORUMS, VACANCIES.—After its initial meeting, the Commission shall meet upon the call of the Chair (Co-Chairs, if elected) or a majority of its members. Nine members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum. Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made. Any meeting of the Commission or any subcommittee thereof may be held in executive session to the extent that the Chair (Co-Chairs, if elected) or a majority of the members of the Commission or subcommittee determine appropriate.

(5) CONTINUATION OF MEMBERSHIP.—If—

(A) any individual who appointed a member to the Commission by virtue of holding a position described in paragraph (2) ceases to hold such position before the report of the Commission is submitted under subsection (g), or

(B) a member was appointed to the Commission as a Member of Congress and the member ceases to be a Member of Congress, or was appointed to the Commission because the member was not an officer or employee of any government and later becomes an officer or employee of a government, that member may continue as a member for not longer than the 30-day period beginning on the date that such individual ceases to hold such position or such member ceases to be a Member of Congress or becomes such an officer or employee, as the case may be.

(A) APPOINTMENT.—It is the sense of the Congress that members of the Commission should be appointed not more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) INITIAL MEETING.—If, after 60 days from the date of the enactment of this Act, eight or more members of the Commission have been appointed, members who have been appointed may meet and select the Chair (or Co-Chairs) who thereafter shall have the authority to begin the operations of the Commission, including the hiring of staff.

(c) FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The functions of the Commission shall be—

(A) to conduct, for a period of not to exceed 18 months from the date of its first meeting, the review described in paragraph (2), and

(B) to submit to the Congress a report of the results of such review, including recommendations for fundamental reform and simplification of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as described in subsection (g).

(2) REVIEW.—The Commission shall review—

(A) the present structure and provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, especially with respect to—

(i) its impact on the economy (including the impact on savings, capital formation and capital investment);

(ii) its impact on families and the workforce (including issues relating to distribution of tax burden);

(iii) the compliance cost to taxpayers; and

(iv) the ability of the Internal Revenue Service to administer such provisions;

(B) whether tax systems imposed under the laws of other countries could provide more efficient and fair methods of funding the revenue requirements of the government;

(C) whether the income tax should be replaced with a tax imposed in a different manner or on a different base; and

(D) whether the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 can be simplified, absent wholesale restructuring or replacement thereof.

(d) POWERS OF THE COMMISSION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commission or, on the authorization of the Commission, any subcommittee or member thereof, may, for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, hold such hearings and sit and act at such times and places, take such testimony, receive such evidence, and administer such oaths, as the Commission or such designated subcommittee or designated member may deem advisable.

(2) CONTRACTING.—The Commission may, to such extent and in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, enter into contracts to enable the Commission to discharge its duties under this section.

(3) ASSISTANCE FROM FEDERAL AGENCIES AND OFFICES.—

(A) INFORMATION.—The Commission is authorized to secure directly from any executive department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality of the Government, as well as from any committee or other office of the legislative branch, such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics as it requires for the purposes of its review and report. Each such department, bureau, agency, board, commission, office, establishment, instrumentality, or committee shall, to the extent not prohibited by law, furnish such information, suggestions, estimates, and statistics directly to the Commission, upon request made by the Chair (Co-Chairs, if elected).

(B) TREASURY DEPARTMENT.—The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on a nonreimbursable basis to provide the Commission with administrative services, funds, facilities, staff, and other support services for the performance of the Commission's functions.

(C) GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION.—The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a nonreimbursable basis such administrative support services as the Commission may request.

(D) JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAXATION.—The staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation is authorized on a nonreimbursable basis to provide the Commission with such legal, economic, or policy analysis, including revenue estimates, as the Commission may request.

(E) OTHER ASSISTANCE.—In addition to the assistance set forth in subparagraphs (A), (B), (C) and (D), departments and agencies of the United States are authorized to provide to the Commission such services, funds, facilities, staff, and other support services as they may deem advisable and as may be authorized by law.

(5) POSTAL SERVICES.—The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as departments and agencies of the United States.

(6) GIFTS.—The Commission may accept, use, and dispose of gifts or donations of services or property in carrying out its duties under this section.

(e) STAFF OF THE COMMISSION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Chair (Co-Chairs, if elected), in accordance with rules agreed upon by the Commission, may appoint and fix the compensation of a staff director and such other personnel as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III or chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, except that no rate of pay fixed under this subsection may exceed the equivalent of that payable to a person occupying a position at level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of title 5, United States Code. Any Federal Government employee may be detailed to the Commission without reimbursement from the Commission, and such detailee shall retain the rights, status, and privileges of his or her regular employment without interruption.

(2) CONSULTANT SERVICES.—The Commission is authorized to procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed the daily rate paid a person occupying a position at level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code.

(f) COMPENSATION AND TRAVEL EXPENSES.—

(1) COMPENSATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), each member of the Commission may be compensated at not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for a position at level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, for each day during which that member is engaged in the actual performance of the duties of the Commission.

(B) EXCEPTION.—Members of the Commission who are officers or employees of the United States or Members of Congress shall receive no additional pay on account of their service on the Commission.

(2) TRAVEL EXPENSES.—While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code.

(g) REPORT OF THE COMMISSION; TERMINATION.—

(1) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the first meeting of the Commission, the Commission shall submit a report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate. The report of the Commission shall describe the results of its review (as described in subsection (c)(2)), shall make such recommendations for fundamental reform and simplification of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 as the Commission considers appropriate, and shall describe the expected impact of such recommendations on the economy and progressivity and general administrability of the tax laws.

(2) TERMINATION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Commission, and all the authorities of this section, shall terminate on the date which is 90 days after the date on which the report is required to be submitted under paragraph (1).

(B) CONCLUDING ACTIVITIES.—The Commission may use the 90-day period referred to in subparagraph (A) for the purposes of concluding its activities, including providing testimony to committees of Congress concerning its report and disseminating that report.

(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the activities of the Commission. Until such time as funds are specifically appropriated for such activities, $2,000,000 shall be available from fiscal year 2001 funds appropriated to the Treasury Department, ''Departmental Offices'' account, for the activities of the Commission, to remain available until expended.

SEC. 5. TIMING OF IMPLEMENTATION.

In order to ensure an easy transition and effective implementation, the Congress hereby declares that any new Federal tax system shall be approved by Congress in its final form no later than July 4, 2004. If a new Federal tax system is not so approved by July 4, 2004, then Congress shall be required to vote to reauthorize the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H.R. 4199.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a week when millions of us, Americans all around this great country, are experiencing the annual confusion, the frustration, and the anxiety that comes with filling out our Federal income tax returns.

It is certainly understandable. The current income tax code and its associated regulations now contain, I am told, over 5.6 million words. I am informed that is seven times as long as the Bible, and I know it is not nearly as interesting. Taxpayers now spend 5.4 billion hours a year trying to comply with 2,500 pages of tax laws, 6,500 pages of tax rules, and millions of pages of forms.

The cost of complying with our Tax Code in this country is now believed to be well in excess of $200 billion a year. That is about 20 percent of the revenues raised. What a waste of money. What a waste of time, of effort, of resources. What a drag on our economy. And that does not get at the way the code taxes income and investment that hurts savings, job growth, productivity and, again, means less economic opportunity for us and for future Americans.

Mr. Speaker, 4 years ago Congress set up a commission, I cochaired it, to look into the problems that plague the Internal Revenue Service. There I learned firsthand that the problems our Tax Code causes is not just for taxpayers, but it is also for the Internal Revenue Service itself; and we cannot forget that. The complexity of our Tax Code makes the IRS bigger and more intrusive than we as taxpayers would like for it to be. The Tax Code itself makes the IRS more costly and less efficient than it should be.

In the short term, tax relief simplification of specific areas of the Tax Code can help. There are important steps we can and should take to make it fairer and less burdensome for all Americans. And Congress has already made some progress on this front. We passed tax relief so that no longer do people have to worry about capital gains tax on the sale of a primary residence. At least, almost no Americans do. Which means not only less tax but less associated record keeping; therefore a great simplification. That was good.

We did reform the IRS for the first time since 1952 to make it easier for all taxpayers to interact with this agency. But, again, we are not going to have a good IRS until we have a simpler Tax Code.

And for the first time we also here in Congress, 2 years ago, made it more difficult for us in Congress and for the administration to further complicate the code by subjecting every proposed tax law change prospectively to what is called a complexity analysis. Again, a good step forward.

But, ultimately, no amount of tinkering with the current Tax Code can solve the problem. We need to produce a Tax Code that will be fairer to all Americans. It is just too complicated now. It is too intrusive. It is too burdensome to the taxpayers of this country. That is why many of us in Congress, on both sides of this aisle, believe now we need to take the next step. We need to replace the current code with something better, something simpler, something fairer, something less intrusive for all Americans.

For the last several years, we have come to the floor, most recently 2 years ago, with a Sunset the Code bill that would eliminate the current Tax Code by a date certain and force Congress and the administration to work together to develop an appropriate alternative. The legislation before us today that my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT), is again championing is called the Date Certain Tax Code Replacement Act, and it does exactly that. It sunsets the current Tax Code by December 31, 2004; and it sets in motion a specific time line and process for replacing the Tax Code.

It is an important statement, I think, to be made by this Congress, that we share the frustration all Americans have with our current Tax Code; that we think this Congress should commit itself to replace what is a broken system. But very importantly, and let me spell this out today for some of my colleagues on the other side who have misstated what is in this bill, it does not prejudge any particular kind of Tax Code. That is going to be up to this Congress to decide.

There has never been major tax reform in the country, Mr. Speaker, without the administration taking the lead. The Treasury Department is critical to it. We have seen in the last 6 years no interest on the part of the administration. In fact, we have seen a disdain for any of the major reform ideas. Therefore, we are not going to get it from the administration. We may not get it from the next administration, whether it is Republican or Democrat.

What we do put into this legislation is very important to force the administration to the table, to force Members of Congress to the table, to begin to air this issue out in public so that people around the country can hear about it. We can begin to educate people about the issue so we can come up with a better, smarter approach, and that is that in this legislation, for the first time this year, we have a concept where we create a specific mechanism for getting to a new Tax Code. It is called the Bipartisan National Commission on Tax Reform and Simplification.

This commission is modeled after the National Commission on Restructuring the IRS, which was very successful. We have also had a very successful bipartisan commission recently on Medicare reform, the Thomas Breaux Commission.

Now, I know it is easy to say that commissions do not work, and I am sure they have a checkered past in this town. Some have worked and some have not. But the fact is we have proven with the IRS Commission, with the Medicare Commission, that as long as they focus on building broad-based nonpartisan support for recommendations, they can be very successful and play a very constructive role in moving the debate forward.

This commission would have 15 members: 3 appointed by the President; 4 each by the Senate majority leader and the Speaker; 2 each appointed by the House and Senate minority leaders. We do not know who is going to control the next Congress. But whoever does will have a slightly higher representation on the commission than the party in the minority. But it will be entirely bipartisan, bicameral and, again, will include the administration.

It will have a short timetable. Not years, as someone said earlier today. Read the legislation. It is 18 months. We think that is enough time, although it is a very complex and difficult task. And that will be a report to this Congress. It will then be up to Congress to decide what to do with it. We cannot prejudge what the report will be; we cannot prejudge what the Congress will do with it. But we know it will move the process forward. It will move the ball forward to begin to come to some kind of resolution as to how we can fix, how we must fix a tax code that I think everyone in this Chamber agrees is broken.

Now, some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle will argue this legislation is unnecessary, that it is just rhetoric today. I, again, would urge them to read the legislation. Because what we are voting on here today is a referendum about the status quo. If they believe in the status quo that our current Tax Code is the way to go, fine, vote no. But if they believe that all those special interests that have been tucked in over the years, if they believe it is too complex, if they believe it is too burdensome, if they believe it is intrusive, if they believe there ought to be a change, a fundamental reform, without prejudging what it will be, then they ought to support this very strong statement and this very important legislation establishing the commission that is before us today.

I want to also say that the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) has also improved his legislation by adding a provision that says that, if Congress has not acted in the next 4 years on a new Tax Code, he will vote to reauthorize the current Code. There is no uncertainty there. We are going to have the same thing we have got now unless we can come together as Republicans and Democrats and Independents through, again, a bipartisan, bicameral process to come up with something that makes sense.

If my colleagues think that our current Tax Code is broken, if they think the current system is too complicated, unfair, and intrusive, if they think the Congress and administration should be held accountable for coming up with a better system to replace it and doing it in a responsible way, then they ought to vote for this bill today. It is a good bill, it is a better bill than 2 years ago, and it is a different bill.

I urge my colleagues to take a look at the bill, and I urge all my colleagues to vote yes on H.R. 4199.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN), the previous speaker, is one of the brightest Members that we have in the House; and certainly it is a pleasure for me to serve with him on the Committee on Ways and Means. Some of his ideas in terms of how we could reform the tax system, to me, just makes a lot of sense.

But I know one thing that he will never, never challenge is the fact that any political party that holds a majority by only six, whether that is a Democratic majority or Republican majority, cannot even hope to reform the tax system unless we are working together in a bipartisan way.

There is no Republican way to correct this Internal Revenue Code. I would agree with anybody who would say and there certainly is not a Democratic Party way to do it. But what the American people want is not for each one of us to be political victors. What they want is a Congress that is working to their best interests.

Can we say that this Code is working to their best interests, that this is the best we can do? I would say the answer would be no. We could do a heck of a lot better.

But one thing that we would have to start doing just for openers is to start talking with each other. Forget the mutual respect. Forget the professionalism. Let us start talking and seeing what we can do to work together.

I would think if we were talking about Social Security, if we were talking about Medicare, if we were talking about the tax system that we would have to find a way where, working together, we could come up with the right solution.

And quite frankly, in the other areas, I would think that there would be enough difference between Democrats and Republicans that we could fight the different way, different philosophical and political beliefs, so that we will always maintain the difference between Republicans and Democrats.

So I am not saying that we should all look alike. But on these important issues, it really bothers me that the chairman of the committee could schedule hearings about different alternatives to this tax system on the week the taxpayers have to file taxes.

I do not challenge the sincerity of my Republican friend on the committee or on the House leadership. But why this week? Why would we have 3 days of hearings and alternatives to this system, as burdensome as it is, when we know that the legislative calendar does not permit us to do anything, nothing?

We are going out for 2 weeks. We will be out next month for Memorial Day. Come July 4, we will be out. In August we will be out. September we have the Labor Day recess. We have to do August recess for the convention. We have to get reelected. So we are not even thinking about changing the Internal Revenue Code. So why do we sit up there for 3 days talking about it? Oh, because it is April 15, and we want to make a political statement.

Well, for 5 years, for 5 years they have enjoyed being in the majority party, the Speaker, the distinguished majority leader, the chairmanships of every committee, the chairmanship of the once awesome powerful Committee on Ways and Means. My God, in 5 years, why have we not seen a change in the Tax Code? Why do we wait 5 years to bring it up again?

As a matter of fact, just between us legislators, I weighed the Code as to how much it weighed when the Democrats were in charge; and then I weighed it just last week. My colleagues would not believe the increase in weight. My God, there is about a hundred new sections added on to the old Code. The people that make up the returns say it takes 3.5 hours more even to figure out the complexities. It is that way when they are putting in loopholes, it is more complicated.

But all I am saying is that many people ask, well, we always are complaining about the Republican majority. What the devil would we do if we ever were in charge?

Number one, we will talk to them. Number two, in any legislation, we would ask you for their ideas. Number three, we would know ahead of time if it is bipartisan, if it is not bipartisan, it is just not going to fly.

We have learned so much about how difficult it is to lead when we do not have a meaningful majority. But we hope that we will not slip into the posture that just because we cannot lead, just because we cannot legislate that we would say, let us close down the shop, let us close down the Internal Revenue Service, let us close down the tax collection business, let us really get rid of the Code and tell millions of American businessmen and small businessmen, we cannot tell them right now what we are going to replace it with. All we can tell them is that we are mandated that we must come up with something.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) has the unique idea that, even if the Congress cannot come up with something, let us get a commission to come up with something. In other words, some Member was being very, very critical in the Committee on Ways and Means before I came to the floor and said that we were trying to hold on to our jurisdiction.

Well, do my colleagues know something? He is right. Because it is the only committee that is there in the Constitution saying that the Committee on Ways and Means shall provide the ways and means for the United States Government to operate.

But, then again, they may want to change the Constitution. But I hope we do not change it to set up for a commission for ways and means. Because then I see a commission for an appropriation, a commission for commerce, a commission for education, and one day we will wake up and we will find out that there is really no need for the U.S. House of Representatives as we know it.

And so, I would suggest this: There is nothing wrong with commissions, but there is something wrong when we refuse to assume our responsibility to do what? To legislate. It is not just to criticize against this Code that most Americans are annoyed with this week. It is not enough to say get rid of it in the year 2004.

What is important to do is to have hearings, to have meetings and to legislate, to educate the American people as to that we can do a better job and to have the political courage and the guts to come down here and to vote for something instead of just cursing the doctors.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, first I would like to just say to my friend the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) that there were some implicit endorsements of the concept behind the commission and even though at the end there seem to be less than great enthusiasm for it, which is that this would be a bipartisan exercise, it would report back to Congress and would then allow the Committee on Ways and Means to do its work with better information, more public education, and all the other things.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTMAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the Congress, if we assume this awesome responsibility to produce a better Internal Revenue Code, would need outside help. But to abolish the existing system before we do that is where the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and I differ.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I would just say that if the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) looks at the legislation, what is nice about it is that we do not sunset the Code prior to the commission. In fact, the commission is only 18 months and then we have another couple of years for the Committee on Ways and Mean, regardless of who is chairman, to do its work.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) about whom I spoke a moment ago and who is the author of this much needed legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to control the time for the majority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) the majority leader.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) for yielding me the time, and I thank him for bringing this legislation to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal today about people who are willing to work with us on the Tax Code and to fix the horrifying inequities that we find in the Tax Code that are so bothersome to the American people.

I have been gratified to hear these expressions of commitment from both sides of the aisle, and I have been particularly gratified to hear the number of Democrats who have spoken so eloquently today for the need to avoid discriminatory taxation on the Internet.

I must say, I certainly agree with them on that; and I am looking forward, then, to counting on their vote when we bring a moratorium on discriminatory taxation on the Internet to the floor later this year.

But for the business at hand today, Mr. Speaker, we are again demonstrating to the American people that we are on the side of Mr. and Mrs. America. When they tell us that the extraordinary taxation and punitive provisions called the earnings limitation on senior citizens is unfair because it denies them the benefits they paid in all their lives, we agree. We passed the law, and the President signed it just last week.

When we observe that we must eliminate the marriage penalty because it is unfair to tax people who want to get married, the American people have agreed. We passed it through the House. They will pass it through the Senate. And I am sure the President will sign that into law.

And when we all agree, as we do, that it is unfair to tax people's estate when they die and, therefore, commit to eliminating the death tax because it is unfair to deny the children the legacy of their parents, I am sure we will pass that and it will be passed into law.

Today we are saying, indeed, the entire Tax Code as we know it in America is today unfair because it drives the American people crazy with frustration and despair. Two hundred billion dollars, more man-hours than is spent on the production of every car, truck, and van produced in the United States, is devoted to just complying with this awful red tape nightmare called the Tax Code.

The gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) says let us get rid of it, let us make a pledge, a commitment amongst ourselves today to be done with it, to scrap this Code, sunset this Code, have it out of our lives once and for all. I cannot tell my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, how near universal agreement there is among the American people with the need to do that.

Ah, but the nay sayers arise, we cannot do that unless we know perfectly well today down to the last jot and tittle what will be in the next Code. There is no plan to replace this Code, they say, Mr. Speaker.

Let me say there is a plan. There are at least three plans that I know of, all well-conceived, all very deeply well worked on, all very well publicized. It is not for me to describe all three, Mr. Speaker, but let me remind my colleagues about the first best plan to replace this awful nightmare.

It is the flat tax, first conceived in 1984 by Professors Hall and Rabushka at the distinguished Hoover Institute in California, later revived in 1994 by myself.

□ 1500

It does exist. It has been worked on in great detail. It has been examined, criticized, reexamined, refined. Mr. Speaker, for any of our colleagues that are unaware of this work, let me just say to my colleagues, while they have heretofore been given a free copy of my book The Flat Tax, should they have lost that or should it have been absconded with by one of their staff, let me remind them that today, even today, they can look it up on the Internet, flattax.house.gov, or even better, they could buy and read my book, in which case we could both profit.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), a member of the committee.

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I would encourage the majority leader to bring his bill up here and let us vote on it if it is that good. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) has worked well with us on the committee. I do not have any quarrel with the criticism of the present system. But when Mr. Churchill one time was asked how was his wife, his response was, ''Compared to what?'' We do not have the ''what'' here.

If my colleagues want to seriously work on tax reform and the code, I think they will find many Members over here ready, willing and able to pitch in. But to go about this matter scrapping something is like a businessperson saying, Look, we don't like your sales or distribution system that gives your company the revenue with which you do business; we're going to scrap that on a date certain in 2 years, and we'll have the board of directors figure out what we're going to replace it with.

Nobody would do that in the real world. Not one single person that I know of would say, We don't know what we're going to do. We're going to do something, hopefully. What if we cannot get a consensus on the flat tax? The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER), who spoke earlier, has a bill, a sales tax. What if the Congress in that day cannot come up with a consensus? What are we going to do, have a continuing resolution on the code? That will make a lot of sense to Wall Street.

I tell my colleagues as earnestly as I know how, if this bill were serious and was going to be signed, the uncertainty that it would immediately inject into Wall Street, in the markets, into all the countries around the world that rely on the bedrock of the international financial currency, the United States dollar, the consequences of this could be devastating.

I do not quarrel with bashing the code. That is an easy one. I do not know anybody that thinks this is the best work product imaginable. But I do say this: the way to fix it is to come on down to the committee and let us vote on the flat tax, a sales tax or let us schedule bills for hearing, votes and reported out to the floor and then we will see if we can get a consensus. That is how we do as a steward, I think, of this Nation. That is how we do business. I know this will probably pass, but I hope we will think about what we are doing and what kind of signal we are sending. I do not think it is one that is very responsible.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, borrowing on the gentleman's word picture, if we are comparing the tax code to a wife, what we are saying on this side is this wife is so ugly that we know we can do better. With that, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA).

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Speaker, I guess I have to say I do not want to associate myself with those remarks; however, I did want to rise in strong support of this legislation and thank my colleagues for bringing it to the floor. I guess I am saying with a sigh of relief that at last we are making progress. I am not being facetious, because I think this is very serious business. I have personally, as many of my colleagues know, for several years been urging our Republican leadership and the tax committee to make major tax reform job number one. At last we are here. This is an excellent means of doing that. We are on a substantial route to getting there in real terms.

Let us try to get beyond the political rhetoric of this debate, and let us focus on the substance of this bill. The bill calls for an enactment of a new Tax Code by 2004. In order to provide a solid basis for congressional debate, the bill establishes a commission on tax reform and simplification. The commission would completely analyze the current tax law, especially with respect to the code's impact on the economy, savings, capital formation and capital investment, and its impact on families and the workplace. That is in the body of the orders to the commission. The commission would also explore, as has been already mentioned, alternative methods of taxation.

In the past, everyone knows that I have had deep concerns about scrapping the Tax Code without a new structure in its place. I said frankly at the time that it seemed reckless and it was more like show business. But this is real business. This legislation pushes the tax reform debate ahead in a responsible, rational way while setting the stage for common sense transition to a fairer, flatter, and simpler tax code. We need this bill. I urge my colleagues to vote for it. This is job number one for the Congress.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Baltimore, Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), a member of the committee.

Mr. CARDIN. Let me thank my friend from New York for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, we should not be talking about a sunset today. We should be talking about a sunrise, a sunrise for tax reform. I am very disappointed that we do not have legislation on the floor that would talk about tax reform because we do need tax reform. What this legislation represents is a failure, a failure by this body to take up tax reform, a signal that we will not deal with it in this Congress, the third consecutive Congress under the control of the Republicans in which they have not brought tax reform to the floor of this House.

If my colleagues are looking for agreement on both sides of the aisle, we agree that the current income tax code is too complicated. So what do we do about it during these past 3 terms? Add another 100 sections and make it more complicated? Make it more difficult for our constituents to understand how to file their tax returns? That is not tax reform. Those actions became law. If my colleagues want agreement on both sides of the aisle that we should have less income taxes, they will get that agreement. Let us bring forward bills that do it.

I strongly support the expansion of the earned income tax credit. That has helped many taxpayers get the relief that they need. But we sometimes find that on the other side of the aisle, they fight us on that type of legislation. Or targeted relief that would let less people need to file income tax returns in our country. But no, they do not seem to want to do it that way. So why not work together on tax reform so that we can really get something done in this Congress rather than having a tool that is just basically used for the 30-second commercial. That does not befit this body.

And the tragedy is that if this legislation were to become law, what would be the consequences? The first thing is, we would not know what the tax revenue system of this country would be.

What advice would my colleagues give to their constituents, their young married couple who wants to purchase a home but needs to know the tax consequences of that home purchase in order to make sure that their budget makes sense to buy that home? What will they tell them when there is no Tax Code in place and we have not quite figured out what the revenue code will be for our country? The uncertainty will be very damaging to American families.

That is not what we should be doing. And then what Tax Code will we put into effect? I know there has been a lot of debate about this. Quite frankly I have a good tax plan that I would like to be able to talk about, and if we bring a bill to the floor, I will certainly be offering an alternative or amendments to that tax bill. But the reason why we use the retail sales tax is because that is the one I think our constituents understand the best, to allow us some ability to compare between one tax code and the other. If we translate what the repeal of all income taxes is on a retail sales tax, that is 59.5 percent added to the price of all goods, all services. That is not my estimate, that is the Joint Tax Committee's estimate.

I do not want to be responsible for increasing prescription drugs and increasing Internet service and increasing clothing and increasing food by that type of price. That is not good for our economy. Let us think about what we are doing, let us work together, let us work on tax reform and not on a bill that will have no impact on real tax reform.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH).

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma deserves a large amount of credit. Let me say that to me there is not any question this ought to be a bipartisan vote. I will tell my colleagues why. The Tax Code should be put in place that enables the Government to collect revenue but at the same time fosters economic growth, does not impede economic growth. Frankly, the ability to abolish this code after having served in this House for 18 years, if we do not do something dramatic around here, we are going to be talking about this until doomsday, or when people at our town hall meetings start heating up the tar, because people are fed up with this Tax Code, and they are fed up with it not just because it is complicated but frankly that it does keep us from realizing the kind of complete economic growth that brings more to every family.

Now, here we are in the 21st century with a Tax Code that is not encouraging higher savings, and if there is anything we know we need to do in America it is to encourage a higher savings rate. We know we need to have a higher investment rate. We want people to take their money and to risk it in enterprising ideas that can improve the lives of people not just in America but around the world. That gives us increased productivity, more for families.

We want to have a Tax Code that provides a higher reward for people who risk-take. If we punish people when they are successful, then they are going to stop taking risks. They are going to sit on their money. Frankly, the hallmark of a new Tax Code in the 21st century is one that fosters higher savings, higher investment, and produces higher reward for risk-taking.

What we have in the 21st century now is a Tax Code that works an awful lot like putting a Volkswagen engine in a Jaguar. The fact is the 21st century is about speed, not about strength. It is about the power of knowledge, not the power of toil. It is about the entrepreneurship which rewards individual efforts and achievement. And the fact is the Tax Code is not aligned with the rest of this economy. If we want to have a sleek sports car that can run around that track at Indianapolis and set economic records for the American people, then it must have an engine that empowers that car to travel at the speed of knowledge and the speed of entrepreneurship.

Mr. Madison in the Federalist Paper 41 says that a country that is not capable of changing the way in which it collects revenues to match its economy is a country that will not continue to be prosperous and to advance. That was a warning to us in the 21st century. We talked today about taxing the Internet. The fact is that we have a parallel universe right now that allows us to take advantage of the power of ideas and knowledge. It is ridiculous to try to saddle the new economy with an old tax scheme.

Mr. Speaker, this is a great opportunity to say to the American people, we are going to throw it out. If we cannot devise a better system, we will put it back in. But the fact is we will devise a better system because we know the Jaguar needs a modern engine, not an old engine; and we want to make sure that the American people have the tools they need to drive this economy like it has never been seen before. If we do not do it, we will pay a price economically. If we do do it, there ain't no stopping the United States of America and the free market.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA).

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with everything the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) has just said. We have to rethink, relook and revise our current Tax Code. But we have not done that yet. And for us to put the cart before the horse, to repeal the current code before we have an agreement on that new code, is not only irresponsible, but I would reterm this legislation as a pig in a poke, because we do not know what is going to be the replacement code.

All week long before the Committee on Ways and Means, we have had hearings on three different types of alternatives to the current code, and the more questions we asked about the alternatives, the more questions went unanswered.

The most popular was the one introduced by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER). He is touting this as a national sales tax, and the rate he pegged within the committee was 23 percent. Upon questioning, we found out that it is not 23 percent, it was almost 30 percent, on every good and service produced in this country, prescription drugs, funeral services, everything. We talked to the Joint Committee on Taxation, which is a scientific committee, to give us expertise. They said that national sales tax, to be revenue neutral, would have to be a 59 percent rate. Is that what you are going to replace the current code with?

Interesting, I asked the gentleman a question. I said, Mr. LINDER, would the national sales tax apply to wages for municipal employees? He said, Oh, no, no, no, no. Then one of his staff persons poked him on the back and said, it is in the bill. It is in the bill. So the authors do not even know what their proposal is.

As the questioning developed, your municipality would have to pay the Federal Government 30 percent of their municipal wage base, because it is a service. And where would your municipalities get the money from? They would radically increase the property tax. In the City of Milwaukee, that would be a very, very bad mistake, because property taxes are relatively high.

So that is a half-baked idea. So my friend, we are not ready to go yet. I agree with one part of the bill of the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT), and that is the commission. We have had hearings, we have had experts come in all week. Have the commission work with us on something, and then we will come to the floor with a consensus change and then repeal the current Tax Code. Not repeal first. That is irresponsible.

The gentleman talked about the atomic bomb and how we dropped it on Japan and it ended the war. But what the gentleman's bill would do would drop the atomic bomb on us. That is silly.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, what is silly is to continue this current system.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. WAMP).

Mr. WAMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his leadership on this issue.

I certainly believe, Mr. Speaker, if the economy either turns down or experiences some restrictions, that the American people will be heard demanding change, because I still hear it a lot, frustration with this current Tax Code, people who are both paying too much in taxes and also experiencing too much red tape with this Tax Code, spending too much of their time wrestling with this Tax Code.

I really believe as the economy goes through its normal cycles and turns down, we will hear loud and clear that this is one of those issues that the American people demand change on, is a simpler, more fair tax system.

Frankly, welfare laws changed, not because of Republicans or Democrats, but because the American people demanded it. The budget is balanced not really because Republicans or Democrats, but because the American people demanded it. The American people are going to be demanding a more simple and fair Tax Code. I think ultimately those that come today against this legislation will support it, because the American people will demand it.

I would love to see our campaign finance laws change, but until the American people get more engaged, the folks up here are not going to change it. The American people need to lead this. We have presidential candidates now espousing certain philosophies. They need to be telling the American people what kind of Tax Code they will sign into law and, therefore, we need to take this action so that we have some limits, we have a firewall. We say we are going to do this, we have plenty of time, 4 years. The gentleman is being very reasonable setting up a time frame so that we can make these plans and get the presidential candidates to say yes, I will sign this.

We have at least three options: Either keep the current system; single rate income tax with fewer deductions; or wipe out the income tax and replace it with a national sales tax. Let the debate begin. Let the candidates for President, for Congress, declare what will you have, what will you sign, what will you agree to. The American people need a simpler Tax Code, they need lower taxes, they need less interference from the Federal Government, so that free enterprise system can continue to carry the world economy.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. JEFFERSON), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. JEFFERSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I do not understand what the disagreements are about here. In fact, there is so much agreement between their side and our side, I think we can close this debate out right now and say we all agree that our Tax Code is too complex, that it is too burdensome, that it is too hard to fill out the tax forms, and it does not work for a modern economy. We all agree with that.

The question is whether we are just going to talk today and come back again with sound and fury, which in the end will actually signify nothing. We need a replacement vehicle for our Tax Code. On that we all agree. And if it were true that this bill provided that, that would be good news for all Americans. We could all come and cheer, Democrats and Republicans alike. But sadly, it is not true, Mr. Speaker. The truth is we are no closer to eliminating the Tax Code today than we were when we started out talking about this because we have no replacement vehicle.

This business about putting a Volkswagen engine into a Jaguar, we would have the Jaguar first to put the engine in. We do not have the Jaguar to even talk about putting a Volkswagen engine in it. We do not have the replacement. Democrats know it, the Republicans know it, and it is really time now we make sure all of the American people know it to.

Democrats and Republicans both agree the Tax Code is too complex, that our current tax filings are too burdensome. So why can we not stop this political charade and get down to serious bipartisan tax reform. This bill is an invitation to put the ball on tax reform, rather than to tackle it. It amounts to throwing up our hands and giving it to a commission, handing it over to a commission, admitting to the American people who hired us that we cannot do the job.

Five years ago the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER), my good friend and our distinguished chairman, promised to abolish the Tax Code and replace it with a better system. I and many of my Democratic colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means applauded this goal and expressed our willingness to work together to achieve meaningful tax reform.

But instead of working together to reform our Nation's ailing tax system, to make it more simple and fair and efficient, my Republican colleagues have repeatedly introduced ridiculous legislation to eliminate the code, without offering any credible alternative system.

Telling the American people you are going to eliminate the Tax Code is sure to score political points. However, we all know that nothing can be done here without a system to replace it, and, as speakers before me have said, that will destroy our economy. No lesser expert than Chairman Greenspan, the number one authority on our economy, has said so.

So have my Republican friends forgotten that our duty as members of the Committee on Ways and Means is to develop tax policy and not to advance campaign politics? It is time for us to tell the American people the truth. We cannot abolish the tax system unless we develop another means of funding the government.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my Republican colleagues to replace irrationality with reason, to replace emotions with practicality, and to replace politics with sound policy. Support motion to recommit H.R. 4199 to be offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) with instructions to require Congress to enact comprehensive tax reform of the Tax Code prior to the July 4, 2004, sunset date. The American people deserve true tax reform, and not just political rhetoric.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CAMP)

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time. I want to commend the gentleman for his leadership on this important issue.

Mr. Speaker, we do agree that the Tax Code is complex and burdensome. I am sure these statistics have been cited before, but the IRS laws and regulations are currently 17,000 pages, more than 5½ million words. The complexity and difficulty of filling out the tax forms each year get worse and worse.

What this legislation will do is it will sunset the Tax Code in 4 years. Also what this legislation does is it creates a commission, and I want to commend also the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. PORTMAN, for his leadership not on a commission that helped us restructure the IRS, but also a commission contained within this bill which will help us replace our current income tax code.

This bipartisan commission is modeled on the IRS commission that was successful in 1996 and 1997. This will have 15 members appointed by the President, the Senate majority leader, the Speaker, and two appointed by the House and Senate minority leaders. It will have a short timetable. This commission will have to act within 18 months. If we do not, what is also in this legislation, which is new this time around, we will have to reauthorize it by 2004 if we do not adopt a new system of taxation. I think it is important we repeal the complex and difficult code. Any of these efforts are in the right direction.

I want to commend the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) and also the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) for helping make this a reality.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from New York for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, for 5 years we have heard the majority talk about changing the Tax Code and giving us something that is better. No one disagrees with that. All of us are here ready and prepared to discuss that. But now, for the last 5 years that we have been discussing it, nothing has been done. We have a bill on the floor that would say in about 4 years, let us get rid of the Tax Code we have, and who knows what we will replace it with?

Now, if we are brought up here to be responsible, here to Washington, D.C., then let us give the American people some sense of where we will go. If we cannot do that, then the frustration the American people have expressed with our Tax Code will just grow and grow and grow. Yes, they are all fed up with this current Tax Code. Rather than become more simple, it has become more complex over these last 5 years. What is to make it less complex over the next 4 years as we get ready to scrap it? All we are going to get ready to do is create chaos.

If you are an American and you are thinking of buying a home right now, what do you do? Do you buy right now, or wait 4 years from now? Because if we go with one of the ideas out there that we have a national sales tax replace our code where you would not have any more mortgage interest deductions and not be able to deduct the property taxes you pay on that home, should someone buy now, or wait 4 years? Because if you waited 4 years and there is a national sales tax, if you buy a $200,000 home and the sales tax is 30 percent, then you are paying 30 percent tax on that $200,000 purchase. Do you buy now or buy later?

What if you are someone who is planning for a funeral for an elderly parent? Do you buy your plot now for your parent, or later? Because if you have a national sales tax, you will pay 30 percent on the purchase of that plot or for that coffin.

Or what if you are elderly on a fixed income? What do you do about prescription drug coverage? Do you plan now to buy a whole bunch of drugs now, or wait until that sales tax kicks in at 30 percent? And the Joint Committee on Taxation, our Joint Committee on Taxation, which is to advise us on taxes, tells us that would probably be higher, about 50 to 60 percent. Do you buy drugs now, or wait?

This is sheer chaos. The only thing certain about this particular act is the date it would be enacted. But there is no certainty as to what we do with Americans and the taxes. What does the market do? How do we invest? Are we going to be able to have our monies invested in Roth IRAs, or will those be eliminated, so no longer can we put money in the investment accounts and say in the future we will not pay interest on them? What do we do? What is an investor to tell any American that is trying to save money? We have to give the American people some sense of what is going on. We have had 5 years of discussions, and we have not come up with anything.

So, yes, let us reform the code. Let us make it simpler. Let us make it so everyone believes it is fair. But let us give the American people some sense of where we are going. Let us not do anything that makes it less certain. The only thing certain about this bill is it makes it clear what date this is. This is an election year.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I would just point out that the previous speaker makes our point perfectly. The Tax Code controls whether we buy prescription drugs, houses, whether we save, whether we even invest, and that is not right.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DEMINT).

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. Speaker, this has been helpful, because it seems that we all agree that Americans deserve a fair and simple Tax Code that takes only the amount of their money that is needed to run a limited and efficient government.

□ 1530

We all seem to agree also that our current Tax Code does not meet this test, because it not only takes too much of our money, it controls a large part of our lives. Not only does it take over 5 billion hours of our time every year and billions of dollars of our money, it controls many of the decisions in our personal lives about our savings, about our investment, about our retirement. Even how we die is decided by the Tax Code.

In our businesses, when we decide whether to hire workers or contract that work out, or to buy or lease something, or to merge or to grow a business, just about everything we do in this country in some way is related to trying to manipulate a Tax Code that is so complex that even the experts cannot understand it.

The only question today, the only question is, do we have the courage to set a deadline to change it; do we have the courage to give the American people a commitment, rather than 5 more years of talk? We have proven we will not do it without a deadline.

It is not irresponsible to set a deadline, it is irresponsible to continue to give the American people talk without a deadline.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I am certain that the gentleman who just spoke did not mean that for the last 5 years that all we got from the Republican leadership is talk, but if he does, then we cannot have any guarantee. If things remain the same, then it would be an additional 5 years of talk.

Why do we not produce first, and then we will be in a position really to put in something, rather than just be against something.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, having authored the Texas Sunset Act during my service as a Texas State Senator, I believe there is merit in the sunset process. That Texas law limits the life of every State agency, and I am working with a bipartisan coalition here in Congress to apply the same concept to limit the life and require sunsetting of each of our Federal agencies.

Certainly our Tax Code could have a similar concept applied to it if done in the appropriate way. This Tax Code is overflowing with loopholes, it is permissive toward abusive corporate tax shelters, it is not fair to middle class taxpayers.

Under this Republican congressional leadership, it has only gotten worse. The Tax Code has gotten bigger, it has gotten more inequitable, it has been filled with more special interest provisions. We can all certainly remember the effort of the Republican House leadership to sneak through here a $50 billion tax credit for the tobacco industry hidden in a small business tax bill.

But the sunset process has to be applied in a systematic way, not as a political polemic. If we look at related provisions of the Tax Code together, we do not abolish the entire code without anything to replace it.

We all know how skilled our Republican colleagues are at railing against taxes. We have heard from them over and over all the taxes they do not like and all the reasons they do not like those taxes. But they seem to lose their ability to speak when it is time to talk about what tax system they would substitute. They are so very skilled about complaining about the tax system, but they lack skill in being able to offer a more fair and equitable system. After 5½ years, they have given us hearings and they have given us speeches, but they have given us no real alternative.

This week, however, we learned what they have in mind if this country has the misfortune of having to endure another 2 years of a Republican Congress.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KASICH) told us he did not want to saddle our new economy with an old tax system, but this week we learned they have a new tax for the new economy, a 60 percent tax on every online purchase.

They claim that they are still revolutionaries. If they want a real tax rebellion in this country, tell Americans that they are going to have to pay 60 percent on every online purchase and there will be an uproar.

That is the wrong system. That is what this is all about: enabling the Republicans to put in place a new tax on e-commerce. It is wrong and it ought to be rejected.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. JONES).

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I agree with both the Democratic side and the Republican side, this is an issue of great importance to the American people. It is not a Democrat or Republican issue, it is a people's issue. We are the people's House. We are elected by the people to come up here and make the decisions for them that hopefully will be the best decisions.

I want to say, because I have great respect for the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), as I do the gentleman from Texas (Chairman ARCHER), they are two men I really do have great respect for, but I think about the fact that prior to 1995, and I was not here, let me say that, but I do not remember reading in the paper where there was any debate on the floor of the House to even give tax relief, because I believe when we passed the tax relief bill in 1997 we were the first Congress in 16 years to give the American people tax relief.

I realize today we are talking about simplifying the Tax Code. I want to compliment my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma, because truthfully, yes, maybe we have been talking about this for 5 years, but the thing that is important, we are talking about it. Now we need to do something about it. If this effort by the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) will help us move further down the field, so to speak, so that we will reach the goalpost and we will change this tax system, that is what all this is about.

I do hope, I will say, quite frankly, in my town meetings, because in Eastern North Carolina, the biggest concern from the people that I have the privilege to represent, when I am in these town meetings what they say to me, is, Walter, go back is to Washington, get your colleagues on both sides of the political aisles to do something about this Tax Code, because it is out of control.

My own CPA, who is very qualified, tells me every year that I do my taxes, Walter, you all have to do something about this Tax Code. It is overburdening and it needs to be simplified.

Mr. Speaker, I hope today, truthfully, as we cast our votes this afternoon, that even though this is not perfect, this is the start that we need I think to force the Congress in the future to do something about this tax system and to make it simpler.

Quite frankly, I have written to Governor George Bush and I will encourage AL GORE to please do something to help the American people and simplify this tax system, and to debate the issue this fall.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL).

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me. I am honored to be here. I had with me just a few moments ago a couple of little exhibits I was going to take with me to the podium, but they had to go back to the gallery to their mother. They are from my home county, 4 years old and 6 years old. It is really for youngsters like them that we need to really look at this Code.

I think they would tell me, if they could understand, that they need a date certain Tax Code for this House to do something. That is not putting them under the gun too much. I will tell Members what it does, it tells us that we need to go out and come in again with a Code. The sensible part of it is that we are not going out before we come in.

The provisions are that we have to come in with a bill, a sensible bill to take the place of the Code before the Code goes out. I really do not see anything pressing about that. It simply says to us, get about your work now, and do not wait until the last day and rush in there and try to get it done.

I think it also knocks out estate tax, capital gains taxes, a lot of things that a lot of people want to knock out, but they are waiting to put it with something that is more desperate or tougher to pass. We will get a chance to get rid of those two things now, too.

A lot of us have signed onto one or both of the bills. I do not care what bill comes down the line, I think I am a coauthor on it. We need a change. That is not to say that everything about the present Code is bad or everybody that works for the IRS is bad. There are a lot of good people with the Treasury Department, and a lot of them are embarrassed about the actions of some in the Treasury Department.

I would just say, we need to go out and come back in again. When I say go out, I am talking about go out into the countryside, go out into the district, talk to Republicans, Democrats, talk to anyone in any occupation and ask them, would you like to have a new Tax Code? Do you like the Tax Code you are operating under?

I think that little 2-year-old and little 4-year-old and 6-year-old that were here that I was going to use as exhibits, I think they would tell us 10 out of 10, yes, we need a new Code. That Code was brought in when our grandfather was not even born. We need a new Code.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN).

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to come to Washington and hear a sales tax is going to be the tax panacea and give us fairness and simplicity. Because before I came here, I spent 6 years running the largest sales tax agency in the country. Let me tell the Members, sales tax laws have the same kind of special interest provisions that we come across in the Internal Revenue Code.

Sales tax laws can affect what we do and what our behavior is, and let me give one example. We would need a 60 percent sales tax rate in order to replace existing Federal taxes. There is much debate on the floor today as to whether that rate would apply to those purchases made over the Internet. Who is going to buy a sweater or a television set at the local mall if it is 60 percent cheaper online? So we may have a sales tax code designed to take the Federal government out of involvement in private decisions leading to closing every mall in America. That is a significant private effect.

Finally, we are told that the sales tax, the national sales tax, would be fair. What is fair about a law that says that Steve Forbes can go make a $10 million profit, invest it all in a villa on the Italian Riviera, and not pay a single penny in American taxes?

Mr. Speaker, this bill pretends to impose a deadline, but it is really just a show line, because in Washington whenever we do not want to do anything at all, we appoint a commission. The commission will come back in several years, tell us what we already know, that it would take a 60 percent sales tax rate to replace existing taxes, and then that commission's report would be thrown away and the existing code would be reenacted.

Let us have real reform, Code section by Code section.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time to close.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I think the discussion has been good and healthy, especially during this time of the year, when American taxpayers recognize the complexity of the Code.

One of the previous speakers from the other side said for the last 5 years all we have done is talk about changing the Code. I would like to believe that if they are in the majority and in charge of the tax-writing committee, that instead of talking about changing the Code, they would have changed the Code, if they had the votes to do it.

On the other hand, I think the most frightening thing about this argument is what do we replace it with. No matter how much we complain about the complexity and the unfairness and the inequity of the Code, I do not think that any American would support just changing the Code until they fully understood what impact the new Code would have on them in their lives. We have not the faintest idea as to what we would replace it with.

The best idea, in my opinion, that came from the other side as to what we would replace the Code with, it would be with a 15-person commission, taking it out of the hands of the Congress, having four Members appointed from the Congress and the rest of them private citizens, to come back to the Congress to tell the American people what the new Code should be. I do not think that is right. Commissioners do not get elected, we do.

It is no profile in courage on the eve of tax payment day to come here and talk about they do not like the Code. No one likes the Code in its present form. What does take courage is to say that, I am in the majority, we are proud of it, we are doing something about it, here is the new Internal Revenue Code. We ask Americans to come forward and to vote for it.

Now we are saying let us sunset what we are talking about. Well, at the appropriate time, what I hope to do is to say that if we do have this new code, maybe in the motion to recommit we might be willing to consider just a question of making the code equitable, making it fair, making certain we do not tax prescription drugs, that we do not hurt people in terms of the deduction of mortgage interest. At least send some signal as to what is being talked about.

There are a half a dozen bills over there. The commission has not even gotten up to what my dear friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN), is talking about. We do not know who is going to be on that commission, and I think that is going to be very, very important before we determine what we are doing. So I hope that we turn down this offer and support the motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time to close.

Mr. Speaker, this has been a great debate, as my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), has said. It is an important debate. This is a good time to have this debate. Many taxpayers are filing their tax returns as we speak. We have heard the numbers, 5.4 billion hours that we spend doing tax returns. That would cost somewhere around $225 billion wasted to file those tax returns.

If someone calls the IRS and they ask them a question about their tax returns, statistics show 47 percent of the time the IRS gets the answer wrong. If one fills in the blank with the answer the IRS gives them, they punish that person; they can give them a penalty and charge them interest for taxes they did not pay.

Here is a 1040–EZ form, the easiest way to file a tax return in this country. Along with it, a 32-page document explaining how to file the 1040–EZ form.

Here is an article from the Wall Street Journal, three organizations which will urge Congress later this week to simplify the tax laws. Want to know who those groups are? The American Bar Association Tax Section; the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants, Tax Division; and the Tax Executives Institute. The experts are saying, please, simplify the Tax Code.

The experts do not understand the Tax Code. How can the American people understand the Tax Code?

If anyone has listened to this debate for the last couple of hours, what they will understand is nobody is defending the current code. The left is not defending the current Tax Code. The right is not defending the current Tax Code. No one is.

In fact, one of my personal heroes talking about replacing the Tax Code says the American taxpayers deserve better than they got on tax reform. We have an outdated, complicated, unfair system that should be abolished so that we can start over. Decades of toying and tinkering at the margins have only made problems worse, and I conclude that there is only one way to fix anything and that is to replace everything, to overhaul the entire system from top to bottom. Our Tax Code has become a dense fog of incentives and inducements and penalties that distort the most basic economic decisions, constrain the free market and make it hard for Americans to run their lives. The current system is indefensible.

The speaker of those quotes: The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the distinguished minority leader.

So with all of those people saying the Tax Code is bad and we need to replace it, why has it not been replaced?

I will freely acknowledge and confess to my friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), Republicans have been in the majority for 5½ years. We have not done anything about it. We have not gotten rid of the Tax Code. We have made it worse, as he said. It has gotten heavier, more complex, with Republicans in control. What he did not say was we have been in control for 5½ years, but the Democrats were in control for 40 years and they had the same problem.

It is endemic to Democrats. It is endemic to Republicans. We have the same problem. Why are we not doing something about it? It is because we do not have to. What this bill is about is saying to Congress, what Congress so freely says to the rest of the Americans on every bill that we pass, that they have to do this by this date, we are now saying to Congress, to ourselves, confessing our own failure and not doing what the American people are begging us to do, we are going to impose a date on Congress and we are going to say we have to replace this stinking Tax Code in 4 years and 3 months from today.

I think when this bill passes this House that there will be an audible ovation around the country saying, here, here, it is about time Congress did something about the Tax Code.

Here is the bill. It is very simple. This is not a complicated bill. It is 15 pages long. If one has not read it, shame on them. We vote today. We have 4 years and 3 months before we replace the code; July 4, Independence Day, 2004, we replace the code. We get a report from a commission to do what we need to do, to look at all of the options that are out there, flat tax, consumption tax and every variety in between. Then 6 months after that the old Tax Code is gone.

Mr. Speaker, I will just conclude by saying that it is time. We need to just do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 473, the previous question is ordered on the bill, as amended.

The question is on engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. RANGEL

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. RANGEL. Yes, I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. RANGEL moves to recommit the bill H.R. 4199 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. COMPREHENSIVE REFORM OF TAX CODE.

(a) DEADLINE.—Congress shall enact a comprehensive reform of the Tax Code not later than July 4, 2004.

(b) PRINCIPLES.—Any comprehensive reform of the Tax Code shall be consistent with the following principles:

(1) Such reform shall be fiscally responsible and it shall not endanger a balanced budget nor use funds devoted to the social security system.

(2) Such reform shall be fair to all income classes.

(3) Such reform shall emphasize simplicity, thereby resulting in a Tax Code that is less complicated.

(c) CONSEQUENCES OF PENDING RETAIL SALES TAX PROPOSALS TO BE AVOIDED.—In no event shall the comprehensive reform enacted pursuant to this section include the following aspects of pending legislation proposing a retail sales tax as a replacement for the current tax code:

(1) HEALTH CARE SHOULD NOT BE JEOPARDIZED.—The imposition of a retail sales tax on prescription drugs and other health care goods and services thereby—

(A) further increasing hardships on the elderly and other individuals dealing with high drug prices,

(B) increasing the cost of nursing home care and other long-term care services,

(C) accelerating the insolvency of the medicare system by increasing the cost of goods and services reimbursed by medicare, and

(D) increasing the cost of health insurance and thereby increasing the number of uninsured.

(2) FEDERAL TAX BURDEN SHOULD NOT BE SHIFTED TO STATES.—The imposition of a retail sales tax on goods and services (including wages of government employees) purchased by State and local governments, thereby forcing State and local governments either to drastically reduce the level of services provided to their citizens or to dramatically increase State tax burdens.

(3) NATIONAL DEFENSE SHOULD NOT BE ENDANGERED.—The imposition of a retail sales tax on goods and services purchased by the Federal Government, thereby endangering the National defense by increasing the cost to the Federal Government of meeting its military needs.

(4) COSTS OF OWNING OR RENTING A HOME SHOULD NOT INCREASE.—The imposition of a retail sales tax on purchases of new homes and on rentals of apartments and other residences, thereby threatening the ability of many individuals to afford adequate housing.

(5) INTERNET SHOULD NOT BE SUBJECT TO RETAIL SALES TAX.—The imposition of a retail sales tax on Internet access.

(d) CONSEQUENCES OF PENDING FLAT TAX PROPOSALS TO BE AVOIDED.—In no event shall the comprehensive reform enacted pursuant to this section include the following aspects of pending legislation proposing a flat tax:

(1) BURDEN OF FINANCING SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE SHOULD NOT INCREASE.—An increase in the burden of the social security and medicare payroll taxes by denying employers a deduction for those taxes when none of the additional revenues raised by increasing the burden of those taxes is devoted to the social security or medicare trust funds.

(2) COSTS OF OWNING A HOME SHOULD NOT INCREASE.—The elimination of current law subsidies for home ownership by repealing the deductions for mortgage interest and real estate taxes.

(3) COSTS OF EMPLOYER-PROVIDED HEALTH CARE SHOULD NOT INCREASE.—The imposition of substantial penalties on employers who provide health care coverage for their employees, thereby increasing the number of individuals without private health insurance.

(4) BURDEN OF STATE AND LOCAL TAXATION SHOULD NOT INCREASE.—An increase in the burden of State and local taxes by denying any deduction for those taxes, including taxes paid by businesses in the ordinary course of their operations.

(5) CHARITABLE CONTRIBUTIONS SHOULD NOT BE DISCOURAGED.—The repeal all current tax incentives for charitable giving at a time when the congressional majority is increasingly attempting to shift the burden of meeting the needs of the poor and disadvantaged to private organizations.

(6) RUNAWAY PLANTS SHOULD NOT BE ENCOURAGED.—Encouraging United States corporations to move their businesses overseas by taxing their domestic operations but exempting their foreign operations from tax.

(7) TAX BURDENS ON FARMERS AND SMALL BUSINESSES SHOULD NOT INCREASE.—A dramatic increase in the tax burden on family farms and small businesses that rely on debt financing or have substantial amounts of currently depreciable assets by repealing the deduction for interest and eliminating depreciation deductions for existing assets.

(e) REGRESSIVITY OF PENDING FLAT TAX PROPOSALS AND RETAIL SALES TAX PROPOSALS TO BE AVOIDED.—In no event shall the comprehensive reform enacted pursuant to this section include the substantial and regressive shift of the burden of Federal taxation as under pending flat tax and retail sales tax proposals.

Mr. PORTMAN (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will continue reading the motion to recommit.

The Clerk continued reading the motion to recommit.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. THOMAS (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, is it appropriate, since it has been objected to, dispensing with the reading, to inquire how many pages there are that will be read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk is about finished. The Clerk will continue reading the motion to recommit.

The Clerk continued reading the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) is recognized for 5 minutes on his motion to recommit.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I urge everyone to vote for this motion to recommit, on the basis of a letter which we got from the Tax Executive Institute of the United States. It is all the corporate executives of the country who said these proposals reflect either a misapprehension of the importance of certainty and predictability to business enterprise and individuals or a disregard for the consequences of terminating the tax structure. They illustrate the folly of making tax policy by sound bite and should be rejected.

Former directors of the Internal Revenue Service, both Republicans and Democrats, wrote that this approach does not meet the standards of reasoned and responsible legislation. Now, if it were for only one issue here, I would say that was why we should go back to the committee and add at least one protection for health care. Companies can deduct right now what they spend on health care for their employees. They would lose that here because that is part of the income Tax Code. So that means there would be no incentive for any major company in my district or anybody else's to provide health insurance.

Also, individuals would lose the tax deductibility of what they purchased so they would not only lose it from their employer but they would lose it on an individual basis. Then when they went out and paid for it, they would have to pay a sales tax on not only the policy they bought but everything that they bought in the process of having their health care taken care of, including prescription drugs.

Yesterday everybody was walking in here saying that the Republicans have come out with their principles about how to provide a prescription drug benefit for the senior citizens in this country who on average spend $2,500 out-of-pocket paying for pharmaceuticals. Now I guess it makes sense to the Republicans to come out here and propose that they are going to slap a $250 tax on every senior citizen when they buy their drugs. Vote for the motion.

□ 1600

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, the majority party clearly has shown their unity on the question of sunsetting and polishing the Internal Revenue Code at some time in the future, 2004. I guess that is pretty courageous to say on the eve of April 15 that they want to get rid of this code.

We do not know whether they have enough votes to come back with something before we get out of session. We have not the slightest clue as to what they would replace it with.

So we are saying this, if they are going to overwhelm us with their votes and abolish the code, we ask them to support the motion to recommit at least to put some protections in it for the taxpayer for the American people; that it be fiscally responsible; that whatever they come up with, that it is fair; that it be certainly more simple than the code that they are trying to replace; that they not pick up some of these ideas that are floating in their side about taxing prescription drugs; that they do not make home purchasing more difficult by eliminating the deduction of mortgage interest. For God's sake, do not hurt charitable giving by removing the deductibility. Do not hurt our schools, our churches, our synagogues and our mosques.

We do have a pretty progressive tax system. From what I have heard with some of the things that are being considered on the other side, it might be a little too difficult for the working poor.

We also are asking in the motion to recommit that our colleagues do not restructure the tax system so that they are shifting the burden to local and State governments because they have enough.

Our concern also deals with the Internet with the structuring of some of the recommendations they are making that would put a 60 percent increase in the sales tax on the Internet. Well, we do not know where they are going, and they do not either. All we know is that they want to get rid of the code as we see it.

Maybe if we are lucky, we can get someone of the caliber of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) to sit on this 15-person commission. Other than that, I do not know who even would be on the commission to come and tell us what we should be doing. If they do a good enough job, maybe we do not even need the Committee on Ways and Means. If that works for the tax-writing committee, maybe we can get a commission for the Committee on Appropriations and a commission for the Committee on Commerce.

I know we have not done much work around here in the last couple of years, but I hate to see the day that we just set up commissions to do our legislative work. But I support the motion to recommit, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Does the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) claim the time in opposition?

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am claiming the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH).

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio and fellow member of the Committee on Ways and Means for the yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard from the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) a typical lament that is really based in the realm of political science fiction, because typical of the motions to recommit, it basically says, golly, gee, there really should be some tax reform. But rather than commit to it, we will throw out a variety of ideas, a grab bag for you and say that, oh, yeah, us, too. We really want to see reform in the code. But not now.

The gentleman from New York laments what he says is a lack of cooperation and communication between the sides of the Committee on Ways and Means. Yet, in this tax summit, when the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the Democratic leader, was invited to offer his plan for a 10 percent code, he declined. How can we have honest communication?

Reject the motion to recommit. Vote for the bill.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), champion on this issue.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, this motion to recommit takes away the sunset. It says we are going to keep this good old income Tax Code a lot longer. Maybe if we come up with a new one, we will get rid of it one day.

The bill sets the sunset. It says this income Tax Code that ravages Americans ought to go. We ought to pull it out by its roots so it does not grow back again. We ought to come up with a simple, clean, decent one for Americans again.

Mr. Speaker, the power to tax is the power to destroy. My colleagues ought to think about what this current code does. It punishes one for earning income, for saving, for investing, for giving things to one's kids in life through the gift tax and for giving things to them when one dies through the death tax.

It even punishes one when one buys American-made products. According to the Harvard study, it adds 25 percent to the cost of everything we make and consume in America.

It taxes one coming. It taxes one going. It taxes one when one earns income and when one spends it. We ought to get rid of it. This bill gets rid of it.

This motion to recommit says let us keep it. If my colleagues want to keep it, vote for the recommit. If they want to get rid of it, vote against the motion to recommit.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am now reading the Democrat motion to recommit, and it is interesting. It lays out a set of principles. I, frankly, do not think it is inconsistent with the underlying bill. But it does not get the job done.

It does not do anything to force this Congress and this administration to come to grips with this problem. It does not sunset the code. It does not set up a commission. It does not say that we have to deal with this problem.

Now, if we are not going to come to grips with it, if we are not going to begin the process of getting rid of an overly complex, overly burdensome, overly intrusive Internal Revenue Code, then we are not serving our constituents.

This is a good bill. What this bill that the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT) put together does is very simple. It does say, over a 4-year period of time, we ought to sunset the code. In the meantime, though, we are going to put together a bipartisan, bicameral commission that forces the administration to work with Congress to come up with analyses of the various proposals out there, allow some public education on this issue, go out among the people, yes, bring in outside expertise, not rely on Congress to provide every answer. We do not have a monopoly on all the good answers. Then come back and report to Congress, after 18 months, as to what they have learned.

Congress then does its work, and the Committee on Ways and Means and the finance committee in this House does its work, and the elected Representatives make the decision. But this is responsible.

Then, very importantly, if Congress still cannot come to grips with this issue, cannot do what is right for the American people, then the legislation says specifically that Congress must vote to reauthorize the existing Tax Code. There is no uncertainty here.

I have heard speakers come up and say this creates great uncertainty. This does not create great uncertainty. What it creates is a great potential for us to move this country forward on an issue that is absolutely essential to the well-being of our constituents and to the prosperity of this country in the 21st Century.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PORTMAN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, we heard the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL). I congratulate the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) on his knowledge and his wisdom in the area.

Mr. PORTMAN. Do not hold that against me.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, given that fact that I agree with it, is the gentleman from Ohio for or against the motion to recommit?

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I am glad the gentleman from California asked. I urge my colleagues to vote ''no'' on the motion to recommit because it does not get the job done, as well meaning as it might be, and to support, strongly support, on a bipartisan basis the responsible legislation this year, which establishes the ability for us to actually move forward on this issue that we talk and talk and talk about and deliver for our constituents and the American people.

Vote ''no'' on the motion to recommit. Vote ''yes'' on the underlying bill.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am in total agreement that the IRS tax code is confusing. In fact, I affirm making the tax code more understandable for average Americans. I even hope to address outdated tax issues such as the telephone excise tax adopted a century ago to help fund the Spanish American War in 1898 and re-imposed during World War I, which is still with us today.

However, this bill is another attempt by the Republicans to enact irresponsible legislation. The notion that Congress should abolish most of the tax code by December 31, 2004 is not in the best interest of America's hard working families. The Republicans are offering this bill with no viable alternative to the tax code in place.

The notion that we can enact legislation essentially eliminating the tax code without a well-reasoned alternative is a violation of the public trust. This measure is nothing more than another election year ploy designed by the Republicans around tax time. This is nothing more than a tax gift to the special interests that would like nothing more than to scrap the tax code. The termination of the tax code has become a top priority of the Republican agenda. To vote for this bill without coming forward with a credible alternative to finance our government's operations is playing our nation's taxpayers for fools.

The most glaring aspect of this measure is the fact the if we pass a bill which terminates the tax code between now and December 21, 2002, our entire economy will be in a state of confusion. The capital markets do not like uncertainty in our country's fiscal policy.

Our industrial and commercial sectors will not have the certainty and predictability required to have an efficient economy. If we pass this bill it is highly likely that the long period of prosperity enjoyed by our nation will soon end. How long can our economy operate without knowing what the tax consequences of their investment decisions will yield? We have come too far from the days of recession in 1991 to take actions that will threaten the hard won progress made to date.

State and local governments that issue tax-exempt municipal bonds with low interest rates to finance capital activity: If we eliminate the tax code without assuring current holders of tax-exempt municipal bonds of their tax status many Americans will be adversely affected.

What about home mortgages? The home mortgage deduction is one of the linchpins of the American dream. Without it, many moderate and low-income Americans would not be able to own their homes. The tax deductibility of home mortgages is not only a great advantage, but it also impacts the entire home builder and mortgage industry that relies on a healthy housing market.

The Scrap the Tax Code Act deserves to be scrapped itself. This bill has nothing but the interest of the wealthy who seek tax relief on the backs of our nation's workers. Let us get onto serious legislation such as gun control, strengthening Social Security and Medicare, as well as paying down the national debt. If we need to have additional hearings on improving the tax code I am in favor of looking at alternatives. Our people deserve more than election year gimmicks; they deserve serious legislators who produce meaningful legislation that puts families first. Thank you and God bless America.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Date Certain Tax Code Replacement Act.

I strongly support reforming the nation's tax code to make it fairer, simpler, and less burdensome on the American people. Unfortunately, rather than advancing a constructive tax reform measure, the leadership has proposed a political gimmick—a bill to terminate the tax code without saying what sort of system should replace it. This bill is not only the height of political cynicism, but, if enacted, it could have serious negative consequences for American families, farmers, and businesses.

Families and businesses rely on the tax treatment of certain expenditures in making their financial decisions. For example, employers budget for the health and pension benefits of their workers based on the tax deductibility of these expenses. With the uncertainty created by this legislation, however, employers might very well freeze health and retirement benefits until their tax treatment is determined. In fact, employers might even reduce benefits as a hedge against Congress deciding not to extend the tax deductibility of employee benefits. Likewise, the value of American homes would be adversely impacted as the real estate market would wait to see whether Congress would continue the mortgage interest deduction.

For farmers, the consequences would be even more severe. On the Upper Great Plains, farmers are already struggling with low market prices, adverse growing conditions, and a farm policy that includes no safety net. Even with the best financial planning and management, many farmers are finding it nearly impossible to make ends meet. Farming is, by nature, a highly risky proposition. Added uncertainty about the deductibility of interest on operating loans, equipment and land would move farming from risky to almost foolhardy.

I believe that North Dakotans want fundamental tax reform. However, they're unwilling to buy a "pig in a poke," especially when it relates to taxes. They want to see what system is being proposed as a replacement before simply terminating the code and giving a blank check to Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to reject this legislation and to get to work on real meaningful tax reform.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I've been trying to figure out just what this bill really is, and I've got it narrowed down to two choices. Either this is a belated April Fool's prank or it's the scariest thing since last Halloween.

The idea that Congress would repeal all Federal income, estate and gift and excise tax laws without a plan for how to replace them sounds like a joke. But for anybody who's trying to plan, it's not funny. How can a company decide whether to make a multi-year investment if it doesn't know what will be the basis for future tax laws? How can people decide how to invest for their retirement if they don't know what Congress might decide to do about the tax status of their investments?

If the sponsors of this bill are serious—and they are asking us to assume that they are—then they are being remarkably careless. If they aren't serious—and it's tempting to treat this as a joke—then they seem pretty irresponsible. Either way, this is not the kind of legislation that we should be debating today or any day.

But, here it is and we do have to vote. So, I will support the motion to recommit because it would at least fill in some of the blanks in the bill. It would spell out that any replacement for the income and excise tax laws has to be fiscally responsible and not endanger Social Security or Medicare. It would require that the replacement taxes emphasize simplicity and be fair to people at all income levels. And it would rule out any new federal sales taxes on prescription drugs and other health-care necessities or on home purchases and rentals. I think most Americans would agree that these are pretty basic principles that should be followed in shaping any new tax system.

In short, Mr. Speaker, while I don't think the way to go about the hard work of reform is to burn down the house in hopes of putting up something better, we should at least define "better" before we start the fire.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I adamantly oppose H.R. 4199, a bill to sunset the current Internal Revenue Code without a replacement plan. It is completely ludicrous to bring legislation to the floor that will eliminate the only Tax Code the U.S. Government has to collect revenue and pay for entitlements and various programs. This bill suggests to the American people that in four years, the 108th Congress will come up with a plan to replace the current system, but there are no guarantees. The bill before us today is irresponsible, negligent and hypocritical.

I. IRRESPONSIBLE—NO NEED FOR A COMMISSION

Last year's failed Medicine Commission provides ample evidence that the last thing Congress needs is another commission upon which to place its responsibility.

This bill hands over the responsibility to tax U.S. income to yet another commission. Congress already has an "in-House" commission to address problems with the current Tax Code—it's called the Ways and Means Committee. But the Committee on Ways and Means didn't hold a hearing or a markup on the bill before us today. In fact, we've had hearings all week on fundamental tax reform; yet H.R. 4199 was never brought before the Committee.

It's high time the leadership stops the charade and works in a bipartisan fashion to address critical problems facing working Americans.

II. NEGLIGENT—NO REPLACEMENT PLAN

This bill neglects to offer a plan in the event that the 108th Congress doesn't actually come up with an alternative approach to current U.S. taxes.

Are we to assume that one of the recent proposals before the Ways and Means Committee will replace the current Code? I would imagine that the GOP's leading testimony on H.R. 2525, the Fair Tax Act, would be a proposal of consideration. If this is the case, then I must fiercely warn my colleagues against supporting H.R. 4199.

The Joint Committee on Taxation—a bipartisan and bicameral Congressional Committee—has concluded that the Fair Tax Act, the leading proposal at this week's Ways & Means tax hearing, will need to impose a near 60 percent tax on goods and services in the U.S. in order to remain revenue neutral. I have a chart here (see attached) to show how this will effect the price of top selling seniors' prescription drugs. Seniors are currently struggling to pay for their prescription drugs and often have to go without them. It is unfathomable that the leadership would want to scrap the current Code only to suggest that proposals as awful as the Fair Tax Act await its replacement.

The GOP has had 5 years to devise a better way to tax U.S. income. But for the past five years all they have given us is an April 15 song and dance.

III. THIS BILL IS HYPOCRITICAL AND HOLLOW

I believe the gentleman from Texas, Mr. ARMEY, is sincere about trying to obtain health insurance for the 44 million Americans without it through a refundable tax cut credit, but we won't reach this goal by ripping out the existing tax code by its roots without replacing it first with a system of either refundable tax credits or subsidies for employer-provided health insurance.

I oppose the current tax structure with respect to the treatment of the pharmaceutical industry and I did something about it. I have introduced a couple of bills that address the unfair tax treatment given to pharmaceutical companies.

I have introduced H.R. 4089, the Save Money for Prescription Drug Research Act of 2000 to deny tax deductions to pharmaceutical firms for spending on unnecessary promotions and gifts (other than drug samples) to physicians. These drug companies currently deduct a portion of the over $11 billion spent per year on very questionable physician gifts. This bill encourages dedication of these funds for a much more important use—pharmaceutical research and development.

I have also introduced H.R. 3665, the Prescription Price Equity Act of 2000 which would deny research tax credits to pharmaceutical companies that sell their products at significantly higher prices in the U.S. as compared to their sales in other industrialized nations.

My bills accomplish something. My bills address the fact that drug company profits are over three times greater than the average profits of all other U.S. industries while U.S. seniors spend more money on medications than seniors in other parts of the world.

We must have a tax plan in place to ensure that our seniors will receive affordable prescription drugs and that the uninsured have access to health care before we hastily scrap our current Tax Code.

I urge my colleagues to oppose H.R. 4199, the Date Certain Tax Replacement Act and support the motion to recommit.

REPUBLICAN TAX PROPOSALS WILL MAKE YOU SICK

Top selling seniors' prescription drugs	Manufacturer	Use	Average retail price for uninsured seniors	Retail price after Linder-Peterson tax [1]	Retail price after Fair Tax Act of 1999 [2]
Zocor	Merck	Cholesterol	$107.66	$139.96	$172.26
Norvasc	Pfizer, Inc	High Blood Pressure	118.96	154.65	190.34
Prilosec	Astra/Merck	Ulcers	117.56	152.83	188.10
Procardia XL	Pfizer, Inc	Heart Problems	133.22	173.19	213.15
Zoloft	Pfizer, Inc	Depression	223.61	290.69	357.78

[1] Reps. Linder and Collin Peterson's proposal will impose a 30% national retail sales tax.

[2] According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, the Fair Tax Act of 1999 would require a 59.5% sales tax rate to be revenue neutral over five years. We assume this would cause a 60% increase in prices to consumers.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member opposes H.R. 4199, the Tax Code Termination Act.

Before going into the reasoning behind this opposition, this Member would like to preface his comments by the following statement. This Member unequivocally believes that substantial but very careful reform is needed for the U.S. tax code. Examples abound of inefficiencies and counterproductive elements of the Internal Revenue Code as it operates today. However, this Member opposes H.R. 4199 for the following four reasons:

(1) This Member does not think that we should delay decision-making as H.R. 4199 provides. We need to decide today's issues today and not defer them to tomorrow.

(2) H.R. 4199 fails for its lack of precision. H.R. 4199 would sunset the current tax code effective December 31, 2004. It is certainly not legislatively, statutorily wise to decide to eliminate the tax code without determining a revenue alternative to replace it with. If such major action should be taken as contemplated by H.R. 4199, a precise alternative Federal tax system needs to be simultaneously decided.

(3) This Member does not support this legislation because it could dramatically discourage investment and cause economic chaos as investors are faced with great uncertainty. If H.R. 4199 is passed, Americans will be in a state of great confusion and apprehension until a replacement tax code is enacted, which could be as late as July 4, 2004. Members of the House need to really consider the decisions that would face businesses and their constituents in this environment of uncertainty. For example, can a corporation make a prudent investment decision if they do not know what the tax consequences of that decision will be just a few years hence? No, they cannot. Will investors continue to be as ready to buy tax-exempt bonds if they are not sure whether this tax exempt status will continue? No, they will not.

Another example of the potentially very negative effects of H.R. 4199 relates to the mortgage interest deduction. A young family which desires to purchase a home for the first time will not know if they can count on a mortgage interest deduction in the future if H.R. 4199 is passed. In fact, this uncertainty may be enough to deter someone from purchasing a house until a replacement tax code is in place.

(4) H.R. 4199 would have a negative effect on state and local entities. The tax benefits, for example, of the investors in public bonds would be negatively affected by the uncertainty created by H.R. 4199. Certainly, local school districts could be adversely affected, along with most other varieties of local governmental bodies.

Mr. Speaker, for these four reasons, just briefly described, this Member must oppose H.R. 4199. We need a fundamental re-examination of America's Federal tax code and it should begin now, but rash action like H.R. 4199 is most assuredly not the way to proceed. Its enactment would have a chilling effect upon our economy and cause greater difficulty in public and private decision-making. All that is lacking to begin such a comprehensive review and reform of our Federal system of taxation is the will or commitment to begin and the organizational and legislative skills to implement such changes. With such a narrow majority in this House, it will also take bipartisan cooperation and good will.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for electronic voting on final passage.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 191, nays 228, not voting 15, as follows:

Mr. WOLF and Mr. LEACH changed their vote from ''nay'' to ''yea.''

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 127, I was unavoidably detained and unable to be present for the vote. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 127 I inserted my card in the voting machine and voted "aye". The board was closing and the vote did not register. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes."

Stated against:

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent on a matter of critical importance and missed the following vote:

On H.R. 4199, to terminate the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. LARGENT, I would have voted "nay."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I was regrettably detained this afternoon when the votes were taken on H.R. 4199. On the Motion to Recommit, I would have voted "yea." On final Passage, I would have voted "nay."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed without amendment a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 303. Concurrent resolution providing for a conditional adjournment of the House of Representatives and a conditional adjournment or recess of the Senate.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1824

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1824.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

RURAL LOCAL BROADCAST SIGNAL ACT

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House of today, I call up the bill (H.R. 3615) to amend the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 to ensure improved access to the signals of local television stations by multichannel video providers to all households which desire such service in unserved and underserved rural areas by December 31, 2006, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute considered as adopted to H.R. 3615 under the order of the House of earlier today be an amendment in the nature of a substitute that I have now placed at the desk which shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that this version of the substitute has been changed in section 4 from the version of the substitute approved by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Speaker, can the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) please reassure me that cooperative lenders, such as CoBank and the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation, are still eligible to participate in the loan program under this bill?

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENHOLM. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. CFC is specifically eligible to participate under the terms of the revised bill, and CoBank is an eligible participant for loans made in accordance with the regulations of the Federal Farm Credit Administration and its governing statute.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman very much for that assurance.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that these cooperative lenders are eligible to participate. Their demonstrated expertise, capacity, capital strength, and experience in providing financing to rural utility bars should help to make this program a success.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

□ 1645

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the bill is considered read for amendment.

The text of H.R. 3615 is as follows:

H.R. 3615

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Rural Local Broadcast Signal Act''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) In 1936, most of the rural United States did not have access to electrical service enjoyed by the rest of the United States, and this lack of electrical service inhibited economic development in the rural areas of the United States.

(2) In response to this lack of service, Congress enacted the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (also known as the Norris-Rayburn Rural Electrification Act) which established the Rural Electric Administration to ensure that all Americans have access to electrical service and to promote rural development.

(3) The program under the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 has successfully brought electricity to all parts of the rural United States and has stimulated rural development throughout the United States.

(4) In 1949, most of the rural United States did not have access to telephone service enjoyed by the rest of the United States, and this lack of electrical service inhibited economic development in the rural areas of the United States.

(5) In response to this lack of service, Congress amended the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 to assure that the rural United States has access to telecommunications services, including telephone services, distance learning, and telemedicine in order to promote rural development.

(6) The programs under these amendments have successfully brought telecommunications to all parts of the United States and has stimulated rural development throughout the United States.

(7) Public Law 93–32 amended the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 to establish a revolving fund for insured and guaranteed loans.

(8) The reorganization of the Department of Agriculture by Public Law 103–354 created the Rural Utilities Service (RUS) within the Department of Agriculture and assigned it the responsibility for administering programs of federally-guaranteed loans.

(9) The Rural Utilities Service now manages a portfolio of federally-guaranteed loans in excess of $42,000,000,000.

(10) The Rural Utilities Service has granted loans for the purpose of telecommunications services to more than 800 borrowers, including telephone and electricity cooperatives, in all States of the United States.

(11) Local television coverage is vitally important for rural development efforts.

(12) Local television programming broadcasts crop reports, local news, weather reports, public service announcements, and advertisements by local businesses, all of which are important for rural development.

(13) In today's age of modern communications, rural communities often receive the majority of their information from satellite platforms.

(14) The rest of the United States, including most of the rural United States, is not able to receive local television signals via satellite.

(15) Without access to local television signals, the development of the rural United States is greatly inhibited.

(16) Just as important public purposes were served by bringing electricity to the rural United States and then by bringing telephone service to the rural United States, so the United States would be served by ensuring that the rural United States can receive local television signals via satellite.

(17) It is in the public interest that the Rural Utilities Service of the Department of Agriculture utilize existing and new loan guarantee programs to promote rural development by ensuring that the rural United States has access to the signals of local television stations by multichannel video providers.

SEC. 3. RURAL LOCAL TELEVISION SIGNALS.

The Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 901 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"TITLE VI—RURAL LOCAL TELEVISION SIGNALS

"SEC. 501. DEFINITIONS.

''In this title:

''(1) ADMINISTRATOR.—The term 'Administrator' means the Administrator of the Rural Utilities Service.

''(2) AFFILIATE.—The term 'affiliate' means any person or entity that controls, or is controlled by, or is under common control with, another person or entity.

''(3) BORROWER.—The term 'borrower' means any person or entity receiving a loan guarantee under this title.

''(4) COST.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'cost' means the estimated long-term cost to the Government of a loan guarantee or modification thereof, calculated on a net present value basis, excluding administrative costs and any incidental effects on governmental receipts or outlays.

''(B) LOAN GUARANTEES.—For purposes of this paragraph the cost of a loan guarantee—

''(i) shall be the net present value, at the time when the guaranteed loan is disbursed, of the estimated cash flows of—

''(I) payments by the Government to cover defaults and delinquencies, interest subsidies, or other payments; and

''(II) payments to the Government, including origination and other fees, penalties, and recoveries; and

''(ii) shall include the effects of changes in loan terms resulting from the exercise by the guaranteed lender of an option included in the loan guarantee contract, or by the borrower of an option included in the guaranteed loan contract.

''(C) COST OF MODIFICATION.—The cost of the modification shall be the difference between the current estimate of the net present value of the remaining cash flows under the terms of a loan guarantee contract, and the current estimate of the net present value of the remaining cash flows under the terms of the contract, as modified.

''(D) DISCOUNT RATE.—In estimating net present value, the discount rate shall be the average interest rate on marketable Treasury securities of similar maturity to the cash flows of the guarantee for which the estimate is being made.

''(E) FISCAL YEAR ASSUMPTIONS.—When funds of a loan guarantee under this title are obligated, the estimated cost shall be based on the current assumptions, adjusted to incorporate the terms of the loan contract, for the fiscal year in which the funds are obligated.

''(5) CURRENT.—The term 'current' has the meaning given that term in section 250(c)(9) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

''(6) DESIGNATED MARKET AREA.—The term 'designated market area' has the meaning given that term in section 122(j) of title 17, United States Code.

''(7) LOAN GUARANTEE.—The term 'loan guarantee' means any guarantee, insurance, or other pledge with respect to the payment of all or part of the principal or interest on any debt obligation of a non-Federal borrower to the Federal Financing Bank or a non-Federal lender, but does not include the insurance of deposits, shares, or other withdrawable accounts in financial institutions.

''(8) MODIFICATION.—The term 'modification' means any Government action that alters the estimated cost of an outstanding loan guarantee (or loan guarantee commitment) from the current estimate of cash flows, including the sale of loan assets, with or without recourse, and the purchase of guaranteed loans.

''(9) COMMON TERMS.—Except as provided in paragraphs (1) through (9), any term used in this title that is defined in the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 151 et seq.) has the meaning given the term in that Act.

"SEC. 502. LOAN GUARANTEES.

''(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this title is to enable the Administrator to provide such loan guarantees as are necessary to ensure improved access to the signals of local television stations by multichannel video providers to all households which desire such service in unserved and underserved rural areas by December 31, 2006.

''(b) ASSISTANCE TO BORROWERS.—Subject to the appropriations limitation under subsection (c)(2), the Administrator may provide loan guarantees to borrowers to finance projects to provide local television broadcast signals by providers of multichannel video services including direct broadcast satellite licensees and licensees of multichannel multipoint distribution systems, to areas that do not receive local television broadcast signals over commercial for-profit direct-to-home satellite distribution systems. A borrower that receives a loan guarantee under this title may not transfer any part of the proceeds of the monies from the loans guaranteed under this program to an affiliate of the borrower.

''(c) UNDERWRITING CRITERIA; PREREQUISITES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall administer the underwriting criteria developed under subsection (f)(1) to determine which loans are eligible for a guarantee under this title.

''(2) AUTHORITY TO MAKE LOAN GUARANTEES.—The Administrator shall be authorized to guarantee loans under this title only to the extent provided for in advance by appropriations Acts.

''(3) PREREQUISITES.—In addition to meeting the underwriting criteria under paragraph (1), a loan is not eligible for a loan guarantee under this title unless—

''(A) the loan is made to finance the acquisition, improvement, enhancement, construction, deployment, launch, or rehabilitation of the means by which local television broadcast signals will be delivered to an area not receiving such signals over commercial for-profit direct-to-home satellite distribution systems;

''(B) the proceeds of the loan will not be used for operating expenses;

''(C) the total amount of all such loans may not exceed in the aggregate $1,250,000,000;

''(D) the loan does not exceed $100,000,000, except that 1 loan under this title may exceed $100,000,000, but shall not exceed $625,000,000;

''(E) the loan bears interest and penalties which, in the Administrator's judgment, are not unreasonable, taking into consideration the prevailing interest rates and customary fees incurred under similar obligations in the private capital market; and

''(F) the Administrator determines that taking into account the practices of the private capital markets with respect to the financing of similar projects, the security of the loan is adequate.

''(4) ADDITIONAL CRITERIA.—In addition to the requirements of paragraphs (1), (2), and (3), a loan for which a guarantee is sought under this title shall meet any additional criteria promulgated under subsection (f)(1).

''(d) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS.—The Administrator may not make a loan guarantee under this title unless—

''(1) repayment of the obligation is required to be made within a term of the lesser of—

''(A) 25 years from the date of its execution; or

''(B) the useful life of the primary assets used in the delivery of relevant signals;

''(2) the Administrator has been given the assurances and documentation necessary to review and approve the guaranteed loans; and

''(3) the Administrator makes a determination in writing that—

''(A) the applicant has given reasonable assurances that the assets, facilities, or equipment will be utilized economically and efficiently;

''(B) necessary and sufficient regulatory approvals, spectrum rights, and delivery permissions have been received by project participants to assure the project's ability to repay obligations under this title; and

''(C) repayment of the obligation can reasonably be expected, including the use of an appropriate combination of credit risk premiums and collateral offered by the applicant to protect the Federal Government.

''(e) APPROVAL OF NTIA REQUIRED.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator may not issue a loan guarantee under this title unless the National Telecommunications and Information Administration consults with the Administrator and certifies that the issuance of the loan guarantee is consistent with subsection (a).

''(2) CERTIFICATION.—The Administrator shall provide the appropriate information on each loan guarantee application recommended by the Administrator to the National Telecommunications and Information Administration for certification. The National Telecommunications and Information Administration shall make the determination required under this subsection within 90 days, without regard to the provision of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, and sections 10 and 11 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.).

''(f) REQUIREMENTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this title, the Administrator shall consult with an independent public accounting firm to develop underwriting criteria relating to the issuance of loan guarantees, appropriate collateral and cash flow levels for the types of loan guarantees that might be issued under this title, and such other matters as the Administrator determines appropriate.

''(2) AUTHORITY OF ADMINISTRATOR.—In lieu of or in combination with appropriations of budget authority to cover the costs of loan guarantees as required under section 504(b)(1) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, the Administrator may accept on behalf of an applicant for assistance under this title a commitment from a non-Federal source to fund in whole or in part the credit risk premiums with respect to the applicant's loan. The aggregate of appropriations of budget authority and credit risk premiums described in this paragraph with respect to a loan guarantee may not be less than the cost of that loan guarantee.

''(3) CREDIT RISK PREMIUM AMOUNT.—The Administrator shall determine the amount required for credit risk premiums under this subsection on the basis of—

''(A) the circumstances of the applicant, including the amount of collateral offered;

''(B) the proposed schedule of loan disbursements;

''(C) the borrower's business plans for providing service;

''(D) financial commitment from the broadcast signal provider; and

''(E) any other factors the Administrator considers relevant.

''(4) PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.—Credit risk premiums under this subsection shall be paid to an account established in the Treasury which shall accrue interest and such interest shall be retained by the account, subject to paragraph (5).

''(5) COHORTS OF LOANS.—In order to maintain sufficient balances of credit risk premiums to adequately protect the Federal Government from risk of default, while minimizing the length of time the Government retains possession of those balances, the Administrator in consultation with the Office of Management and Budget shall establish cohorts of loans. When all obligations attached to a cohort of loans have been satisfied, credit risk premiums paid for the cohort, and interest accrued thereon, which were not used to mitigate losses shall be returned to the original source on a pro rata basis.

''(g) CONDITIONS OF ASSISTANCE.—A borrower shall agree to such terms and conditions as are sufficient, in the judgment of the Administrator to ensure that, as long as any principal or interest is due and payable on such obligation, the borrower—

''(1) will maintain assets, equipment, facilities, and operations on a continuing basis;

''(2) will not make any discretionary dividend payments that reduce the ability to repay obligations incurred under this section; and

''(3) will remain sufficiently capitalized.

''(h) LIEN ON INTERESTS IN ASSETS.—Upon providing a loan guarantee to a borrower under this title, the Administrator shall have liens which shall be superior to all other liens on assets of the borrower equal to the unpaid balance of the loan subject to such guarantee.

''(i) PERFECTED INTEREST.—The Administrator and the lender shall have a perfected security interest in those assets of the borrower fully sufficient to protect the Administrator and the lender.

''(j) INSURANCE POLICIES.—In accordance with practices of private lenders, as determined by the Administrator, the borrower shall obtain, at its expense, insurance sufficient to protect the interests of the Federal Government, as determined by the Administrator.

''(k) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the additional costs of the loans guaranteed under this title, including the cost of modifying the loans as defined in section 502 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 661(a)), there are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2000 through 2006, such amounts as may be necessary. In addition there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to administer this title. Any amounts appropriated under this subsection shall remain available until expended.

''SEC. 503. ADMINISTRATION OF LOAN GUARANTEES.

''(a) APPLICATIONS.—The Administrator shall prescribe the form and contents for an application for a loan guarantee under section 502.

''(b) ASSIGNMENT OF LOAN GUARANTEES.—The holder of a loan guaranteed under this title may assign the loan guarantee in whole or in part, subject to such requirements as the Administrator may prescribe.

''(c) MODIFICATIONS.—The Administrator may approve the modification of any term or condition of a loan guarantee including the rate of interest, time of payment of interest or principal, or security requirements, if the Administrator finds in writing that—

''(1) the modification is equitable and is in the overall best interests of the United States;

''(2) consent has been obtained from the borrower and the lender;

''(3) the modification is consistent with the objective underwriting criteria developed in consultation with an independent public accounting firm under section 502(f);

''(4) the modification does not adversely affect the Federal Government's interest in the entity's assets or loan collateral;

''(5) the modification does not adversely affect the entity's ability to repay the loan; and

''(6) the National Telecommunications and Information Administration does not object to the modification on the ground that it is inconsistent with the certification under section 502(e).

''(d) PRIORITY MARKETS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—To the maximum extent practicable, the Administrator shall give priority to projects which serve the most underserved rural markets, as determined by the Administrator. In making prioritization determinations, the Administrator shall consider prevailing market conditions, feasibility of providing service, population, terrain, and other factors the Administrator determines appropriate.

''(2) PRIORITY RELATING TO CONSUMER COSTS AND SEPARATE TIER OF SIGNALS.—The Administrator shall give priority to projects that—

''(A) offer a separate tier of local broadcast signals; and

''(B) provide lower projected costs to consumers of such separate tier.

''(3) PERFORMANCE SCHEDULES.—Applicants for priority projects under this section shall enter into stipulated performance schedules with the Administrator.

''(4) PENALTY.—The Administrator may assess a borrower a penalty not to exceed 3 times the interest due on the guaranteed loan, if the borrower fails to meet its stipulated performance schedule. The penalty shall be paid to the account established under section 502.

''(5) LIMITATION ON CONSIDERATION OF MOST POPULATED AREAS.—The Administrator shall not provide a loan guarantee for a project that is primarily designed to serve the 40 most populated designated market areas and shall take into consideration the importance of serving rural markets that are not likely to be otherwise offered service under section 122 of title 17, United States Code, except through the loan guarantee program under this title.

''(e) COMPLIANCE.—The Administrator shall enforce compliance by an applicant and any other party to the loan guarantee for whose benefit assistance is intended, with the provisions of this title, regulations issued hereunder, and the terms and conditions of the loan guarantee, including through regular periodic inspections and audits.

''(f) COMMERCIAL VALIDITY.—For purposes of claims by any party other than the Administrator, a loan guarantee or loan guarantee commitment shall be conclusive evidence that the underlying obligation is in compliance with the provisions of the title, and that such obligation has been approved and is legal as to principal, interest, and other terms. Such a guarantee or commitment shall be valid and incontestable in the hands of a holder thereof, including the original lender or any other holder, as of the date when the Administrator granted the application therefore, except as to fraud or material misrepresentation by such holder.

''(g) DEFAULTS.—The Administrator shall prescribe regulations governing a default on a loan guaranteed under this title.

''(h) RIGHTS OF THE ADMINISTRATOR.—

''(1) SUBROGATION.—If the Administrator authorizes payment to a holder, or a holder's agent, under subsection (g) in connection with a loan guarantee made under section 502, the Administrator shall be subrogated to all of the rights of the holder with respect to the obligor under the loan.

''(2) DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.—The Administrator may complete, recondition, reconstruct, renovate, repair, maintain, operate, rent, sell, or otherwise dispose of any property or other interests obtained under this section in a manner that maximizes taxpayer return and is consistent with the public convenience and necessity.

''(i) ACTION AGAINST OBLIGOR.—The Administrator may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States in the name of the United States or of the holder of the obligation in the event of a default on a loan guaranteed under this title. The holder of a guarantee shall make available to the Administrator all records and evidence necessary to prosecute the civil action. The Administrator may accept property in full or partial satisfaction of any sums owed as a result of default. If the Administrator receives, through the sale or other disposition of such property, an amount greater than the aggregate of—

''(1) the amount paid to the holder of a guarantee under subsection (g); and

''(2) any other cost to the United States of remedying the default, the Administrator shall pay such excess to the obligor.

''(j) BREACH OF CONDITIONS.—The Attorney General shall commence a civil action in a court of appropriate jurisdiction to enjoin any activity which the Administrator finds is in violation of this title, regulations issued hereunder, or any conditions which were duly agreed to, and to secure any other appropriate relief, including relief against any affiliate of the borrower.

''(k) ATTACHMENT.—No attachment or execution may be issued against the Administrator or any property in the control of the Administrator prior to the entry of final judgment to such effect in any State, Federal, or other court.

''(l) INVESTIGATION CHARGE AND FEES.—

''(1) APPRAISAL FEE.—The Administrator may charge and collect from an applicant a reasonable fee for appraisal for the value of the equipment or facilities for which the loan guarantee is sought, and for making necessary determinations and findings. The fee may not, in the aggregate, be more than one-half of one percent of the principal amount of the obligation. The fee imposed under this paragraph shall be used to offset the administrative costs of the program.

''(2) LOAN ORIGINATION FEE.—The Administrator may charge a loan origination fee.

''(m) ANNUAL AUDIT.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall annually audit the administration of this title and report the results of the audit to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate and the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives.

''(n) INDEMNIFICATION.—An affiliate of the borrower shall indemnify the Government for any losses it incurs as a result of—

''(1) a judgment against the borrower;

''(2) any breach by the borrower of its obligations under the loan guarantee agreement;

''(3) any violation of the provisions of this title by the borrower;

''(4) any penalties incurred by the borrower for any reason, including the violation of the stipulated performance; and

''(5) any other circumstances that the Administrator determines to be appropriate.

''(o) SUNSET.—The Administrator may not approve a loan guarantee under this title after December 31, 2006.

''SEC. 504. RETRANSMISSION OF LOCAL TELEVISION BROADCAST STATIONS.

''A borrower shall be subject to applicable rights, obligations, and limitations of title 17, United States Code. If a local broadcast station requests carriage of its signal and is located in a market not served by a satellite carrier providing service under a statutory license under section 122 of title 17, United States Code, the borrower shall carry the signal of that station without charge and shall be subject to the applicable rights, obligations, and limitations of sections 338, 614, and 615 of the Communications Act of 1934.''.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment now at the desk is adopted in lieu of the amendment printed in the bill.

The text of H.R. 3615, as amended, is as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to facilitate access, on a technologically neutral basis and by December 31, 2006, to signals of local television stations for households located in unserved areas and underserved areas.

SEC. 3. RURAL TELEVISION LOAN GUARANTEE BOARD.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established the Rural Television Loan Guarantee Board (in this Act referred to as the ''Board'').

(b) MEMBERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the Board shall consist of the following members:

(A) The Secretary of the Treasury, or the designee of the Secretary.

(B) The Secretary of Agriculture, or the designee of the Secretary.

(C) The Secretary of Commerce, or the designee of the Secretary.

(2) REQUIREMENT AS TO DESIGNEES.—An individual may not be designated a member of the Board under paragraph (1) unless the individual is an officer of the United States pursuant to an appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(c) FUNCTIONS OF THE BOARD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall determine whether or not to approve loan guarantees under this Act. The Board shall make such determinations consistent with the purpose of this Act and in accordance with this subsection and section 4 of this Act.

(2) CONSULTATION AUTHORIZED.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out its functions under this Act, the Board shall consult with such departments and agencies of the Federal Government as the Board considers appropriate, including the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Justice, the Department of the Interior, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

(B) RESPONSE.—A department or agency consulted by the Board under subparagraph (A) shall provide the Board such expertise and assistance as the Board requires to carry out its functions under this Act.

(3) APPROVAL BY MAJORITY VOTE.—The determination of the Board to approve a loan guarantee under this Act shall be by a vote of a majority of the Board.

SEC. 4. APPROVAL OF LOAN GUARANTEES.

(a) AUTHORITY TO APPROVE LOAN GUARANTEES.—Subject to the provisions of this section and consistent with the purpose of this Act, the Board may approve loan guarantees under this Act.

(b) REGULATIONS.—

(1) REQUIREMENTS.—The Administrator (as defined in section 5 of this Act), under the direction of and for approval by the Board, shall prescribe regulations to implement the provisions of this Act and shall do so not later than 120 days after funds authorized to be appropriated under section 15 of this Act have been appropriated in a bill signed into law.

(2) ELEMENTS.—The regulations prescribed under paragraph (1) shall—

(A) set forth the form of any application to be submitted to the Board under this Act;

(B) set forth time periods for the review and consideration by the Board of applications to be submitted to the Board under this Act, and for any other action to be taken by the Board with respect to such applications;

(C) provide appropriate safeguards against the evasion of the provisions of this Act;

(D) set forth the circumstances in which an applicant, together with any affiliate of an applicant, shall be treated as an applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act;

(E) include requirements that appropriate parties submit to the Board any documents and assurances that are required for the administration of the provisions of this Act; and

(F) include such other provisions consistent with the purpose of this Act as the Board considers appropriate.

(3) CONSTRUCTION.—(A) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to prohibit the Board from requiring, to the extent and under circumstances considered appropriate by the Board, that affiliates of an applicant be subject to certain obligations of the applicant as a condition to the approval or maintenance of a loan guarantee under this Act.

(B) If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or entity or circumstance is held to be invalid by a court of competent jurisdiction, the remainder of this Act, or the application of such provision to such person or entity or circumstance other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

(c) AUTHORITY LIMITED BY APPROPRIATIONS ACTS.—The Board may approve loan guarantees under this Act only to the extent provided for in advance in appropriations Acts.

(d) REQUIREMENTS AND CRITERIA APPLICABLE TO APPROVAL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall utilize the underwriting criteria developed under subsection (g), and any relevant information provided by the departments and agencies with which the Board consults under section 3, to determine which loans may be eligible for a loan guarantee under this Act.

(2) PREREQUISITES.—In addition to meeting the underwriting criteria under paragraph (1), a loan may not be guaranteed under this Act unless—

(A) the loan is made to finance the acquisition, improvement, enhancement, construction, deployment, launch, or rehabilitation of the means by which local television broadcast signals will be delivered principally to an unserved area or an underserved area (or both);

(B) the proceeds of the loan will not be used for operating, advertising, or promotion expenses;

(C) the proposed project, as determined by the National Telecommunications and Information Administration, is not likely to have a substantial adverse impact on competition that outweighs the benefits of improving access to the signals of a local television station in an unserved area or an underserved area (or both), and is commercially viable;

(D) the loan is provided by—

(i) an insured depository institution (as that term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act) that is acceptable to the Board;

(ii) a lender that is acceptable to the Board, and—

(I) has not fewer than one issue of outstanding debt that is related within the highest three rating categories of a nationally recognized statistical rating agency; or

(II) has provided financing to entities with outstanding debt from the Rural Utilities Service and which possess, in the judgment of the Board, the expertise, capacity, and capital strength to provide financing pursuant to this Act; or

(iii) a nonprofit corporation, including the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation, engaged primarily in commercial lending, if the Board determines that such nonprofit corporation has one or more issues of outstanding long-term debt that is rated within the highest 3 rating categories of a nationally recognized statistical rating organization, and, if the Board determines that the making of the loan by such nonprofit corporation will cause a decline in the debt rating mentioned above, the Board at its discretion may disapprove the loan guarantee on this basis;

(E) the loan (including Other Debt as defined in subsection (f)(2)(B)) is not provided by a lender that is a governmental entity, the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation, any institution supervised by the Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight, the Federal Housing Finance Board, or any affiliate of any such entity;

(F) the loan has terms, in the judgment of the Board, that are consistent in material respects with the terms of similar obligations in the private capital market;

(G) repayment of the loan is required to be made within a term of the lesser of—

(i) 25 years from the date of the execution of the loan; or

(ii) the economically useful life, as determined by the Board or in consultation with persons or entities deemed appropriate by the Board, of the primary assets to be used in the delivery of the signals concerned; and

(H) the loan meets any additional criteria developed under subsection (g).

(3) PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES FINANCIAL INTERESTS.—The Board may not approve the guarantee of a loan under this Act unless—

(A) the Board has been given documentation, assurances, and access to information, persons, and entities necessary, as determined by the Board, to address issues relevant to the review of the loan by the Board for purposes of this Act; and

(B) the Board makes a determination in writing that—

(i) to the best of its knowledge upon due inquiry, the assets, facilities, or equipment covered by the loan will be utilized economically and efficiently;

(ii) the terms, conditions, security, and schedule and amount of repayments of principal and the payment of interest with respect to the loan protect the financial interests of the United States and are reasonable;

(iii) to the extent possible, the value of collateral provided by an applicant is at least equal to the unpaid balance of the loan amount covered by the loan guarantee (the ''Amount'' for purposes of this clause); and if the value of collateral provided by an applicant is less than the Amount, the additional required collateral is provided by any affiliate of the applicant; and if the combined value of collateral provided by an applicant and any affiliate is not at least equal to the Amount, the collateral from such affiliate represents all of such affiliate's assets;

(iv) all necessary and required regulatory and other approvals, spectrum rights, and delivery permissions have been received for the loan, the project under the loan, and the Other Debt, if any, under subsection (f)(2)(B);

(v) the loan would not be available on reasonable terms and conditions without a loan guarantee under this Act; and

(vi) repayment of the loan can reasonably be expected.

(e) CONSIDERATIONS.—

(1) TYPE OF MARKET.—

(A) PRIORITY CONSIDERATIONS.—To the maximum extent practicable, the Board shall give priority in the approval of loan guarantees under this Act in the following order: First, to projects that will serve the greatest number of households in unserved areas and the number of States (including noncontiguous States); and second, to projects that will serve the greatest number of households in underserved areas. In each instance, the Board shall consider the project's estimated cost per household to be served.

(B) PROHIBITION.—The Board may not approve a loan guarantee under this Act for a project that is designed primarily to serve 1 or more of the 40 most populated designated market areas (as that term is defined in section 122(j) of title 17, United States Code).

(2) OTHER CONSIDERATIONS.—The Board shall consider other factors, which shall include projects that would—

(A) offer a separate tier of local broadcast signals;

(B) provide lower projected costs to consumers of such separate tier; and

(C) enable the delivery of local broadcast signals consistent with the purpose of this Act by a means reasonably compatible with existing systems or devices predominantly in use.

(f) GUARANTEE LIMITS.—

(1) LIMITATION ON AGGREGATE VALUE OF LOANS.—The aggregate value of all loans for which loan guarantees are issued under this Act (including the unguaranteed portion of loans issued under paragraph (2)(A)) and Other Debt under paragraph (2)(B) may not exceed $1,250,000,000.

(2) GUARANTEE LEVEL.—A loan guarantee issued under this Act—

(A) may not exceed an amount equal to 80 percent of a loan meeting in its entirety the requirements of subsection (d)(2)(A). If only a portion of a loan meets the requirements of that subsection, the Board shall determine that percentage of the loan meeting such requirements (the ''applicable portion'') and may issue a loan guarantee in an amount not exceeding 80 percent of the applicable portion; or

(B) may, as to a loan meeting in its entirety the requirements of subsection (d)(2)(A), cover the amount of such loan only if that loan is for an amount not exceeding 80 percent of the total debt financing for the project, and other debt financing (also meeting in its entirety the requirements of subsection (d)(2)(A)) from the same source for a total amount not less than 20 percent of the total debt financing for the project (''Other Debt'') has been approved.

(g) UNDERWRITING CRITERIA.—Within the period provided for under subsection (b)(1), the Board shall, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and an independent public accounting firm, develop underwriting criteria relating to the guarantee of loans that are consistent with the purpose of this Act, including appropriate collateral and cash flow levels for loans guaranteed under this Act, and such other matters as the Board considers appropriate.

(h) CREDIT RISK PREMIUMS.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT AND ACCEPTANCE.—The Board may establish and approve the acceptance of credit risk premiums with respect to a loan guarantee under this Act in order to cover the cost, as determined under section 504(b)(1) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, of the loan guarantee. To the extent that appropriations of budget authority are insufficient to cover the cost, as so determined, of a loan guarantee under this Act, credit risk premiums shall be accepted from a non-Federal source under this subsection on behalf of the applicant for the loan guarantee.

(2) CREDIT RISK PREMIUM AMOUNT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall determine the amount of any credit risk premium to be accepted with respect to a loan guarantee under this Act on the basis of—

(i) the financial and economic circumstances of the applicant for the loan guarantee, including the amount of collateral offered;

(ii) the proposed schedule of loan disbursements;

(iii) the business plans of the applicant for providing service;

(iv) any financial commitment from a broadcast signal provider; and

(v) the concurrence of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget as to the amount of the credit risk premium.

(B) PROPORTIONALITY.—To the extent that appropriations of budget authority are sufficient to cover the cost, as determined under section 504(b)(1) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, of loan guarantees under this Act, the credit risk premium with respect to each loan guarantee shall be reduced proportionately.

(C) PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.—Credit risk premiums under this subsection shall be paid to an account (the ''Escrow Account'') established in the Treasury which shall accrue interest and such interest shall be retained by the account, subject to subparagraph (D).

(D) DEDUCTIONS FROM ESCROW ACCOUNT.—If a default occurs with respect to any loan guaranteed under this Act and the default is not cured in accordance with the terms of the underlying loan or loan guarantee agreement, the Administrator, in accordance with subsections (h) and (i) of section 5 of this Act, shall liquidate, or shall cause to be liquidated, all assets collateralizing such loan as to which it has a lien or security interest. Any shortfall between the proceeds of the liquidation net of costs and expenses relating to the liquidation, and the guarantee amount paid pursuant to this Act shall be deducted from funds in the Escrow Account and credited to the Administrator for payment of such shortfall. At such time as determined under subsection (d)(2)(G) when all loans guaranteed under this Act have been repaid or otherwise satisfied in accordance with this Act and the regulations promulgated hereunder, remaining funds in the Escrow Account, if any, shall be refunded, on a pro rata basis, to applicants whose loans guaranteed under this Act were not in default, or where any default was cured in accordance with the terms of the underlying loan or loan guarantee agreement.

(i) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—The decision of the Board to approve or disapprove the making of a loan guarantee under this Act shall not be subject to judicial review.

SEC. 5. ADMINISTRATION OF LOAN GUARANTEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of the Rural Utilities Service (in this Act referred to as the ''Administrator'') shall issue and otherwise administer loan guarantees that have been approved by the Board in accordance with sections 3 and 4 of this Act.

(b) SECURITY FOR PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES FINANCIAL INTERESTS.—

(1) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—An applicant shall agree to such terms and conditions as are satisfactory, in the judgment of the Board, to ensure that, as long as any principal or interest is due and payable on a loan guaranteed under this Act, the applicant—

(A) shall maintain assets, equipment, facilities, and operations on a continuing basis;

(B) shall not make any discretionary dividend payments that impair its ability to repay obligations guaranteed under this Act;

(C) shall remain sufficiently capitalized; and

(D) shall submit to, and cooperate fully with, any audit of the applicant under section 8(a)(2) of this Act.

(2) COLLATERAL.—

(A) EXISTENCE OF ADEQUATE COLLATERAL.—An applicant shall provide the Board such documentation as is necessary, in the judgment of the Board, to provide satisfactory evidence that appropriate and adequate collateral secures a loan guaranteed under this Act.

(B) FORM OF COLLATERAL.—Collateral required by subparagraph (A) shall consist solely of assets of the applicant, any affiliate of the applicant, or both (whichever the Board considers appropriate), including primary assets to be used in the delivery of signals for which the loan is guaranteed.

(C) REVIEW OF VALUATION.—The value of collateral securing a loan guaranteed under this Act may be reviewed by the Board, and may be adjusted downward by the Board if the Board reasonably believes such adjustment is appropriate.

(3) LIEN ON INTERESTS IN ASSETS.—Upon the Board's approval of a loan guarantee under this Act, the Administrator shall have liens on assets securing the loan, which shall be superior to all other liens on such assets, and the value of the assets (based on a determination satisfactory to the Board) subject to the liens shall be at least equal to the unpaid balance of the loan amount covered by the loan guarantee, or that value approved by the Board under section 4(d)(3)(B)(iii) of this Act.

(4) PERFECTED SECURITY INTEREST.—With respect to a loan guaranteed under this Act, the Administrator and the lender shall have a perfected security interest in assets securing the loan that are fully sufficient to protect the financial interests of the United States and the lender.

(5) INSURANCE.—In accordance with practices in the private capital market, as determined by the Board, the applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act shall obtain, at its expense, insurance sufficient to protect the financial interests of the United States, as determined by the Board.

(c) ASSIGNMENT OF LOAN GUARANTEES.—The holder of a loan guarantee under this Act may assign the loan guaranteed under this Act in whole or in part, subject to such requirements as the Board may prescribe.

(d) MODIFICATION.—The Board may approve the modification of any term or condition of a loan guarantee or a loan guaranteed under this Act, including the rate of interest, time of payment of principal or interest, or security requirements only if—

(1) the modification is consistent with the financial interests of the United States;

(2) consent has been obtained from the parties to the loan agreement;

(3) the modification is consistent with the underwriting criteria developed under section 4(g) of this Act;

(4) the modification does not adversely affect the interest of the Federal Government in the assets or collateral of the applicant;

(5) the modification does not adversely affect the ability of the applicant to repay the loan; and

(6) the National Telecommunications and Information Administration has been consulted by the Board regarding the modification.

(e) PERFORMANCE SCHEDULES.—

(1) PERFORMANCE SCHEDULES.—An applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act for a project covered by section 4(e)(1) of this Act shall enter into stipulated performance schedules with the Administrator with respect to the signals to be provided through the project.

(2) PENALTY.—The Administrator may assess against and collect from an applicant described in paragraph (1) a penalty not to exceed 3 times the interest due on the guaranteed loan of the applicant under this Act if the applicant fails to meet its stipulated performance schedule under that paragraph.

(f) COMPLIANCE.—The Administrator, in cooperation with the Board and as the regulations of the Board may provide, shall enforce compliance by an applicant, and any other party to a loan guarantee for whose benefit assistance under this Act is intended, with the provisions of this Act, any regulations under this Act, and the terms and conditions of the loan guarantee, including through the submittal of such reports and documents as the Board may require in regulations prescribed by the Board and through regular periodic inspections and audits.

(g) COMMERCIAL VALIDITY.—A loan guarantee under this Act shall be incontestable—

(1) in the hands of an applicant on whose behalf the loan guarantee is made, unless the applicant engaged in fraud or misrepresentation in securing the loan guarantee; and

(2) as to any person or entity (or their respective successor in interest) who makes or contracts to make a loan to the applicant for the loan guarantee in reliance thereon, unless such person or entity (or respective successor in interest) engaged in fraud or misrepresentation in making or contracting to make such loan.

(h) DEFAULTS.—The Board shall prescribe regulations governing defaults on loans guaranteed under this Act, including the administration of the payment of guaranteed amounts upon default.

(i) RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall be entitled to recover from an applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act the amount of any payment made to the holder of the guarantee with respect to the loan.

(2) SUBROGATION.—Upon making a payment described in paragraph (1), the Administrator shall be subrogated to all rights of the party to whom the payment is made with respect to the guarantee which was the basis for the payment.

(3) DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.—

(A) SALE OR DISPOSAL.—The Administrator shall, in an orderly and efficient manner, sell or otherwise dispose of any property or other interests obtained under this Act in a manner that maximizes taxpayer return and is consistent with the financial interests of the United States.

(B) MAINTENANCE.—The Administrator shall maintain in a cost-effective and reasonable manner any property or other interests pending sale or disposal of such property or other interests under subparagraph (A).

(j) ACTION AGAINST OBLIGOR.—

(1) AUTHORITY TO BRING CIVIL ACTION.—The Administrator may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States in the name of the United States or of the holder of the obligation in the event of a default on a loan guaranteed under this Act. The holder of a loan guarantee shall make available to the Administrator all records and evidence necessary to prosecute the civil action.

(2) FULLY SATISFYING OBLIGATIONS OWED THE UNITED STATES.—The Administrator may accept property in satisfaction of any sums owed the United States as a result of a default on a loan guaranteed under this Act, but only to the extent that any cash accepted by the Administrator is not sufficient to satisfy fully the sums owed as a result of the default.

(k) BREACH OF CONDITIONS.—The Administrator shall commence a civil action in a court of appropriate jurisdiction to enjoin any activity which the Board finds is in violation of this Act, the regulations under this Act, or any conditions which were duly agreed to, and to secure any other appropriate relief, including relief against any affiliate of the applicant.

(l) ATTACHMENT.—No attachment or execution may be issued against the Administrator or any property in the control of the Administrator pursuant to this Act before the entry of a final judgment (as to which all rights of appeal have expired) by a Federal, State, or other court of competent jurisdiction against the Administrator in a proceeding for such action.

(m) FEES.—

(1) APPLICATION FEE.—The Board shall charge and collect from an applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act a fee to cover the cost of the Board in making necessary determinations and findings with respect to the loan guarantee application under this Act. The amount of the fee shall be reasonable.

(2) LOAN GUARANTEE ORIGINATION FEE.—The Board shall charge, and the Administrator may collect, a loan guarantee origination fee with respect to the issuance of a loan guarantee under this Act.

(3) USE OF FEES COLLECTED.—Any fee collected under this subsection shall be used to offset administrative costs under this Act, including costs of the Board and of the Administrator.

(n) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO AFFILIATES.—

(1) INDEMNIFICATION.—The United States shall be indemnified by any affiliate (acceptable to the Board) of an applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act for any losses that the United States incurs as a result of—

(A) a judgment against the applicant or any of its affiliates;

(B) any breach by the applicant or any of its affiliates of their obligations under the loan guarantee agreement;

(C) any violation of the provisions of this Act, and the regulations prescribed under this Act, by the applicant or any of its affiliates;

(D) any penalties incurred by the applicant or any of its affiliates for any reason, including violation of a stipulated performance schedule under subsection (e); and

(E) any other circumstances that the Board considers appropriate.

(2) LIMITATION ON TRANSFER OF LOAN PROCEEDS.—An applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act may not transfer any part of the proceeds of the loan to an affiliate.

(o) EFFECT OF BANKRUPTCY.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever any person or entity is indebted to the United States as a result of any loan guarantee issued under this Act and such person or entity is insolvent or is a debtor in a case under title 11, United States Code, the debts due to the United States shall be satisfied first.

(2) A discharge in bankruptcy under title 11, United States Code, shall not release a person or entity from an obligation to the United States in connection with a loan guarantee under this Act.

SEC. 6. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR SPECTRUM AUCTIONS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no loan guarantee under this Act may be granted or used to provide funds for the acquisition of licenses for the use of spectrum in any competitive bidding under section 309(j) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 309(j)).

SEC. 7. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS BY INCUMBENT CABLE OPERATORS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no loan guarantee under this Act may be granted or used to provide funds for—

(1) the extension of any cable system to any area or areas for which the cable operator of such cable system has a cable franchise, if such franchise obligates the operator to extend such system to such area or areas; or

(2) the upgrading or enhancement of the services provided over any cable system, unless such upgrading or enhancement is principally undertaken to extend services to areas outside of the previously existing franchise area of the cable operator.

SEC. 8. ANNUAL AUDIT.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct on an annual basis an audit of—

(1) the administration of the provisions of this Act; and

(2) the financial position of each applicant who receives a loan guarantee under this Act, including the nature, amount, and purpose of investments made by the applicant.

(b) REPORT.—The Comptroller General shall submit to the Congress a report on each audit conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 9. EXEMPTION FROM MUST CARRY REQUIREMENTS.

A facility of a satellite carrier, cable system, or other multichannel video programming distributor that is financed with a loan guaranteed under this Act and that delivers local broadcast signals in a television market pursuant to the provisions of section 338, 614, or 615 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 338, 534, or 535) shall not be required to carry in such market a greater number of local broadcast signals than the number of such signals that is carried by the cable system serving the largest number of subscribers in such market.

SEC. 10. ADDITIONAL AVAILABILITY OF BROADCAST SIGNALS IN RURAL AREAS.

(a) OPENING OF FILING FOR ADDITIONAL TRANSLATOR AND LOW-POWER STATIONS.—The Federal Communications Commission shall, in accordance with its regulations, open a filing period window for the acceptance of applications for television translator stations and low-power television stations in rural areas.

(b) DEADLINES FOR NOTICE.—The Commission shall announce the filing period window no less than 90 days prior to the commencement of the window.

SEC. 11. IMPROVED CELLULAR SERVICE IN RURAL AREAS.

(a) REINSTATEMENT OF APPLICANTS AS TENTATIVE SELECTEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the order of the Federal Communications Commission in the proceeding described in paragraph (3), the Commission shall—

(A) reinstate each applicant as a tentative selectee under the covered rural service area licensing proceeding; and

(B) permit each applicant to amend its application, to the extent necessary to update factual information and to comply with the rules of the Commission, at any time before the Commission's final licensing action in the covered rural service area licensing proceeding.

(2) EXEMPTION FROM PETITIONS TO DENY.—For purposes of the amended applications filed pursuant to paragraph (1)(B), the provisions of section 309(d)(1) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 309(d)(1)) shall not apply.

(3) PROCEEDING.—The proceeding described in this paragraph is the proceeding of the Commission In re Applications of Cellwave Telephone Services L.P, Futurewave General Partners L.P., and Great Western Cellular Partners, 7 FCC Rcd No. 19 (1992).

(b) CONTINUATION OF LICENSE PROCEEDING; FEE ASSESSMENT.—

(1) AWARD OF LICENSES.—The Commission shall award licenses under the covered rural service area licensing proceeding within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) SERVICE REQUIREMENTS.—The Commission shall provide that, as a condition of an applicant receiving a license pursuant to the covered rural service area licensing proceeding, the applicant shall provide cellular radiotelephone service to subscribers in accordance with sections 22.946 and 22.947 of the Commission's rules (47 CFR 22.946, 22.947); except that the time period applicable under section 22.947 of the Commission's rules (or any successor rule) to the applicants identified in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (d)(1) shall be 3 years rather than 5 years and the waiver authority of the Commission shall apply to such 3-year period.

(3) CALCULATION OF LICENSE FEE.—

(A) FEE REQUIRED.—The Commission shall establish a fee for each of the licenses under the covered rural service area licensing proceeding. In determining the amount of the fee, the Commission shall consider—

(i) the average price paid per person served in the Commission's Cellular Unserved Auction (Auction No. 12); and

(ii) the settlement payments required to be paid by the permittees pursuant to the consent decree set forth in the Commission's order, In re the Tellesis Partners (7 FCC Rcd 3168 (1992)), multiplying such payments by two.

(B) NOTICE OF FEE.—Within 30 days after the date an applicant files the amended application permitted by subsection (a)(1)(B), the Commission shall notify each applicant of the fee established for the license associated with its application.

(4) PAYMENT FOR LICENSES.—No later than 18 months after the date that an applicant is granted a license, each applicant shall pay to the Commission the fee established pursuant to paragraph (3) for the license granted to the applicant under paragraph (1).

(5) AUCTION AUTHORITY.—If, after the amendment of an application pursuant to subsection (a)(1)(B), the Commission finds that the applicant is ineligible for grant of a license to provide cellular radiotelephone services for a rural service area or the applicant does not meet the requirements under paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Commission shall grant the license for which the applicant is the tentative selectee (pursuant to subsection (a)(1)(B) by competitive bidding pursuant to section 309(j) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 309(j)).

(c) PROHIBITION OF TRANSFER.—During the 5-year period that begins on the date that an applicant is granted any license pursuant to subsection (a), the Commission may not authorize the transfer or assignment of that license under section 310 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 310). Nothing in this Act may be construed to prohibit any applicant granted a license pursuant to subsection (a) from contracting with other licensees to improve cellular telephone service.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) APPLICANT.—The term ''applicant'' means—

(A) Great Western Cellular Partners, a California general partnership chosen by the Commission as tentative selectee for RSA #492 on May 4, 1989;

(B) Monroe Telephone Services L.P., a Delaware limited partnership chosen by the Commission as tentative selectee for RSA #370 on August 24, 1989 (formerly Cellwave Telephone Services L.P.); and

(C) FutureWave General Partners L.P., a Delaware limited partnership chosen by the Commission as tentative selectee for RSA #615 on May 25, 1990.

(2) COMMISSION.—The term ''Commission'' means the Federal Communications Commission.

(3) COVERED RURAL SERVICE AREA LICENSING PROCEEDING.—The term ''covered rural service area licensing proceeding'' means the proceeding of the Commission for the grant of cellular radiotelephone licenses for rural service areas #492 (Minnesota 11), #370 (Florida 11), and #615 (Pennsylvania 4).

(4) TENTATIVE SELECTEE.—The term ''tentative selectee'' means a party that has been selected by the Commission under a licensing proceeding for grant of a license, but has not yet been granted the license because the Commission has not yet determined whether the party is qualified under the Commission's rules for grant of the license.

SEC. 12. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

Section 339(c) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 339(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(5) DEFINITION.—Notwithstanding subsection (d)(4), for purposes of paragraphs (2) and (4) of this subsection, the term 'satellite carrier' includes a distributor (as defined in section 119(d)(1) of title 17, United States Code), but only if the satellite distributor's relationship with the subscriber includes billing, collection, service activation, and service deactivation.''.

SEC. 13. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) AFFILIATE.—The term ''affiliate''—

(A) means any person or entity that controls, or is controlled by, or is under common control with, another person or entity; and

(B) may include any individual who is a director or senior management officer of an affiliate, a shareholder controlling more than 25 percent of the voting securities of an affiliate, or more than 25 percent of the ownership interest in an affiliate not organized in stock form.

(2) UNSERVED AREA.—The term ''unserved area'' means any area that—

(A) is outside the grade B contour (as determined using standards employed by the Federal Communications Commission) of the local television broadcast signals serving a particular designated market area; and

(B) does not have access to local television broadcast signals from any commercial, for-profit multichannel video provider.

(3) UNDERSERVED AREA.—The term ''underserved area'' means any area that—

(A) is outside the grade A contour (as determined using standards employed by the Federal Communications Commission) of the local television broadcast signals serving a particular designated market area; and

(B) has access to local television broadcast signals from not more than one commercial, for-profit multichannel video provider.

(4) COMMON TERMS.—Except as provided in paragraphs (1) through (4), any term used in this Act that is defined in the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 151 et seq.) has the meaning given that term in the Communications Act of 1934.

SEC. 14. AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) COST OF LOAN GUARANTEES.—For the cost of the loans guaranteed under this Act, including the cost of modifying the loans, as defined in section 502 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 661a), there are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2001 through 2006, such amounts as may be necessary.

(b) COST OF ADMINISTRATION.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, other than to cover costs under subsection (a).

(c) AVAILABILITY.—Any amounts appropriated pursuant to the authorizations of appropriations in subsections (a) and (b) shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 16. SUNSET.

No loan guarantee may be approved under this Act after December 31, 2006.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) each will control 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE).

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues here today, I represent a congressional district that is not near a large urban center. The largest city in my district, Roanoke, has a population of slightly more than 100,000 people. However, folks in cities as large as Roanoke, Virginia; Honolulu, Hawaii; and Springfield, Missouri, are unlikely to benefit from the most important parts of legislation enacted last fall known as the Satellite Home Viewer Act.

This legislation, which I served as a conferee on with many of my colleagues here today, was designed to address a problem experienced by thousands of Americans who are frustrated that they either could not receive their local network signal or had to receive a poor quality local network signal through a rooftop antenna rather than receive a network signal through their satellite provider. The bill addressed this by allowing direct broadcast satellite providers to immediately begin retransmitting local television broadcast signals into the broadcast station's area.

Consumers across the country expressed their support for this legislation and the availability of ''local-into-local'' technology. I know my office received thousands of letters and calls from constituents concerned about this issue. This new law allows satellite providers to become more effective competitors to cable operators who have been able to provide local over-the-air broadcast stations to their subscribers for years. It will also benefit American consumers in markets where local TV via satellite is made available by offering them full service digital television at an affordable price.

More importantly, these consumers will benefit from local news, weather reports, information such as natural disasters or community emergencies, local sports, politics and election information as well as other information that is vital to the integrity of communities across the country. Local TV via satellite is already available to satellite subscribers in America's 20 largest television markets. In these markets, DirecTV and Echostar, the existing satellite platform providers, have begun retransmission of affiliates of the ABC, CBS, NBC, and Fox broadcast networks. DirecTV and Echostar have also announced their intention to begin retransmission of local TV stations in an additional 20 or 30 television markets over the next 24 months.

Ultimately, the two existing satellite platform providers will provide local TV via satellite to households in most if not all of the 50 largest television markets in the United States. However, there are 211 television markets in the United States, and in excess of 100 million U.S. TV households. As this chart illustrates, the red dots indicate cities that have been served effective January 31 of this year, and the yellow dots are announced or probable cities. The rest of the country, including 161 television markets, is not going to be served by the legislation we passed last fall.

Therefore, if matters are left solely to the initiative of the existing satellite platform providers, more than 50 percent of existing satellite subscribers, over 6 million households, will continue to be deprived of their local TV stations; more than 60 percent of existing commercial television stations, over 1,000, will not be available via satellite; and more than 30 million U.S. TV households will remain beyond the reach of local TV via satellite. Put another way, local TV via satellite will not be available in 27 States.

So while the law enacted last fall has eliminated the legal barriers to delivery of local TV via satellite, it alone will not assure delivery of local TV via satellite to the majority of local TV stations and satellite subscribers. For that reason I have joined with my colleagues in the House to introduce legislation that will assure that all Americans, not just those in the most profitable urban markets, did receive their local TV signals in a way that provides local information in a competitive environment for consumers.

This legislation represents a hard-fought compromise between versions reported by the House Agriculture and House Commerce Committees. I want to express my appreciation to members of both committees for their willingness to work together to reach this agreement. The substitute authorizes the administrator of the Rural Utilities Service, with the approval of the National Telecommunications and Information Administration, to administer loan guarantees not exceeding $1.25 billion for providing local broadcast TV signals in unserved and underserved markets.

The loan guarantees will be approved by a board consisting of the Secretaries of Agriculture, Commerce and Treasury. The loan guarantee may not exceed 80 percent of a loan, and the board may not approve a loan guarantee for a project that is designed to serve primarily one or more of the top 40 markets. The substitute also includes restrictions on which lending institutions can qualify for loan guarantees. Under this compromise, the board should give priority consideration first to unserved areas, then to underserved areas.

Unserved areas are defined as areas outside Grade B where there is no access to local signals from a for-profit multichannel video provider. Underserved areas are defined as those areas outside Grade A where there is no more than one for-profit multichannel video provider. In addition, the compromise requires that the value of collateral provided by the applicant must be at least equal to the unpaid balance of the loan amount covered by the loan guarantee. The loan guarantee may not be used for the acquisition of spectrum and funds cannot be used by incumbent cable companies in their own franchise territories.

In addition, under the compromise, the system providing local signals shall not be required to carry in a market a greater number of local broadcast signals than the number of such signals that is carried by the cable system serving the largest number of subscribers in that market. This is different than the version of the legislation that I introduced which applied full must-carry rules to the program.

Mr. Speaker, legislation similar to this bill was sponsored by Senators GRAMM and BURNS and passed the Senate on March 30 by a vote of 97–0. I want to particularly thank Senator GRAMM and Senator BURNS for their help. Senator BURNS represents the State of Montana, a rural area that is vitally impacted by this legislation; and he is to be commended for his leadership in the Senate as is Senator GRAMM for his leadership in getting this, legislation passed through the United States Senate.

The bill is crucial for Americans in rural and smaller markets who rely on their local television stations for news, politics, weather, sports, and emergency information. Local television is often the only lifeline folks have in cases of natural disasters such as hurricanes, tornadoes, blizzards, earthquakes, or flooding. The bill's language to encourage the delivery of local television signals to these constituents in America will not only benefit consumers, it will save lives.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I want to thank several individuals here, most importantly my colleague from my adjoining district in Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) whose leadership both in the conference last year and getting us to this point in this legislative process today has been absolutely vital. He too has a district like mine that badly needs this legislation, but he too recognizes the importance of this to all of America. I also want to thank the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the chairman of the subcommittee, who has been vitally important in crafting good legislation in the Committee on Commerce and his full committee chairman, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), for their input. In the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) have made a great contribution. And then the primary committee, the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. COMBEST) and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), have also provided valuable support for this legislation. I thank them all.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3615. H.R. 3615 was introduced on February 10, 2000, and was referred to three different committees, Judiciary, Commerce and Agriculture. The House Committee on Agriculture unanimously approved this bill on February 16. The Committee on Commerce approved their version on March 29. The Committee on the Judiciary was discharged from consideration on March 31. The legislation before us today is a compromise between the agriculture and commerce committees. The bill establishes a loan guarantee program within the United States Department of Agriculture Rural Utilities Service for the purpose of providing local broadcast television signals.

This bill under consideration today was originally included as a provision in the Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act that was enacted last year. Unfortunately, these provisions were deleted from the final version of the bill. The Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act permits satellite companies to retransmit local network signals back into its local market area and gives consumers greater access to network television stations by allowing satellite television companies to effectively compete with cable television providers.

Today's rural Americans do not benefit from the competition provided in the Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act. DirecTV and Echostar, the U.S.'s only satellite television providers, will not offer local-into-local broadcast television service in rural television markets. The loan guarantee proposed by H.R. 3615 will make it technologically and financially feasible for entities to develop technologies that will bring local-into-local broadcast television service to smaller rural television markets.

I am pleased that cooperative lenders such as CoBank and the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation are eligible to participate in the loan guarantee program under section 4(d) of the bill. Their expertise, capacity, capital strength, and experience in providing financing to rural utility service borrowers should help to make this program a success. People living in rural areas need to have access to their local broadcasters' programming, local news, weather, sports, and, most importantly, emergency information services. Local television is one of our most vital safety information sources in times of natural disasters or other emergencies. This legislation promises to both improve consumer quality of life and more importantly save lives.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this bill and urge my colleagues to do so, too. Last year this Congress passed a bill that would enable satellite carriers to provide consumers with access to their local broadcast signals, but there is a problem. It is because satellite carriers by their own admission have no capacity and no plans to offer this new local-into-local service to the Nation's smallest markets. They plan to offer them to the top 70 markets approximately, serving about 70 percent of American television households. That leaves out 30 percent of American households and well over 100 smaller markets.

Now, this bill will remedy that. The bill authorizes the Department of Agriculture to provide up to $1.25 billion in loan guarantees, not loans, loan guarantees, to cable and satellite companies that plan to offer this local-into-local broadcast service to rural consumers across America. It is important to note that while local-into-local satellite technology is an important step, it is not the only technology that might be capable of achieving this objective. A variety of terrestrial services, for example, both wireless and wired can serve the same goal and hopefully will.

It is for this reason that in the Committee on Commerce, we worked to ensure that the bill was technologically neutral. We should not and we do not in this bill pick the winners and the losers. The bill is about enabling everyone the same opportunity to receive multichannel access to broadcast signals. From here on out, it is up to the marketplace to decide who wins and who loses.

Let me also say that on the Committee on Commerce my colleagues and I made a number of other changes to the bill that protect the interest of taxpayers here. For example, we designated an interagency board that will approve the loans under this program. We also capped the loans to 80 percent of the amount borrowed, so the guarantee is only up to 80 percent. We ensure that the American taxpayer's lien would be superior to any other lien that might be against the property of a borrower. On balance, this is indeed a bill worthy of my colleagues' support. It is balanced and fiscally responsible. I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that has some good parts and some not so good parts. It does seek to advance the goal of ensuring that there is access to satellite-delivered local TV stations in every community in the United States.

□ 1700

Without question, as it came out of committee, there were provisions that would have really hurt other competing companies, such as North Point, that have, thank goodness been removed. As well, the loans cannot be utilized to go bid at FCC auctions, and there are other provisions which ensure that the loans cannot be used for operating, advertising, or for promotional expenses. So there are some safeguards which have been built in here.

I think that the bill can be further protected. My hope is that between now and the conclusion of the conference committee, that we will be able to achieve the goal of ensuring that this bill advances solely competitive purposes, and is not used for any other purpose.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. COBLE).

Mr. COBLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, as many know, this was an important part of the legislation from last session concerning the Satellite Home Viewers Act. I believe the citizens in rural areas, particularly those in the Sixth District of North Carolina, deserve the same opportunities others have to be served by local broadcasters.

It is important to proliferate local stations serving local areas so all can receive their local news, local community service and particularly emergency weather updates for that area. To demonstrate how important this is, you only have to ask my fellow citizens from eastern North Carolina who were victimized by those tragic floods just last year. It is my hope that this legislation serves as a catalyst, Mr. Speaker, for accomplishing that goal.

It is my further hope that the Senate will take the bill and enact it. If it does not, any conference may be tempted to expand the reach of the current legislation.

I am glad the Committee on the Judiciary was able to assist in moving this bill quickly, and I reiterate the interest of the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE) in our participation in any such conference, but hope we can move it quickly into law.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) were the lead dogs, if you will, on this legislation. They were tireless in their efforts, and I commend them for that.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON).

Mrs. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I live in rural America, and I represent a predominantly rural district. I also cochair the Congressional Rural Caucus. This is an issue that is critical to rural America, and, indeed, critical to all Americans.

It is essential that rural Americans not be treated as second-class citizens who are denied access to local television stations for news, weather, sports, and emergency information. Indeed, one need not look further than my own district in eastern North Carolina to see the critical role that local television news play when disasters such as hurricane, tornadoes, blizzards, earthquakes, or floods strike.

Last winter a fast-moving snowstorm with near-blizzard conditions left a record snowfall of 23 inches in parts of my district. Last fall, three hurricanes and a subsequent 500-year flood left flood waters that covered nearly 20,000 square miles of North Carolina, a land mass greater than the size of the State of Maryland. It took weeks for the flood waters to recede, and disaster relief efforts are still going on to date.

Local news provides vital information on safety procedures, emergency shelter, location, and how to obtain assistance. In addition, local television broadcasts of crop reports, local news, weather reports, public service announcements, and advertisements by local business are important to rural development.

Let me repeat that rural citizens in North Carolina, in fact, rural citizens in America, should not be disadvantaged and must have access to the same network and local television service at the same affordable prices as citizens in urban and suburban areas.

The Rural Local Broadcast Signal Act established a $1.2 billion loan guarantee to help finance satellite companies in unserved and underserved rural areas. It is clear that without this financial incentive of a loan guarantee program, many rural markets of the country would not have access to local television signals via satellite.

The economy of scale in rural areas has to be compensated because the private sector will not and cannot provide the expensive initial investment needed. A Federal loan guarantee program will enable affordable capital to be available to finance satellite systems for the delivery of local television signals. I am pleased that the committee saw fit to exclude a potentially damaging amendment that would have delayed the entire loan program for 90 days pending certain testing. Such an amendment would have been unnecessary and harmful.

I am also pleased that the cooperative lenders such as CoBank and the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation are eligible to participate in the loan guarantee program under section 4(d) of the bill. Their expertise, capacity, capital strength, and experience in providing financial assistance to rural utility service borrowers should be used and has been valuable in the past.

Mr. Speaker, I support the establishment of a loan guarantee program, and I urge all of our colleagues to support this very necessary legislation.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to my friend and mentor, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, permit me to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the distinguished subcommittee chairman, and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) for bringing this measure to the floor at this time and permitting me to speak in support of this legislation.

H.R. 3615, the Rural Local Broadcast Signal Act, was introduced in response to the announcement by the major satellite carriers that, following enactment of the Satellite Home Viewer Act last fall, satellite carriers would be providing only newly authorized local network TV broadcast services in the largest markets, rather than the more rural areas. These satellite providers have stated it is not economically feasible to provide such service to our rural areas. Since many rural areas of our Nation are not served by broadcast TV or cable service, legislation is necessary to encourage the delivery of local network TV service to our rural Americans. This legislation amends the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 in order to provide local TV networks to rural satellite customers.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure improved access of local TV signals into unserved or underserved rural areas by December 31, 2006. The bill is languaged to provide local TV signals to rural Americans, which will not only benefit consumers, but it can save lives.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) for introducing this important measure and affording me the opportunity to include my legislation, H.R. 1817, as a provision of the bill.

Accordingly, I urge our colleagues to fully support this important measure for all the rural communities throughout our Nation.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER), the ''lead dog'' on the Democratic side on this bill.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend from Massachusetts for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this measure in which I am pleased to join my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE), as principal cosponsor. The passage of this legislation is urgently needed. It offers the only opportunity for residents of medium-sized and small cities and virtually all of rural America to benefit from the new service that delivers local television signals to homes with satellite dishes.

Last year we enacted a new law which, for the first time, enabled satellite television companies to deliver to satellite dish owners local television signals in addition to the national programming that these companies have traditionally offered. That was the good news.

The somewhat less than good news is that those companies have decided that they can only make a profit by offering the new local into local service in the largest cities. Accordingly, medium-sized and small cities and rural portions of the Nation will not be served by the commercial companies.

Of the 211 local television markets in the Nation, at most 67 will receive the commercially provided local into local satellite television service. The bill that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) and I have put forward is designed to fill the gap. Our intent is to create a means for every person who desires the service to have access to his local television stations delivered by satellite. Then, for the first time, there will be on a nationwide basis a truly viable competitive alternative to cable television. With the addition of the local TV service, satellite companies will be able to offer exactly the same programs, including local broadcast signals, that cable television has traditionally offered.

For the first time, cable rates will be set through a competitive market and will be restrained. For the first time, the residents of many rural regions, such as the mountainous portion of Virginia that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) and I represent, who are blocked from the receipt of local TV signals because of mountainous terrain, will be able to view with a clear digital signal the local stations which are broadcast in their area.

We will achieve these goals by providing a Federal loan guarantee in the amount of $1.25 billion through which a self-sustaining affordable service offering local TV signals by satellite can be launched on a nationwide basis. By this means, the residents of all 211 local television markets in the Nation will soon receive the new local into local satellite delivered television service.

I want to commend my friend and colleague from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) for his leadership, as together we have structured this approach and brought the bill to the point of passage in the House today. It is a pleasure to work with the gentleman as we advance the interests of all rural Americans.

I also want to thank the chairmen and ranking members of the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Agriculture for their excellent cooperation in bringing the measure to the floor. With the step that we are taking, we can assure that local news, sports, emergency announcements, weather reports, and community service programming that contribute to the broad popularity of local television broadcasts are available, not just in the largest cities, but in all television markets throughout the Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) and others who will speak in urging the approval of this measure by the House today.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. GOODLATTE.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute considered as adopted to H.R. 3615 under the order of the House of earlier today be the amendment in the nature of a substitute that I have now placed at the desk, which shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for purposes of clarifying if the original colloquy that I had a moment ago still applies to the amendment in the nature of a substitute that you have placed at the desk?

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENHOLM. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MR. GOODLATTE

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Rural Local Broadcast Signal Act''.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Purpose.
Sec. 3. Rural television loan guarantee board.
Sec. 4. Approval of loan guarantees.
Sec. 5. Administration of loan guarantees.
Sec. 6. Prohibition on use of funds for spectrum auctions.
Sec. 7. Prohibition on use of funds by incumbent cable operators.
Sec. 8. Annual audit.
Sec. 9. Exemption from must carry requirements.
Sec. 10. Additional availability of broadcast signals in rural areas.
Sec. 11. Improved cellular service in rural areas.
Sec. 12. Technical amendment.
Sec. 13. Definitions.
Sec. 14. Authorizations of appropriations.
Sec. 15. Sunset.

SEC. 2. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this Act is to facilitate access, on a technologically neutral basis and by December 31, 2006, to signals of local television stations for households located in unserved areas and underserved areas.

SEC. 3. RURAL TELEVISION LOAN GUARANTEE BOARD.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established the Rural Television Loan Guarantee Board (in this Act referred to as the ''Board'').

(b) MEMBERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraph (2), the Board shall consist of the following members:

(A) The Secretary of the Treasury, or the designee of the Secretary.

(B) The Secretary of Agriculture, or the designee of the Secretary.

(C) The Secretary of Commerce, or the designee of the Secretary.

(2) REQUIREMENT AS TO DESIGNEES.—An individual may not be designated a member of the Board under paragraph (1) unless the individual is an officer of the United States pursuant to an appointment by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(c) FUNCTIONS OF THE BOARD.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall determine whether or not to approve loan guarantees under this Act. The Board shall make such determinations consistent with the purpose of this Act and in accordance with this subsection and section 4 of this Act.

(2) CONSULTATION AUTHORIZED.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out its functions under this Act, the Board shall consult with such departments and agencies of the Federal Government as the Board considers appropriate, including the Department of Commerce, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of Justice, the Department of the Interior, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Communications Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

(B) RESPONSE.—A department or agency consulted by the Board under subparagraph (A) shall provide the Board such expertise and assistance as the Board requires to carry out its functions under this Act.

(3) APPROVAL BY MAJORITY VOTE.—The determination of the Board to approve a loan guarantee under this Act shall be by a vote of a majority of the Board.

SEC. 4. APPROVAL OF LOAN GUARANTEES.

(a) AUTHORITY TO APPROVE LOAN GUARANTEES.—Subject to the provisions of this section and consistent with the purpose of this Act, the Board may approve loan guarantees under this Act.

(b) REGULATIONS.—

(1) REQUIREMENTS.—The Administrator (as defined in section 5 of this Act), under the direction of and for approval by the Board, shall prescribe regulations to implement the provisions of this Act and shall do so not later than 120 days after funds authorized to be appropriated under section 15 of this Act have been appropriated in a bill signed into law.

(2) ELEMENTS.—The regulations prescribed under paragraph (1) shall—

(A) set forth the form of any application to be submitted to the Board under this Act;

(B) set forth time periods for the review and consideration by the Board of applications to be submitted to the Board under this Act, and for any other action to be taken by the Board with respect to such applications;

(C) provide appropriate safeguards against the evasion of the provisions of this Act;

(D) set forth the circumstances in which an applicant, together with any affiliate of an applicant, shall be treated as an applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act;

(E) include requirements that appropriate parties submit to the Board any documents and assurances that are required for the administration of the provisions of this Act; and

(F) include such other provisions consistent with the purpose of this Act as the Board considers appropriate.

(3) CONSTRUCTION.—(A) Nothing in this Act shall be construed to prohibit the Board from requiring, to the extent and under circumstances considered appropriate by the Board, that affiliates of an applicant be subject to certain obligations of the applicant as a condition to the approval or maintenance of a loan guarantee under this Act.

(B) If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or entity or circumstance is held to be invalid by a court of competent jurisdiction, the remainder of this Act, or the application of such provision to such person or entity or circumstance other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

(c) AUTHORITY LIMITED BY APPROPRIATIONS ACTS.—The Board may approve loan guarantees under this Act only to the extent provided for in advance in appropriations Acts.

(d) REQUIREMENTS AND CRITERIA APPLICABLE TO APPROVAL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall utilize the underwriting criteria developed under subsection (g), and any relevant information provided by the departments and agencies with which the Board consults under section 3, to determine which loans may be eligible for a loan guarantee under this Act.

(2) PREREQUISITES.—In addition to meeting the underwriting criteria under paragraph (1), a loan may not be guaranteed under this Act unless—

(A) the loan is made to finance the acquisition, improvement, enhancement, construction, deployment, launch, or rehabilitation of the means by which local television broadcast signals will be delivered principally to an unserved area or an underserved area (or both);

(B) the proceeds of the loan will not be used for operating, advertising, or promotion expenses;

(C) the proposed project, as determined by the National Telecommunications and Information Administration, is not likely to have a substantial adverse impact on competition that outweighs the benefits of improving access to the signals of a local television station in an unserved area or an underserved area (or both), and is commercially viable;

(D)(i) the loan (including Other Debt, as defined in subsection (f)(2)(B))—

(I) is provided by any entity engaged in the business of commercial lending—

(aa) if the loan is made in accordance with loan-to-one-borrower and affiliate transaction restrictions to which the entity is subject under applicable law; or

(bb) if item (aa) does not apply, the loan is made only to a borrower that is not an affiliate of the entity and only if the amount of the loan and all outstanding loans by that entity to that borrower and any of its affiliates does not exceed 10 percent of the net equity of the entity; or

(II) is provided by a nonprofit corporation, including the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation, engaged primarily in commercial lending, if the Board determines that such nonprofit corporation has one or more issues of outstanding long-term debt that is rated within the highest 3 rating categories of a nationally recognized statistical rating organization, and, if the Board determines that the making of the loan by such nonprofit corporation will cause a decline in the debt rating mentioned above, the Board at its discretion may disapprove the loan guarantee on this basis;

(ii)(I) no loan (including Other Debt as defined in subsection (f)(2)(B)) may be made for purposes of this Act by a governmental entity or affiliate thereof, or by the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation, or any institution supervised by the Office of Federal Housing Enterprise Oversight, the Federal Housing Finance Board, or any affiliate of such entities;

(II) any loan (including Other Debt as defined in subsection (f)(2)(B)) must have terms, in the judgment of the Board, that are consistent in material respects with the terms of similar obligations in the private capital market;

(III) for purposes of clause (i)(I)(bb), the term ''net equity'' means the value of the total assets of the entity, less the total liabilities of the entity, as recorded under generally accepted accounting principles for the fiscal quarter ended immediately prior to the date on which the subject loan is approved; and

(E) repayment of the loan is required to be made within a term of the lesser of—

(i) 25 years from the date of the execution of the loan; or

(ii) the economically useful life, as determined by the Board or in consultation with persons or entities deemed appropriate by the Board, of the primary assets to be used in the delivery of the signals concerned; and

(F) the loan meets any additional criteria developed under subsection (g).

(3) PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES FINANCIAL INTERESTS.—The Board may not approve the guarantee of a loan under this Act unless—

(A) the Board has been given documentation, assurances, and access to information, persons, and entities necessary, as determined by the Board, to address issues relevant to the review of the loan by the Board for purposes of this Act; and

(B) the Board makes a determination in writing that—

(i) to the best of its knowledge upon due inquiry, the assets, facilities, or equipment covered by the loan will be utilized economically and efficiently;

(ii) the terms, conditions, security, and schedule and amount of repayments of principal and the payment of interest with respect to the loan protect the financial interests of the United States and are reasonable;

(iii) to the extent possible, the value of collateral provided by an applicant is at least equal to the unpaid balance of the loan amount covered by the loan guarantee (the ''Amount'' for purposes of this clause); and if the value of collateral provided by an applicant is less than the Amount, the additional required collateral is provided by any affiliate of the applicant; and if the combined value of collateral provided by an applicant and any affiliate is not at least equal to the Amount, the collateral from such affiliate represents all of such affiliate's assets;

(iv) all necessary and required regulatory and other approvals, spectrum rights, and delivery permissions have been received for the loan, the project under the loan, and the Other Debt, if any, under subsection (f)(2)(B);

(v) the loan would not be available on reasonable terms and conditions without a loan guarantee under this Act; and

(vi) repayment of the loan can reasonably be expected.

(e) CONSIDERATIONS.—

(1) TYPE OF MARKET.—

(A) PRIORITY CONSIDERATIONS.—To the maximum extent practicable, the Board shall give priority in the approval of loan guarantees under this Act in the following order: First, to projects that will serve the greatest number of households in unserved areas and the number of States (including noncontiguous States); and second, to projects that will serve the greatest number of households in underserved areas. In each instance, the Board shall consider the project's estimated cost per household to be served.

(B) PROHIBITION.—The Board may not approve a loan guarantee under this Act for a project that is designed primarily to serve 1 or more of the 40 most populated designated market areas (as that term is defined in section 122(j) of title 17, United States Code).

(2) OTHER CONSIDERATIONS.—The Board shall consider other factors, which shall include projects that would—

(A) offer a separate tier of local broadcast signals;

(B) provide lower projected costs to consumers of such separate tier; and

(C) enable the delivery of local broadcast signals consistent with the purpose of this Act by a means reasonably compatible with existing systems or devices predominantly in use.

(f) GUARANTEE LIMITS.—

(1) LIMITATION ON AGGREGATE VALUE OF LOANS.—The aggregate value of all loans for which loan guarantees are issued under this Act (including the unguaranteed portion of loans issued under paragraph (2)(A)) and Other Debt under paragraph (2)(B) may not exceed $1,250,000,000.

(2) GUARANTEE LEVEL.—A loan guarantee issued under this Act—

(A) may not exceed an amount equal to 80 percent of a loan meeting in its entirety the requirements of subsection (d)(2)(A). If only a portion of a loan meets the requirements of that subsection, the Board shall determine that percentage of the loan meeting such requirements (the ''applicable portion'') and may issue a loan guarantee in an amount not exceeding 80 percent of the applicable portion; or

(B) may, as to a loan meeting in its entirety the requirements of subsection (d)(2)(A), cover the amount of such loan only if that loan is for an amount not exceeding 80 percent of the total debt financing for the project, and other debt financing (also meeting in its entirety the requirements of subsection (d)(2)(A)) from the same source for a total amount not less than 20 percent of the total debt financing for the project (''Other Debt'') has been approved.

(g) UNDERWRITING CRITERIA.—Within the period provided for under subsection (b)(1), the Board shall, in consultation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget and an independent public accounting firm, develop underwriting criteria relating to the guarantee of loans that are consistent with the purpose of this Act, including appropriate collateral and cash flow levels for loans guaranteed under this Act, and such other matters as the Board considers appropriate.

(h) CREDIT RISK PREMIUMS.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT AND ACCEPTANCE.—The Board may establish and approve the acceptance of credit risk premiums with respect to a loan guarantee under this Act in order to cover the cost, as determined under section 504(b)(1) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, of the loan guarantee. To the extent that appropriations of budget authority are insufficient to cover the cost, as so determined, of a loan guarantee under this Act, credit risk premiums shall be accepted from a non-Federal source under this subsection on behalf of the applicant for the loan guarantee.

(2) CREDIT RISK PREMIUM AMOUNT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Board shall determine the amount of any credit risk premium to be accepted with respect to a loan guarantee under this Act on the basis of—

(i) the financial and economic circumstances of the applicant for the loan guarantee, including the amount of collateral offered;

(ii) the proposed schedule of loan disbursements;

(iii) the business plans of the applicant for providing service;

(iv) any financial commitment from a broadcast signal provider; and

(v) the concurrence of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget as to the amount of the credit risk premium.

(B) PROPORTIONALITY.—To the extent that appropriations of budget authority are sufficient to cover the cost, as determined under section 504(b)(1) of the Federal Credit Reform Act of 1990, of loan guarantees under this Act, the credit risk premium with respect to each loan guarantee shall be reduced proportionately.

(C) PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS.—Credit risk premiums under this subsection shall be paid to an account (the ''Escrow Account'') established in the Treasury which shall accrue interest and such interest shall be retained by the account, subject to subparagraph (D).

(D) DEDUCTIONS FROM ESCROW ACCOUNT.—If a default occurs with respect to any loan guaranteed under this Act and the default is not cured in accordance with the terms of the underlying loan or loan guarantee agreement, the Administrator, in accordance with subsections (h) and (i) of section 5 of this Act, shall liquidate, or shall cause to be liquidated, all assets collateralizing such loan as to which it has a lien or security interest. Any shortfall between the proceeds of the liquidation net of costs and expenses relating to the liquidation, and the guarantee amount paid pursuant to this Act shall be deducted from funds in the Escrow Account and credited to the Administrator for payment of such shortfall. At such time as determined under subsection (d)(2)(E) when all loans guaranteed under this Act have been repaid or otherwise satisfied in accordance with this Act and the regulations promulgated hereunder, remaining funds in the Escrow Account, if any, shall be refunded, on a pro rata basis, to applicants whose loans guaranteed under this Act were not in default, or where any default was cured in accordance with the terms of the underlying loan or loan guarantee agreement.

(i) JUDICIAL REVIEW.—The decision of the Board to approve or disapprove the making of a loan guarantee under this Act shall not be subject to judicial review.

SEC. 5. ADMINISTRATION OF LOAN GUARANTEES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator of the Rural Utilities Service (in this Act referred to as the ''Administrator'') shall issue and otherwise administer loan guarantees that have been approved by the Board in accordance with sections 3 and 4 of this Act.

(b) SECURITY FOR PROTECTION OF UNITED STATES FINANCIAL INTERESTS.—

(1) TERMS AND CONDITIONS.—An applicant shall agree to such terms and conditions as are satisfactory, in the judgment of the Board, to ensure that, as long as any principal or interest is due and payable on a loan guaranteed under this Act, the applicant—

(A) shall maintain assets, equipment, facilities, and operations on a continuing basis;

(B) shall not make any discretionary dividend payments that impair its ability to repay obligations guaranteed under this Act;

(C) shall remain sufficiently capitalized; and

(D) shall submit to, and cooperate fully with, any audit of the applicant under section 8(a)(2) of this Act.

(2) COLLATERAL.—

(A) EXISTENCE OF ADEQUATE COLLATERAL.—An applicant shall provide the Board such documentation as is necessary, in the judgment of the Board, to provide satisfactory evidence that appropriate and adequate collateral secures a loan guaranteed under this Act.

(B) FORM OF COLLATERAL.—Collateral required by subparagraph (A) shall consist solely of assets of the applicant, any affiliate of the applicant, or both (whichever the Board considers appropriate), including primary assets to be used in the delivery of signals for which the loan is guaranteed.

(C) REVIEW OF VALUATION.—The value of collateral securing a loan guaranteed under this Act may be reviewed by the Board, and may be adjusted downward by the Board if the Board reasonably believes such adjustment is appropriate.

(3) LIEN ON INTERESTS IN ASSETS.—Upon the Board's approval of a loan guarantee under this Act, the Administrator shall have liens on assets securing the loan, which shall be superior to all other liens on such assets, and the value of the assets (based on a determination satisfactory to the Board) subject to the liens shall be at least equal to the unpaid balance of the loan amount covered by the loan guarantee, or that value approved by the Board under section 4(d)(3)(B)(iii) of this Act.

(4) PERFECTED SECURITY INTEREST.—With respect to a loan guaranteed under this Act, the Administrator and the lender shall have a perfected security interest in assets securing the loan that are fully sufficient to protect the financial interests of the United States and the lender.

(5) INSURANCE.—In accordance with practices in the private capital market, as determined by the Board, the applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act shall obtain, at its expense, insurance sufficient to protect the financial interests of the United States, as determined by the Board.

(c) ASSIGNMENT OF LOAN GUARANTEES.—The holder of a loan guarantee under this Act may assign the loan guaranteed under this Act in whole or in part, subject to such requirements as the Board may prescribe.

(d) MODIFICATION.—The Board may approve the modification of any term or condition of a loan guarantee or a loan guaranteed under this Act, including the rate of interest, time of payment of principal or interest, or security requirements only if—

(1) the modification is consistent with the financial interests of the United States;

(2) consent has been obtained from the parties to the loan agreement;

(3) the modification is consistent with the underwriting criteria developed under section 4(g) of this Act;

(4) the modification does not adversely affect the interest of the Federal Government in the assets or collateral of the applicant;

(5) the modification does not adversely affect the ability of the applicant to repay the loan; and

(6) the National Telecommunications and Information Administration has been consulted by the Board regarding the modification.

(e) PERFORMANCE SCHEDULES.—

(1) PERFORMANCE SCHEDULES.—An applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act for a project covered by section 4(e)(1) of this Act shall enter into stipulated performance schedules with the Administrator with respect to the signals to be provided through the project.

(2) PENALTY.—The Administrator may assess against and collect from an applicant described in paragraph (1) a penalty not to exceed 3 times the interest due on the guaranteed loan of the applicant under this Act if the applicant fails to meet its stipulated performance schedule under that paragraph.

(f) COMPLIANCE.—The Administrator, in cooperation with the Board and as the regulations of the Board may provide, shall enforce compliance by an applicant, and any other party to a loan guarantee for whose benefit assistance under this Act is intended, with the provisions of this Act, any regulations under this Act, and the terms and conditions of the loan guarantee, including through the submittal of such reports and documents as the Board may require in regulations prescribed by the Board and through regular periodic inspections and audits.

(g) COMMERCIAL VALIDITY.—A loan guarantee under this Act shall be incontestable—

(1) in the hands of an applicant on whose behalf the loan guarantee is made, unless the applicant engaged in fraud or misrepresentation in securing the loan guarantee; and

(2) as to any person or entity (or their respective successor in interest) who makes or contracts to make a loan to the applicant for the loan guarantee in reliance thereon, unless such person or entity (or respective successor in interest) engaged in fraud or misrepresentation in making or contracting to make such loan.

(h) DEFAULTS.—The Board shall prescribe regulations governing defaults on loans guaranteed under this Act, including the administration of the payment of guaranteed amounts upon default.

(i) RECOVERY OF PAYMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall be entitled to recover from an applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act the amount of any payment made to the holder of the guarantee with respect to the loan.

(2) SUBROGATION.—Upon making a payment described in paragraph (1), the Administrator shall be subrogated to all rights of the party to whom the payment is made with respect to the guarantee which was the basis for the payment.

(3) DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY.—

(A) SALE OR DISPOSAL.—The Administrator shall, in an orderly and efficient manner, sell or otherwise dispose of any property or other interests obtained under this Act in a manner that maximizes taxpayer return and is consistent with the financial interests of the United States.

(B) MAINTENANCE.—The Administrator shall maintain in a cost-effective and reasonable manner any property or other interests pending sale or disposal of such property or other interests under subparagraph (A).

(j) ACTION AGAINST OBLIGOR.—

(1) AUTHORITY TO BRING CIVIL ACTION.—The Administrator may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States in the name of the United States or of the holder of the obligation in the event of a default on a loan guaranteed under this Act. The holder of a loan guarantee shall make available to the Administrator all records and evidence necessary to prosecute the civil action.

(2) FULLY SATISFYING OBLIGATIONS OWED THE UNITED STATES.—The Administrator may accept property in satisfaction of any sums owed the United States as a result of a default on a loan guaranteed under this Act, but only to the extent that any cash accepted by the Administrator is not sufficient to satisfy fully the sums owed as a result of the default.

(k) BREACH OF CONDITIONS.—The Administrator shall commence a civil action in a court of appropriate jurisdiction to enjoin any activity which the Board finds is in violation of this Act, the regulations under this Act, or any conditions which were duly agreed to, and to secure any other appropriate relief, including relief against any affiliate of the applicant.

(l) ATTACHMENT.—No attachment or execution may be issued against the Administrator or any property in the control of the Administrator pursuant to this Act before the entry of a final judgment (as to which all rights of appeal have expired) by a Federal, State, or other court of competent jurisdiction against the Administrator in a proceeding for such action.

(m) FEES.—

(1) APPLICATION FEE.—The Board shall charge and collect from an applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act a fee to cover the cost of the Board in making necessary determinations and findings with respect to the loan guarantee application under this Act. The amount of the fee shall be reasonable.

(2) LOAN GUARANTEE ORIGINATION FEE.—The Board shall charge, and the Administrator may collect, a loan guarantee origination fee with respect to the issuance of a loan guarantee under this Act.

(3) USE OF FEES COLLECTED.—Any fee collected under this subsection shall be used to offset administrative costs under this Act, including costs of the Board and of the Administrator.

(n) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO AFFILIATES.—

(1) INDEMNIFICATION.—The United States shall be indemnified by any affiliate (acceptable to the Board) of an applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act for any losses that the United States incurs as a result of—

(A) a judgment against the applicant or any of its affiliates;

(B) any breach by the applicant or any of its affiliates of their obligations under the loan guarantee agreement;

(C) any violation of the provisions of this Act, and the regulations prescribed under this Act, by the applicant or any of its affiliates;

(D) any penalties incurred by the applicant or any of its affiliates for any reason, including violation of a stipulated performance schedule under subsection (e); and

(E) any other circumstances that the Board considers appropriate.

(2) LIMITATION ON TRANSFER OF LOAN PROCEEDS.—An applicant for a loan guarantee under this Act may not transfer any part of the proceeds of the loan to an affiliate.

(o) EFFECT OF BANKRUPTCY.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever any person or entity is indebted to the United States as a result of any loan guarantee issued under this Act and such person or entity is insolvent or is a debtor in a case under title 11, United States Code, the debts due to the United States shall be satisfied first.

(2) A discharge in bankruptcy under title 11, United States Code, shall not release a person or entity from an obligation to the United States in connection with a loan guarantee under this Act.

SEC. 6. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS FOR SPECTRUM AUCTIONS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no loan guarantee under this Act may be granted or used to provide funds for the acquisition of licenses for the use of spectrum in any competitive bidding under section 309(j) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 309(j)).

SEC. 7. PROHIBITION ON USE OF FUNDS BY INCUMBENT CABLE OPERATORS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no loan guarantee under this Act may be granted or used to provide funds for—

(1) the extension of any cable system to any area or areas for which the cable operator of such cable system has a cable franchise, if such franchise obligates the operator to extend such system to such area or areas; or

(2) the upgrading or enhancement of the services provided over any cable system, unless such upgrading or enhancement is principally undertaken to extend services to areas outside of the previously existing franchise area of the cable operator.

SEC. 8. ANNUAL AUDIT.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—The Comptroller General of the United States shall conduct on an annual basis an audit of—

(1) the administration of the provisions of this Act; and

(2) the financial position of each applicant who receives a loan guarantee under this Act, including the nature, amount, and purpose of investments made by the applicant.

(b) REPORT.—The Comptroller General shall submit to the Congress a report on each audit conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 9. EXEMPTION FROM MUST CARRY REQUIREMENTS.

A facility of a satellite carrier, cable system, or other multichannel video programming distributor that is financed with a loan guaranteed under this Act and that delivers local broadcast signals in a television market pursuant to the provisions of section 338, 614, or 615 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 338, 534, or 535) shall not be required to carry in such market a greater number of local broadcast signals than the number of such signals that is carried by the cable system serving the largest number of subscribers in such market.

SEC. 10. ADDITIONAL AVAILABILITY OF BROADCAST SIGNALS IN RURAL AREAS.

(a) OPENING OF FILING FOR ADDITIONAL TRANSLATOR AND LOW-POWER STATIONS.—The Federal Communications Commission shall, in accordance with its regulations, open a filing period window for the acceptance of applications for television translator stations and low-power television stations in rural areas.

(b) DEADLINES FOR NOTICE.—The Commission shall announce the filing period window no less than 90 days prior to the commencement of the window.

SEC. 11. IMPROVED CELLULAR SERVICE IN RURAL AREAS.

(a) REINSTATEMENT OF APPLICANTS AS TENTATIVE SELECTEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the order of the Federal Communications Commission in the proceeding described in paragraph (3), the Commission shall—

(A) reinstate each applicant as a tentative selectee under the covered rural service area licensing proceeding; and

(B) permit each applicant to amend its application, to the extent necessary to update factual information and to comply with the rules of the Commission, at any time before the Commission's final licensing action in the covered rural service area licensing proceeding.

(2) EXEMPTION FROM PETITIONS TO DENY.—For purposes of the amended applications filed pursuant to paragraph (1)(B), the provisions of section 309(d)(1) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 309(d)(1)) shall not apply.

(3) PROCEEDING.—The proceeding described in this paragraph is the proceeding of the Commission In re Applications of Cellwave Telephone Services L.P, Futurewave General Partners L.P., and Great Western Cellular Partners, 7 FCC Rcd No. 19 (1992).

(b) CONTINUATION OF LICENSE PROCEEDING; FEE ASSESSMENT.—

(1) AWARD OF LICENSES.—The Commission shall award licenses under the covered rural service area licensing proceeding within 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) SERVICE REQUIREMENTS.—The Commission shall provide that, as a condition of an applicant receiving a license pursuant to the covered rural service area licensing proceeding, the applicant shall provide cellular radiotelephone service to subscribers in accordance with sections 22.946 and 22.947 of the Commission's rules (47 CFR 22.946, 22.947); except that the time period applicable under section 22.947 of the Commission's rules (or any successor rule) to the applicants identified in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (d)(1) shall be 3 years rather than 5 years and the waiver authority of the Commission shall apply to such 3-year period.

(3) CALCULATION OF LICENSE FEE.—

(A) FEE REQUIRED.—The Commission shall establish a fee for each of the licenses under the covered rural service area licensing proceeding. In determining the amount of the fee, the Commission shall consider—

(i) the average price paid per person served in the Commission's Cellular Unserved Auction (Auction No. 12); and

(ii) the settlement payments required to be paid by the permittees pursuant to the consent decree set forth in the Commission's order, In re the Tellesis Partners (7 FCC Rcd 3168 (1992)), multiplying such payments by two.

(B) NOTICE OF FEE.—Within 30 days after the date an applicant files the amended application permitted by subsection (a)(1)(B), the Commission shall notify each applicant of the fee established for the license associated with its application.

(4) PAYMENT FOR LICENSES.—No later than 18 months after the date that an applicant is granted a license, each applicant shall pay to the Commission the fee established pursuant to paragraph (3) for the license granted to the applicant under paragraph (1).

(5) AUCTION AUTHORITY.—If, after the amendment of an application pursuant to subsection (a)(1)(B), the Commission finds that the applicant is ineligible for grant of a license to provide cellular radiotelephone services for a rural service area or the applicant does not meet the requirements under paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Commission shall grant the license for which the applicant is the tentative selectee (pursuant to subsection (a)(1)(B) by competitive bidding pursuant to section 309(j) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 309(j)).

(c) PROHIBITION OF TRANSFER.—During the 5-year period that begins on the date that an applicant is granted any license pursuant to subsection (a), the Commission may not authorize the transfer or assignment of that license under section 310 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 310). Nothing in this Act may be construed to prohibit any applicant granted a license pursuant to subsection (a) from contracting with other licensees to improve cellular telephone service.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section, the following definitions shall apply:

(1) APPLICANT.—The term ''applicant'' means—

(A) Great Western Cellular Partners, a California general partnership chosen by the Commission as tentative selectee for RSA #492 on May 4, 1989;

(B) Monroe Telephone Services L.P., a Delaware limited partnership chosen by the Commission as tentative selectee for RSA #370 on August 24, 1989 (formerly Cellwave Telephone Services L.P.); and

(C) FutureWave General Partners L.P., a Delaware limited partnership chosen by the Commission as tentative selectee for RSA #615 on May 25, 1990.

(2) COMMISSION.—The term ''Commission'' means the Federal Communications Commission.

(3) COVERED RURAL SERVICE AREA LICENSING PROCEEDING.—The term ''covered rural service area licensing proceeding'' means the proceeding of the Commission for the grant of cellular radiotelephone licenses for rural service areas #492 (Minnesota 11), #370 (Florida 11), and #615 (Pennsylvania 4).

(4) TENTATIVE SELECTEE.—The term ''tentative selectee'' means a party that has been selected by the Commission under a licensing proceeding for grant of a license, but has not yet been granted the license because the Commission has not yet determined whether the party is qualified under the Commission's rules for grant of the license.

SEC. 12. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

Section 339(c) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 339(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(5) DEFINITION.—Notwithstanding subsection (d)(4), for purposes of paragraphs (2) and (4) of this subsection, the term 'satellite carrier' includes a distributor (as defined in section 119(d)(1) of title 17, United States Code), but only if the satellite distributor's relationship with the subscriber includes billing, collection, service activation, and service deactivation.''.

SEC. 13. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) AFFILIATE.—The term ''affiliate''—

(A) means any person or entity that controls, or is controlled by, or is under common control with, another person or entity; and

(B) may include any individual who is a director or senior management officer of an affiliate, a shareholder controlling more than 25 percent of the voting securities of an affiliate, or more than 25 percent of the ownership interest in an affiliate not organized in stock form.

(2) UNSERVED AREA.—The term ''unserved area'' means any area that—

(A) is outside the grade B contour (as determined using standards employed by the Federal Communications Commission) of the local television broadcast signals serving a particular designated market area; and

(B) does not have access to local television broadcast signals from any commercial, for-profit multichannel video provider.

(3) UNDERSERVED AREA.—The term ''underserved area'' means any area that—

(A) is outside the grade A contour (as determined using standards employed by the Federal Communications Commission) of the local television broadcast signals serving a particular designated market area; and

(B) has access to local television broadcast signals from not more than one commercial, for-profit multichannel video provider.

(4) COMMON TERMS.—Except as provided in paragraphs (1) through (4), any term used in this Act that is defined in the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 151 et seq.) has the meaning given that term in the Communications Act of 1934.

SEC. 14. AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) COST OF LOAN GUARANTEES.—For the cost of the loans guaranteed under this Act, including the cost of modifying the loans, as defined in section 502 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (2 U.S.C. 661a), there are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2001 through 2006, such amounts as may be necessary.

(b) COST OF ADMINISTRATION.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act, other than to cover costs under subsection (a).

(c) AVAILABILITY.—Any amounts appropriated pursuant to the authorizations of appropriations in subsections (a) and (b) shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 16. SUNSET.

No loan guarantee may be approved under this Act after December 31, 2006.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SHIMKUS).

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, I do want to commend my colleague from Virginia for this work. A requirement on local broadcasters to obtain a license is to operate in the public interest. Emergency broadcasts and coverage is an example of their importance.

The great flood of 1993 is an example of local broadcasters covering emergencies, covering the levees, around the clock, notifying the public when levees broke so that lives could be saved.

In this new era of technology, last year we passed the Satellite Home Viewers Act to ensure that local broadcasts occur in local areas through direct satellite. Dropped on the cutting room floor was an assistance needed to assure local into local reaches all Americans. Rural America cannot be left behind. I am proud to be a cosponsor, have worked for its passage on the committee, and speak in support of the passage of this bill.

□ 1715

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. THUNE).

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me, and also I want to recognize the gentleman for the great work that he did to bring this issue to the floor and for his leadership on the issue.

I am an original cosponsor of the Rural Local Broadcast Signal Act. This takes us one step closer to closing the digital divide. Nearly 55,000 households in my home State of South Dakota receive their programming from satellite dishes. Over the last 2 years, I have heard from 1,400 of my fellow South Dakotans on this issue.

At the end of the last session when the loan guarantees were stripped from the Satellite Home Viewers Improvement Act, many people were left without reliable access to quality local television. For many who live in rural areas, satellite service is the only option. Now we have a chance to correct that and provide every rural viewer the opportunity to receive a clear, reliable signal from his or her local station.

Like so many of my colleagues, my State is prone to natural disasters, tornadoes, hailstorms, blizzards, and flash floods. Local broadcasters are civic-minded and provide emergency information for emergency situations. South Dakotans rely on those broadcasters for important weather-related information as well.

Local broadcast signals can save lives. While local television may not save every life, it often provides the very precious few seconds that are necessary to grab our loved ones and take cover. We owe it to rural Americans to make sure that they have the same quality access to telecommunications as those in urban areas.

No one wants to watch a network signal with poor quality. With today's technological innovations, no one should have to. On behalf of the 150 South Dakotans who rely on satellite television, I urge the passage of this important legislation and quick consideration in the conference.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LARGENT).

Mr. LARGENT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, do not be fooled into thinking that this is not a controversial issue. This is. For those who are listening to the debate that we are having on the floor, it would seem that this thing is going to just steamroll through, but do not think there is not controversy surrounding this particular issue.

Let me read a couple of headlines about this particular bill that we are working on today. Here is one from the Washington Times, an editorial: ''Rural Rip-off.'' This is the bill we are voting on today, described as a ''rural rip-off'' in the Washington Times.

The Wall Street Journal says, ''Rural Utilities Invest Funds in Markets Instead of Local Projects, Audit Says.'' These are the people who are going to be applying for this $1.25 billion government subsidized loan guarantee.

In an editorial in the USA Today it is referred to as ''The Taxpayer Rip-off in Progress.'' That is the bill we are discussing here this evening.

Let me read just a few of the comments in these articles. First of all, let me say that this is a program designed to give loan guarantees to people who do not need it to fund projects that are not needed.

We have heard a variety of speakers speak on the floor today and talk about, this is to provide local service. Not true. Local into local is the term. That is not true. The definition in the bill says that all these loans are available, as long as they do not have access to local television broadcast signals from not more than one commercial for-profit multi-channel video provider.

So if one already gets local into local through the cable service, these monies are still available to them, so they can have local into local that is providing the local weather, the local crop reports, and so forth, and still be eligible to receive this money.

What this is really about, and Members need to understand this, this is very important, what it really is about is providing government subsidies to create competition with the private sector. That may be an unintended consequence, but that definitely will be a consequence if this bill goes through, which I anticipate it will.

We will be subsidizing businesses with government loan guarantees so they can compete against people in the private sector. That should send a chill throughout Congress and the rest of the United States, that here we have the United States Congress getting ready to vote on a bill that provides $1.25 billion of taxpayer loan guarantees to subsidize business to go out and compete with the private sector.

That is a problem. That is a real problem. All who own small businesses or own big businesses, how would they like the government jumping into their business, subsidizing some competition for them? That is not the intention, I do not believe, the Founders of the Constitution had. I do not think it is necessarily the intent of the authors of this bill, but it will be the unintended consequence of the bill.

I would urge my colleagues to vote no.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS).

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation. As an original cosponsor of this bill, I know how important it is that everyone have access to their local TV stations. Locally-broadcast TV is most Americans' primary source of news, weather, and emergency information. But in my district and in rural areas across this country, many people cannot watch their own local stations. The hills and valleys in Santa Barbara and San Luis Obispo Counties preclude thousands of my constituents from receiving local TV over the air.

Some of my constituents do not have affordable access to cable, or they want a different choice. Many of them turn to satellite TV, but they could not get their local stations over the satellite.

So last year we passed legislation allowing so-called local into local broadcasting. But we knew then what we know now, most markets in the country will not be covered. Outside the top 40 media markets, local into local broadcasting is not going to happen because there is not enough money in it.

Citizens in places like the Central Coast of California still will not have access to their local stations through satellite TV, and local broadcasters still will not be able to get their signals to people who need them most, the folks in their own communities.

This is simply unfair to my constituents and to millions of other Americans in rural and underserved areas. The loan program that this bill sets up will help to bridge this gap, so I urge my colleagues to support this critically important bill. Our constituents in rural America deserve access to their local stations.

This bill is fair, this bill is just, it is worthy of our support.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND) is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlemen for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as a strong supporter of H.R. 3615. I commend my colleagues on the compromise that they reached and worked out in this legislation, especially the two gentlemen from Virginia, the respective chairs and ranking members of the committees.

This legislation is vitally important for my constituents because it is vitally important to rural America. My congressional district is predominantly rural, with a population in the largest city of about 55,000 people.

Western Wisconsin has numerous small towns, villages, and individual farms nestled in the valleys of its rolling hills and bluffs. Due to poor reception with normal antennas, many constituents purchase satellite dishes for television reception. Unfortunately, these local satellite dishes do not provide local television coverage.

Farmers in rural areas rely on their local news to provide weather forecasts, parents rely on local news to alert them to school closings, every constituent relies on local news to warn them of impending weather emergencies. In my district, access to local news through satellite television is not a luxury, it is oftentimes a matter of life and death.

Passage of the Home Satellite Viewers Act last year was a big step towards ensuring local access for my constituents who rely on satellite dishes. Unfortunately, it was incomplete. H.R. 3615 creates an 80 percent loan guaranty program that will help satellite or other technology companies build the infrastructure to guarantee local access to rural areas.

My colleagues in urban communities are already seeing local access because it is cost-effective to provide it in those areas. It is not, however, cost-effective in rural America. That is why this legislation here today is vitally important to the people I represent.

I urge passage of H.R. 3615.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Wyoming (Mrs. CUBIN).

Mrs. CUBIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, as an original cosponsor of the loan guarantee program, I am particularly pleased with the bill's fiscally responsible plan that will ensure that all consumers, specifically those in medium and small markets, will have access to local broadcast signals. The only cities that will enjoy local network broadcasting over their satellite systems under the current system will be those with millions of television households.

As we all know, the largest TV markets are currently enjoying local into local service over their satellite systems because of the hard work of the Committee on Commerce in passing the Satellite Home Viewers Act. The legislation before us today allows Congress to finish the job by providing that same service to rural Americans.

Wyoming is a perfect example of why we need to pass this legislation. The two largest TV markets in Wyoming are Cheyenne and Casper. They rank number 196 and 199, respectively. Even under the most optimistic local into local plans, Wyoming television viewers would probably never receive local into local service without the loan guarantee provision that is included in this bill.

I can only say that in lieu of mandating that satellite and cable providers serve rural areas, this is our only option. I am committed to moving this piece of legislation so that rural television customers can enjoy the same local television programming as our urban friends.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I do believe that this bill, in its present form, has yet to reach its pluperfect form of acceptability. However, I think that for the time being, as it moves through this floor consideration, that it perhaps does merit the support of the Members.

However, just so that the Members can understand, this bill does not require some of the largest corporations in America to actually first have gone into the financial marketplace and established that they cannot obtain these loans from a commercial financial institution. Instead, what it does is it assumes that they cannot receive them.

One of the things that we I think should think about before we finally return from a conference with the Senate is whether or not we just might want to ensure that some of these huge corporations, if they can find the financing on their own, should not be able to avail themselves of publicly guaranteed funding, even if it would be at better interest rates than they could get in the free market.

I think that is something that we are going to have to consider, because these are some of the most well known corporations in America that we are putting this bill through to guarantee that they are going to be subsidized. In other words, we are not taking care of small farmers here, we are talking here about large multinationals.

That is something that I think at the end of the day we can find a resolution for; that we do not, in other words, reenact mistakes in the past where we wind up subsidizing those that do not need it and, unfortunately, in other bills that pass through this body, we wind up not giving any kind of help to those that are most in need in our country.

Hopefully, as the process evolves and as we seek to perfect this legislation through the conference committee, we will be able to achieve those ends.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. COX).

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). The gentleman from California (Mr. COX) is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I thank both of my colleagues for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I share the goals of the sponsors of this legislation. The fundamental problem is simple: There are, according to the Congressional Budget Office, 3 million people in America who do not get over the air free television and who do not get cable, so they cannot get their local TV, 3 million people.

□ 1730

Now, until 1999, Congress made it illegal for satellite TV providers to put local stations into the homes of those people. We fixed that with SHVA, with the Satellite Home Viewer Act, a short while ago; but there remains a catch. In order to deliver even one local station into a market, the satellite provider has to deliver all of the locally originated stations.

Now naturally, the satellite providers trying to make money are going to start with the big markets like Los Angeles and New York, and in my TV market of southern California, where Los Angeles dominates, there are so many locally originated TV stations, scores of them, that it fills up all the satellite capacity.

What we have essentially said, by way of Federal regulation, is that it is more important for people who live in big TV markets, in big cities, to get all of the locally-originated TV stations, even if they do not have any local content by the way, than it is for people who live in rural America to get just one. We are doing nothing about that unfair mandate in this bill.

Now, I want to draw the attention of my colleagues to the fact that the procedure that we are using to pass this bill today does not permit any amendments. In the Committee on Commerce, where we worked very hard on this issue, I offered an amendment that passed in subcommittee that would have addressed the very reason that rural America is not getting service from satellite TV today. We passed that amendment in subcommittee. We lost it in full committee. I would like to have brought it to the floor and directly address the problem that we are facing in America today, and that is not enough local TV for this group of 3 million people.

But instead of lifting that Federal mandate, which the satellite providers tell us would permit them to get 80 million more people, instead of doing that we are going to create a brand new Federal program. We are going to take one of the oldest, stodgiest, failing bureaucracies that we have in Washington, the former Rural Electrification Administration, which is on a covert mission now that we will not recognize it to change its name to the Rural Utilities Service, and get a new lease on life, we are going to give them a billion dollars to go help these 3 million people. We are going to put them in the business of trying to compete with for-profit satellite TV companies, and one of the two biggest in America still is not making money.

The Congressional Budget Office tells us that the Rural Utilities Service is writing off billions of dollars in their existing loan portfolio left and right, at taxpayer expense, and that about 30 to 40 percent of the loans that are going to get made under this program are likely to be written off. So one can look at the cost of this program right up front is about $400 million.

The Rural Utilities Service, which we are putting in charge of this, does not know anything about which technology, which TV technology, to invest in. They may know something about agriculture. They are part of the Department of Agriculture. But they certainly do not know anything about which technology to bet on.

The loans that we are going to be providing have a term of 25 years. Does anybody in this Chamber understand what the digital information marketplace is going to look like 25 years from now? Would someone want to make a competitive bet to go into this market in competition with the Federal Government, with the Department of Agriculture, on their side? That is what we are doing in this legislation.

It is an extremely unlikely assumption that the Federal Government is going to make money in the satellite TV business, but one thing we know for sure nobody who lives in a rural area is going to get anything but pay TV under this proposal. Free, over-the-air TV, which the Government usually subsidizes, is not helped by this proposal.

I urge my colleagues to take a hard look at this, to ask why it is that it is being rushed through here without any opportunity to amend it; why we are giving a 70-year-old bureaucracy so much power, and I ask my colleagues to vote it down.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Missouri (Mrs. EMERSON).

Mrs. EMERSON. Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a few minutes to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) and the chairpeople of the respective committees for the great work that they have done. I have heard what the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) has said and the gentleman from Oklahoma about the fact that this might not be the best means by which to give people who have no access to any kind of signal at all the opportunity to find out if they have emergency flooding, whether a tornado is coming, whether like where I live an earthquake is perhaps going to happen. I just cannot tell the folks in my district, which is very, very rural and very remote in some areas, that it is not fair that people who live in big cities can get access to their local news; they can get it, but you cannot have it because nobody wants to come and give it to you.

I do not know how to answer the thousands of questions that I have gotten about this without giving them the opportunity to have their local news provided by satellite, because they do not have any other way to get it, Mr. Speaker. So I would just ask my colleagues who come from more metropolitan areas to try to understand what it is like for those of us who represent people who not only do not have access to satellite and/or cable, certainly cannot get any local news because there are not any local news stations within 200 or 300 miles, but a lot of these people do not even have running water in their homes. They deserve to have a break and they deserve to be on a level playing field with all of our folks in the cities, and I am just very happy that we are going to pass today, I hope, a bill to give all Americans an equal shake.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). The Chair would remind Members that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE) has 2½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) has 6½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) has 3 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, might I inquire what would be the order of closing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The order of close would be the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE).

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I commend the chairmen of a number of committees that have had jurisdiction over this issue. I co-chair with the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) a task force on rural technology and have taken a long interest and a strongly held belief that if rural America is going to survive, it is going to be because we have equal access to technology and telecommunications.

One of the issues that has impacted the constituents of Kansas greatly is this issue of whether or not they can receive local programming, local-to-local programming, on their satellite networks. A typical constituent letter: We live in Madison. We are unable to receive network programming, ABC, CBS, NBC or Fox, with a rooftop antenna that would be suitable to watch. For 20 years we have received our programming through a satellite dish. We now get network coverage from cities like Denver, Chicago, Dallas, and New York; but here is the problem: We cannot even qualify to access local broadcasting because we are in a designated marketing area that is too close to have local television.

It matters to Kansans as a matter of public safety. Weather is important to us and agriculture, and I urge the passage of this bill and appreciate the consideration that our committees have given to this topic.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this satellite revolution is something that is changing the very face of the video marketplace in the United States. Back in 1992 when we passed the programming access provision, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and I and others were out here on the floor arguing that if we passed that that we would create a revolution, create an 18-inch dish that one could buy and put out between the petunias and bring down hundreds of television stations; and through the years now we have seen this revolution change how suburban and urban America relate to their cable companies.

This legislation is directed towards the last remaining pocket of resistance, that is, rural America. It is meant to remedy a problem that we think that we dealt with last year when we made it possible for urban and suburban television stations to beam up their local TV stations and then beam them right back down into the same marketplace. That is more difficult in rural America.

It is wise for us to look at this digital divide to make sure that rural America is taken care of. At the same time, it is also important for us to make sure that we do not subsidize that which would ultimately happen anyway in the private marketplace, and that is a very delicate, very thin line for us to be walking. I support this legislation at this time, but I hope as we move it further through the process that we have the willingness to be open-minded in terms of ensuring that we build in the protections, that we do not subsidize those that do not need subsidization, that we do not help those to compete in the private market that could compete in the private market on their own.

That said, it is important for rural America not to be left out. An aye vote on this legislation at this time is, in fact, something that I recommend.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the reason why the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) and I and so many others came to the floor in 1992 to try to create the capacity of direct broadcast satellite to bring television programming to America was because at the time we had just gotten through deregulating the cable companies. We in Congress had taken away the power of local franchising authorities to regulate the monopoly cable company. We thought it was pretty important if we were going to be responsible for taking away the power of local governments to regulate the monopoly cable company that we ought to make sure consumers in America had a competitive choice. That is what it was all about.

In 1992, we had to fight our way over a presidential veto to accomplish that goal, but we accomplished it. We created the capacity of television satellites to deliver satellite programming in competition with cable, but we left one thing undone, and that was the capacity of those satellites to include the local network programming in the package.

So guess what? Satellites were born; direct broadcast satellite came into being. But it was an imperfect competitor. So last year we tried to perfect that 1992 legislation by giving the satellites the right to carry the local network programming in the package; in short, to give Americans a real choice.

Why? Because we had taken away the authority to regulate the monopoly. Well, guess what? In March of last year, all the authority to regulate from Washington monopoly cable ended. We allowed that to happen, but across America, outside of the 70 major markets that will be served by this new legislation last year, Americans will either have no multichannel delivery or will be afflicted with a single channel delivery system that is now unregulated.

We created, through this process of legislation, the possibility that many Americans will have only one choice for television programming. Today we cure that. Today we make sure that here in Washington we provide the loan guarantees, not the loans. We are not giving anybody a billion dollars. We are providing government-backed guarantees to make sure that the rest of America, in addition to the 70 major markets, the rest of America will have more than one choice.

Now that is the way we ought to behave. If we are going to take away power to regulate monopolies, we ought to always ensure that consumers have real choice because then consumers can regulate the companies by choosing which they want to reward with their money and which they want to punish by taking their business away.

With two providers in the marketplace, Americans will finally be protected. They will have choice and with choice will come fair prices. With choice will come fair packaging of products. With choice will come consumer regulation of the marketplace. I hope we pass this good bill.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 6½ minutes.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise again in support of the bill and associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) regarding the intent and want to use this time to perhaps clarify a few points that have been made, I believe, erroneously through no intent.

□ 1745

There has been a lot of quoting of newspaper articles and various interpretations of an OIG report that wrongfully implied that electric cooperatives were holding $11 billion in a portfolio consisting of financial instruments which was interpreted to mean stocks, bonds, and mutual funds.

There has also been an implying that the rural utility service has not been a good steward of taxpayer dollars. If my colleagues will check the record, they will find that the telecommunications program or the rural utility service has never incurred a default regarding loss of taxpayer funding. The electric distribution and water programs have incurred write-offs of less than 1 percent over their entire history of operation.

Let me just quickly talk about this $11 billion in cash or assets that supposedly could be redirected and financed, in this case, telecommunications. $2.5 billion of that is patronage capital. That is monies owned by the members of the cooperatives that are invested in the distribution and transmission lines that provide electricity and telephone service.

$795 million are capital term certificates which form a pool of funds for long-term loans for cooperative lending. $2.3 billion is in accounts receivable which are bills issued by cooperatives that are not yet paid by customers. $2 billion of this $11 billion is in operating capital. It is deemed a minimum prudent reserve level by utility accounting standards held by the distribution utilities. $2.8 billion of this $11 billion alleged dollars is in operating capital that is deemed a prudent reserve held by the power supply cooperatives.

These are just some of the investments that rural electrics and rural telephone cooperatives have today. What are they doing with it? Nine hundred and thirty electric cooperatives have invested $75 billion for 32,254 megawatts of generating capacity and 2,281,351 miles of line, which accounts for approximately half of the distribution lines in the United States.

I think it is grossly unfair of those who have been misinterpreting an OIG report for purposes of this particular bill. This bill is good in its intent. The rural utility service will continue to prudently manage taxpayer dollars, and the rural communities will be benefited, as has already been stated by this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, in addition to all of those I thanked earlier, and there are just too many to recite everyone, I want to also recognize the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. CLAYTON), the ranking member of my subcommittee; as well as the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY); and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), from the Committee on Commerce, for their assistance in helping get this legislation to this point.

But what I really want to do is thank the American people, because they are the ones who have driven this legislation more than anyone else. Many Members of Congress have received more mail, more phone calls, more e-mails on this issue than any other legislative issue in the time that they have served in Congress.

The reason is very simple. Look at the map. The red and yellow dots, they are going to get taken care of. The rest of the United States is not. Tulsa, Oklahoma is not going to get a local into local service without this legislation; Lexington, Kentucky; Roanoke and Lynchburg, Virginia, my communities in my district; Austin, Texas; Richmond, Virginia; Knoxville, Tennessee; Honolulu, Hawaii; Des Moines, Iowa; Green Bay, Wisconsin; Omaha, Nebraska; Spokane; Shreveport, Louisiana; New Orleans, Louisiana; Rochester; Tucson; Springfield, Missouri; Springfield, Massachusetts. The list goes on and on.

More than 160 television markets, more than 30 million households, nearly 75 million Americans, more than 1,000 television stations in those markets will not be served without the passage of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to join me in passing this bill.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises today in strong support of H.R. 3615, the Rural Local Broadcast Signal Act. This Member is pleased to be a co-sponsor of this important legislation, which will ensure improved access to local television signals in unserved or under-served rural areas.

Many rural families either cannot receive their local broadcast signals over the air, or are not offered cable service. It is important that we address this problem. Particularly in rural areas, local television broadcasts may be one of the few sources of emergency warnings and local news. In addition, local television provides weather, sports and special interest programming. Rural Americans, like their urban counterparts, need access to this important information.

Last year, the House passed the Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act, which was ultimately signed into law. Satellite companies are now allowed to offer local network television signals to their subscribers. As a result of this bill, it is estimated that 70 percent of American households will eventually receive local broadcast signals. The remaining 30 percent of households, however, are found in sparsely populated areas, which will likely not be served under existing conditions. This legislation will ensure that these unserved or under-served areas are able to receive access to local television signals.

This bill authorizes the Rural Utilities Service (RUS) to provide loan guarantees to organizations for building or improving satellite, cable television and multi-channel video distribution infrastructure in under-served areas. The RUS will guarantee up to $1.25 billion in loans to multi-channel video service providers, including direct broadcast satellite licensees. Under the RUS, up to 80 percent of a private loan may be guaranteed and loans will be payable in full within 25 years or the useful life of the assets purchased. This bill also provides standards to ensure that the loans will be promptly repaid and that the borrower has adequate collateral and insurance to protect the interests of the Federal government. Projects providing service to the most under-served market areas will be given priority for these loans.

In closing, this Member encourages his colleagues to support H.R. 3615. This bill ensures that all Americans, including those in rural areas, receive reliable access to their local broadcast stations.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, today the House takes up a bill that, once again, handpicks a specific industry in our economy, the satellite television industry, to receive government assistance in the form of loan guarantees. While the bill before us today represents an improvement over the bill included in last year's Satellite Home Viewer Improvement Act conference report, and largely reflects the bill reported out by the Senate Banking Committee, and enacted by the full Senate unanimously, I rise today to express strong concerns with the process by which H.R. 3615 was brought to the House floor.

Last summer, I rose before this chamber, and was joined by the Chairman of the Banking Committee, to oppose another government give-away in the form of loan guarantees to the steel, oil, and gas industries. I opposed that bill then because of its substantive flaws, and because taxpayers were being placed at undue financial risk. I also opposed the steel, oil, and gas loan guarantee program because this House, in an open circumvention of its standing rules, brought the bill to the floor without having first given the committees of jurisdiction the right to review the legislation and to deliberate it on its merits. The advantage of having committees of Congress examine legislation with vast implications for our economy, the Federal government, and taxpayers is that it prevents us from enacting bad laws that help an industry in the short-term (sometimes unwisely) but ultimately harm the taxpayers in the long-run, who end up having to bear the costs of defaulted loans and unsound ventures.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot, and must not, allow this House to flagrantly circumvent its own rules at the expense of the taxpayers.

Rule X, Clause 1(d)(5) of the Rules of the House of Representatives stipulates that all bills, resolutions, and other matters related to "Financial aid to commerce and industry (other than transportation)" are under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services. On November 18, 1999, the Majority Leader of this House assured the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. BOUCHER, the chief Democratic sponsor of this measure, on the House floor that "It is my hope that the relevant committees of jurisdiction will engage in a full debate and discussion of the merits of this loan guarantee package and move appropriate legislation forward expeditiously." I regret to mention that H.R. 3615, which provides financial aid in the form of loan guarantees to satellite companies, was not referred to a very relevant committee of jurisdiction, the Banking Committee.

When H.R. 3615 was introduced on February 10th, 2000, its proponent argued successfully that the loan guarantee program being proposed fell strictly within the Rural Utilities Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture and that, therefore, the bill should not be referred to the Banking Committee. While this is a technical and spurious argument, the bottom line is that the Congress is acting on legislation to provide financial aid to the satellite TV industry and the bill should have therefore been referred to the Committee with clear jurisdiction over these matters—the Banking Committee. I should remind my colleagues that it was the Banking Committee that historically has enacted successful, and strong loan guarantee programs that have been profitable to the U.S. government—such as those for the Chrysler Corporation, the City of New York, and the Lockheed Corporation.

Moreover, I should note that the Commerce Committee, unlike the Agriculture Committee, added a Board to the legislation in an effort to ensure the program's accountability to the taxpayers. That Board includes the Secretary of the Treasury as a member. For those who mistakenly questioned the need to refer this bill to the Banking Committee because it was narrowly tailored for the USDA's Rural Utilities Service, the inclusion of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Board is reason enough for referral to the Banking Committee.

Mr. Speaker, the other chamber reported out a bill that was conceived in their Banking Committee. But in a truly ironic twist, and despite action by the House Agriculture and Commerce Committees on this bill, the bill we are considering today, with certain modifications made by the Commerce Committee on telecommunications matters strictly within their jurisdiction, is by-and-large the same product approved by the other chamber. While I am encouraged by this development, only because the substance of the Senate bill is an improvement over the originally introduced version of H.R. 3615, this House would have been better served by the advice, expertise, and input of its own Banking Committee.

Mr. Speaker, none of us disagree with the intent of this legislation—to make local TV signals available to rural areas via satellite. In principle, I strongly support the notion of bringing rural households the same information and access to telecommunications that urban residents currently enjoy. However, the Office of Management and Budget, which sets out requirements for Federal credit programs, continues to have specific concerns with certain provisions of both H.R. 3615 and S. 2097. Mr. Speaker, in order to protect the best interests of the taxpayers, and to provide important and meaningful input in the remainder of the process, I strongly urge inclusion of Members of the House Banking Committee on the conference committee so that our remaining concerns can be addressed.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is an amalgamation of several provisions from the introduced bill, the bill reported by the Agriculture Committee and that of the Commerce Committee.

The bill includes a number of provisions that make eminent sense, such as prohibiting use of loans for operating, advertising or promotional expenses. Loans cannot be utilized to go bid at FCC auctions. Incumbent cable operators cannot obtain loans within their existing franchise areas. The bill also stipulates that the government guarantee may not exceed 80 percent of the loan amount. The bill on the floor today also does not contain language that would have disrupted plans for a promising new wireless technology pioneered by Northpoint technology. I think this deletion is a wise decision, reflects the desire of Congress that the FCC proceed consistent with provisions of last Fall's Satellite Home Viewer Act, and reflects as well the desire of Congress to promote ever more competition in our telecommunications marketplace provided that no harmful interference is caused to existing licenses.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill despite some lingering concerns about this loan guarantee program. I support competition and increased consumer choice in telecommunications everywhere in America.

The bill before us proposes to establish a loan guarantee program, based upon the historic initiatives to provide rural America with electricity and telephone service, in order to provide subscription local-to-local television service. I continue to have reservations that providing local-to-local service is something that warrants a loan guarantee program of the magnitude proposed in the bill.

I also believe the bill ought to have provisions that require large, financially healthy, profitable companies to go to the commercial capital markets first to try to obtain a loan without a government guarantee before coming hat-in-hand to the government seeking a taxpayer-backed subsidy.

Promoting competition to cable is a laudable goal for telecommunications policy. Subsidizing competition to cable is something else altogether, especially when you consider that we have spent years trying to get subsidies out of our telecommunications markets. My hope would be that in conference with the Senate that we can further fine tune this bill and make it more market-oriented and competition-based.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the previous question is ordered on the bill, as amended.

The question is on engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 375, nays 37, not voting 22, as follows:

Messrs. DELAY, KASICH and ARMEY changed their vote from ''yea'' to ''nay.''

Messrs. DAVIS of Illinois, GUTIERREZ, CROWLEY and HULSHOF changed their vote from ''nay'' to ''yea.''

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated against:

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, please let the RECORD reflect that on rollcall vote 128, it was my intention to vote "no." The vote, "yes," was recorded in error.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3615, the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HASTINGS of Washington). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1283

Mr. TALENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1283.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

RADIO BROADCASTING PRESERVATION ACT OF 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of today and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill, H.R. 3439.

□ 1812

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3439) to prohibit the Federal Communications Commission from establishing rules authorizing the operation of new, low power FM radio stations, with Mr. LAHOOD in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN).

□ 1815

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take this moment to inform the House that I intend to make a formal request upon the Department of Justice regarding a potential criminal violation of our statutes to the extent that the FCC, through its director and associate director of their political office, has apparently transmitted faxes to Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Trade and Consumer Protection legislative assistants and legislative directors urging support or opposition to the bill that is before the House today, in direct contravention to 18 U.S.C., section 1913, which provides that no part of the monies appropriated by Congress shall in the absence of express authorization be used directly or indirectly to pay for any personal service, advertisement, telegram, telephone, letter, printed or written matter, or other device intended or designed to influence any Member of the United States Congress.

Mr. Chairman, today the House considers H.R. 3439, the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act. At the outset, let me commend the sponsor of this bill the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) for his work on this legislation. Credit is also due to the gentlewoman from New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the ranking member of the Committee on Commerce, for their extraordinary work in presenting the bipartisan compromise legislation that is before us today.

This language passed our full Committee on Commerce by voice vote last month.

Mr. Chairman, this bill represents a true compromise. It allows for the FCC to proceed with plans to implement a low-power FM radio service to address the community needs of many localities.

The original legislation introduced in January, which gained the support of over 120 cosponsors, would have prevented the FCC from issuing any of these low-power FM licenses and would have effectively killed the FCC's low-power program altogether.

The language that the House considers today offers the FCC significantly more latitude than the original bill would have.

First and foremost, the bill allows the FCC to immediately begin issuing licenses to low-power FM stations under the current interference standards used today to allocate spectrum on the FM dial. The FCC will thus be able to issue about 70 of these new licenses.

Furthermore, the bill institutes a pilot program to test the possible signal interference in nine geographic areas under the relaxed interference standards that the FCC recommends now.

Finally, and this is an important point, the bill maintains Congressional authority over any future changes made to the interference protections that exist in the FM dial today.

Let me take a minute to expand on this issue. The FCC has proceeded full steam ahead to implement this new service, even after learning about substantial concerns from both Republican and Democratic members of the Committee on Commerce.

We held a hearing to address these technical interference issues back in February. At that time, many members of our committee urged the Commission to proceed slowly with this program in order to carefully study the potential harmful effects on our Nation's airwaves. Without regard to these Congressional concerns, the Commission forged ahead and began implementing the program.

The bill correctly recognizes the need for Congressional oversight when it comes to such important issues as spectrum management. Before the FCC changes existing protections, protections that are as important to radio stations, public and commercial, as they are to radio listeners across America, I think it is imperative that Congress must have the authority to review any FCC changes over existing protections.

I will strongly oppose any amendment offered that would strip the Congress of its rightful oversight authority.

I trust the House will agree with me and recognize the tremendous movement that has been made in this compromise language to give the FCC authority to roll out low-power FM where there will be no interference and yet to do a pilot program before Congress gives it authority to indeed change its interference rules and allow further roll out of the program.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the bill and against any amendments that would weaken it.

I want to point out again, Mr. Chairman, when the FCC uses money appropriated to it to lobby this Congress, my colleagues all ought to pay a lot of attention. It is a criminal violation, I believe, and I will ask the Department of Justice to investigate it. But when they go so far as to break the criminal laws of a country that prohibit this form of lobbying, we ought to really think about giving them authority to move forward before Congress says go forward on this important roll-out program.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) is recognized.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, yield myself 3½ minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration today, H.R. 3439, represents an extremely constructive and wise compromise reached in the Committee on Commerce over the future of low-power FM radio service.

I particularly want to commend my colleagues, the gentlewoman from New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentleman from Virginia (Chairman BLILEY), as well as my good friend the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) for a reasonable, common sense solution to the problem which existed.

The compromise, which was entirely bipartisan, allows some low-power stations to be licensed under existing interference standards immediately, some 70, and it then requires the FCC to establish a pilot program in a limited number of markets to determine precisely what the effects would be if these interference standards are relaxed in the future.

This is to protect broadcasters. It is to protect licensees. And it is, above all else, to protect the listeners of the FM radio spectrum.

By moving this theoretical question from the laboratory to the real world, all of us will be better able to judge whether or not permanent service, as envisioned by the FCC, should be permitted to move forward.

It should be noted that the FCC has here moved without any consideration of fact and without any careful scientific work. They have no understanding of whether or not or how much interference will be caused by the order which they have brought forward.

Great outrage existed throughout both the listener community and also through the broadcasting community. We are trying to see to it that a diversity of voices and views will be available to the American people, including a new low-power service. This, I believe, is beneficial.

We do not debate the question of whether low-power service would be beneficial to our communities. I happen to believe so. I have not heard any of my colleagues on either side of the aisle to dispute the value of adding more diversity to the airwaves.

Furthermore, I would note that neither the National Association of Broadcasters nor National Public Radio, both of whom are proponents of this legislation, have taken issue with the underlying goal of the FCC's recent order. But I would note that the legislation, as amended, does allow the project envisioned by the FCC to go forward under careful controls and under good understanding of the basic underlying scientific questions which have to be addressed.

The issue under debate here is simply whether the FCC's order would cause an unacceptable level interference and thereby disenfranchise large numbers of existing radio stations and, more importantly, their listeners. Because it is the listeners that we protect.

Put simply, we want to make sure that the FCC has done its homework and that it will do its homework and that no harmful interference will result from these new stations. The result, I think, is one that is in the public interest.

In any event, the bill, as originally introduced by my friend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), simply would have repealed the FCC's order. That, I believe, was unwise. Many members of the Committee on Commerce, including myself, were not convinced that that was a proper solution. So we have come forward with a compromise which allows the matter to go forward and ensures that the FCC will act wisely and well upon the basis of science and fact.

Again, I want to compliment my colleagues who have made this possible, especially the gentlewoman from New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON).

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), my friend, the principal author of the legislation, the vice chairman of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Trade and Consumer Protection.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, before I begin my remarks, I want to join the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Trade and Consumer Protection, in expressing my concern also for some of the overt lobbying that is going on from the FCC regarding this issue.

Virtually every Member of Congress has received this information from the FCC, which says, ''10 Reasons to Support Low Power FM Radio Service and to Oppose H.R. 3439, the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act of 2000.''

This, basically, is lobbying no matter how we paint it and it is clearly, as the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) pointed out, against the law. This is something very, very serious when an independent agency can try to influence and ask for opposition to a particular piece of legislation.

But not only did they talk about the 10 reasons to oppose my bill, but then they added a letter from a labor union, the Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations Legislative Alert, saying, ''Oppose the Legislation. Oppose the Oxley Bill.''

I do not think I can see any time in the 20 years I have been here a more blatant attempt to lobby this body by a so-called independent agency. It is an absolute outrage. I support the chairman for what he is trying to do in his referral to the Department of Justice.

Mr. Chairman, when we teach our children about good behavior, we teach them not to interfere with what other people are doing. We teach them not to step on other people's toes. And there is a lesson there for us today as we consider the direction of the low-power FM program.

The Chairman of the FCC, Mr. Kennard says he created this new, low-power FM licensing program to add new voices to radio. Well, that is great. And I will enjoy the option of having more choices in radio. And clearly, many of us on the committee supported the advent of low-power television. It has been a huge success.

But we also have to consider what happens to the incumbent stations, those people who have made an investment, many times their life savings, in a small radio station and what happens when those new stations may be developed impinge on their signal.

First, to address the so-called diversity issue, have my colleagues ever heard such a wonderful cacophony of voices that we hear in this democracy? Have we ever had more information, more kinds of media, or more outlets for our views? Anyone who takes an objective look must conclude that our country is rich in information and rich in public debate, as it should be.

So we are looking to add choices, not to subtract them. Remember, we are seeking to add choices in the consumers market without interfering with other existing services.

What our bill sought to do, clearly and concisely as I can say, was to say to the FCC, before they run full speed ahead in granting these licenses, make certain that the interference standards are adhered to, the interference standards of long tradition.

It is clear to me by the order of the FCC that they have ignored these requirements of making certain that we have a solid and significant sound for these people.

The private studies that have raised the questions time and time again have indicated that the growth of these stations in some areas may very well impinge upon viewers' ability to listen to these new voices and to the old voices, as well.

Clearly, there is enough evidence against the FCC's actions to be concerned. And that is why we have asked for this study.

People are attached to their radios. I grew up listening to the Detroit Tigers baseball games, as the gentleman from Massachusetts well knows. I think that every person has a right to listen to that particular broadcast without fear of being overrun by another signal.

Who would be harmed? Let us take a look at who would be harmed.

I was initially contacted before I introduced this bill by several locally-owned radio stations in my district, one in particular, WDOH in Delphos, Ohio, an independent, locally owned station very proud to serve the needs of that community. Yet, these are the kinds of stations that the chairman of the FCC says he wants to encourage and they would be clearly vulnerable to interference.

NPR is concerned about its member station and says that crowding leaves it vulnerable to interference. Kevin Klose said yesterday in a letter to the editor that the reading services for the sight-impaired are threatened.

This, of course, would be the case for thousands and thousands of radio stations across the country. So I think we have to be very careful as to how we proceed and the FCC proceeds.

This bill allows the FCC to proceed with a low-power program. It insists that the Commission reinstitute the third-channel protections that are so important for current broadcasters and listening services and requires the FCC to conduct a pilot study on the impact on the study of radio broadcast and radio listeners.

□ 1830

It directs the FCC to place low-power radio in areas where there is plenty of room on the FM dial. This is solid legislation.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OXLEY. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I hope we have the time for a colloquy between us. I thank him for his assistance in this matter as I brought it to his attention several months ago. As the gentleman knows, there was a technicality that did not permit this amendment to be considered in this bill. However, I am hoping that the gentleman will agree that this is a matter that can well be addressed in the conference. We are talking Bergen County, New Jersey, which is in a very unusual, if not absolutely unique situation with regard to the availability of FM radio. While there are dozens of FM stations across the Hudson River in New York City, there are no commercial FM stations in Bergen County, which is one of the most densely populated counties in the Nation.

This is a unique situation because the New York stations provide all kinds of information and music and entertainment, but there are no local news and no public service data or emergency information for anything in this densely populated area, Bergen County. A little over 5 years ago, this lack of local radio was partially remedied by the creation of Juke Box Radio. The gentleman knows the details of Juke Box Radio. We do not have time to go into it now, but it is highly regarded in this area and serves definite purposes. Despite that fact of the definite purpose it serves, it is not able under this legislation to operate. I believe Juke Box Radio clearly serves the public interest in the community; and if any way can be found to address this issue in conference, I would appreciate it if the gentleman could pursue it.

I had hoped to offer an extremely limited amendment supporting this arrangement. Unfortunately, the Office of the Parliamentarian determined my amendment to be technically non-germane because Jukebox is a commercial station and the LPFM service is strictly non-commercial. Despite that fact, I believe Jukebox Radio clearly serves the public interest in my community. If a way can be found to address this issue in conference, I would very much like to pursue it.

I would ask the Chairman for his assistance and state that to my knowledge, Jukebox has never been accused of causing interference to any other station and is operating on a frequency where interference should not occur.

Mr. OXLEY. Reclaiming my time, I thank the gentlewoman from New Jersey for pointing this out. The legislation before us deals primarily with safeguarding the existing full-power FM stations against interference from low-power stations.

Let me say to the gentlewoman from New Jersey that we will address that in the conference committee.

I can assure you that nothing in this bill is intended to create a disadvantage for any existing broadcaster or for radio service to any community. I recognize the importance of local radio in providing timely news and information, particularly emergency information and would be happy to work with you as this legislation moves forward.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the entire colloquy be made a part of the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is advised that colloquies must be spoken, not inserted.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY).

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, we need to keep this bill in context. The worst part, the most unhealthy part of the 1996 Telecommunications Act was the provision which allowed for the consolidation of the radio industry. Up until 1996, no one could own more than two AM and two FM radio stations in the same city, and no one could own more than 40 radio stations across the whole country. Because of the 1996 Telecommunications Act, this worst provision in it, we now have one group owns 512 stations, another 443 stations, another 248 stations, and another 163 stations. It is harder and harder for minorities to gain access to the airwaves, to own them. It is harder and harder for women. It is harder and harder for smaller voices to independently speak on the airwaves of our country.

What the chairman of the FCC, what the commission was trying to do was to make it possible for 100-watt stations to be licensed, not the 50,000-watt stations that we are all familiar with in our hometowns. 100-watt stations. This is the kid across the street with an antenna. This is not rocket science. This is just radio. It has been around for 80 years and the Federal Communications Commission has been doing a good job in sorting out these issues, these interference issues. The FCC's job is to supplement, not supplant competition. That is what they are trying to do here, supplement it.

What are we talking about? Is your car radio going to be affected by this? No. Is your stereo going to be affected by this? No. Maybe the radio in the shower will have a little bit more interference, but we have the FCC to work it out. They have been doing it for 80 years. By the way, since the 1960s, 300 radio stations around the country have operated within the third adjacent channel proposed for low-power FM. By the way, those were full-power radio stations inside the third adjacent channel. Since the late 1960s, the FCC has worked it out. This is not a good bill. I urge my colleagues to oppose it.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON).

Mrs. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) for working together on a compromise substitute that we have worked on in committee to allow low-power radio to go forward.

Our first obligation here is to protect the radio listeners. That is listeners with all kinds of radios whether they are in their shower or they are listening as I do on an old radio that I had when I was a kid that still has one of those really teeny-tiny switches on it to tune into my favorite station. We should not all have to have stereos and new cars to be able to hear the stations that we want to hear. We had hearings in the Committee on Commerce where the engineers did not agree on whether putting stations closer together would cause static and cross-talk and hums and things that would be really annoying to everyday people. But we do want to hear more voices on the radio.

The idea of low-power radio is really kind of a neat idea that could open up radio to a lot more voices. So we have worked what I think is a good compromise in the committee. It is a little delicate, but I do not think it needs another amendment. It says, let us go forward with low-power radio with the existing interference standards; let us set aside nine cities where we are going to test it to see if we can have these stations closer together and not have interference, we are not going to let pirates have licenses, and we are going to have the FCC in this independent review come back and tell us how it went in those nine stations, find out how it goes and see if it is okay, and then maybe we will be able to open up more low-power stations.

I think this is a pretty good compromise. The FCC was moving too quickly and I believe compromising the quality of the radio reception that we get in our communities. We found an acceptable balance. I thank the chairman and the ranking member and my other colleagues for working together towards this solution.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Chairman, I want to urge support for this bill. I signed on as an original cosponsor not because I wanted to curb diversity or local interest but rather because I wanted to protect them. My home State of New Jersey is completely dominated by New York radio to the north or Philadelphia radio to the south and in between are the small local radio stations which strive to remain distinctly New Jersey in focus and content.

Obviously, this makes for a fairly crowded radio dial already. Unilaterally adding more stations in my opinion is not the solution. In fact, in my State, low-power FM may even cramp local New Jersey stations and disrupt consumers by interfering with local broadcasts or by duplicating local services and formats. Even National Public Radio has concerns that the low-power FM program will hamper its broadcasts. Accordingly, NPR supports the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have no quarrel with the goals of the low-power FM program. However, its application needs to be examined and evaluated by the Congress. The compromise we fashioned in the Committee on Commerce allows the FCC to move forward with the low-power FM as long as it protects existing third-channel interference protections. The compromise then allows for an independent party to determine once and for all how these pilot programs will affect current radio listeners, small market broadcasters and blind radio reading services. The FCC will then report back to Congress in 2001. I think this compromise is a good one. It passed the Committee on Commerce by a voice vote and in my view is the most responsible way to proceed with the low-power program. I would urge my colleagues not to support any amendments.

I want to compliment the hard work of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), our ranking member, in forging the compromise and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) and again urge support of the bill.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT).

Mr. BLUNT. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and thank the gentleman for bringing this bill to the floor. This is important legislation that has real potential impact on many small businesses in America as well as many listeners to radio stations throughout the country.

In January of this year, the five-member FCC issued rules creating a new low-power radio service. That is what we are talking about today. But two of those five members did not think this was a good idea. One dissented completely, one dissented in part, understanding as many Members of this body do that what this legislation really does is move the FCC into an area that is not yet ready. It moves many owners of radio stations, some part of large radio chains, some part of a station that a family has founded that they run, that they have done their best to build over the years, they have created identity with their signal, into an area that no one quite knows whether their station continues to work the way it has in the past or not, creating holes in the radio signal area, where if you are driving across the country and you are listening to a station and you suddenly come into one of these new low-power areas and you assume the station you were listening to is gone, not knowing that a few miles down the road it would be right back, is a very harmful thing to businesses that have been built on a guarantee from the Federal Government and the FCC that they would have a position on the dial, that they would have a position on the band and on the spectrum that worked for them, that was theirs, that they could really gain listener respect, listener loyalty and a place that they knew they could be found.

Inexpensive and older radios are particularly vulnerable to interference, meaning the proposal could have the effect of denying low-income and elderly listeners clear reception of their favorite stations. This is important legislation. I am glad it is on the floor. We need to pass it today.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES).

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), for yielding me this time and for his hard work on trying to make this a fair bill. I still, however, must rise in opposition to H.R. 3439. The title itself is deceptive. The act seeks to preserve the status quo and to prevent others from having access to the airwaves.

It is a fact that the four top radio groups own the majority of the Nation's radio stations and according to the Congressional Research Service between 1995 and 1998, the number of radio station owners decreased 18.8 percent. With the number of radio station owners decreasing and the consolidation of radio ownership growing, LPFM allows underrepresented groups and communities an opportunity to enter into the radio broadcast area. I support this new initiative because it will open doors of opportunity for our Nation. It adds to radio diversity and encourages alternatives to current commercial formats that dominate the radio.

I have heard others say that we need to protect radio listeners, but we must also protect those who do not have stations to listen to. I am confident if LPFM were put in place that many would listen to the radio, if they had something to listen to. I contemplate in my own jurisdiction many of the wonderful stations that are on my son likes, the kids older than him like; but there are seniors and people who attend churches throughout my community who do not like any of it, and they should have an opportunity to be heard on radio as well.

Who are we to delay or deny opportunity to community-based groups who have more than earned the right to take advantage of the technology? I have met with the members of the industry, and I understand their concerns; but here in the land of the free and the home of the brave, everyone should be able to reach the table, and they can do it by low-power radio.

Now, low-power FM radio has the support of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the AFL-CIO, the Communication Workers of America, the United States Catholic Conference, and the United Church of Christ Office of Communications.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) for his efforts as well as members of the minority.

There are two important aspects as I see it to this bill. One is that it will allow low-power radio to proceed. It will protect listeners, and it will prevent interference, which is something I think the American people are accustomed to and frankly want. That has been expressed through the Members of Congress in the last couple of years. Why we are here today in a somewhat expedited way is because the FCC overruled the will of the people. They overruled the will of Congress, which leads to a second and probably more disturbing portion of this debate and that is what the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from Ohio alluded to at the very beginning. The FCC, for a lot of Americans who do not know, is a regulatory body and many businesses have to go before this regulatory body for satisfaction, for answers to really carry out their business plan, to bring products to the American people.

□ 1845

What we see too often, especially lately, is that good honest business people have to go on bended knee before the regulators, and if they do not get their way, the regulators, they take it out on those good honest American business people. We talk about the land of the free and the home of the brave, that is not the American way.

The American people deserve honesty from people holding public office. They deserve to be treated fairly and openly, and not to be subject to idle or explicit threats.

With that, I urge the adoption of this bill.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO).

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act. The bill would postpone the FCC's efforts to open our airways to small local community groups, churches, schools, volunteer fire departments, civic organizations. It would deny these groups the right to provide their communities with information of unique local concern. It would smother movements towards diversity on our airwaves.

These are stations that would broadcast local ball games, municipal meetings, or anything else they think would be good for their communities and their communities wanted to hear.

Low-cost, small-scale FM stations would play a vital role in the Hispanic community in my district by expanding the opportunities for local Spanish language radio service. Such stations would help to strengthen this community, unite it behind common goals.

I have worked with the FCC on this issue for over 2 years. Exhaustive engineering studies have been completed. The experience of actual low-power radio stations has been reviewed. The results are conclusive. These new stations will not interfere with the existing large radio companies that currently dominate our airways. This bill discourages expanding our educational and culture horizons. I urge Members to oppose it.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODLATTE).

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) for introducing and pushing this legislation and the gentleman from Louisiana for his leadership in bringing it to the floor today.

In January, the five member Federal Communications Commission issued rules creating this new low-power FM radio service with two members dissenting, two of the five, in whole or in part dissenting. In his comments, Commissioner Powell focused on the economic repercussions of low-power FM and the possibility that many independent and minority-owned full-power stations could be forced out of business. Commissioner Furchtgott-Roth's dissent focused on interference and the Commission's uncharacteristic alacrity in considering low-power FM.

This matter has not been properly reviewed by the FCC, and this legislation is vitally needed to stop this action from taking place.

Existing broadcasters oppose the FCC's decision, with good reason. In establishing low-power FM, the FCC significantly relaxed its interference standards, meaning increased interference with existing radio services and a devaluation of the investments of current license holders.

There is no question that eliminating the third adjacent channel safeguard, as the Commission is doing, will lead to increased interference. While the FCC claims that the weakened standards will not result in unacceptable—watch that word—levels of interference, this assertion is challenged by private sector studies.

While the desire to provide a forum for community groups is laudable, a multitude of alternatives exist. Groups may obtain non-commercial licenses, use public access cable, purchase broadcast air time, publish newsletters and utilize Internet web sites and e-mails, among many other options.

This is a country in which there are many ways to express yourself, but we should not do it at the expense of those who have already made investments and are already providing valuable services to citizens in this country.

I urge the Members to support this legislation.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ROTHMAN).

Mr. ROTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to address this colloquy, if you will, to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) and thank him for agreeing to participate.

As the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Finance and Hazardous Materials knows, I am extremely disappointed that the Federal Communications Commission's recent approval of non-commercial low-power LPFM radio stations did not address existing commercial low-power FM translators operating in counties where there are no allocated commercial FM stations and no commercial FM stations can be allocated.

Although the residents of northern New Jersey can choose from dozens of New York City FM stations, those stations ignore Bergen County, New Jersey's need for local news, traffic reports, school closings, public service announcements and other important local information.

Even though Bergen County, New Jersey, gave birth to FM radio in the 1930's, Bergen County has no commercial FM station of its own and none can be allocated to Bergen County under present Commission rules.

Commercial FM translator W276AQ in Fort Lee, New Jersey, in my district, Jukebox Radio, brings valuable local news, traffic, weather, public service announcements, school closings, and other important information unavailable from any other source on the FM broadcast band. It is translated into a Class A FM signal 75 miles away from Bergen County. Bergen County residents should not be forced to depend on FM service in this manner.

I would say to the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY), I believe that existing commercial low-power FM translators licensed in counties with a population of 800,000 or more, and where there is no licensed or commercial FM station, such as that in Bergen County, New Jersey, should have the opportunity to immediately begin broadcasting with local origination.

Although we were not able to resolve this issue in this bill, I urge the gentleman to raise this issue in conference and include language to this effect when the House and Senate conferees meet. With that hope, I am going to support the bill, and thank the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I will be pleased to work with the gentleman in the conference on that very issue.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROTHMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to observe to the gentleman I think his complaint is a very legitimate one and thank him for raising it, and indicate that I know that the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee and my good friend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) also and I will be trying to look after his concerns on this business of New Jersey having better and more adequate service, not only in the area of FM and AM, but also on broadcast television, which is very much in short supply from stations indigenous to that State.

Mr. ROTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I thank the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAZIO).

Mr. LAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I want to rise in support of H.R. 3439. I want to compliment the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) for their help in moving this bipartisan effort forward.

Mr. Chairman, there is an impression in some quarters that this legislation will stop low-power FM licensing or prevent it from ever getting to the air. Nothing could be further from the truth. The simple fact is that the radio spectrum is finite in size. Within this limited universe, commercial radio signals must be separated by at least three adjacent channels in order to prevent interference and crosstalk.

Obviously, two stations serving the same market cannot be licensed to occupy the same frequency. Radio bandwidths can only be sliced up so many ways. We rely on the FCC to ensure that the radio pie is fairly divided. The FCC ensures that every radio station gets a slice of the pie with enough calories to sustain its signal. This is the only way to make sure that we, the listeners, can receive our favorite programs without hinderance or hurdle.

I take no issue with the FCC's goal of trying to add a new class of lower stations. Indeed, say adding more voices to the airwaves is a commendable goal. But, Mr. Chairman, not all radios are created equal. They are not endowed by their manufacturer with inalienable rights. A simple clock radio or a Walkman will not contain the same sophistication and filtering technology to combat interference between stations as would a hi-fi nor should they.

This bipartisan substitute reported out of the Committee on Commerce strikes a reasonable compromise. If we are going to have low-power FM service, it needs to be done right. We want to give these micro-radio stations an opportunity, but we have an obligation to maintain the integrity of the existing spectrum. New Yorkers want to continue to listen without interference to stations such as Z–100, WBLI, and public radio, such as 91.1 FM.

If the FCC is right and low-power FM does not cause interference on third adjacent channels, then they can proceed with this new service on a national scale. I am confident that should the test demonstrate listeners have nothing to fear from relaxing the interference standards, this body will look favorably to giving the green light for an expanded low-power FM service.

I want to urge my colleagues to support this bipartisan bill, and oppose the amendments that seek to undermine the consensus that has been reached.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT)

Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I will be offering in several minutes with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH), but I just want to address some of the concerns that I heard raised here tonight.

The first one is several of the speakers talked about people driving their cars and how this would affect their driving. They would go into a neighborhood, they would lose a station, it would come out. Even the radio owners that I have talked to in my district have acknowledged that radios in cars are very, very precise and that that is not going to be a problem.

The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) before referred to the radio in the shower. Yes, if it is a very old radio, you might have a problem. But most of the radios in this country are going to be radios in cars. That is not where the problem lies.

We have also heard a lot of FCC bashing, and I think that the FCC has responded to a lot of the concerns that have been raised here. This proposal that they have attempted to move forward on is a scaled-back version of their initial proposal. I think even the proponents of this bill would acknowledge that we are talking about very low-watt radio stations, 100-watt stations, and in some situations, maybe even 10-watt stations. We are not talking 50,000-megawatt stations. We are talking small, neighborhood, churches, minority, college stations. These do not present a serious threat to the large stations.

I will address this in my amendment, but I am sensitive to the technical issues that have been raised regarding this, and I think that the amendment that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH) and I will propose in several minutes addresses that, but does not strip the authority of the FCC. We are talking about micro-stations here. I do not think Congress should be micromanaging these micro-stations.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH).

Mr. RUSH. I thank the ranking member for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that, first of all, that I have heard a lot of comments regarding the FCC and actions of the FCC, and I want to go on the record to inform everyone that I believe that the FCC has done a great service to the American people. I am an unmitigated supporter of the FCC, and I think that the FCC has done an outstanding job in terms of trying to ensure that all Americans have access to the airwaves of this Nation.

□ 1900

Regarding the low power FM stations, Mr. Chairman, I just want to ensure that people understand that the American people and the Members of this Congress understand that the LPFM is a new noncommercial community-based radio service that will benefit local communities all across this Nation.

It gives media access and broadcast voices to local churches, to schools, colleges, State and local governmental agencies, musicians, and nonprofit community organizations, those same organizations that have been excluded heretofore regarding having access to the air waves.

LPFM adds to radio diversity and encourages alternatives to the commercial formats that currently dominate our radio.

Mr. Chairman, as has been stated earlier, it is a fact that the top four radio groups own the majority of this Nation's radio stations, and according to the Congressional Research Service, between 1995 and 1998 the number of radio station owners decreased by 18.8 percent.

Mr. Chairman, with the number of radio station owners decreasing and the consolidation of radio ownership growing, LPFM allows underrepresented groups and communities the opportunity to enter the radio broadcast market.

Mr. Chairman, just 2 weeks ago Chairman Kennard visited my district, the Chairman of the FCC. We went to a high school, the Dunbar High School located in my district on the South Side of the city of Chicago. I just wish that Members of this body could have observed students who had never had the opportunity to participate in broadcast fields, the broadcast profession, who never had an opportunity to run a radio station nor a television station.

These students were aggressively engaged in learning all that they could. What they asked us at that time, at that visit, they asked this body to give them an opportunity to really run a radio station, 100 watts, that would have a radius of 2 miles within that high school. That is all they are asking for, so they in fact can learn more about the broadcasting industry.

Mr. Chairman, this bill I think does not address that concern, and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) and I will introduce an amendment to this bill in order to try to allow opportunities for unrepresented groups and citizens to engage in this process.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume to close.

Mr. Chairman, Members of the committee, let me place this in perspective. The bill we are discussing today does not stop the FCC from moving forward with this low power program. It simply says the FCC must only move forward with the 70 licenses that will clearly not interfere with current radio broadcast.

It says, in those cases where the licenses may in fact interfere with current radio broadcasting, they have to do a pilot in nine different geographic regions of the country and then report to Congress about the results.

What we are going to hear in just a minute is an amendment that would say, when that report comes to Congress, whether or not the report indicates interference, the FCC can then proceed to issue as many licenses as it wants to under its original proposal. I hope that we will defeat that amendment.

The compromise carefully crafted in the Committee on Commerce, with the great work of the gentlewoman from New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) says in effect that the Commission must submit independent testing of interference, and then we get to say, based upon that report, whether they can move forward.

Let me tell the Members why that is so critical. I want to read Members a letter from the Hispanic Broadcasting Corporation to our chairman. They are writing to express concern about the implementation of low power FM, and ask strong support for this bill, as we have compromised it.

The author indicates, ''The FCC is moving forward with a low power FM plan that has not been thoroughly thought through. First, radio is on the verge of converting to digital.'' For television, we gave television new spectrum to move into digital. We did not do that for radio. Radio has to move to digital in the same spectrum they are currently located. That is going to be a tough trick.

Before that happens, if the FCC moves forward with this low power FM radio issuance and in fact those stations interfere with that digital transmission of the radio stations that currently exist, like the Hispanic radio station, like the public radio stations, not just the private corporate radio stations, if the FCC moves forward and then the digital conversion does not work, there is all kind of interference. We just will not get static on the radio, we will get no signal at all. In digital, it just cuts out totally.

We were told by the Commission that they would wait for the digital report to come out before doing this FM low power rollout, but they went ahead anyhow and did it regardless of that report. It is still not done. Hispanic radio is asking us, please pass this bill. Make sure there is no interference.

They go on to point out, ''Furthermore, less expensive and older radios used disproportionately by minorities and older Americans,'' the walkmen, the boom box, the radio beside our beds, not just the radio in the shower, the radio beside our beds, for many older Americans, ''are more susceptible to interference from low power stations. Millions of Americans rely on low quality radios as their main source of news, weather, and sports,'' 65 million, to be precise.

I am concerned that low power FM will disenfranchise the very people it seeks to empower, underserved communities like the Spanish language audience that we serve.

See, this is the problem, Mr. Chairman. It was minority radio stations and public radio stations, not just the private corporate radio stations represented by the NAB, who came to us and said, do not let this happen to disenfranchise our audiences and our radio stations. Make sure there is no interference.

I wish Members had been in our committee room to hear the potential interference. As a beautiful song was playing, we could hear people talking over it. As a beautiful opera perhaps was being presented by National Public Radio, we could hear talking over it. As perhaps a Spanish language station was trying to do some cultural work in the community, we could hear somebody else talking over it.

In digital, we would not even hear it at all. It would block the signal completely.

Mr. Chairman, we have worked out a delicate compromise. This lets the FCC go forward where we know there will be no interference. It requires private, independent testing to make sure there will not be interference. If they want to go further, it requires them to come back and get permission from us after we know there will not be that interference.

The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) will offer an amendment in just a little while that will tell the FCC it can do what it wishes to do after 6 months, regardless of the interference problems. I hope we defeat that amendment. I hope we pass this good bill. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the gentlewoman from New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) have done some good work and put together a good compromise.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, these new Low powered stations will offer a voice to those who deserve to be heard, and will promote greater diversity and allow nonprofit organizations, community groups, and churches an opportunity to reach their local constituents without paying huge fees to commercial radio stations.

As more and more radio stations are bought up by large companies, it becomes more and more difficult for minorities and women to own or access a station. Its obvious to me why these commercial radio stations are opposing these additional stations, they just don't want any competition.

It amazes me that the same people who chastised the FCC for trying to limit religious broadcasting are the same ones that stand on the floor here today trying to prevent churches and community groups access to the media. Its dishonest, and I encourage my colleagues to let the FCC do their job and defeat this bill.

Ms. ROYBAL-ALLARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3439, the Radio Broadcast Preservation Act of 2000. The House is rushing to judgment on this important issue and I regret we are considering this bill at this time.

This bill would block the Federal Communications Commission from going forward with its plan to establish Low Power Radio which is a non-commercial, community-based radio service to give churches, non-profit community groups, colleges and universities and state and local government access to the public airwaves. These stations would serve an audience within a 1.5 to 3.5 mile radius, which is not a very large area.

Low Power radio is important because it will allow the sharing of the public airwaves with local community voices, voices left off the air because of the massive consolidation of the broadcast industry.

I do not agree that broadcasters would be hurt by a local government's 100-watt radio station trying to inform its constituents about important local government services or events.

I do not agree that anyone would be hurt by a college or university radio station that tries to inform its students about campus events.

I do not agree that anyone would be hurt by a 10-watt church radio station wanting to offer mass over the airwaves to parishioners who cannot attend services.

Nor do I believe that anyone could be hurt by a non-profit organizations' efforts to inform language minority groups about important community events or services available to them.

It seems ironic that we would be voting here today on a bill to suppress the voices of those we've pledged to give a voice to. Voices that, had this bill been given a proper hearing, we would have heard from, such as the National Council of La Raza, the League of United Latin American Citizens, the U.S. Catholic Conference, the United Methodist Church, the National League of Cities, the US Conference of Mayors, among many others.

Low Power Radio is critical and comes at a time when our communities are losing out to the massive consolidation taking place in the radio broadcast industry. This merger mania has left many of us with little choice about who or what gets to be heard today. We have to do something to protect the diversity of voices and opinions that are often suppressed by the giants in the field.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this bill and help protect low power radio and the communities that would most benefit from this service.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3439, the Radio Broadcast Preservation Act of 2000, of which I am a co-sponsor.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that this legislation would assure that the necessary steps are taken as the Federal Communications Commission begins licensing Low Power FM Radio stations. Low Power FM licenses are an opportunity for churches, schools, and other community groups to begin broadcasting their information to local listeners. While these licenses would open up the broadcasting industry to individuals and groups previously excluded, they should not be given out at the expense of existing stations and their listeners.

The experimental program this bill establishes would study nine test markets to determine the impact of Low Power FM on radio broadcasters and radio listeners. I believe that testing the market is an important method of implementing and improving the Low Power FM program.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3439 promotes a more responsible method for the FCC to license Low Power FM and adopts the necessary safeguards for the radio broadcasters and listeners in my district.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation which will protect radio broadcasters and listeners from excessive static interference and which will promote the responsible licensing of Low Power FM.

Mr. BONILLA. Mr. Chairman, I am in strong support of the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act. This bill ensures that free over-the-air radio will remain free and uninterrupted.

All too often, I hear from folks in my district concerned about the power grab of the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). Unfortunately, this is just the latest example. The FCC is moving forward with a low-power FM plan they have not thought through. The FCC believes that this decision will allow the "little guy" to become a radio broadcaster. In reality, this decision will cause massive interference problems for FM listeners.

The FCC's low power FM plan was approved without proper consideration of technical and other concerns raised by this new service. Radio is on the verge of converting to digital. Has the FCC really thought about the effect of low-power FM on the digital conversion process? No. Wouldn't it make more sense to rollout digital radio—which is even a larger project than the digital television rollout—and then focus on how to accommodate low-power FM? Yes.

Has the FCC really thought about how the millions of Americans who rely on low quality radios as their main source of news, weather, and sports? No. Less expensive and older radios, used disproportionately by minorities and older Americans, are more susceptible to interference from low-power stations. Low-power FM will disenfranchise the very people that the FCC claims it seeks to empower, undeserved communities (including the blind and Spanish language groups).

Did the FCC consider low power stations' interference with out public broadcasters? No. In yesterday's Washington Post, Mr. Kevin Klose, president of National Public Radio, made clear public radio's opposition to the FCC's "rush to add low-power radio stations to the crowded FM dial." This year, we are spending more than 60 million taxpayer dollars on public radio. And the FCC is ready to throw that money down the drain.

The FCC's low power proposal is a true disservice to current broadcasters' outstanding community service. Local radio and television stations provided $8.1 billion in public service just last year. That is more money than the total annual giving of the top 100 U.S. foundations. Full power radio stations across this country provide life-saving information on natural disasters, preventing drinking and driving, curbing drug and alcohol abuse, crime and violence prevention, just to name a few areas.

The FCC proposal presumes that local radio stations no longer provide local service. That assumption is completely false. The FCC should be reined in and local broadcasters should be allowed to continue their good work.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act and the compromise bill reported out of the Commerce Committee. This approach will allow low power FM (LPFM) to move forward with proper safeguards against interference.

I support providing new opportunities for community, public interest, civil rights and educational groups to be heard in the public forum. I do not dispute the potential that LPFM stations provide for under-represented community and educational groups. However, we must ensure that in the process of providing a voice for these groups, we do not impair radio listeners' access to locally originated information and entertainment. By calling for a careful review of the LPFM plan, H.R. 3439 allows low-power FM to move forward while protecting listeners from increased interference on the FM radio dial. The legislation does this by re-establishing previous FCC signal-interference standards and commissioning the FCC to study the extent to which signals of such low-power stations interfere with the signals of existing stations.

Millions of Americans depend on the radio for important information and entertainment programming. Thirty percent of this population, especially low-income and elderly listeners, access this programming via inexpensive and older radios. The level of interference these individuals will encounter due to LPFM is unknown. H.R. 3439, therefore, calls for field tests to determine how LPFM without third-adjacent channel protection would affect current listening audiences. The FCC would then be required to submit a report to Congress on the results of these tests by Feb. 1, 2001, along with any recommendations for modifications to signal-interference standards.

Also unknown is the impact of LPFM on existing public stations and small and independent commercial stations which already provide valuable services such as emergency warnings, weather and traffic information, community news and entertainment. Many of these stations depend on local resources to meet operating expenses through underwriting or advertising and may be placed into direct competition with LPFM stations in their struggles to stay afloat. This bill requires the FCC to conduct an economic impact study on incumbent broadcasters (particularly the economic impact on minority and small broadcasters), the transition to digital broadcasts, FM radio translator stations, and stations that provide reading services to the blind.

I would like to see localized groups have station access and believe this communication will strengthen community bonds. However, I do not want new access to be gained at the expense of pre-existing stations. I am encouraged to know that the House Commerce Committee was able to work out this compromise. H.R. 3439 not only provides new opportunities for station access but also protects existing community broadcasters from interference.

Mr. DICKEY. Mr. Chairman, despite objections raised from many corners, the FCC has charged ahead with plans to immediately implement low-power FM. In the process it has ignored legitimate concerns about interference and the continued viability of small and independent commercial stations and existing public stations. H.R. 3439, the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act, pulls the FCC back from the edge without completely halting its authority to pursue low-power FM.

The potential for interference has been a primary concern from the beginning. The available spectrum only stretches so far. While the FCC claims its plan will not cause interference on car radios and high-fidelity stereo component systems, it does admit some interference will occur on clock radios and portable radios like the boombox and walkman. Considering these types of radios account for 65 percent of all radios in America, it makes sense that we should step back, take a breath and carefully consider all the consequences before taking drastic actions. We must also ensure that in its haste to implement low-power FM, the FCC does not overlook the impact on inexpensive and older radios, which are highly vulnerable to interference and are most commonly used by low-income and elderly individuals. H.R. 3439, therefore, requires a test of nine markets be conducted by an independent third party to determine how low-power FM without third-adjacent channel protections would affect current listening audiences.

Another potential problem not explored by the FCC is interference with services for blind individuals. The International Association of Audio Information Services uses frequencies located on the outer edge of radio stations' spectrum to read books and newspapers to over 1 million blind individuals, who listen to this service with special radios. The FCC did not test these radios. This bill, therefore, requires the FCC to explore the impact of low-power FM on stations that provide this important service.

Interference is not the only issue about which we must be concerned. Small and independent commercial broadcasters who rely on local advertising to meet operating expenses face questions about their continued economic viability. These existing stations could be undercut by low-power stations siphoning off limited local resources for underwriting purposes. These existing local stations already provide many of the services low-power FM stations purportedly are being created to provide, including community news and emergency information. Many public radio affiliates share these concerns about increased competition for limited local resources. H.R. 3439 addresses these concerns by requiring the FCC to conduct an economic impact study of low-power FM on "incumbent FM broadcasters in general, and minority and small-market broadcasters in particular."

Finally, this bill ensures former "pirate" or unlicensed broadcasters are not eligible for low-power FM licenses. These individuals should not be rewarded for previous unlawful acts that interfered with authorized FM broadcasts.

Considering the many concerns at play here, the FCC should take a step back and reevaluate its plan for low-power FM. H.R. 3439 is a sensible approach to such a reevaluation. It protects existing stations from serious harm, guards against interference experienced by the listening audience, all while allowing new community broadcasters to enter local markets.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill.

I was encouraged to hear last year that the FCC was initiating efforts to bring back community radio. After engaging in a public process that took into account thousands of comments from citizens all over the country, and after conducting extensive technical tests, the FCC issued its rule to establish lower power FM radio, a rule that many see as conservative. The FCC scaled back its proposal significantly in order to protect existing stations from interference, while at the same time maximizing the ability of local groups to gain access to the public airwaves.

The FCC's rule is meant to help bring community radio to millions around the country, and thereby to address a need that is not met by mainstream broadcasters. It is meant to bring the voices of community groups, churches, educational institutions, and local governments to radio. Many of these voices have been lost through media consolidation—figures I've seen show the number of radio station owners decreased by nearly 20 percent between 1995 and 1998. So at a time when even fewer voices are being heard, it is even more critical for us to be thinking about how to let more voices in, not keep them out.

Although critics of the FCC claim the rule was made in haste, Chairman Kennard has said publicly that ''no service ever considered by the FCC has been as extensively studied as low power radio.'' He has said time and again that this was a ''responsible public interest decision that will not impact the existing radio service.'' I believe that if low power radio does end up having a negative impact on existing service, the FCC will step in to correct the situation.

In the meantime, we should stop trying to legislate technical details. The FCC is charged with maximizing the public's use of the airwaves, encouraging the provision of new technologies and new services to the public, and providing new access to the airwaves for more people. We should let the FCC do its work, and oppose this bill.

Mr. EWING. Mr. Chairman, on January 20, 2000 the FCC adopted rules creating a new, low power FM radio (LPFM) service. This service creates two classes of radio service to operate within the FM radio frequency band with power levels from 1–10 watts (LP 10) and from 50–100 watts (LP 100).

The rationale for creating this new class of radio service is to bring diversity to radio broadcasting and enhance community-oriented radio broadcasting. Those eligible for licenses for this type service can be noncommercial government or private educational organizations, non-profit entities with educational purposes; or government or non-profit entities providing local public safety or transportation information, as long as they are based in the community in which they intend to broadcast.

The problem with this new service is not with its intent. Seeking to promote diversity in broadcasting and enhancing community-oriented radio broadcasting are both honorable goals. The problem is these new stations will operate on the FM radio frequency band currently occupied by full power radio stations, and there is the possibility that these low power stations will interfere with these existing stations.

Under current FCC rules for full power radio stations, interference between stations is avoided by preventing stations from sharing the same channel or the first, second or third adjacent channel. Under the proposed rule, however, low power FM would be allowed to occupy the third adjacent channel to an existing full power radio station.

The FCC officially contends that allowing low power FM stations to occupy the third adjacent channel will not cause unacceptable levels of interference to existing radio stations. However, these claims have been questioned by various groups such as the National Association of Broadcasters, the Consumer Electronics association, and the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (led by National Public Radio). Even the International Association of Audio Information Services, whose members employ local volunteers to read the local newspapers on air to over one million blind listeners nationwide, has expressed concern that these new low power stations could cause interference with their services.

There is even some concern among several FCC commissioners that these new stations will cause interference. In the FCC's Report and Order concerning this ruling 2 of the 5 FCC commissioners expressed concern that these low power stations would interfere with existing stations. In dissenting statements regarding both the proposed rule and the final rule, Commissioner Harold W. Furchtgott-Roth stated that although he was not opposed to the creation of low power radio service, he could not support the rule because he believed that suspension of the third adjacent channel protection would cause interference with existing stations. He feels the entire process was rushed to judgment and that the commission had not taken the time to do the right technical studies the right way. Furthermore, he believes any demand for lower power noncommercial stations could be met by the dispensation of licenses within existing rules—i.e., by giving out 101 watt licenses consistent with the 100 watt minimum requirement or get a waiver to the 100 watt minimum rule if someone really felt compelled to operate a 50-watt station.

In his dissenting opinion Commissioner Powell echoed sentiments similar to those expressed by Commissioner Furchtgott-Roth. In light of lingering concerns about signal interference and his concern about the economic impact of the new service, Commissioner Powell regrets the ''shot gun introduction'' of the rule and believes the service should have been introduced gradually with third channel adjacency protections intact. In his opinion, this would minimize the risk of interference in a manner consistent with existing services and it would introduce substantially fewer stations into the market, thereby allowing for the evaluation of the economic impacts of these new stations. If all goes well, he suggests a move to full service with less adjacency protection, as warranted by experience.

H.R. 3439 follows the suggestions of Commissioner Power. Under the bill, the FCC may go forward immediately licensing LPFM stations as long as interference protections to existing stations are maintained, including protections to third adjacent channels. At the same time, the legislation requires the FCC to set up an experimental program in nine markets to test whether LPFM will result in harmful interference to existing stations if third channel protections are eliminated. Additionally, the legislation provides that an independent party will conduct a study of the affect of LPFM without third-adjacent channel on digital audio broadcasting and radio reading services for the blind.

While the spirit of the rule allowing the creation of low power FM service may be commendable, we must not act in a rash manner and allow it to be implemented before we are positive that it will not negatively impact existing stations. Radio, particularly in rural areas, is an important source of information. For some individuals it is the only source of local news they receive. If we allow these new low power stations to co-exist with established stations without ensuring that there is no interference we may be doing more harm than good.

H.R. 3439 provides an effective balance by allowing new low power FM stations to be established while simultaneously protecting existing stations from interference. Furthermore, the bill provides for an experimental program, in nine separate markets, to test the interference that will result if third adjacent channel protection. If the results of this test are successful it is foreseeable that these restrictions may be lifted sometime in the future. However, until we have conclusive proof that these low power stations do not significantly interfere with existing stations, we simply cannot allow them to share the same frequencies with existing stations. Existing stations provide services as valuable as those proposed by the new low power stations and individuals are entitled to receive them as clearly as possible. The channel adjacency rules apply to full power stations because of this and it should apply to low power stations until we can prove that the interference they generate is minimal to say the least.

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act of 1999, H.R. 3439.

This legislation sends a strong message that there will be no interference to free radio. H.R. 3439 would require the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to maintain third-adjacent channel protection, and to consider independent analyses of potential Low Power FM (LPFM) interference before proceeding.

In January 2000, the Federal Communications Commission voted to implement an expansive licensing process. Congressman MIKE OXLEY and JOHN DINGELL working with Congresswoman HEATHER WILSON, have fashioned legislation which would slow licensing from 400 stations to roughly seven. The FCC will then test and determine whether the broadcasts cause interference with mainstream stations. I want to commend these Members for their hard work on this very important legislation.

Mr. Chairman, in today's easy access to communication, there exists great belief that the average American should have the ability to ''speak out and be heard.'' Talk radio, newspapers, magazines, television, public television and radio, and the Internet, all allow anyone to get a message across. How can the FCC say—with a straight face—there is ''no access?''

''Low Power FM'' is a ''social'' agenda based on the idea that everybody can own their own radio station. Of course this appears enticing—but the laws of physics have not been repealed and it cannot be accomplished. Low power radio stations signals will only cause interference to the radio stations already located on the spectrum. This latest effort being made will come only at the cost of severely damaging the most successful broadcasting system in the world—American FM radio.

If you want to know that chaos is, then turn across the AM band and hear the vast amount of interference the FCC has allowed to creep into that brand. No wonder everyone wants FM; the FCC has virtually ruined AM band.

The FCC was founded on administering basic principles of engineering. However, to meet the Administration's ''social agenda,'' the FCC has thrown engineering and testing out the window. The FCC promises it will ''guard'' this new experiment. Mr. Chairman, you and I both know the FCC does not have the manpower to take care of the radio stations currently out there, much less hundreds more. In addition, the FCC could severely hurt the long-awaited entry into "digital" radio by American broadcasters. Low Power FM is a bad decision that should be reversed.

Mr. Chairman, today's legislation is a step in the right direction to protect the FM radio stations in Georgia and across the Nation. The importance of this issue came to my attention from my good friend, and a leader in the field of radio broadcasting, Mike McDougald, of Rome, Georgia. On behalf of all the individuals who have dedicated their lives for the advancement of FM radio, I call on my colleagues to support the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act, H.R. 3439.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the order of the House, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill is considered as an original bill for the purpose of amendment and is considered as read.

The text of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

H.R. 3439

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act of 2000".

SEC. 2. MODIFICATIONS TO LOW-POWER FM REGULATIONS REQUIRED.

(a) THIRD-ADJACENT CHANNEL PROTECTIONS REQUIRED.—

(1) MODIFICATIONS REQUIRED.—The Federal Communications Commission shall modify the rules authorizing the operation of low-power FM radio stations, as proposed in MM Docket No. 99–25, to—

(A) prescribe minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels (as well as for co-channels and first- and second-adjacent channels); and

(B) prohibit any applicant from obtaining a low-power FM license if the applicant has engaged in any manner in the unlicensed operation of any station in violation of section 301 of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 301).

(2) CONGRESSIONAL AUTHORITY REQUIRED FOR FURTHER CHANGES.—The Federal Communications Commission may not—

(A) eliminate or reduce the minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels required by paragraph (1)(A), or

(B) extend the eligibility for application for low-power FM stations beyond the organizations and entities as proposed in MM Docket No. 99–25 (47 C.F.R. 73.853), except as expressly authorized by Act of Congress enacted after the date of enactment of this Act.

(3) VALIDITY OF PRIOR ACTIONS.—Any license that was issued by the Commission to a low-power FM station prior to the date on which the Commission modify its rules as required by paragraph (1) and that does not comply with such modifications shall be invalid.

(b) FURTHER EVALUATION OF NEED FOR THIRD-ADJACENT CHANNEL PROTECTIONS.—

(1) PILOT PROGRAM REQUIRED.—The Federal Communications Commission shall conduct an experimental program to test whether low-power FM radio stations will result in harmful interference to existing FM radio stations if such stations are not subject to the minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels required by subsection (a). The Commission shall conduct such test in no more than 9 FM radio markets, including urban, suburban, and rural markets, by waiving the minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels for the stations that are the subject of the experimental program. At least one of the stations shall be selected for the purpose of evaluating whether minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels are needed for FM translator stations. The Commission may, consistent with the public interest, continue after the conclusion of the experimental program to waive the minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels for the stations that are the subject of the experimental program.

(2) CONDUCT OF TESTING.—The Commission shall select an independent testing entity to conduct field tests in the markets of the stations in the experimental program under paragraph (1). Such field tests shall include—

(A) an opportunity for the public to comment on interference; and

(B) independent audience listening tests to determine what is objectionable and harmful interference to the average radio listener.

(3) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Commission shall publish the results of the experimental program and field tests and afford an opportunity for the public to comment on such results. The Federal Communications Commission shall submit a report on the experimental program and field tests to the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate not later than February 1, 2001. Such report shall include—

(A) an analysis of the experimental program and field tests and of the public comment received by the Commission;

(B) an evaluation of the impact of the modification or elimination of minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels on—

(i) listening audiences;

(ii) incumbent FM radio broadcasters in general, and on minority and small market broadcasters in particular, including an analysis of the economic impact on such broadcasters;

(iii) the transition to digital radio for terrestrial radio broadcasters;

(iv) stations that provide a reading service for the blind to the public; and

(v) FM radio translator stations;

(C) the Commission's recommendations to the Congress to reduce or eliminate the minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels required by subsection (a); and

(D) such other information and recommendations as the Commission considers appropriate.

The CHAIRMAN. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may postpone a request for a recorded vote on any amendment, and may reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the time for voting on any postponed question immediately following another vote, provided that the time for voting on the first question shall be a minimum of 15 minutes.

Are there any amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT NO. 1 OFFERED BY MR. BARRETT OF WISCONSIN

Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preprinted amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment No. 1 printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD offered by Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin:

Page 4, beginning on line 9, strike paragraph (2) through line 20 and insert the following:

(2) REQUIRED DURATION OF MODIFICATION: PERMANENT CONDITIONS.—The Commission shall not modify such rules to eliminate or reduce the minimum distance separations for third-adjacent channels required by paragraph (1)(A) until 6 months after the date on which the Commission submits the report required by subsection (b)(3). No such elimination or reduction may remove such separations with respect to third-adjacent channels occupied by stations that provide a radio reading service to the public. The Commission shall not extend the eligibility for application for low-power FM stations beyond the organizations and entities as proposed in MM Docket No. 99–25 (47 C.F.R. 73.853).

Page 6, line 19, insert before the period the following: ", or 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever is later".

Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I want to put this debate into perspective.

We have heard a lot about a compromise tonight. The party, of course, missing from this compromise is the administration. The President has told this body that he is strongly opposed to this bill and will veto it. I think that is something, when we talk about compromise and how there is peace in the valley, that we have to remember that there is something else that is going on here that is not really being fully explored tonight.

What I am trying to do tonight, along with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH), and I am pleased that he has worked with me on an amendment, is to offer an amendment that really is a compromise, that tries to respond to what I consider to be some of the legitimate concerns that have been raised by radio station operators in this country, but at the same time, not to have Congress step in, strip the FCC of its authority, and micromanage microradio.

Mr. Chairman, this debate is really the legislative equivalent of, your mother wears army boots. We have had fights for the last several months between the proponents of low power radio and the opponents of low power radio. They are fighting over a study. The FCC does not like the study that has been prepared by the industry. The industry says that the FCC has not done a good enough job in studying this issue. So they go back and forth, back and forth, yelling at each other.

So the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and the gentlewoman from

New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON) I think is a constructive amendment. It recognizes that in order for Congress to act intelligently on this issue, it has to have an independent study.

I have no quarrel with that. I think it addresses the legitimate technical concerns that have been raised by people who run radio stations in this country. I say that as someone who is a strong supporter of low power FM radio. I want Congress to have an independent analysis of this issue.

But this is where we separate, because the Barrett-Rush amendment makes one change and one change only to this bill. It would give Congress 6 months to act after the FCC submits its report. After 6 months, if Congress has not acted, the FCC may proceed with low power licenses.

Why is this amendment important? The reason why this amendment is important is because we do not have a level playing field here. On the one hand we have the radio stations, who have made it very, very clear that, regardless of the outcome of this study, they oppose having any type of expansion to low power FM stations.

On the other side we have the FCC, but the FCC really is speaking for groups that have no voice, by definition. They do not have radio stations. They do not have a powerful lobbying organization. They are the churches, the high schools, the neighborhood organizations.

What the bill does in its current form is it says even if this independent study comes back and says there are no interference problems, even if there are no interference problems, the FCC cannot continue to do the job it has done for the last 80 years, which is to make sure that the spectrum is filled in a fair way.

Instead, it says that Congress has to act first. I do not think there is a person in this room who believes that the opponents of low power FM radio are going to come back and say, okay, go ahead, change the law. Because even though we have this study here, the bill ultimately still builds a very strong fence. This is a ‘‘fence me in’’ bill.

It says to those people who currently have stations, we are going to build this big fence around you and we are not going to let anybody else in. That is wrong. The people in this Chamber who say they are in favor of competition, the people in this Chamber who say they believe in advances in technology I think should say, wait a minute, wait a minute.

We recognize if this study comes back and says that there are problems with interference, this Congress can act in a week. It is not going to take us 6 months. If there is a problem this Congress is going to act very quickly, because frankly, we are going to have powerful forces, just as we have powerful forces right now saying, quick, make sure there is no problem.

If there is no problem, my concern is those same forces are going to come in and say, yes, well, maybe it does not show this, it does not show that, but we are still concerned about that.

What this amendment does is it allows this bill to move forward. Under its current form, it is going to be vetoed by the President of the United States. I think we should be addressing the legitimate concerns, the legitimate technical concerns. That is why I am offering this amendment.

We have two choices, we can go forth with this bill right now, face a certain presidential veto, or we can accept this amendment. I think the President and the Senate will say, all right, that makes sense. Of course we want to have an independent study. Of course we want the FCC to continue its role. But there is no reason in the world that Congress should be micromanaging these stations.

I would bet, Mr. Chairman, that the radio stations themselves would rue the day that they wanted this Congress to get involved in the small, technical matters of the FCC. They do not want us to do that, generally speaking. They want us to stay out of it. But in this instance, they think that they can benefit.

Mr. Chairman, this is a reasonable amendment. I certainly ask my colleagues to support it.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me first indicate this bill was reported by the committee in a bipartisan voice vote. It was an amendment that we finally came to with the gentlewoman from New Mexico (Mrs. WILSON), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) leading the way, that really set out, I think, the parameters of what this program is all about.

It allows the LPFM to go forward in areas where it does not infringe on existing interference protections: in a lot of rural areas, in the New Mexico example, in many areas of the country that are underserved by FM radio. We bent over backwards to make certain that that could go forward.

Then we also said, but it is important in these areas that potentially have interference problems to have a pilot study done and find out once and for all whether in fact these interference standards are adequate, or whether in fact the incumbent radio stations will have problems with interference and their listeners will have interference with that.

□ 1915

This is really what this argument is all about. The Barrett amendment undercuts the purpose of this legislation by allowing the commission to go forward with full implementation of its lower-power FM rule, including the weakening of interference protections following the pilot program regardless of what the results of that program are.

So we are saying there is the FCC. The Barrett amendment simply says, do not confuse us with the facts. No matter how that pilot program comes out, one can go forward just as one is going forward now.

Now, there is a certain reason why congressional intent is important, and that is why we are debating this today. Is it really realistic to have an FCC, an unelected Federal bureaucracy, a so-called independent agency set these kinds of important standards against the obvious intent of the Congress? I do not think so.

The amendment allows the FCC to proceed with its rule as currently ordered, unless Congress enacts legislation to overturn this in a 6-month period. Well, I have perhaps a little less faith in the alacrity with which this Congress could act or any Congress could act perhaps than the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT). As a matter of fact, everybody knows that in this town it is a lot easier to play defense than it is to play offense.

So my colleagues are asking the Congress to pass a bill that would or would not be vetoed by the President in that 6-month period. We do not know whether that happens or not.

But to allow the FCC to go forward with the test and then, say, essentially thumb their nose at the test results and move forward with granting these licenses is the height of irresponsibility.

So I would ask the Members to defeat this Barrett amendment, to support the bipartisan compromise that was crafted so well in this committee, and understand that this bill came out on a bipartisan voice vote in the Committee on Commerce with strong support on both sides of the aisle.

Let us defeat the Barrett amendment and get to the real issue here, which is protecting incumbent stations from potential interference from these new low-powered FM stations.

Mr. RUSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the issue of whether these low-power FM stations cause interference must be addressed. We sat in the committee, observed and listened to both the FCC and the broadcasters. We were privy to the debate, the unsettled debate about whether or not low-power stations actually cause interference.

I am in support of a middle ground. I am in support of finding a middle ground, Mr. Chairman, so that we can move forward. The amendment, the Barrett-Rush amendment that we are offering today reaches a fair compromise. I think that it is fair, not only to the low-power radio, FM radio station advocates, but it is also fair to the broadcasting industry. It is fair to the American people, and it is fair to the Members of this body. It provides 6 months for the FCC to conduct its pilot study and 6 months for the Congress to create the study's results.

Mr. Chairman, as the bill of the opponents of this amendment, the bill that they have crafted, if it goes forward, it does not give the FCC any opportunities to activate and to allow community organizations, hospitals, students across this Nation access to the airwaves.

Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the way that the bill is drafted now, the FCC would have to conduct a study by February 1, 2001. That is just a mere months away. If the FCC study or report indicates that there is no interference, the FCC still would not be allowed to act unless Congress specifically authorizes new legislation. So what this bill in fact does, Mr. Chairman, this bill actually kills low-power radio stations in this Nation.

Again, Mr. Chairman, the Barrett-Rush amendment is fair. I would like to just remind my colleagues that low-power radio stations enjoy broad support from the AFL-CIO, Communications Workers of America, the United States Catholic Conference, the United Church of Christ Office of Communications, the Consumers Union, the Minority Media Telecommunications Council, the National Federation of Community Broadcasters, the National League of Cities, and nationally known musicians, including Ellis Marcalis and Bonnie Raitt.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, Mr. Chairman, to vote for this fair and reasonable amendment.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT). Not long ago, not very long ago, I read about a 21-year-old man who built his own radio transmitter. He was able to broadcast a signal of a distance of just 2 miles. This was far enough to reach everyone in his community. The problem was, of course, he was the only one who had a receiver. That was back in 1895. The name of that gentleman was Guglielmo Marconi, who invented the radio.

But if he were here today, he would have to overcome a lot more than just that obstacle of one receiver. For instance, he would have to come up with $80,000 to $100,000 before the FCC would even consider giving him a license. He would have to overcome something else that the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) alluded to on the floor, and that is the continuing concentration of power in the broadcast industry.

In recent years, the number of radio station owners in this country has shrunk by almost 20 percent. That is why the measure that we are considering today is so important and why this amendment is important. To the credit of the FCC and Bill Kennard, some new life is being breathed into a very old idea, an important idea, the public airwaves should be the public's interest. That is what the FCC did when it carved out a small piece of the broadcasting spectrum for community-level low-power FM stations.

Who will it help? It will help many community organizations who are now shut out, ethnic groups who want to broadcast their culture to the community, senior citizens who want to broadcast their concerns to the community, colleges and universities who want to talk to their students, city councils and villages who might want to broadcast what is going on in their committees and in their council meetings. It goes on and on of the groups that will have an interest in this issue that will be able to get into broadcasting that cannot today.

Musicians who are locked out in a very profound way from experimenting and expressing themselves on radio today would have an opportunity to do so as well.

So a forum for new music and new talent and new ideas, that is what radio should be all about. That is what the FCC plan I think will help achieve. That is why, as the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH) said, low-power radio has earned the support of the cross-section of organizations throughout America today, including the Consumers Union, the United States Catholic Conference, the NAACP, the AFL-CIO, the U.S. Conference of Mayors.

These are organizations that represent grassroots people who need a voice, who often do not have a voice, and who are now hopefully going to get a voice if they are not denied that by the powerful lobby that they are up against in this fight.

It is time that we tune out the static and that we listen to the facts. This is a reasonable solution, as the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH) have indicated, because the research shows that, even under the worst circumstances, low-power radio would create little interference and no cross-talk for conventional broadcasters.

There are already almost 400 full-power FM stations authorized prior to November of 1964 who do not meet the current channel separation requirements. These full-power stations which operate with only one or two channels between them and the next station on the dial have consistently met the FCC's criteria for distortion-free signals.

So I ask my colleagues to support this amendment. It is good. It is fair. It meets the needs of our communities.

Mr. BURR of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH). This amendment deals with the crux of the problem Congress is facing on low-power FM interference.

The FCC chose to eliminate decades-old third-channel interference protections in order to shoehorn in more low-power FM stations. The House Committee on Commerce said wait a minute. After hearings and debate in subcommittee and full committee, my colleagues and myself said low-power FM can go forward and should go forward immediately, but Congress must protect all radio listeners by maintaining third-channel interference protections.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH) have agreed that we should put into law third-adjacent channel protections for any radio station that sublets, if you will, some of their spectrum to very important blind reading services, services that the FCC ignores in their ruling.

So the authors of this amendment are saying that the FCC got third-channel protections wrong for these unique and critically vital blind reading stations. But for all other broadcasters who may cover local high schools, sports, or provide Spanish language broadcasts, or our public radio affiliates, one cannot, and I repeat, cannot have third-channel protections under the law.

What if stations decide to offer some of their auxiliary spectrums to blind reading services? Does the FCC then have to go back and protect the third-channel from interference and shut down existing low-power FM stations?

This amendment is ill conceived and flawed. I urge my colleagues to vote no.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. This amendment by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) is a good amendment, and I ask my colleagues to accept it. It is a modest change to H.R. 3439. It is a good amendment, and I only wish it went further.

The promotion of competition and diversity in broadcast has been the guidepost of American communications policy for over 50 years. We are currently experiencing unprecedented consolidation in this industry, however; and we cannot ignore its implications. Today, broadcast remains the way most Americans get their local news and information. Yet, there are fewer and fewer companies that control the content of the information they receive.

That is why more than 2 years ago, FCC Chairman Bill Kennard proposed a new low-power FM radio service. It is a noncommercial service that will allow local churches, schools, community-based organizations, and governments to strengthen the ties in their communities. It is localism and diversity in the purest democratic sense.

The FCC took its responsibility to protect the signals of incumbent broadcasters very seriously. They spent more than a year conducting lab tests and reviewing the potential for signal interference. It also extended its comment period in the rulemaking proceeding and scaled back its original proposal in an effort to address the incumbent broadcasters' concerns. For any objective viewpoint, the FCC bent over backwards to accommodate the concerns broadcasters raised.

The FCC's extensive tests have shown that low-power radio will not harm existing signals. Chairman Kennard has vowed publicly time and again to protect every incumbent FM service from interference.

H.R. 3439 effectively kills low-power radio. It prevents the FCC from issuing all but a small number of licenses and requires more studies into next year. New legislation would be required to permit the program to move forward once the studies are completed.

The Barrett-Rush amendment would simply permit the FCC to implement the program 6 months after the new round of studies is completed, and it has demonstrated again that interference is not a problem.

Passage of H.R. 3439 without the Barrett-Rush amendment will end the promise of greater localism and diversity that noncommercial low-power radio can bring.

□ 1930

I urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment and to vote against the legislation if this amendment is defeated.

Mr. WALDEN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today first to declare a conflict of interest. I am a community radio broadcast station owner and operator and have been for 14 years. My father started in this business in the late 1930s. There has never been more diversity on the dial and more stations than there are today.

Now, my stations are in a small community; 20,000 in the county and 23 in the other. We do the very things that my colleagues are talking about today that they want: Spanish programming, programming for seniors, and so do my colleagues in the industry. And that is what I am standing up here today to talk about, is the public service and community service that is today provided to people in America by their community broadcasters.

This amendment, though, is bad. Now, I am not a radio engineer, although I have spent time inside transmitters with my engineer. My engineer is a fan of low-power FM. He is very supportive of it. He and I disagree on this. But when it comes to the technical issue of LPFM, I want to read my colleagues what he said to me.

"My position on this is not to kill LPFM, but to pressure the FCC to consider revising at least the rules that would be most harmful to full-power FM stations. This rule appears to be the worst. Protecting against interference to a station's protected contour has been a bedrock issue with the FCC." He says, "Perhaps most disturbing were the rules for future full-power FM's. It appears that predicted and actual interference would have to be caused within a future station's 70dBu 'city grade' contour, before the full-power station could have any relief from LPFM interference. Interference from there on out to the 60dBu contour would just have to be tolerated by the full-power station."

That is why the FCC was created in the beginning, was to sort out these technical interference problems. That is why this amendment is not a good one and why it ought to be defeated and why we ought to run out the test the way the bill envisions and do it in that respect.

I have heard from community broadcasters; I have heard from Jefferson Public Radio concerned about the potential interference with their translator system on public radio. We have a great opportunity to move forward with the legislation that the chairman and the ranking member has offered, and I think this amendment is the wrong direction to go. From a technical standpoint, it is flawed and it will hurt the process.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Barrett amendment. If we were going to take all of the red herrings that have been spread before this body in this debate, we would have to put an aquarium in the middle of the well. This is absolutely one of the most misrepresented Federal Communications Commission efforts of all time.

Now, how do we know this? We know this because we have to test the hypocrisy coefficient. Now, how would we apply that in this particular instance? Well, what we would do is we would look at the 300 high-powered FM radio stations that the National Association of Broadcasters asked to be grandfathered by the Federal Communications Commission in 1997.

Now, we are not talking about 100-watt radio stations, these small non-profit community-based radio stations. Hundred watts. No, we are talking about 50,000 watt radio stations, 10,000 watt radio stations, 5,000 watt radio stations that all operate within the second and third adjacent channels, just with these 100-watt stations.

So the NAB did a big study of these 300, 50,000, 10,000 and 5,000 watt stations. And after a completely detailed eye-watering analysis of the science of these radio stations, here is what they found: that every one of those 300 stations was a dues-paying member of the National Association of Broadcasters and they shall be grandfathered, regardless of their interference that they were going to be causing in the second and third adjacent channels.

Now, who are these channels? Well, my colleagues might have heard of some of them: KCBS, KLAX, KBCD, KYCY. Fifty, 50, count them, 50 high-powered radio stations in California, 24 in Illinois, 25 in North Carolina, 28 in Ohio, 24 in New York, 17 in New Jersey. Go right down the list. So KCBS, operating within the second and third adjacent channel, that is no problem. But a 100-watt station operated by a community church in South Central L.A., oh my God, stop the presses. Let us get the FCC out of this business and have an independent study, says the NAB. The NAB.

Now, why is this? Well, it is very simple. Here is their philosophy. They already got theirs. They are in. They are the incumbents. Pull up the gang plank. There is no room for these poor community groups, churches, minority groups. Oh, my God, how can we figure this out? Let us study it for a year, and then even if they find there is no interference, and, by the way, if they use the same standard that the NAB used with these 300, and that is all we are really talking about here in low power, by the way, only about 300 low power, if they use the same standard they will not find any interference.

But what does the Oxley bill say? Even if they do not find any interference, they still have to come back to Congress. They still have to come back and get permission. And when will that be? When do my colleagues think the NAB will let that happen out here?

So what the Barrett amendment says is, study it. But if they do not find any interference, if they find the same thing that the NAB found in 1997, when they analyzed whether or not their 300 radio stations, the huge 50,000, 10,000, 5,000-watt radio stations caused interference, then license the little 100-watt community-based radio station. Why not do that? But, no, even the Barrett amendment is unacceptable to the NAB.

My colleagues, unless we want to completely ignore the facts, unless we want to completely ignore the history of FM radio in our country, and by the way these 300 stations that got their licenses back in the 1960s, they were only grandfathered. So they have been causing this interference or, more accurately, not causing this interference for 30 years now. So what is the likelihood that the FCC is going to be unable themselves, in order to determine whether or not 100-watt radio stations are causing this problem?

So, my colleagues, I think if right now these 50,000-watt stations are not provoking any complaints in L.A.; if we are not hearing it on KCBS, if we are not hearing it on KLAX, we are not going to hear it on the 100-watt stations. The consumer complaints are not out there.

So I urge a very strong ''aye'' on the Barrett-Rush amendment. It is wise, it is timely, it is important for us to get these small voices out into the communities of our country with the ever-consolidating huge radio industry making it harder and harder for minorities, women, and for smaller voices in our society to have their independent voices heard.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, my friend, the previous speaker, indicated the Barrett amendment provided that this test would go forward, and then if the commission did not find any interference, it could move ahead and grant these low-powered stations. That is not what the Barrett amendment says.

The Barrett amendment says that in 6 months, regardless of whether the Commission finds interference, it can move forward with the issuance of these low-powered station licenses.

Let me say it again. The bill says they have to do this study and report back to Congress and then Congress will say yes or no, proceed, based upon the results of that study. The amendment by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) says to the FCC that they can proceed in 6 months regardless of whether the independent study produces a finding of interference. Do we really want to vote for that?

Incredibly, the Barrett amendment makes one exception. It says even in 6 months the Commission cannot remove the protections against interference for radio reading services to the public. Now, that is a very important service, but if radio reading services to the public deserve this protection from interference, do we not think other minority stations deserve that protection? Do we not think National Public Radio deserves that protection? Do we not think the local radio broadcasting station deserves that protection? Or would we rather have this report come back to Congress saying there will be all kinds of interference, but the commission is going to move ahead anyhow whether or not it interferes with the local station, with the minority station, with the community broadcast station, or any other station that exists in our communities?

The FCC came up with this proposal. This is not a legislative proposal. The FCC decided to propose this new service. The FCC decided to propose it and then decided to implement it in spite of the fact that radio stations across America expressed concerns to the Members of Congress, whom the FCC is supposed to be answerable to, to check it out first to make sure it would not interfere with listening audiences around the country.

When we invited Chairman Kennard to come and tell us about it, he declined the offer to testify. He sent an engineer instead. So we had a battle of engineers. We listened to the FCC lab test, which said that it is okay to do this stuff. And then we heard from other engineers, who had test results that indicated all kind of talk-over, all kinds of interference problems on all kinds of cheap inexpensive radios; the Walkman, the boom boxes, the radios next to the bedside. And the FCC's answer was, oh, those radios are inexpensive. They are not designed well; and, therefore, we do not care whether it interferes with those radios. It is okay to interfere with those radios. To 65 million Americans, it is okay to interfere with their radio listening because they bought an inexpensive radio. Shame on them. That is the attitude of the FCC here.

If we adopt this amendment, we give the FCC authority to move forward in spite of the fact that it interferes with these less expensive radios. We give them the authority to move forward in spite of the fact it might jam up in a digital age and completely block out the signal of National Public Radio stations in our communities, or our community broadcasters in our communities, perhaps our minority language broadcasters in our communities. We give them the go-ahead and say it does not matter that they are supposed to be subject to Congress; they can do what they want, when they want to do it.

And guess what? Tick off the 6 months with me. This bill gets through the House tonight, and it goes over to the Senate. Maybe the Senate passes it in May. Count them off for me. All of a sudden we are in December. Are we in session? No. We are not in session in December. The FCC even may go out of office next year. We do not know who will be in the FCC next year. But in December the FCC proceeds with the issuances of all these licenses whether they interfere or not. We come back in session next year, and we have to start shutting licenses and radio stations down. Do we really want to be in that pickle? Do we really want to start shutting radio stations down across America because they were licensed incorrectly?

We have an obligation in Congress. We have an obligation to direct the FCC when it comes to the way the spectrum is used in America. We have an obligation to every radio listener not to let them issue licenses that are going to interfere with their listening. And yet the FCC is asking us in this Barrett amendment to do what they want regardless of the test results, except to protect one small little provision of service called radio reading.

I suggest to my colleagues this is an ill thought-out amendment. This undoes the bill. The bill does not shut down FM low power. It lets 70 stations go forward immediately. Immediately. And it simply says for the rest, go the through not the lab test, the field test.

I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, if we like careful regulation, if we like responsible behavior by the regulatory agencies, if we expect the regulatory agencies to do their job carefully, then we have no choice but to oppose the amendment offered by my good friends, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH).

The simple fact of the matter is the FCC did several things. First of all, they changed the standard which was previously signal-to-noise ratio, which covered and described whether or not there was interference that was unacceptable. Second of all, they changed so that now we may no longer use the test of the third-adjacent channel.

My friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), said that the FCC was not opposed to this in that event by the broadcasters.

□ 1945

In point of fact, the broadcasters oppose the grandfathering of those higher powered stations.

Now, the issue here, and I want my colleagues to understand this very clearly, is not the question of interference as it impacts upon the broadcasters. Although that is important. It is the interference as it impacts upon the listener.

In 1927, the Radio Act was set up to assure that we restored order to the broadcast channels by eliminating the wild interference and the wild placement of stations, which made the entire spectrum almost useless and impossible to listen to.

What the traditional standard was, then, was the third adjacent channel. In addition to that, it was signal-to-noise ratio, which enables them to tell what in fact is going on from the standpoint of the listener. No test on these points was made by the FCC.

The FCC simply wants to disregard the traditional standards and the traditional methods of measuring whether or not interference exists and will impact upon the listeners.

Now, everybody is making the great pitch that this bill here is going to hurt minorities. In point of fact, it is going to impact most heavily upon benefitting, if we pass this legislation, minority listeners and minority broadcasters because they will receive the assurance that they will get proper protection of both broadcasting and the listeners' concern.

Now, the point has been made, well, if they have got an expensive radio, they do not have to worry. Well, that is an argument that I find very distasteful, because the simple point of fact is that the minorities and the poor and the people who have most need of radio service are the people who can least afford an expensive radio.

We are not talking about shower radios or things of that kind. We are talking about clock radios, inexpensive radios, radios that are used by minorities and by people of limited means.

What the amendment does is it assures that the FCC will have to make a proper test and that the test will be accomplished by an independent testing entity. I think that is fair and proper. And then it lets the Congress make the decision.

Now, I want to remind my colleagues of something that Sam Rayburn told the chairman of the FCC when he got out of hand. He said, Now, son, remember that you work for us and everything will be all right.

The Congress is the body that has created the FCC to function under delegated authority. It is our responsibility to look after the FCC and see to it that their proceedings are fair, to see that their proceedings consider all the questions and are conducted in the proper fashion, and to see to it that the people who are dependent upon radio service get fair treatment.

Remember, at stake here are rights of minorities, people of limited means, and public broadcasting. That is what really is in question, and the question of whether or not proper service is afforded the people.

There will be literally hundreds of stations which will go on the air of low-power character. There will be at least 70 of them in major centers. And in areas below 50,000 markets, we will find that there will be an awful lot of broadcasters who will go on and utilize these low-power systems.

That is the way it should be done. And then we can have a fresh look; we can come to a judgment as to whether or not the test says that we ought to permit the FCC to go forward. At that point a proper decision can be made.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and their interest in protecting the minority community. And I am sure they are sincere. I just happen to disagree with them on this issue about whether this is protective of the minority community or not. But that is not the point that I rose to make.

Actually, some of my very best friends are owners of commercial radio stations and own interests; and they deserve to have their signals protected, which is why the underlying purpose of the bill is a good purpose. There needs to be a study.

But I will guarantee my colleagues that, at the end of that study, those same friends of mine will, regardless of the outcome of that study, even if it says that there is no interference, they will be here saying do not take action because they will be trying to protect their own economic interest. And I do not have any problem with that.

But I know that they have enough power in the process to keep any kind of bill from coming that will allow these low-power FM stations to go forward even if the study says there is no interference. And that is why I support the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH). Because this is really a question of who is going to play offense and who is going to play defense.

I know the commercial stations have the power to play offense. If this study shows that there is any kind of interference, this Congress will respond to the commercial radio stations, and I know that.

But I do not have that same kind of assurance about the minority community and small institutions and small colleges having the power to move Congress to do something to respond. And I think we ought to put the burden on the commercial stations, which is exactly what the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSH) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT) does.

If there is a finding that there is really interference, I guarantee my colleagues they will be here and their interest will be protected. And I will probably be on their side because a lot of them are my good friends, and my supporters I might add.

But in the absence of some overwhelming finding, the burden should be on them and not on the community. The airwaves belong to the community in the final analysis.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, does the Chair think that we might obtain the vote faster if it were indicated that a number of us are inclined to vote for whichever side stops talking first?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has not stated a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, recognizing my colleague's last statement, I certainly will not take the entire 5 minutes. But I do believe I would like to comment on this bill.

I sat in on the committee hearing and I listened intently. This is a very important issue. Clearly, we do need more diversity of voices in the media.

Mr. Chairman, at the same time, however, it came to light in the committee that there were concerns and legitimate concerns about the quality of signals and the possibility of interference. And so, the concept of a study I think makes eminent good sense.

The concern I have, as has been articulated by my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), is simply this: Why should we absolutely have to come back to Congress before any action can be taken?

Let us put the burden on the broadcasters to say this is a bad idea. If the study comes back and shows that we can have diverse voices think low-power radio without any significant interference, then we ought to move forward.

My father is blind. He listens to the radio as his primary source of communication with the outside world and certainly wants a clear signal. But I think I also want the opportunity to have other voices heard if they could be done without interfering with my father's portable radio.

With that in mind, I support this amendment. I believe it is a fair and reasonable approach that will allow us to move forward if there is no interference with the signal and allow these diverse voices.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Barrett/Rush Amendment to the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act. I believe that the Barrett/Rush Amendment will strongly expedite the availability of low-power licenses to local communities.

This Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act would require the FCC to modify its low-power FM rule by establishing signal interference standards for low power FM stations that are equal to existing standards for full power FM stations. On January 20, 2000, the FCC adopted a new category of radio services that permits the issuance of licenses for low-power, non-commercial community FM radio stations. Under the FCC's rule, the new service would consist of 10-watt and 100-watt stations with a broadcast radius of about 1–2 miles and 3.5 miles.

For many years, the FCC received thousands of inquiries annually from individuals and groups wishing to start low-power radio stations for small communities. The FCC decision to offer low-power licenses will enhance community oriented radio and increase diversity in our Nation's communities.

Local communities and historically underrepresented groups such as, civil rights groups, students and educational organizations, labor unions, churches and religious groups, and many other community organizations have expressed support. In addition, many nonprofit entities providing public safety announcements and local transportation have also expressed support.

However, organizations and some broadcasters are opposed to the low-power FCC license rule, because hey have expressed concerns that low-power frequencies will cause interference with existing broadcasters. For instance, many popular FM stations may experience static and unclear reception. Opponents have stated that the FCC acted hastily to appease the groups applying for low power licenses and that they did not fully consider the technical as well as economic consequences to established broadcasters.

I believe that the granting of low-power licenses by the FCC will offer significantly more opportunities for average Americans to become involved in broadcasting and spread their messages. In fact, many local minority broadcasters will have the chance to provide information to the communities where they operate. The Barrett/Rush Amendment will address the interference issue and speed up the availability of these coveted frequencies to those who may greater benefit from low-power access.

The Barrett/Rush Amendment permits the FCC to proceed with its plans to issue low-power licenses six months after the conclusion of the interference test period, unless Congress expressly takes action to prohibit it. The Radio Broadcasting Protection Act was introduced in order to curtail the FCC's ability to provide new licenses for non-commercial low-power FM radio stations to empower churches, schools, and other community groups to gain access to the airwaves.

The FCC proposal is intended as a response to the alarming trend of ownership consolidation in the radio industry, which has drastically decreased the number of local broadcasters on the air.

The Commerce Committee adopted a substitute to the Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act that would allow the FCC to grant low power radio licenses only in those 70 markets which satisfy the "third adjacent channel" protection from interference that applies to existing full power stations, and to test 9 markets whether low-power radio causes interference without the "third adjacent channel" protection. Once this testing is completed, the FCC must report the results to Congress.

The bill in its current form does not allow the FCC to act on issuing new low-power licenses, unless Congress specifically authorizes further action with additional legislation; even if the FCC studies find no interference is found in independent testing.

This bill also fails to recognize and inhibits the FCC's expertise in analyzing FM radio issues, including signal interference and spectrum management. Without the Barrett/Rush Amendment this bill is nothing but an unnecessary infringement on the FCC's ability to adapt decades-old rules to ever changing technology. This amendment is a fair compromise: it provides for Congress to exercise timely oversight, but removes an unfair impediment to legitimate action by the FCC with an issue clearly under its jurisdiction.

We can do better and we must do better. We owe it to the many churches, schools, non-profit community groups, colleagues, as well as state and local government agencies to go forward with providing access to low-power frequencies and to increasing diversity among our Nation's airwaves.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Barrett/Rush Amendment and in support of the FCC's Low-Power FM radio station proposal. The Barrett/Rush amendment is a reasonable compromise to this legislation that would allow the FCC to continue work toward establishing these important communications tools.

Mr. Chairman, low-power FM stations would give churches, schools and local community groups access to the radio spectrum at a cost they can afford. These stations will only reach a couple of miles, but the message they will carry will reach many people. These stations will give churches a greater voice in the community. These stations will allow schools to set up in-house radio stations. Schools can train kids for a career in the radio industry, as well as provide announcements of school closures and after-school events. Local community groups will be able to contribute to the diversity of voices in their community while providing important information.

The bill we are considering today will effectively give Congress the ability to kill the low-power FM program. The Barrett/Rush amendment forces Congress to act on this proposal instead of allowing it to wither away. My colleagues and I have heard the concerns of broadcasters that these new stations will interfere with existing stations. This amendment will allow for further study to ensure that the integrity of the spectrum is maintained. However, it mandates that Congress will act on this proposal after the independent study on interference is completed. This amendment represents a more responsible compromise to allay the concerns of broadcasters while giving the FCC the ability to move forward with this program.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support of this amendment and low-power FM radio.

Let's give new strength to the voice of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. BARRETT).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. BARRETT of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

Messrs. LAHOOD, BARCIA and WATKINS changed their vote from ''aye'' to ''no.''

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York, Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. METCALF changed their vote from ''no'' to ''aye.''

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Stated for:

Ms. MCCARTHY of Missouri: Mr. Chairman, during rollcall vote No. 129, the Rush/Barrett Amendment to HR 3439, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "yes."

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Chairman, during rollcall vote No. 129 on April 13, 2000 I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House of today, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. PEASE) having assumed the chair, Mr. LAHOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3439) to prohibit the Federal Communications Commission from establishing rules authorizing the operation of new, low power FM radio stations, pursuant to the order of the House of today, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the order of the House of today, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

□ 2032

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title was amended so as to read: ''A bill to require the Federal Communications Commission to revise its regulations authorizing the operation of new, low-power FM radio stations.''.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 130, H.R. 3439, Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act, I was unavoidably absent. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

Stated against:

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, during rollcall vote No. 130, Radio Broadcasting Preservation Act, H.R. 3439, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, during rollcall vote No. 130 on April 13, 2000, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. COOKSEY. Mr. Speaker, due to my mother's illness, I was not here for the votes on H.R. 3615 or H.R. 3439. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea" on passage of H.R. 3615, "nay" on the Barrett of Wisconsin Amendment to H.R. 3439, and "yea" on passage of H.R. 3439.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3439, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 3308

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as cosponsor of H.R. 3308.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER, MAJORITY LEADER AND MINORITY LEADER TO ACCEPT RESIGNATIONS AND MAKE APPOINTMENTS, NOTWITHSTANDING ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding any adjournment of the House until Tuesday, May 2, 2000, the Speaker and majority leader and minority leader may be authorized to accept resignations and to make appointments authorized by law or by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY, MAY 3, 2000

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday, May 3, 2000.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1396

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my name be removed as a cosponsor on H.R. 1396.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Lundregan, one of its clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 290) ''Concurrent resolution establishing the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2001, revising the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2000, and setting forth appropriate budgetary levels for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2005'', agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. KASICH, Mr. CHAMBLISS, Mr. SHAYS, Mr. SPRATT, and Mr. HOLT, to be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

YOUNG ROLE MODELS

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, this week three youngsters from Sparks, Nevada, were honored as national winners of Make a Difference Day, the largest national day dedicated to helping others.

Ten-year-old Crystal DeRuise, her 8-year-old brother Trevor, and her friend, 10-year-old Diana Vaden, started a simple crafts project. They collected oval-shaped rocks, painted them to resemble ladybugs, and sold them at local community craft fairs.

This simple project has become a local phenomenon in a nationally-recognized charity. When Diana's mother became ill with lupus last year, the students began to sell their rocks at the local stores, donating all of their proceeds to the Lupus Foundation. To date, they have raised about $1,500 for lupus research, and plan to generate at least $1,000 more in sales by Christmas.

In addition, as national finalists, an award of $10,000 will go directly to the Lupus Foundation on their behalf.

It is truly an honor for me to recognize these young individuals, who have given so much of themselves to such a worthy cause. These young children are truly the real role models for all America.

COMMENDING COMMISSIONER CHARLES ROSSOTTI FOR CREATING PARTNERSHIP BETWEEN IRS AND NATIONAL CENTER FOR MISSING AND EXPLOITED CHILDREN

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, each day in the United States, 2,200 children are reported missing to the FBI's National Crime Information Center. Our colleagues have helped to raise the level of awareness about missing children by featuring their photos on franked mail and newsletters. Hundreds of corporations do their part. President Clinton mandated the posting of missing children's photos in Federal buildings.

Today I commend Commissioner Charles Rossotti of the IRS for creating a new partnership between his agency and the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children. All tax forms and publications this year feature the pictures of missing children where blank space once appeared. The IRS estimates that up to 600 million images of missing children are being featured.

The National Center reports that one in six missing children is recovered when someone recognizes their photo, and we are optimistic that many children featured in the new IRS program will make their way home as a direct result.

Mr. Speaker, please join me and the Members of the Missing and Exploited Children's Caucus in applauding Commissioner Rossotti for his leadership in bringing the pictures of these children to such a large audience simply by taking advantage of available space.

On behalf of all the families of missing children from our respective districts, we thank you.

IN SUPPORT OF DR. LAURA

(Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I have a button which I sometimes wear. It says, ''Politically Incorrect and Proud of it.'' I probably ought to be wearing that button tonight, because what I am going to say is going to be deemed politically incorrect by some.

You see, I rise in strong support of Dr. Laura. Mr. Speaker, under the guise of freedom of speech, my children and my grandchildren are put into a sea of filth and violence on television and the Net. Yet, when Dr. Laura recapitulates spiritual and moral values espoused by countless civilizations through millenia of time, pagans and Christians and Jews and Muslims, she is accused of hate speech.

Mr. Speaker, I proudly rise to defend Dr. Laura and her right to freely express her religious convictions, her deeply held religious convictions, without fear of being called a bigot. If her rights are denied, all our rights are at risk.

THE CENSUS AND URGING MEMBERS TO JOIN IN RESOLUTION SALUTING MINORITY VETERANS

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise for two reasons this evening. First of all, I ask Americans not to forget the Census. On April 16, we will have Census Sunday in my district, where I hope all of our religious communities and all those who will be gathered under one roof will realize the importance of one vote, one person, and realize they should be part of the count and not part of the undercount.

So many of our men and women have served the United States military so that we might be free. The Census is one exercise that the United States partakes in to ensure that all Members of this Nation are counted. So I hope that those who have not sent in their forms will realize that this is a part of the obligation of being here in the United States, to be counted.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting House Resolution 98 to salute and give appreciation to all of the minority veterans that served in World War II, African-Americans, Hispanics, Native Americans, who, because of discriminatory laws in the United States, were not fully acknowledged.

We appreciate all who served in World War II and who gave their lives in sacrifice, but we hope we will be able to honor them on a day of honor, May 25, 2000.

APPOINTMENT OF HON. FRANK R. WOLF OR HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA TO ACT AS SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS THROUGH MAY 2, 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following appointment by the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
April 13, 2000.

I hereby appoint the Honorable FRANK R. WOLF or, if not available to perform this duty, the Honorable CONSTANCE A. MORELLA to act as Speaker pro tempore to sign enrolled bills and joint resolutions through May 2, 2000.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the appointment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

COMMUNICATION FROM LEGISLATIVE COUNSEL OF THE OFFICE OF GENERAL COUNSEL

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from M. Pope Barrow, Jr., Legislative Counsel of the Office of General Counsel of the House of Representatives:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNSEL,
Washington, DC, April 13, 2000.

Hon. DENNIS J. HASTERT,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you formally, pursuant to Rule VIII of the Rules of the House of Representatives, that I have been served with a subpoena for production of documents issued by the Superior Court of the District of Columbia.

After consultation with the Office of General Counsel, I will make the determinations required by Rule VIII.

Sincerely,

M. POPE BARROW, Jr.,
Legislative Counsel.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

PRESCRIPTION DRUG COVERAGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I come before the House today to talk about one of the most serious issues affecting senior citizens and families across the country. That is the skyrocketing cost of prescription drugs and the lack of affordable health coverage for seniors.

Too many of our Nation's senior citizens are forced to make an impossible choice each month about whether they buy the food they need, pay to heat their homes, or pay for the prescription medication that will keep them alive and keep them healthy.

Mr. Speaker, in the richest country in the history of the world, it is simply wrong to force our senior citizens to make that choice. I am sure Members have noticed this giant pill bottle. The size of this pill bottle reflects the escalating costs of prescription medications in our country.

Mr. Speaker, next week I will travel throughout my district and invite senior citizens to bring to me their prescription medications, their prescriptions, and the bills they pay for them. Mr. Speaker, we are going to fill this prescription bottle with those medication receipts, and we are going to bring it back to this body and demand action.

Mr. Speaker, too many senior citizens in this country are making a choice, a terrible choice that they should not have to make. This body has now been in session more than 15 months. We have talked about naming post offices, we have traveled back and forth across the country to vote on silly suspension bills, in some cases.

What have we not voted on? We have not voted on any substantive legislation, not one piece of substantive legislation to lower the cost of prescription medications or to provide meaningful health insurance to our senior citizens.

Mr. Speaker, we must not apply a placebo false fix to this problem. We must provide a real prescription on the House of Representatives to solve a real problem that is affecting our senior citizens' health and well-being every day.

Mr. Speaker, when I am in my district next week, I want hundreds of senior citizens to come out. I want to share with Members a story. We asked many of our seniors to share with us what they are paying for prescription medication. I was particularly moved by the story of Ms. Gwen Blackman of Longview.

This is what she wrote to me recently. She is receiving $650 per month for social security disability payments, but Mr. Speaker, she must pay $360 of that per month for prescription medications. How does she do that? Mr. Speaker, she does not do that. What she is forced to do is, on some months, go without her medication.

The richest country in the history of the world, we have senior citizens not able to pay for the medication they need because we have done nothing to control the escalating costs of prescription medications, and we have done nothing substantive to provide meaningful, meaningful and real affordable health insurance that includes prescription medications for our seniors.

This House has before it several bills. I am not taking a position tonight on exactly which bill we must pass. But, Mr. Speaker, we must have this debate, and we must not pass a placebo designed to make us feel like we have done something without doing something.

I hope senior citizens from around this country will look at this giant prescription bottle and say I am going to follow the example of that Member of Congress, I am going to send my Member my prescription medication bottles. I am going to send them the receipts and say, ''Sir or Madam, what would you do if you were in my shoes, and what will you do as an elected Representative to solve this problem.''

IN DEFENSE OF DR. LAURA SCHLESSINGER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARTLETT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, Americans must speak up for freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and traditional morality by defending Dr. Laura's TV show against politically correct antibigotry bigots. That is why I would like to read into the RECORD excerpts from an excellent column from the April 8 issue of World magazine by noted professor of journalism, Marvin Olasky. The article is entitled, ''Support Dr. Laura: Don't back GLAAD, get mad at the anti-bigotry bigots.''

Now I quote, ''Long-time World readers know that I advocate political alliances between religious conservatives and libertarians, and social-issue alliances between biblical Christians and theologically conservative Jews and Muslims. We need such alliances, I believe, because God has not placed us in the ancient land of Canaan, the theme park that Israelites were told to make their own. Instead, Christians are called to live amid sin in a modern Babylon. . .

''Dr. Laura Schlessinger has reportedly surpassed Howard Stern and even Rush Limbaugh as the most-listened-to radio person. She regularly reaches over 20 million radio listeners on 450 stations in the United States and Canada with a message that emphasizes biblical morality. More Americans may soon hear that message: Paramount recently signed up 85 percent of U.S. television markets to air her hour-long talk format television show. But homosexual activists are now campaigning to stop her influence from expanding further. . .

''Dr. Laura (now 53 years old) has become an Orthodox Jew—and that means she has increasingly presented an Old Testament-based critique of homosexuality. To those who disagree she says, rightly, 'I am reiterating what God said. To them, that makes me 'hateful.' I'm sorry —talk to God about it.' Since groups like GLAAD, the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation, don't want to talk to God about it, they have instead put pressure on Paramount to stop the Dr. Laura television show before it starts. GLAAD's posture is ironic in one respect; as Dr. Laura told our reporter Lynn Vincent earlier this year, 'I think it's quite fascinating that a group that's talking about civil rights wants to curtail my right to make a living, speak my point of view, and to have my religious convictions.'

''Www.stopdrlaura.com, one of the new attack websites, bills itself as 'a coalition against hate.' The Stop Dr. Laura movement lists e-mail addresses and phone and fax numbers for the Paramount offices, giving homosexuals and their apologists an easy way to maximize harassment of Paramount executives. One of the dot-com brains behind the attack, John Aravosis, said, 'The show's going to be canceled. This is going to be living hell for Paramount for the next year at least. E-mails will keep flying and flying and flying. Everyone on-line who's progressive is going to know that Paramount is a bigot.' For progressives, of course, 'bigotry' only goes one way.

''Former Member of Congress Pat Schroeder attacked Dr. Laura by saying, 'The pledge of allegiance says, 'with liberty and justice for all.' What part of 'all' is unclear?' That question should be turned back to Mrs. Schroeder. What about liberty for Dr. Laura.

''If the attack just came on the Web, it would not be so serious but leading liberal publications have become lapdogs of the homosexual lobby. GLAAD in 1998 met with editors of Time magazine to tutor them on the politically correct way to cover homosexuals in their publication. Time editors followed up obligingly with a flurry of pro-gay coverage, prompting GLAAD to trumpet the magazine's 'truly remarkable turnaround.' On March 20 Time had the predictable story, 'Dr. Laura, Heal Thyself.' So, for that matter, did Newsweek, with its standard hit-piece use of adjectives . . . and out-of-context references . . .

''Dr. Laura issued an ironic statement: 'We are all made in God's image, and therefore, we should treat one another with love and kindness.' But for activists, sincere overtures of peace will not suffice, and only Dr. Laura's unconditional surrender is acceptable . . .

''If a person of Dr. Laura's prominence and proven appeal can be kept off television, tyrants have seized control of the airways and no one who doesn't bow to political correctness is safe . . .

''The best way to ask Paramount executives not to be swayed by the GLAAD offensive is to send a letter to Mr. Frank Kelly, Paramount Television, 5555 Melrose Avenue, Hollywood, California 90038, or an e-mail to television@pde.paramount.com.''

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to rise in support of Dr. Laura.

THE REUNIFICATION OF THE PARTHENON MARBLES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PAYNE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues an issue of great importance to our Nation and to the international cultural community. I was tremendously pleased to learn that the matter of the Elgin Marbles is now being considered by the British Parliament and would like to offer my support for all efforts by the committee to conduct a thorough, authoritative examination of all the issues of return of the Parthenon Sculptures to the Acropolis.

The House of Commons, committee on Culture, Media and Sport will be examining the issue of the Reunification of the Parthenon Marbles as a part of its present Inquiry On Cultural Property: Return and Illicit Trade. Last week, the committee traveled to Athens to conduct on-site meetings on the issue with the Hellenic Republic.

The Parthenon was built nearly 2,500 years ago by the original Periclean democracy. The Parthenon Marbles are the segments of the Parthenon temple frieze and structures removed by Lord Elgin from the Parthenon Temple in Athens to London in 1801 to 1816 under the circumstances of debatable legality.

The subject of the Parthenon Marbles is not a Greek-British issue but one of international and U.S. interests. Within the international community, the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, UNESCO, and the European Parliament have issued declarations urging that the Marbles be returned to Greece. From the major government buildings of all Western democracies to the emblem of UNESCO, the Parthenon is the recognized international symbol of culture and democracy.

Within Great Britain, two polls over the last 2 years demonstrated that the British public favors the reunification of the Marbles. Last year, an Early Day Motion, signed by 112 members of the British Parliament, was presented urging the return of the Marbles. In March, the Economist magazine published a definitive article on the issue including its own poll of Parliament showing very significant support for the return of the Marbles.

No modern legal concepts of cultural properties apply to the case of the Parthenon Marbles because of the following tragic coincidence. The removal of the Parthenon Marbles occurred on the eve of all modern treaties and international legal precepts regarding cultural property, even in the same decades that the Allies in Europe broke historic ground when they returned the cultural property seized by Napoleon to the Nations of origin. The committee will need to apply strict interpretation of its own legal principles as it weighs the rights of the possessor against the rights of the creator, a very important principle.

The return of the Parthenon Marbles would raise no cause for concern for any other world museums, especially in the United States. Additionally, the Parthenon Marbles is unique, and their reunification would not create a precedent for other museums. Likewise, reunification of the Parthenon Marbles neither establishes a principle for American museums nor poses a threat to our own cultural heritage.

From an ethical point of view, we can imagine the United States position if a foreign diplomat began carting away sculptures from the roof of the Lincoln Monument, which actually the Lincoln Monument was structured after the Parthenon, and they were now in a foreign museum.

From an artistic and cultural point of view, we should consider that the sculptures were integral, structural parts of the architecture, dismembered and taken from the roof of the Parthenon temple. The Parthenon Marbles are not merely ''statutory,'' movable decorative art, but integral, interdependent parts of a temple. Over the centuries, the Parthenon has been a place of worship for three religions in addition to pre-Christian worship of Athena, goddess of wisdom, Orthodox Christian, Catholic, and Muslim.

President Clinton's recent comments in Athens and to British Prime Minister Tony Blair have advanced the debate. Significantly, within days, Prince Charles announced his support for the return of the Marbles to its original place. This will promote a dialogue between the Greek and the British governments which may lead to the reunification of the Marbles to their original home on the Acropolis, hopefully in time to celebrate the 2004 Olympics, which as we know starts in Greece.

Emblems of our culture, in fact, were adopted from the Parthenon and the democracy and culture it represents, including the Lincoln Memorial, the Supreme Court, and innumerable important public buildings and monuments. In the United States, the Committee on the Parthenon has served as a primary catalyst in building public awareness and government support.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I urge that we support this and I have introduced legislation to move it forward.

EARTH DAY 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, we are on the verge of celebrating the 30th anniversary of Earth Day, which falls on April 22. We have much to celebrate, improved air quality and water quality and other environmental standards and better protections for human health. However, we also still have a long way to go to preserve and protect our natural resources.

Unfortunately, the Republican leadership has not promoted an environmental agenda in this Congress. This is a shame because, if we continue on the path that the Republican leadership has been advocating, our planet will be in far worse shape 30 years from now.

I just wanted to mention a couple actions that took place just yesterday in the House in the committees that I serve on. For instance, Republicans on the Committee on Resources yesterday promoted efforts to drill the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge. If we open the Arctic Refuge to oil and gas development, we will only have the equivalent of 6 more months' worth of oil supply. Yet, in the process, we would destroy one of our Nation's greatest natural resources forever.

Just yesterday, Republicans on the Committee on Commerce in which I serve tried to eliminate water efficiency standards for shower heads and toilets. Fortunately that attempt was defeated. Many of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle are already experiencing severe water shortages back home. One study estimated that indoor water use could be reduced by 31 percent per person per day with products that meet the current standards.

Let me just mention also other aspects of the environmental report in general with regard to the Republican majority. I believe very strongly that many of their policies have harmed our domestic and global energy and environmental security by cutting funding for energy efficiency, renewable energy, weatherization, and alternative fuel programs during the last few years.

In their first effort upon taking control of Congress, the Republican majority cut energy efficiency programs by 26 percent. Over the past 5 years, the GOP has slashed funding for solar energy, renewable energy, and conservation programs by nearly $1.4 billion below the administration's request.

They have also inserted anti-environmental riders into critical funding bills at the 11th hour, hoping that these stealth efforts would not be discovered by the American people. If we look at the situation in Texas where Governor Bush is claiming to be helping the environment, we see that that State ranks first in air pollution in the Nation and third worst in water pollution from chemical dumping. Governor Bush has appointed industry representatives to State environmental agencies that had previously fought against environmental regulations.

□ 2100

And he also has underfunded the cleanup of Superfund sites and has pushed a strictly voluntary program for dirty power plants to reduce harmful emissions, even though Texas's deteriorating air quality has reached a crisis proportion.

While the rest of the world is taking practical steps to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and save money and energy, the Republican-controlled Congress is lagging behind by debating whether the science is real enough to take similar actions domestically.

Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate Earth Day this year, let us reflect on our responsibility for stewardship of our natural resources. I just hope the Republican leadership will stop trying to gut our environmental laws, and I hope all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will join me in working proactively to protect our environment now for the present and for future generations.

SUBMISSION OF AMENDED RULES OF PROCEDURE FOR THE COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS OF OFFICIAL CONDUCT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on April 12, 2000, in accordance with Rule 1(b) of its rules, the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct amended its rules as follows: (1) to conform the language of Rule 20(f) to the superseding language of Rule 22(a), the last sentence of Rule 20(f) was deleted, which sentence read "The Committee shall transmit such report to the House of Representatives"; (2) to conform the language of Rule 27(o) to the intention of that rule, the word "of" in the first sentence of Rule 27(o) was deleted and replaced by the word "or." The committee hereby publishes its amended rules in their entirety.

LAMAR SMITH,
Chairman.
HOWARD L. BERMAN,
Ranking Minority Member.

RULES: COMMITTEE ON STANDARDS OF OFFICIAL CONDUCT, ADOPTED JANUARY 20, 1999, AMENDED MARCH 10, 1999, AMENDED APRIL 14, 1999, AMENDED APRIL 12, 2000

FOREWORD

The Committee on Standards of Official Conduct is unique in the House of Representatives. Consistent with the duty to carry out its advisory and enforcement responsibilities in an impartial manner, the Committee is the only standing committee of the House of Representatives the membership of which is divided evenly by party. These rules are intended to provide a fair procedural framework for the conduct of the Committee's activities and to help insure that the Committee serves well the people of the United States, the House of Representatives, and the Members, officers, and employees of the House of Representatives.

PART I—GENERAL COMMITTEE RULES

Rule 1. General Provisions

(a) So far as applicable, these rules and the Rules of the House of Representatives shall be the rules of the Committee and any subcommittee. The Committee adopts these rules under the authority of clause 2(a)(1) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, 106th Congress.

(b) The rules of the Committee may be modified, amended, or repealed by a vote of a majority of the Committee.

(c) When the interests of justice so require, the Committee, by a majority vote of its members, may adopt any special procedures, not inconsistent with these rules, deemed necessary to resolve a particular matter before it. Copies of such special procedures shall be furnished to all parties in the matter.

Rule 2. Definitions

(a) ''Committee'' means the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct.

(b) ''Complaint'' means a written allegation of improper conduct against a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives filed with the Committee with the intent to initiate an inquiry.

(c) ''Inquiry'' means an investigation by an investigative subcommittee into allegations against a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives.

(d) ''Investigative Subcommittee'' means a subcommittee designated pursuant to Rule 8 to conduct an inquiry to determine if a Statement of Alleged Violation should be issued.

(e) ''Statement of Alleged Violation'' means a formal charging document filed by an investigative subcommittee with the Committee containing specific allegations against a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives of a violation of the Code of Official Conduct, or of a law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to the performance of official duties or the discharge of official responsibilities.

(f) ''Adjudicatory Subcommittee'' means a subcommittee of the Committee comprised of those Committee members not on the investigative subcommittee, that holds an adjudicatory hearing and determines whether the counts in a Statement of Alleged Violation are proved by clear and convincing evidence.

(g) ''Sanction Hearing'' means a Committee hearing to determine what sanction, if any, to adopt or to recommend to the House of Representatives.

(h) ''Respondent'' means a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives who is the subject of a complaint filed with the Committee or who is the subject of an inquiry or a Statement of Alleged Violation.

(i) ''Office of Advice and Education'' refers to the Office established by section 803(i) of the Ethics Reform Act of 1989. The Office handles inquiries; prepares written opinions in response to specific requests; develops general guidance; and organizes seminars, workshops, and briefings for the benefit of the House of Representatives.

Rule 3. Advisory Opinions and Waivers

(a) The Office of Advice and Education shall handle inquiries; prepare written opinions providing specific advice; develop general guidance; and organize seminars, workshops, and briefings for the benefit of the House of Representatives.

(b) Any Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives, may request a written opinion with respect to the propriety of any current or proposed conduct of such Member, officer, or employee.

(c) The Office of Advice and Education may provide information and guidance regarding laws, rules, regulations, and other standards of conduct applicable to Members, officers, and employees in the performance of their duties or the discharge of their responsibilities.

(d) In general, the Committee shall provide a written opinion to an individual only in response to a written request, and the written opinion shall address the conduct only of the inquiring individual, or of persons for whom the inquiring individual is responsible as employing authority.

(e) A written request for an opinion shall be addressed to the Chairman of the Committee and shall include a complete and accurate statement of the relevant facts. A request shall be signed by the requester or the requester's authorized representative or employing authority. A representative shall disclose to the Committee the identity of the principal on whose behalf advice is being sought.

(f) The Office of Advice and Education shall prepare for the Committee a response to each written request for an opinion from a Member, officer or employee. Each response shall discuss all applicable laws, rules, regulations, or other standards.

(g) Where a request is unclear or incomplete, the Office of Advice and Education may seek additional information from the requester.

(h) The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to take action on behalf of the Committee on any proposed written opinion that they determine does not require consideration by the Committee. If the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member requests a written opinion, or seeks a waiver, extension, or approval pursuant to Rules 3(l), 4(c), 4(e), or 4(h), the next ranking member of the requester's party is authorized to act in lieu of the requester.

(i) The Committee shall keep confidential any request for advice from a Member, officer, or employee, as well as any response thereto.

(j) The Committee may take no adverse action in regard to any conduct that has been undertaken in reliance on a written opinion if the conduct conforms to the specific facts addressed in the opinion.

(k) Information provided to the Committee by a Member, officer, or employee seeking advice regarding prospective conduct may not be used as the basis for initiating an investigation under clause 3(a)(2) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, if such Member, officer, or employee acts in good faith in accordance with the written advice of the Committee.

(l) A written request for a waiver of clause 5 of House Rule XXVI (the House gift rule), or for any other waiver or approval, shall be treated in all respects like any other request for a written opinion.

(m) A written request for a waiver of clause 5 of House Rule XXVI (the House gift rule) shall specify the nature of the waiver being sought and the specific circumstances justifying the waiver.

(n) An employee seeking a waiver of time limits applicable to travel paid for by a private source shall include with the request evidence that the employing authority is aware of the request. In any other instance where proposed employee conduct may reflect on the performance of official duties, the Committee may require that the requester submit evidence that the employing authority knows of the conduct.

Rule 4. Financial Disclosure

(a) In matters relating to Title I of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, the Committee shall coordinate with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, Legislative Resource Center, to assure that appropriate individuals are notified of their obligation to file Financial Disclosure Statements and that such individuals are provided in a timely fashion with filing instructions and forms developed by the Committee.

(b) The Committee shall coordinate with the Legislative Resource Center to assure that information that the Ethics in Government Act requires to be placed on the public record is made public.

(c) The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to grant on behalf of the committee requests of reasonable extensions of time for the filing of financial Disclosure Statements. Any such request must be received by the Committee no later than the date on which the statement in question is due. A request received after such date may be granted by the Committee only in extraordinary circumstances. Such extensions for one individual in a calendar year shall not exceed a total of 90 days. No extension shall be granted authorizing a non-incumbent candidate to file a statement later than 30 days prior to a primary or general election in which the candidate is participating.

(d) An individual who takes legally sufficient action to withdraw as a candidate before the date on which the individual's Financial Disclosure Statement is due under the Ethics in Government Act shall not be required to file a Statement. An individual shall not be excused from filing a Financial Disclosure Statement when withdrawal as a candidate occurs after the date on which such Statement was due.

(e) Any individual who files a report required to be filed under title I of the Ethics in Government Act more than 30 days after the later of—

(1) the date such report is required to be filed, or

(2) if a filing extension is granted to such individual, the last day of the filing extension period, is required by such Act to pay a late filing fee of $200. The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to approve requests that the fee be waived based on extraordinary circumstances.

(f) Any late report that is submitted without a required filing fee shall be deemed procedurally deficient and not properly filed.

(g) The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to approve requests for waivers of the aggregation and reporting of gifts as provided by section 102(a)(2)(C) of the Ethics in Government Act. If such a request is approved, both the incoming request and the Committee response shall be forwarded to the Legislative Resource Center for placement on the public record.

(h) The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member are authorized to approve blind trusts as qualifying under section 102(f)(3) of the Ethics in government Act. The correspondence relating to formal approval of a blind trust, the trust document, the list of assets transferred to the trust, and any other documents required by law to be made public, shall be forwarded to the trust, and any other documents required by law to be made public, shall be forwarded to the Legislative Resource Center For such propose.

(i) The Committee shall designate staff counsel who shall review financial Disclosure Statements and, based upon information contained therein, indicate in a form and manner prescribed by the Committee whether the Statement appears substantially accurate and complete and the filer appears to be in compliance with applicable laws and rules.

(j) Each financial Disclosure statement shall be reviewed within 60 days after the date of filing.

(k) If the reviewing counsel believes that addition is required because (1) the Statement appears not substantially accurate or complete, or (2) the filer may not be in compliance with applicable laws or rules, then the reporting individual shall be notified in writing of the additional information believed to be required, or of the law or rule with which the reporting individual does not appear to be in compliance. Such notice shall also state the time within which a response is to be submitted. Any such notice shall remain confidential.

(l) Within the time specified, including any extension granted in accordance with clause (c), a reporting infididual who concurs the committee's notification that the Statement is not complete, or that other action is required, shall submit the necessary information or take appropriate action. Any amendment may be in the form of a revised Financial Disclosure Statement is an explanatory letter addressed to the clerk of House of Representatives.

(m) Any amendment shall be placed on the public record in the same manner as other statements. The individual designated by the Committee to review the original Statement shall review any amendment thereto.

(n) Within the time specified, including any extension granted in accordance with clause (c), a reporting individual who does not agree with the Committee that the Statement is deficient or that other action is required, shall be provided an opportunity to respond orally or in writing. If the explanation is accepted, a copy of the response, if written, or a note summarizing an oral response, shall be retained in committee files with the original report.

(o) The Committee shall be the final arbiter of whether any Statement requires clarification or amendment.

(P) If the Committee determines, by vote of a majority of its members, that there is reason to believe that an individual has willfully failed to file a Statement or has willfully falsified or willfully failed to file information required to be reported, then the Committee shall refer the name of the individual, together with the evidence supporting its finding, to the Attorney General pursuant to section 104(b) of the Ethics in Government Act. Such referral shall not preclude the Committee from initiating such other action as may be authorized by other provisions of law or the Rules of the House of Representatives.

Rule 5. Meetings

(a) The regular meeting day of the Committee shall be the second Wednesday of each month, except when the House of Representatives is not meeting on that day. When the Committee Chairman determines that there is sufficient reason, a meeting may be called on additional days. A regular scheduled meeting need not be held when the Chairman determines there is not business to be considered.

(b) The Chairman shall establish the agenda for meetings of the Committee and the Ranking Minority Member may place additional items on the agenda.

(c) All meetings of the Committee or any subcommittee shall occur in executive session unless the Committee or subcommittee, by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members, opens the meeting or hearing to the public.

(d) Any hearing held by an adjudicatory subcommittee or any sanction hearing held by the Committee shall be open to the public unless the Committee or subcommittee, by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members, closes the hearing to the public.

(e) A subcommittee shall meet at the discretion of its Chairman.

(f) Insofar as practicable, notice for any Committee or subcommittee meeting shall be provided at least seven days in advance of the meeting. The Chairman of the Committee or subcommittee may waive such time period for good cause.

Rule 6. Committee Staff

(a) The staff is to be assembled and retained as a professional, nonpartisan staff.

(b) Each member of the staff shall be professional and demonstrably qualified for the position for which he is hired.

(c) The staff as a whole and each individual member of the staff shall perform all official duties in a nonpartisan manner.

(d) No member of the staff shall engage in any partisan political activity directly affecting any congressional or presidential election.

(c) No member of the staff or outside counsel may accept public speaking engagements or write for publication on any subject that is in any way related to his or her employment or duties with the Committee without specific prior approval from the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member.

(f) No member of the staff or outside counsel may make public, unless approved by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee, any information, document, or other material that is confidential, derived from executive session, or classified and that is obtained during the course of employment with the Committee.

(g) All staff members shall be appointed by an affirmative vote of majority of the members of the Committee. Such vote shall occur at the first meeting of the membership of the Committee during each Congress and as necessary during the Congress.

(h) Subject to the approval of the Committee on House Administration, the Committee may retain counsel not employed by the House of Representatives whenever the Committee determines, by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee, that the retention of outside counsel is necessary and appropriate.

(i) If the Committee determines that it is necessary to retain staff members for the purpose of a particular investigation or other proceeding, then such staff shall be retained only for the duration of that particular investigation or proceeding.

(j) Outside counsel may be dismissed prior to the end of a contract between the Committee and such counsel only by a majority vote of the members of the Committee.

(k) In addition to any other staff provided for by law, rule, or other authority, with respect to the Committee, the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member each may appoint one individual as a shared staff member from his or her personal staff to perform service for the Committee. Such shared staff may assist the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member on any subcommittee on which he serves. Only paragraphs (c), (e), and (f) shall apply to shared staff.

Rule 7. Confidentiality Oaths

Before any member or employee of the Committee may have access to information that is confidential under the rules of the Committee, the following oath (or affirmation) shall be executed in writing:

''I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will not disclose, to any person or entity outside the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, any information received in the course of my service with the Committee, except as authorized by the Committee or in accordance with its rules.''

Copies of the executed oath shall be provided to the Clerk of the House as part of the records of the House. Breaches of confidentiality shall be investigated by the Committee and appropriate action shall be taken.

Rule 8. Subcommittees—General Policy and Structure

(a) Upon an affirmative vote of a majority of its members to initiate an inquiry, the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee shall designate four members (with equal representation from the majority and minority parties) to serve as an investigative subcommittee to undertake an inquiry. At the time of appointment, the Chairman shall designate one member of the subcommittee to serve as the chairman and the Ranking Minority Member shall designate one member of the subcommittee to serve as the ranking minority member of the investigative subcommittee or adjudicatory subcommittee. The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee may serve as members of an investigative subcommittee, but may not serve as non-voting, ex-officio members.

(b) If an investigative subcommittee, by a majority vote of its members, adopts a Statement of Alleged Violation, members who did not serve on the investigative subcommittee are eligible for appointment to the adjudicatory subcommittee to hold an Adjudicatory Hearing under Committee Rule 24 on the violations alleged in the Statement.

(c) The Committee may establish other noninvestigative and nonadjudicatory subcommittees and may assign to them such functions as it may deem appropriate. The membership of each subcommittee shall provide equal representation for the majority and minority parties.

(d) The Chairman may refer any bill, resolution, or other matter before the Committee to an appropriate subcommittee for consideration. Any such bill, resolution, or other matter may be discharged from the subcommittee to which it was referred by a majority vote of the Committee.

(e) Any member of the Committee may sit with any noninvestigative or nonadjudicatory subcommittee, but only regular members of such subcommittee may vote on any matter before that subcommittee.

Rule 9. Quorums and Member Disqualification

(a) The quorum for an investigative subcommittee to take testimony and to receive evidence shall be two members, unless otherwise authorized by the House of Representatives.

(b) The quorum for an adjudicatory subcommittee to take testimony, receive evidence, or conduct business shall consist of a majority plus one of the members of the adjudicatory subcommittee.

(c) Except as stated in clauses (a) and (b) of this rule, a quorum for the purpose of conducting business consists of a majority of the members of the Committee or subcommittee.

(d) A member of the Committee shall be ineligible to participate in any Committee or subcommittee proceeding in which he is the respondent.

(e) A member of the Committee may disqualify himself from participating in any investigation of the conduct of a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives upon the submission in writing and under oath of an affidavit of disqualification stating that the member cannot render an impartial and unbiased decision. If the Committee approves and accepts such affidavit of disqualification, or if a member is disqualified pursuant to Rule 18(g) or Rule 24(a), the Chairman shall so notify the Speaker and ask the Speaker to designate a Member of the House of Representatives from the same political party as the disqualified member of the Committee to act as a member of the Committee in any Committee proceeding relating to such investigation.

Rule 10. Vote Requirements

(a) The following actions shall be taken only upon an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee or subcommittee, as appropriate:

(1) Issuing a subpoena.

(2) Adopting a full Committee motion to create an investigative subcommittee.

(3) Adoption of a Statement of Alleged Violation.

(4) Finding that a count in a Statement of Alleged Violation has been proved by clear and convincing evidence.

(5) Sending a letter of reproval.

(6) Adoption of a recommendation to the House of Representatives that a sanction be imposed.

(7) Adoption of a report relating to the conduct of a Member, officer, or employee.

(8) Issuance of an advisory opinion of general applicability establishing new policy.

(b) Except as stated in clause (a), action may be taken by the Committee or any subcommittee thereof by a simple majority, a quorum being present.

(c) No motion made to take any of the actions enumerated in clause (a) of this Rule may be entertained by the Chair unless a quorum of the Committee is present when such motion is made.

Rule 11. Communications by Committee Members and Staff

Commmittee members and staff shall not disclose any evidence relating to an investigation to any person or organization outside the Committee unless authorized by the Committee. The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member shall have access to such information that they request as necessary to conduct Committee business. Evidence in the possession of an investigative subcommittee shall not be disclosed to other Committee members except by a vote of the subcommittee.

Rule 12. Committee Records

(a) The Committee may establish procedures necessary to prevent the unauthorized disclosure of any testimony or other information received by the Committee or its staff.

(b) Members and staff of the Committee shall not disclose to any person or organization outside the Committee, unless authorized by the Committee, any information regarding the Committee's or a subcommittee's investigative, adjudicatory or other proceedings, including, but not limited to: (i) the fact of or nature of any complaints; (ii) executive session proceedings; (iii) information pertaining to or copies of any Committee or subcommittee report, study, or other document which purports to express the views, findings, conclusions, or recommendations of the Committee or subcommittee in connection with any of its activities or proceedings; or (iv) any other information or allegation respecting the conduct of a Member, officer, or employee.

(c) The Committee shall not disclose to any person or organization outside the Committee any information concerning the conduct of a respondent until it has transmitted a Statement of Alleged Violation to such respondent and the respondent has been given full opportunity to respond pursuant to Rule 23. The Statement of Alleged Violation and any written response thereto shall be made public at the first meeting or hearing on the matter that is open to the public after such opportunity has been provided. Any other materials in the possession of the Committee regarding such statement may be made public as authorized by the Committee to the extent consistent with the Rules of the House of Representatives.

(d) If no public hearing or meeting is held on the matter, the Statement of Alleged Violation and any written response thereto shall be included in the Committee's final report on the matter to the House of Representatives.

(e) All communications and all pleadings pursuant to these rules shall be filed with the Committee at the Committee's office or such other place as designated by the Committee.

(f) All records of the Committee which have been delivered to the Archivist of the United States shall be made available to the public in accordance with Rule VII of the Rules of the House of Representatives.

Rule 13. Broadcasts of Committee and Subcommittee Proceedings

(a) Television or radio coverage of a Committee or subcommittee hearing or meeting shall be without commercial sponsorship.

(b) No witness shall be required against his or her will to be photographed or otherwise to have a graphic reproduction of his or her image made at any hearing or to give evidence or testimony while the broadcasting of that hearing, by radio or television, is being conducted. At the request of any witness, all media microphones shall be turned off, all television and camera lenses shall be covered, and the making of a graphic reproduction at the hearing shall not be permitted. This paragraph supplements clause 2(k)(5) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives relating to the protection of the rights of witnesses.

(c) Not more than four television cameras, operating from fixed positions, shall be permitted in a hearing or meeting room. The Committee may allocate the positions of permitted television cameras among the television media in consultation with the Executive Committee of the Radio and Television Correspondents' Galleries.

(d) Television cameras shall be placed so as not to obstruct in any way the space between any witness giving evidence or testimony and any member of the Committee, or the visibility of that witness and that member to each other.

(e) Television cameras shall not be placed in positions that unnecessarily obstruct the coverage of the hearing or meeting by the other media.

PART II—INVESTIGATIVE AUTHORITY

Rule 14. House Resolution

Whenever the House of Representatives, by resolution, authorizes or directs the Committee to undertake an inquiry or investigation, the provisions of the resolution, in conjunction with these Rules, shall govern. To the extent the provisions of the resolution differ from these Rules, the resolution shall control.

Rule 15. Committee Authority to Investigate—General Policy

Pursuant to clause 3(b)(2) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee may exercise its investigative authority when—

(a) information offered as a complaint by a Member of the House of Representatives is transmitted directly to the Committee;

(b) information offered as a complaint by an individual not a Member of the House is transmitted to the Committee, provided that a Member of the House certifies in writing that he or she believes the information is submitted in good faith and warrants the review and consideration of the Committee;

(c) the Committee, on its own initiative, establishes an investigative subcommittee;

(d) a Member, officer, or employee is convicted in a Federal, State, or local court of a felony; or

(e) the House of Representatives, by resolution, authorizes or directs the Committee to undertake an inquiry or investigation.

Rule 16. Complaints

(a) A complaint submitted to the Committee shall be in writing, dated, and properly verified (a document will be considered properly verified where a notary executes it with the language, ''Signed and sworn to (or affirmed) before me on (date) by (the name of the person)'' setting forth in simple, concise, and direct statements—

(1) the name and legal address of the party filing the complaint (hereinafter referred to as the ''complainant'');

(2) the name and position or title of the respondent;

(3) the nature of the alleged violation of the Code of Official Conduct or of other law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to the performance of duties or discharge of responsibilities; and

(4) the facts alleged to give rise to the violation. The complaint shall not contain innuendo, speculative assertions, or conclusory statements.

(b) Any documents in the possession of the complainant that relate to the allegations may be submitted with the complaint.

(c) Information offered as a complaint by a Member of the House of Representatives may be transmitted directly to the Committee.

(d) Information offered as a complaint by an individual not a Member of the House may be transmitted to the Committee, provided that a Member of the House certifies in writing that he or she believes the information is submitted in good faith and warrants the review and consideration of the Committee.

(e) A complaint must be accompanied by a certification, which may be unsworn, that the complainant has provided an exact copy of the filed complaint and all attachments to the respondent.

(f) The Committee may defer action on a complaint against a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives when the complaint alleges conduct that the Committee has reason to believe is being reviewed by appropriate law enforcement or regulatory authorities, or when the Committee determines that it is appropriate for the conduct alleged in the complaint to be reviewed initially by law enforcement or regulatory authorities.

(g) A complaint may not be amended without leave of the Committee. Otherwise, any new allegations of improper conduct must be submitted in a new complaint that independently meets the procedural requirements of the Rules of the House of Representatives and the Committee's Rules.

(h) The Committee shall not accept, and shall return to the complainant, any complaint submitted within the 60 days prior to an election in which the subject of the complaint is a candidate.

(i) The Committee shall not consider a complaint, nor shall any investigation be undertaken by the Committee of any alleged violation which occurred before the third previous Congress unless the Committee determines that the alleged violation is directly related to an alleged violation which occurred in a more recent Congress.

Rule 17. Duties of Committee Chairman and Ranking Minority Member

(a) Unless otherwise determined by a vote of the Committee, only the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member, after consultation with each other, may make public statements regarding matters before the Committee or any subcommittee.

(b) Whenever information offered as a complaint is submitted to the Committee, the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member shall have 14 calendar days or 5 legislative days, whichever occurs first, to determine whether the information meets the requirements of the Committee's rules for what constitutes a complaint.

(c) Whenever the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member jointly determine that information submitted to the Committee meets the requirements of the Committee's rules for what constitutes a complaint, they shall have 45 calendar days or 5 legislative days, whichever is later, after the date that the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member determine that information filed meets the requirements of the Committee's rules for what constitutes a complaint, unless the Committee by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members votes otherwise, to—

(1) recommend to the Committee that it dispose of the complaint, or any portion thereof, in any manner that does not require action by the House, which may include dismissal of the complaint or resolution of the complaint by a letter to the Member, officer, or employee of the House against whom the complaint is made;

(2) establish an investigative subcommittee; or

(3) request that the Committee extend the applicable 45-calendar day period when they determine more time is necessary in order to make a recommendation under paragraph (1).

(d) The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member may jointly gather additional information concerning alleged conduct which is the basis of a complaint or of information offered as a complaint until they have established an investigative subcommittee or the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member has placed on the agenda the issue of whether to establish an investigative subcommittee.

(e) If the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member jointly determine that information submitted to the Committee meets the requirements of the Committee rules for what constitutes a complaint, and the complaint is not disposed of within 45 calendar days or 5 legislative days, whichever is later, and no additional 45-day extension is made, then they shall establish an investigative subcommittee and forward the complaint, or any portion thereof, to the subcommittee for its consideration. If at any time during the time period either the Chairman or Ranking Minority Member places on the agenda the issue of whether to establish an investigative subcommittee, then an investigative subcommittee may be established only by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee.

(f) Whenever the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member jointly determine that information submitted to the Committee does not meet the requirements for what constitutes a complaint set forth in the Committee rules, they may (1) return the information to the complainant with a statement that it fails to meet the requirements for what constitutes a complaint set forth in the Committee's rules; or (2) recommend to the Committee that it authorize the establishment of an investigative subcommittee.

Rule 18. Processing of Complaints

(a) If a complaint is in compliance with House and Committee Rules, a copy of the complaint and the Committee Rules shall be forwarded to the respondent within five days with notice that the complaint conforms to the applicable rules and will be placed on the Committee's agenda.

(b) The respondent may, within 30 days of the Committee's notification, provide to the Committee any information relevant to a complaint filed with the Committee. The respondent may submit a written statement in response to the complaint. Such a statement shall be signed by the respondent. If the state is prepared by counsel for the respondent, the respondent shall sign a representation that he/she has reviewed the response and agrees with the factual assertions contained therein.

(c) The Committee staff may requests information from the respondent or obtain additional information pertinent to the case from other sources prior to the establishment of an investigative subcommittee only when so directed by the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member.

(d) At the first meeting the Committee following the procedures or actions specified in clauses (a) and (b), the Committee shall consider the complaint.

(e) The Committee, by a majority vote of its members, may create an investigative subcommittee. If an investigative subcommittee is established, the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member shall designate four members to serve as an investigative subcommittee in accordance with Rule 20.

(f) The respondent shall be notified in writing regarding the Committee's decision either to dismiss the complaint or to create an investigative subcommittee.

(g) The respondent shall be notified of the membership of the investigative subcommittee and shall have ten days after such notice is transmitted to object to the participation of any subcommittee member. Such objection shall be in writing and shall be on the grounds that the subcommittee member cannot render an impartial and unbiased decision. The subcommittee member against whom the objection is made shall be the sole judge of his or her disqualification.

Rule 19. Committee-Initiated Inquiry

(a) Notwithstanding the absence of a filed complaint, the Committee may consider any information in its possession indicating that a Member, officer, or employee may have committed a violation of the Code of Official Conduct or any law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to the conduct of such Member, officer, or employee in the performance of his or her duties or the discharge of his or her responsibilities. The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member may jointly gather additional information concerning such an alleged violation by a Member, officer, or employee unless and until an investigative subcommittee has been established.

(b) If the Committee votes to establish an investigative subcommittee, the Committee shall proceed in accordance with Rule 20.

(c) Any written request by a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives that the Committee conduct an inquiry into such person's own conduct shall be process in accordance with subsection (a) of this Rule.

(d) An inquiry shall not be undertaken regarding any alleged violation that occurred before the third previous Congress unless a majority of the Committee determines that the alleged violation is directly related to an alleged violation that occurred in a more recent Congress.

(e) An inquiry shall be undertaken by an investigative subcommittee with regard to any felony conviction of a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives in a Federal, state, or local court. Notwithstanding this provision, an inquiry may be initiated at any time prior to sentencing.

Rule 20. Investigative Subcommittee

(a) In an inquiry undertaken by an investigative subcommittee—

(1) All proceedings, including the taking of testimony, shall be conducted in executive session and all testimony taken by disposition or things produced pursuant to subpoena or otherwise shall be deemed to have been taken or produced in executive session.

(2) The Chairman of the investigative subcommittee shall ask the respondent and all witnesses whether they intend to be represented by counsel. If so, the respondent or witnesses or their legal representatives shall provide written designation of counsel. A respondent or witness who is represented by counsel shall not be questioned in the absence of counsel unless an explicit waiver is obtained.

(3) The subcommittee shall provide the respondent an opportunity to present, orally or in writing, a statement, which must be under oath or affirmation, regarding the allegations and any other relevant questions arising out of the inquiry.

(4) The staff may interview witnesses, examine documents and other evidence, and request that submitted statements be under oath or affirmation and that documents be certified as to their authenticity and accuracy.

(5) The subcommittee, by a majority vote of its members, may require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, documents, and other items as it deems necessary to the conduct of the inquiry. Unless the Committee otherwise provides, the subpoena power shall rest in the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee and subpoena shall be issued upon the request of the investigative subcommittee.

(6) The subcommittee shall require that testimony be given under oath or affirmation. The form of the oath or affirmation shall be: ''Do you solemnly swear (or affirm) that the testimony you will give before this subcommittee in the matter now under consideration will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth (so help you God)?'' The oath or affirmation shall be administered by the Chairman or subcommittee member designated by the Chairman to administer oaths.

(b) During the inquiry, the procedure respecting the admissibility of evidence and rulings shall be as follows:

(1) Any relevant evidence shall be admissible unless the evidence is privileged under the precedents of the House of Representatives.

(2) The Chairman of the subcommittee or other presiding member at any investigative subcommittee proceeding shall rule upon any question of admissibility or pertinency of evidence, motion, procedure or any other matter, and may direct any witness to answer any question under penalty of contempt. A witness, witness's counsel, or a member of the subcommittee may appeal any evidentiary rulings to the members present at that proceeding. The majority vote of the members present at such proceedings on such appeal shall govern the question of admissibility, and no appeal shall lie to the Committee.

(3) Whenever a person is determined by a majority vote to be in contempt of the subcommittee, the matter may be referred to the Committee to determine whether to refer the matter to the House of Representatives for consideration.

(4) Committee counsel may, subject to subcommittee approval, enter into stipulations with the respondent and/or the respondent's counsel as to facts that are not in dispute.

(c) Upon an affirmative vote of a majority of the subcommittee members, and an affirmative vote of a majority of the full Committee, an investigative subcommittee may expand the scope of its investigation.

(d) Upon completion of the investigation, the staff shall draft for the investigative subcommittee a report that shall contain a comprehensive summary of the information received regarding the alleged violations.

(e) Upon completion of the inquiry, an investigative subcommittee, by a majority vote of its members, may adopt a Statement of Alleged Violation if it determines that there is substantial reason to believe that a violation of the Code of Official Conduct, or of a law, rule, regulation, or other standard of conduct applicable to the performance of official duties or the discharge of official responsibilities by a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives has occurred. If more than one violation is alleged, such Statement shall be divided into separate counts. Each count shall relate to a separate violation, shall contain a plain and concise statement of the alleged facts of such violation, and shall include a reference to the provision of the Code of Official Conduct or law, rule, regulation or other applicable standard of conduct governing the performance of duties or disharge of responsibilities alleged to have been violated. A copy of such Statement shall be transmitted to the respondent and the respondent's counsel.

(f) If the investigative subcommittee does not adopt a Statement of Alleged Violation, it shall transmit to the Committee a report containing a summary of the information received in the inquiry, its conclusions and reasons therefor, and any appropriate recommendation.

Rule 21. Amendments of Statements of Alleged Violation

(a) An investigative subcommittee may, upon an affirmative vote of a majority of its members, amend its Statement of Alleged Violation anytime before the Statement of Alleged Violation is transmitted to the Committee; and

(b) If an investigative subcommittee amends its Statement of Alleged Violation, the respondent shall be notified in writing and shall have 30 calendar days from the date of that notification to file an answer to the amended Statement of Alleged Violation.

Rule 22. Committee Reporting Requirements

(a) Whenever an investigative subcommittee does not adopt a Statement of Alleged Violation and transmits a report to that effect to the Committee, the Committee may by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members transmit such report to the House of Representatives;

(b) Whenever an investigative subcommittee adopts a Statement of Alleged Violation but recommends that no further action be taken, it shall transmit a report to the Committee regarding the Statement of Alleged Violation; and

(c) Whenever an investigative subcommittee adopts a Statement of Alleged Violation, the respondent admits to the violations set forth in such Statement, the respondent wavies his or her right to an adjudicatory hearing, and the respondent's waiver is approved by the Committee—

(1) the subcommittee shall prepare a report for transmittal to the Committee, a final draft of which shall be provided to the respondent not less than 15 calendar days before the subcommittee votes on whether to adopt the report;

(2) the respondent may submit views in writing regarding the final draft to the subcommittee within 7 calendar days of receipt of that draft;

(3) the subcommittee shall transmit a report to the Committee regarding the Statement of Alleged Violation together with any views submitted by the respondent pursuant to subparagraph (2), and the Committee shall make the report, together with the respondent's views, available to the public before the commencement of any sanction hearing; and

(4) the Committee shall by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members issue a report and transmit such report to the House of Representatives, together with the respondent's views previously submitted pursuant to subparagraph (2) and any additional views respondent may submit for attachment to the final report; and

(d) Members of the Committee shall have not less than 72 hours to review any report transmitted to the Committee by an investigative subcommittee before both the commencement of a sanction hearing and the Committee vote on whether to adopt the report.

Rule 23. Respondent's Answer

(a)(1) Within 30 days from the date of transmittal of a Statement of Alleged Violation, the respondent shall file with the investigative subcommittee an answer, in writing and under oath, signed by respondent and respondent's counsel. Failure to file an answer within the time prescribed shall be considered by the Committee as a denial of each count.

(2) The answer shall contain an admission to or denial of each count set forth in the Statement of Alleged Violation and may include negative, affirmative, or alternative defenses and any supporting evidence or other relevant information.

(b) The respondent may file a Motion for a Bill of Particulars within 10 days of the date of transmittal of the Statement of Alleged Violation. If a Motion for a Bill of Particulars is filed, the respondent shall not be required to file an answer until 20 days after the subcommittee has replied to such motion.

(c)(1) The respondent may file a Motion to Dismiss within 10 days of the date of transmittal of the Statement of Alleged Violation or, if a Motion for a Bill of Particulars has been filed, within 10 days of the date of the subcommittee's reply to the Motion for a Bill of Particulars. If a Motion to Dismiss is filed, the respondent shall not be required to file an answer until 20 days after the subcommittee has replied to the Motion to Dismiss, unless the respondent previously filed a Motion for a Bill of Particulars, in which case the respondent shall not be required to file an answer until 10 days after the subcommittee has replied to the Motion to Dismiss. The investigative subcommittee shall rule upon any motion to dismiss filed during the period between the establishment of the subcommittee and the subcommittee's transmittal of a report to the Committee pursuant to Rule 20 or Rule 22, and no appeal of the subcommittee's ruling shall lie to the Committee.

(2) A Motion to Dismiss may be made on the grounds that the Statement of Alleged Violation fails to state facts that constitute a violation of the Code of Official Conduct or other applicable law, rule, regulation, or standard of conduct, or on the grounds that the Committee lacks jurisdiction to consider the allegations contained in the Statement.

(d) Any motion filed with the subcommittee pursuant to this rule shall be accompanied by a Memorandum of Points and Authorities.

(e)(1) The Chairman of the investigative subcommittee, for good cause shown, may permit the respondent to file an answer or motion after the day prescribed above.

(2) If the ability of the respondent to present an adequate defense is not adversely affected and special circumstances so require, the Chairman of the investigative subcommittee may direct the respondent to file an answer or motion prior to the day prescribed above.

(f) If the day on which any answer, motion, reply, or other pleading must be filed falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday, such filing shall be made on the first business day thereafter.

(g) As soon as practicable after an answer has been filed or the time for such filing has expired, the Statement of Alleged Violation and any answer, motion, reply, or other pleading connected therewith shall be transmitted by the Chairman of the investigative subcommittee to the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee.

Rule 24. Adjudicatory Hearings

(a) If a Statement of Alleged Violation is transmitted to the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member pursuant to Rule 23, and no waiver pursuant to Rule 27(b) has occurred, the Chairman shall designate the members of the Committee who did not serve on the investigative subcommittee to serve on an adjudicatory subcommittee. The Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the Committee shall be the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the adjudicatory subcommittee unless they served on the investigative subcommittee. The respondent shall be notified of the designation of the adjudicatory subcommittee and shall have ten days after such notice is transmitted to object to the participation of any subcommittee member. Such objection shall be in writing and shall be on the grounds that the member cannot render an impartial and unbiased decision. The member against whom the objection is made shall be the sole judge of his or her disqualification.

(b) A majority of the adjudicatory subcommittee membership plus one must be present at all times for the conduct of any business pursuant to this rule.

(c) The adjudicatory subcommittee shall hold a hearing to determine whether any counts in the Statement of Alleged Violation have been proved by clear and convincing evidence and shall make findings of fact, except where such violations have been admitted by respondent.

(d) At an adjudicatory hearing, the subcommittee may require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, documents, and other items as it deems necessary. Depositions, interrogatories, and sworn statements taken under any investigative subcommittee direction may be acceptable into the hearing record.

(e) The procedures set forth in clause 2 (g) and (k) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives shall apply to adjudicatory hearings. All such hearings shall be open to the public unless the adjudicatory subcommittee, pursuant to such clause, determined that the hearings or any part thereof should be closed.

(f)(1) The adjudicatory subcommittee shall, in writing, notify the respondent that the respondent and his or her counsel have the right to inspect, review, copy, or photograph books, papers, documents, photographs, or other tangible objects that the adjudicatory subcommittee counsel intends to use as evidence against the respondent in an adjudicatory hearing. The respondent shall be given access to such evidence, and shall be provided the names of witnesses the subcommittee counsel intends to call, and a summary of their expected testimony, no less than 15 calendar days prior to any such hearing. Except in extraordinary circumstances, no evidence may be introduced or witness called in an adjudicatory hearing unless the respondent has been afforded a prior opportunity to review such evidence or has been provided the name of the witness.

(2) After a witness has testified on direct examination at an adjudicatory hearing, the Committee, at the request of the respondent, shall make available to the respondent any statement of the witness in the possession of the Committee which related to the subject matter as to which the witness has testified.

(3) Any other testimony, statement, or documentary evidence in the possession of the Committee which is material to the respondent's defense shall, upon request, be made available to the respondent.

(g) No less than five days prior to the hearing, the respondent or counsel shall provide the adjudicatory subcommittee with the names of witnesses expected to be called, summaries of their expected testimony, and copies of any documents or other evidence proposed to be introduced.

(h) The respondent or counsel may apply to the subcommittee for the issuance of subpoenas for the appearance of witnesses or the production of evidence. The application shall be granted upon a showing by the respondent that the proposed testimony or evidence is relevant and not otherwise available to respondent. The application may be denied if not made at a reasonable time or if the testimony or evidence would be merely cumulative.

(i) During the hearing, the procedures regarding the admissibility of evidence and rulings shall be as follows:

(1) Any relevant evidence shall be admissible unless the evidence is privileged under the precedents of the House of Representatives.

(2) The chairman of the subcommittee or another presiding member at an adjudicatory subcommittee hearing shall rule upon any question of admissibility or pertinency of evidence, motion, procedure, or any other matter, and may direct any witness to answer any question under penalty of contempt. A witness, witness's counsel, or a member of the subcommittee may appeal any evidentiary ruling to the members present at such proceeding on such an appeal shall govern the question of admissibility and no appeal shall lie to the Committee.

(3) Whenever a witness is deemed by a Chairman or other presiding member to be in contempt of the subcommittee, the matter may be referred to the Committee to determine whether to refer the matter to the House of Representatives for consideration.

(4) Committee counsel may, subject to subcommittee approval, enter into stipulations with the respondent and/or the respondent's counsel as to facts that are not in dispute.

(j) Unless otherwise provided, the order of an adjudicatory hearing shall be an follows:

(1) The Chairman of the subcommittee shall open the hearing by stating the adjudicatory subcommittee's authority to conduct the hearing and the purpose of the hearing.

(2) The Chairman shall then recognize Committee counsel and the respondent's counsel, in turn, for the purpose of giving opening statements.

(3) Testimony from witnesses and other pertinent evidence shall be received in the following order whenever possible:

(i) witnesses (deposition transcripts and affidavits obtained during the inquiry may be used in lieu of live witnesses if the witness is unavailable) and other evidence offered by the Committee counsel,

(ii) witnesses and other evidence offered by the respondent,

(iii) rebuttal witnesses, as permitted by the Chairman.

(4) Witnesses at a hearing shall be examined first by counsel calling such witness. The opposing counsel may then cross-examine the witness. Redirect examination and recross examination may be permitted at the Chairman's discretion. Subcommittee members may then question witnesses. Unless otherwise directed by the Chairman, such questions shall be conducted under the five-minute rule.

(k) A subpoena to a witness to appear at a hearing shall be served sufficiently in advance of that witness' scheduled appearance to allow the witness a reasonable period of time, as determined by the Chairman of the adjudicatory subcommittee, to prepare for the hearing and to employ counsel.

(l) Each witness appearing before the subcommittee shall be furnished a printed copy of the Committee rules, the pertinent provisions of the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to the rights of witnesses, and a copy of the Statement of Alleged Violation.

(m) Testimony of all witnesses shall be taken under oath or affirmation. The form of the oath or affirmation shall be: ''Do you solemnly swear (or affirm) that the testimony you will give before this subcommittee in the matter now under consideration will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth (so help you God)?'' The oath or affirmation shall be administered by the Chairman or Committee member designated by the Chairman to administer oaths.

(n) At an adjudicatory hearing, the burden of proof rests on Committee counsel to establish the facts alleged in the Statement of Alleged Violation by clear and convincing evidence. However, Committee counsel need not present any evidence regarding any count that is admitted by the respondent or any fact stipulated.

(o) As soon as practicable after all testimony and evidence have been presented, the subcommittee shall consider each count contained in the Statement of Alleged Violation and shall determine by a majority vote of its members whether each count has been proved. If a majority of the subcommittee does not vote that a count has been proved, a motion to reconsider that vote may be made only by a member who voted that the count was not proved. A count that is not proved shall be considered as dismissed by the subcommittee.

(p) The findings of the adjudicatory subcommittee shall be reported to the Committee.

Rule 25. Sanction Hearing and Consideration of Sanctions or Other Recommendations

(a) If no count in a Statement of Alleged Violation is proved, the Committee shall prepare a report to the House of Representatives, based upon the report of the adjudicatory subcommittee.

(b) If an adjudicatory subcommittee completes an adjudicatory hearing pursuant to Rule 24 and reports that any count of the Statement of Alleged Violation has been proved, a hearing before the Committee shall be held to receive oral and/or written submissions by counsel for the Committee and counsel for the respondent as to the sanction the Committee should recommend to the House of Representatives with respect to such violations. Testimony by witnesses shall not be heard except by written request and vote of a majority of the Committee.

(c) Upon completion of any proceeding held pursuant to clause (b), the Committee shall consider and vote on a motion to recommend to the House of Representatives that the House take disciplinary action. If a majority of the Committee does not vote in favor of the recommendation that the House of Representatives take action, a motion to reconsider that vote may be made only by a member who voted against the recommendation. The Committee may also, by majority vote, adopt a motion to issue a Letter of Reproval or take other appropriate Committee action.

(d) If the Committee determines a Letter of Reproval constitutes sufficient action, the Committee shall include any such letter as a part of its report to the House of Representatives.

(e) With respect to any proved counts against a Member of the House of Representatives, the Committee may recommend to the House one or more of the following sanctions:

(1) Expulsion from the House of Representatives.

(2) Censure.

(3) Reprimand.

(4) Fine.

(5) Denial or limitation of any right, power, privilege, or immunity of the Member if under the Constitution the House of Representatives may impose such denial or limitation.

(6) Any other sanction determined by the Committee to be appropriate.

(f) With respect to any proved counts against an officer or employee of the House of Representatives, the Committee may recommend to the House one or more of the following sanctions:

(1) Dismissal from employment.

(2) Reprimand.

(3) Fine.

(4) Any other sanction determined by the Committee to be appropriate.

(g) With respect to the sanctions that the Committee may recommend, reprimand is appropriate for serious violations, censure is appropriate for more serious violations, and expulsion of a Member or dismissal of an officer or employee is appropriate for the most serious violations. A recommendation of a fine is appropriate in a case in which it is likely that the violation was committed to secure a personal financial benefit; and a recommendation of a denial or limitation of a right, power, privilege, or immunity of a Member is appropriate when the violation bears upon the exercise or holding of such right, power, privilege, or immunity. This clause sets forth general guidelines and does not limit the authority of the Committee to recommend other sanctions.

(h) The Committee report shall contain an appropriate statement of the evidence supporting the Committee's findings and a statement of the Committee's reasons for the recommended sanction.

Rule 26. Disclosure of Exculpatory Information to Respondent

If the Committee, or any investigative or adjudicatory subcommittee at any time receives any exculpatory information respecting a Complaint or Statement of Alleged Violation concerning a Member, officer, or employee of the House of Representatives, it shall make such information known and available to the Member, officer, or employee as soon as practicable, but in no event later than the transmittal of evidence supporting a proposed Statement of Alleged Violation pursuant to Rule 27(c). If an investigative subcommittee does not adopt a Statement of Alleged Violation, it shall identify any exculpatory information in its possession at the conclusion of its inquiry and shall include such information, if any, in the subcommittee's final report to the Committee regarding its inquiry. For purposes of this rule, exculpatory evidence shall be any evidence or information that is substantially favorable to the respondent with respect to the allegations or charges before an investigative or adjudicatory subcommittee.

Rule 27. Rights of Respondents and Witnesses

(a) A respondent shall be informed of the right to be represented by counsel, to be provided at his or her own expense.

(b) A respondent may seek to waive any procedural rights or steps in the disciplinary process. A request for waiver must be in writing, signed by the respondent, and must detail what procedural steps the respondent seeks to waive. Any such request shall be subject to the acceptance of the Committee or subcommittee, as appropriate.

(c) Not less than 10 calendar days before a scheduled vote by an investigative subcommittee on a Statement of Alleged Violation, the subcommittee shall provide the respondent with a copy of the Statement of Alleged Violation it intends to adopt together with all evidence it intends to use to prove those charges which it intends to adopt, including documentary evidence, witness testimony, memoranda of witness interviews, and physical evidence, unless the subcommittee by an affirmative vote of a majority of its members decides to withhold certain evidence in order to protect a witness, but if such evidence is withheld, the subcommittee shall inform the respondent that evidence is being withheld and of the count to which such evidence relates.

(d) Neither the respondent nor his counsel shall, directly or indirectly, contact the subcommittee or any member thereof during the period of time set forth in paragraph (c) except for the sole purpose of settlement discussions where counsels for the respondent and the subcommittee are present.

(e) If, at any time after the issuance of a Statement of Alleged Violation, the Committee or any subcommittee thereof determines that it intends to use evidence not provided to a respondent under paragraph (c) to prove the charges contained in the Statement of Alleged Violation (or any amendment thereof), such evidence shall be made immediately available to the respondent, and it may be used in any further proceeding under the Committee's rules.

(f) Evidence provided pursuant to paragraph (c) or (e) shall be made available to the respondent and his or her counsel only after each agrees, in writing, that no document, information, or other materials obtained pursuant to that paragraph shall be made public until—

(1) such time as a Statement of Alleged Violation is made public by the Committee if the respondent has waived the adjudicatory hearing; or

(2) the commencement of an adjudicatory hearing if the respondent has not waived an adjudicatory hearing; but the failure of respondent and his counsel to so agree in writing, and therefore not receive the evidence, shall not preclude the issuance of a Statement of Alleged Violation at the end of the period referenced to in (c).

(g) A respondent shall receive written notice whenever—

(1) the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member determine that information the Committee has received constitutes a complaint;

(2) a complaint or allegation is transmitted to an investigative subcommittee;

(3) that subcommittee votes to authorize its first subpoena or to take testimony under oath, whichever occurs first; and

(4) the Committee votes to expand the scope of the inquiry of an investigative subcommittee.

(h) Whenever an investigative subcommittee adopts a Statement of Alleged Violation and a respondent enters into an agreement with that subcommittee to settle a complaint on which the Statement is based, that agreement, unless the respondent requests otherwise, shall be in writing and signed by the respondent and the respondent's counsel, the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member of the subcommittee, and the outside counsel, if any.

(i) Statement or information derived solely from a respondent or his counsel during any settlement discussions between the Committee or a subcommittee thereof and the respondent shall not be included in any report of the subcommittee or the Committee or otherwise publicly disclosed without the consent of the respondent;

(j) Whenever a motion to establish an investigative subcommittee does not prevail, the Committee shall promptly send a letter to the respondent informing him of such vote.

(k) Witnesses shall be afforded a reasonable period of time, as determined by the Committee or subcommittee, to prepare for an appearance before an investigative subcommittee or for an adjudicatory hearing and to obtain counsel.

(l) Except as otherwise specifically authorized by the Committee, no Committee member or staff member shall disclose to any person outside the Committee the name of any witness subpoenaed to testify or to produce evidence.

(m) Prior to their testimony, witnesses shall be furnished a printed copy of the Committee's Rules of Procedure and the provisions of the Rules of the House of Representatives applicable to the rights of witnesses.

(n) Witnesses may be accompanied by their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concerning their constitutional rights. The Chairman may punish breaches of order and decorum, and of professional responsibility on the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the hearings; and the Committee may cite the offender to the House of Representatives for contempt.

(o) Each witness subpoenaed to provide testimony or other evidence shall be provided such travel expenses as the Chairman considers appropriate. No compensation shall be authorized for attorney's fees or for a witness' lost earnings.

(p) With the approval of the Committee, a witness, upon request, may be provided with a transcript of his or her deposition or other testimony taken in executive session, or, with the approval of the Chairman and Ranking Minority Member, may be permitted to examine such transcript in the office of the Committee. Any such request shall be in writing and shall include a statement that the witness, and counsel, agree to maintain the confidentiality of all executive session proceedings covered by such transcript.

Rule 28. Frivolous Filings

If a complaint or information offered as a complaint is deemed frivolous by an affirmative vote of a majority of the members of the Committee, the Committee may take such action as it, by an affirmative vote of its members, deems appropriate in the circumstances.

Rule 29. Referrals to Federal or State Authorities

Referrals made under clause 3(a)(3) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives may be made by an affirmative vote of two-thirds of the members of the Committee.

TRIBUTE TO DR. ALFRED MUNZER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to Dr. Alfred Munzer who will be honored on May 7, 2000, by the American Lung Association. For his public service and outstanding achievements, he will be awarded the Lung Association's distinguished Will Ross Medal for outstanding volunteer service.

A past president of the American Lung Association, Dr. Munzer has ably served the organization at every level—from service as president of the American Lung Association of the District of Columbia and president of the DC Thoracic Society to service on the Lung Association's national Board of Directors and numerous committees. More recently, he is focusing much of his advocacy work in the international arena, particularly efforts to control tobacco use on a global basis.

Over the last two decades, Dr. Munzer's work with the Congress has made a vital contribution to public health and a significant difference in shaping national policy. As a frequent witness at hearings before congressional committees, including the Health and the Environment Subcommittee, which I used to chair, Dr. Munzer has testified on many lung-health issues, ranging from the health effects of air pollution to the need for strong tobacco control efforts.

Dr. Munzer is a skilled communicator who speaks eloquently about his own experience.

He has an exceptional ability to put a human face on complicated health issues.

Throughout his career, Dr. Munzer has dedicated his life to helping and inspiring those around him. It is clear from his achievements that he is truly committed to making a difference in the lives of others. Dr. Munzer has given his time graciously, not only lending his expertise to the Congress but also caring for his patients at the Washington Adventist Hospital and teaching medical students at Georgetown University. I am grateful for his service and commend him for his dedication to helping others.

Congress is wiser and the American people are healthier thanks to Dr. Munzer.

It is my distinct pleasure to ask my colleagues to join with me in saluting Dr. Munzer for his outstanding achievements and to congratulate him for receiving the prestigious honor granted him by the American Lung Association.

AMERICA'S LOT SHOULD BE CAST WITH TAIWAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, not so many years ago, an inspiring U.S. President, John F. Kennedy, gave heart not only to our people but to those living under the sickle and boot of Communism in eastern and central Europe. In a moment that history will remember always, he stood in West Berlin, an island of democracy in a sea of totalitarianism. He championed for the world the cause of freedom with the proud boast, ''Ich bin ein Berliner.'' I am a Berliner.

Today, as this Congress stands on the verge of voting on permanent trade privileges to Communist China, it is incumbent upon us to remind ourselves of Taiwan, the only outpost for democracy in the Pacific Rim. Does mainland China, a Communist nation, whose human rights record is deteriorating, really deserve a blank check from this Congress of the United States? There is not one iota of indication that that totalitarian regime has any respect for liberty's cause.

President Kennedy, on June 25, 1963, at the City Hall in West Berlin said, ''I am proud to come to this city as the guest of your distinguished Mayor, who has symbolized throughout the world the fighting spirit of West Berlin, and your distinguished Chancellor. Two thousand years ago, the proudest boast was 'civis Romanus sum.' I am a Roman. Today the proudest boast is, 'Ich bin ein Berliner.'

''There are many people in the world who really don't understand, or say they don't, what is the great issue between the free world and the Communist world? Let them come to Berlin.''

And I might say today, for freedom lovers, they should say, let them come to Taiwan.

''There are some who say that communism is the wave of the future.'' He said, ''Let them come to Berlin.'' ''There are some who say in Europe and elsewhere we can work with the Communists. Let them come to Berlin. And there are even a few who say that it's true that communism is an evil system, but it permits us to make economic progress. Let them come to Berlin.

''Freedom has many difficulties and democracy is not perfect, but we have never had to put a wall up to keep our people in, to prevent them from leaving us.'' He said, ''I know of no town, no city that has been besieged for 18 years that still lives with the vitality and the force and hope and the determination of the City of West Berlin.'' And I would say today that that is true of Taiwan.

''While the wall was the most obvious and vivid demonstration of the failures of the Communist system for all the world to see, we took no satisfaction in it. What is true of that city,'' he said, ''is true of Germany. Real and lasting peace in Europe can never be assured as long as one German out of four is denied the elementary right of free men, and that is to make a free choice.

''In 18 years of peace and good faith, this generation of Germans has earned the right to be free.'' He said, ''You live in a defended island of freedom, but your life is a part of the main. So let me ask you,'' he said, ''as I close, to lift your eyes beyond the dangers of today to the hopes of tomorrow, beyond the freedom merely of this City of Berlin, or your country of Germany, to the advance of freedom everywhere, beyond the wall to the day of peace with justice, beyond yourselves and ourselves to all mankind.

''Freedom is indivisible, and when one man is enslaved, all are not free. When all are free, then we can look forward to the day when this city will be joined as one, and this country, and this great continent of Europe in a peaceful and hopeful globe. When that day finally comes, as it will, the people of West Berlin can take sober satisfaction in the fact that they were in the front line for almost two decades. All free men, wherever they may live,'' he said, ''are citizens of Berlin, and, therefore, as a free man, I take pride in the words 'Ich bin ein Berliner.' ''

Today, as we embark upon a debate on China, America should aspire to no less an ideal than our forbearers who carried the torch of liberty with no fear of the cost. America's lot should be cast with Taiwan as the democratic hope of the Pacific Rim. All free men and women, wherever they may live, are citizens of Taiwan. And, therefore, as a free citizen, I take pride in opposing any special trade privileges for Communist China. There is no other choice for freedom lovers.

DO WHAT IS RIGHT FOR AMERICA, NOT WHAT IS RIGHT FOR POLITICAL REASONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN) is recognized for 10 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Speaker, I heard an interesting talk by one of the Senators from the State of Utah wherein he talked about his service in the White House under the Nixon years. What I found interesting about it was that he talked about the days of Watergate, and he said the thing that was feared the most in the White House was the Attorney General's office.

Now, I find that very interesting that the Attorney General's office was feared by the President and the President's cabinet. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that we have an interesting situation going on in a little island down by Puerto Rico. It is called Vieques. Vieques has been a training island for many, many years for the Navy and the Marines.

In fact, that is where they get their final test. That is where they go, before they are deployed to the Persian Gulf or some other hostile place. They go down there and the Marines hit the beach. And as they do, there is fire from those ships, live fire over their heads. Then we have a situation where actual fighter planes come in and strafe, and then bombers go in. And they do all this as the final preparation before we put all these fine young people in harm's way.

It is interesting that the Eisenhower went out untrained. They did not have the ability to do it. And now the Washington, another aircraft carrier, is going out untrained without the ability to do it. Why is this? It is because we had a very interesting situation occur. A number of people went in and invaded that base. A United States military base. They invaded it.

Now, what should happen there? Obviously, what should happen, the Marines and the Navy should kick them off and turn them over to the Justice Department. And the Justice Department, at that point, should prosecute them for what they have done.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think a lot of people realize that in the United States there are 48 States that have live fire. What if some environmental group or others went in and took it over? Do we stand by and say they can have a vote, and if they vote right, we would give them $40 million, like we do there? I hardly believe it.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have written the Attorney General, as a member of the Committee on Armed Services, and I have asked the question, what is the Attorney General doing to take these people off, who are nothing more than trespassers? The answer to that is that they have done nothing.

Now, today, in the paper I read where an extreme environmentalist, a lawyer by the name of Robert F. Kennedy, Junior, will go to Vieques this Monday and he will scuba dive and he will play down there to see what is going on. I called today and we informed the Attorney General's office that a law is about to be broken, and I asked what was going to be done about it. So far we have heard absolutely nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if a lot of folks realize that in my years here in Congress I served for 14 years on the ethics committee. For 2 years I chaired the committee. It was my responsibility to talk to Democrats and Republicans alike and say this: You cannot solicit funds from a Federal building, period. You cannot do that. You will be in violation if you do.

I find it very interesting and disagree respectfully with the Vice President of the United States who made the statement that there was no controlling authority because he solicited funds from the White House. If the White House is not a Federal building, my goodness, what is a Federal building in America today?

So I wrote to the FEC, the Federal Election Commission, and I asked them to please explain why the Vice President, in violation, could do that. I knew what their answer would be. They said, we understand the law, but that I would have to call the Attorney General. So we wrote the Attorney General 3 months ago and asked the question, why is it the Vice President has no controlling authority? And if that is the case, then do 535 Members of the Senate and the House not have exactly that same thing? We could sit in our offices, call anybody we want, solicit money from people, even foreign nationals. Why could we not do that?

I find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, that we have not had the Attorney General write us back. So I have had my legislative director, Mr. Bill Johnson, call them on a regular basis and ask them if they would please respond to our letter. And every day we get the same thing, which is, oh, we are working on that. Does it take 3 months to answer a simple letter asking if there is no controlling legal authority? And if that is the case, 535 of us should have exactly the same rights to do it.

I imagine we will hear about it, maybe in the second week of November. Because, again, the Attorney General is dragging her feet.

Mr. Speaker, if I may mention one other issue. In September of 1996, safely on the South River of the Grand Canyon, the President of the United States put 1.7 million acres into a national monument. Now, what authority did he use to do that? He used what is called the 1906 Antiquity Law. Which is a very short law. It is only two paragraphs. But it says he should consider an archeological or a historic thing.

Now, I would ask respectfully of the President of the United States why he did not do that in that proclamation. And in January of this year, why did he not do it on the strip of Arizona; why did he not do it in Phoenix. Why did he not do it? And now this Saturday, rumor is, and I admit I am paranoid, because I hear these rumors and I know they are going to happen, that down in Sequoia Forest in California there will be another national monument. I would just disagree with the President and ask him to please obey the law this time.

And why is he doing these things? We subpoenaed those papers, and in those papers the White House, the Department of the Interior, and the Council on Quality Control said exactly the same thing; we are doing it for political reasons. My goodness, why in this Nation do we do things for political reasons?

I still remember sitting with President Ronald Reagan who made the statement, ''First and foremost we will do what is right for America.'' Not first and foremost we will do what is right for political reasons. Mr. Speaker, I am just hoping in these three examples, Vieques, the ethics committee, the soliciting funds and the Sequoia Park, that people will follow the law for a change. It would be very refreshing to see this.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF REPUBLICAN-LED CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) is recognized for 50 minutes.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, it has been a busy week and a busy last several months as we have worked hard to address the concerns we hear about back home.

I represent a pretty diverse district. I have the privilege of representing the South Side of Chicago; the neighborhoods of Hegwish, on the east side in the 10th ward. I represent the south suburbs in Cook County; towns like Lansing and Calumet City, and Park Forest and Lynwood; as well as suburban towns in Will County, New Lenox and Frankfort; industrial communities like Joliet; rural areas throughout the rest of Will County and Kankakee, LaSalle and Grundy Counties. And I hear a very clear message in that very diverse district, a message that we should all work together that we should find challenges.

And whether my neighbors that I have the privilege to represent reside in the city or the suburbs or the country, they tell me that they want those of us here in the Congress to find solutions to the challenges that we face.

I think back to 1994, when I had the privilege of being elected to Congress. I think about the issues of the day at that time, and of course the challenges that we were debating and facing in that campaign. And we discussed solutions to those challenges. I remember back then. It was only 6 years ago that the previous Congress and their mismanagement and the President were running up $200 to $300 billion deficits, spending beyond our means. In fact, it was projected that, before the Republican Congress was elected, that deficit spending would total $200 to $300 billion a year, as far as the eye could see.

□ 2115

In response to that, the Democratic Congress, working with President Clinton and Vice President GORE, passed the biggest tax hike in the history of our country, placing America's tax burden at its highest level ever, where the average family in Illinois is now sending at least 42 percent of their average income to Washington or Springfield in the local courthouse. That tax burden is too high. And they raised taxes again and they continued deficit spending.

Unfortunately at that time, in 1994, it was clear that they were running the Federal Government on a credit card. They raised taxes and they increased spending. And even though they increased taxes, they still spent well beyond their means, running up deficits of $200 billion to $300 billion a year, running up a massive public debt and raiding Social Security to spend on other things.

When we promised change and we made the commitment that when we were given the opportunity as Republicans to be in the majority that we would work to change how Washington works, balancing the budget and paying down the debt and strengthening Social Security and reforming welfare.

I am proud to say that in the last 5½ years that I have had the privilege to serve in this Congress that we went about doing exactly what we said we would do. We balanced the budget for first time in 28 years. In fact, over the next 10 years, as a result of our balanced budget, we are projected to have surpluses, extra money, of almost $3 trillion.

We provided for the first middle-class tax cut in 16 years. Three million Illinois children in my home State of Illinois now qualify for that $500 per child tax credit, $500 a year that will stay back home in that family's pocketbooks rather than coming here to Washington.

We certainly believe that families back in Illinois and working families throughout this country could better spend their hard-earned dollars better at home than we can for them here in Washington.

I am also proud to say that the welfare reform that we enacted over the last 6 years that emphasizes work and family and responsibility has worked. It has succeeded. We now have seen a reduction in our Nation's welfare rolls of one-half.

My home county of Grundy County, Illinois, has seen an 85-percent reduction in welfare; and almost seven million Americans have now moved from the welfare rolls to the work rolls and the tax rolls, changing their opportunities.

One of our greatest successes this past year, we made a commitment of course to change how Washington works by ending what many call Washington's dirtiest and darkest secret; and that is that for almost 30 years Washington raided the Social Security Trust Fund, dipping into Social Security, America's retirement account, to spend on other things.

This past year we put a stop to that, walling off the Social Security Trust Fund so that Social Security dollars could not be spent on anything other than Social Security and Medicare. What a great change in changing how Washington works by stopping the raid on America's retirement account by stopping the raid on Social Security.

By the way, we also started paying off the national debt. In the last 3 years, we paid down over $350 billion of the Nation's public debt. That is progress in paying off that credit card debt that was run up prior to 1994.

We are now working on an answer to the question of what do we do next in changing how Washington works after we balance the budget and cut taxes and reform welfare, began paying down the national debt and stopped the raid on Social Security.

What are we going to do next? Our agenda is simple. We want to help our local schools. We want to strengthen Social Security and Medicare. We want to make our Tax Code more fair. And we wanted to continue paying off that national debt.

I am proud to say that the budget agreement between the House and Senate that we adopted this week, the budget resolution, which sets the framework and the guidelines as we balance the budget for the fourth year in a row, sets those priorities.

I am proud to say that the Republican balanced budget protects 100 percent of the Social Security surplus, reserves every penny of $161 billion, Social Security surplus dollars, so it is off limits to spending for other purposes.

I would point out that last year in the President's budget he proposed spending $57 billion of the Social Security Trust Fund surplus. We said, no, preserving $137 billion total of Social Security for Social Security. That is progress. We stopped the raid last year. This year we are continuing to protect the Social Security Trust Fund, protecting 100 percent of the Social Security surplus.

We also in our budget reflect the need and our goal of strengthening Medicare and modernizing Medicare for the 21st century. We reject what the President proposes when he proposes cutting Medicare by almost $18.5 billion. We stand in opposition to those cuts. In fact, we want to set aside $40 billion to ensure that our senior citizens in America have the opportunity to have a modern Medicare program which provides prescription drug coverage to help seniors better afford prescription care.

Republicans believe that our Nation's seniors should not have to choose between a trip to the grocery store or a trip to the pharmacy. That is why we set aside $40 billion in our balanced budget to start a brand new, for the first time, prescription drug coverage for our Nation's seniors under Medicare.

We also implement a plan to pay off the Nation's credit card. In our balanced budget that we adopted this week, we implement a plan which retires the Nation's public debt by the year 2013. In fact, we pay off $1 trillion of our Nation's public debt over the next 5 years under our balanced budget.

As I said earlier, we already paid off well over $300 billion of our Nation's public debt over the last 3 years.

Our balanced budget also promote tax fairness, tax fairness for working women, tax fairness for working families, tax fairness for farmers and small business people, as well as our seniors.

Our balanced budget, of course, implements our effort to wipe out the marriage tax penalty, provides small business tax relief to help make college and education more affordable for families, and also to make our health care system more accessible.

We also strengthen support with our goal of strengthening our local schools. We increase funding for elementary and secondary education by 9.4 percent, a significant boost in funding, more than three times the rate of inflation for elementary and secondary education. And we also make special education a priority, increasing funding for IDEA, which is special education by $2 billion in our balanced budget.

And last, I would point out that our balanced budget also works to strengthen our Nation's defenses. We have to recognize that the neglect over the years of our Nation's defenses has caused a problem where we are having a hard time retaining our talented men and women in our Nation's military, those that we call upon to, of course, defend our freedoms.

When we increase funding for our Nation's defense, we ensure that our military men and women have the resources they need in order to practice and have the supplies and train and also have quality housing for themselves and their families and good pay.

I would point out, we provided a pay raise for our military men and women for the first time in a long time this past year as part of our balanced budget.

What does this mean? What does the Republican balanced budget mean for our Nation's families? Well, in 13 years, we will have a debt-free Nation. In 13 years, under our balanced budget, we will eliminate the $3.6 trillion public debt. Public debt that was run up over 28 years of deficit spending will be eliminated in about a total 15 years. By the year 2013, under our balanced budget, we will wipe out our Nation's public debt.

If you care about a more secure retirement, which I believe every American does, they care about grandma and grandpa and want to ensure that their mom and dad and, frankly, they themselves have a secure retirement, we began the steps towards strengthening Social Security this past year by stopping the raid on Social Security.

We continue that by preserving 100 percent of Social Security for Social Security. It is the way it is supposed to be. We protect America's retirement account. We also set aside funds to help ensure that our seniors have affordable prescription drugs under Medicare.

If my colleagues care about education and strengthening our local schools, and I find that that is a priority in the south suburbs of Chicago, as well as the city, everyone wants better schools and wants Congress to support our local schools, both public and private, and I am proud to say that, under our balanced budget, we increase funding for education by almost 10 percent and we make special education a priority, targeting waste and fraud, and ensuring that savings goes into the classroom to help our young people.

And if you care about health care and if you are anxious that we find a cure for cancer and other life-threatening diseases, I am proud to say that our balanced budget increases funding for basic research, seeking cures for cancer, Alzheimer's, AIDS, and diabetes.

Last, as I mentioned earlier, when it comes to our Nation's defense, we want a safer world. And that is why defense is a priority under our balanced budget.

I would like to take a few minutes now just to talk about some specific items on our agenda of strengthening our local schools, making the Tax Code more fair, paying down the national debt, and strengthening Medicare and Social Security, by just talking about a couple items of tax fairness, a couple of items that means so much to millions of Americans. I am proud to say that this House, under the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT) has acted on the need to bring fairness to our Tax Code.

I would like to take a minute and introduce a couple from my district, Shad and Michelle Hallihan. They are public school teachers in Joliet, Illinois. Shad and Michelle are living in Joliet. They are in their mid to late twenties now. They just had a baby. And they, like 25 million married, working couples, suffer something called the marriage tax penalty.

I have often been asked in the union halls and VFW posts and coffee shops and grain elevators in the district that I represent, is it right, is it fair that under our Tax Code married, working couples, couples with two incomes where the husband and wife are both in the workforce, pay higher taxes just because they are married?

And that is true. And I agree, it is not right. In fact, for Shad and Michelle Hallihan, they suffer basically the average marriage tax penalty of $1,400. Now, here in Washington, there are folks that scoff and say, what is $1,400? No big deal, they probably do not need that money. But for Shad and Michelle, $1,400 is a washer and a dryer, it is a year's tuition at Joliet Junior College or community college in Joliet, it is 3 months of day-care at the local child care center if they want to use day-care for their newborn baby. It is real money for real people like Shad and Michelle.

I am proud to say that this House passed overwhelmingly H.R. 6, the Marriage Tax Elimination Act. It was supported by every Republican. I am proud to say that 48 Democrats broke out from under the pressure of their leadership and supported our effort to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. That was a great day as we work to bring tax fairness.

And it broke my heart, in fact it probably broke the heart of 28 million married, working couples when the Senate today was prevented from voting on the Marriage Tax Elimination Act. Unfortunately, Senate Democrats decided they were against eliminating the marriage tax penalty and they used parliamentary procedures to prevent our efforts to wipe out the marriage tax penalty for Shad and Michelle Hallihan from even coming up for a vote.

That is wrong. We want fairness for couples like Shad and Michelle Hallihan, working couples who suffer the marriage tax penalty. And there are 50 million individuals strong who suffer the marriage tax penalty. And today they are wondering why the Senate Democrats stood in the way and said no to eliminating the marriage tax penalty. That is wrong.

My hope is they will change their tune and join with us and make elimination of the marriage tax penalty a bipartisan priority. It breaks my heart that they stood in the way of eliminating the marriage tax penalty for people like Shad and Michelle Hallihan, two public school teachers in Joliet, Illinois, who, just because they are measure, suffer an almost $1,400 marriage tax penalty.

I am proud to say, though, that another effort, an effort that was spearheaded by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Mean the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER) as well as the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT), the Speaker of the House, who during their entire careers in the House have called for elimination of a penalty that affects working seniors.

I have often had employers in the district that I represent who have been anxious to hire senior citizens to work in their store or their business and those seniors have said, I would like to but I am over 65, I am between the ages of 65 and 70. If I go to work for you, I will lose my social security.

When you think about that, today's seniors want to be active longer. They want to work longer. In many cases, their retirement savings and pension plans never worked out the way they had hoped. And so they want to work or need to work.

Unfortunately, if they made more than $17,000 a year, and that is not a lot of money today, but if they made more than $17,000 a year, they lost one out of every $3 of the Social Security benefits were taken away from them by the Social Security earnings limit penalty.

I am proud to say that this House and the Senate voted unanimously to adopt legislation spearheaded by the gentleman from Texas (Chairman ARCHER) and the gentleman interest Illinois (Mr. HASTERT) which wiped out the Social Security earnings limit so that seniors today can work after they reach the age of 65, can keep their Social Security benefits, particularly recognizing they already had a lifetime of working and had already contributed over a lifetime of Social Security and they got what they deserve thanks to our legislation.

I am proud to say that last Friday the President signed our bill. So the Social Security earnings penalty is gone. The legislation is retroactive, so it means that for seniors who have suffered the Social Security earnings limit penalty that, if they make more than $17,000 this year, they will be able to keep 100 percent of the Social Security benefits.

That is good news, and good news for our working senior citizens. In fact, there are 58,000 seniors in my home State of Illinois that will benefit from elimination of the Social Security earnings penalty.

I would also like to take a moment just to talk briefly about what is a big priority with many families in the district besides tax fairness. They also talk about the need to strengthen our local schools and ensure that our children today have the opportunity for a good quality education. We are in the 21st century and of course there is no better investment than ensuring that children today have an opportunity to learn and have the skills in today's new economy. Under the Republican balanced budget, we increase funding for education by 10 percent. We have several principles that we are reflecting with our agenda this year and implementing this balanced budget that increases funding for education by almost 10 percent. Of course we make children America's top priority by increasing investment in education. We increase our investment in special education to help the disadvantaged by making IDEA a priority. Principle number two is we believe that children have a right to learn in drug-free, nonviolent schools. That is why we passed legislation this week to increase enforcement of gun laws with the passage of Project Exile which establishes mandatory minimum sentencing for those who commit crimes and use guns to commit crimes. We also intensify America's war on drugs, the crippling disease that poses such a danger to America's future. In fact we passed legislation, a special appropriations of $1.2 billion of extra money to fight the war on drugs and keep more drugs from coming into our country. We also believe that children need teachers and schools and programs that demand and meet high standards. Of course this House has passed legislation which provides increased accountability for local schools to raise test scores and graduation rates, passage and enactment of Straight As legislation. I know the Senate will be taking up this legislation soon. We increase investment in teacher training to improve discipline and education quality with the Teacher Empowerment Act which we passed this past year. We also target waste, fraud and abuse in the bureaucracy known as the Department of Education. Of course we want to make sure that those dollars are saved and put back into the classroom to help children learn. Last, our fourth principle is that children must be better prepared. We have a new economy and as the chairman of the Federal Reserve noted, one-third of all the new jobs that have been created in the last 5 years have been generated by technology. So clearly if we want our young people, the children today as well as our adults who are making changes in their careers to be ready to find good-paying jobs in today's new economy, we want to ensure that they understand technology and know how to use technology in the workplace and at home. That is why we work to give parents the right to save money for educational opportunities for their child by expanding education savings accounts. That is why we want to ensure that education savings accounts can be used for elementary and secondary students, grade school and junior high and high school students so they can hire tutors, take special classes and, of course, maybe buy a better textbook or maybe attend private or parochial school. That is a choice our parents should be able to make. We also work to expand access to student loans by increasing the maximum Pell grant award for low-income students who qualify. I am proud to say that in the last 5 years, we have more than doubled the amount of the Pell grants for low-income students and today the Pell grant for low-income students is at its highest level ever in history. We also are working to give private companies incentives to donate technology to schools. Many schools, whether poor or rich, vary in their technology that is available, the type of computers, the type of equipment in the vocational programs and of course the business community should be given an incentive to donate surplus equipment, the latest technology they can provide to our local schools to help ensure that our school children have access and understand today's technology. That is why I want to draw attention to legislation that I introduced today to help address what some call the digital divide. I find that many educators, teachers and school administrators and school board members back in Illinois, in the areas that I represent in the city and the south suburbs and rural areas tell me they notice a difference in the abilities and how students are able to perform in the classroom between those who have access to computers at home and those who do not. So that is a challenge. How can we encourage our young people to have access to computers and learn how to use the Internet at home and be ready for the workplace. I am proud to say that several companies, including one which is a major employer in the district that I represent, I have two Ford auto plants, the Chicago Heights stamping plant and the Hegwish Taurus plant in the south side of Chicago are both in the district that I represent, they provide thousands of jobs. Ford is one of those companies that has taken the lead in providing computers and subsidized Internet access for their employees. If we think about that, that is pretty exciting, that everyone, universal access to computers and Internet access for the guy that pushes the broom on the shop floor, the janitor, the person working on the assembly line, the middle manager in the office, all the way up to the CEO, all have universal access under Ford's program. American Airlines, Delta and Intel are also implementing these programs. I commend those employers for what they are doing, providing digital opportunity for families. Because of the efforts of companies such as Ford and American and Delta and Intel, the children of their employees will have computers at home helping them do their homework and making plans. Of course also families can now stay in touch with their friends and relatives all over the world via the Internet thanks to their employers. It is a good idea, something we want to encourage and support. I was shocked to learn that after this was implemented by these employers that it was discovered that the employees were going to suffer a higher tax. They were going to be taxed by the Treasury Department because they were given a computer and subsidized Internet access by their employers and that the IRS wanted to count that as income and raise taxes on that laborer who works pushing the broom on the shop floor at the Ford Taurus plant or the janitor or the middle manager or the person who works on the line. Now, when we think about it, other benefits provided by employers like Ford, their contribution to the employees' pension fund or their contribution to their employees' health care coverage under our Tax Code is not considered a taxable employee benefit. It is tax free. You as a worker, we all as workers are not taxed for our employer's contribution to our pension, but unfortunately today's Tax Code would tax that Ford auto plant worker in Chicago Heights, Illinois if he or she decides to take that computer home and hook it up so they have Internet access provided through their employer. I am proud to say that today we introduced the Data Act, legislation which I have been joined in sponsoring by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), a Democrat on the Committee on Ways and Means, I am a Republican on the Committee on Ways and Means, it is a bipartisan initiative. Of course the Data Act, our goal is to eliminate that digital divide, to create digital unity and digital opportunity by ensuring that that Ford auto plant worker at the Hegwish Taurus plant does not have to pay higher taxes because they are given a computer and Internet access when their employer wants to help eliminate the digital divide as we work to provide digital opportunity. This is important legislation. I believe it deserves bipartisan support. My hope is this legislation which will help improve educational opportunity as well as digital opportunity for families, millions of families in America, will receive bipartisan support. I invite my colleagues to join with the gentleman from Georgia and myself to join us in a bipartisan effort to wipe out the digital divide, to provide digital opportunity and ensure that every working American, every working family has universal access to computers and the digital divide.

We have some big challenges before us. I am proud to say that this Congress for the fourth year in a row is going to balance the budget again. We are going to live within our means. I remember being called a radical in 1995 because I wanted to balance the budget. I had friends on the other side of the aisle who said that we were extreme and radical because we wanted to balance the budget. I remember those days. Now everybody takes credit for it. But the bottom line is over the last 6 years, we have changed how Washington works. I am really proud of that, proud to say that we balanced the budget for the first time in 28 years and 3 years later we are going to balance it for the fourth year in a row. We have all this extra money in the surplus that we are arguing over what to do with it. That is progress. We cut taxes for the middle class for the first time in 16 years. Not since Ronald Reagan was President had the middle class received a tax cut to help them keep more of what they earned. As I pointed out earlier, 3 million Illinois children qualify for that $500 per child tax credit. That is $1.5 billion that stays in the Land of Lincoln rather than coming to the District of Columbia to be spent here. I am proud to say that our effort to change how welfare fails. I remember in 1994 more children were living in poverty than ever before. We had higher rates of teenage illegitimacy than ever before. Our welfare system was failing. I am proud to say our efforts to emphasize work and family and responsibility and give States like my home State of Illinois the flexibility and discretion to design welfare programs that meet the needs of the diverse communities that we represent, because we have to recognize that Idaho is different than New York and South Dakota is different than Florida and Chicago is different than Gary, Indiana. I am proud to say that this welfare reform is working, cutting welfare rolls in half and moving millions of Americans into the workplace. We stopped the raid on Social Security. We are paying down the national debt. That is progress. When we think about it, under the Republican balanced budget, we protect 100 percent of the Social Security surplus, walling off the Social Security trust fund. We stopped the raid last year. We are going to protect that Social Security surplus again this year and we will continue fighting into the future to ensure that America's retirement account is protected. We want to strengthen Medicare by modernizing Medicare for the 21st century and that includes providing prescription drug coverage for America's seniors. That is why we allocate $40 billion, frankly more than the President, and without the President's Medicare cuts, in order to provide prescription drug coverage for our seniors. We plan to pay off the Nation's public debt by the year 2013. When we think about it, it is kind of like refinancing your home mortgage. You used to have a 30-year mortgage, now we have refinanced it to less than a 15-year mortgage. We are going to pay it off a lot quicker under our balanced budget. We promote tax fairness for families and children and seniors and farmers and small businesspeople. And we eliminate the marriage tax penalty. We wiped out the Social Security earnings penalty. That will help millions of families like the Hallihans. That is again why we want to eliminate that marriage tax penalty so that Shad and Michelle can keep that $1,400 and spend it back home in Joliet on their family's needs. When we think about it, $1,400, they have a new baby, that is almost 4,000 diapers that the Hallihans could have spent back in Joliet, Illinois. That is probably a year's worth that they could have used to take care of their child. We strengthen America's defense. We also strengthen support for education and science.

Ladies and gentlemen, we have made a lot of progress, balancing the budget, cutting taxes for the middle class, reforming our welfare system, paying down the national debt, stopping the raid on Social Security. Those are great achievements. I am proud of that. This year we are going to continue that effort, our effort to strengthen Social Security and Medicare to help our local schools, to bring fairness to the tax code and to pay off that credit card by paying down the national debt.

SENATE—Thursday, April 13, 2000

The Senate met at 10:32 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Today's prayer will be offered by our guest Chaplain, the Rev. Donald J. Harp, Jr., Peachtree Road United Methodist Church, Atlanta, GA.

We are glad to have you with us.

PRAYER

The guest Chaplain, the Rev. Donald J. Harp, Jr., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O God, our help in ages past, our hope for years to come, for this land of beauty and plenty, we offer our words of thanksgiving. For elected leaders who place the good of all above the wishes of a few, we offer our words of thanksgiving. For our citizens who offer thoughtful words of affirmation versus random words of criticism, we offer words of thanksgiving. Intercede, O God, with Your wisdom, in the decisions of this body. Grant wisdom, compassion, and vision, that decisions shall be based on truth, honesty, and fairness for all of our citizens. Bless, we pray, our executive branch, our Congress, and our judicial system with the gift of Your compassion for humanity as decisions are made. We pray in Thy Holy name. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable MIKE CRAPO, a Senator from the State of Idaho, led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUNNING). The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

WELCOME TO REV. DON HARP

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I am very honored to host Reverend Don Harp of Atlanta as the guest Chaplain in the Senate today.

Reverend Harp was born in Fayette County, GA, and graduated from Fayette County High School.

He attended Young Harris Junior College before receiving his BA degree from Huntingdon College in Montgomery, AL. Reverend Harp then went on to earn his masters degree in divinity from Emory University in Atlanta, and his doctorate from McCormick Theological Seminary in Chicago.

He has served on the Carrollton, Georgia City Council, Mayor Bill Campbell's Atlanta Advisory Committee, and the President's Advisory Council of Oglethorpe University.

He has received the Mary Mildred Sullivan Award from Brenau College in Gainesville, GA, and was a delegate to both the General and Southeastern Conferences of the United Methodist Church.

Reverend Harp has been a good friend and pillar of support for me over the years. As Tagore once said, ''Faith is the bird that feels the light and sings when the dawn is still dark.''

Reverend Harp taught me that faith in God sometimes requires strength, but God gives back that strength many times over.

I am proud to welcome my distinguished friend to the United States Senate today.

RECOGNITION OF ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, today the Senate will be in a period of morning business until 2 p.m. with the time until 12:30 p.m. for general statements and bill introductions. At 12:30 debate regarding the marriage tax penalty will occur prior to the cloture vote scheduled to occur at 2 p.m. Senators should be aware that if cloture is not invoked on the substitute, there will be a second cloture vote on the underlying measure. Therefore, there could be up to two votes at 2 p.m. Following the votes, the Senate is expected to consider the budget resolution conference report with a final vote expected this evening. I thank my colleagues for their attention.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 12:30 p.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each. Under the previous order, the time between 10:30 and 10:45 a.m. shall be under the control of the Senator from Idaho, Mr. CRAPO, or his designee.

The Senator from Georgia.

MEASURE PLACED ON THE CALENDAR—H.R. 1838

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, I understand there is a bill due for its second reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1838) to assist in the enhancement of the security of Taiwan, and for other purposes.

Mr. CRAPO. I object to further proceedings on this bill at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

(The remarks of Mr. CRAPO and Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire pertaining to the introduction of S. 2417 are printed in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time assigned to the Senator from Arkansas, Mr. HUTCHINSON, be given to me at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FIGHTING DRUGS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I rise to speak about the issue of how we are fighting drugs in this country—specifically, the President's initiative relative to the country of Colombia in relation to our own initiatives on the southern border of our country.

I have the privilege to chair the committee that funds the INS, which includes the Border Patrol, DEA, the department of drug enforcement; and the judiciary. All three agencies, of course, of our Government have a significant role in the issue of drug enforcement and especially as it affects our southern border.

The President has asked for $1.6 billion of new money—he has asked for it in an emergency format—to be sent to the country of Colombia, in order for Colombia to fight drugs and the production of drugs. That may well be a reasonable request. I have reservations on its substance, but I also have serious reservations as to its appropriateness in the context of the drug war that we as a Nation face. The reason is simple. When the President sent a budget up to address the agencies that are responsible in our Government to fight drugs, he did not fully fund their needs. He underfunded the needs of the Drug Enforcement Administration, DEA; he underfunded the needs of the INS and Border Patrol; he underfunded the needs of the judiciary, which enforces the law.

I have made a little chart here that reflects a comparison. The unfunded capital—I am talking about capital needs, one-time items, which involve the construction or technology and needs of these different agencies, the INS, DEA, and the judiciary. The unfunded requests of these agencies represented about $1.8 billion—a little bit more than $1.8 billion. Compare that with the fact that the President is willing to fund almost $800 million—million, not billion—of capital needs for Colombia.

Let's do a little review of this because I think it is important for people to understand what happened. Essentially, what the President is saying is that the capital needs of Colombia are more important than the needs of our own drug enforcement agencies here in the United States. For example, the President has requested 15 Huey helicopters for Colombia and 30 Blackhawk helicopters. They are the most advanced helicopters we have in our fleet. Thirty Blackhawk helicopters will cost approximately $388 million. Let me tell you, those 30 helicopters, along with the 15 Hueys, are going to go to Colombia.

Let me tell you what the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Border Patrol have to fly on our borders in order to interdict drugs. They fly old Vietnam-era helicopters. They aren't safe. In fact, many of them have been grounded. The Army, in fact, grounded almost all of its Hueys. But that is what we are left with.

DEA and INS have both requested aircraft in order to patrol the borders. Those requests were not funded by this administration. Yet the administration turns around and is willing to give 30 Blackhawk helicopters to Colombia. Who knows what will happen to those helicopters. Who knows how they will be used. But I can assure you that the first call, I believe, on new helicopters for the purposes of the drug war should have gone to the departments which fight the drug war in the United States and which need them.

Another example: Night vision goggles. We are going to send $2 million to Colombia to buy night vision goggles. Yet here in the United States, the Border Patrol and DEA are short on those materials. In fact, the Border Patrol is woefully short on night vision goggles, on pocket scopes, on fiber-optic scopes, on hand-held searchlights—all of these items the Border Patrol asked for and were not funded in this budget by the President.

Yet the President has been willing to find the money, or suggested that we should find the money, to send not only night vision goggles but ground-based radar systems, secure communications systems, signal intelligence gathering systems, computers, and installation of sensor sights for aircraft. All of these items they have suggested we send to Colombia.

In addition, they have suggested that we actually construct facilities for Colombia to the tune of approximately $49 million—physical buildings.

Let me tell you, both the INS and the DEA need physical facilities. In fact, the Border Patrol is functioning out of extraordinarily crowded facilities. Many of the Border Patrol stations are grossly overcrowded. There is one site which is designed for 5 people with 125 people working out of it. There is another site where the Border Patrol is working out of an old Tastee Freeze building. I guess you can use an old Tastee Freeze building. It is sort of hard to handcuff a drug dealer to a Tastee Freeze machine.

The fact is we do not have the facilities which we need in order to adequately enforce our laws relative to drug dealers coming across the borders and drugs coming across the borders. We don't have the facilities to detain those people.

There is a detention need of approximately $406 million. In other words, we need $406 million of construction in order to meet the potential detention needs for people illegally coming across the border, many of them drug dealers.

The judiciary has the same problem. There is a massive increase in the amount of caseload which the judiciary along the southern border has to handle. Five district courts on the southwest border now handle 26 percent of all the Federal criminal activity—26 percent of all the Federal criminal activity—and a great deal of that is drug related.

To put that in perspective, the remainder of the criminal activity in this country is handled by 89 other district courts. Five are handling 26 percent and 89 handle the rest. You can see how overworked those five courts are.

The border courts' basic caseload is four times that of the national average. Yet did the administration put money in to try to increase the capacity of those court systems to handle this wave of crime that is coming across the border, much of it drug-related? Absolutely not. There are no physical facilities in that area.

I put up another chart which is a little more stark explanation of some specific accounts.

For example, the aircraft needs along the southwest border, this is what was unfunded. This bar chart shows the unfunded needs for aircraft along our southwest border. This shows how much the administration is willing to spend for aircraft for Colombia. They are willing to spend three times what it would take in order to adequately monitor our own border with aircraft. They are willing to spend it in Colombia.

I have to say that I really doubt that aircraft in Colombia is going to end up doing the job. I do not know how it is going to be used. But I strongly suspect it is not going to be used very effectively if we look at the history of what has happened with our efforts outside this country in the area of crime enforcement. I suspect what we will end up with is some company in America making a heck of a lot of money because somebody will buy 30 Blackhawk helicopters and ship them to Colombia. That will be the end of it. That will be the last we hear of them.

But if the administration is willing to pay for the aircraft along the border, the use of those aircraft would be accountable to the American people. We would know whether those aircraft were being used correctly in law enforcement and drug enforcement. I can assure you that my experience with the Border Patrol and the DEA is they would be used correctly, and we would get a return for the dollars that are being spent.

It is not only in the capital areas that this administration has acted, in my opinion, with gross irresponsibility in their obligations to fight the drug war here in the United States, by funding the Colombian request but not funding the American needs, but more importantly, in the area of personnel and initiatives, it is really unbelievable. This administration is willing to spend $1.6 billion in Colombia, but they spent absolutely nothing in their budget on the methamphetamine initiative of the Drug Enforcement Administration. Nothing. The methamphetamine initiatives of DEA have been some of the most successful initiatives they have undertaken.

Talk to people in Colorado, Missouri, Minnesota, and all along the southwest border. They will tell you methamphetamine is the drug that is growing most rampantly. It is growing at the most dramatic rate. Its production is growing at the most dramatic rate.

Two years ago, the Congress set up 10 initiatives in the area of methamphetamine. They have been successful. Yet this administration has zeroed out for all intents and purposes any new initiative in methamphetamine, even though the DEA specifically requested of OMB—part of the administration—and said they needed 10 more initiatives in the area of methamphetamine. I think it was 10. But that was zeroed out by the White House while at the same time they are willing to spend $1.6 billion to buy planes for Colombia. It makes no sense.

We know that 85 percent of the methamphetamine that is being sold in Minnesota is smuggled in from Mexico. We know that. We know, if we are going to stop that smuggling, that we are going to have to have a border enforcement capability that can identify it, track it, arrest it, and then prosecute it. But you can't do that if you are going to underfund the DEA, the INS, and the judiciary to such dramatic levels. But the White House has done exactly that. But who have they been willing to fund for initiatives in Colombia? That is not the only instance.

The Border Patrol was supposed to receive an increase of 1,000 people a year for 3 years. That is what the Congress asked this administration to do. That is what we actually funded—1,000 people for 3 years. This administration has refused to fill those slots. The administration has basically refused to fulfill its obligation to fill those slots. So the Border Patrol goes undermanned and in many instances underpaid. As I have already pointed out, the facilities and equipment it has are woefully inadequate.

The Border Patrol, obviously, does things other than just drug enforcement, but because the Mexican border is the primary vehicle and the Mexican cartels are the primary force behind the drug flow into the United States, the Border Patrol is constantly being drawn into the drug fight. Therefore, adequately funding the Border Patrol is critical to having an adequate drug enforcement policy in this country.

My point is simple and obvious. Before we send $1.6 billion to Colombia, before we send this money down there so they can have more planes, goggles, and radar sensors, how about funding the American needs in the area of drug enforcement? How about funding our own law enforcement community and our Judiciary so we can act adequately, interdict and fight drugs in the United States.

I believe this administration's priorities are skewed. I think this Congress has an obligation to take a hard look at the Colombian drug proposal when it comes here. In my opinion, we should reallocate significant amounts of those funds so we can appropriately fund and support DEA, INS, and the Judiciary.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLARD). Under the previous order, the time between 11 o'clock and 11:30 shall be under the control of the Senator from New Hampshire or his designee.

The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized.

HOLY SEE

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, first, I want to make my colleagues aware I have a resolution regarding the Holy See. This resolution would block any effort to remove or demean the nine-member permanent observer status at the United Nations held now by the Catholic Church. I want my colleagues and the American people to know this is being blocked from being heard by the other side of the aisle, which is a very interesting story considering the controversy on the House side regarding the Chaplain. It is interesting that this simple resolution that says we will not block or demean in any way the nine members of the permanent observer status at the United Nations by the Pope and the Catholic Church is being blocked on the other side of the aisle.

I want the American people to know I can't get this to the floor because of holds on this bill on the other side. When we hear the stories about who is anti-Catholic and who isn't, we ought to shine the light where the light should be shined.

ELIAN GONZALEZ

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I want to pick up on a couple of points I made last night regarding Elian Gonzalez.

My colleagues need to understand today this young boy is going to be yanked from the arms of his family, literally, at the direction of Janet Reno, and placed on an airplane and taken God knows where—we are hearing maybe to Bethesda—where he meets with Juan Gonzalez in the confines of the Cuban control which is where this Cuban diplomat lives, or perhaps ultimately on an airplane and headed for Cuba. There are no restrictions. We don't know.

The speech I made on the floor last night I thought was very compelling regarding this situation. There is talk about how this young man is going to go back to his father. I will repeat briefly what I said last night. He is not going to go back to his father, if we let this young boy go back to Cuba. The Cuban diplomats have already said this young man is controlled by Cuba. He is a child of the state. He is a child of Cuba. He is not a child of Juan Gonzalez—only biologically. Beyond that, he is not the son of Juan Gonzalez; he is the son of Cuba.

We have a 6-year-old little boy who survived a terrible incident at sea, watching his mother drown. Her dying words literally were: Please get Elian to the shores of America. The two survivors told me that themselves because they saw her die, as did Elian.

Later they were separated and Elian floated for 3 days in an inner tube. When he was picked up by two fishermen, he was surrounded by dolphins. We know dolphins are a protection because sharks do not interfere with dolphins. He was being protected by the dolphins. He had no sunburn after 3 days at sea. He told me he saw the Virgin Mary while he was floating in this inner tube.

This is a very special little boy who had never been inside a church until he came to America. We now have said, the Justice Department has said, Janet Reno has said, this boy has no rights under the law. She is wrong. She has discretion under the law to send him back, but there is no law that says he must go back. I want to make that very clear.

I think the Senate should go on record, as tough as it is, and take a vote one way or the other, binding or nonbinding, but take a vote. Every Senator should let the American people know how they feel about this because Elian went through an awful lot—a lot more than most of us go through in our lifetimes. His mother died trying to get him to America, and we have now taken her rights away. She has no voice because she can't speak for herself. Perhaps ultimately in the custody court without the Justice Department would be the right way to resolve it. However, the Attorney General has chosen to be confrontational, as she did at Waco, and said he will be taken. She has made this statement over and over in the past several days.

I read the polls that say 61 percent of the American people say Elian Gonzalez should go back to his father. This is not about polling. There were no polls out there when Elian was floating around in the ocean in rough seas for 3 days.

I have met Elian Gonzalez and until yesterday I don't think Janet Reno had. He is a special boy. He is going to be Castro's main objective when he gets back to Cuba. This boy cannot succeed in saying good things about America to his classmates. This boy will go into a Communist education camp. He will be taken away from his father most of the time, probably 11 months out of 12, and he will be "reeducated." Fidel Castro himself has said this boy will be reeducated. He will be reeducated all right. Ask some of the Vietnamese who came out of Vietnam what a reeducation camp is and ask some of the Cuban American community today what it is like in Cuba and why thousands have come here and thousands more have died trying to get here.

Now because little Elian's mother drowned, he has no rights. I thought this was America. But I guess it isn't anymore.

I want everybody to understand what happens to Elian Gonzalez. We hear about Fidel Castro. You would think he loved this little boy and would want to get the little boy back to his father. "That is all I want," says Fidel.

I will close on this point: On July 13, 1994, 72 Cuban men, women, and children boarded a tugboat called the 13 de Marzo and they set sail, hopefully, they thought, to freedom in the United States. Three hours later, 32 of them would be forced back to Cuba and imprisoned and another 40—23 children among them—would be killed by the Cuban goon squads of Fidel Castro.

Do you know how it happened? I will tell you how it happened. We got this firsthand from the survivors: Two Government firefighting boats pummeled the helpless passengers, who were unarmed, with water from high-pressure firehoses 7 miles off the coast of Cuba. The passengers repeatedly attempted to surrender to Government officials, going so far as to hold their children in their arms up like this, saying: Please, these are my children, stop, stop.

But the Cuban Coast Guard was relentless. The firehoses were enormous. Survivors said children were sprayed from the arms of their mothers into the ocean waters. Other children were simply swept off the deck by the firehoses and drowned in the sea. Desperate to protect their children, some of the mothers went down below deck with their children. What did they get for that? The Cuban Coast Guard rammed their vessel again and again and sank it with these people in the hold.

Here is a picture of a little girl, Caridad Leyva Tacoronte, 4 years old. She was one of those children.

If Castro's goons could have caught that boat, they would have done the same thing to Elian Gonzalez.

So I don't want to hear any more of this talk about how this is going to be the nicest thing for Elian, to go back to his wonderful little home in Cuba and live happily ever after with his dad because that is a bunch of pure, unadulterated garbage. Let's face reality. If the Senate does not have the courage to stand up and vote and be on record against that, then what do we stand for? What do we stand for?

Here is another one, Angel Rene Abreu Ruiz, 3 years old, sprayed from the arms of her mother by a high-pressure firehose and drowned in the ocean before her mother's eyes.

Elian did not get caught, so Castro did not kill him. He made it to the ocean. The ocean, though, took the lives of his fellow passengers, all but two. One other couple and Elian survived. His mother died.

So rather than send this to a custody court—I am not asking anybody to make a decision on where Elian should go. All my resolution does, that I have been trying to get a vote on now for a month and a half, is it gives permanent residency status to Elian, to his father, to his father's current wife, and to his child, to Elian's two grandmothers and grandfather—all the family. It lets them come here free of Castro, sit down as a family, talk with the Miami relatives, and decide how little Elian's fate should be resolved. That is all I am asking.

But, oh, no, we cannot do that because Janet Reno and Fidel Castro have decided the kid has to go back to Cuba. I want everybody in America to know what is going to happen. I promise you, this is the kind of stuff that happens in Cuba. He is going to go into a little reeducation camp, and he is going to learn all about communism, and we are going to make mighty sure, in Cuba, that he does not tell his classmates about Disney World or anything else nice that happened here in America. He is not going to let that happen. So he is a special little boy, all right, to Fidel Castro.

When I hear all this stuff about this nice little happy relationship with Juan Gonzalez, his father—where has his father been for 4 months? Has anybody stopped him from going to Miami and sitting down with the family and talking this out? Yes. Fidel Castro has stopped him.

Do you know where Mr. Gonzalez' mother is right now? She is under house arrest in Cuba so she cannot move freely. Let's get real here. That is where she is. He is afraid to say anything because he fears for his mother's life. He has his wife and child here but he doesn't have his mother here.

What a tragedy this is, that this little boy, who survived all of this, is now going to be forced back and he has nothing to say about it. I am never going to forget, as long as I live, no matter what happens, that little boy looking me in the eye about 2 months ago, 3 months ago, and saying: Senor, ayudame, por favor—help me, please. I don't want to go back to Cuba.

I asked him: Elian, don't you want to see your father?

He said: Si, senor—yes, but I want my father to come here to America because that is what my mother wanted.

Frankly, that is what his father wanted, too, but he can't say it. His father knew Elian was coming. He spoke to the hospital the night Elian was rescued and he was in the hospital. The father spoke to the doctors and to the family and thanked the family and the doctors for taking care of him and said, ''I'll see you soon.'' But, oh, no. Then comes the Attorney General blundering into this thing: Oh, no, this is an immigration matter.

Do you think he came in here by yacht?

Once again, I plead with my colleagues, whoever the powers that be are around here: Bring this thing to a vote today before 2 o'clock. Don't block it. Bring it to the floor and allow us to be recorded so the American people will know where we stood on a matter as important as this.

VOLUNTARY MEDICARE PRESCRIPTION DRUG PLAN ACT OF 2000

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I would like to talk a bit about The Voluntary Medicare Prescription Drug Plan Act of 2000—S. 2319.

This bill allows seniors to enroll in a new program under Medicare which will provide for prescription drug coverage without increasing Medicare premiums or costing the Federal Government one penny.

This is an issue about which, as you know, many seniors are very concerned.

The Senate unanimously approved a sense-of-the-Senate amendment on the budget resolution offered by myself, Senator ALLARD, and Senator DOMENICI.

This sense-of-the-Senate is very simple. First of all, under the plan the Senate Democrats are committed to passing this year, there are six basic principles.

I agree with them all.

No. 1, it is voluntary.

I agree with this. If the senior doesn't want it, he or she should not have to take it.

No. 2, it is accessible to all Medicare beneficiaries.

I agree with that. A hallmark of Medicare is that all beneficiaries, even those in rural or underserved communities, have access to dependable health care. It should be accessible to everybody. The Smith-Allard plan is fully accessible for all beneficiaries.

No. 3, it is designed to provide meaningful protection and bargaining power for Medicare beneficiaries in obtaining prescription drugs.

A Medicare drug benefit should assist seniors with the high cost of drugs and protect them against excessive, out-of-pocket expenses. I agree with that.

No. 4, it is affordable for all Medicare beneficiaries and for the Medicare program.

It should be affordable to all beneficiaries, and it should be affordable to the Medicare program itself. The Smith-Allard bill is free. Free to all beneficiaries, free to the trust fund. If free qualifies as affordable, I think we are there.

No. 5, it is administered using private sector entities and competitive purchasing techniques.

The management of the prescription drug benefit should mirror the practices employed by private insurers. Discounts should be achieved through competition, not through price controls or regulation.

We are five for five.

No. 6, it is consistent with broader Medicare reform.

None of the plans that I know of are consistent with this principle because they all cost the taxpayers of America in the upwards of $40 billion dollars. And that's just to start. The President's plan is looking at an additional $203 billion.

Medicare will face the same demographic strain as Social Security when the baby boomer generation retires. We need to save Medicare, not add more of a financial burden to it.

So, these six principles I have listed are principles I totally support. They are principles that the Smith-Allard plan meets.

But we added three new principles: The plan should be revenue neutral; not increase Medicare beneficiary premiums; and provide full coverage in 2001.

These three principles enhance and strengthen those put forth by my colleagues on the other side of the aisle.

Let me briefly explain how my new legislation works:

Medicare part A—under the old system, the current system—has a $776 deductible.

Medicare part B has a $100 deductible. In other words, if you go to the doctor, the first $100 you pay for; if you go to the hospital, the first $776 you pay for; the rest, Medicare pays. That is total of $876 you will have to pay.

My new plan would create one new deductible, combining those two deductibles of part A and part B into one deductible of $675, which would apply to all hospital costs, all doctor visits, and prescription drugs—50 cents on the dollar up to $5,000.

And the prescription drug costs apply to the deductible, so every dollar you pay for a prescription moves you forward to meet the deductible.

Once the $675 deductible is met by the Medicare recipient, Medicare then will pay 50 percent of the cost toward the first $5,000 worth of drugs the senior purchases.

However, the senior could not purchase a Medigap plan that would pay for the $675 deductible. This must be paid for by the senior. But if you have a Medigap plan now as a senior, you will not need it.

As a result, seniors would save about $550 under Medigap plans if they traded their current Medigap plan for my new prescription drug plan.

Again, it is their option. It is voluntary. Seniors could even use their $550 in savings to pay the $675 deductible.

If you are a senior out there, and you have part A, part B, and you are paying $675 toward the deductible, and you have Medigap insurance of $550, you now can put the $550 toward the $675 to meet your deductible. So you are going to have $550 in savings. You can put that toward the $675, and you are already two-thirds of the way there.

But how do you get the cost savings?

As my colleagues are aware, according to the National Bipartisan Commission on the Future of Medicare, the Federal Government pays about $1,400 more per senior if the senior owns a Medigap plan that covers their part A and part B deductible.

The savings result because Medicare will not have to pay this $1,400 per person per year out of the trust fund.

As I mentioned, all hospital, physician, and prescription drug costs would count toward this $675 deductible. Once it was met, the senior would receive regular, above-the-deductible Medicare coverage, just as you get now. Or if you worked out the numbers and decided against my plan, then you would not have to select it; it is your choice.

I have spoken to senior groups and health care providers, both in Washington as well as in my State over the past several weeks, about this proposal. The response has been very enthusiastic.

Seniors want a prescription drug benefit. Doctors and nurses understand the importance of providing coverage for seniors because of the expense of prescription drugs in this country.

It would be a victory for seniors and for health care in this country if we could provide this coverage to them.

In a recent press conference, President Clinton and Senator DASCHLE outlined their goals for prescription drug coverage.

Leaving the politics aside, the fact that elected leaders from both parties are looking at this issue of prescription drug coverage is good news for the senior citizens of America.

I have talked with several of my Republican colleagues, and it is clear to me there is overwhelming support for allowing seniors to have this choice. The only question among us all is how we can responsibly structure such a program.

I heave heard from seniors in my State about what they are looking for in a prescription drug plan.

First, they are concerned about the solvency of the Medicare program. They want a program that does not add some huge financial burden to the trust fund which will be passed on to their grandchildren.

Second, they do not want to increase the national debt, either. Yes, seniors are concerned about the national debt. Ask them the next time you speak to a seniors group.

Third, seniors do not want new premiums. My plan requires no premium hike for seniors—zero.

As I have previously stated, the guiding principles of this plan, which may come as a shock to some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, are the same principles as those of the President and the distinguished minority leader for any prescription drug plan.

I believe the vast majority of seniors will benefit from this plan. In fact, every senior with a Medigap plan will definitely benefit.

Any senior with a prescription drug expenditure of more than $15 a month will benefit. Today, the Medicare part A and part B deductible totals $876, which most seniors cover by an average $1,611 Medigap insurance premium.

Let me go through some charts that will help explain how the plan works.

First, it is budget neutral.

It is ironic to see the direction in which the Medicare reform debate is headed.

Do my colleagues remember what started these discussions about Medicare reform?

It was the fact that the program was going broke.

So why would we support reforms that cost the program billions more in spending and further increase its insolvency?

I want to support Medicare reform that preserves the integrity of the program, not some sham reform that adds new financial burdens we will not be able to sustain.

For those of you who are skeptical that these numbers can work, let me say right off that I am not an actuary. I know budgets, but these are vast actuarial calculations we are talking about.

So, I wrote a letter to someone who I feel is in a unique position to make an unbiased assessment of this plan. His name is Guy King, and he was the Chief Actuary at the Health Care Financing Administration

Here is the letter he sent me.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter and a letter from Mark Litow, an actuary from the firm of Milliman and Robertson, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KING ASSOCIATES,
Annapolis, MD, March 28, 2000.

Hon. BOB SMITH,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: This is in response to your letter of March 9, 2000 asking for my analysis of legislation you intend to introduce in the Senate. The proposed legislation establishes a voluntary prescription drug benefit, the Medicare Prescription Drug Plan, under the Medicare program.

Under the Medicare Prescription Drug Plan, the current Part A and Part B deductibles would be replaced by a single deductible of $675 which would also be applicable to the new prescription drug benefit. The Medicare program would pay fifty percent of the cost of prescription drugs, up to a maximum of $2,500 after satisfaction of the deductible. A beneficiary who chooses the Medicare Prescription Drug Plan would not be allowed to purchase a Medicare supplement policy that fills in the $675 deductible, so special Medicare supplement policies for those who choose the option would be allowed.

The Medicare Prescription Drug Plan would be available, on a voluntary basis, to any Medicare beneficiary not also covered by Medicaid. The possibility of anti-selection is an important consideration for a plan that is available to all Medicare beneficiaries as an option. I believe that the design features of the Medicare Prescription Drug Plan, as outlined in your legislation, minimize the impact of anti-selection.

As you requested, I performed an analysis of the proposed legislation. This analysis is based on Medicare and prescription drug data that I obtained from the Health Care Financing Administration (HCFA). My analysis indicates that the Medicare prescription Drug Plan, as described above, would be cost-neutral to the Medicare program if it were made available on a voluntary basis to all beneficiaries except those also covered by Medicaid.

If you should have any questions regarding my analysis, please don't hesitate to call.

Sincerely,

ROLAND E. (GUY) KING, F.S.A., M.A.A.A.

MILLIMAN & ROBERTSON, INC.,

Hon. Senator ROBERT C. SMITH,
Dirksen Building, Washington, DC.

Re: Medicare Alternative Including Prescription Drug Coverage.

DEAR SENATOR SMITH: At your request, we have analyzed the impact of creating a new option for the Medicare population that would provide coverage for prescription drugs. This option would allow most non-Medicaid aged and disabled Medicare beneficiaries, including those who are institutionalized but not covered under Medicaid and those with end stage renal disease (ESRD), a choice between traditional Medicare coverage and a new form of Medicare coverage referred to as the Prescription Plan. If the individual chooses the prescription plan, the deductible applies across all benefits (Part A, Part B, and drugs). Coinsurance still remains as currently exists under Parts A and B after deductibles, although the Part A extended benefit is available as an option, and prescription drugs have their own coinsurance levels as specified. If the individual chooses to remain under traditional Medicare, no prescription drug coverage is available.

The key components of the Prescription Plan option are:

The Prescription Plan has an aggregate deductible of $675 for the year 2000 across all benefits. Coinsurance for Parts A and B above the deductible are consistent with Medicare today, except as noted in the following bullet. Coinsurance for drugs is 50/50 on the next $5,000 above the deductible, with no coverage thereafter, so that the plan's maximum prescription drug benefit is $2,500.

Individuals have the option to pay an additional premium to Medicare under the Prescription Plan of $21 per year ($1.75 per month) that would provide full coverage of hospital claims for days 61 to 90 plus Lifetime Reserve Days. Currently, Medicare only covers a portion of the cost for days 61 to 90 and Lifetime Reserve Days.

People can purchase a new Medicare Supplement plan to cover their out-of-pocket costs above the deductible. Under this scenario, premiums for the current Plan F (which exclude prescription drugs) are expected to decrease by roughly $550 per year on average. Coverage below the aggregate deductible is not permitted.

People choosing to be covered under traditional Medicare will have exactly the same benefits they have today under Medicare. We believe the choice of current Medicare versus the Prescription Plan is reasonably balanced so that a relatively equal mix of healthy and less healthy individuals will select current Medicare and the Prescription Plan. Therefore, we do not anticipate significant amounts of adverse selection with this choice.

The offering of Prescription Plan along side traditional Medicare is estimated to be revenue neutral to Medicare. In other words, the Prescription Plan allows individuals access to prescription drug coverage at no additional cost to the Federal Government. Election of the option results in no change to the Part A and/or Part B premium, as applicable.

This system allows individuals two opportunities to change options. The first is at their initial time of eligibility for this program. The second is at the beginning of any year that is at least four years after their initial option. In both cases, the move can be made without evidence of insurability.

Estimates of the aggregate deductible are based on our best set of assumptions. A wide range of reasonable assumptions exist that could either increase or decrease these values.

A number of data sources and assumptions have been used in our analysis. These include:

The benefit design is applicable to the non-Medicaid aged, disabled, and ESRD populations. The only population not covered under this plan is that covered by Medicaid.

We estimate the Prescription Plan will result in an aggregate decrease in utilization of approximately 5%. However, we expect that the utilization savings will occur if and only if the aggregate deductible cannot be covered under any supplemental insurance plan.

We have assumed no price discounts on prescription drugs.

We have assumed that the choice between current Medicare and the Prescription Plan is fairly equal. The reason is that the higher deductible for Part B services will attract healthier people under the Prescription Plan, while the drug benefit will attract less healthy individuals. Given the magnitude of the Part B benefit and the drug benefit included in the Prescription Plan, we are unable to discern a tendency for people in a certain health status to have a greater inclination for current Medicare or the Prescription Plan than would people in a different health status.

All estimates above are based on calendar year 2000 levels, and should be properly adjusted for healthcare inflation in years beyond 2000. We have not made any adjustments for the new Hospital Outpatient Prospective Payment System which is expected to take effect in early calendar year 2000. Our analysis is based on the current Medicare payment system in Part B services. Since Part B services and prescription drugs would now be included, the trend rate applied to the deductible in future years is critical to controlling the cost of Medicare.

Cost and distributions of costs are based on the 1999 Milliman & Robertson, Inc. Health Cost Guidelines Ages 65 and Over. These Guidelines are based on an extensive analysis of various data sets, including Medicare data.

The following caveats apply to our estimates:

1. The values included are estimates only. Actual results may be better or worse than anticipated and could vary from anticipated results. Thus, actual experience should be monitored closely and revisions made as necessary to maintain revenue neutrality and other objectives.

2. This letter assumes the reader is familiar with the Medicare program and should be reviewed in its entirety. Since our conclusions reflect assumptions specific to the Medicare program, they may not be appropriate from other situations. This letter is intended for distribution for all who request, and therefore should be used in its entirety. The results and assumptions may be misinterpreted if taken out of context. As such, portions of this letter should not be excerpted.

3. The opinions in this letter are those of the author and do not necessarily reflect the options of others in Milliman & Robertson, Inc. (M&R). M&R does not take any position on specific health care reform proposals. There is uncertainty associated with some assumption underlying this analysis. Changes in the assumptions may have a material impact on this proposal. Actual experience may vary from the results projected in this letter.

This letter is a revision of an earlier letter dated September 22, 1999. The assumptions supporting that document were tested independently by Guy King of King Associates. The changes made to that analysis are relatively modest, but we have not as yet asked Guy King for his comments on these changes. A copy of Mr. King's work to date was attached to our September 22, 1999 letter.

If you have any questions or need additional information, please call.

Sincerely,

MARK E. LITOW, F.S.A,
Consulting Actuary.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. There it is, folks. It's revenue neutral.

Let me talk about the premium issue, because this I believe is the most explosive political side of this.

Seniors watch their budgets closely. If you try to sock them with a new premium, they will not be happy.

Let me remind my colleagues what happened the last time we tried to slap new premiums on seniors.

This picture is an incident that occurred when seniors who were angry with the enactment of the so-called Catastrophic Act assaulted Congressman Rostenkowski's car.

Congressman Rostenkowski wrote the legislation which increased premiums on certain seniors.

It would be a grave mistake to interpret seniors' desire for prescription drug coverage as a call for new higher premiums.

It would also be a huge mistake to think that there is any need for such premiums.

Let me show you how my plan compares with the Administration's plan as far as premiums and benefits.

This chart shows that the Clinton plan's benefits do not even start until 2003, and the benefits are not fully effective until 2009.

These premiums are just the new added government premiums. They do not count other premiums such as Medigap.

I ask unanimous consent that this chart be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Year	Monthly premiums		Maximum annual benefits (50%)
	Clinton	Smith-Allard	Clinton	Smith-Allard
2001	0	0	0	$5,000
2002	0	0	0	5,000
2003	$26	0	$2,000	5,000
2004	30	0	2,500	5,000
2005	34	0	3,000	5,000
2006	38	0	3,500	5,000
2007	42	0	4,000	5,000
2008	46	0	4,500	5,000
2009	51	0	5,000	5,000

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. This chart shows all the premiums seniors would pay. As you can see the drug premium is nothing. If a senior has Medigap, premiums substantially decrease from current law under Smith-Allard. Under the administration plan, they stay the same—averaging $230.75 per month. So, if you compare all premiums, a senior would save an average of $96.83 per month.

I ask unanimous consent that this chart be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONTHLY PREMIUMS

	Clinton	Smith-Allard
Drugs	$51.00	0
Part B	45.50	45.50
Medigap	134.25	88.42
Total	230.75	133.92
Smith-Allard Premium Savings		96.83

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Some might say this is not much money. But let's take a look.

What could a senior do with $96.83 each month?

You can see that this is a lot of money when you think of how it would impact other expenses seniors have.

These numbers come from the Bureau of Labor Statistics Consumer Expenditure Surveys.

Finally, Mr. President, we will look at annual deductibles.

Smith-Allard combines the hospital, medical, and drug benefits into a single deductible.

Because seniors spend an average of $670 per year, they would just about reach the full hospital and medical deductible with just drug expenses.

Under the Clinton plan, drugs don't count toward the deductible, so even though seniors would have a 50 percent drug benefit, they would not be paying down their deductible.

I have talked about this plan with seniors, and they understand this concept. They love it.

I ask unanimous consent that these charts be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SMITH-ALLARD

Saves seniors $96.83 in monthly premiums. What could a senior do with $96.83 each month?

PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Seniors average $55 per month on drugs.

The premium savings alone would pay for all their drugs twice.

FOOD

Seniors spend $235 per month on groceries. Premium savings pay for nearly half.

Seniors spend $99 per month going out to eat. Premiums savings pay for nearly all dining out.

ENTERTAINMENT

Seniors spend $87 per month on entertainment. Premium savings pay for all entertainment.

TAXES

Seniors spend $93 per month on Federal, State, and other taxes. Premium savings pay for all taxes.

ANNUAL DEDUCTIBLES

	Clinton	Smith-Allard
Part A	$776
Part B	100	$675 combined.
Drugs	0
Total deductibles	876	675

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Let me just conclude speaking on this bill by saying that the benefits in this plan are delivered by private companies and regional entities, such as pharmaceutical benefit managers. These entities would negotiate with large drug companies and provide the drugs to Medicare seniors.

In addition, according to the actuaries who reviewed the legislation, there will be no adverse selection. Both the healthy and the sick will have an incentive to choose this plan. Everybody is in.

There are many different methods of providing prescription drug coverage for seniors, but I urge my colleagues—I plead with my colleagues—to look to the revenue-neutral methods that fund this benefit by the elimination of waste in the present system. I urge my colleagues to resist the temptation to raise Medicare premiums on the people who can least afford it.

I have vivid memories of seniors rocking Mr. Rostenkowski's car a few years ago when he decided to raise Medicare premiums. Let's look at it more specifically. The House's fiscal year 2001 budget—this is important—sets $40 billion aside for prescription drugs.

In the Senate, we are expected to do a budget that is going to set aside $20 billion now for prescription drugs, and $20 billion later.

We don't need either under my plan. We don't need any more money. We don't need $20 billion. We don't need $40 billion. We don't need $2 billion.

Let's use the money for debt reduction or tax credits for the uninsured rather than providing for prescription drugs. Let's use my revenue-neutral prescription plan instead.

I urge my colleagues to take a look at this approach. It provides prescription drugs in a way that will meet seniors' needs without hiking their premiums or adding more burden to the Federal treasury.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Nevada, Mr. REID, is recognized to speak for up to 20 minutes.

INDEPENDENT COUNSEL

Mr. REID. Mr. President, this past Tuesday, the Washington Post carried a story reporting that Independent Counsel Robert Ray, a lawyer who was trained in prosecutorial ethics by Rudolph Giuliani and who took over the special prosecutor duties from Ken Starr, is planning on continuing and even expanding his investigation of President Clinton. Mr. Ray has hired six new prosecutors and another investigator and plans to increase spending over the next 6 months by $3.5 million. Under this plan, he is seriously considering indicting the President after he leaves office for a number of things. He includes perjury, obstruction of justice, making false statements, and even conspiracy.

When I read this story, to say the least, I was surprised. One year ago, I stood in this Chamber at this same seat during the impeachment trial of the President of the United States and compared what was happening then to literature. I can no longer make that comparison because what is happening here is too outlandish and unbelievable to qualify anymore as literature. Every great story has an ending. Every play has a denouement.

This investigation has already lasted 6 years. It has cost Nevada taxpayers and the taxpayers of this country more than $52 million, not counting the money this new prosecutor wants to spend in the next 6 months.

More than the length of this proceeding, more than the cost of this proceeding, this story has crossed the line from Kafka to ''The Twilight Zone.'' It has drifted from prosecutorial intemperance to the brink of lunacy.

A number of years ago, the very articulate, brilliant Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia criticized the independent counsel statute. He pointed out that with the typical criminal case, the prosecutor starts with a crime and then looks for the perpetrator.

But with an independent counsel, the prosecutor starts with a suspect and searches to find a crime—any crime—to charge him or her with. Once placed in office, the prosecutor has built-in pressure to bring a charge rather than exonerate his target in order to justify his very existence; and in this instance, the tens of millions of dollars already spent. There is no more perfect example to what Justice Scalia was talking about than this so-called case.

Let's trace the confused and wandering thread of this narrative. This all began with the 20-year-old land deal called Whitewater—an Arkansas land deal 1,500 miles from here. The special prosecutor spent millions of dollars. Nothing turned up. But he kept going. He put a woman by the name of Susan McDougal in jail for 2 years, even though she had committed no crime. There is no debate about that. And she had never been convicted in a court of law. There is no debate about that.

Why? He wanted her to change her testimony and implicate the President and the people at the White House.

She would not do that. She went to jail. Eventually, after an innocent person, who had never been accused of a crime, had languished in jail for years, he gave up on Whitewater. He, the prosecutor, gave up on Whitewater, but he did not give up on looking for something on the White House.

First, he investigated the unfortunate death of Vince Foster and reached the same conclusion other investigators had already reached. It was a suicide.

I am personally resentful of what the prosecutor did in this instance. What he put the Foster family through is untoward, unfair, and immoral. My father committed suicide. It is very difficult for a family to go through a suicide.

Vince Foster was a good man. No one ever disputed that. He was despondent. He killed himself. That should have ended it. But no, what Starr wanted to do was to bring in all these conspiratorial theories that the President had had him killed.

Can you imagine that? One of the President's best friends, and he not only drags the President through this, but he also drags the Foster family through this.

This not only was immoral, in my opinion, but it cost millions of dollars. What did he get to show for it? Nothing. Then this prosecutor—persecutor, some would call him—took a look at the 1993 firings at the White House Travel Office, and reached the same conclusion that other investigators had reached. There was nothing there. Millions of dollars more, and nothing to show for it.

Then he took a look at a deposition in a civil suit brought by Paula Jones. That suit was dismissed by a Federal judge. But no matter, the prosecutor hired to look at a land deal had struck gold with a lie about a sex act in a case that was dismissed. He latched on to it, and refused to let go.

It did not matter that he did not have jurisdiction over this issue. He created jurisdiction by filing a statement with the Attorney General of the United States asserting the case had fallen into his lap by accident, when in fact there was credible evidence, sound evidence, that his staff had been in close contact with Paula Jones' lawyers from the very beginning and had worked with them and fed them information.

This is supposedly an unbiased prosecutor. He was obviously so excited about what he had found that he began leaking information to the press in violation of Federal law and Justice Department regulations. The court appointed an investigator to investigate the investigator. But no matter, he had found something that he could use to justify the millions of dollars he was spending, and he was not about to give it up.

His investigators questioned Monica Lewinsky alone in a hotel room. Can you imagine the audacity of this young woman asking for a lawyer? She asked for a lawyer. They denied her request. They would not let legal niceties get in their way.

A first-year law student knows a person being investigated for a crime is entitled to a lawyer. But not Ken Starr's minions.

The main evidence he had in this case were the tapes, the surreptitious tapes made by one Linda Tripp, who has been charged criminally by a Maryland grand jury for wiretapping. It did not matter that the tapes were made illegally. He was going to use them anyway. He kept on going. Still not enough.

When Monica Lewinsky would not cooperate with his probe, he dragged her parents before the grand jury. He subpoenaed bookstores to find out what kind of books they were buying and reading. The public was appalled. I was appalled. But he was still going to go ahead. Still not enough.

After investigating for a year, the independent counsel released a report to Congress that was embarrassing in its sexual explicitness and even more embarrassing in its biased reporting of the facts.

Monica Lewinsky said she had never been asked to lie and was never promised a job. But Prosecutor Starr never mentioned this once in the hundreds of pages of his report. It was so biased and so one sided that this, among other things, turned the public against the independent counsel and his unethical practices and unethical tactics. But no matter, he kept on going. Still not enough.

The House of Representatives voted to impeach on a straight party-line vote. This body, the Senate of the United States, voted on a bipartisan basis not to convict the President on any charge. Democrats and Republicans, listening to the evidence, voted not to convict.

The Congress of the United States then decided not to renew this awful law that authorized the independent counsel. I always opposed it. The law died last summer. And rightfully so. For 200 years, the Justice Department has done a good job. Over time, with the independent counsel we have had some real travesties. During the Reagan administration, what was done to that President by the independent counsel was wrong. We could go through other examples.

But even though the law died last summer, and it should have stopped there, it did not. Still, Starr had not had enough.

After failing to convict the President, in one last, desperate grab at the glory that he thought had escaped him, Starr focused the power of his office on a story told by a person by the name of Kathleen Willey—a story of an alleged touch that was completely irrelevant to his mandate.

Remember—Whitewater, Arkansas, 1,500 miles away.

When a friend of Ms. Willey, named Julie Hyatt Steele, dared to contradict the story, in effect, saying that Kathleen Willey was lying—how could she dare do such a thing?—Starr indicted her for perjury. And not only that—she could probably handle the perjury charge, which was so baseless—he threatened to have her children taken away from her. Who are these children? This good woman adopted orphans from Romania; and he threatened to send them back to Romania. What a guy—an innocent woman and her orphan-adopted children. These are the trophies that special prosecutor Ken Starr had to show for all of his efforts and all the pain he had caused. But, no, still not enough.

Our weary Nation was thankful when Starr began scaling down his investigation and, in October, finally resigned.

I thought that was the end of the story. Most Americans thought that was the end of the story. But surprisingly, apparently, shockingly, it is not the end. Still not enough.

The lynch mob, though, now has a new leader, one who is willing to prejudge the facts and unbalance the law in the spirit of his mentor, Rudy Giuliani, and, of course, his predecessor, Ken Starr. The new mob leader is Robert Ray. Apparently, he is not going to let the acquittal by this body, or the resignation of his predecessor, or the expiration of the statute under which he supposedly is acting, stand in his way. Still not enough.

This is a long, sad, and sordid story that should have ended long ago. The Office of the Independent Counsel has repeatedly stepped over the line of decency in its quest to find something—anything—on the President.

Now, the new special prosecutor says he is considering indicting the President after he leaves office next year. I say, enough is enough.

The President has been tried in this body. He has been acquitted. He suffered. His family suffered. His legacy is forever tarnished. He is deeply in debt to his lawyers. The Arkansas bar is considering withdrawing his license to practice law. He has not gone unpunished. Apparently, that is not enough for Mr. Ray; still, not enough.

In primitive legal systems, such as those of Communist countries and other totalitarian dictatorships, every minor technical violation of the law is met with the full force and fury of the government. Police are to be feared. But the greatness of our legal system is that it recognizes that because human beings are frail and fall short of perfection, mercy must season justice. At its heart, criminal law and the prosecutors charged with enforcing it exist to serve and protect the public. Our legal system contemplates discretion. Not every violation of the law should be pursued to the fullest extent because not every crime is the same. The decision not to prosecute or not to bring certain charges is as much of a prosecutor's job as a decision to bring charges.

When the impeachment hearings began, I cosponsored a censure resolution that in lieu of impeachment proceedings would have specifically provided the President remain subject to criminal actions in a court of law, such as any other citizen. That resolution was opposed in this body by Senators who instead voted to go down the impeachment road.

I was a trial lawyer before I came here. I understand there are offers of settlement made and withdrawn. That was an offer of settlement that attempted to expedite things and not have the spectacle that took place in the Senate. But once it was decided that the proper legal course of action was to pursue the constitutional impeachment proceeding, the decision should have been final and binding. It was still not enough.

Even Ken Starr, the original prosecutor, is quoted in published reports as holding the belief that once the Senate acts on an impeachment vote, further criminal actions are totally inappropriate.

There is a concept in our system of justice known as double jeopardy. It applies here. That doctrine holds that there is a limit to what a Government prosecutor can do to a United States citizen. It recognizes that there comes a point where continued investigation crosses the line into inappropriate Government harassment. An investigation into the truth should not be allowed to become a vendetta against an individual. It does recognize that enough is enough.

Many of his critics suggest that the President does not have greater rights under the law than any other citizen of this country. I agree. That is true. But equally true is the fact that the President should not have fewer rights than any other citizen. What the President did should not be lightly or easily forgiven, but it should not be blown out of proportion either by an unrelenting, unfair, trophy-seeking prosecutor with an unlimited budget in search of a conviction that won't serve the cause of justice. This case has gone on far too long. Tens of millions of dollars, tragedy, embarrassment, double jeopardy—enough is enough.

It can best be summed up, Mr. President, by syndicated columnist Richard Cohen in today's Washington Post, printed in newspapers all over America, entitled, ''Independent Counsel Overkill'', which ends by saying:

Give it up, Bob. Your best way of serving the country is to close down your office, lock the door and put Clinton behind you.

The country already has.

Mr. President, I yield whatever time I have remaining to the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2½ minutes remaining. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I appreciate the yielding of time by the gentleman from Nevada. I ask unanimous consent to proceed as in morning business for 5 minutes, and following my remarks, Senator COLLINS of Maine be recognized to speak for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. JOHNSON and Ms. COLLINS pertaining to the introduction of S. 2419 are printed in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. DODD, or his designee, is recognized to speak for up to 30 minutes.

ASSISTING COLOMBIA IN FIGHTING DRUG TRAFFICKING

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I anticipate the arrival of several other colleagues who may wish to speak on the same subject matter.

Yesterday, members of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and other interested Members of this body, had the opportunity to meet with the President of Colombia, His Excellency Andres Pastrana, during his visit to Washington. It was an extremely informative meeting. It was also apparent to all of us there that President Pastrana was terribly disappointed that the Senate of the United States had not approved, or even scheduled, early consideration of President Clinton's emergency supplemental request for Colombia to fight the narcotrafficking problem in that nation, which contributes significantly to the deaths and hardships in our own nation.

It is no hidden fact that some 50,000 people die in this country every year from drug-related incidents. Ninety percent of the cocaine and a significant amount of the heroin that is consumed in this country comes from Colombia.

Colombia has been devastated over the years by narcotraffickers. They are committed to trying to win this conflict. The European Community stands ready to help. They have asked the United States—the largest consuming nation of the products grown in their country—to be a part of this effort.

The leadership in this body has seen fit to delay this action until the normal appropriations process. I am disappointed by that, Mr. President. This is no small issue. It is a scourge in our streets. Clearly, we need to do as much as we can here at home, but this battle needs to be waged on all fronts, including in the production and transportation of nations such as Colombia.

Colombia's civil society has been ripped apart for decades by the violence and corruption that has swirled around their illicit international drug production and trafficking industry. High-profile assassinations of prominent Colombian officials who were trying to put an end to Colombia's drug cartels began nearly 20 years ago with the 1984 murder of Colombia's Minister of Justice, Rodrigo Lara Bonilla.

In 1985, narcoterrorists stormed the Palace of Justice in Bogota and murdered 11 Supreme Court Justices in that nation who had supported the extradition of drug kingpins and traffickers to the United States. In 1986, another Supreme Court Justice was murdered by drug traffickers, as were a well-known police captain and prominent Colombian journalist who had spoken out against these cartels. These narcoterrorists then commenced a bombing campaign throughout the year, in shopping malls, hotels, and neighborhood parks, killing scores of innocent people and terrorizing the general population.

Before drug kingpin Pablo Escobar was captured and killed by the police in 1993, he had been directly responsible for the murder of more than 4,000 Colombians. In 1994, it became clear that drug money had penetrated the highest levels of Colombian society and called into question the legitimacy of the Presidential elections of Ernesto Samper. Even today, fear of kidnapping and targeted killings by members of Colombia's drug organizations has Colombia's citizens living in fear for their very lives.

At this juncture, I ask unanimous consent that a column written by Thomas Friedman, which appeared last week in the New York Times, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times, Apr. 11, 2000]

SAVING COLOMBIA

(By Thomas Friedman)

BOGOTÁ, COLOMBIA.—I had a chat in Bogotá the other day with a group of government officials and businessmen, and I asked them all one question: When you go outside, how many security guards to you take with you? The answers were: 20, 6, 1, 8, 10, 2, 3, 8 and 5. No surprise. Some 3,000 people were kidnapped here last year by guerrillas, and many judges and journalists threatened with chilling messages, such as having funeral wreaths sent to their homes—with their names on them.

This is the terrifying context we have to keep in mind as we consider whether the U.S. Senate should approve the $1.7 billion plan to strengthen Colombia's ability to fight drug traffickers and forge a peace with the guerrillas. There are two ways to think about ''Plan Colombia,'' One way is to get wrapped up in the details—the helicopters, the training. The other way—the right way—is to step back and ask yourself what kind of courage it takes to stay in Colombia right now and be a judge who puts drug lords in jail or a politician who fights for the rule of law—knowing the criminals have millions in drug money and would kill your kids in a second.

It takes real courage, and that's why the people trying to hold this place together deserve our support. Sure, the democratic government of President Andrés Pastrana isn't perfect. But it has a core of decent officials who every day risk their lives by just going to work. Ask yourself it you would have the same courage.

I asked Mr. Pastrana why he stays. ''This is our country, it's the only country we have to leave to our children,'' shrugged the president, who was once kidnapped while running for Bogotá mayor. ''I believe in this country so much that even after being kidnapped, and even after having my wife's father killed by kidnappers, my wife and I had another baby—a girl. Look, we've sacrificed the best policemen, the best judges, the best journalists in this country. Whatever you want to write about us, don't write that we are not on the front line in the war on drugs.''

I asked the head of Colombia's navy, Adm. Sergio Garcia, what it was like to be an officer here. He said it was sort of like being a movie star, with people always trying to get at you, only they don't want your autograph, they want to kill you—''so even your friends don't want to be in a restaurant with you, and they don't want their kids near your kids.''

Colombians tell this joke: After god created Colombia, an angel asked God why he gave all the beauty to one country—rain forests, mountains, oceans, savanna—and God answered: ''Ha! Wait till you see what kind of people I put there!''

For years, Colombia's mafia processed cocaine grown from coca in Peru. But as Peru drove the coca growers out, they migrated to the rain forest in Southern Colombia—one of the largest unbroken expanses of rain forest left on earth, but also a region without much government. The drug mafia is now chopping down the rain forest—thousands of acres each month—then laying down herbicides, planting coca, processing it into cocaine in rain forest labs, throwing the chemicals in the rivers, and then flying the drugs out from grass airstrips.

Underlying Colombia's drug war is a real 40-year-old social struggle between Marxist guerrillas and rightwing vigilantes (32,000 killings last year). But let's cut the nonsense: Colombia's guerrillas may have started as a romantic movement against an unjust oligarchy—they may have started as a movement that ate to fight. But today, these guerrillas are fighting to eat—fighting the government because they make tons of money protecting drug operations in the rain forest. In between the guerrillas and the vigilantes (who also profit from drugs), Colombia's silent majority is held hostage.

Yes, Colombians are at fault for having been too tolerant of the early drug lords. And Americans are at fault for their insatiable appetite for cocaine. But here's the bottom line: If we give the Colombian majority the aid it needs to fight the drug Mafia there is a chance—and it's no sure thing—that it will be able to forge a domestic peace. If we don't—and this is a sure thing—the problem will only get worse, it will spew instability across this region, and the only rain forest your kids will ever see is the Rainforest Cafe.

(Ms. COLLINS assumed the chair.)

Mr. DODD. Madam President, the Colombian society is being ripped apart by this problem. It is estimated that there are a million displaced people in Colombia and that 100,000 a year leave Colombia because of fear for their lives over what these narcotraffickers and drug cartels have done to this country.

We often worry about political difficulties here. We get negative letters or nasty phone calls, and we think we are putting up with a lot.

In Colombia, if you take on the drug cartels, you and your family risk your lives. Journalists, judges, police officials, if they have the courage to stand up to these people, put their lives in jeopardy. This drug cartel would not exist but for the fact that Americans consume the products grown in this country.

I think we bear responsibility to work with a courageous government and a courageous people who are paying a terrible price because of our habits and our consumption.

For those reasons, I am disappointed we can't find the time to bring up this supplemental bill, deal with this issue, and offer help to the people of Colombia and to the government of Andres Pastrana, who has shown remarkable courage. This President was kidnapped by these very people. He is not just intellectually committed to this; he knows what it is like to be terrorized by these people. He is committed to doing everything he can. He can ask us for our help, but we cannot seem to find the time to bring up this issue.

When people wonder why we are not dealing more effectively with the drug problems of this country, you can point to this. We spend days discussing insignificant issues, in my view, by comparison to this. Yet we are told by leadership we don't have time to bring up an issue. At least debate it, and vote it down, if you want, but give us a chance to vote on whether or not we think providing $1.3 billion over the next several years to the people of Colombia to fight back is worthy of this institution's time. I think it is.

The President has asked for it. The House of Representatives, to their credit, has done so. Yet this body refuses to bring up this matter, even to discuss it on the floor of the Senate.

The legacy in Colombia is a legacy that President Pastrana confronted when he assumed office in 1988. He inherited the reins of government. Since then, he has demonstrated, in my view, leadership and a firm commitment to address the myriad of challenges facing his nation—drug products and trafficking, civil conflict and economic recession.

I have enormous respect for the manner in which President Pastrana has so quickly and aggressively taken steps to entice Colombia's largest guerrilla organization—the so-called FARC —to come to the negotiating table following on the heels of his election to office. The agenda for those ongoing talks covers the waterfront of economic and social issues that must be addressed if four decades of civil conflict are to be brought to a close.

President Pastrana has evidenced similar courage and a vision in tackling Colombia's illicit coca and poppy cultivation and processing industry. He authorized the extradition of a number of Colombia's most notorious drug traffickers to the United States, an extremely controversial decision in his country. He has also crafted a national plan—the so-called Plan Colombia—to address these intertwined problems in a comprehensive fashion.

President Pastrana has made it clear to us that the Government of Colombia is prepared to do its part in making available its own resources—billions of dollars—to fund the various elements of that plan for alternative development programs, for protection of human rights, for working for the resettlement of displaced persons, and for judicial reform, as well as assistance and training for Colombia's military police, the counternarcotics forces.

During our meeting yesterday, President Pastrana made it clear as well that he needs to seek and intends to ask for international cooperation if his plan is to succeed. In fact, he left last evening for London to meet with members of the European Community and has already received favorable indication that the Pacific rim will be a part of this international effort.

Colombia is currently the world's leading supplier of cocaine and one of the major sources of heroin. We are the largest consumer of these products. But this isn't only President Pastrana's problem; it is obviously ours as well.

All of the enormous demands in the United States and Europe for illicit products grown in Colombia are clearly an important part of the equation in keeping drug traffickers in business.

Moreover, despite billions of dollars spent here at home on law enforcement and drug education designed to reduce the U.S. demand, illicit drugs and consumption continue to pose a threat to the safety of our streets and to the health of the next generation of adults.

I know earlier today my good friend and colleague from New Hampshire, Senator GREGG, spoke about the fact that he is concerned that not enough money is being spent on domestic-related programs and programs to protect our borders against the onslaught of foreign drugs. If one looks at the full picture of our counternarcotics efforts, only a modest amount is currently being spent on the supply and reduction of the source.

Assuming Colombia's supplemental is approved, only slightly more than 15 percent of the total counternarcotics budget is being spent on programs off our shores where the products are grown: $2.9 billion out of a total of $18.5 billion is what the Colombian program has adopted, which would be roughly half of what is being spent overseas; $1.3 billion is being requested. A little more than $1 billion right now is being spent off our shores. More than $2 billion currently is being spent on border programs alone in this fiscal year.

If we do nothing to stem the supply at the very source, where it comes from, then I don't see how a border program alone can prevent the exploding supply of drugs from reaching America's streets and communities—rural and urban.

I am all for adding more money to programs—as the Senator from New Hampshire talked about—in the Drug Enforcement Administration and the Coast Guard. But I think we are kidding ourselves when we believe border programs alone will shut out illegal drugs. We need to attack this problem also at its source. There is not one place where this battle is going to be won.

We need to do everything we can to make our borders more secure. We need to make sure our police departments have the tools necessary at the local level. We need training programs and rehabilitation programs to get people permanently off these substances.

But we also need to attack the problem at its source. That also is part of the answer. It is also why it makes sense for Congress, in my view, to act expeditiously on President Clinton's and President Pastrana's request to us, so we can attack the drug problem as vigorously as possible at all these sources but particularly in Colombia.

It is in our interest to provide Colombian authorities the wherewithal to gain access to areas in southern Colombia and elsewhere where coca and poppy cultivation has exploded in recent years but where guerrilla organizations and right-wing paramilitary units have made interdiction efforts extremely difficult to conduct safely.

President Clinton has decided that Plan Colombia is worthy of U.S. support. The House leadership has also decided that it is in our national interest to do so.

Fifty-two thousand Americans are dying every year in drug-related deaths. That is almost as many as died in the entire Vietnam conflict. Every year, we lose that many in drug-related deaths. If that is not a U.S. interest to which to try to respond, I don't know what is. As much as we need to fight this at home, we also need to fight it at its source.

There is clearly bipartisan support for this program. It is not perfect. It is not a program I would even necessarily write, nor maybe the Presiding Officer, nor would my colleague from California, whom I see on the floor. But let's not fly-speck and nickel-and-dime this issue. Let's at least get it to the floor, debate it, discuss it, amend it, and modify it. But don't deny us a chance to even vote on this issue as we now enter another recess this year. For another 10 days, we will not be here. The House is out, I am told, maybe another week after that. Then it is May, June, and July. How many more deaths will there be on our streets? How many more Colombians have to die because of U.S. consumption and addiction?

They have a democratic government, the oldest democracy in Latin America, whose very sovereignty is at stake. This country is being ripped apart. They are asking for our help, for the cooperation of Europe and other nations to fight back against these people and this multibillion-dollar operation.

We don't even have the time to debate or discuss it.

I promise you that over this Easter break, there will be a lot of speeches given about the problems of drugs in our streets and our narcotics efforts. Yet another day will go by when we cast one vote here, or two votes here—maybe—and no effort is made to bring this matter to the attention of the American public and to debate it on the floor of the Senate.

Despite this bipartisan support, the measure is currently stalled. In the Senate, the majority leader suggested the clock has run out on an emergency supplemental. That has not been the history or experience of the Senate. We have dealt with many supplementals after April. I hope maybe we can do so in this case as well.

We asked President Clinton during our meeting for his assessment of the likelihood that Plan Colombia will work in the absence of U.S. assistance being forthcoming in the near future. We also asked about the prospects for other governments contributing resources to this effort in the absence of U.S. moneys being forthcoming. President Clinton stressed unequivocally that the support of the United States is the linchpin to getting additional international support and for the ultimate success of this plan.

Time is running out for the people of Colombia. Madam President, 100,000 are leaving every year. A million are displaced. Thousands die every year. We need to act now and provide the necessary funding so that Plan Colombia can be fully implemented. It is the only way I know to protect the democratic institutions of that country and throughout the region from falling prey to the criminal assaults of illegal drug cartels. Moreover, it is in our self-interest to do so. It is the only way to ensure that our children will be free from the threat of drug peddlers as they walk to and from school every day, that communities are safe from drug-related crimes which have taken the lives of too many innocent victims.

There is still time to act and I hope we do so. I think it is tragic we have not. I note the presence of my colleague from California, who has been one of the stalwarts for years on this issue, and I am pleased she is here to talk on this subject as well.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, I begin by thanking the Senator from Connecticut. I don't think there is anyone else in the Senate who has the kind of expertise about South America as has Senator DODD of Connecticut. He speaks the language. He has studied. He has traveled in the country widely. He has been to Colombia.

On how many occasions has the Senator been to Colombia?

Mr. DODD. I just came back. I was there a couple of months ago and spent time with President Clinton and others involved in this effort. The most recent visit was just a few weeks ago.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I think the Senator has stated the case about as well as it can be stated. I have never been to Colombia. I come at this a little differently, as one who has watched the development of major narcotics trafficking over a long period of time. My State is very much influenced and affected by this kind of narcotrafficking.

I have worked with Senator COVERDELL of Georgia in the certification of Mexico. I have watched the development of the big transportation cartels because Colombia is the source country of most of the cocaine. I have watched the big transportation cartels develop in Mexico. I have watched them interface with gangs in our country. I have watched California become the export State of gangs. The Crips and Bloods started in Los Angeles and are now in 118 American cities. I have watched the gang deaths in America over drugs.

It is a huge problem. I have watched the debate over supply versus demand. We spend dollars on demand. In fact, local jurisdictions are the ones that mount the demand programs, the prevention, the counseling, the drug abuse programs. The one area in which the Federal Government has total responsibility is interdiction at our borders; it is international narcotics, trafficking, and control. These big amount of drugs come from outside of the United States; therefore, what we do affects our role.

I did not know President Pastrana. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee, on which I am fortunate to sit, had a meeting with him in the appropriations room during his last trip. I met this young President for the first time. Prior to that, I had been visited by the head of the military under the former government who pointed out with great alarm what he thought was happening and even said he didn't think Pastrana was being strong enough in the drug area.

The former head of the military pointed out to me that a third of the country at that time was under control of narcoterrorists. That is a country the size of Switzerland. That is how large the geographic area is. He pointed out that a million and a half citizens were refugees within their own country; 300,000 had fled. He believed that 60,000 had tried to come into this country illegally, people who were devastated by this, running in fear for their lives because of it.

We do have a role to play. He pointed out to me there were 3,000 citizens held hostage by narcoterrorists, 250 of them local police, 250 of them soldiers. Nobody knows what happens to these people.

I met President Pastrana. He was a very sincere leader, a leader who had been sobered by this, a leader determined to do something about it, a leader pleading for backup and help by the United States.

Is it in our national interests to help? I believe it is. All of these drugs come to our country, all of these cartels interface with American gangs, all of these cartels are brutal. They kill anyone who stands in their way—even a Catholic cardinal in Mexico. They kill newspaper heads who write against them. They kill anyone who stands up and says no.

The question that Tom Friedman mentioned so eloquently in his New York Times column—and I ask this of the Senator from Connecticut—if someone comes to you and says: here is half a million in an envelope, here is a picture of your wife and where she has her hair done, and a picture of your children and the schools they go to, which will you take?

I ask the Senator from Connecticut what kind of courage does it take to stand against that kind of entreaty?

Mr. DODD. The Senator from California has answered her own question by raising it. It takes a remarkable amount of courage.

I noted earlier and introduced as part of the RECORD the article by Tom Friedman because they so clearly made the point, of the courage of these people. I mentioned 11 members of the Supreme Court in Colombia were gunned down in 1985. Literally thousands of people are kidnapped and executed every year; journalists, just by being there and speaking out or saying anything against these narcotraffickers.

This is a business that collects $60 billion a year from this country alone. President Pastrana tells me that in Colombia $100 million is used just to bribe local police officers and functionaries who in some cases earn less than $100 or $200 a month to raise their families. Then someone shows up and offers them an envelope of thousands of dollars to turn the other way, look the other way, don't examine the truck.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DODD. I am happy to yield to the Senator.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I have seen it impact our border areas in the United States. I go down to Otay Mesa where trucks are lined up by the thousands and you have Customs agents who maybe earn $45,000 or $50,000 a year—we know some trucks are loaded with tons of cocaine, with street values of millions of dollars—taking a bribe, maybe half a million dollars just to turn their head and let that truck go through.

This is where the corruption becomes so evil and where it is not just confined to jungle areas of Colombia or outposts in Mexico or anywhere else in the Andean region but comes right into the United States as well.

Mr. DODD. If the Senator will yield further, it is this corrosive corruption that spreads. It begins in a small hamlet or borough in Colombia, and once it gets through there, then it reaches up into the higher elevations of Government there and then spills across the borders. Before you know it, as the Senator from California has pointed out, it spreads. If you do not stand up to these people early on and fight back, then you, in a sense, become an accomplice to the results, to what occurs.

We have been asked, as the Senator from California has pointed out, by the good and decent Government of President Pastrana, that our Nation step up and help—not do it all, not take on the entire responsibility, but to help him regain the sovereignty of his own nation, to eliminate the corruption, and give the people of Colombia a chance for a decent future.

Our inability to bring up this supplemental to at least debate and discuss this issue is deplorable and sad, deeply sad—that we do not have the time, apparently, to discuss this kind of issue which can make such a difference in the lives of the people of Colombia and, more importantly, in some ways, to the citizens of this country who lose their children every day to these drug cartels, these gangs terrorizing the streets of this country because of drugs. Mr. President, 52,000 a year die on average in drug-related deaths. If that is not enough of a U.S. interest to respond to it, I don't know what is.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I thank the distinguished Senator from Connecticut. I think the point is well taken. I, for one, was delighted—because I tend to read all of Tom Friedman's articles in the New York Times—he spent time in Colombia. I was so pleased that he saw what was the central point in all of this debate. I want to quote him. I know the Senator did earlier, and I hope this is not redundant.

He said there are two ways to look at Plan Colombia. One is to get wrapped up in the details—the helicopters, the training, why we might or might not like it. The other way, and he suggests the right way, is to step back and ask yourself: What kind of courage does it take?

That is what we are talking about here, what kind of courage it takes to stay in Colombia right now—to be a judge who puts drug lords in jail or be a politician such as the President of the country, or the Attorney General, or the generals of the army, or local public officials who fight for the rule of law, knowing that criminals have millions of dollars in drug money and would kill their kids in a second. That is not an esoteric concept. The numbers of children of families who have been killed in drug wars are legion.

These people do not care for anybody who stands in their way. The debilitating part about it is the ability to corrupt to get your way. How many people can actually stand up to that? We see over and over and over again where a respected public official, a police officer, a judge, a prosecutor gives in to this kind of tyranny. The Ariano Felix Cartel in Mexico is notorious for this. They will kill anybody standing in their way. Their cocaine comes right out of Colombia. There you have the narcoterrorists controlling a third of their country and everybody and everything within that third.

So the real courage, as Mr. Friedman points out, is that the people who are trying to do the right thing deserve our support. This is our hemisphere; it is not another hemisphere. The results of drug trafficking, the results of narcoterrorism, only spread. They do not contain themselves; they spread. The spread is northerly into our country.

So I make this point again and again and again: This supplemental appropriation, an appropriation in our budget, is in our national interest. It is in the American national interest to stand tall against the cartels, to stand tall against this kind of terrorism, to support public officials who are willing to do the same thing. That support should be for the Attorney General of Mexico, the President of Mexico, the President of Colombia, the Attorney General of Colombia, the Judges of Colombia, the people who have been able to come back from M–11 and what was done in their country to try to institute a democracy. These are the people who recognize that, yes, there are problems but they are trying to make the changes. The people who plead to this country say: Help us. Don't do the whole thing; just do a part of it. Put your imprimatur of leadership on it so other nations will follow and so we will have the ability to control something which, if we do not, will spread through the whole Andean region and, I contend, to Mexico and to the United States as well.

I think you have, essentially, a major battle in this area of South America that will effectively determine the future of these countries—Colombia, the Andean region, Mexico—and to a degree our own country.

I very much hope people will reconsider and really look at how important it is to stop this trafficking. I remember the day—and it was in the 1980s—we in the cities of America never saw an arrest involving a ton of cocaine or a ton of any other substances, hundreds of pounds of drugs at one time. Now the arrests are being made, and they are finding 5 tons, 6 tons, 4 tons.

The business that is inherent in this, the corruption that comes with it, is so enormous it is beyond anything we can possibly conceive. The complicity by transportation companies is one of the reasons Senator COVERDELL and I worked together on this drug kingpin bill, to apply the RICO statutes to companies doing business with the cartels who simply turn their heads when there are 5 tons of cocaine on a train coming into this country or in a container as part of a fleet of trucks that come across the border every day. People have to open their eyes. They have to see what is happening. We have to begin to support the leaders who will stand tall.

I will be very candid with the Senator from Connecticut and our distinguished Presiding Officer from the great State of Maine. If somebody came to me with a picture of my daughter or my granddaughter, I don't know what I would do. I don't know. I believe I would tell them where to get off, but I don't really know. It is like the person who jumps in the river to save someone who is drowning. You don't really know until you are in that situation.

The fact is, thousands of people in Colombia are in that situation on a daily basis. What they are saying is: Help, United States. Use your leadership. Give us the resources because we need helicopters that can fly at a certain altitude and have a certain range. The Huey cannot do it; it is the Black Hawk. We need a certain altitude for certain areas. The Huey can't do it; give us the Black Hawk. Help us with some of this other equipment we need and stand by us as we make the battle real.

If we are to put our money where our mouth is, it has to be to fight the major trafficker. It has to be to fight the narcoterrorist. It has to be to stand up for the political leaders who are willing to stand against them.

Mr. DODD. Madam President, if my distinguished colleague will yield one more time, I commend her immensely for her heartfelt statement and use this as another appeal. We are leaving for another week now. There are only two of us here, but I suspect our sentiments are shared by a majority of our colleagues, both Republicans and Democrats. We make an appeal to the majority leader to reconsider this decision on bringing up a supplemental, a boiled-down one if necessary, to focus on this issue and a couple of others that legitimately fall into the category of emergency.

I say this because I think the last statement made by our distinguished colleague from California is an important one. What we say here does not go unnoticed. What we do here or not do here does not go unnoticed. The greatest fear the narcotraffickers have is that there will be a united front to take them on.

That is their greatest fear. They worry about a government in Colombia that is not afraid to extradite. They do not want to be extradited because they know we are not afraid to lock them up forever, if necessary. They are frightened about a European Community and other Latin American countries joining in a common effort. As every one of these leaders will tell you, they know what happens in Colombia can happen in Venezuela, in Ecuador, and happened in Peru. It is happening in Bolivia. These are better financed operations than any insurgency we have seen before with millions of dollars.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Can I ask the Senator a question? I believe the Senator was in the Senate when President Bush gave the order to send American troops to Panama because so many heavy narcotics were coming through Panama, much of it under the control of one person, a general by the name of Manuel Noriega. They picked up this general and brought him back to the United States for trial. To this day, he is in Federal prison in the United States, and the problem has been remedied in Panama. This was the kind of direct recognition of a problem and a response that has solved the problem. Does the Senator agree?

Mr. DODD. I do. I say to my friend and colleague from California, I remember it very well. In fact, the decision to go in was made late at night. There was talk about it ahead of time. I received a call, as I think other Members of the Senate did, in the wee hours of the morning informing us that the effort was about to be undertaken.

I recall early that morning going on a couple national television programs to discuss it. I expressed my strong support for what President Bush was doing in Panama. I thought it was important he have bipartisan support in the effort in Panama.

The Senator from California is absolutely correct, General Noriega was removed. While the problem has not been eliminated entirely in Panama, that action certainly made a huge difference. It is a good case to point out.

We need that kind of leadership in the Senate on this issue, in my view. The narcotraffickers in Bogota, Colombia, in the flatlands, the llanos, as they call them, of southern Colombia know what we are not doing in the Senate. They know President Pastrana has asked for our help. They are watching, and they see a Senate of the United States that says it does not have time to bring this up or does not think it is that important to bring up. I can tell my colleague firsthand there is no more encouraging sign to these people than our apparent disinterest in the subject matter.

Every day we wait and do not respond, their grip grows stronger. I am not exaggerating when I tell the Senator that the sovereignty of this country of Colombia is at stake.

The Senator from California has pointed out a third of the country has already been lost to them. The oldest democracy in Latin America can be lost. Mark my words. This is a well-heeled and well-financed operation. Millions of dollars every day pour into the coffers of these insurgency groups through the narcotrafficking efforts. If we wait another week or another month, we make it that much more difficult to address this issue. We have a courageous President and a courageous country in Colombia and other nations willing to step up.

We are the largest consuming country. We are the addicted nation. The reason these campesinos and farmers grow the poppy seeds and grow the heroin is because there are people here who consume it.

The journalists, the politicians, the judges, and the police officers are willing to fight back. They want to know whether or not we are going to join with them in that fight. That is all we are asking: Stand up and join them in that fight.

I am hopeful, again, before too many more weeks go by that we will respond. The admiration I have for the House for having done so is tremendous. My admiration for the President for calling on us to do it is tremendous.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Can I bring up another subject? One of the criticisms I have heard is we spend too much on this kind of activity already, and we need to spend more on demand. In fact, as we both know, there are provisions in this bill to meet the demand needs in our own country.

Mr. DODD. Right.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I was interested in finding out how much of our entire drug control budget is devoted to international drug control efforts. Does the Senator have an idea what that amount is?

Mr. DODD. I do. The total amount we spend—my colleague can correct me—is about $18.5 billion total—domestic and foreign, all the efforts. Of the $18.5 billion, if one excludes the Colombian plan money, it is about $1.5 billion out of the—three my colleague is about to say?

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. No, it is 3 percent.

Mr. DODD. Three percent.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Only 3 percent of that entire drug budget, which the Senator just accurately stated, goes to international narcotics control. Yet we know the drugs are coming in in 5-ton lots. We know the one area of responsibility we have is to control the borders in international drug control. No local government can do that, most certainly, and yet only 3 percent of the budget goes for that.

Mr. DODD. My colleague says we spend about $2 billion on our borders, as she points out, and on the drug abuse programs, the efforts of local authorities, but it is a fraction. I am not suggesting and I do not think my colleague from California is suggesting we spend all of the money there or even a half of the money there. This is a multifaceted effort.

We have to spend it locally. We have to fight it at the local level. We have to have rehabilitation efforts, drug abuse efforts. We have to be fighting it at the borders of this country, but we also need to go to the source, and we are not going to the source.

Here is a country willing to fight back. Many times we find it difficult to get cooperation from governments. Here is the President of Colombia who was kidnaped and knows firsthand what it is to live under this kind of system, who is coming to us and saying: Look, we are going to put $4 billion of our own money into this effort. The Europeans are willing to step up. Can you help? The addicted nation, can you help?

Up to this point, this Chamber has said no.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I will conclude with one additional comment. Colombia is the source country for 80 percent of the cocaine consumed in this Nation. It is the source country of 70 percent of the heroin consumed in this Nation. It is a country under siege. It is a country where one-third of the geographic area is controlled by narcoterrorists, and it happens to have a government that is willing to stand up and say: We want to do something about it. United States, help us in a multilateral effort do something about it.

This Senate is saying it does not have time to consider the request. It is in our national interest to consider the request. It is in our national interest to have debate on the request. It is in our national interest to appropriate the dollars for this request.

I end by summarizing something Mr. Friedman said in the New York Times:

> If we give the Colombian majority the aid it needs to fight the drug Mafia, there is a chance—and it's no sure thing —that it will be able to forge a domestic peace. If we don't —and this is a sure thing—the problem will only get worse, it will spew instability across this region, and the only rain forest your kids will ever see is the Rainforest Cafe.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAIG). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, are we in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is in morning business until 2 o'clock.

THE WEALTH GAP

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, in the debate over tax cuts our attention is understandably drawn to the question of who pays those taxes and from this a debate commonly ensues over who should get the benefits of tax reductions. This argument leads us to consider the disparities of income and the need to make certain that our tax laws are not written so as to increase income inequality and hopefully to write our tax laws in order to give a boost to those whose wages are lower.

Today, I rise to talk about a problem facing Americans that is related to but different from the income inequality. The problem I will address today is the growing gap between the richest Americans and the poorest.

The latest Statistics of Income Bulletin from the IRS shows that the combined net worth of the top 4.4 million Americans was $6.7 trillion in 1995. In other words, the top 2.5 percent of our population held 27.4 percent of the Nation's wealth in the mid-1990s. No doubt this group of wealthy Americans feels very financially secure.

But what about the other 97.5 percent of Americans? Is the security of wealth spread in a reasonably equitable way across all American households? The answer in my view, is a tragic and emphatic no.

Although there is a perception that the recent rapid growth in the stock market has produced widespread economic gains among all income groups, a majority of households still do not own stock-based assets and, thus, have not participated in the growth of the 1990s economy. A complete picture is presented in the United States Federal Reserve's Survey on Consumer Finances. This report provides us with the following statistics:

Since 1989, the share of net worth owned by the top 1 percent of American households has grown from 37.4 percent to 39.1 percent, while the share of net worth held by the bottom 40 percent of households has dropped from .9 percent to a statistically near insignificant .2 percent.

Nearly 60 percent of the wealth held by families in the lowest 90 percent of the population is in the family home—not liquid assets that can be used as a source of income and security at retirement. Families in the lowest 90 percent of the population had only 3 percent of their assets in stocks and bonds.

While an increasing number of Americans are purchasing stock-based equities—49 percent in 1999 vs. 40 percent in 1995—only 29 percent of households own stock worth more than $5,000, and the top 10 percent of households in the distribution hold 88.4 percent of the value of all stocks and mutual funds. In fact, the top 1 percent holds 51.4 percent of the value of all stocks and mutual funds—while the bottom 90 percent hold just 11.6 percent of the total value.

These statistics show that the gains of the great 1990s stock market runup have not benefitted a majority of Americans. The gains have not narrowed the gap between the wealthiest in America and the poorest in America. In fact, the data analyzed in a study done by the preeminent wealth statistician, Mr. Ed Wolff, reveals that the wealthiest 10 percent of households enjoyed 85 percent of the stock market gains from 1989 until 1998.

Why should we be so concerned about the growing wealth gap? I believe the answer is that the ownership of wealth brings security to people's lives and because the ownership of wealth opens up new opportunities and because the ownership of wealth transforms the way people view their futures.

An individual with no financial assets—and no means to accumulate financial assets—cannot count on a secure retirement, cannot ensure that his or her future health care needs will be met, and cannot save effectively for important life milestones, such as the purchase of a first home or the funding of a child's college education.

Americans clearly understand and desire the freedom and security that comes with wealth. We can point to the ongoing increase in participation rates in 401(k) plans as evidence that people are concerned about amassing wealth for a secure retirement. We can even point to the continued growing popularity of lotteries and game shows like ''Who Wants to Be A Millionaire'' as evidence that people value the security of wealth—especially wealth that is acquired quickly.

The virtues of savings and wealth accumulation are clear. But if the virtues are so clear, why aren't more Americans voluntarily increasing their savings? Not a TV show goes by without an advertisement from a financial services company offering investment advice and investment products. Not a week goes by without a front page story about the Social Security funding ''crisis''—implicitly warning people to save for their own retirements. So why aren't more Americans saving?

I have identified barriers that I believe continue to prevent a substantial portion of the American population from being able to save, to invest, and to accumulate wealth.

Barrier No. 1 is education.

No single factor is a greater predictor of income and wealth than education. Property educated and trained individuals can command a premium salary because they are in high demand and in short supply. Only one-third of households are headed by someone with a college degree. These households have a median before-tax income of $55,000 and a median net worth of $146,400. Households headed by a person with no high school diploma have a median income of $15,500 and a net worth of $20,000.

In addition to disparate levels of educational attainment, there is a huge problem in America with a specific lack of investor education. Economics and Finance are not required courses in most school districts across the United States. As a result, too few people understand the magic of compounding interest rates and, as a consequence, wait too long to begin saving for their retirement.

The second barrier is income.

Of course, one of the fundamental rules of wealth accumulation is that you must have income that you can set aside in order to create substantial wealth. A quarter of families in the United States are bringing home between $10,000 and $25,000 a year. Forty percent of American households are bringing in less than $31,000 per year. After FICA taxes of $2,372 and $2,600 in Federal and State income taxes, a typical family of four has little left over for savings.

Not only have low and moderate income Americans not shared in the growth of a booming stock market, but they have also not shared in the growth of weekly paychecks. According to the most recent Survey on Consumer Finances by the Federal Reserve Board, mean income grew between 1995 and 1998 only for families headed by individuals with at least some college education—mean incomes for all education groups in 1998 were lower than they had been in 1989. Median income only rose appreciably between 1989 and 1998 for those with a college degree.

When you look at two of the lowest income groups, the story of income stagnation is quite grim. Nearly 13 percent of families earned less than $10,000 in 1998. The median salary of this group was $6,200—a real decline of 6 percent since 1989. Nearly one-quarter of families earned between $10,000 and $25,000 in 1998. Of these families, the median salary was $16,900—a real increase of only 2.4 percent since 1989. Clearly, the capacity of this group to save on its own is very limited.

Barrier No. 3 is payroll taxes.

The payroll tax may not seem like much of a barrier to Americans with income over $100,000, who only have to pay taxes on the first $76,200 of income, but to American families earning less than $25,000—40 percent of all households—it is a tremendous bite. The total payroll tax paid by an individual earning $25,000 per year and his employer is $3,825. This is several times greater than their income tax bill. For those who propose spending the Social Security tax surplus to enhance Social Security or Medicare benefits, it is worth noting that the lowest 40 percent of American earners pay more than 40 percent of the benefits for both Social Security and Part A Medicare. And those are the individuals must apt to be uninsured.

Barrier No. 4 is the burden of debt.

Consumer debt has a major impact on a household's ability to save. According to the latest SCF, households earning less than $25,000 annually bear the most significant burden of debt compared to their income. The median ratio of debt payments to income among those earning less than $10,000 is 20.3 percent; among those earning $10,000 to $25,000, the ratio is 17.8 percent. In fact, 32 percent of those making less than $10,000 pay more than 40 percent of their income in debt payments, an increase of 16 percent since 1995. About 20 percent of those making between $10,000 and $25,000 devote more than 40 percent of their income to debt payments. Finally, 15.1 percent of households with less than $10,000 of income had debt payments 60 days past due—a doubling since 1995—which not only reflects an inability to keep up with debt payments but also contributes to bad credit and an inability to purchase a future home, etc.

The Federal Government's publicly-held debt also has an indirect impact on the ability of workers to save. As a major borrower, the Federal Government increases interest rates. Higher interest rates lower private capital formation, which in turn hampers growth in productivity and living standards. In addition, higher interest rates on government debt translate into higher interest rates on mortgages, student loans, and credit card debt. When individuals pay higher interest rates, fewer resources are available for saving and investing.

With all of these barriers to wealth accumulation, what can we, as lawmakers, do to eliminate these barriers? I believe the answer is twofold. We must create new savings incentives for low and moderate income workers and we must create a mandatory savings mechanism for all workers.

A number of legislation initiatives have been offered to help low and income workers save. For years, Senator LIEBERMAN has championed an effort to expand Individual Development Accounts beyond a pilot program. IDAs are a way to encourage lower income folks to save for the purchase of a home, the establishment of a business, or education.

President Clinton has offered an interesting plan to get low and moderate income families to participate in employer pension plans through a government savings match program. While Senators GRAHAM and GRASSLEY and Representatives PORTMAN and CARDIN have offered comprehensive pension reform proposals designed to expand pension coverage among low income workers.

I, along with a bipartisan group of Senate and House Members, have introduced a Social Security reform plan that allows workers to put a portion of their FICA tax dollars into individual savings accounts. Our plan also calls for an additional government savings match program for low income workers. In addition, our plan calls for opening mandatory savings accounts at birth through the KidSave program.

What would this plan do? Fifty years from now we would have a much different wealth distribution situation in America. Men and women who today have no chance of accumulating real wealth would accumulate the kind of wealth that provides them with meaningful financial security. A new generation of Americans would be heading toward their retirement years less dependent on government transfers for health or income. If this plan were enacted, it would immediately change Americans' attitude towards saving on account of informing tens of millions of the power of compounding interest rates.

Sadly, critics of this proposal to help low income workers acquire assets and share in the growth of the American economy too often misdescribe the impact. The key line that is used in opposition is: "I am against privatization of Social Security." This line will usually produce a round of applause with senior groups who would not be affected by any of the proposals. Even sadder, these critics are also the same ones who prefer to merely offer solutions that include transferring more income and thereby increasing dependency on the Government. I do not believe proposals that merely transfer more income will solve the problem of inequitable distribution of wealth.

Ownership of wealth is a much more reliable way of becoming financially secure in old age than promises by politicians to tax and transfer income. Ownership of wealth produces greater independence and happiness. The maldistribution of wealth, the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer, is not healthy for a liberal democracy and a free market economy such as ours. The costs of financing health and retirement income needs of the baby boom generation exceeds the tax paying capacity of the generations that follow them.

So, Mr. President, after we have spent time debating the need to solve the problem of income inequality we need to turn to the matter of wealth inequality. And when we do we will quickly learn that we will not solve the problem of the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer by beating up on the rich. We will solve the problem by lifting the poor out of poverty with programs that enable them to accumulate wealth in a variety of ways including modernizing and improving the Social Security program so that it becomes a means of saving money and a mechanism for transferring income.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute of my time to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

AIDAN MICHAEL CRAIG

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, at the end of the day, we are going to be adjourning for the Easter recess, or at least that is what is anticipated at this time. This Easter recess is going to be a special time for me because I am going home to Idaho to see a new grandbaby I have not yet seen, except by pictures that have been transmitted through the Internet.

His grandmother has already been out there to hold him in her arms. Both Suzanne and I are extremely excited that our son Mike and his wife Stephanie have provided us with a beautiful new grandbaby called Aidan Michael Craig.

We have already enjoyed the excitement of grandmother and grandfatherhood, and now we have one more extension of that. This coming week, I am going to have that unique privilege that only comes with being a grandparent; that is, to hold that grandbaby in your arms. This Easter recess is a special time for me. I wanted to share with all of my colleagues in the Senate that it will be a joyous time for both me and my wife Suzanne.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may consume off the time allotted to this side of the aisle. We have 44 minutes remaining; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

REDUCING TAXES FOR MARRIED COUPLES

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I take this opportunity, at the start of debate on this important bill to reduce taxes for married couples by eliminating the marriage tax penalty, to give some reaction to comments made from the other side of the aisle yesterday. My reaction probably should have been given last night, but the environment at that time was such that other Members wanted to speak on issues other than the marriage tax penalty, so I did not take advantage of the opportunity. It would have been more appropriate for me to respond to the Senate minority leader and other Members of the other side of the aisle last night so it would be more in context.

These comments are in regard to our efforts to repeal the marriage tax penalty and also to clear up some of the inaccurate and misleading statements made by the other side of the Senate.

We heard the charge made yesterday by the minority leader that, in passing this bill, we are going to be dipping into the Social Security surplus. Of course, that is going to be the Democratic mantra from now on, even though it is not the truth. Our own budget document is evidence of it not being our intent. Knowing the other side is salivating at trying to make this bogus political charge stick, we have been very careful in making sure we stay within the $150 billion in tax relief authorized in the budget resolution that will be before us later today in the form of the conference committee report on the budget for the year 2001.

By carefully staying within these limits, we aren't touching one cent of Social Security money. That is important because people know the irresponsibility of Congress from 1969 until the Republican majority of Congress, the first Republican majority in both Houses of Congress in 40 years, finally got the job done of balancing the budget with decisions made in 1997. For the first time in 43 years, we are paying down on the national debt 3 years in a row. The budget we are going to adopt this afternoon for the year 2001 will be the fourth year, and we will be paying down $177 billion on that off the debt in the budget year 2001.

Regardless of what the members of the other side of the aisle say, this marriage tax penalty bill we are going to pass to reduce taxes for the average married couple by $1,400, because they will no longer get hit with the marriage penalty, fits into the budget and doesn't use one cent of Social Security money to accomplish our goal of justice for middle-class married families in America.

Now, we also heard the misleading charge yesterday that we in the majority are trying to dictate what amendments the Democrats could offer. All we have been trying to do is to bring some order to this process so we can get this bill, which even the President of the United States says ought to pass. In his State of the Union Message, he asked us to pass a bill eliminating the marriage tax penalty. So, yesterday, they said we were trying to dictate amendments. Well, during that discussion, we asked if second-degree amendments could be in order to the Democrats' first-degree amendments. We were told absolutely not. So the Democratic side is doing as much dictating as anyone. If we can be accused of complaining about the amendments they want to offer and objecting to it, then they have no right to deny us the opportunity to offer second-degree amendments to their amendments.

In fact, the assistant minority leader stated that his caucus was in lockstep behind the minority leader. Well, that is simply part of the problem. The other side does walk in lockstep against reform in an attempt to paint this Congress as a do-nothing Congress. Funny, isn't it, how when Democrats brag about being in lockstep and unanimity behind their leader, somehow that isn't being partisan. But if Republicans were to vote in lockstep behind our leader, they would say we are being very partisan.

So, again, it seems as if we have a double standard that is not quite justified. Maybe my accusations should be directed more toward the press and media than the other side of the aisle and their statements. But it seems so often if Republicans are together, we are being partisan. But if Democrats are together, they aren't being partisan. As I have followed the stories on this in the press for the last 2 days, I haven't seen any charge of partisanship by the media toward the other side of the aisle. But, boy, I bet we Republicans would be painted as partisan.

Unfortunately, for the other side, this Congress has already made substantial progress and will continue to do so, and they will never be able to label us as a do-nothing Congress. I wish, though, that we had a few independent thinkers on the other side of the aisle, as we do on our side of the aisle, and not the lockstep following of leaders to the extent which it is. All I have to do as a Republican is proudly point out the independence of Senator MCCAIN on this side of the aisle to show that there are Republicans who are independent and do not always follow in lockstep. It would be nice if there were a few ''Senator McCains'' on the other side of the aisle who were willing to break ranks and be very independent.

A couple of the amendments the Democrats want to offer deal with prescription drugs. Of course, these are political amendments. We Republicans have already set aside $40 billion in our budget to deal with Medicare and prescription drugs. All we need to do is have people on that side of the aisle—as there are bipartisan Medicare reform proposals with prescription drug provisions in them—get behind some of these bipartisan approaches and get the White House behind them. We will be glad to move on those within the $40 billion we have set aside in our budget to deal with Medicare reform and prescription drugs because we all know this problem has to be solved. We know that some seniors can't afford prescription drugs. Some seniors have to choose between food and drugs. That is not a choice they should have to make. And we have, consequently, taken the initiative in our budget and have $40 billion for that. Now all we need is a little bit of cooperation from the other side of the aisle, following on what one or two on the other side of the aisle have attempted to do with Republicans, to move a bill along in this effort. But the White House happens to be dragging its feet.

Now, I think the insinuation is, from the amendments being offered on prescription drugs, that we don't see this as a problem and that we don't want to solve this problem. They aren't telling the truth.

Another amendment they have asked us to look at deals with the taxation of Conservation Reserve Program payments to farmers. The Internal Revenue Service—as they so often do in their infinite wisdom but lack of common sense—is trying to impose Social Security taxes on these payments. Of course, this is the Clinton-Gore administration that is doing this to the farmers of the United States. These taxes hadn't been opposed until the Clinton-Gore administration started imposing them through the IRS. And now we have a Democrat amendment to overturn what the Clinton-Gore administration is doing to the farmers on the CRP payments. So why don't the people on the other side of the aisle just call up President Clinton and Vice President GORE and ask them to order their own IRS to drop this silly new interpretation of the law because right now we have the Vice President going around the country saying how much he is willing to help the farmers of the United States and, Lord only knows, they need help with prices at 25-year lows.

Well, I guess help came after he invented the Internet because I haven't seen any help in this area since this has been in the courts in the United States. Now we have the Clinton-Gore IRS beating up on farmers with this new tax. Now, there is nothing wrong with the tax being offered from the other side of the aisle, trying to correct this; but it seems to me that there are other ways this could be handled.

Yesterday, we also heard what was really a political attack, that this tax relief is somehow a ''risky tax cut scheme.'' How come from the other side of the aisle all we ever hear about is ''risky tax cut schemes''? We don't hear about the risky spending schemes that are offered by the White House or by the other side of the aisle. All you have to do is go back to State of the Union Address on January 2000 and listen to the President of the United States propose 77 new spending programs—77 new spending programs. Somehow, there is shock on the other side that we want to let the people of this country keep their hard-earned money rather than running it through the Treasury in Washington, DC.

Now, there is a certain amount of good economic freedom argument you can give that is very philosophical about why the working men and women of America ought to spend more of their own money and send less of it to Washington just so they can have the economic freedom to do with the fruits of their labor and their minds what they want to do. But there is also a pretty good economic argument for not running any more money than is absolutely needed through Washington, DC. That is because money spent through the Federal budget does less economic good—in other words, it turns over less times for the economy—than money spent by individual taxpayers and working men and women of America. All one has to do is look at the defense budget. The defense budget produces a lot of expensive items. But once they are made, those items are not used for producing wealth. They serve a good purpose for our national defense. But they don't turn over any more money in our economy.

We come to these risky spending schemes of this administration with 77 new programs, and we have tax cuts before Congress. Being at the highest level of taxation in the history of our country, at about 21 percent of gross domestic product, if we allow the President, through those 77 risky spending schemes, to build up to that level of expenditure at 21 percent, then when we have a downturn in the economy, the spending is going to stay up here and the income is down here. Then you have another budget deficit; whereas, if we continue the pattern of the last 50 years of taxing at about 18.5 to 19 percent of the gross domestic product, then over the historical average there will be less chance of a deficit.

We want to let the working men and women keep more of their money and keep our historical level of taxation at about 18.5 to 19 percent. We do not want the extra money that is now coming into the Treasury to be eaten up by these 77 risky spending schemes of this administration.

I feel compelled to correct a statement made by my democratic colleague from Illinois. My colleague stated that the Republican marriage penalty bill would require 5 million more taxpayers to pay higher taxes. My colleague stated:

> Here's the kicker. They don't want to talk about they have drawn their bill up so that five million Americans will actually pay higher taxes. . . . Take a look around the corner—five million Americans end up paying higher taxes under the alternative minimum tax. So now isn't that something?

This is simply incorrect. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation there would be no increase in any taxpayer's overall tax liability as a result of this bill.

In fact, the bill attempts to correct an AMT problem for millions of taxpayers. According to Joint Tax, in the year 2010, 9.2 million tax returns will benefit from the AMT provision in the bill—this includes 6.5 million joint returns and 2.7 million other individual returns benefiting from this bill. This is a worthy goal, and we should do what is right.

According to Joint Tax, in 2010 approximately 1.5 million joint returns benefiting from the AMT credit extension will become AMT payers under the bill. However, as I just mentioned, Joint Tax estimates that the bill would not increase any taxpayer's overall tax liability.

The record must be set straight—no one will pay higher taxes as a result of this bill.

My friends on the other side of the aisle have rejected a request we made yesterday to allow a debate solely on the marriage tax penalty relief. The Senate leader has offered 10 relevant amendments, including their alternative marriage tax penalty proposal. The other side has rejected this offer. The other side claims they want to debate other issues—talk about issues other than tax relief.

Either way you slice it—by what the Senate minority has done or by what they claim—they evidently don't care about marriage tax penalty relief itself.

Senate Democrats could live with a focused debate when it applied to the education savings accounts a month ago, March 2, and ending the Social Security earnings limit for seniors over 65, which only a few weeks ago, on March 22, was passed by the Senate.

However, now when it comes down to marriage tax penalty relief, our colleagues and friends on the other side of the aisle say no. Why? What has changed compared to these other two tax bills? Why were those other items only a few weeks ago so much more important than this bill that would help over 40 million families? The bill before the Senate will help 40 million families. They want to debate other issues, so they are holding up the marriage tax penalty bill.

Imagine the hue and cry Democrats would raise if the shoe were on the other foot—if we were debating these other issues and we demanded to offer marriage tax penalty amendments.

The House has acted. The Finance Committee has acted. The Senate should now act. However, it can't because the Democrats are obstructing this legislation like in-laws on a honeymoon.

We have been more than fair. We have said this is a debate on marriage tax penalty relief—offer any amendment you want that related to this bill and we will give you a debate and a vote on it. Any amendment—up to ten of them.

How many relevant amendments did the Democrats offer yesterday? Less then half of their ten addressed this issue. By my generous calculation that means that they only half care about marriage tax penalty relief.

In the House, it was not this way. Forty-eight Democrats across the Rotunda voted for marriage tax penalty relief. It was bipartisan over there. Why can't it be bipartisan here? Democrats here are seeking to make this a highly partisan Senate.

So the Senate must wait and over 40 million American families will have to wait. Every couple who suffers under this marriage tax penalty, which has existed for 31 years, must wait further. In a sense, everyone is going to have to wait while the other side of the aisle obstructs this tax relief effort.

This is tax week across America. America's families are hunkered down over their kitchen tables figuring out their tax forms. Isn't it time these taxpayers get a break from the most unfair part of this process, the provisions that tax them at a higher rate just because they are doing what is right and are married?

I want to give them that break. My colleagues want to give them that break. However, my Democrat colleagues don't want to give them that break. In fact, they don't want to even give them a debate or a vote on this very important issue.

I urge the Senate to go to the final debate on this and pass it before we adjourn this week. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

TAXES

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, as I listened to my colleague, I thought some things said required a response.

As we look back at how we achieved balance in our budget and how we turned massive deficits into massive surpluses, let me explain how it was done. This chart covers 1980 through 1999. The blue line is the outlays or expenditures of the Federal Government; the red line is the revenue line. We had massive deficits when we were following the Republican economic prescription for the country, which was trickle-down economics, because the outlays far exceeded revenues. The result was massive deficits and massive growth of the debt.

In 1993, we got a new administration and a new economic plan. We passed a proposal without a single vote from the other side that reduced spending as a percentage of our national economy and raised revenue. That is how we balanced the budget. That is how we stopped the raid on Social Security. That is how we stopped the economic decline the country was experiencing under their plan, under their proposal.

In fact, at the time we passed the new budget plan in 1993, which was a 5-year plan reducing the deficits each and every year as we brought spending down, we brought revenues up until the two lines crossed and we moved into surplus. Our friends on the other side of the aisle said it was a huge mistake. They said it would increase the deficit. They said it would increase unemployment. They said it would increase inflation. They were wrong on every count. They were not just a little bit wrong, they were completely wrong.

Now they come with a new economic prescription to go back to the bad old days—back to debt, back to deficits, back to decline. Are we going to take that path? Haven't we learned anything about what works? Haven't we learned the best course is one of fiscal discipline? Haven't we learned the best course is to stay on this plan that has turned massive deficits into massive surpluses, that has led to the longest economic expansion in our country, that has led to the lowest unemployment in more than 30 years, the lowest inflation in more than 30 years? Are we going to jeopardize this with a risky tax scheme that our friends on the other side propose?

My friend from Iowa says we have the highest tax rates ever. No, we don't have the highest taxes ever. This chart shows the revenue line, and indeed it came up; that is absolutely correct. It was that combination of reduced spending and increased revenue that led to this result. However, that does not translate into higher tax rates on the American people. A key reason we have higher revenues is because we got the economy moving again. This extraordinary economic expansion—again, the longest economic expansion in our history—has generated more revenue. That is what helped balance the budget, coupled with reduced spending.

The question of what has happened to individual taxes is quite a different story. This was a story on the front page of the Washington Post: ''Federal Tax Level Falls for Most. Studies Show Burden Now Less Than 10 Percent.''

The story tells the truth.

For all but the wealthiest Americans, the Federal income tax burden has shrunk to the lowest level in four decades.

We don't have the highest taxes on individual American taxpayers that we have ever had, as the Senator from Iowa asserted. That is just not the case.

For all but the wealthiest Americans, the Federal income tax burden has shrunk to the lowest level in four decades.

That is the truth according to a series of studies by both liberal and conservative tax experts. Each of the studies shows the bottom line is the same. Most Americans this year will have to fork over less than 10 percent of their income to the Federal Government. The Congressional Budget Office estimates the middle fifth of American families with an average income of $39,000 paid 5.4 percent income tax in 1999, compared with 8.3 percent in 1981. Their taxes have gone down. That is the middle-income people in America.

The Treasury Department estimates that a four-person family, with a median income of $54,900, paid 7.46 percent of that in income tax, the lowest since 1965. And the median two-earner family making $68,000 paid 8.8 percent in 1998, about the same as 1955.

If we are going to have a debate, let's have a debate on facts and not make up things.

The fundamental problem with the legislation offered by our colleagues: They have more of a tax cut than there is non-Social Security surplus available for a tax cut. It is a question of priorities. What do we want to do with the surpluses available? Remember, these are projected surpluses. We can take the money and use it all for a tax cut that disproportionately goes to the wealthiest. That is what the Republicans want to do.

Our side believes we ought to reserve every penny of the Social Security surplus for Social Security. Republicans agree with that. On the non-Social Security surplus, the Republicans want to use it all for a tax cut that disproportionately goes to the wealthiest; 60 percent goes to the wealthiest 10 percent.

Our side thinks the highest priority should be further paying down of the debt because that is what every economist has said is in the highest interests of this country. This is what will most assure our economic future.

Second, we believe we ought to provide for tax relief; 29 percent of the non-Social Security surplus under our proposal goes for tax relief. Part of that goes to address the marriage tax penalty. However, we are addressing those who suffer the marriage tax penalty.

Our friends on the other side want to give a big tax cut to folks who do not have the marriage tax penalty. In fact, for people receiving the marriage bonus—they pay lower taxes as a result of being married than if they were filing individually—they want to give them a tax cut, too.

When they say we are limited to 10 amendments on our side, the underlying legislation deals with many more issues than just the marriage tax penalty. They want to restrict our right to offer alternatives. That is not fair. That is not the way the Senate was designed to operate. Not surprisingly, we don't intend to go along with that. That is not the way the Senate is designed to work.

We offered legislation in the Senate Finance Committee to give people a choice. They file as married couples; they file as individuals; file the way that helps the most, that gives families the least tax liability. That is what Democrats are proposing. We do it in a way to not use all of the non-Social Security surplus for a tax cut that goes predominantly to the wealthiest. Instead, we put the highest priority on reducing the debt; the second highest priority on tax relief; the third highest priority on using money for high priority domestic needs such as defense, education, and agriculture, which are in very deep trouble.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, are the 10 minutes Senator CONRAD has remaining from the Democratic side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBERTS). That is correct, from the Democratic side. There are 20 minutes remaining on the Republican side.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. I thank the Chair.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

MR. CONRAD. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. CONRAD pertaining to the introduction of S. 2422 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Missouri is recognized for 5 minutes.

MARRIAGE TAX RELIEF

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I rise to speak on behalf of the marriage tax relief bill. You could characterize it as tax relief or you could characterize it, I suppose, as a tax cut. But the true characterization is one that Senator HUTCHISON has over and over emphasized: This is tax correction. The bill is intended to correct the Tax Code. The code needs correction because it is an assault on the very values of our culture.

There is a fundamental unfairness when the Tax Code is at war with our values and penalizes a basic social institution such as the institution of marriage. The American people know this. They understand it is not right to have a Tax Code that penalizes marriage. The vast majority of the Members of this body understand this. This last week, during consideration of the budget resolution, the Senate voted 99–1 on the Hutchison amendment to support marriage tax relief. In other words, let's abandon the policy of punishing married people who pay higher taxes in the Tax Code.

Despite this overwhelming vote less than 10 days ago, some of my colleagues are now trying to stop or to delay the marriage tax relief measure by demanding nonrelevant amendments. Yesterday, several Senators from the other side of the aisle spoke on the floor and agreed there is unfairness in the Tax Code and that it is fundamentally unfair to tax people only because they marry. However, these same Senators then said the Finance Committee bill gives tax cuts to people who do not need them. That seems an arrogant statement to me, to suppose Government knows best how to spend the people's money. In addition, one Senator opposed the finance bill, asking, how many of these tax cuts can we afford to give away?

I submit, the real question is, how much of the hard-earned money can families afford to have taken away by an unfair system which penalizes men and women, a schoolteacher, a fireman, for getting married and beginning a family? How much longer will we continue to allow married couples to be penalized just for getting married?

We are here to correct that fundamental unfairness. It is something that has grown up in the code. It is like a weed which is taking over the garden. Good things are prevented by its presence. We ought to pull it out and make sure we have a Tax Code that does not make it harder for young people to be married and have a family.

Are we for correcting this unfairness? Are we against it? Or are we just saying that we are? One cannot say they oppose this penalty and then fight to take the relief away that is provided in the bill. Our colleagues in the House have already demonstrated dramatically that they back a correction for this injustice.

In February, the House passed the Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act of 2000. Thanks to the good work of the Senate Finance Committee, under the direction of Senator ROTH, we have a measure which will help substantially lessen the burden of this penalty that has been laid upon the families of America.

This bill makes great strides in providing relief and correcting this injustice. Twenty-five million American couples pay an average of $1,400 a year extra simply because they are married. Ending the penalty will give couples the freedom to make the choices they ought to make: The choice to be married and have a durable, lasting relationship of marriage as the foundation for the family unit.

The marriage tax penalty forces some Americans to make compromises instead of real choices. Mothers and fathers should be able to choose whether both parents will be employed outside the home based on what is in the family's best interest, or whether there should be a nonworking spouse who stays in the home. The Senate bill respects the value of the contribution of the spouse who stays home, and that is very important. Our Tax Code should respect the value that is added to the equation by a stay-at-home spouse who makes the family a stronger unit and builds for this country the kind of integrity that strong families provide.

In conclusion, no one has ever devised or developed or even dreamed of a better department of education, social services, a better department of health, education, and welfare than the family, and it is time for our Tax Code.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time requested by the distinguished Senator has expired. Who yields time?

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—H. CON. RES. 303

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the leader, I ask unanimous consent, notwithstanding rule XXII, that following the cloture votes relative to H.R. 6, the Senate proceed to H. Con. Res. 303, the adjournment resolution, with a vote to occur on adoption, all without intervening action or debate. I further ask unanimous consent that following that vote, the Senate begin debate on the budget resolution conference report and, when received, the conference report be considered as having been read and there be 4 hours of debate to be divided in the following fashion: 90 minutes under the control of Senator DOMENICI, 90 minutes under the control of Senator LAUTENBERG, and 1 hour under the control of Senator REED of Rhode Island.

Finally, I ask unanimous consent that following the use or yielding back of time, the Senate proceed to vote on the adoption of the conference report, without any intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

The distinguished Senator from Virginia is recognized.

Mr. ROBB. I inquire as to how much time remains on this side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2 minutes.

MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY RELIEF

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, in listening to my colleagues I am pleased to detect broad support for ending the so-called marriage penalty. I know that no one in this body believes that there should be a price to pay to the government for matrimony. However, we should work for a fair and reasonable solution that will not expand the marriage bonus and shift tax unfairness from one group in this country to another. The fact is that expanding marriage bonuses is not fair to single Americans just like doing nothing is unfair to married couples.

The ironic thing about the marriage penalty is that it was actually born out of fairness. According to a June 22, 1999 document prepared by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation, before 1948, there was only one income tax schedule, and all individuals were liable for tax as separate filing units.

Under this tax structure, there was neither a marriage penalty nor a marriage bonus.

However, this structure created an incentive to split incomes because, with a progressive income tax rate structure, a married couple with only one spouse earning income could reduce their combined tax liability if they could split the income and assign half to each spouse. Under this system a disparity between the citizens of community and separate property states arose after a handful of Supreme Court cases upheld the denial of contractual attempts to split income, but ruled that in states with community property laws, income splitting was required for community income. This led Senator John McClellan, of my home state of Arkansas, to ask Senator William Knowland of California, ''why is it that just because you live in California and I live in Arkansas, you pay $646 less every year than I pay?''

The Revenue Act of 1948 provided the benefit of income splitting to all married couples by establishing a separate tax schedule for joint returns. That schedule was designed so that married couples would pay twice the tax of a single taxpayer having one-half the couple's taxable income. While this new schedule equalized treatment between married couples in states with community property laws and those in states with separate property laws, it introduced a marriage bonus into the tax law for couples in states with separate property laws. As a result of this basic rate structure, by 1969, an individual with the same income as a married couple could have had a tax liability up to 40 percent higher than that of the married couple.

To address this inequity, which was at the time labeled a ''singles penalty,'' a special rate schedule was introduced for single taxpayers, leaving the old schedule solely for married individuals filing separate returns. This schedule created the infrastructure for the so-called marriage penalty that we seek to end today.

At the time more than thirty years ago when the current single and married filing categories were established, our society looked different, and very few people were affected by the flaws in our tax code that imposed a penalty on marriage. As we all know, Mr. President, the general rule is that married couples whose incomes are split more evenly than 30–70 suffer a marriage penalty. However, the fact still remains, that married couples whose incomes are attributable largely to one spouse generally receive a marriage bonus.

As the income levels between men and women have rightly narrowed and as more married women have moved into the work force, the so-called marriage penalty has begun to affect more and more families.

Today we are debating a bill offered by the Senate Finance Committee that seeks to address the problem of the so called Marriage Penalty, and I applaud my colleagues for bringing this to the floor. As I said before, I believe we all want to tell our constituents that we have ended the marriage penalty, however, the underlying bill will not allow us to do that.

There are 65 provisions in the tax code that contribute to a possible marriage penalty for taxpayers. The bill offered by the Majority only eliminates one of those provisions and softens the bite of two others. The fact still remains that 62 other provisions could rise up to affect married couples on tax day. If we are going to end the marriage penalty, Mr. President, we should just end it.

Another problem with the Majority bill is that it expands the marriage bonus. We should not bring back the unfairness we had before 1969. We should learn from the history of this debate and we should come up with a better solution. I believe in the sanctity of marriage, as do all of my colleagues. I don't believe in penalizing it. But I also recognize the rights and fairness that our single constituents demand. We should not shift tax unfairness from one group to another, we should work to eliminate the unfairness for all Americans.

The Majority bill would also expand the roles of the Alternative Minimum Tax. Talk about unfair! I think a lot of Americans would almost rather pay the marriage penalty than have to deal with the Alternative Minimum Tax. The Majority bill would expand, by 5 million, the number of people who have to fill out an AMT tax form and pay higher rates. Not only is it inexcusable, it goes against what we stand for and what we are trying to achieve

We should be working to lessen the effects of the AMT on middle class families not expand them. I am aware that the Majority bill includes a provision to permanently exempt the nonrefundable personal tax credits from AMT determination. That is good policy. In fact, Mr. President, I am the author of the bill, S. 506, that is essentially attached to the Majority bill. This provision, however, will not do enough to lessen the effects that doubling the standard deduction will have on the AMT roles. The good policy of S. 506 is drowned by the bad policy to which it is attached; drowned in the squeals of 5 million voters. I remind my colleagues that the AMT equals higher taxes and confusing forms. No one wants that for their constituents.

Lastly, Mr. President, this majority bill can hardly be labeled a ''Marriage Penalty Relief Bill'' at all. It doesn't completely eliminate the marriage penalty and less than half the cost of the bill goes to reducing it. 60 percent of the cost of the Majority bill goes to singles and to expanding the marriage bonus. I believe we should be honest with the American taxpayer and quit trying to aggregate tax cuts under popular headings like ''Marriage Penalty Relief'' and ram them through the process with cloture votes.

If my colleagues truly believe in fairness, as I think they do, then, Mr. President, let us work to truly end the marriage penalty, not to just put it on hold. Let's work together, Mr. President, to end the marriage penalty. Lets put an end to it now and forever. That means eliminating all 65 marriage penalties. Not just one and a fraction. That also means avoiding a new singles penalty. We have a record to look upon, Mr. President. We have a history. If we approach the marriage penalty in the way the Majority proposes, the unfairness will continue, the debate will continue, and sadly, the marriage penalty will continue as well.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I do not like the marriage penalty. I think it is poor public policy. However, I am forced to vote against cloture today because the majority has refused to allow the minority to offer amendments to improve this seriously flawed legislation.

The majority has presented us with a bill that not only fails to completely remedy the marriage penalty, but also provides large tax cuts to individuals and married couples who currently experience a marriage bonus. Less than 40% of the benefits of this bill would actually go to couples earning under $100,000. This is not a marriage penalty bill; this is a fiscally irresponsible tax cut bill for the wealthy. Hard working married couples in Vermont deserve an honest, targeted measure to eliminate the marriage penalty, not the proposal that is before us today.

I had looked forward to debating amendments to strengthen this bill and I am disappointed that the majority is cutting off the debate with a motion to invoke cloture. The integrity of the Senate is threatened when the majority refuses to permit the minority to debate amendments. The Senate should be the conscience of the nation because of the distinguishing feature of this body for any Senator to offer amendments and thoroughly debate the merits of legislation.

I support an end to the marriage penalty. I will continue to work with other Senators to pass legislation that is targeted at eliminating all of the marriage penalties that are embedded in our tax code. Vermonters deserve nothing less.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today the Senate will vote on two cloture motions, the first, to end debate on the Finance Committee's substitute amendment to H.R. 6, the Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act, and, the second, to end debate on the underlying bill.

First, I am, as are others, deeply concerned with that anomaly in the tax code known as the ''marriage penalty.'' I can think of no rational reason why two individuals who have vowed a lifelong commitment to each other through the sacred institution of marriage should, in certain cases, have their combined income taxed at a higher rate than that of two unmarried persons. At a time of declining social values, it simply does not make sense for the Congress to sanction policies which clearly work to the detriment of family stability.

Throughout the annals of human experience, in dozens of civilizations and cultures of varying value systems, humanity has discovered that the permanent relationship between men and women is a keystone to the stability, strength, and health of human society. The purpose of this kind of union between human beings is primarily for the establishment of a home atmosphere in which a man and a woman pledge themselves exclusively to one another and who bring into being children for the fulfillment of their love for one another and for the greater good of the human community at large. Indeed, I doubt that any Senator would refute the assertion that the promotion of marriage and family stability is in the best interest of the nation as a whole.

The question then is how to utilize the nation's tax code to move towards this goal. Marriage neutrality, for reasons that I will leave to the distinguished Finance Committee Chairman, the Senator from Delaware, and, the Finance Committee ranking member, the Senator from New York, to explain, is seemingly incompatible with a progressive income tax system that allows for married couples to file jointly. That is, if this body believes that higher-income households should pay higher taxes than lower-income households, and that married couples should be allowed to file joint returns, marriage neutrality can be a difficult goal to achieve. While I applaud the efforts of the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from New York in their attempts to balance these seemingly incompatible goals, I remain hesitant about jumping on any bandwagon at this time without first raising some concerns.

My primary concern, which I would presume is a concern of all Senators, is the cost associated with each of these proposals. The Republican plan, upon which the majority leader has filed a cloture motion, would cost approximately $248 billion over 10 years, and would explode after the first 10 years, costing the Federal Government $39 billion per year thereafter. This cost would be paid for through the non-Social Security surpluses that are projected by the Congressional Budget Office over the next 10 years. The so-called Democratic alternative, on the other hand, is not much better. The proposal would cost $150 billion over 10 years, but once fully phased in, is expected to cost about $48 billion per year thereafter. The basis upon which these tax cuts are being proposed is the presumption that the Congressional Budget Office's projections of non-Social Security surpluses will come to pass and will be large enough to cover tax cuts of this magnitude without causing the Federal budget to revert back into the kind of annual triple-digit billion dollar budget deficits we suffered over the last two decades. Never mind the fact that these non-Social Security surpluses are not yet in the hands of the Treasury. Never mind the fact that this Senate has not yet ensured that our domestic spending needs will be met in the coming years. Never mind the fact that such enormous tax cuts, once enacted, would be very difficult to reverse.

To its credit, however, the Democratic alternative is a substantively better proposal. Not only would it eliminate all sixty-five marriage penalties in the tax code, compared to the Republican proposal which would eliminate only three of the penalties, but it would also limit tax relief to those who actually suffer marriage penalties. Nevertheless, the Senate stands ready to shut down debate on these measures, and to effectively prohibit the Democratic alternative from being offered. Moreover, amendments that could possibly improve these proposals, or, at least, ensure that these proposals are enacted in the most cost efficient way possible, would also be limited—perhaps not to be allowed to be called up at all.

Another concern of mine is that both proposals are distributionally skewed away from lower- and middle-income families. Senators should be encouraged to offer amendments so that these proposals better target families who most need tax relief. Instead, Senators are discouraged from offering amendments to improve the measure. Watching the debate yesterday, I noted Senators suggesting that amendments should be limited to only five or six so that the Senate could finish its work tonight and recess for the Easter break. As far as this Senator from West Virginia is concerned, if this legislation is as important as most Senators seem to think it is, we should stay in tomorrow, perhaps Saturday, and for as long as it takes to provide the best targeted, most cost-efficient tax package possible. This legislation should not be railroaded through this Chamber in order to accommodate a political deadline or to avoid debate on controversial amendments.

I, for one, will not support shutting down debate on these measures without first having these concerns addressed. I refuse to allow myself to be backed into a position where I must support limiting debate on a so-called marriage penalty relief bill simply to avoid political attacks that I do not support marriage penalty relief. My constituents understand my position on this matter. I have been married, now, almost 63 years, so I know about the marriage penalty. It has not changed over the years. I will oppose cloture on this bill, not because I am opposed to marriage penalty relief, but because I am opposed to this kind of legislating.

Putting aside the policy implications of these votes for a moment, I am growing increasingly concerned about how this body is seemingly incapable of considering any legislation without, first, limiting amendments that may be offered; and, second, limiting the ability of Senators to debate the legislation. These marriage penalty proposals are only the most recent example of this new style of legislating. Education savings accounts, the Social Security earnings limit, and bankruptcy reform have all been debated in this fashion. The stock options bill that was brought to the floor was limited to one hour of debate with no amendments or motions in order. Presumably, this agreement was reached to prevent minimum wage amendments from being offered. Indeed, time after time, day after day, cloture motions to end debate are being filed before debate even has a chance to get under way.

The rationale behind today's cloture vote is that a majority of constituents and legislators support marriage penalty relief, so this legislation should be passed without delay. Ironically, this is exactly why the Senate was established as the body of majority rule but minority right. When James Madison arrived in Philadelphia in 1787 to correct the ''injustices'' of the Articles of Confederation, he had derived a general theory of politics based on his experiences in the Virginia state legislature. His focus was on the majoritarian premises of popular government. While Madison pondered that legislators would primarily respond to the passions and interests of their constituents, he realized that minority rights were not so much to protect the people from government as to protect the people from popular majorities acting through government. In recent months, however—and I say this not as a Democrat, but as a member of the minority—minority rights have been pushed aside in order to accommodate political expediency. The Democrats, as I observe them, are standing up for their rights as a minority, not attempting, as has been stated several times in the past, to dictate the Senate's schedule. This Democrat is certainly not trying to dictate the schedule. I do, however, have an interest in the Senate. And, I think that the Senate has gone downhill in recent years. I think that it is too partisan. I have seen bills called up, and cloture immediately filed upon them to end debate on them when there had been no debate. I, when I was majority leader, filed cloture motions in similar situations, but I never did it time after time and day after day, I did it very seldom.

Senators do have the right to offer amendments, they do have the right to debate those amendments, and they have the right to a roll call vote on those amendments if they want it. Similarly, this Senator, along with every other Senator in this body, has the right to debate amendments offered by other Senators and to a roll call vote on those amendments. This was the message that I was hoping to convey last Friday during the debate on the budget resolution. When I objected to the unanimous consent request regarding the inclusion of some fifty amendments to the budget resolution, my goal was not to prevent the consideration of those amendments.

In fact, I was suggesting that the Senate spend the extra time on Saturday and on Monday to debate and to vote on those amendments. It was my desire to hear debate and to vote on those amendments, not to move on to final passage.

The Senator who offers the amendment, of course, has a right to have debate on it and a right to ask for a vote. But any other Senator also has a right to hear the debate and also has a right to ask for a vote if he wants it. So it is not just the Senator who offers the amendment whose case is put in jeopardy because he is denied a vote. The whole Senate and the people I represent, the people the Senator from Rhode Island represents, are entitled to a debate also on the amendment.

As I have said before, I will not support the erosion of minority rights in the Senate simply to advance a politically popular initiative. I hope that my colleagues will take a moment to consider their votes in this context, rather than in the context of what is politically popular and expedient.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, last week, I offered an amendment to the Senate budget resolution that would have required Congress to enact a new Medicare prescription drug benefit before considering any massive tax cuts. While a procedural hurdle prevented my amendment from passing, fifty-one senators voted to waive the budget point of order, indicating they favored it, sending the American people a strong signal that a majority of the U.S. Senate thought we should put the needs of our nation's seniors before excessive tax cuts.

Yet only a week after this vote, Mr. President, we are considering a massive tax cut that will spend $248 billion of the surplus over 10 years, without doing anything to modernize Medicare. Under the guise of eliminating the ''marriage penalty,'' the majority has brought a bill to the floor that would devote over half of its benefits to people who either aren't married, or who are actually receiving right now a tax benefit, or ''bonus,'' for being married. This takes a lot of chutzpah.

I believe we ought to eliminate the marriage penalty for those who actually suffer the marriage penalty and need the relief most. With all the rhetoric from the other side about eliminating the marriage penalty, one might think that they would share my view and want to pass a bill that would actually focus on the penalty.

But a close examination of the Republican bill reveals that it is not quite what it is described to be. In fact, there are 65 provisions in the Tax Code that have a marriage penalty, including Social Security. Their bill takes care of one provision entirely and two others partially, and leaves the other 63 marriage penalties exactly the way they are. The Democratic bill addresses all 65 provisions, and takes care of the entire penalty for nearly everybody. The Democratic bill accomplishes all this but costs half as much.

It is time that we set our priorities straight. We ought not to be devoting $140 billion of the surplus over 10 years to individuals who currently have no marriage penalty when we have done nothing to help those who suffer from the ''senior citizens' drug penalty'' the high prices our Nation's seniors are forced to pay for prescription drugs.

I intend to offer a motion to recommit this bloated bill to the Finance Committee, with instructions to report out a new bill by June 1 that focuses its dollars on taxpayers who actually face a marriage penalty, and that devotes $40 billion over the next 5 years to a new prescription drug benefit. This motion will not prevent Congress from enacting marriage penalty relief this year, it will just ensure that we do not backtrack from last week's vote to enact a prescription drug benefit before we do major tax cuts.

I want to share again a letter I received from a woman in St. Stephens Church, VA which illustrates why the prescription drug amendment is so important. She writes:

> My husband and I are both retirees and rely on Social Security and Medicare. Recently, we both had to go to our family doctor, and the drugs that were prescribed for us would cost us out of pocket approximately $300 per month. Due to the cost of the two prescriptions, we are forced to choose not to take the medication and live with the illness.

Another woman from Scottsville, VA writes:

> My husband's income consists of his Social Security and a small pension from his former employer. We spend over twice as much for prescriptions as we do for groceries, and it's getting harder and harder to stretch our income 'til our checks arrive.

These Virginians are not alone in their troubles. The average senior citizen will spend $1,100 on prescription drugs this year. Most of them will not have adequate prescription drug coverage to help them cover these crushing costs. The numbers of those who do have coverage are dropping rapidly.

Despite the suggestions of some of my colleagues, this problem is not limited solely to the poor. One in four Medicare beneficiaries with a high income—defined as $45,000 a year for a couple—has no coverage for prescription drugs. And while some seniors do have coverage, nearly half of them lack coverage for the entire year, making them extremely vulnerable to catastrophic drug costs.

Complicating this matter for the elderly is the ''senior citizens' drug penalty'' that seniors without drug coverage are forced to pay. Most working Americans who are insured through the private sector pay less than the full retail price for prescription drugs. This is because insurers generally contract with Pharmaceutical Benefit Managers—or PBMs—that negotiate better prices for drugs and pass on the power of group purchasing to their customers.

Seniors lack this option, however, and must still pay full price for their drugs. A study released earlier this week showed that seniors without drug coverage typically pay 15 percent more than people with coverage. And the percentage of Medicare beneficiaries without drug coverage who report not being able to afford a needed drug is about 5 times higher than those with coverage.

This ''senior citizens' drug penalty,'' in my view, is unconscionable. Senior citizens rely more on drugs, and have higher drug costs, than any other segment of the population. They deserve to have the same bargaining power that benefits other Americans.

Last week the other side spoke against my amendment, claiming that there was already adequate language in the Republican budget resolution to ensure that we pass a prescription drug benefit this year. At the time, they pointed to the $40 billion reserve fund which was included in the budget resolution the Committee reported, arguing that this would provide ample money to enact a prescription drug benefit and offer tax relief.

Republicans asked, in essence, that we trust them that the Senate will not squander the surplus on tax cuts before we have helped our nation's seniors. Let me say that I do trust my good friends on the other side of the aisle. To borrow a line from Ronald Reagan, I believe we should trust—but verify. That is what my amendment last week did. It required deeds as well as words.

Seeing what happened in the budget resolution conference committee, it has become clearer than ever why we need to verify the promises that the other side gives us. Because despite both chambers setting aside a $40 billion reserve fund for a prescription drug benefit, one of the first things that the conferees did was cut this fund in half, to $20 billion—a number far too low to enact any sort of universal benefit for our nation's seniors. The conferees then took this other $20 billion, which is vitally needed to fund a universal prescription drug benefit, and said that it should be used for other Medicare reforms, such as another round of adjustments to the payment rates for Medicare providers that were hit hard by the cuts in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. But after touting this reserve fund as the key to a prescription drug benefit, they have essentially neutered themselves.

Even worse, the conferees removed the one provision that would have helped push a prescription drug benefit forward. The Senate budget resolution set a date of September 1 for the Finance Committee to report out a prescription drug bill. This deadline would have guaranteed that the Senate would at least consider prescription drug legislation this year. But the conferees stripped this deadline out of the bill. They have basically said: it is not important for the Senate to pass a bill to eliminate the ''senior citizens' drug penalty.''

I am by no means opposed to taking another look at the decisions we made in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997. I worked very hard last year in the Finance Committee on the Balanced Budget Refinement Act. And there ought to be room, in the context of a balanced budget, to provide further relief to health care providers who were hit hard by the cuts in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997.

We ought not to be limiting our Medicare reform efforts to $40 billion, however, simply to free up additional funds for tax cuts. With this new limit, Republicans have essentially pitted a prescription drug benefit for seniors against additional relief for doctors, hospitals, nursing homes, and other health care providers. Republicans have decided that two important priorities must square off, so that we can provide billions of dollars in so-called ''marriage penalty'' tax relief to individuals who do not even incur a marriage tax penalty on their taxes.

Our nation's seniors deserve better than this. Last week, at least fifty-one Senators felt the same way. I urge every one of them, as well as Senators who opposed my amendment last week because they thought the $40 billion reserve fund would guarantee a prescription drug benefit, to support my motion to recommit this bill. With its passage, we will be able to eliminate both the true marriage tax penalty and the ''senior citizens' drug penalty.''

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—H.R. 6

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we proceed to consideration of H.R. 6, the Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act, so that I may offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Senate Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRASSLEY. Reserving the right to object, I see this as an effort to delay passing the marriage tax penalty relief bill. Offering or voting for this motion is saying that the Senate does not want to fix the marriage tax penalty. Recommitting the bill is an attempt, I think, to kill the bill.

We are going to deal with the prescription drug problem. As I said in my opening comments this morning, Republicans have already set aside $40 billion in our budget to do so. We do not need to delay fixing the marriage tax penalty in order to fix the Medicare problem. We have the resources and the time to do both.

Again, I think this is a transparent effort to kill marriage tax penalty relief, and, consequently, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I accept the objection of my friend from Iowa. Under the conference agreement, the $40 billion went in on the part of the Senate. Only $20 billion came out; $20 billion has already been diverted in the conference agreement. I recognize an objection has been offered. I will make my point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the distinguished Senator has expired.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Montana is recognized.

MARRIAGE TAX RELIEF

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Iowa.

This has been an interesting debate on this part of the Tax Code, and I have been listening to this debate with a lot of interest. If there ever was something that needed fixing, it is unfairness in the Tax Code. I am not going to talk about a disincentive for folks to get married. I look at it from a standpoint of fairness.

Young couples who are starting out and trying to save a little money for the education of their children, or trying to pay for a home, these couples are penalized. They have dreams of participating in American opportunities, and they are kept from this by an unfair tax code. In Montana, 90,000 couples are penalized to the tune of $51.5 million every year in extra taxes simply because they are Mr. and Mrs.

We made it pretty clear on this side of the aisle that tax reform is needed. If we have to do it one step at a time or one inch at a time, then that is the way we will do it. That makes it very slow and very painful. Yet it has to be done.

According to the Congressional Budget Office, almost half of married couples pay higher taxes due to their married status. The marriage tax penalty increases taxes on affected couples $29 billion per year. Currently, this marriage tax penalty imposes an average additional tax of $1,400 a year on 21 million married couples nationwide.

I, along with my Republican colleagues, have made it clear that continued tax reform and tax relief is necessary, and I can think of no other tax that has such a dramatic impact on so many people. To some people, $1,400 may not sound like a lot of money, but to a lot of Americans $1,400 does mean a lot of money. Especially when it can be used for things like saving for education, or supporting young families, or a long list of things that need to be fixed around the house.

The marriage tax penalty can have significant negative economic implications for the country as a whole since the tax code can discourage some people from entering the workforce altogether.

Additionally, this is a good time for us to restore fairness for married people. No. 1, I think what we have seen this week in the stock market, what we have seen in the high-tech stocks, shows that we may not be in the real booming economy now that everybody thinks we are. No. 2, if you live in farm country, we know we are not in a booming economy. Look at our small towns around my State of Montana and all through farm country. We know what tough times are. And then to be penalized in your taxes just because you are married seems a little unfair.

I support this particular piece of legislation. I want the American people to know that we will take this one step at a time. After all, we did not get into this situation overnight. Maybe it will take one step just to get us out of this kind of a situation.

Mr. President, as I said, I rise in support of legislation currently on the floor that will put an end to the marriage tax penalty. We have been fighting this tax inequity for several years now. The people of Montana have spoken to me either through letters or conversation—they think this tax is unfair.

Last year, I met with a couple in Billings, MT, to determine the impact of this tax on them. Joshua and Jody Hayes paid $971 more in taxes because they were married than they would have paid if they remained single.

In Montana, it is estimated that nearly 90,000 couples are penalized by this tax to the tune of $51.5 million—solely for being married.

I along with my Republican colleagues have made it clear that continued tax reform and tax relief is necessary, but I can think of no other tax that has such a dramatic impact on so many people.

If ever there was a disincentive to be married, this penalty would be it. I believe this, along with the estate tax, is one of the most unfair taxes on Americans. It is not right for people to be penalized with higher taxes simply because they choose to get married.

According to the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), almost half of all married couples pay higher taxes due to their marital status. Cumulatively, the marriage penalty increases taxes on affected couples by $29 billion per year. Currently, this tax penalty imposes an average additional tax of $1400 on 21 million married couples nationwide.

The marriage penalty can have significantly negative economic implications for the country as a whole as well. Not only does this penalty within the tax system stand as a likely obstacle to marriage, it can actually discourage a spouse from entering the workforce.

By adding together husband and wife under the rate schedule, tax laws both encourage families to identify a primary and secondary worker and then place an extra burden on the secondary worker because his or her wages come on top of the primary earner's wages.

As the American family realizes lower income levels, the Nation realizes lower economic output. From a strictly economic perspective, the fact that potential workers would avoid the labor force as a result of a tax penalty is a clear sign of a failure to maximize true economic output. As a result, the nation as a whole fails to reach its economic potential, which is demonstrated by decreased earnings and international competitiveness.

I am very disappointed the President has indicated he will veto this bill as he has in the past. That is not just the veto of a bill—that is another signal the administration does not support the union of two people and their impending family.

Congress has the momentum to correct this inequity and I encourage my colleagues to support this legislation to repeal the marriage penalty.

I ask unanimous consent to have an example of the marriage tax penalty printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXAMPLE OF THE MARRIAGE PENALTY TAX

Take a couple in which the husband is a new Billings Police Officer and his wife is a teacher for the Billings School District.

	Husband	Wife	Couple
Adjusted Gross Income	$33,500	$28,200	$61,700
Less Personal Exemption	4,150	4,150	6,900
Standard Deduction	+2,650	+2,650	+5,300
	6,800	6,800	12,200
Taxable Income	26,700	21,400	49,500
Tax Liability	4,271.50	3,210.00	8,504.00

Total tax liability when filing jointly is 8,504.
Total tax liability for both filing as singles 7,481.50.
Marriage Penalty 1,022.50.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Iowa, who has done a wonderful job in managing this bill, and more importantly for his role in the Finance Committee to make sure that we have a great marriage tax penalty relief bill.

I thank the Senator from Montana for talking in straight terms, as he always does, about what our priorities are: Does this money belong to the people who earned it or does it belong to the Federal Government in Washington, DC?

I think it is very interesting; when people talk about tax cuts, you can tell immediately how Members are going to vote by how they refer to the tax cuts.

As the Senator from Missouri said earlier, if you are going to be against tax cuts, you are going to say: How much will it cost the Federal Government to give this tax relief? But if you believe that people who earn the money deserve to keep it, then you are going to say: How much is it going to cost the American family if we do not give them back part of the excess that they have sent to Washington in income tax withholding?

I want to make the point again, we are not talking about the Social Security surplus providing money for tax cuts. We are talking about the income tax surplus. That means that people have sent too much to Washington and we are trying to return some of it.

I think it was an interesting argument earlier, on the Democratic side, where it was shown that Federal taxes have gone down in our country. We are trying to lower Federal taxes, but, in fact, what has happened is local taxes have gone up. So all of the neutral sources in our country today tell us that there is, in fact, a higher tax burden on the average American family today than ever before in peacetime. That is a big burden on an average family.

About 40 percent of the average family's income is taken in taxes. That is a fact. And we are in peacetime. We do have a balanced budget. We do not need that much. We should send it right back to the people who earned it, to put in their pockets for them to make the decisions as to how to spend it. That is what we are trying to do today.

I think it is interesting when you listen to the debate. The distinguished Democratic leader yesterday said, in the debate: ''I think the Republican bill is a marriage penalty relief bill in name only. It is a Trojan horse for the other risky tax schemes that have been proposed so far this year.''

I want to go over what we have taken up this year, what we have proposed this year, and just say to the American people: I wonder what the risky tax schemes are.

Is it a risky tax scheme to let people on Social Security between the ages of 65 and 70 work without paying a penalty? Is that a risky tax scheme? Is the education tax credit that Senator COVERDELL passed earlier this year to give parents a tax credit to buy education enhancements for their children—the computers, the extra books, the tutors—a risky tax scheme? Or is it the small business tax relief that we passed to try to give our small businesses an opportunity to grow and create new jobs in our country?

I am not sure to which ''risky tax scheme'' the Democratic leader refers. But if that is a ''risky tax scheme,'' I am guilty because I do believe the hard-working people of this country deserve to keep more of the money they earn.

This marriage tax penalty relief was provided for in the budget we passed last week. We would take only 50 percent of the allocation over a 5-year period. We think that is quite responsible as stewards of our tax dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, the Republican led Senate is considering legislation that I have long advocated for working families—relief from the marriage tax penalty.

This is not a limited problem. According to the Congressional Budget Office, almost half of all married couples—21 million—are affected by the marriage penalty. One study showed that over 640,000 couples in Virginia are affected.

The marriage tax penalty unfairly affects middle class married working couples. For example, a manufacturing plant worker makes $30,500 a year in salary. His wife is a tenured elementary school teacher, also bringing home $30,500 a year in salary. If they both file their taxes as singles they would pay 15 percent in income tax. But if they choose to live their lives in holy matrimony and file jointly, their combined income of $61,000 pushes them into a higher tax bracket of 28%. The result is a tax penalty of approximately $1,400.

The Republican marriage penalty relief bill would fix this unfairness without shifting of the tax burden and without the need for a tax increase on any individual. Middle and low income families would benefit as much as earners with higher incomes. The bipartisan support for eliminating the marriage penalty is overwhelming. The House of Representatives passed the bill with 268 votes.

In the Senate, our bill increases the standard deduction for joint returns to twice the amount of the standard deduction for single returns, doubles the size of both the 15% and 28% tax brackets for joint returns to twice the size of the corresponding tax rate brackets for single returns, and increases the phaseout income level for the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC) for joint returns by $2,500. Additionally, it makes permanent the current allowance of personal nonrefundable tax credits to offset both regular and alternative minimum tax liabilities.

Critics have claimed that most of the tax relief under our plan would go to wealthy couples. That is simply not true. The Congressional Joint Committee on Taxation's distribution analysis estimates that couples making under $75,000 annually will be the biggest winners. Additionally, the Joint Tax Committee estimates that couples earning between $20,000 and $30,000 will receive the biggest percentage reduction in their federal taxes out of any income level, with couples making between $30,000–$40,000 fairing almost as well.

Opponents of this measure have argued that some married couples, where only one spouse works, will receive a so-called ''marriage bonus''. Although the word ''bonus'' implies an additional benefit, this is simply not the case. First, this money belongs to the taxpayers. With a surplus of over $2 trillion, not including Social Security, all taxpayers are entitled to a return of their tax overpayment. Second, should the federal government, through tax policy, discourage either parent from staying at home with children? If a couple chooses to raise their family on just one income, they will need all the financial help they can get. The government should not penalize a family simply because it takes both spouses working outside of the home to make $50,000. Being a stay at home parent should be rewarded—not penalized.

This means over $64 billion in tax relief over the next five years. Combined with the other tax relief measures adopted by the Senate this year—tax relief for small employers, improved health care access, and education savings accounts—the total tax relief considered by the Senate falls well within the $150 billion budgeted for tax cuts in the recently-adopted budget resolution.

This is a modest proposal. Eliminating the marriage penalty will result in less tax paid to the federal government. However, the Congressional Budget Office estimates that taxpayers will send Uncle Sam almost $2 trillion in additional surplus taxes over the next ten years. That is after Congress has locked up 100% of Social Security surplus and paid down the public debt. Our proposal asks Uncle Sam to give back to middle class families just 10 cents out of every extra surplus dollar they send to Washington. Is that really to much to ask to help families? The Federal government should not put a price tag on the sacrament of marriage.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, next Monday is the deadline for all Americans to file their 1999 income tax returns with the Internal Revenue Service. This week the Senate has appropriately dedicated its attention to the tax burden placed on Americans, particularly the unfair marriage tax penalty. Simply, the marriage tax penalty is an injustice in the current Federal income Tax Code that results in a married couple filing a joint tax return paying more in taxes than if the same couple were not married and filed as individuals.

Every week of the year I receive letters from Washington state constituents outraged by the marriage tax penalty, but during tax season my mailbox is deluged with the protests of married couples. Last year, Congress passed a tax relief bill that would have eliminated the marriage penalty, but President Clinton vetoed this needed reform. This year, Democrats have spent this entire week delaying and then blocking a Senate vote on a bill to end the marriage penalty.

Maybe some of my colleagues should hear what I read in the letters I receive asking for action by Congress and the President to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. From an email I received from a constituent in Maple Valley, Washington: ''I wanted to express my hope that you and the other members of Congress will be able to eliminate the marriage penalty tax * * * Why should I pay more in taxes since I am married?'' From Bellingham, Washington: ''Fairness! It all comes down to fairness. Please stop penalizing us for being married. We deserve the same as two single taxpayers.'' From a family farmer in Eastern Washington state: ''I believe the marriage tax penalty is a mistake that should be corrected. It would establish fairness in our tax system.'' This is merely a sampling of the hundreds of letters I have received, but it is an accurate representation of the views of my constituents and the vast majority of Americans.

My No. 1 tax legislative priority is complete tax reform. I believe the entire confusing and incomprehensible Tax Code should be scrapped and replaced with a system that is fair, simple, uniform and consistent. Until such fundamental reform can take place, I will continue to work in support of tax reform and relief measures that correct unfair aspects of the existing tax code mess. The marriage tax penalty is absolutely one of the most outrageous and indefensible injustices in the current Tax Code. Efforts to delay and block the elimination of the marriage tax penalty are clearly an affront to a sense of fairness, the institution of marriage, and they are contrary to the desires of an overwhelming majority of Americans. The Senate should vote now to correct the marriage tax penalty.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the marriage penalty is the extra tax a couple pays as a result of being married. When a couple says ''I do'' they are really saying ''IRS, we will pay.'' The tax code has 63 provisions that penalize couples for being married. There are more than 20 income phase-outs and each is a marriage penalty. The two biggest marriage penalizers are the standard deduction and the tax brackets. Fairness would dictate that the standard deduction for a couple should be twice what it is for a single taxpayer. Fairness would dictate that the tax bracket income cut-off points for a married couple should be twice that of a single taxpayer. That is not the way the current code is structured. This bill would restore fairness.

About 25 million married couples annually are adversely affected by the marriage penalty. Average marriage penalty is $1,400. If we eliminated the marriage penalty, the typical family would have an extra $1,400 to pay the electric bill for nine months, pay for three months of day care, pay for a five-day vacation at Disneyland or eat out 35 times.

There wasn't always a marriage penalty. Prior to 1948 the tax code taxed individuals, but today, the marriage penalty has infiltrated the entire tax code. It didn't matter when most women stayed at home, but now that so many women work it is indefensible to have the marriage penalty in our law. A working wife often works to support the federal government, more than she works to help her family, because the first dollar she earns is taxed at the highest rate her husband's income is taxed. Some economists call this the ''second earner bias'' because the income of the secondary earner is stacked on top of the primary earner's income resulting in a relatively high marginal rate.

Of the 27 OECD countries 19 countries taxed husbands and wives separately so there is no marriage penalty. The biggest culprits are the standard deduction and the tax brackets.

The standard deduction for two individuals filing single returns is not twice what the standard deduction for a married couple filing a joint return is. It isn't but, it should be.

Marriage penalty hits low income workers. Eligibility for the earned income credit is the same for single heads of households and married couples. Combining two incomes on a joint return may push a couple into the phase-out range of the EIC and reduce the size of their credit.

As I mentioned, a growing number of tax provisions—credits and deductions—are phased-out at certain income ranges. Any tax provision that has an income phase-out contributes to the marriage penalty. Few of us probably ever stop to think about the marriage penalty when we vote for tax provisions with income phase-outs. Some phase-outs start as low as $10,000 of income. The dependent credit, the elderly credit and earned income credit have phase out ranges that compound the marriage penalty for the working poor.

Several provisions have phase-outs in the $50,000 to $75,000 in income range which add to the marriage penalty of the two income middle class families. The dependent credit, the Hope education credit, the elderly credit, adoption credit; the IRA deduction and the Education loan interest expense deductions. Itemized deduction threshold, personal exemption, all get ''marriage penalty-ed'' out of existence for many married couples with modest incomes.

S. 2346 provides total tax relief to married couples of $64 billion over the next five years. Combined with the other tax relief measures adopted by the Senate this year—tax relief for small employers (H.R. 833), improved health care access (H.R. 2990), and education savings accounts (S. 1134)—the total relief considered by the Senate falls well within the $150 billion budgeted for tax cuts in the recently-adopted Senate budget resolution.

Let me describe in particularity the provisions of the bill. Standard deduction: The bill increases the standard deduction for married couples filing jointly to twice the standard deduction for single taxpayers. According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, this provision provides tax relief to approximately 25 million couples filing joint returns. It is effective for taxable years after December 31, 2000.

Increased brackets: The bill expands, over a six-year period, the 15-percent and 28-percent income tax brackets for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the size of the corresponding brackets for an individual relief to 21 million married couples, including 3 million senior citizens.

EIC: The bill increases the beginning and the end of the phase-out of the Earned Income Credit for couples filing a joint return. Currently, for a couple with two or more children, the EIC begins phasing out at $12,690 and is eliminated for couples earning more than $31,152. Under this bill, the new range would be $2,500 higher. For these couples eligible for the EIC, the maximum credit is increased by $526, from $3,888 to $4,414. It is effective for taxable years after December 31, 2000.

AMT relief: The bill permanently extends the current temporary exemption from the individual alternative Minimum Tax (AMT) for several family-related tax credits, including the $500 per child tax credit, HOPE and Lifetime Learning credits, and dependent care credit. The bill also exempts two refundable credits, the Earned Income Credit and the refundable child credit, from being reduced by the AMT. It is effective for taxable years after December 31, 2000.

Mr. President, this bill addresses one of the biggest federal income tax injustices and I hope the Congress will enact this legislation.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the S. 2346—legislation that would dramatically reduce one of the most insidious aspects of the tax code: the marriage penalty.

Mr. President, as my colleagues are aware, there are several primary causes of the ''marriage penalty'' within the tax code, including different tax rate schedules and different standard deductions for joint filers versus single filers.

In terms of the impact of these differing tax provisions, the marriage penalty is most pronounced for two-earner couples in which the husband and wife have nearly equal incomes. While this may not have been as noticeable in society 30 or 40 years ago, the demographic changes that have occurred since the 1960s—with more married women entering the workforce to help support their families—has led to a significant increase in the share of couples who suffer from the marriage penalty.

Mr. President, make no mistake, the impact of the marriage penalty is severe. According to the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), 42% of married couples incur marriage penalties that average nearly $1,400.

When measured by income category, fully 12% of couples with incomes below $20,000 incurred a marriage penalty in 1996; 44% of couples with incomes of $20,000 to $50,0000; and 55% of couples with incomes above $50,000.

In addition, according to CBO, empirical evidence suggests that the marriage penalty may affect work patterns, particularly for a couple's second earner. Specifically, because filing a joint return often imposes a substantially higher tax rate on a couple's second earner, the higher rate reduces the second earner's after-tax wage and may cause that individual to work fewer hours or not at all. As a result, economic efficiency is harmed in the overall economy.

Furthermore, while I would hope that the tax code would not be a factor in a couple's decision to marry or stay single, the simple fact is that a couple's tax status could worsen if married and could, therefore, impact a couple's decision to marry. Therefore, we should eliminate this potential barrier to marriage and ensure that couples make one of life's biggest decisions based on their values and beliefs—not on the federal tax code.

Mr. President, as a strong opponent of the marriage penalty, I am an original cosponsor of S. 15, legislation introduced by Senator HUTCHISON that eliminates the marriage penalty through a proposal known as ''income splitting.'' Under this approach, a married couple would add up all their income and then split it in half. Each spouse would then file as a single individual and pay taxes on his or her half of the total income, with exemptions, deductions and credits being split evenly between the two spouses.

Last year, to advance this legislation or any other proposal that would provide marriage penalty relief, I offered an amendment during the markup of the FY 2000 budget resolution that ensured a significant reduction in—or the outright elimination of—the marriage penalty would be a central component of any tax cut package adopted during last year's reconciliation process.

Later that summer, in accordance with my budget amendment, the $792 billion tax cut reconciliation package that was passed by the Senate last summer included such relief, as did the final House-Senate conference report. However, just as President Clinton vetoed the tax bill in 1995 that included marriage penalty relief, last year's tax bill was vetoed as well.

In an effort to address this issue outside a broader tax package, the House of Representatives passed legislation earlier this year—by a bipartisan vote of 268 to 158—that would reduce the marriage penalty.

Now, in the Senate, we are considering stand-alone legislation that would dramatically reduce the marriage penalty by doubling the standard deduction for married couples relative to single filers; expanding the 15 percent and 28 percent income tax brackets for married couples to twice the size of the corresponding tax brackets for single filers; increasing the phase-out range of the Earned Income Credit (EIC) for couples filing joint returns; and permanently exempting family tax credits from the individual Alternative Minimum Tax (AMT).

Mr. President, it is my hope that, by considering this package of marriage penalty relief proposals as a stand-alone bill—and not as part of a broader, and potentially controversial, tax cut package—we will not only pass this legislation prior to ''tax day'' on April 17, but ultimately send a bill to the President that he will sign for the benefit of all married couples.

The bottom line is that we should not condone or accept a tax code that penalizes married couples or discourages marriage, and this bill provides the Senate with the opportunity to correct this inequity in a straightforward manner.

Ultimately, this bill is not simply about providing the American people with a reasonable and rational tax cut—rather, it is about correcting a gross discrepancy in the tax code that unfairly impacts married couples. Accordingly, even though individual members of this body disagree on a wide variety of tax cuts policies, I would hope we would all agree that the act of marriage should not be penalized by the Internal Revenue Code—and would support the proposal before us accordingly.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise today in support of the Roth marriage tax relief plan. The clock is ticking, Mr. President. In less than forty-eight hours, Americans across the country will empty their pockets to pay the government thousands of dollars in taxes.

For approximately 42 American couples, tax day will have an extra sting to it, because they will have to pay an average of $1,400 extra in taxes to accommodate an outdated and discriminatory tax system.

When we first adopted the tax code, women made up only about three percent of the work force. But today, women are full time entrepreneurs. Some seventy percent of mothers work, only to find their income penalized. Our tax system did not anticipate this dramatic growth in dual income families. So now an outdated system discriminates against women and married couples.

When Mr. and Mrs. Smith get married, they look forward to a bright and prosperous future—to have and to hold, for richer and for poorer. But they soon find that Uncle Sam has moved in and cast his low shadow over them. And they are undoubtedly poorer.

The marriage penalty cuts two ways—by pushing married couples into a higher tax bracket and by lowering the couple's standard deduction. Two married income earners, with their combined income, must pay their income tax at a higher rate with a lower deduction than they would if they were two single people.

This is not a one time penalty. Under our tax system, marriage is not a freeway. It is a toll road. For ten years of marriage, couples must pay an average of $14,000 extra. For twenty years, couples must pay $28,000 extra. And they must forgo money that they could have invested in a car, a house, or their children's education. Mr. President, we must update the tax system and we must lift this extra burden on the backs of American couples.

The Roth plan takes solid steps on the path of tax relief. It increases the standard deduction for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the basic standard deduction for a single individual beginning in 2001. This standard deduction increase will help 25 million couples filing joint returns. The Roth plan expands the 15-percent and 28-percent tax brackets for a married couple filing a joint return to twice the size for a single individual. Twenty-one million couples will benefit from these tax bracket expansions. This legislation also expands the Earned Income Credit (EIC) beginning and ending income levels by $2,500, removing the disadvantage of receiving a smaller EIC after marriage. Finally, the Roth plan exempts family tax credits from the individual Alternative Minimum Tax.

Mr. President, all week I have heard my colleagues on the other side of the aisle claim their support for marriage penalty relief. Yet they insist on quenching the thirst of American couples with only a raindrop relief. They offer nearly $100 billion less in tax relief for American couples in the next ten years. Fifty percent of the benefits under their plan do not occur until 2008.

We must be serious about tax relief for American couples. If you talk to any marriage counselor, he or she will quickly tell you that the number one cause of problems in marriage is money—specifically, the lack of it. If we want to support American families, if we want to support the future of America, we can start by reducing the money problems of married couples.

Mr. President, there are 207,677 couples in my home state of Arkansas suffering from the marriage penalty. They have called for marriage penalty relief. I want to give it to them.

I hope that when the clock stops ticking on Saturday, the Senate will have lightened the load on the couples and the American family. I urge my colleagues to support the Roth marriage penalty relief plan.

Mr. MACK. Mr. President, I hope that our colleagues across the aisle will not prevent us from reducing the marriage penalties in the tax code. This bill will provide married couples the relief that President Clinton denied them last year with his veto of the Taxpayer Refund and Relief Act of 1999. President Clinton's action last year increased taxes by close to $800 billion and imposed a marriage penalty on middle class American families.

There is no place in the tax code for marriage penalties. Marriage penalties are caused by tax laws that treat joint filers relatively worse than single filers with half the income. It has of late become common practice to use the tax code for purposes of social engineering, discouraging some actions with the stick of tax penalties and encouraging others with the carrot of tax preferences. But there is no legitimate policy reason for punishing taxpayers with higher taxes just because they happen to be married. The marriage penalties in the tax code undermine the family, the institution that is the foundation of our society.

I view this bill as just a start. Our tax code will not truly be family-friendly until every single marriage penalty is rooted out and eliminated, so that married couples with twice the income of single individuals are taxed at the same rates, and are eligible for the same tax preferences—including deductions, exemptions, use of IRAs and other savings vehicles—as those single filers. This bill is an important step toward that ultimate goal.

The Democrat criticisms of our bill are misplaced. They argue that our bill contains complicated phase-ins, in contrast to their simple approach. But anyone who reads the bill and their alternative would see that this is false. The Finance Committee bill contains percentages in it, sure enough. And it phases in the relief, that is true. But the percentages and the phase-ins are instructions to the Treasury and the IRS, to make adjustments to the tax brackets. The only people who have to make any new calculations under the Finance Committee bill are the bureaucrats who make up the tax tables, not the taxpayer.

By contrast, the Democrat alternative, in phasing in its relief, requires taxpayers to calculate their taxes as joint filers, then calculate their taxes as if they were single—a complicated process that requires the allocation of various deductions and credits. Next, the taxpayer would have to determine the difference between these two calculations and then reduce this by a certain percentage. That is supposed to be simple? The Democrat substitute adds to the headaches of tax filing and the demand for tax preparers and tax preparation software.

The Democrats also complain that the Finance Committee bill does more than address their narrow definition of the marriage penalty. They invoke the so-called ''marriage bonus.'' But the ''marriage bonus'' is a red herring. What they call a ''marriage bonus'' results from adjustment tax brackets for joint filers to reflect the fact that two adults are sharing the household income. Under the Democrat approach, single taxpayers who marry a non-working or low-earning spouse should pay the same amount of taxes as when they were single, even though this income must be spread over the needs of two adults.

This approach is fundamentally flawed. The Democrat approach would enshrine in the law a new, ''homemaker penalty.'' The Democrats would make families with one earner and one stay-at-home spouse pay higher taxes than families with the same household income and two earners.

But why discriminate against one-earner families? Why would we want a tax code that penalized families just because one of the spouses chooses the hard work of the household over the role of breadwinner? The Democrat alternative discourages parents from staying home with their infant children, and penalizes people who sacrifice income in order that they can care for their elderly parents. That is just plain wrong.

The Finance Committee bill reduces the marriage penalty in a rational sensible way, by making the standard deduction for joint filers twice what it is for single filers, and by making the ranges at which income is taxed at the 15% and 28% rates twice for joint filers what they are for single filers. This recognizes that marriage is a partnership in which two adults share the household income. Our approach cuts taxes for all American families. The Democrats call this a ''bonus.'' We calm it common sense.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, how much time do we have remaining on this side of the aisle?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has just a little less than 3 minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute. And if somebody else wants the remaining 2 minutes, I would be glad to yield it.

I take this opportunity, just before the cloture votes, to clear up a couple things. First of all, the Senator from North Dakota is a very good friend of mine. I work very closely with him. I do not dispute what he said. But I do want to clarify his reaction to my saying that taxes are as high as they have ever been in the history of our country.

The Senator made the point that taxes have gone down for many taxpayers. Of course, that is true. He concentrated on middle-income taxpayers. But it is mostly true because of the tax credit for children that the Republicans promoted and passed in the 1997 tax bill. For a family with two kids, for instance, that means $1,000 that Republicans provided, or about $25 billion a year.

But despite the protests of the Senator from North Dakota, I still stand by my comments that the overall percentage of taxation is at a historical high of near 21 percent of GDP.

Then in response to Senator ROBB's comments on the Medicare reserve, it is my understanding that $40 billion was reserved for Medicare and prescription drugs in the conference report. I hope and think that the Senator from Virginia is incorrect.

I yield my remaining time to the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-five seconds.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I thank the Chair and the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. President, I say to all my colleagues, this is the vote on marriage tax penalty relief. If you support marriage tax penalty relief, vote for cloture so we can consider this bill. We can send a clean bill to the President. If you are not for marriage tax penalty relief, do not vote for cloture.

This is the vote on whether or not we are going to grant marriage tax penalty relief to nearly 25 million American couples. That is what this vote is all about now. It is not about a whole bunch of extraneous amendments. It is about the marriage tax penalty.

If you ran on this issue, this is your chance to vote to say: I am for eliminating the marriage tax penalty. If you ran on it, this is the time to stand up and say: I am for eliminating the marriage tax penalty.

I urge all of my colleagues to vote for cloture to go to the bill.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VOINOVICH). All time has expired.

MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY RELIEF ACT OF 2000—Resumed

Pending:

Lott (for Roth) amendment No. 3090, in the nature of a substitute.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate the pending cloture motion, which the clerk will state.

The bill clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, do hereby move to bring to a close debate on the pending amendment (No. 3090) to the marriage tax penalty bill:

Trent Lott, Kay Bailey Hutchison, Judd Gregg, Tim Hutchinson, Rick Santorum, Connie Mack, Michael B. Enzi, Craig Thomas, Robert F. Bennett, Chuck Grassley, Jim Bunning, Gordon Smith of Oregon, Ben Nighthorse Campbell, Wayne Allard, Jeff Sessions, and Bill Roth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the quorum call under the rule has been waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on amendment No. 3090 to H.R. 6, an act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to reduce the marriage tax penalty by providing for adjustments to the standard deduction, 15-percent rate bracket, and earned-income credit, and to repeal the reduction of the refundable tax credits, shall be brought to a close?

The yeas and nays are required under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) is necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 53, nays 45, as follows:

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 303) was agreed to, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 303

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on the legislative day of Thursday, April 13, 2000, or Friday, April 14, 2000, on a motion offered pursuant to this concurrent resolution by its Majority Leader or his designee, it stand adjourned until 12:30 p.m. on Tuesday, May 2, 2000, for morning-hour debate, or until noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first; and that when the Senate recesses or adjourns at the close of business on Thursday, April 13, 2000, or Friday, April 14, 2000, on a motion offered pursuant to this concurrent resolution by its Majority Leader or his designee, it stand recessed or adjourned until noon on Tuesday, April 25, 2000, or such time on that day as may be specified by its Majority Leader or his designee in the motion to recess or adjourn, or until noon on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first.

SEC. 2. The Speaker of the House and the Majority Leader of the Senate, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the House and the Minority Leader of the Senate, shall notify the Members of the House and the Senate, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DODD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

FISCAL YEAR 2001 BUDGET—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report to accompany the concurrent resolution on the budget, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 290) establishing the congressional budget for the United States Government for fiscal year 2001, revising the congressional budget for the United States Government fiscal year 2000, and setting forth appropriate budgetary levels for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2005, having met have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The Senate proceeded to consider the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 12, 2000.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be 4 hours of debate, as follows: 90 minutes under the control of the Senator from New Mexico; 90 minutes under the control of the Senator from New Jersey; and 1 hour under the control of Senator REED of Rhode Island.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, on our side, I do not intend to yield back time until Republican Senators have indicated to me they do not want any time. I do not know why we need a full hour and a half on our side, and I do not know why they need a full hour and a half plus 1 hour, which is 2½ hours on their side.

I yield myself time off my hour and a half.

I noted a minute ago that present on the floor was Senator SNOWE. While I wish to discuss a number of issues, I want to say to her, and to those who supported her, that because of her diligence, this budget resolution has a reserve fund of $40 billion to be used for Medicare prescription drugs and Medicare reform.

Frankly, I note that the House, at least on the majority side, is already discussing what they would do. Clearly, this $40 billion will go to the Finance Committee of the Senate because Senator SNOWE, Senator WYDEN, and Senator SMITH in the committee worked very hard to get it done. I will say what has changed so I will not, in any way, overstate the case as to what Senator WYDEN did.

But essentially because of OLYMPIA SNOWE's dedication, we put $40 billion in a reserve fund. That means the Finance Committee can go to work on a bill, and the money is waiting for them to do a bill that meets the mandates or the qualifications of this reserve fund. We have, as she requested, up to $20 billion for prescription drugs and up to $20 billion for reforming the system so that it will do a better job and a more efficient job while we are adding some new benefits.

I think everybody who has looked at it thinks that is what we ought the do.

In committee, there was a mandatory date by which this had to be done. In conference with the House, that was refused. So we won half the battle. We got the $20 billion and the $20 billion, as I have described, which is $40 billion, but we did not get the mandatory date. We are going to have to rely upon the impetus that will accrue over the ensuing days because of the House action and the desire of this body to have our Finance Committee produce a bill. I have every confidence that they will.

Having said that, I yield myself about 10 minutes to describe where we are.

If, in fact, we adopt this budget resolution this evening, I say we are getting better all the time at getting our job done. The occupant of the Chair will be pleased to know we have had a Budget Act for a long time, since 1974. For all those years, if we produce this budget tonight, we will have produced three budget resolutions on time. That means April 15 had come and gone most years, and we could not get our job done because it was so contentious and so difficult. It will mean that 2 years in a row—last year and this year—for the first time in history, we adopted a budget resolution on time, by April 15.

That speaks for itself. It means, however, that we can get started on the work that must be done to implement this work. We can get started sooner, earlier. With the hard work that is going to be done predominantly by the Appropriations Committees, and the Finance Committee in our body, we may very well get most of our work done in a very timely manner and be able to leave here before our respective conventions with the people's business having been accomplished.

I think that would be a pretty good achievement. I will agree that it has been a very hard job. I will also indicate openly, it was very difficult for me. This work is about as difficult as any I have done in getting something accomplished. Again, it is partisan. We produced it with Republican votes. That is the way it normally is on a budget resolution. Then we will proceed to try to implement it. We will do our best.

Let me summarize, so everybody will know what this resolution does. Then, in due course, we can hear from the other side as to what they think it does not do and what they would like to do.

But I say to the Senate, I have seen an atmosphere that indicates the theory which I adopted—starting last year when we had a big surplus—that we better take a little bit of this money and allocate it to the taxpayers is resonating every day, with more and more assurance that if we do not, there will not be any surplus.

I know the occupant of the chair is a fiscally responsible person. He has his ideas. I see new bills being proposed because, indeed, we have a surplus. People have not done anything for 40 or 50 years, and they are introducing a bill that would cost anywhere from $2 to $5 billion, and all of a sudden it becomes expedient that we do it, and we must do it now.

We hear about all kinds of new bills that are now big-need items in America. Let me suggest, for those who say it is too early to have tax relief, if we do not do it pretty soon, there will be no surplus left for the taxpayer.

Our budget resolution says: If you can, Senate and House, produce some tax relief. It says if you cannot, all that money, over 5 years, goes to the debt, I say to my good friend, Senator GORTON.

But let me suggest that we are right; we ought to put in money to have some tax relief. I will give you the paramount reason for that. On this floor, immediately prior to the consideration of this budget resolution conference report, what were we discussing? We were discussing the marriage tax penalty reform—meaning married couples in America, including the couples married this year, when they file that April 15 tax return early next week, they are going to be penalized, on average, $1,400 because they are married.

Why should we wait around for another decade, when there are the kind of surpluses we have seen in this budget resolution, to provide tax relief for the American people?

The Democrats have been arguing: The Republicans are going to enhance the rich of America with their tax bill. They are going to use this relief and give it all to the rich people.

It should come as no surprise that 50 percent of the tax relief we are talking about—$64 billion; almost 50 percent—is going to go to cure the marriage tax penalty. There may be some who will get up and say that is helping the rich. But I am saying, it is something most Americans do not believe is American law. Most Americans say: Are you kidding? Are we punishing two people who are married, who work, who file joint returns? The answer is yes, and we want to fix it.

For those who say wait until we fix Social Security, wait until we fix Medicare, wait until we fund all these programs we now see as desperately needed, wait until we fund the President's programs—I say to Senator GORTON, that is a 14-percent increase in domestic spending—just fund it, there will not be any money for Social Security. If you do that 3 years in a row, there is no money for tax relief, and you are using the Social Security surplus, which is for 3 years of domestic funding at the level of the President.

So what is risky? They say it is risky to have marriage tax penalty relief provided for in this bill. I say it is not risky; it is absolutely necessary. It is urgent.

America must show we are concerned about married couples. There is a very longstanding belief in America and in the world, that we ought to try to promote family life, if we can, and married couples trying to struggle through it.

It is not too early. It is the right time. But if we do not do it, I can see it coming between all the new needs that are going to be prescribed for this budget that we have not done in the past, that we are going to have to add to this huge Federal expenditure called the budget, and there will be nothing for marriage tax penalty relief or any kind of tax relief.

So once again, this budget says, over 5 years, $150 billion can be used in tax relief. Right off the bat, when somebody on the other side says it is for the rich, I want everybody to understand almost half of it is for the marriage tax penalty reform. Second, we don't touch a nickel of Social Security. We have Senator ABRAHAM's part of this resolution which for the next year says the lockbox applies and makes it part of the budget resolution that you need 60 votes to touch or use the Social Security surplus. Then to make it even more logical, we put $170 billion against the public debt this year, the biggest installment on the debt in the history of the Republic, $1 trillion over the next 5 years. This is an enormous payment on the debt. Nothing similar was ever assumed 5 years ago or 10 years ago or, I imagine, for the last three or four decades.

In addition, because of Senator SNOWE's initiative, we provide $40 billion on Medicare and prescription drugs.

On the tax relief—just to show the equity of it all—we put $170 billion on the debt, and we have $13 billion in tax relief in the first year, between 12 and 13. The ratio is about 12 to 1, almost 13 to 1 of debt reduction versus tax relief. Over the 5 years, it is about 8 to 1 in debt reduction versus tax relief. That is pretty good fairness, since we are talking about tax fairness in this budget resolution.

All spending will increase $212 billion over the next 5 years. That includes the $40 billion for prescription drugs. There will be NIH, science, funds for military, funds for health, funds for military retirees, veterans and other high-priority items.

Frankly, I hope we pass this resolution and proceed to prove we tried to try to do this. We think this is the right budget for our time. If we don't hold down spending, except for high-priority items such as defense, education, science, NIH and the like, then the married couples of America can say goodbye to any tax relief as it might affect them and make their commitment to the institution of marriage and family life a little less difficult. After we have done marriage tax penalty relief, we will do something on the tax side for small business, which is the cornerstone of our great success in the last 6 years. We will talk about that later.

With that, unless one of my Republican Senators wants part of my time, I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time. I thank the Senate for its attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, this is the last budget resolution on which I will be working. It has been quite an interesting exercise.

I start off by saying that I hope and believe firmly the goodwill that exists with the chairman of the Budget Committee and myself will not evaporate as we discuss this budget. We are good friends, and we have been good partners in debate and discussion. We disagree on the conclusions. That means no disrespect flowing either way, and I am sure I speak for Senator DOMENICI. It is with esteem and—I use the term carefully—affection that we have worked together.

Now that we have said the good things, we will get on to the others; that is, I firmly believe this is the wrong budget resolution at the wrong time because we are still in the position that, with rare exception, we have almost no bipartisan agreement. I heard Senator DOMENICI describe the former occupant of the chair as fiscally responsible. I assume that ''fiscally responsible'' is kind of a catchall for the side of the aisle that one is on; that others on this side may appear to be fiscally irresponsible.

We can't buy that. We have a difference of view. The difference of view is clearly marked in this budget resolution. What should we do to use the funds we have available on behalf of the American public? Should we focus on those whose incomes are at the middle or the lower end of the scale or should we give the tax breaks primarily to the wealthy of the country? It clearly reflects the values and priorities we each have.

This budget conference report calls for costly and risky tax breaks that would, contrary to the statements made, raid Social Security surpluses. It proposes deep cuts in domestic programs such as education and health care and law enforcement and veterans' benefits and environmental protection. It fails to ensure that seniors will be provided with a meaningful prescription drug benefit. It talks about it, but it doesn't arrange for it to happen. On debt reduction—the Holy Grail that Chairman Greenspan held out as being the cardinal first step, the principle by which we operate in terms of maintaining our fiscal responsibility, paying down the debt—this fails to pay down the debt as much as we can. It fails to make it a priority. It hides the long-term cost of its tax breaks and it puts our economy at risk by weakening our commitment to fiscal discipline.

To understand my contention that the tax breaks in this conference report would raid Social Security, I will take a quick look at the numbers.

The Congressional Budget Office, CBO, says that over the next 5 years, the non-Social Security surplus will be $171 billion. We don't dispute that. The sides have not argued on that count. This assumes that Congress freezes discretionary spending at current real levels. ''Current real levels'' means adjusting only for inflation. In fact, if Congress increases domestic spending at the same rate as it has done in recent years, which has been greater than inflation, the actual surplus would be substantially smaller. Still, to give the majority the benefit of the doubt, let's ignore history for a moment and optimistically assume that the non-Social Security surplus will be $171 billion. The conference report—that report which was debated and agreed upon between the House and the Senate, their budgeteers, our budgeteers, and finally both bodies, they have already passed this so we are being asked to pass it—calls for tax breaks of $175 billion. Now, that is in the face of a $171 billion non-Social Security surplus.

This reduction in future surpluses also would require the Government to pay about $21 billion more in interest payments because we would have more debt. Thus, the real cost of the tax breaks isn't $175 billion; it is $196 billion, $25 billion more than the entire non-Social Security surplus of $171 billion. In clear words, this budget would raid Social Security of $25 billion.

Now, if the tax breaks use the entire non-Social Security surplus, plus $25 billion of the Social Security surplus, how can the conference report also provide funding for any of the new initiatives it claims, such as increases in military spending, prescription drug coverage, and agriculture, to name just a few high-priority items?

The real answer is, it just can't be done. The numbers don't add up. Unfortunately, the majority seeks to sidestep this problem by assuming huge, unspecified cuts in domestic programs. The resolution calls for a 7.5-percent cut in nondefense discretionary programs over the next 5 years. The cut would be, in the fifth year, 9.8 percent. In fact, since the majority claimed it would protect some specific programs, the cuts in other areas would be substantially higher.

We only received a single copy of the conference report last night at about 10 o'clock. So we haven't had the time to fully analyze the impact of cuts such as this. But these cuts are even more dramatic than the cuts proposed in the Senate version of the legislation, which were 8.2 percent in the fifth year. That was the Senate version of the legislation, before it merged with the House in the conference report we are examining now.

Here are some of the examples of the impact of the less severe Senate cuts—once again, the bill we sent over to merge with the House—as estimated by the Office of Management and Budget. We would have 20,000 new teachers not being able to be hired to reduce class size; 5,000 communities would lose assistance to help construct and modernize their schools; 62,000 fewer children would be served by the Head Start Program, which is a very successful program that says early education helps kids prepare to learn. We find that is necessary in our society. Then, there would be 19,000 fewer researchers, educators, and students who would receive support from the National Science Foundation. They do the research that talks about climate variations. We all see what the impending disasters might be like, such as tornadoes and other windstorms with higher and higher velocities and more frequency. And funding for all new federally led cleanup of toxic waste sites would be eliminated. Nine-hundred fewer FBI agents could be retained.

I wonder how the public feels about 900 fewer FBI agents—when we are looking not only at reduced rates of criminality, but also understanding what the need might be; that includes domestic terrorism, it includes fraud, and it includes all kinds of things for which we know the FBI has responsibility. We are going to work with 900 fewer FBI agents?

There would be 430 fewer Border Patrol agents available to safeguard our borders. Well, there isn't anybody I have talked to who thinks we need less protection on our borders.

The list goes on. The actual cuts will be even deeper than those suggested since the conference report calls for substantially deeper cuts than the Senate-passed version of the budget resolution.

As most people around here recognize, cuts of this magnitude are just completely unrealistic. They are not going to happen. Neither Republicans nor Democrats are going to tolerate them. It is kind of putting it off in the future. It may get us through an election cycle, but reality will come home and we will not be able to stand these cuts.

This is not the first time the Senate has assumed deep, unspecified cuts in the budget resolution. Last year's resolution included similarly unrealistic assumptions. Not surprisingly, by the end of the year, the Republican majority of Congress had approved appropriations bills that spent about $35 billion more than it assumed earlier. No doubt something similar is going to happen this year.

Unfortunately, the Republican budget relies on these unrealistic cuts for its tax breaks and its various increases in mandatory spending.

Just to explain, mandatory spending is funding those programs that are decided by the legislature, the Congress—that these programs get a high priority. We recently voted $2 billion more for the FAA—not that people disagree with the need for improving FAA's operations, but the fact is, it is mandatory. That means it gets priority, and no matter what happens behind it, the increases in FAA take place. Well, it has to come from someplace. It can come from transportation, from the Coast Guard, with all of the services they provide, or it can come from other sensitive places. The cost of that spending and the new tax breaks will be locked in up front. The savings, however, will.

When Congress later fails to make the assumed cuts in appropriations bills, funds for the tax breaks and for new spending will require deeper raids on Social Security. We should not let that fact escape. We want everybody to think about it. We want the Congressmen and the Senators who are going home and looking toward reelection to be able to explain to their constituents about how we had to dip into Social Security a little bit, even though everybody basically swore on the sword it would not happen. But it has to happen if this budget is going to stand.

One might think the assumption of deep, unrealistic cuts in discretionary spending would allow the Republicans to claim significantly more debt reduction than the budget proposed by Democrats. However, if one assumes GOP spending cuts actually materialize, which is highly unlikely, the Republican budget would still reduce much less debt than President Clinton and the Senate Democrats. The Republican plan claimed to use non-Social Security surpluses to reduce only about $12 billion of debt over 5 years. By contrast, the President's budget would reduce $90 billion of debt over that same period—more than seven times as much. So it is $90 billion under the President's budget and $12 billion in the Republican budget. This difference in debt reduction helps to show just how extreme the GOP tax breaks really are.

Throughout the debate on the resolution, the Republicans have claimed that their budget contains over a trillion dollars of debt reduction. However, this figure is based almost entirely on Social Security surpluses. These surpluses are called off-budget, and both parties are committed to protecting them. Yet when it comes to the portion of the budget that remains subject to congressional discretion, Republicans have refused to devote significant resources for debt reduction. In doing so, they have rejected repeated calls by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan to make debt reduction our first priority.

My next concern about the budget resolution is that it fails to ensure that Congress will really act on legislation establishing a prescription drug benefit—another program that is saluted, generally. But it is not real. This is in marked contrast to treatment of the tax breaks. Tax breaks have an instruction to the Finance Committee that they must report out a way to get tax breaks. They have to do it. There is quite a distinction between saying we should and they have to. The conference report includes two $20 billion reserve funds that, theoretically, could be used for prescription drugs, but there is no requirement for the Senate to act. It is very unspecific.

The second reserve fund contains vague language that would allow virtually the entire $20 billion to be used for purposes other than prescription drugs. That could leave little more than $20 billion for prescription drugs, which is far short of what is needed to provide an adequate benefit. The Medicare reserve fund, applicable to the House, would allow virtually the entire $40 billion fund to be diverted to purposes other than prescription drugs.

While they say we have to have it, they don't arrange for the mechanism to make it happen.

Compounding matters, Mr. President, the language of the second Senate reserve fund requires that the solvency of the Medicare Program be extended before a single penny can be used either for any prescription drug benefit, or new provider payments. In other words, if you want access to this money to help seniors with prescriptions, you have to cut somewhere else within Medicare first. And that seems very unlikely to happen.

Mr. President, there is only one conclusion to draw from all this: the Republican Party simply is not committed to providing our seniors with prescription drugs. The senior population has to listen to that. For the Republican Party, tax breaks for the wealthy are a much higher priority.

Mr. President, my final concern about the conference report is that it covers only 5 years, not the 10 included in last year's resolution.

People might say: Well, what is the difference between 5 or 10? It matters a lot because a tax break has an effect of compounding significantly in the second quintile. It is going to grow by leaps and bounds.

This has the effect of hiding the long-term cost of its tax breaks. It also weakens the budget resolution as a means of enforcing long-term fiscal discipline, since points of order would not be available against tax breaks that explode in cost after 5 years.

Mr. President, as of last year, CBO has been producing 10-year numbers. There's no excuse for Congress not doing the same. And if we were serious about preparing for the baby boomers' retirement, we would be sure to plan for longer term costs.

In sum, Mr. President, the Republican majority has made tax breaks that go largely to the wealthy their highest priority. Higher than Social Security. Higher than education. Higher than prescription drugs for our seniors. Higher than reducing our debt. This is unacceptable. And higher than maintaining fiscal discipline.

In so doing, they have produced a budget that is fundamentally at odds with the priorities and values of the American people. A budget that puts our economy at risk. And a budget that fails to prepare for our future.

Just to confirm something I earlier said, the budget resolution, as it came out of the Senate, says the Senate Committee on Finance shall report to the Senate a reconciliation bill. That means they must do it. That is the only place we have any force of law in the Budget Committee. Otherwise, ours is generally a guideline or blueprint for how the Congress should act, putting a ceiling on total spending. It is up to the Appropriations Committee to divide that spending. They say this reconciliation bill shall be done not later than July 14 in the year 2000, and not later than September 13 in the year 2000. So they have 2 days. That is a realistic assignment for the Finance Committee.

There is no such thing for prescription drugs. The Republicans are not asking that we treat prescription drugs with the same force and the same outcome as we do the tax breaks.

One thing is apparent. One thing is very clear. They are going to protect the tax breaks no matter who they have to take the money from to make it happen—no matter what program they are going to take the money from to make it happen; no matter what it does to the budget and its balance; no matter what it does to debt reduction; no matter what. The primary thing is tax reduction and tax breaks for the wealthy. If you make $800,000, which is kind of the median figure for the top 1 percent, you might get a $50,000 tax cut, if plans go as they are. But if you make $35,000, you could be looking at $1 a week, or maybe even $2, if things go right.

We have to make decisions. There is no room for amendments. There is no room for change. This has been decided. The majority decided. The majority will have to carry it because I predict that there is going to be little, if any, support from Democrats. We don't believe it is fiscally responsible. We don't think it is fair. We don't think it is equitable. We don't think the wealthy ought to be the largest beneficiary of the outcome.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished ranking minority member would agree with me on a request. Senator GORTON is going to preside at 4 o'clock. He wonders, if he arrives on the floor 4 or 5 minutes before having to preside, if he could speak on my time for 5 minutes.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I have no objection assuming that we don't interrupt right in the middle. We will do our best to provide for Senator GORTON.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes in rebuttal. Then I will be glad to yield time to the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

First, let me explain what we have done on Medicare.

Before any tax relief is provided in terms of dollar numbers, we have already used $40 billion of the non-Social Security surplus for Medicare. That is waiting for the committee, at which time it is assigned to them. We are not gambling. We are saying that is it. As a matter of fact, we are saying if you do not do it, it goes to the debt.

What do we provide with the $40 billion? There is a little, tiny bit of difference between the way we and others see it. And we think there will be a majority for this view when the bill finally gets considered. We say there is $40 billion. We say if you do no reform of the program, there is $20 billion. Let me repeat that. If you do no reform, there is $20 billion for prescription drugs. If you do some reform to stabilize the program, you can use the whole $40 billion for prescription drugs.

That is what Senator OLYMPIA SNOWE of Maine had as the underpinnings of her approach. She wanted some reform. But she wanted to make sure, even if we could not do that, we started a prescription drug program with $20 billion.

If the committee does something like the Breaux-Frist—that is a bipartisan approach—with some reform in Medicare, you understand the Medicare program will be insolvent in about 13 years. I don't think seniors want us to add a benefit that will make it run out of money sooner. I think they would be asking us to see if we could fix it and make it more responsive, more modern, to give them more money for prescription drugs.

Let me repeat that we are not taking this money from anyone. It is aside and apart from the tax relief we are asking for, such as the marriage tax penalty reform that the other side has been delaying here on the floor.

We are saying $40 billion is set for Medicare, and it has two purposes. If you do not reform and make the program more modern so it has a chance of surviving longer, you can use $20 billion of it. It says so in the resolution for prescription drugs. But if you do something such as the Breaux-Frist reform, which is fixing the program, you can use the $40 billion of new money for prescription drugs.

Frankly, I think it is a responsible way to handle a very difficult problem because if you do not ask for some reform to get the full $40 billion, we are going to have $40 billion, and the program next year is not going to be any better off. Then seniors are going to ask: Now what happens? We have prescription drugs, but we are still not going to have any money to pay our regular bills in about 13 years.

I think we are pushing both at the same time.

Let me make my last observation with reference to the difference between the two parties.

All of them are going to vote against this. It really says you cannot pass the marriage tax penalty which is going to cost the Treasury about $64 billion over 5 years in the name of fairness to married couples. You can't pass that, they say, until you have done all of these other things that Government wants done for the Government. And there will never be a time when we are going to have a surplus to give to the hardworking people of this country, in particular, relief items such as the marriage tax penalty. There is not going to be any money around. Don't kid anyone. There is a very big difference.

I ask that you take a visual inventory with me about the announcements of late by the administration, the Secretary of Energy, and many others: We have new programs on which we have to spend money. It isn't enough that the President already provided a 14-percent increase in domestic discretionary. There are all the new needs.

What money will they use for the ''pay fors''? Does anybody have any idea? Is the money coming from heaven? New manna in the desert? Of course not. It will be the surplus we think ought to go back to the taxpayer in the form of tax relief after we spent money to increase government.

We have money to increase government, but how much is enough? I think there is enough money available to leave a little bit. I rechecked my notes, and the tax relief in this first year is $11.6 billion; the debt reduction is $170 billion. How can anyone say we are not reducing the debt when that is the largest payment on the national debt in the history of the Republic? This resolution says: Don't touch Social Security. You will reduce it by $1 trillion—hardly a number we can understand—and still have a little bit left over for such things as tax relief for married couples in America.

That is the big difference. They want to wait, we don't know how long, but perhaps until we solve every problem we have in government with reference to Medicare and everything else. Don't give the taxpayer back even this little tiny amount.

I hope the Republicans will support this. I am very proud of the difference.

They would not have put more than $40 billion in for Medicare if they were producing their own resolution. That is about the right number on which they could get consensus on their side of the aisle. They would not put 50 or 60 or 80. If you put 40 in, there is money left over for the taxpayer. That is the truth of the budget resolution.

There will be a historic debate on education reform in a couple of weeks. I am very pleased to know we have probably had something to do with precipitating that reform debate. There is enough money to increase education. It is obvious to this Senator the Republicans are not going to go for an increase in education money if it is status quo for education, if we are going to do more of the same, because more of the same isn't good enough. We need to do something very different in education and spend more money doing it. We are going to have an opportunity to have that discussed.

This conference report assumes $45.6 billion in 2001 for the Department of Education. That is overall, for everything—a $10 billion increase. Not exactly for what the President wants but overall in this function. That is what is provided.

This is an election year. The administration and Secretary Richardson have the latest idea to take care of anyone who worked in a nuclear facility over the last 50 or 60 years. I know they are good sounding bills, but it is also an election year.

I say to the taxpayer and to married couples of America, beware of an election year. In this country, an election year means they want to spend all your money and try to convince you that is right, leaving nothing to repair problems in tax law such as the marriage tax penalty. Beware. They will have more spending programs than you ever heard of, including a 14-percent increase in domestic discretionary spending by the President in his budget in an election year.

The Republicans say: We want a change; we don't want the huge addons to government. We think in the scheme of things, over the next 5 years, the taxpayer ought to get a little bit of relief.

That is the difference in the two bills. I think it is a good difference. When they say rich people are going to get the benefit of the tax relief on the marriage tax penalty, that is unfair. We want to fix it. How many want to do that? We win that. We have to use some of the surplus to pay for that kind of reform. That money doesn't grow on trees. That money has to come out of the coffers of the United States. It doesn't belong to the Government.

I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to Senator GORTON, and then I yield back to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I appeal to my friends on the Democrat side, as well as others, we only have a total of 3 hours, plus an hour that Senator REED has, for Members to talk. Members need to be prepared to come to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, there are, in my view, two remarkable aspects to the budget resolution conference report before the Senate this afternoon.

The first is, I believe for only the third or fourth time since the Budget Act was passed, the promptness with which the Senate is dealing on a final basis with a budget resolution that is the springboard from which we will do the substantive work of the appropriations for the balance of this year. For that promptness, for the efficiency with which the Senate has dealt with this issue, we owe our deepest and sincerest thanks not only to the chairman of the committee, my friend, PETE DOMENICI, but to the staff who have labored so long and so hard on a highly technical and complicated task.

More significant perhaps than the significance of finishing our work on time is the substantive nature of this budget resolution. It is exquisitely balanced among three separate needs: The need to adequately fund those programs that are already major responsibilities of the Federal Government; the need to provide for additional programs of considerable interest, the most significant of which being the Medicare program about which Senator DOMENICI spoke earlier, but also including priorities with respect to education—particularly close to my heart—and to our national defense.

The second substantive element of this budget resolution is the dramatic reduction in the national debt it will cause. It is only a short period of time since we were discussing how we could reduce annual national deficits of upwards of a quarter a trillion a year. Now we face the equally difficult but far more pleasant prospect of paying off the national debt at a very substantial rate.

The third element in this budget resolution is the opportunity to provide tax relief for hard-working Americans who pay taxes. The chairman of the committee, Senator DOMENICI, pointed out the importance of the bill, which regrettably was subjected to a filibuster earlier today, to end the unconscionable penalty against married Americans, both of whom are at work. The thought that a couple in love, even in relatively modest professions, should pay a penalty for getting married rather than receiving the approbation of society for doing so is bizarre. To have the ability to provide for that marriage tax penalty relief, amounting, as the chairman pointed out, to almost half of the allowed tax relief in the bill, is a vitally important part of this budget resolution.

As the chairman himself pointed out, if for some reason we cannot pass tax relief, or if for some reason we pass a tax relief bill that is vetoed by the President, then that money should go to further pay down the national debt. Regrettably, many of the Members on the other side, as evidenced by their actions just a week ago when we were debating this issue on the floor of the Senate, would prefer to spend it. I suspect if we added up the expenditures contained in all of their unsuccessful amendments, we not only would have spent the entire general fund surplus, but we would have once again eaten into the Social Security surplus as well.

In summary, we have a budget resolution that allows us adequately to fund the functions of government. It allows us to meet some new needs and desires of the American people. It allows us modest but still significant room for tax relief. It makes dramatic payments on the national debt.

For each and every one of those reasons, we not only owe our thanks to the chairman of the Budget Committee and to his staff, I believe we owe our votes in favor of the resolution.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). Who yields time? The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I request to be recognized out of my time under the unanimous consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is so recognized.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we are spending a few moments discussing the budget. There are obvious differences on both sides with respect to this budget. I commend the chairman, Senator DOMENICI, and the ranking member, Senator LAUTENBERG, for their efforts over many months to fashion a budget and bring it to us.

My focal point is not on the vote that is forthcoming; it is on the vote we just concluded with respect to adjournment. In many respects, I share the overall sentiments of the Senator from West Virginia that it is about time we get down to work and business, and if we need to take time to consider the marriage tax penalty and other provisions, we should do that, rather than arbitrarily and conveniently walking away.

The concern I have goes to another critical issue, and that is the issue of our inability over many months to bring to this floor a conference report on the juvenile justice bill which includes sensible gun safety measures we all adopted in the wake of the Columbine tragedy.

The first-year anniversary of that tragedy is just 7 days away, and we will not be in Washington working on this issue; we will be scattered around the country. I believe—and that is why I joined many of my colleagues voting against adjournment—that we should be here working rather than off about the country on April 20 saying, I am sure, thoughtful and pious comments about our outrage at what happened at Columbine High School and the need to do something. We should be here instead doing something, and our departure should be tempered with the realization that we have for months foregone effective action to provide sensible gun safety rules in this country.

We all were shocked last April 20 by the carnage and horror at Columbine High School. Within a month, in May, we passed extremely sensible provisions as part of the juvenile justice bill to provide for child safety locks, to close the gun show loophole, ban the importation of large-capacity ammunition clips for automatic weapons, and many other provisions. Yet all of our efforts have languished for months. In fact, the conference committee met just one time in August in a perfunctory meeting, and since that time, it has not even come together to consider these difficult issues and to seek a compromise resolution so we can send this measure to the President to become law.

We are leaving today with our work undone. I had hoped we could have stayed. I had hoped we could have worked harder and more efficiently so that we could, in fact, have a conference report with gun control measures that would be sent to the President for his signature.

The Columbine tragedy is just one aspect of a pervasive climate of gun violence in this country that claims 12 children a day. We have to take effective steps to prevent that tidal wave of gun violence.

I note the other body, responding to the pressure of public opinion and the sensible nature of the provisions we are talking about, moved last Tuesday to enact legislation that provides enhanced penalties, mandatory minimum sentences on any person who uses a gun while committing a crime of violence or is involved in serious drug trafficking offenses.

No one is going to argue about the need for strong enforcement and stiff penalties, but enforcement without adequate, sensible, comprehensible laws misses the point. We have to do both. Indeed, we insist both be done.

My colleague, Senator DURBIN of Illinois, has been very forceful in trying to, within the context of this budget, enhance the resources devoted to the enforcement of our gun laws. He has met opposition. That opposition, I believe, should fade. We can and must do both: Prevent gun violence by good, sound, commonsense laws, and enforce those laws so we further add to the prevention of violence in our community.

One other aspect of this enforcement issue is the simple fact that we cannot enforce loopholes. We have to have legislation that is sensible, practical, and works. We found, particularly in the case of the gun show legislation, that the current regime just does not work. Senator LAUTENBERG's amendment on the juvenile justice bill will effectively close that loophole and give our authorities credible and effective means to prevent easy access to firearms by those individuals who are prohibited, either through criminal records or a history of mental instability.

There are other aspects within the bill that are so clearly and obviously necessary and, indeed, noncontroversial. In poll after poll, 89 percent of Americans support child safety locks, support the notion that these safety locks should be sold with a weapon and, indeed, should be incorporated in the design of a new weapon. The State of Maryland last week, in a very courageous legislative act, passed legislation that will do just this.

The need is quite clear. For children under the age of 15, the rate of accidental gun deaths in America is nine times higher than the rate of 25 other industrial countries combined. Often, I believe, there is a misperception about the nature of gun violence in this country; that it is the result of hoodlums attacking innocent citizens, victimizing them with handguns, when, in fact, there is an extraordinary number of children who are killed accidentally. Here, certainly, is a situation where a child safety lock can and should make a difference.

There is another aspect of gun violence in America and, again, it is not the gangs with guns attacking innocent citizens. It is the fact that guns are frequently used in suicides. For young children under 15, suicide deaths from guns are 11 times higher than that of the other 25 industrial nations combined. In fact, 54 percent of all firearms-related deaths in 1996 were suicides. Once again, a child safety lock might have helped, might have deterred for a moment a child or even an adult who was so desperate, so distraught that they contemplated and, sadly, acted out a death wish.

These statistics alone warrant the legislation—in fact, demand the legislation. There is a wealth of research that suggests the likelihood of suicide among adolescents increases by the ease of access to firearms—suicide by firearms.

According to the National Journal, one study last year found that three-fourths of adolescents who use a gun to commit suicide obtain the gun from the family home.

The Injury Control Research Center at the Harvard School of Public Health found in a 1999 survey that 20 percent of gun owners stored their guns loaded and unlocked. This is a situation, again, that cries out for sensible control of weapons to prevent these tragic and unnecessary deaths.

There is a national survey—the largest ever conducted—on gun storage by the American Journal of Public Health which found that more than 22 million children in the United States live in homes with firearms; and in 43 percent of those homes, the guns are not locked up or fitted with trigger locks.

Simply by the adoption of a national requirement to have trigger locks on weapons, we cannot ensure that each and every gun will be locked up and secured. But certainly, we will have a much higher percentage of those weapons that are secured if we pass legislation of this kind.

If we require a safety lock to be provided when a gun is sold, if we give parents and adults who buy these weapons not only the incentive but the actual lock, we can, I hope and expect, reduce these types of deaths among children.

In fact, we probably should be doing more because there are many States that have child access prevention laws—or CAP laws as they are called—which encourage the safe storage of firearms by holding adults accountable if they knowingly keep a firearm within their home where a child might have access to it and that child, in fact, obtains the weapon and uses it to harm themselves or to harm others. Senator DURBIN has such a bill. I am proud to be a cosponsor of that legislation. This legislation is working.

A 1997 article published in the Journal of the American Medical Association analyzed the effect of CAP laws in 12 States. The JAMA study found that, on average, there was a 23-percent drop in accidental firearm-related deaths among children younger than 15 years old.

There has been an overall downward trend in unintentional shootings in the United States since 1979. That is encouraging. But indeed, we saw a much steeper decline in those States that had child access prevention laws.

But if we are not yet ready to consider a child access prevention law, the least we can do, the minimum we can do, is follow through on our vote of last May and ensure the conference committee sends to us quickly the child safety lock legislation that we passed.

There is another important part of the legislation that is pending in the conference committee, and that is the legislation that was sponsored and championed by Senator LAUTENBERG with respect to the gun show loophole. This particularly resonates at this moment when we are days away from the Columbine tragedy, because, in fact, three of the weapons used in the Columbine tragedy were bought at gun shows from unlicensed dealers who did not have to perform background checks.

The two killers, Dylan Klebold and Eric Harris, along with an older woman friend, Robyn Anderson, went to a gun show and obtained these weapons. In fact, it is reported that both Harris and Klebold went from table to table, from booth to booth, trying to find an unlicensed dealer, knowing they would not be subjected to a background check.

In fact, Robyn Anderson herself testified before the Colorado Legislature that she would not have helped these young men if she knew she had to face a background check.

What more compelling evidence can we have of the need and the effects of this legislation than the reality of the tragedy at Columbine High School?

There has been a lot of talk by the gun proponents that a 72-hour waiting period is involved in this amendment. It is not the case at all. There is not a waiting period. What it requires, though, is that the law enforcement authority would have 72 hours to fully conduct the background check. The gun lobby and their allies say that would completely undermine gun shows, which are weekend events, which start up on a Saturday and end perhaps in midafternoon the next day, Sunday. They say they could not do that.

In fact, not only could they do it in the vast majority of cases, but they should do it because we should have the same Brady law applying to all dealers at a gun show.

It turns out that the FBI indicates, in their statistics, that most gun purchases are processed extremely quickly. In fact, using the national instant check system, the FBI clears 72 percent of gun buyers within 30 seconds; another 23 percent are cleared within 2 hours. So 95 percent of the people who attempt to obtain guns are cleared within 2 hours. It is only that other 5 percent who might require an additional day or two.

But of that 5 percent, they are 20 times more likely to be prohibited from possessing a firearm. So the reality is that those people who argue for no background checks at gun shows or that they have to be limited to 24 hours are simply protecting those who are most likely to be prohibited under the law from purchasing a firearm a handgun.

In fact, the vast majority of gun purchasers—those law-abiding citizens, those individuals that the NRA points to as their sterling members—would not be impeded at all. They would be checked within 2 hours.

The other aspect of this, in terms of requiring additional time for law enforcement officers, is that if there is a problematic application for a purchase, if there is a suggestion or indication that the individual is not qualified, then those law enforcement officers need the time to check out records, to go to a county courthouse or to go someplace else to get the records; that would be virtually impossible if this was limited to 24 hours on a Saturday or a Sunday.

Frankly, they have to do it because there is a due process requirement. If you are going to turn down an individual from obtaining a firearm, that police officer has to have sufficient evidence—real evidence, not hearsay, not the feeling that something is wrong, not a thought that they heard about this individual someplace, in the coffee shop—that he is unreliable or might have been convicted of a crime; they have to have tangible evidence. Otherwise, they will be sued, probably by advocates and proponents of the gun lobby. So this is a real, practical and necessary need for enforcing the law.

But what we hear consistently from the gun lobby is lots of misinformation: It will close down gun shows. There is a waiting period.

All of this is wrong. The Lautenberg amendment is sound, practical, pragmatic legislation that will deal with the problem, that will not at all impede the vast majority of purchases of firearms at gun shows, and will contribute significantly to the elimination of—we hope, or at least a diminution of—the gun violence we are seeing in the country today.

In the Senate last week, we had the opportunity to vote on a resolution I proposed that would urge the conferees to send a report back to us before April 20, including all of the provisions I have spoken about, that would, in fact, give us the chance to send this to the President for his signature. The vote on April 6 was 53–47, with a bipartisan majority. That vote has started some wheels turning.

On April 11, Mr. HYDE, chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the other body, and JOHN CONYERS, the ranking member, sent a letter to Senator HATCH saying:

> We write to request a juvenile justice conference meeting as soon as possible.

We are making progress, but we are going to lose this momentum and this progress as we leave this week. Perhaps that is intentional. Perhaps this is about stopping the momentum that is building up, playing for time, hoping that we forget about Columbine, hoping that when the anniversary comes, we will be all around the country and the world and not here to respond to the concerns of families in this Nation who are deeply concerned about this issue.

I have spoken about the aspects of the legislation. I have spoken about the logic behind it, the statistics that strongly support it. Ultimately, this is about people's lives in America—sadly, and too often, about children's lives.

On February 29, a 6-year-old, Kayla Rolland, was shot to death by her 6-year-old classmate in Mount Morris Township, MI. I have said this before and it bears repeating: If any of us last May stood on this floor and said a 6-year-old child would be shot to death with a handgun by another 6-year-old child in a school in America, we would have been accused and lambasted as a hysterical demagog who was trying to stir up unreasonable fears and concerns for political advantage.

The truth is, it has happened. A 6-year-old is dead, shot by another 6-year-old in a school in this country. That week, Kayla's death was just one of other deaths of children that go unheralded, because 12 children die a day. For example, one young woman in Carroll County, MD, 18 years old, died of an accidental gunshot wound to the head after she and her friends were admiring her father's .22-caliber revolver. Where were her parents? They were in Costa Rica as missionaries. Had there been a law requiring a trigger lock, had the gun salesman been required to provide a trigger lock with this weapon, I have to believe parents such as those would have locked up the weapon. As those teenagers were admiring the weapon, it wouldn't have discharged. We might have been able to save a life if we had acted. Think of the lives that are being lost because we are not acting.

Another 16-year-old boy in Shopiere, WI, and his friend were horsing around with a .22-caliber pistol his mother kept for protection. It was usually stored in a dresser, but they got ahold of it. After posing with the gun for pictures, the boy pointed the gun to his head. It went off, killing him. As his grandmother said: It was kid's play, total kid's play. Ask yourself, had that weapon been secured with a child safety lock, would it have gone off as two young kids horsing around posed with it? Probably not.

Then a 15-year-old boy in San Bernardino, CA, found his stepfather's handgun while his pregnant mother slept, and used to it shoot himself. Perhaps at the height of desperation, if he had seen a lock on that weapon, he might have been deterred for a moment, enough time perhaps to somehow come back off the edge rather than to plunge into the abyss and take his own life.

A 16-year-old girl in Altoona, PA, argued with her father about her curfew. He was a gun collector; he had handguns. She found one and killed herself—over a curfew. Perhaps, again, if there had been a child safety lock, some other protective device, that momentary pique, that momentary anger we have all had with our parents, would have resulted in perhaps an annoyance but not death.

That is just one week in America, the week Kayla Rolland died. But it is every week in America, 12 children a day. We can do more. We should do it, rather than leaving today and going off on our recess. That would be the greatest tribute to the 12 young people and the 1 teacher who died in Columbine High School.

I would like to say the conference committee has been working, but that is not accurate. They have been waiting for a year. We have been waiting for a year. We can do more. We should do more. We must do more. The American people want it. The American people expect it. The American people deserve it—certainly the families of those children who were killed at Columbine and the 12 children a day who are victims of gun violence in this country.

I realize we have lost that vote on adjournment. We will be back. We will come back again and again and again until we pass sensible gun safety legislation to make this country a bit safer and, hopefully, do what the American people sent us here to do: To protect their children and ensure a rule of law and not an error of violence that claims the lives of children each and every day.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the budget resolution that Republicans put before the American people today proposes an unacceptable change of course, at a time when the Nation needs to stay the course of the investments that are driving our historic economic expansion. This is a budget that reverts to the days of trickle-down economics, despite all the evidence that it will only widen the unconscionable gap that already exists between rich and poor in our society. It fails to respond to the challenges the Nation so obviously faces in education, health care, prescription drugs for the elderly, youth violence, firearm safety, hunger, scientific research and development, and environmental protection.

The Senate improved the House budget resolution in important respects last week, but the House position prevailed on every issue during conference. The document before the Senate today is far less satisfactory than the budget the Senate sent to conference last Friday. The Senate resolution dedicated just $2.7 billion of the $150 billion Republican tax cut to Pell Grants that help low-income, high-achieving students attend college. But the House Republicans killed even this modest incentive for college education, preferring to keep every possible dollar for more tax breaks for the wealthy.

The Senate resolution included an $8.5 billion reserve fund to expand early learning opportunities, so that young children enter school ready to learn. This was a bipartisan amendment that Senator STEVENS, Senator JEFFORDS and I offered. But House Republicans blocked it.

The Senate resolution included a pledge that the minimum wage should be increased by $1, but the House Republicans rejected it.

The Senate minimum wage provision expressed our fundamental commitment that many of the hardest working Americans working 40 hours a week, 52 weeks of the year, ought not to have to continue to live in poverty, nor should their children. But it was rejected by the House conferees.

The Senate resolution even included a provision by Republican Senator ARLEN SPECTER to increase funding for medical research. But again, House Republicans rejected it.

Instead, the Republican budget resolution that emerged from conference is a shortsighted scheme to protect narrow special-interests instead of the national interest. I'm proud to join my Democratic colleagues in voting against it. We will continue the battle for a fair budget in weeks and months ahead. But the final battle may well be on election day, when the American people at long last will have the choice to elect the Congress that will make the right investments, not the wrong investments, for the Nation's future.

During last week's budget debate we heard many statistics that are misleading at best. When we cut through all the ''smoke and mirrors,'' what matters is that this unacceptable budget resolution supports a huge tax break for the wealthy that the Nation can't afford.

The independent Congressional Budget Office confirms that the Republican budget resolution reduces domestic discretionary spending by an average of 6.5%. It is impossible for this Congress to write honest appropriations bills with cuts that drastic. Our Republican colleagues couldn't make the numbers add up without massive accounting gimmicks last year, and they can't do it this year.

Our Republican friends say that they designed this budget resolution to curb the gimmicks used last year. But we all know there will be new ones used to pretend to meet the urgent needs our country faces.

This budget also prevents us from acting to reduce the number of low-income working families who have no health insurance—to rebuild our crumbling public schools, to reduce the hunger that still afflicts 3 out of every 100 American households—to make college affordable for low-income students —and to achieve the scientific advances that are so close.

Tax breaks for the wealthy are what this budget resolution is all about. No other subject is treated so often and so thoroughly. There are reconciliation instructions on tax cuts, reserve funds for tax cuts, and even provisions for more tax cuts if the surplus grows. The only things that this budget resolution requires committees to report are tax cuts. The only procedural protection under ''reconciliation'' provided by the resolution is for tax cuts.

Democrats support affordable, targeted tax cuts, and they should be enacted promptly. But the merit of a tax cut depends on its size and its distribution. It is obvious that these GOP tax cuts are excessive and irresponsible. They offer plums for the rich and crumbs for everyone else, and President Clinton will be right to give them the veto they obviously deserve.

The budgets we vote for say a great deal about our values. It is easy to pay lip service to meeting the Nation's unmet needs. But a budget clearly shows whether we are willing to allocate resources to address those needs effectively.

This budget does not pass the laugh test. It does not seriously address the range of important challenges facing America. It does not meet our national needs in education, in health care, in medical and other scientific research, in security for senior citizens, in environmental protection, and in public safety. On all these issues, it is a failed budget, because it fails America. It gives the most to those who already have the most. It pretends that the Nation has no unmet needs—and it deserves to be defeated.

Mr. President, one very important aspect of the budget that was altered and changed in the budget conference report concerns the issue of prescription drugs. This issue was before the Senate Finance Committee. We had debate on this measure on the floor during the budget consideration. We hoped to be able to have debate on this issue when we talked about the marriage tax penalty. Look at the contrast between the way the budget conference considered tax breaks and how the conference committee addressed prescription drugs—an issue that is calling out for action by this Congress, and calling out for action now.

We made some progress in the budget resolution that passed the Senate earlier, but look at what happened in that conference. Look at what happened on one of the most important issues in this country today. Providing America's seniors with the help they need in order to survive, through a responsible, comprehensive prescription drug benefit that will be affordable and that will include basic benefits, as well as catastrophic coverage must be a priority.

Look at the difference on what we call reconciliation of revenue reductions in the Senate. In other words, what did the budget resolution say in the conference with regard to tax cuts? It says that the Senate Committee on Finance shall report to the Senate a reconciliation bill not later than July 14 of the year 2000, and not later than September 13, 2000, that consists of changes in laws within its jurisdiction sufficient to reduce the total level of revenues by $11.6 billion in 2001 and $150 billion for fiscal years 2001–2005. Not later than July 14 or September 13. This is what is in the conference report with regard to prescription drugs.

Whenever the Senate Committee on Finance reports a bill which improves access to prescription drugs for Medicare beneficiaries, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget may revise to accommodate such legislation $20 billion over the period of fiscal years 2001 through 2005. Then the (b) section talks about Medicare reform.

We have changed some rather specific instructions on prescription drugs—improving access to prescription drugs. The seniors of this country know the difference between access to prescription drugs and a benefit package that includes prescription drugs. Access to prescription drugs may mean a bus ticket for a senior living in Maine or any of the border States to go over to Canada. That is access to prescription drugs. We are not talking about access. We are talking about a benefit package that is going to be meaningful to our senior citizens.

That is what this debate has been about. Our seniors understand which benefits they receive and they understand which benefits they don't receive. One benefit they do not receive is a prescription drug benefit. In addition, the $20 billion which may have access to prescription drugs at this time is half the amount the President has recommended.

This is a clear abdication of this body's responsibility to our seniors. We cannot go home without taking action on an effective prescription drug program. We on this side of the aisle feel strongly that one of the priorities that should have been attended to prior to a tax break is an effective prescription drug program; one that is universal, basic and catastrophic, and affordable—affordable to the individuals and affordable to our government.

But, no, we get lip service on the issue of prescription drugs in this particular proposal. That in and of itself should be enough reason to reject the proposal. If you vote for this budget, you are not serious about making sure our seniors are going to have prescription drugs. You cannot vote for this budget and say you are serious about prescription drugs because this budget does not provide the necessary assurance to our senior citizens.

I will take a final minute to talk about the drug crisis America's seniors are facing. Prescription drug coverage is going down at the same time drug costs are going up. I shared with the Senate the other day the reality our senior citizens across this country face. A third of all senior citizens don't have any prescription drug coverage at all; another third are losing coverage. These seniors have employer-based coverage, which is declining dramatically every single year. Then there are seniors with coverage through HMOs; their coverage is being squeezed out. The only group that has reliable coverage are the poorest of the poor who are covered under the Medicaid program. Prescription drug coverage is not just another benefit, it is life and death for our seniors.

This chart demonstrates what has been happening to drug costs. We are seeing double-digit increases in drug costs. From 1995, going up; in 1997, up 14 percent; and in 1998, up 15 percent; in 1999, up 16 percent. These increases were at a time when we had an average of a 2-percent increase in the rate of inflation.

This issue affects Americans all across this country; it isn't an issue just in the Northeast. It is an issue in the Northeast, the Southeast, the Midwest, the Northwest and the Southwest. It is a universal issue. Our senior citizens deserve better action by the Budget Committee in the conference. It is a tragedy. But we are strongly committed on this side of the aisle not to give up on this issue. We are going to take every opportunity to fight for prescription drugs. We believe our seniors are entitled to an effective drug program. We think a prescription drug program is absolutely essential. It has to be one of our top priorities. It should have been done right by the Budget Committee.

The prescription drug benefit is more deserving than the tax breaks which are included in this resolution. That was the issue that was before the Budget Committee. That is the issue that is before the Senate of the United States this afternoon. That is the most important reason I will vote ''no.''

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I note the presence of Senator BOXER on the floor. I have 45 minutes remaining and I will take a few minutes to discuss Senator KENNEDY's remarks.

Mr. President, fellow Senators, nothing could be further from the truth than this budget resolution and this budget conference does not provide for Medicare prescription relief for senior citizens.

Let me state what I think the triggering mechanism would have ultimately done. It would work in favor of those who don't want a bipartisan solution because they could have stonewalled this until the date arrived and then produce a partisan solution to Medicare on the floor of the Senate. But nobody should deny the work and the authenticity of what is in this budget resolution as suggested in our Budget Committee by the distinguished Senator from Maine, Senator SNOWE.

Senator SNOWE recognizes seniors don't want a prescription drug added to a Medicare program that is going bankrupt. We provide in this budget resolution if there is some reform in this program, $40 billion in new money can be used for prescription drugs. I don't want to let my voice grow any louder because I have on different occasions wondered whether talking extremely loud helps with one's case or not. I have no illusions but that I am speaking to myself and I will speak very moderately about this. The truth of the matter is, the Finance Committee of the Senate is challenged by this budget resolution to produce a bipartisan solution to the issue of prescription drugs. Some in this body do not want a bipartisan solution because it will have some of the good points of experts on our side about how to fix this, including the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, Mr. FRIST the distinguished Senator from Maine, Ms. SNOWE, a Republican, and many others.

Let me repeat, this budget resolution says whatever you do on taxes or tax relief, such as the marriage tax penalty, there is in addition to that, $40 billion for Medicare. That is $40 billion that can be used for prescription drugs. If the committee in charge of this wants to use it all for prescription drugs, they have to provide some reform to the system.

Frankly, there is a big split over whether that is what the bill ought to do. But the Budget Committee opted, in this budget resolution, to try to be on the side of pursuing a bipartisan solution in the committee of jurisdiction, which has had 14 hearings, and is going to do something. The House is going its way. Before the year is out, we will have a bipartisan solution on this floor. That is precisely what would be good for seniors. We will take the politics out of Medicare, and we will put money into prescription drugs. That is really what we want to do in this budget resolution.

Some may call it irresponsibility. I call it the height of responsibility. I believe to do otherwise is an invitation to election year politicking about Medicare prescription drugs that is, in the end, apt not to help with the Medicare program which everybody wants to try to fix and add prescription benefits.

I want to repeat, the reason we have tax relief in this budget, and tell the committee to produce it, is the very issue we debated 4 hours ago on this floor called marriage tax penalty reform. It will cost, if we do it right, somewhere between $50 and $65 billion. Where will we get that relief for the millions of married couples? We will get it in this budget resolution and get $40 billion for Medicare, prescription drugs, and reform.

If the seniors understand the two positions, they will say let's go try this; let's have Senators on that committee of finance, Democrat and Republican, working on a solution that belongs to everybody. It will probably be a right solution for the trust fund if it is a bipartisan solution.

So I repeat, there is money for prescription drugs and there is money for tax relief, such as the marriage tax penalty reform that must be adopted.

I reserve the remainder of the time I have on the resolution.

Mr. REED. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from California from the time I control.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of Oregon). The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I want to say to Senator REED, he is a very powerful voice in favor of sensible gun laws. He is taking every opportunity he can. He has stated this many times, to bring this matter of the juvenile justice bill that contains all these important gun control laws to the floor of the Senate. Today he said we should not adjourn until we take care of this. I think he is making a very important point. We have five important, sensible gun control measures in the juvenile justice bill. We voted for them here. On one of them, it was AL GORE, the Vice President, who broke that tie vote on closing the gun show loophole on which Senator LAUTENBERG had worked so hard, to keep away from children, and to keep away from people who are mentally unstable, and keep away from criminals, access to weapons.

It is a very sad day indeed that we are going home, now, right on the heels of the tragic anniversary of Columbine—those killings occurred a year ago—and we have done nothing.

I want to state for the RECORD, every time my friend Senator REED comes to the floor, I will be there with him as long as it takes. We are going to have a Million Mom March. I don't know whether a million moms will come, but thousands will come to march in favor of these very responsible gun laws. I intend to be there, and many of us will be there with them. We will not stop the pressure.

Mr. President, every budget is a roadmap. This budget takes us down the wrong road at almost every turn. I agreed with one thing that happened in the conference, and I want to say thank you to the House. I am very careful not to say thank you to my chairman, who told me not to thank him for this because he is on the other side. The language calling for drilling in the Arctic wildlife refuge was removed. I am very pleased about that. I thank the House for doing that. I hope we do not have to face that fight this year, next year, or the year after.

But in terms of everything else that happened, this budget got decidedly worse. It is leading us down the wrong road, a road that does not adequately fund education or prescription drug benefits, a road that doesn't reduce the debt enough, a road that leads to risky tax cuts that can derail our economic recovery and therefore endanger Medicare and even Social Security.

This is a road that lacks fiscal responsibility. It has no room in it for a lands legacy bill that people on both sides of the aisle want to see, where we can take offshore oil revenues and put them into good use by expanding our public ownership of precious lands we are losing and preserve historic areas. I think this budget puts America in a risky, dangerous position and it does not meet the needs of our people.

We know what will happen if this budget goes into effect, as it will, and the appropriators carry it out. We will see cuts to the most vulnerable population—cuts in the Women, Infants and Children feeding program, cuts in Head Start, in the Job Corps, in child care, in children's mental health. Those cuts will be perhaps more than 10 percent.

We could not get more funding for afterschool programs even though we had some bipartisan support. The police chiefs all across this land know that is the best crimefighting program. We could not get that. We know juvenile crime peaks between 3 p.m. and 6 p.m. What does this budget say? We are holding the line on afterschool programs, and the million kids waiting to get in will simply have to wait. One million kids are waiting to get into afterschool programs. That is how popular they are. Ninety percent of the American people want them. The police want them. The President put it in his budget, and they have cut his request in half, leaving 1 million people out of the loop.

I do not understand how we can say we speak for the people when we walk away from a program that has 90 percent approval and one we know works.

Senator KENNEDY has talked about the flimsy prescription drug benefit. It is not going to help our seniors if we make them think we are doing something for them but we do not back it up with funding. Senator CONRAD, who will speak after I finish my remarks, has talked long and hard about a lockbox for Medicare. That was voted down. That is gone.

We agreed to lock up Social Security but not Medicare. It does not do us any good if our people get their full Social Security benefit and they have to turn around and pay more and more for Medicare. They are going to be poor one way or the other. If my colleagues support Social Security, they have to support Medicare. This budget simply does not do it.

My colleagues should see the letters that come from the people in my State who are forced to cut their medicine in half in order to make ends meet. They are choosing between prescription drugs and eating dinner. This is America. This is wrong.

Why does this budget turn out this way? Because of a risky tax cut.

Maybe some say it is good to have a tax cut; maybe they look at the tax cut as helping people who really need it. One roadmap we have is George W. Bush's tax cut. Let's look at that one. What happens if one earns over $300,000? They get back $50,000 a year. They will be popping those champagne corks in the boardrooms. But if one earns $38,000 a year, they will get back about $260 or $280 a year.

Summing up, this budget takes us down the wrong path any way one looks, whether it is looking at tax cuts that are fair and targeted, sensible and fiscally responsible, or it is a prescription drug benefit that makes sense for our seniors, protecting Medicare that makes sense for our seniors, or investing in education which makes sense for our children, or having a reserve fund for our environment.

By the way, on energy efficiency, they slash and burn the President's proposal, and then they say he has no energy policy. This budget takes us down a bad road. It should be rejected, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I regret that I am unable to support the budget resolution that is before us today. Our annual budget resolution supposedly represents our nation's fiscal blueprint, but this document comes up short in terms of what our priorities ought to be. Instead of large, untargeted and unwarranted tax cuts, we ought to be dedicating our resources towards rebuilding our nation's schools, providing Seniors with affordable medication, strengthening Social Security and building up our national defense—in addition to paying down the national debt, so that the federal government can stay out of the capital market and be better equipped to handle dips in the economy in the future. In all of these categories the budget resolution falls woefully short. Through fiscal discipline the past seven years, we finally have the ability to begin to address our real needs. We cannot allow this golden opportunity to slip through our fingers. We owe it to our children and our parents to do a better job.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am disappointed that the conference committee dropped an amendment I offered with Senator KOHL that would have applied additional surpluses estimated by CBO to debt reduction rather than tax cuts. I had hoped that this fiscally responsible amendment, which was unanimously adopted by the Senate, would be included in the final version of the budget resolution. Instead, the Committee accepted a House provision that would allow the budget chairman to use additional surpluses for tax cuts above and beyond the $150 billion in cuts already in the resolution. I find it disheartening that Congress is not even willing to commit unexpected surpluses to debt reduction.

In the 1980s, Congress went on a tax cut binge and left the bill for our children. During those years we all saw the lip service paid and the sloganeering about balancing the budget, while we simultaneously tripled the national debt and ran the biggest deficits of any nation in the history of the world. As a result, the national debt now stands at $3.6 trillion and the Federal government pays almost $1 billion in interest every working day on this debt. Now that we have surpluses, we have a chance and an obligation to pay off that debt. This budget resolution fails to live up to that responsibility.

Nothing would do more to keep our economy strong than paying down our national debt. Paying down our national debt will keep interest rates low. Consumers gain ground with lower mortgage costs, car payments, credit card charges with low interest rates. And small business owners can invest, expand and create jobs with low interest rates.

Alan Greenspan and nearly every other economist who has testified before the Senate Budget and Finance Committees has stated that our nation's budget surpluses should be used to pay down the debt. And yet, the Republican budget resolution proposes far less debt reduction than the budgets developed by President Clinton and Senate Democrats. This resolution would use 98% of the non-Social Security surplus for tax breaks which would primarily benefit the wealthy. By dropping our amendment, Congress is in danger of using an even higher percentage of the surplus for tax cuts, and even less for debt reduction. This does not make fiscal sense.

During markup, Senator LAUTENBERG offered an alternative budget that would have reduced $330 billion in debt over ten years, while providing almost $300 billion in targeted tax cuts—cuts that would go towards eliminating the marriage tax penalty, permitting the self-employed a full tax deduction for their health insurance and providing estate tax relief for family farmers and small business owners. Such cuts would be fair and targeted to help all Vermonters, not just the wealthy. Unfortunately, this amendment failed.

In 1993, Congress charted a course of fiscal discipline and the country has reaped the benefits of this successful plan. Republicans and Democrats can rightfully claim their shares of the credit for getting the nation's fiscal house in order. The important thing now is to keep our budget in balance, to pay down our debt, and to keep our economy growing. Unfortunately, this budget resolution fails to make a real commitment to debt reduction, which is why I must vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I ask for time off our side off the resolution and ask to be notified when I have consumed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, this is one of the most important decisions we make every year: the question of the budget outline for the United States; what are our priorities; where is the money going to be spent; what are the revenue sources for the United States. The fundamental question is, Are we going to maintain fiscal discipline? Are we going to maintain a strategy that has produced the longest economic expansion in our country's history?

This article appeared in the Washington Post in the business section announcing that the expansion was, at that time, the Nation's longest. This is back in February. Of course, the expansion has now been extended even further. But even then, we had created the longest economic expansion in our country's history. I say when ''we'' created; I am talking about all of us as Americans.

Part of it is a result of Federal policy: the fiscal policy of the country, which is controlled by the Congress and the President of the United States, and the monetary policy, which is controlled by the Federal Reserve. The two work hand in glove to produce economic results for this country.

Obviously, the underlying strength of America is the people of this country. Their hard work, their innovation, their creativity, their entrepreneurial spirit and drive makes this country the greatest economic power on the face of the globe.

It is important to remember the economic strategy and the economic plan that brought us to where we are today. If we look back at the last three administrations and look at the question of the budget deficits that are so important to the fiscal policy of this country and the monetary policy, this is what one finds: The Reagan administration inherited a deficit of about $80 billion and promptly ran it up to over $200 billion and dramatically expanded the Nation's debt over the period of that administration. In fact, they more than tripled the national debt during this period.

Then we had the Bush administration, which inherited a deficit of $153 billion and promptly ran it up to a $290 billion deficit. It actually was somewhat worse than that because this is counting the Social Security surplus. The true deficit, at least as I define it, was well over $300 billion.

The Clinton administration came in, and in 1993, we passed a 5-year budget plan that was designed to reduce the deficit dramatically to take pressure off interest rates and to get this economy moving again. That plan passed without a single Republican vote in either the House or the Senate. These are the facts.

That 5-year plan was put into place, and here are the results. They are clear; they are unambiguous. They show that each and every year that 5-year plan reduced the budget deficit, first, to $255 billion; then to $203 billion; then to $164 billion; then to $107 billion; then to $22 billion. By the end of the 5-year plan, we had done what was perhaps thought impossible when we started. We had balanced the Federal budget.

Now we anticipate a $176 billion budget surplus in this year. This is a plan that worked.

This shows the trend in receipts and outlays, the expenditures of the Federal Government that made this plan work. The blue line shows the spending of the Federal Government; the red line shows the receipts of the Federal Government. This is over a 20-year period.

What it shows is obviously our spending was higher than receipts for an extended period in the eighties. That is why we were running massive budget deficits. When Democrats voted for a 5-year plan to get our fiscal house in order, spending came down each and every year in relationship to the size of our economy, revenue went up each and every year because, in part, we raised taxes on the wealthiest 1 percent in this country, and spending was cut. That is what allowed us to balance the budget, get our fiscal house in order, and kick off the longest economic expansion in our history. That is the record. Those are the facts.

The question is, Are we going to put all this at risk and go back to the old, bad days of ''debt'' and ''deficits'' and ''decline,'' what I call the three Ds? I very much hope we do not return to those policies and those plans and that set of results: debt, deficits, and decline. That would be a profound mistake. Why would we ever turn our back on an economic strategy that has worked so well?

Let's look at the results.

Federal spending is now at its lowest level since 1966. We cut spending with that 5-year plan in 1993. Democrats cut spending because we did not have any help from the other side of the aisle—none. We cut spending because it was necessary to get our fiscal house in order.

The results of reducing those deficits has been the virtuous cycle: Reduced deficits, reduced debt, and reduced interest rates that helps spur investment in the private sector, that helps spur private growth in the private sector, that led to the creation of over 20 million jobs, that gave us the lowest level of inflation since 1965. The virtuous cycle does not end there because it also gave us the lowest rate of unemployment in 42 years.

These are the results of an economic plan that was put in place in 1993. It has also brought down the debt. What a remarkable circumstance. But we have actually started bringing down the publicly held debt. We are in a position to nearly pay it off by the year 2010. We are in a position to pay off the publicly held debt of this country by the year 2013, if we stay on course.

Alan Greenspan, who is in charge of monetary policy—the Congress and the President are in charge of fiscal policy; the Federal Reserve is in charge of monetary policy—the head of monetary policy for our country says: Pay down the debt first. That is what he is urging us to do.

He is not alone because virtually every economist of whatever ideological persuasion who has come before the Budget Committee and the Finance Committee, on which I sit, has told us: The highest priority ought to be to continue to pay down the debt, to put us in a position to deal with the baby-boom generation when it starts to retire and puts enormous demands on Medicare, on Social Security, on veterans programs; that the best way to prepare for the day when they retire is to build this economy, to grow this economy. And the best way to grow this economy is to lift the debt burden that is on this economy.

That is what will hold down interest rates. That is what will keep the Government out of competition in private markets for scarce resources. That will allow additional resources to go into private investment.

This plan, this strategy, has been working. Now, all of a sudden, our friends on the Republican side, who opposed putting in place that strategy that has worked so well, tell us: Ah, well, we were wrong then, but trust us, let's go back to that failed strategy we were pursuing before, and let's try it again.

Why would we do that? It makes no earthly sense.

What will happen if we take this risky approach they are proposing? I submit to you, in their plan they use all of the non-Social Security surplus—all of it—for a tax cut, a tax cut that goes to the wealthiest among us. Senator MCCAIN said it well during the campaign. He questioned the Bush plan to take 60 percent of the benefits of their tax plan and to give it to the wealthiest 10 percent.

Mr. Bush has said, over and over, in his campaign: What they don't know in Washington is, this is the people's money. He is right about that. It is the people's money. The question is, What should be done with the people's money? Should it be given to the wealthiest 10 percent—disproportionately given to the wealthiest 10 percent—or should our top priority be to use the people's money to pay down the people's debt? I submit to you, the highest priority ought to be to pay down the people's debt. But that is not the Republican priority.

It is true they take all of the Social Security surplus and reserve it for Social Security. We do the same thing in our budget. That is the right thing to do. I applaud them for it. But on the non-Social Security surplus, they have quite a different approach.

I think, objectively stated, the non-Social Security surplus is most likely to be about $170 billion over the next 5 years. The Republican plan has a $150 billion tax cut, a $25 billion reserve for tax cuts, and costs another $21 billion in interest. So they have $196 billion reserved for a tax cut that goes primarily to the wealthiest among us when we have only $171 billion available in a non-Social Security surplus.

Where is the rest of the money going to come from? I think it is going to come right out of the Social Security trust fund. We are going to go back to the old, bad days of raiding the Social Security trust fund surplus. I hope not. I do not know how else it happens.

Our priority on the Democratic side is to use the vast majority of the projected surpluses over the next 10 years for debt reduction. In fact, we use 82 percent of the projected surpluses for debt reduction. That is, every penny of the Social Security surplus for Social Security, since it is not used for that purpose immediately, goes to pay down the debt. The Republicans do the same thing. But, in addition, we take 36 percent of the non-Social Security surplus and use that for further paying down the debt.

We also have a chunk of money for tax relief—not nearly as much as they do; we will stipulate to that. Their priority is a big tax cut to the wealthiest among us. Our priority is to pay down the debt.

As I indicated, we take all of the Social Security surplus and use that to pay down debt. But, in addition, we take, of the non-Social Security surplus, 36 percent of it for debt reduction. We take 29 percent of it for tax cuts because we, too, believe tax relief is important.

We would like to solve the marriage tax penalty. We would like to ease the estate tax burden. We would like to deal with some of the other inequities in the Tax Code.

We also reserve 23 percent for high-priority domestic needs such as defense, education, agriculture, and, yes, a prescription drug benefit.

We believe these are the priorities of the American people.

Let me conclude by saying there are some on the Republican side who have argued over and over that the tax burden on the American people is the highest it has ever been.

The tax revenues are high, but the tax burden, the tax rates, on individual taxpayers are not high. That is odd. How can the revenues be high but the tax rates on individuals not be high? The reason is, we have a booming economy that produces lots of revenue. That is part of the virtuous cycle we have created by getting our fiscal house in order.

But if we look at the individual tax burden, what we find is, contrary to what our friends on the Republican side say so often and so repeatedly, the Federal tax level has fallen for most people in this country.

Let me quote from the Washington Post of March 26 of this year:

> Studies Show Burden Now Less Than 10%
> For all but the wealthiest Americans, the federal income tax burden has shrunk to the lowest level in four decades, according to a series of studies by liberal and conservative tax experts. . . .

What we see is that the tax burden on individual Americans has been reduced, and reduced dramatically.

The article further states:

> The Congressional Budget Office estimates the middle fifth of American families, with an average income of $39,100, paid 5.4 percent in income tax in 1999, compared with 8.3 percent in 1981. The Treasury Department estimates a four-person family, with a median income of $54,900, paid 7.46 percent of that in income tax, the lowest since 1965.

The article continues: The Conservative Tax Foundation figures that the median two-earner family, making $68,000, paid 8.8 percent in 1998, about the same as 1955.

This is a question of priorities. We ought to reject this budget and pass the alternative.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Washington,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. First, I thank the Senator from New Jersey, Mr. LAUTENBERG, for his tremendous leadership on the Democratic side of the Budget Committee. I have truly enjoyed working with him and will miss him a great deal in the coming years. His leadership has been so important to all of us.

I come to the floor today to address the Republican budget proposal and to tell my colleagues that I will be a ''no'' vote because I believe it fails to reflect the priorities of families across this country. In fact, if this budget were submitted to any math class, it would get an F because, frankly, the numbers do not add up.

The reality in this budget does not meet the rhetoric. Despite all the claims, when we do the math, the things Americans care about—improving their education, reducing the debt, saving Social Security, strengthening and modernizing Medicare—have all been left behind. The things that matter to families have been sacrificed in the name of an irresponsible tax cut.

I am disappointed that this budget abandons the progress we have made since 1993. Since I first joined the Budget Committee, our Nation's financial strength has grown dramatically. Through the hard work of the President, the Vice President, and Congress, we have turned deficits into surpluses. We learned many important lessons. We learned that budgets must be realistic. They have to take into account what our Nation needs and what we are capable of providing.

This budget is neither realistic nor responsible. It does not provide the necessary investments in education and health care. It does not ensure that prescription drug coverage for Medicare beneficiaries will be considered before we enact tax cuts. Instead, this Republican budget sacrifices our priorities for a $200 billion tax cut.

I am extremely concerned that this tax cut could eat up all of the on-budget surplus. Given this Congress' track record on tax cuts, it is fair to assume that, as usual, the top 10 percent of the people will get more than 60 percent of the benefits. The President and the American people rejected that tax plan last year, and I expect they will reject it again. We can have responsible and fair tax cuts that are fiscally prudent, but you won't find them in this budget.

I am also disappointed that this conference report dropped two important priorities during the conference committee. First, an important amendment I introduced to ensure programs that help victims of domestic violence was dropped. Another amendment concerning pipeline safety was also left behind. In the Senate Budget Committee, I introduced an amendment to ensure that pipeline safety efforts are funded at levels that were called for in my bill. My amendment was unanimously passed by the Senate Budget Committee. Unfortunately, this budget makes it almost impossible to fully fund the Office of Pipeline Safety. Our budget should help us make our pipeline safer. I fear this budget moves away from our responsibility.

I will be talking later this evening about the issue of pipeline safety as well.

While those two key amendments were dropped, I am pleased that my amendment concerning women and Social Security was affirmed. After 2 years, the Republican budget conferees have finally committed that Social Security reform should not penalize women. I am pleased it is in this budget.

Overall, to make room for their tax cut, Republicans shortchanged the investments that really matter to the American people. In fact, in key areas, this budget doesn't even keep up with inflation.

I will give a few examples of how this budget leaves America's priorities behind. The decisions in this budget will be felt in classrooms across America. The budget before us would decimate the progress we have made over the last 2 years in reducing overcrowded classrooms. In the last 2 years, we have hired 29,000 new, fully qualified teachers to reduce class sizes in first, second, and third grades. Today, because of that action, 1.7 million students are learning in classrooms where the basics are taught in a disciplined environment. We should be building on our progress. This Republican budget before us today abandons our progress. This budget tells students: Sorry, you are going to have to sit in an overcrowded classroom next year because, under the Republican tax plan, you are not a priority.

It should be a priority that we pay down our national debt instead of passing that burden along to our children. This budget tells every young American: Sorry, you better start saving money now to pay off the national debt because, under the Republican tax plan, you are not a priority.

It is a priority that we strengthen and modernize Medicare. It is a priority that seniors get help buying the medicine they need because no one should have to choose between buying medicine and paying for food. This budget tells seniors: Sorry, you can't get the prescription drug coverage you need because, under the Republican tax plan, you are not a priority.

The American people want real budgets, not gimmicks. They want to know that our Nation's vital priorities are being treated as priorities. They don't want the things that matter in their lives to be squeezed out by unbalanced tax cuts that only benefit a few people.

We should be using the surplus we have today to honor our commitments to our children and to our seniors. Now is the time to address the long-term solvency of Social Security and Medicare and to provide resources to local communities to make our classrooms ready for the 21st century. Those are the things a responsible budget would do. We should pass a budget that reflects the priorities of the American people and one that is realistic. I believe the budget before us fails the American people on both counts. Therefore, I must oppose it.

I thank the Chair and yield the remainder of my time to the Democratic side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Would the Chair inform me how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 40 minutes; the Senator from Rhode Island has 26 minutes; the Senator from New Jersey has 20 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I don't intend to use the entire time I have. I would like to make sure I understand where they are going on the other side. If we are going to make an effort to vote earlier, I will be yielding back some of my time. I yield myself 6 minutes.

First, let me identify the occupant of the chair. The occupant of the chair is one of our new Senators, Mr. SMITH, from way over on the West Coast. I am very proud to have him in the Senate, but I am more proud that he is on the Budget Committee. There are people talking about what happens in this budget resolution, such as the distinguished Senator, Mrs. MURRAY, talking about a sense-of-the-Senate resolution as if it were binding on somebody. It is nothing more than what it says. It doesn't affect anything. To the extent we dropped some of her provisions, there were scores of sense-of-the-Senate resolutions in this budget that we did not take.

What we did keep was something for which the distinguished occupant of the chair fought hard. I am told there are so many people watching C–SPAN. Sometimes I wonder how many times they want to hear the same speech, but I believe, when it is given again on that side, I have to say a few words.

I repeat: Because of the distinguished Senator who occupies the chair, working in concert with the distinguished Senator from Maine, Ms. SNOWE, helped by Senator WYDEN from the same State as the occupant of the chair, we have a real provision we did not drop that has to do with Medicare prescription drugs and Medicare reform. I was so pleased to hear a freshman Senator, the occupant of the chair, say he wanted to support the Snowe amendment for $40 billion and that we might as well face up and get a bill. It says we can use the whole $40 billion for prescription drugs, and it is not crowded out by tax relief. It is separate and distinct; it is available.

We have said if you do some reform to preserve the well-being of the Medicare system, you can have $40 billion in new money for prescription drugs. Now, if you choose to only do prescription drugs and do nothing to Medicare, it gets $20 billion to go ahead and add some prescription drugs. Frankly, I believe the Senator occupying the chair, Senator SMITH of Oregon, was on the side of a very large majority of Senators. I think so long as we keep it bipartisan there is going to be an effort to repair the Medicare system for the senior citizens, which is going broke, and we can say we reformed it and modernized it and at the same time we have added $40 billion for prescription drugs.

No matter how many times the other side repeats it—and I don't know that I am going to answer it again today—I will tell you what I know is in the budget resolution. If I had to read the words, you would see I am paraphrasing the words quite accurately. With reference to education, we can continue to hear specifics, that we didn't provide classroom teachers. Let me repeat, the only time we are going to find out what we really do for education is when the Appropriations Committee, headed by Senator SPECTER, produces an appropriations bill, because anything we say in this budget resolution about specifics on education are only assumptions.

Many times, if not most of the time, the Appropriations Committee decides what they are going to spend on education, which programs they are going to fund, and whether it is going to be less children per classroom or more. That is not going to be decided by this resolution. What is going to be, or could be, decided is how much is available for education—not specifics but education.

I say that this conference report assumes $45.6 billion in the year 2001 for the Department of Education—a $10 billion increase, or 30-percent increase, over last year's level. Over the next 5 years, most interestingly, assumptions on education are $21.9 billion in new money, additional money, which is essentially what the President asked for.

Now, whatever they want to say in the next hour in repetition, I don't know that I will answer it again. I am trying my very best to say that these specific things Senators bring to the Senator floor and say there is a sense of the Senate on it and that would have gotten it done, I want to be kind; I don't want to say what I might say. But the fact that it is in, or not, doesn't mean very much. It is what the Appropriations Committee does with the money. Then there is going to be a bipartisan debate, for which I am grateful, on whether we should have the status quo on education programs or whether we should have reform.

Essentially, for anybody interested in what is going to determine where we spend the money and how we spend it, it may be that we are going to leave all these categorical programs—money for more teachers and less students per classroom and all the other specifics that some people think are important—it may be that we will let the schools keep doing that. We are probably going to give them an option not to do that; in a way, that is more accommodating to them, with flexibility and accountability.

That is essentially what we set up. We don't preclude that debate and its conclusions, which I understand from the majority leader will occur before this year is out. It is historical because it is coming out of committee of jurisdiction. It is not going to be done on the floor. It is headed by Senator JEFFORDS. Nobody thought there would be major reform. There is major reform, and it comes out to the floor to be debated.

I don't know that I can do more on the issue of debt reduction other than to tell the Senate that this budget resolution has over $1 trillion in debt service over the next 5 years. It is most interesting that, all of a sudden, there is a difference between reducing the debt held by the public through Social Security surpluses and reducing it with other surpluses. Let me say, dollar for dollar, it is the same debt reduction, or reduction held by the public. It doesn't matter whether it comes out of the Social Security surplus that we don't spend or whether it comes out of the surplus that is on budget. We have a different way of accounting for them.

We think there is a lot of money available during the next 5 years. In fact, we think over a freeze there is $400 billion in non-Social Security surplus. There is already a basic budget. Looking at this chart, we think it is $400 billion. Interestingly enough, that is over freezing everything. The Democrats assume what they call a freeze in real spending, that would bring the spending way up to here because they add inflation every year and call it automatic. It is not spending new money. We said let's start over. So we put $212 billion in domestic programs—domestic and defense. We put $150 billion in tax relief, which we ask today, how many more times do we have to hear that our tax proposals are for the rich? The biggest tax proposal is the marriage tax penalty. Is that what they are saying is a typical Republican effort to help the rich? I hope all the married people in America listen to that argument.

In addition, we take that surplus and we put $40 billion of it in this non-Social Security on the debt. I don't believe the argument is about debt reduction. It may be today, but the argument is: Let's spend that tax relief money. Let's spend this. That is what the argument is about. I repeat, if we don't get tax relief, all this money, $150 billion, goes to debt reduction for the debt held by the public, adding to the $1 trillion I have just told you about that is in this.

I will conclude by thanking the Budget Committee. The Republican majority produced this format. Obviously, from the newest Senator, to me as the most senior Senator on our side, we followed the lead of OLYMPIA SNOWE on Medicare and the leadership of my friend who is occupying the Chair, in getting a real Medicare proposal and that will drive a bipartisan solution. Let me repeat, in an election year, praise the Lord, if we can get a bipartisan solution to Medicare because it will be the right one if it turns out to be a partisan solution. I am afraid it will be a political solution, and I am not sure the Medicare trust fund for our seniors is going to come out very well. So that is why I think this is a good approach.

My last observation is that the Appropriations Committee has to take all this money and decide what to do with it. Senator TED STEVENS is the chairman and that is his principal responsibility. I assure those who voted for this and who will vote for it today, it depends on how you allocate the money among priorities. But if they happen to be priorities we have been expressing today and that we expressed in this resolution, there will be plenty of funding for education, plenty of funding for the National Institutes of Health, plenty of funding for Medicare—and that is not an appropriated account—and we will have plenty of money to prepare our defense for this new 100 years we are entering where we need to make up some lost ground.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I have a lot to say and not much time in which to say it. The fundamental point is that this budget resolution represents a statement of the values of the Members of Congress, representing the 270 million citizens of the United States of America. What this budget resolution says is that we are giving a priority to tax cuts over meeting the moral, ethical, and legal obligations of the U.S. Government to its citizens by failing to make a commitment to strengthen Social Security and to strengthen the Medicare program. That is the fundamental message of this budget resolution.

This budget resolution requires the Senate Finance Committee to report two bills with tax cuts totalling $150 billion in the next 5 years. The Finance Committee can report separate legislation cutting taxes by an additional $25 billion over 5 years.

The Finance Committee can report even greater tax cuts if in July the Congressional Budget Office projects higher on-budget surpluses.

There is no similar set of mandates or permission as it relates to strengthening Social Security and strengthening and expanding Medicare. We must do these things. And we can do these things relative to tax cuts. There is no similar provision relative to our obligation to Social Security and Medicare.

We already have embarked on a serious and, I say, unfocused tax-cutting process. If you add up what we have already done in the educational savings account, the Patients' Bill of Rights, the minimum wage, small business tax cut, and what was proposed this week in terms of marriage penalty tax cuts, and suspension of the gas tax, with that hole in our transportation funding being filled by the non-Social Security surplus, we have already spent approximately two-thirds of the non-Social Security surplus we anticipate for this next fiscal year and approximately two-thirds of what we anticipate for the next 5 years with those actions alone.

I suggest that is not a prudent way to go about using the non-Social Security surplus—that we ought to do first things first. The first thing we should do is to meet the obligation this Government has to its citizens in the areas of Social Security and Medicare. Why are those two such priorities? They are priorities because the citizens of the United States every payday are paying into those trust funds for Social Security and for Medicare. They have a legal, contractual obligation from the Government to meet those benefits which they anticipate. We need to have a similar commitment to assure that those programs are going to be capable of meeting those obligations.

We also have not been faithful in this budget resolution to some commitments both Houses have made in terms of a prescription medication benefit.

Both the Senate- and the House-passed resolutions infer—and the leadership of both Houses publicly stated—that we would be reserving $40 billion over the next 5 years for purposes of a prescription medication benefit.

We received from the conference committee a commitment to spend $20 billion for additional access to prescription medication—not a specific modification of the Medicare program that would incorporate prescription medication as a benefit of Medicare. The other $20 billion would be available only if there were changes in the structure of the Medicare program which would be scored by the Congressional Budget Office as increasing the solvency of the Medicare program.

This is not the prescription medication benefit the American people expected. This is not the benefit we anticipated when we passed the budget resolution in the Senate. It is not a prescription medication benefit that will respond to the realities of modern medicine.

One of the reasons many of us believe it is so important to have a prescription medication benefit is to change the fundamental culture of the Medicare system. Medicare was adopted in 1965 as an acute-care program. If you were sick enough to go in the hospital, or if you were run over by a truck, Medicare would provide financing for your health care.

What we need to be thinking about as we start the 21st century is the approach to health care most Americans want. That is an approach that emphasizes prevention and wellness and the maintenance of quality of life. Almost every step required to do that, whether it is to moderate diabetes, to reduce the prospect of stroke and heart disease, to deal with hormonal imbalances, all of those things that are fundamental to the quality of life, particularly of older Americans, requires prescription medication as a key to this accomplishment.

Providing this prescription medication benefit is not just adding another benefit to Medicare, as has been asserted; rather, it is changing the fundamental orientation of Medicare to one that will focus on the wellness of the American people, and not just wait until they get sick enough to go in the hospital.

That is the fundamental issue that is at risk with this budget resolution which puts at the top of the pyramid of American values providing unspecified tax cuts and puts at the bottom of American values meeting our contract with the Americans who have built this great Nation through strength in Social Security and Medicare.

I urge the rejection of this budget resolution. Hopefully, we will have an opportunity to adopt one that is more in keeping with the desires of the American people.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Jersey.

We have an economy that is booming. We have record low levels of unemployment. We have Government coffers that are overflowing. We have a predicted $3 trillion surplus over the next 10 years.

We are still being told by this budget resolution that we can't afford in our country to provide a good education for every child; we can't afford good health care for citizens; we can't afford to do something about the poverty of 14 million children in our country.

In the words of Rabbi Hill, ''If not now, when?'' This Republican budget resolution provides a very discouraging answer to Rabbi Hill's question. This budget resolution says to Rabbi Hill, ''Not now and probably not ever.''

The tradeoff is simple. You have huge tax cuts disproportionately flowing to wealthier, high-income citizens. You have in a post-world-war era a bloated military budget. But you have a budget resolution that does not invest in the health, the skill, the intellect, and the character of our children, and you have a budget resolution that in nondefense discretionary spending calls for cuts with a booming economy.

We will see cuts in Head Start, new teachers, reducing class size, home-delivered meals to seniors, and environmental cleanup.

We will not do well in this new century, and we will not have the successful economy or the successful moral nation Senator GRAHAM talks about, if we don't provide a good education for every child. We will not do as well as we can do as a nation in this new century if we don't invest in the skills development of our children. We will not do as well as we could and must do as a nation and national community if we don't invest in the health of our children. We, the United States of America, the good country, will not be better unless we make this investment in our children. By that standard, this budget is sorely lacking. I will vote against it.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LAUTENBERG. I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, 7 years ago we ended a failed economic policy of trickle down economics. It brought ballooning deficits, a quadrupling of the national debt, high interest rates, and low growth. But we made some tough decisions and tough votes. We changed the course of the new economic policies that invested in people and imposed needed fiscal discipline.

The results are in: 21 million new jobs, 4 percent unemployment rate, the lowest in 30 years, the fastest growth rate in 30 years, and the lowest crime and welfare rate in 30 years. There is the highest home ownership ever, 108 months of straight economic growth, productivity-breaking records, and inflation outside of energy is tame. Why do we want to change this? Why return to the days of risky tax schemes, the days of trickle down economics, and fiscal irresponsibility?

That is exactly what the conference report budget before the Senate does. This budget resolution before the Senate provides $175 billion to tax cuts, skewed to the wealthiest of Americans. The Congressional Budget Office, however, projects $171 billion in non-Social Security surpluses over the next 5 years. Add the higher interest we have to pay on the public debt because we did tax cuts instead of paying down the debt, and what does that add up to? This budget conference report before the Senate means we will have to tap into the Social Security surplus in order to pay for these tax cuts.

It is fiscally irresponsible. We ought to take a different course and follow the adage that when times are good, prepare for the future. That means the budget should put the highest priority on paying off the debt, securing Social Security and Medicare for the future.

I have said time and time again on this floor, if you want to save Medicare and cut down on Medicare expenses today, invest in medical research. To that end, 3 years ago, the Senate, in a unanimous vote, went on record as saying we ought to double NIH basic medical research in 5 years. Last year, we had a historic increase of $2.3 billion to keep on the track of doubling NIH research in 5 years. This next year would require $2.7 billion. Keep in mind the Senate voted unanimously to double NIH funding.

When the budget came out of committee, it was short by $1.6 billion for NIH research. Senator SPECTER, chairman of the appropriations subcommittee on health and human services that funds NIH, offered an amendment that I supported to add back the $1.6 billion to medical research. Nine Republicans joined the Democrats, and it passed 54–46.

As anyone who has even opened the newspapers lately knows, we are on the verge of many breakthroughs in biomedical research, stem cell research, and the human genome, which is being mapped and will be done shortly. Now we need to push ahead to invest in medical research, to find the causes, the cures, and the preventions for many of the illnesses that cost Medicare so much today. Yet this conference report ignores the bipartisan vote in the Senate. It completely obliterates the $1.6 billion that was added by the Specter amendment. It has been wiped out.

Let's bring it to concrete terms. What does it mean? The conference report that took out that $1.6 billion, when spread over the different research being done by NIH, means, for example, that in AIDS research, $179 million less than what we had in the Senate; cancer research is $261 million less than what we had in the Senate; prostate cancer is down $21 million; arthritis is down $24 million; Alzheimer's is $41.8 million less than what we had in the Senate.

If the conference report had kept in what we had voted for in the Senate, we would have an additional $261 million for cancer research; we would have an additional $179 million for AIDS research; we would have an additional $111 million for mental health research; we would have an additional $14 million for Parkinson's; we would have an additional $13 million for osteoporosis; we would have an additional $1.9 million for multiple sclerosis; we would have another $24 million for kidney disease; we would have another $38 million to study infant mortality; we would have another $47 million for diabetes research if this budget report has the $1.6 billion added by the Senate.

I thought the budget we passed was inadequate before; it is woefully inadequate now. For the life of me, I don't understand why the $1.6 billion was taken out of this critically needed part of meeting our obligations of the future for NIH basic research.

There is another point. The Senate resolution had increased Pell grants by $400, bringing them up to $3,700. We have needed to do that over the last 20 years. The purchasing power of Pell grants went down 25 percent. A poor student in college today can spend 25 percent less with the maximum Pell grant than 20 years ago. The education was also dropped in conference. That is deeply, deeply disappointing.

This budget needs to be sent back to the drawing board. It targets fiscally irresponsible tax breaks to the wealthiest of Americans. It shortchanges the critical investments we need: First, in medical research; and, second, in investment in education to keep our economy and our people healthy and strong.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, in the last week, this budget has gone from bad to worse. That is the only ''progress'' we've seen. After a conference from which Democrats were excluded, our Republicans colleagues are now proposing even bigger tax cuts. Last week, Senate Republicans voted for $150 billion in tax cuts over five years, plus a ''summer surprise'' of more tax cuts. This resolution calls for $175 billion over five years, plus a ''summer surprise.''

To pay for those bigger tax cuts, this resolution calls for even deeper cuts in education, health care, other critical priorities. It still calls for 6 percent across-the-board cut in discretionary spending next year. That hasn't changed—for obvious reasons; our colleagues don't want to make things even worse just before an election.

But things do get much worse after the election—and every year for the foreseeable future—under this plan. The additional cuts all ratchet up in the ''out years.'' Instead of 8 percent across-the-board cuts by 2005, this plan calls for cuts of nearly 10 percent across-the-board by 2005.

This plan dramatically weakens—in fact, it all but eliminates—any commitment to a prescription drug benefit. Last week, this Senate passed a plan that dedicated $40 billion over five years for prescription drugs. That commitment is not included in this resolution. This resolution includes $20 billion to quote—''improve access to prescription drugs''—whatever that means. There's another $20 billion—but that's available only after we cut Medicare benefits.

As if that's not bad enough, this plan says the money for a prescription drug benefit will be available ''whenever'' the Finance Committee reports out a prescription drug bill. ''Whenever''? Why don't they just say the money will be available ''if we feel like it,'' or, the money will be available ''if there's anything left after we pass all our tax breaks''?

The Senate-passed Republican budget at least included a date. It said money for prescription drug benefit would be available by Sept. 1, 2000—whether or not the Finance Committee did its job. Now they've scratched out that date and written in ''whenever.'' You can practically see the budget writers winking! What they really mean is ''never.''

Last week, a majority of Senators voted that Congress should put prescription drugs ahead of tax cuts. Fifty-one Senators—Republicans and Democrats—said we should not spend one dollar on tax cuts until we pass a real prescription drug bill. This resolution directly contradicts that statement. It says, ''Forget what we said last week. Spend nearly $200 billion on tax cuts now. Worry about prescription drugs whenever.'' The contradiction would be laughable if it weren't so deadly serious.

Our Republican colleagues claim that, under their plan, total discretionary spending next year would be $14 billion above freeze. The operative word is ''total.'' What they don't like to say about their budget is defense spending is $21 billion above a freeze; non-defense discretionary spending is $7 billion below a freeze.

There's another thing our colleagues don't like to talk about: According to the Congressional Budget Office, the total non-Social Security surplus over the next five years will be $171 billion. The reason our colleagues don't like to talk about that is their tax cut costs $196 billion over 5 years—$25 billion more than entire non-Social Security surplus.

I am tempted to recycle that classic old Yogi Berra line—''It's deja vu all over again.''—because it seems like we've had this same debate every year for the last five years. Instead, let me use a different Yogi Berra quote: ''It ain't over 'til it's over.'' This is just the beginning of the budget process. We have many months to go.

This budget does not meet the priorities of American people. If we pass this flawed plan, America would miss a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity to sustain and expand this economic prosperity; protect Social Security and Medicare; and invest in America's future—in education, medical research, safe communities, clean water—all the things we need to remain strong and competitive.

In the five years since they regained control of Congress, Republicans have never passed a budget without a major ''train wreck.'' This budget, unfortunately, sets us up to extend that record. To quote the Republican Chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, these numbers are ''unrealistic.'' They do not add up. It's obvious. We know it, and they know it.

We hope that this year, our colleagues will admit their plan can't work—before the train wreck. If they do, Democrats are ready, willing and determined to work with them to get the budget process back on track. We want to work with Republicans to write a responsible budget. A budget that extends the solvency of Social Security and Medicare, so we can avoid a Baby Boomer retirement crisis; a budget that includes a real Medicare prescription drug plan that is voluntary, affordable and universal.

We want to work with Republicans to pass a budget that pays down our national debt—so we can stop wasting $220 billion a year—$600 million a day—on interest payments. We want to work with our colleagues to pass a budget that provides tax cuts to help working families with real needs—like child care, day care, and caring for older parents—a budget that invests education, health care and other critical priorities. We want to work with Republicans to pass a budget, in short, that allows us to seize, not squander, the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity now before us.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I will reluctantly vote against the Conference Report on the Budget Resolution for Fiscal Year 2001. Although the budget resolution includes most of the mechanisms approved by the Senate to ensure better budgetary discipline, the resolution fails to address the pressing issues of the impending financial insolvency of Social Security and Medicare, and the massive burden of debt that will be passed along to our children and grandchildren.

Mr. President, for the first time in history, economic projections show a surplus of nearly $1.9 trillion over the next ten years, exclusive of the surplus in the Social Security Trust Funds. At the same time, we know that the Social Security system is projected to be bankrupt by 2037 and Medicare will be broke in 2023, leaving millions of elderly Americans without the promised benefits they need to live comfortably in their retirement years.

Yet, this budget resolution uses none of the surplus to shore up either Social Security or Medicare. Nor does it apply any significant portion of the surplus to reducing the burden on future generations of our $5.7 trillion national debt. In fact, debt will actually continue to accumulate because the resolution allows most of the non-Social Security surplus to be spent on more big government programs.

Mr. President, as I traveled around the country over the past several months, I listened to the American people. Everywhere I went, they told me that they wanted us to protect and preserve Social Security and Medicare. They said they wanted to pay down the debt. I proposed a plan to use the bulk of the non-Social Security surplus to do what the people told me they wanted to do, and still provide much-needed tax relief to those who need it most—lower- and middle-income families. Unfortunately, this budget spends too much and saves too little for the future, and I cannot support it.

Mr. President, there are some very good provisions in the budget resolution.

I support the increase of $4.5 billion in defense spending over the President's budget request, which represents real growth in the defense budget for the first time in many years. I am pleased that the conference includes the $25 million added to the defense budget to get 12,000 enlisted families off of food stamps and end the disgrace of the food stamp Army once and for all. For too many years, the Clinton Administration has neglected the people who volunteer for military service. With this increase, and money freed up from eliminating waste and inefficiency in the defense budget, we can make progress toward restoring the morale and readiness of our Armed Forces.

The addition of $1.9 billion to the budget request for veterans health care is the amount identified in the Independent Budget of the veterans groups as the minimum necessary to provide appropriate care for our veterans. I hope the Congress sees fit this year to restore the ''broken promise'' of free lifetime medical care that was made to our nation's oldest veterans, and I intend to work with my colleagues to ensure all of our military personnel have access to the quality, affordable health care they deserve.

Many of the specific funding assumptions in the resolution are laudable, but I disagree with funding most of these increases from the surplus. I have identified billions of dollars of pork-barrel spending in annual appropriations bills over the past several years—programs that are wasteful, inefficient, or low-priority. Because of the compelling need to deal with the problems in Social Security and Medicare, we should look within the budget to ferret out waste in order to fund higher priority requirements, rather than spend the entire surplus on more government.

Some of the objectionable provisions in this resolution are earmarks that would qualify as pork-barrel spending if they were included in an appropriations bill. For example, the resolution identifies $700 million to construct, or site and design, more than ten new courthouses in 2001. It assumes $25 million will be set aside for the construction of a Metro station on New York Avenue in the District of Columbia. And it earmarks $510 million for NOAA's Pacific coastal salmon recovery program. As I have always said, I am not making a judgment on the merits of these programs, but their mention in this resolution leads me to assume that they will show up as earmarks in the appropriations process —a process not noted for its reliance on merit over politics.

I also note the significant cut in the International Affairs budget in the resolution, which is $2.7 billion less than the President's request and $2.2 billion below last year's level. I am concerned that, as in past years, the foreign affairs budget is seen as an easy target for cuts to offset spending in other areas. Clearly, the United States is and must remain a global power with global interests, both related to our security and that of our allies, as well as our economic health. Our continued international involvement requires not just a strong military, but a robust diplomacy. I will be looking carefully at the Foreign Operations Appropriations bill to ensure that the programs that are cut to meet this budget target are appropriate and do not in any way hinder our ability to influence world affairs to our advantage.

Mr. President, I am pleased to note that the resolution includes several Senate-passed provisions to ensure Congress complies with the revenue and spending levels in the resolution to limit the amount of emergency spending and budgetary gimmicks, including:

A Social Security ''lockbox'' point of order which can be raised against any budget resolution that dips into the Social Security Trust Funds.

A permanent 60-vote point of order in the Senate challenging any ''emergency'' in any spending or revenue bill, to ensure that emergency spending is truly used for emergencies and not simply to avoid accounting for routine spending.

A restored firewall between defense and non-defense spending for FY 2001, with any funds unused in either account to be used for debt reduction.

Two new 60-vote points of order to prevent the use of advanced appropriations and delayed obligations to circumvent spending limits.

Mr. President, there are many good provisions in the budget resolution, and I thank the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Budget Committee for taking on some very tough fights. The fact is that we simply have different opinions about budget priorities. I cannot support this resolution because it spends the surplus on more government, without guaranteeing funding for Social Security or Medicare reform or significantly reducing the debt, and I will vote against the resolution.

Mr. L. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I rise today to express my opposition to H. Con. Res. 290, the Budget Resolution for FY 2001 Conference Report that the Senate is voting on today. I feel it is important to note that despite my opposition, I have deep and abiding respect for Budget Committee Chairman DOMENICI and recognize and appreciate the hard work, expertise, and excellent leadership that he has displayed in the Senate's consideration of the federal budget.

There is much to praise in Chairman DOMENICI's budget. Increased funding for education and defense. A reserve fund of $40 billion for a prescription drug benefit. Provisions to do away with budgetary gimmicks. A Social Security Lock-Box. But, there is just too much money set aside for tax cuts, and not enough for paying down the debt.

While I support some targeted tax cuts, such as the low-income housing tax credit, and marriage penalty relief, I believe that $150 billion over five years in tax cuts is too much. Instead, I believe it makes more sense to pay down the debt. The federal debt—currently $5.7 trillion, with interest costs of over $200 billion per year, or almost 12 percent of annual federal outlays—represents a huge burden that should not be passed on to our children and to our grandchildren. Not only is this massive debt a problem, but by paying down the debt we would free up more than $200 billion per year. That money eventually could be used to ensure the solvency of Social Security and Medicare; to increase funding for education, specifically, Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA); needed infrastructure and environmental improvements; and to provide for tax relief.

Let me take a few moments to explain a number of my votes from last week during the Senate's consideration of the Budget Resolution. I voted for an amendment offered by Senator CONRAD that would have reduced the tax cuts in the Budget Resolution from $150 billion over five years to $75 billion for tax cuts and $75 billion for debt relief. I also voted for an amendment offered by Senator VOINOVICH that would have struck all tax relief from the Budget Resolution so that it may be used for debt relief. Believing that the approach taken by Senator LAUTENBERG was more fiscally responsible, I voted in favor of his amendment because it contained only $59 billion in tax cuts and provided for more debt relief. Finally, I voted against the Budget Resolution as it was reported from Committee because it contained a too high level of tax cuts and not enough debt relief.

All of us who have had to pay interest—be it on our house, car, credit card, or other payment—know that these costs are painful. We need to apply the same fiscal discipline here in Congress that we apply at home. To pay out 12 percent of our revenues annually on interest costs rather than on education, needed infrastructure construction and improvements, and to ensure the solvency of the Social Security and Medicare programs, seems to me to be a poor investment of taxpayer dollars. Therefore, in an effort to encourage fiscal discipline and responsibility, I am casting my vote against the Budget Resolution Conference Report.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, first I must congratulate the Chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, for producing an on-time budget for only the third time in the 24-plus-year history of the Budget Act.

Thrifty, cautious, and conservative. These adjectives describe the Yankee qualities of many Vermonters when someone tries to get them to open their wallets, and are in the genes of anyone who represents our great state in Congress. I am pleased that this resolution protects social security. Not one penny of the social security surplus is touched. Second, it balances the budget every year without using the social security surplus. Thirdly, this resolution retires the national debt held by the public—nearly $170 billion in the first year and $1 trillion over the next five years.

I am greatly troubled, however, about certain elements in the budget, and will vote against the fiscal year 2001 budget resolution now before the Senate.

What would a cautious farmer do when times are good—invest in new equipment to become more efficient, pay off debts, and put some away for a rainy day. There is no question that tax relief is warranted, but not at the expense of education, veterans health, job training, child care and other important discretionary programs.

A farmer cautiously guards his seed corn for future harvests. Our nation's seed corn is its youth and investments in education are needed to protect our prosperity. The conference report now before us rejects funding added on the floor of the Senate for three important education programs. It not only rejects funding that a majority of this body supported but it takes a giant step backward by reducing funding for education $3 billion below what was contained within the original Senate-passed resolution.

When I first arrived in Congress, one of the very first bills that I had the privilege of working on was the Education of All Handicapped Act of 1975. As a freshman Member of Congress, I was proud to sponsor that legislation and to be named as a member of the House and Senate conference committee along with then Vermont Senator Bob Stafford.

At that time, despite a clear Constitutional obligation to educate all children, regardless of disability, thousands of disabled students were denied access to a public education. Passage of the Education of All Handicapped Act offered financial incentives to states to fulfill this existing obligation. Recognizing that the costs associated with educating these children was more than many school districts could bear alone, the Federal government pledged to pay 40 percent of the costs of educating these students.

The budget resolution that is before us makes a mockery of this pledge. The original Senate budget resolution assumed that the Federal government would only fund between 15 and 18 percent of the cost of educating disabled students. My amendment to increase this percentage was narrowly defeated last week and was then watered down by an amendment by my colleague Senator VOINOVICH. I had hoped, nonetheless, that passage of the Voinovich amendment meant that a serious effort would be made in conference to increase funding for IDEA. This hope was clearly misplaced.

Let me also speak for a minute about early childhood education.

Research into the development and growth of the human brain clearly demonstrates that learning begins at birth. The sheer magnitude of this scientific research is difficult to fathom. When talk turns to 100 billion neurons or connections with axons and dendrites, confusion is the most likely outcome. What this research basically says is something that parents and grandparents have know for decades, very young children need a nurturing, stimulating environment in order for their brains to make the myriad of connections they need to grow into competent, caring adults.
