Mr. DELAHUNT, Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD, and Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas changed their vote from ''yea'' to ''nay.''

Mr. GUTIERREZ and Mr. BECERRA changed their vote from ''nay'' to ''yea.''

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 115, had I been present, I would have voted "yes."

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, during rollcall No. 115 I was unavoidably detained, while attending the funeral of Jack Brady, former Chief of Staff of the House International Relations Committee, and missed the vote. If I had been present I would have voted "aye."

VISA WAIVER PERMANENT PROGRAM ACT

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3767) to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to make improvements to, and permanently authorize, the visa waiver pilot program under section 217 of such Act, as amended.

H.R. 3767

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Visa Waiver Permanent Program Act''.

TITLE I—PERMANENT PROGRAM AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 101. ELIMINATION OF PILOT PROGRAM STATUS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 217 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187) is amended—

(1) in the section heading, by striking ''PILOT'';

(2) in subsection (a)—

(A) in the subsection heading, by striking ''PILOT'';

(B) in the matter preceding paragraph (1), by striking ''pilot'' both places it appears;

(C) in paragraph (1), by striking ''pilot program period (as defined in subsection (e))'' and inserting ''program''; and

(D) in paragraph (2), in the paragraph heading, by striking ''PILOT'';

(3) in subsection (b), in the matter preceding paragraph (1), by striking ''pilot'';

(4) in subsection (c)—

(A) in the subsection heading, by striking ''PILOT'';

(B) in paragraph (1), by striking ''pilot'';

(C) in paragraph (2)—

(i) by striking ''subsection (g)'' and inserting ''subsection (f)''; and

(ii) by striking ''pilot''; and

(D) in paragraph (3)—

(i) in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking ''(within the pilot program period)'';

(ii) in subparagraph (A), in the matter preceding clause (i), by striking ''pilot'' both places it appears; and

(iii) in subparagraph (B), by striking ''pilot'';

(5) in subsection (e)(1)—

(A) in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking ''pilot''; and

(B) in subparagraph (B), by striking ''pilot'';

(6) by striking subsection (f) and redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (f); and

(7) in subsection (f) (as so redesignated)—

(A) in paragraph (1)(A) by striking ''pilot'';

(B) in paragraph (1)(C), by striking ''pilot'';

(C) in paragraph (2)(A), by striking ''pilot'' both places it appears;

(D) in paragraph (3), by striking ''pilot''; and

(E) in paragraph (4)(A), by striking ''pilot''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) DOCUMENTATION REQUIREMENTS.—Clause (iv) of section 212(a)(7)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(7)(B)(iv)) is amended—

(A) in the clause heading, by striking ''PILOT''; and

(B) by striking ''pilot''.

(2) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for the Immigration and Nationality Act is amended, in the item relating to section 217, by striking ''pilot''.

TITLE II—PROGRAM IMPROVEMENTS

SEC. 201. EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL PRIVILEGES.

Section 217(a)(2)(A) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187(a)(2)(A)) is amended by inserting '', either on its own or in conjunction with one or more other countries that are described in subparagraph (B) and that have established with it a common area for immigration admissions,'' after ''to extend)''.

SEC. 202. MACHINE READABLE PASSPORT PROGRAM.

(a) REQUIREMENT ON ALIEN.—Section 217(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (3) through (7) as paragraphs (4) through (8), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following:

''(3) MACHINE READABLE PASSPORT.—On and after October 1, 2006, the alien at the time of application for admission is in possession of a valid unexpired machine-readable passport that satisfies the internationally accepted standard for machine readability.''.

(b) REQUIREMENT ON COUNTRY.—Section 217(c)(2)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187(c)(2)(B)) is amended to read as follows:

''(B) MACHINE READABLE PASSPORT PROGRAM.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Subject to clause (ii), the government of the country certifies that it issues to its citizens machine-readable passports that satisfy the internationally accepted standard for machine readability.

''(ii) DEADLINE FOR COMPLIANCE FOR CERTAIN COUNTRIES.—In the case of a country designated as a program country under this subsection prior to May 1, 2000, as a condition on the continuation of that designation, the country—

''(I) shall certify, not later than October 1, 2000, that it has a program to issue machine-readable passports to its citizens not later than October 1, 2003; and

''(II) shall satisfy the requirement of clause (i) not later than October 1, 2003.''.

SEC. 203. DENIAL OF PROGRAM WAIVER BASED ON GROUND OF INADMISSIBILITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 217(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187(a)), as amended by section 202, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''(9) AUTOMATED SYSTEM CHECK.—The identity of the alien has been checked using an automated electronic database containing information about the inadmissibility of aliens to uncover any grounds on which the alien may be inadmissible to the United States, and no such ground has been found.''.

(b) VISA APPLICATION SOLE METHOD TO DISPUTE DENIALS OF WAIVER BASED ON GROUNDS OF INADMISSIBILITY.—Section 217 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187), as amended by section 101(a)(6) of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''(g) VISA APPLICATION SOLE METHOD OF DISPUTING GROUND OF INADMISSIBILITY FOUND IN AUTOMATED SYSTEM.—In the case of an alien denial a waiver under the program by reason of a ground of inadmissibility uncovered through a written or verbal statement by the alien or a use of an automated electronic database required under subsection (a)(9), the alien may apply for a visa at an appropriate consular office outside the United States. There shall be no other means of administrative or judicial review of such a denial, and no court or person otherwise shall have jurisdiction to consider any claim attacking the validity of such a denial.''.

(c) PAROLE AUTHORITY.—Section 212(d)(5) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(d)(5)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking ''subparagraph (B)'' and inserting ''subparagraph (B) or (C)''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

''(C) The Attorney General may not parole into the United States an alien who has applied under section 217 for a waiver of the visa requirement, and has been denied such waiver by reason of a ground of inadmissibility uncovered through a written or verbal statement by the alien or a use of an automated electronic database required under section 217(a)(9), unless the Attorney General determines that compelling reasons in the public interest, or compelling health considerations, with respect to that particular alien require that the alien be paroled into the United States.''.

SEC. 204. EVALUATION OF EFFECT OF COUNTRY'S PARTICIPATION ON LAW ENFORCEMENT AND SECURITY.

(a) INITIAL DESIGNATION.—Section 217(c)(2)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187(c)(2)(C)) is amended to read as follows:

''(C) LAW ENFORCEMENT AND SECURITY INTERESTS.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State—

''(i) evaluates the effect that the country's designation would have on the law enforcement and security interests of the United States (including the interest in enforcement of the immigration laws of the United States);

''(ii) determines that such interests would not be compromised by the designation of the country; and

''(iii) submits a written report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate regarding the country's qualification for designation that includes an explanation of such determination.''.

(b) CONTINUATION OF DESIGNATION.—Section 217(c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(5) WRITTEN REPORTS ON CONTINUING QUALIFICATION; DESIGNATION TERMINATIONS.—

''(A) PERIODIC EVALUATIONS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State, periodically (but not less than once every 5 years)—

''(I) shall evaluate the effect of each program country's continued designation on the law enforcement and security interests of the United States (including the interest in enforcement of the immigration laws of the United States);

''(II) shall determine whether any such designation ought to be continued or terminated under subsection (d); and

''(III) shall submit a written report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate regarding the continuation or termination of the country's designation that includes an explanation of such determination and the effects described in subclause (I).

''(ii) EFFECTIVE DATE.—A termination of the designation of a country under this subparagraph shall take effect on the date determined by the Attorney General, but may not take effect before the end of the 30-day period beginning on the date on which notice of the termination is published in the Federal Register.

''(iii) REDESIGNATION.—In the case of a termination under this subparagraph, the Attorney General shall redesignate the country as a program country, without regard to subsection (f) or paragraph (2) or (3), when the Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State, determines that all causes of the termination have been eliminated.

''(B) AUTOMATIC TERMINATION.—

''(i) REQUIREMENT.—On and after October 1, 2005, the designation of any program country with respect to a report described in subparagraph (A)(i)(III) has not been submitted in accordance with such subparagraph during the preceding 5 years shall be considered terminated.

''(ii) EFFECTIVE DATE.—A termination of the designation of a country under this subparagraph shall take effect on the last day of the 5-year period described in clause (i).

''(iii) REDESIGNATION.—In the case of a termination under this subparagraph, the Attorney General shall redesignate the country as a program country, without regard to subsection (f) or paragraph (2) or (3), when the required report is submitted, if the report includes a determination by the Attorney General that the country should continue as a program country.

''(C) EMERGENCY TERMINATION.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a program country in which an emergency occurs that the Attorney General, in consultation with the Secretary of State, determines threatens the law enforcement or security interests of the United States (including the interest in enforcement of the immigration laws of the United States), the Attorney General shall immediately terminate the designation of the country as a program country.

''(ii) DEFINITION.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'emergency' means—

''(I) the overthrow of a democratically elected government;

''(II) war (including undeclared war, civil war, or other military activity);

''(III) disruptive social unrest;

''(IV) a severe economic or financial crisis; or

''(V) any other extraordinary event that threatens the law enforcement or security interests of the United States (including the interest in enforcement of the immigration laws of the United States).

''(iii) REDESIGNATION.—The Attorney General may redesignate the country as a program country, without regard to subsection (f) or paragraph (2) or (3), when the Attorney General determines that—

''(I) at least 6 months have elapsed since the effective date of the termination;

''(II) the emergency that caused the termination has ended; and

''(III) the average number of refusals of nonimmigrant visitor visas for nationals of that country during the period of termination under this subparagraph was less than 3.0 percent of the total number of nonimmigrant visitor visas for nationals of that country which were granted or refused during such period.

''(D) TREATMENT OF NATIONALS AFTER TERMINATION.—For purposes of this paragraph—

''(i) nationals of a country whose designation is terminated under subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) shall remain eligible for a waiver under subsection (a) until the effective date of such termination; and

''(ii) a waiver under this section that is provided to such a national for a period described in subsection (a)(1) shall not, by such a designation termination, be deemed to have been rescinded or otherwise rendered invalid, if the waiver is granted prior to such termination.''.

SEC. 205. USE OF INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY SYSTEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 217 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187), as amended by section 203(b), is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''(h) USE OF INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY SYSTEMS.—

''(1) AUTOMATED ENTRY-EXIT CONTROL SYSTEM.—

''(A) SYSTEM.—Not later than October 1, 2001, the Attorney General shall develop and implement a fully automated entry and exit control system that will collect a record of arrival and departure for every alien who arrives by sea or air at a port of entry into the United States and is provided a waiver under the program.

''(B) REQUIREMENTS.—The system under subparagraph (A) shall satisfy the following requirements:

''(i) DATA COLLECTION BY CARRIERS.—Not later than October 1, 2001, the records of arrival and departure described in subparagraph (A) shall be based, to the maximum extent practicable, on passenger data collected and electronically transmitted to the automated entry and exit control system by each carrier that has an agreement under subsection (a)(4).

''(ii) DATA PROVISION BY CARRIERS.—Not later than October 1, 2002, no waiver may be provided under this section to an alien arriving by sea or air at a port of entry into the United States on a carrier unless the carrier is electronically transmitting to the automated entry and exit control system passenger data determined by the Attorney General to be sufficient to permit the Attorney General to carry out this paragraph.

''(iii) CALCULATION.—The system shall contain sufficient data to permit the Attorney General to calculate, for each program country and each fiscal year, the portion of nationals of that country who are described in subparagraph (A) and for whom no record of departure exists, expressed as a percentage of the total number of such nationals who are so described.

''(C) REPORTING.—

''(i) PERCENTAGE OF NATIONALS LACKING DEPARTURE RECORD.—Not later than January 30 of each year (beginning with the year 2003), the Attorney General shall submit a written report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate containing the calculation described in subparagraph (B)(iii) for each program country for the previous fiscal year.

''(ii) SYSTEM EFFECTIVENESS.—Not later than October 1, 2004, the Attorney General shall submit a written report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate containing the following:

''(I) The conclusions of the Attorney General regarding the effectiveness of the automated entry and exit control system to be developed and implemented under this paragraph.

''(II) The recommendations of the Attorney General regarding the use of the calculation described in subparagraph (B)(iii) as a basis for evaluating whether to terminate or continue the designation of a country as a program country.

''(2) AUTOMATED DATA SHARING SYSTEM.—

''(A) SYSTEM.—The Attorney General and the Secretary of State shall develop and implement an automated data sharing system that will permit them to share data in electronic form from their respective records systems regarding the admissibility of aliens who are nationals of a program country.

''(B) REQUIREMENTS.—The system under subparagraph (A) shall satisfy the following requirements:

''(i) SUPPLYING INFORMATION TO IMMIGRATION OFFICERS CONDUCTING INSPECTIONS AT PORTS OF ENTRY.—Not later than October 1, 2002, the system shall enable immigration officers conducting inspections at ports of entry under section 235 to obtain from the system, with respect to aliens seeking a waiver under the program—

''(I) any photograph of the alien that may be contained in the records of the Department of State or the Service; and

''(II) information on whether the alien has ever been determined to be ineligible to receive a visa or ineligible to be admitted to the United States.

''(ii) SUPPLYING PHOTOGRAPHS OF INADMISSIBLE ALIENS.—The system shall permit the Attorney General electronically to obtain any photograph contained in the records of the Secretary of State pertaining to an alien who is a national of a program country and has been determined to be ineligible to receive a visa.

''(iii) MAINTAINING RECORDS ON APPLICATIONS FOR ADMISSION.—The system shall maintain, for a minimum of 10 years, information about each application for admission made by an alien seeking a waiver under the program, including the following:

''(I) The name of each immigration officer conducting the inspection of the alien at the port of entry.

''(II) Any information described in clause (i) that is obtained from the system by any such officer.

''(III) The results of the application.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 217(e)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187(e)(1)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B), by striking ''and'' at the end;

(2) in subparagraph (C), by striking the period at the end and inserting '', and''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(D) to collect, provide, and share passenger data as required under subsection (h)(1)(B).''.

SEC. 206. CONDITIONS FOR VISA REFUSAL ELIGIBILITY.

Section 217(c) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1187(c)), as amended by section 204(b) of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''(6) COMPUTATION OF VISA REFUSAL RATES.—For purposes of determining the eligibility of a country to be designated as a program country, the calculation of visa refusal rates shall not include any visa refusals which incorporate any procedures based on, or are otherwise based on, race, sex, sexual orientation, or disability, unless otherwise specifically authorized by law or regulation.''.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous material on H.R. 3767, the bill under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the Visa Waiver Pilot Program allows aliens traveling from certain designated countries to come to the United States as temporary visitors for business or pleasure without having to obtain the nonimmigrant visa normally required. The program authorizes the Attorney General to waive the ''B'' visa requirement for traveling aliens coming from those certain countries that have qualified. There are currently 29 countries participating in this program.

Since its initial enactment as a temporary program in 1986, the Visa Waiver Pilot Program, often referred to as the VWPP, has been regularly extended by Congress. The current legislation expires on April 30. Fourteen years is a long time for a pilot program. It is time to make the VWPP permanent. H.R. 3767, the Visa Waiver Permanent Program Act, will make the visa waiver program permanent, more secure, and end the need to permanently reauthorize the program.

H.R. 3767 is a bipartisan bill. It was passed unanimously by the Subcommittee on Immigration and Claims and the Committee on the Judiciary. The tourism and travel industry strongly supports this legislation. Visa-free travel under the program has increased tourism in the United States from participating countries. More than 17 million visitors enter the United States under the visa waiver program each year. A permanent program will be a long-term benefit to the tourism industry and remove the uncertainty caused by the periodic expiration of the program.

While a permanent visa waiver program would be good for the American travel industry, a permanent program should not be authorized if the program posed a threat to the safety and well-being of the United States or exposed our country to situations in which large numbers of aliens could use the program to circumvent our immigration laws.

The current requirement that participating countries have a machine readable passport has been strengthened by establishing a date certain for all countries in the program to implement such a machine readable passport. Some countries that have been in the program for nearly 10 years still have not introduced the machine readable passport they committed to develop as a condition of their entry into the program. Setting a deadline that is firm is reasonable and fair.

H.R. 3767 also addresses what has been a major concern about the visa waiver program, the inability of the INS to monitor overstays by visa waiver travelers. Because the INS has failed to establish a credible system for calculating or estimating overstay rates, the only mechanism in the current statute for monitoring the compliance of countries in the program does not work. Thus, there has been a concern that once a country entered the program, it would be in forever, even if conditions in the country deteriorated and nationals of the country began to abuse the program.

H.R. 3767 requires the INS to develop a fully automated system for tracking the entry and departure of visa waiver travelers entering by air and sea, which is approximately 98 percent of all visa waiver pilot program travelers. Such a system could easily build on existing technology used to develop the advanced passenger information system, which INS has developed in cooperation with the airlines. Once the automated tracking system is in place, the information it produces can be used to calculate overstay rates and visas.

H.R. 3767 also establishes procedures for periodic reviews of countries already in the program and for dealing with emergency situations should they arise. Such procedures are an absolute necessity to ensure a permanent visa waiver program does not pose a threat to the law enforcement and security interests of the United States.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this permanent program of the visa waiver and, to make sure that we have a good program, we need to include the provisions that I have mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be an original cosponsor of the Visa Waiver Permanent Program Act. I want to commend the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) and his staff for working with me and my staff to make the appropriate changes that will encourage and expand tourism to the United States while at the same time protecting our Nation and its citizens.

The Visa Waiver Pilot Program was created by Congress to allow short-term visitors to travel to the United States without having to obtain a visitor visa, thereby encouraging and facilitating international tourism to the United States. This program is not only about immigration, it is about jobs and trade. International tourism to the U.S. in 1999 resulted in 47 million visitors, $95 billion in expenditures, and produced 1 million direct U.S. jobs.

The positive economic impact of this bill can be seen in my home State and in my district. Texas ranks fourth in the Nation in overall visitor spending and also ranks fourth in the Nation for having the greatest number of visitors who included an historical place or event on their trip. Nearly 19 million visitors traveled to the greater Houston area in 1997; and in 1996, visitors spent just under $5 billion, which resulted in 85,000 tourism-related jobs in the area. Many of those include our international travelers.

I also feel it is very important to remind my colleagues that as home to NASA's Johnson Space Center, Six Flags AstroWorld, the world's first domed stadium, and now Enron Field, we hope Texas, along with every other State in the Union, will continue to draw international visitors. I am confident that I have the support of the subcommittee chairman on that statement, being that he is from Texas.

It is time to take the pilot out of this program. H.R. 3767 makes this program permanent. A permanent program will give our international program participants the certainty and continuity they deserve. The State Department, the Travel Industry Association of America, and the National Governors' Association all support a permanent visa waiver program.

In the full committee markup, I was able to add language that would substitute the word terminate wherever the word rescind appears. This would make the loss of the visa waiver privilege prospective from the date on which the termination goes into effect. The bill also provides any national who is in the United States when the privilege is terminated would be permitted to remain lawfully until the end of the period for which he or she was admitted. This would be less disruptive to the individual who actually came into this country legally and something occurred that would intervene and cause their nation not to be part of the program anymore.

Another unintended consequence could occur if the provisions for reinstatement of the visa privilege are not modified. If renewal of the privilege is sought after it has been taken away for cause, H.R. 3767 would require the country to meet the same standards that have to be met for an initial grant of the privilege. This includes showing that the average number of refusals for nonimmigrant visitor visas for the previous two fiscal years was less than 3 percent of the total number of visas that was requested for that period.

A country that has just had the visa waiver privilege taken away would not have a record of visa requests to base such a statistic on. Its nationals would have been entering the United States without visas pursuant to the privilege. Consequently, such a country would not be able to satisfy this requirement for at least 2 years.

This bill authorizes the Attorney General to redesignate the country when 6 months has elapsed since the effective date of the termination, the emergency that caused the termination has ended, and the average number of refusals of nonimmigrant visitor visas for nationals of that country during the termination period was less than 3.0 percent of the total number of nonimmigrant visitor visas for the nationals of that country which were granted or refused during such period.

H.R. 3767 also provides that the designation of any country shall be considered terminated if a report on whether the privilege should be continued is not submitted every 5 years. The bill would require the Attorney General to reinstate the country when the required report is submitted. Of course, this would only apply if the report concludes that the country should continue as a program country.

In committee, Mr. Speaker, we had a very, very strong and vigorous debate about the various conditions for admission to the visa waiver program. No more than 3 percent of a country's applications for U.S. nonimmigrant visas can be refused. Currently, no countries in the Caribbean or Africa meet this threshold. I am troubled by this reality and will continue to work with the State Department and my colleagues, including the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), to remedy this problem. We must still study why all the applicants for the visa waiver program in Africa and the Caribbean are being refused.

The bill now prohibits the inclusion of any visa denied by the Department of State on certain other criteria such as race, sex, sexual orientation or disability when calculating the visa refusal rate to determine a country's eligibility.

The committee report language notes that it would be a violation of deeply-rooted American principles of equality of treatment and fair play to make determinations regarding visa eligibility based upon existing discriminatory criteria. We need to fix that.

Lastly, I am also very pleased to learn that an emerging and increasingly important trading partner, South Africa, already complies with one of the new provisions H.R. 3767 has in it, in that the country already issues machine readable passports to its citizens. As recently as 4 years ago, South Africa had a visa refusal rate of less than 3 percent.

I would like to encourage the Department of State and the INS, through its Interagency Working Group, to consider South Africa as a possible candidate in the near future, I might add, in the very near future.

Interest into the Visa Waiver Program could help in attracting many more visitors from that great nation, and we should look at the concerns I have with respect to other developing world countries. And it would help to demonstrate our commitment to be a strong trade partner and a friend of South Africa.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as we work through this legislation to fix other aspects of it, I urge Members to support H.R. 3767 in order to make the Visa Waiver Pilot Program permanent.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be an original co-sponsor of H.R. 3767, the Visa Waiver Permanent Program Act. I want to commend Subcommittee Chairman SMITH and his staff for working with me and my staff to make the appropriate changes that will encourage and expand tourism to the United States while at the same time protecting our nation and its citizens.

The Visa Waiver Pilot Program was created by Congress to allow short-term visitors to travel to the U.S. without having to obtain a visitor visa, thereby encouraging and facilitating international tourism to the United States. This program is not only about immigration, it is about jobs and trade. International tourism to the U.S. in 1999 resulted in 47 million visitors, $95 billion in expenditures, and produced 1 million direct U.S. jobs.

The positive economic impact of this bill can be seen in my home state and in my district. Texas ranks 4th in the nation in overall visitor spending, and also ranks 4th in the nation for having the greatest number of visitors who included a historical place or cultural event on their trip. Nearly 19 million visitors traveled to the Greater Houston area in 1997, and in 1996 visitors spent just under $5 billion, which resulted in 85,000 tourism-related jobs in the area. I also feel it is very important to remind my colleagues that as home to NASA's Johnson Space Center, Six flags Astro World, and the world's first domed stadium—Houston and Texas—will continue to be a strong draw for international visitors. I am confident that I have Chairman SMITH's support on this statement.

It is time to take the "pilot" out of this program. H.R. 3767 makes this program permanent. A permanent program will give our international program participants the certainty and continuity they deserve. The State Department, the Travel Industry Association of America, and the National Governors' Association, all support a permanent Visa Waiver Program.

In the Full Committee mark-up I was able to add language that would substitute the word "terminate" wherever the word "rescind" appears. This would make the loss of the visa waiver privilege prospective from the date on which the termination goes into effect. The bill also provides that any national who is in the United States when the privilege is terminated would be permitted to remain lawfully until the end of the period for which he or she was admitted.

Another unintended consequence could occur if the provisions for reinstatement of the visa waiver privilege are not modified. If renewal of the privilege is sought after it has been taken away for cause, H.R. 3767 would require the country to meet the same standards that have to be met for an initial grant of the privilege. This includes showing that the average number of refusals for nonimmigrant visitor visas for the previous two fiscal years was less than 3% of the total number of visas that were requested for that period. A country that has just had the visa waiver privilege taken away would not have a record of visa requests to base such a statistic on. Its nationals would have been entering the United States without visas pursuant to the privilege. Consequently, such a country would not be able to satisfy this requirement for at least two years.

This bill authorizes the Attorney General to redesignate the country when six months have elapsed since the effective date of the termination; the emergency that caused the termination has ended; and the average number of refusals of nonimmigrant visitor visas for nationals of that country during the termination period was less than 3.0% of the total number of nonimmigrant visitor visas for nationals of that country which were granted or refused during such period.

H.R. 3767 also provides that the designation of any country shall be considered terminated if a report on whether the privilege should be continued is not submitted every five years. The bill would require the Attorney General to reinstate the country when the required report is submitted. Of course, this would only apply if the report concludes that the country should continue as a program country.

In committee, Mr. Speaker, we had a heavy debate about the various conditions for admission to the visa waiver program. No more than 3% of a country's applications for U.S. non-immigrant visas can be refused. Currently, no countries in the Caribbean or Africa meet this threshold. I am troubled by this reality, and will continue to work with the Department of State to try to remedy this problem. We must still study why all the applicants for the visa waiver program in Africa and the Caribbean are being refused. The bill now prohibits the inclusion of any visa denied by the Department of State on the basis of race, sex, sexual orientation or disability—when calculating the visa refusal rate for determining the eligibility of a country for the waiver program. The Committee report language notes that it would be a violation of deeply-rooted American principles of equality of treatment and fair play to make determinations regarding visa eligibility based on discriminatory criteria.

Lastly, I am also very pleased to learn that an emerging and increasingly important trading partner, South Africa, already complies with one of the new provisions in H.R. 3767, in that the country already issues machine readable passports to its citizens. As recently as four years ago, South Africa had a visa refusal rate of less than 3%, and I would like to encourage the Department of State and the INS, through its Inter-Agency Working Group, to consider South Africa as a possible candidate in the near future. Entrance into the Visa Waiver Program could help in attracting many more visitors from that great nation, and would help to demonstrate our commitment to be a strong trade partner and friend.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge Members to support H.R. 3767 in order to make the Visa Waiver Pilot Program permanent.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have no other speakers, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT).

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, let me say up front that I intend to vote for this bill. I voted for it in the committee, and I will vote for it on the floor.

The notion of having a Visa Waiver Program is a good and honorable notion that I think all of us support. But I think we would be less than fair with our colleagues if we did not say up front that the criteria which is currently being used for countries to get into the Visa Waiver Program are not the right criteria.

Right now we are letting countries into the Visa Waiver Program based on the visa refusal rate that countries have experienced. And, unfortunately, there are a number of instances where that refusal rate is colored by considerations that ought not go into the evaluation: the race of applicants, the economic status of applicants, various biases that people who are considering whether to grant a visa or not are being taken into account. This is not the correct criteria.

The criteria which should be being used is whether people who come to our country overstay their visa authority in our country. We are trying to move to a system that evaluates that, and we do not have that system in place.

Now, the gentleman from Texas (Chairman SMITH) said 14 years is a long time to have a pilot program. The reason we have had a pilot program for 14 years is we have been working on this system, the valid reliable system that we ought to be using to determine whether countries are included in the Visa Waiver Program, for 14 years; and we still do not have the system in place.

The problem that I have with calling this a permanent program is that we, in effect, then are sanctioning the process or impliedly sanctioning the process of considering visa denials, which then sanctions the biases that are in that whole denial and approval process. And that is troubling to me.

So while I will support this bill, it is with the express understanding that we are moving to a system of evaluating visa overstays which ought to be the criteria for determining whether a country gets into this program or not, not some arbitrary race bias or economic bias or other biased process that quite often is the basis for refusing a visa in a source country in the first place.

That having been said, this is a program that is worthwhile. We hope we get the criteria right at some point, and I do encourage my colleagues to vote for the program even though I still have reservations about the criteria that we will be using on a short-term basis.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I simply say that I associate myself with the comments of the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT) and acknowledge that we must continue to work through these issues that play into the discriminatory aspects of the law.

I would hope that, as we have cleared up discrimination in the United States with legislation and not cleared it up in totality but cleared it up with at least a statement of being in opposition to discrimination on race, sex, sexual orientation, disability, that we would find the ability to do so and carry through on this issue of visas.

I would hope that we will continue the discussion on this legislation and, as well, that we will see the implementation of this program as a permanent program to be of value economically to the United States as well as to increase the very positive relations that we have with many of those nations who are on this visa list.

I would see us improving relations even more with our friends in the Caribbean, with our friends in Africa, and our friends additionally in South America and other parts who have not had this privilege if we can make determinations on overstays along with the issues of refusal rates.

With that, I would ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to acknowledge the legitimate point made by our colleague, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), a minute ago. We do, in fact, need a better program to determine the visa overstay rates.

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support the travel and tourism industry and to support legislation to make permanent the Visa Waiver Pilot Program. I am fortunate to represent one of the most popular tourist destinations in the country, Orlando, Florida. Over 38 million people visit the Orlando area each year, creating a total economic impact of more than $17 billion. Nearly 3 million of these visitors are from overseas, coming to Florida from Western Europe, South America and the Far East. Those visitors are essential to the local economy and well-being of the state of Florida.

Travel and tourism is one of the nation's top three industries providing jobs spanning across our communities, from employees at theme parks, museums, airlines, car rental companies, food service and hotels. The Visa Waiver program, which encourages international travel to the United States by waiving the visitor visa requirements for 29 countries, has added to the growth in overseas tourism. Frequent reauthorization of the pilot program creates confusion for those who work in the tourism industry and for individual travelers. H.R. 3767 makes this critical program permanent and also adds security enhancements that will make the program even more secure. Passage of this bill is a win-win for Congress and makes winners of the millions of constituents who work in the travel and tourism industry.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3767, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CIVIL ASSET FORFEITURE REFORM ACT OF 2000

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendment to the bill (H.R. 1658) to provide a more just and uniform procedure for Federal civil forfeitures, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SEC. 2. CREATION OF GENERAL RULES RELATING TO CIVIL FORFEITURE PROCEEDINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 46 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 982 the following:

"§983. General rules for civil forfeiture proceedings

"(a) NOTICE; CLAIM; COMPLAINT.—

"(1)(A)(i) Except as provided in clauses (ii) through (v), in any nonjudicial civil forfeiture proceeding under a civil forfeiture statute, with respect to which the Government is required to send written notice to interested parties, such notice shall be sent in a manner to achieve proper notice as soon as practicable, and in no case more than 60 days after the date of the seizure.

"(ii) No notice is required if, before the 60-day period expires, the Government files a civil judicial forfeiture action against the property and provides notice of that action as required by law.

"(iii) If, before the 60-day period expires, the Government does not file a civil judicial forfeiture action, but does obtain a criminal indictment containing an allegation that the property is subject to forfeiture, the government shall either—

"(I) send notice within the 60 days and continue the nonjudicial civil forfeiture proceeding under this section; or

"(II) terminate the nonjudicial civil forfeiture proceeding, and take the steps necessary to preserve its right to maintain custody of the property as provided in the applicable criminal forfeiture statute.

"(iv) In a case in which the property is seized by a State or local law enforcement agency and turned over to a Federal law enforcement agency for the purpose of forfeiture under Federal law, notice shall be sent not more than 90 days after the date of seizure by the State or local law enforcement agency.

"(v) If the identity or interest of a party is not determined until after the seizure or turnover but is determined before a declaration of forfeiture is entered, notice shall be sent to such interested party not later than 60 days after the determination by the Government of the identity of the party or the party's interest.

"(B) A supervisory official in the headquarters office of the seizing agency may extend the period for sending notice under subparagraph (A) for a period not to exceed 30 days (which period may not be further extended except by a court), if the official determines that the conditions in subparagraph (D) are present.

"(C) Upon motion by the Government, a court may extend the period for sending notice under subparagraph (A) for a period not to exceed 60 days, which period may be further extended by the court for 60-day periods, as necessary, if the court determines, based on a written certification of a supervisory official in the headquarters office of the seizing agency, that the conditions in subparagraph (D) are present.

"(D) The period for sending notice under this paragraph may be extended only if there is reason to believe that notice may have an adverse result, including—

"(i) endangering the life or physical safety of an individual;

"(ii) flight from prosecution;

"(iii) destruction of or tampering with evidence;

"(iv) intimidation of potential witnesses; or

"(v) otherwise seriously jeopardizing an investigation or unduly delaying a trial.

"(E) Each of the Federal seizing agencies conducting nonjudicial forfeitures under this section shall report periodically to the Committees on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Senate the number of occasions when an extension of time is granted under subparagraph (B).

"(F) If the Government does not send notice of a seizure of property in accordance with subparagraph (A) to the person from whom the property was seized, and no extension of time is granted, the Government shall return the property to that person without prejudice to the right of the Government to commence a forfeiture proceeding at a later time. The Government shall not be required to return contraband or other property that the person from whom the property was seized may not legally possess.

"(2)(A) Any person claiming property seized in a nonjudicial civil forfeiture proceeding under a civil forfeiture statute may file a claim with the appropriate official after the seizure.

"(B) A claim under subparagraph (A) may be filed not later than the deadline set forth in a personal notice letter (which deadline may be not earlier than 35 days after the date the letter is mailed), except that if that letter is not received, then a claim may be filed not later than 30 days after the date of final publication of notice of seizure.

''(C) A claim shall—

''(i) identify the specific property being claimed;

''(ii) state the claimant's interest in such property (and provide customary documentary evidence of such interest if available) and state that the claim is not frivolous; and

''(iii) be made under oath, subject to penalty of perjury.

''(D) A claim need not be made in any particular form. Each Federal agency conducting nonjudicial forfeitures under this section shall make claim forms generally available on request, which forms shall be written in easily understandable language.

''(E) Any person may make a claim under subparagraph (A) without posting bond with respect to the property which is the subject of the claim.

''(3)(A) Not later than 90 days after a claim has been filed, the Government shall file a complaint for forfeiture in the manner set forth in the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims or return the property pending the filing of a complaint, except that a court in the district in which the complaint will be filed may extend the period for filing a complaint for good cause shown or upon agreement of the parties.

''(B) If the Government does not—

''(i) file a complaint for forfeiture or return the property, in accordance with subparagraph (A); or

''(ii) before the time for filing a complaint has expired—

''(I) obtain a criminal indictment containing an allegation that the property is subject to forfeiture; and

''(II) take the steps necessary to preserve its right to maintain custody of the property as provided in the applicable criminal forfeiture statute, the Government shall promptly release the property pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Attorney General, and may not take any further action to effect the civil forfeiture of such property in connection with the underlying offense.

''(C) In lieu of, or in addition to, filing a civil forfeiture complaint, the Government may include a forfeiture allegation in a criminal indictment. If criminal forfeiture is the only forfeiture proceeding commenced by the Government, the Government's right to continued possession of the property shall be governed by the applicable criminal forfeiture statute.

''(D) No complaint may be dismissed on the ground that the Government did not have adequate evidence at the time the complaint was filed to establish the forfeitability of the property.

''(4)(A) In any case in which the Government files in the appropriate United States district court a complaint for forfeiture of property, any person claiming an interest in the seized property may file a claim asserting such person's interest in the property in the manner set forth in the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims, except that such claim may be filed not later than 30 days after the date of service of the Government's complaint or, as applicable, not later than 30 days after the date of final publication of notice of the filing of the complaint.

''(B) A person asserting an interest in seized property, in accordance with subparagraph (A), shall file an answer to the Government's complaint for forfeiture not later than 20 days after the date of the filing of the claim.

''(b) REPRESENTATION.—

''(1)(A) If a person with standing to contest the forfeiture of property in a judicial civil forfeiture proceeding under a civil forfeiture statute is financially unable to obtain representation by counsel, and the person is represented by counsel appointed under section 3006A of this title in connection with a related criminal case, the court may authorize counsel to represent that person with respect to the claim.

''(B) In determining whether to authorize counsel to represent a person under subparagraph (A), the court shall take into account such factors as—

''(i) the person's standing to contest the forfeiture; and

''(ii) whether the claim appears to be made in good faith.

''(2)(A) If a person with standing to contest the forfeiture of property in a judicial civil forfeiture proceeding under a civil forfeiture statute is financially unable to obtain representation by counsel, and the property subject to forfeiture is real property that is being used by the person as a primary residence, the court, at the request of the person, shall insure that the person is represented by an attorney for the Legal Services Corporation with respect to the claim.

''(B)(i) At appropriate times during a representation under subparagraph (A), the Legal Services Corporation shall submit a statement of reasonable attorney fees and costs to the court.

''(ii) The court shall enter a judgment in favor of the Legal Services Corporation for reasonable attorney fees and costs submitted pursuant to clause (i) and treat such judgment as payable under section 2465 of title 28, United States Code, regardless of the outcome of the case.

''(3) The court shall set the compensation for representation under this subsection, which shall be equivalent to that provided for court-appointed representation under section 3006A of this title.

''(c) BURDEN OF PROOF.—In a suit or action brought under any civil forfeiture statute for the civil forfeiture of any property—

''(1) the burden of proof is on the Government to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the property is subject to forfeiture;

''(2) the Government may use evidence gathered after the filing of a complaint for forfeiture to establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that property is subject to forfeiture; and

''(3) if the Government's theory of forfeiture is that the property was used to commit or facilitate the commission of a criminal offense, or was involved in the commission of a criminal offense, the Government shall establish that there was a substantial connection between the property and the offense.

''(d) INNOCENT OWNER DEFENSE.—

''(1) An innocent owner's interest in property shall not be forfeited under any civil forfeiture statute. The claimant shall have the burden of proving that the claimant is an innocent owner by a preponderance of the evidence.

''(2)(A) With respect to a property interest in existence at the time the illegal conduct giving rise to forfeiture took place, the term 'innocent owner' means an owner who—

''(i) did not know of the conduct giving rise to forfeiture; or

''(ii) upon learning of the conduct giving rise to the forfeiture, did all that reasonably could be expected under the circumstances to terminate such use of the property.

''(B)(i) For the purposes of this paragraph, ways in which a person may show that such person did all that reasonably could be expected may include demonstrating that such person, to the extent permitted by law—

''(I) gave timely notice to an appropriate law enforcement agency of information that led the person to know the conduct giving rise to a forfeiture would occur or has occurred; and

''(II) in a timely fashion revoked or made a good faith attempt to revoke permission for those engaging in such conduct to use the property or took reasonable actions in consultation with a law enforcement agency to discourage or prevent the illegal use of the property.

''(ii) A person is not required by this subparagraph to take steps that the person reasonably believes would be likely to subject any person (other than the person whose conduct gave rise to the forfeiture) to physical danger.

''(3)(A) With respect to a property interest acquired after the conduct giving rise to the forfeiture has taken place, the term 'innocent owner' means a person who, at the time that person acquired the interest in the property—

''(i) was a bona fide purchaser or seller for value (including a purchaser or seller of goods or services for value); and

''(ii) did not know and was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture.

''(B) An otherwise valid claim under subparagraph (A) shall not be denied on the ground that the claimant gave nothing of value in exchange for the property if—

''(i) the property is the primary residence of the claimant;

''(ii) depriving the claimant of the property would deprive the claimant of the means to maintain reasonable shelter in the community for the claimant and all dependents residing with the claimant;

''(iii) the property is not, and is not traceable to, the proceeds of any criminal offense; and

''(iv) the claimant acquired his or her interest in the property through marriage, divorce, or legal separation, or the claimant was the spouse or legal dependent of a person whose death resulted in the transfer of the property to the claimant through inheritance or probate; except that the court shall limit the value of any real property interest for which innocent ownership is recognized under this subparagraph to the value necessary to maintain reasonable shelter in the community for such claimant and all dependents residing with the claimant.

''(4) Notwithstanding any provision of this subsection, no person may assert an ownership interest under this subsection in contraband or other property that it is illegal to possess.

''(5) If the court determines, in accordance with this section, that an innocent owner has a partial interest in property otherwise subject to forfeiture, or a joint tenancy or tenancy by the entirety in such property, the court may enter an appropriate order—

''(A) severing the property;

''(B) transferring the property to the Government with a provision that the Government compensate the innocent owner to the extent of his or her ownership interest once a final order of forfeiture has been entered and the property has been reduced to liquid assets; or

''(C) permitting the innocent owner to retain the property subject to a lien in favor of the Government to the extent of the forfeitable interest in the property.

''(6) In this subsection, the term 'owner'—

''(A) means a person with an ownership interest in the specific property sought to be forfeited, including a leasehold, lien, mortgage, recorded security interest, or valid assignment of an ownership interest; and

''(B) does not include—

''(i) a person with only a general unsecured interest in, or claim against, the property or estate of another;

''(ii) a bailee unless the bailor is identified and the bailee shows a colorable legitimate interest in the property seized; or

''(iii) a nominee who exercises no dominion or control over the property.

''(e) MOTION TO SET ASIDE FORFEITURE.—

''(1) Any person entitled to written notice in any nonjudicial civil forfeiture proceeding under a civil forfeiture statute who does not receive such notice may file a motion to set aside a declaration of forfeiture with respect to that person's interest in the property, which motion shall be granted if—

''(A) the Government knew, or reasonably should have known, of the moving party's interest and failed to take reasonable steps to provide such party with notice; and

''(B) the moving party did not know or have reason to know of the seizure within sufficient time to file a timely claim.

''(2)(A) Notwithstanding the expiration of any applicable statute of limitations, if the court grants a motion under paragraph (1), the court shall set aside the declaration of forfeiture as to the interest of the moving party without prejudice to the right of the Government to commence a subsequent forfeiture proceeding as to the interest of the moving party.

''(B) Any proceeding described in subparagraph (A) shall be commenced—

''(i) if nonjudicial, within 60 days of the entry of the order granting the motion; or

''(ii) if judicial, within 6 months of the entry of the order granting the motion.

''(3) A motion under paragraph (1) may be filed not later than 5 years after the date of final publication of notice of seizure of the property.

''(4) If, at the time a motion made under paragraph (1) is granted, the forfeited property has been disposed of by the Government in accordance with law, the Government may institute proceedings against a substitute sum of money equal to the value of the moving party's interest in the property at the time the property was disposed of.

''(5) A motion filed under this subsection shall be the exclusive remedy for seeking to set aside a declaration of forfeiture under a civil forfeiture statute.

''(f) RELEASE OF SEIZED PROPERTY.—

''(1) A claimant under subsection (a) is entitled to immediate release of seized property if—

''(A) the claimant has a possessory interest in the property;

''(B) the claimant has sufficient ties to the community to provide assurance that the property will be available at the time of the trial;

''(C) the continued possession by the Government pending the final disposition of forfeiture proceedings will cause substantial hardship to the claimant, such as preventing the functioning of a business, preventing an individual from working, or leaving an individual homeless;

''(D) the claimant's likely hardship from the continued possession by the Government of the seized property outweighs the risk that the property will be destroyed, damaged, lost, concealed, or transferred if it is returned to the claimant during the pendency of the proceeding; and

''(E) none of the conditions set forth in paragraph (8) applies.

''(2) A claimant seeking release of property under this subsection must request possession of the property from the appropriate official, and the request must set forth the basis on which the requirements of paragraph (1) are met.

''(3)(A) If not later than 15 days after the date of a request under paragraph (2) the property has not been released, the claimant may file a petition in the district court in which the complaint has been filed or, if no complaint has been filed, in the district court in which the seizure warrant was issued or in the district court for the district in which the property was seized.

''(B) The petition described in subparagraph (A) shall set forth—

''(i) the basis on which the requirements of paragraph (1) are met; and

''(ii) the steps the claimant has taken to secure release of the property from the appropriate official.

''(4) If the Government establishes that the claimant's claim is frivolous, the court shall deny the petition. In responding to a petition under this subsection on other grounds, the Government may in appropriate cases submit evidence ex parte in order to avoid disclosing any matter that may adversely affect an ongoing criminal investigation or pending criminal trial.

''(5) The court shall render a decision on a petition filed under paragraph (3) not later than 30 days after the date of the filing, unless such 30-day limitation is extended by consent of the parties or by the court for good cause shown.

''(6) If—

''(A) a petition is filed under paragraph (3); and

''(B) the claimant demonstrates that the requirements of paragraph (1) have been met; the district court shall order that the property be returned to the claimant, pending completion of proceedings by the Government to obtain forfeiture of the property.

''(7) If the court grants a petition under paragraph (3)—

''(A) the court may enter any order necessary to ensure that the value of the property is maintained while the forfeiture action is pending, including—

''(i) permitting the inspection, photographing, and inventory of the property;

''(ii) fixing a bond in accordance with rule E(5) of the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims; and

''(iii) requiring the claimant to obtain or maintain insurance on the subject property; and

''(B) the Government may place a lien against the property or file a lis pendens to ensure that the property is not transferred to another person.

''(8) This subsection shall not apply if the seized property—

''(A) is contraband, currency, or other monetary instrument, or electronic funds unless such currency or other monetary instrument or electronic funds constitutes the assets of a legitimate business which has been seized;

''(B) is to be used as evidence of a violation of the law;

''(C) by reason of design or other characteristic, is particularly suited for use in illegal activities; or

''(D) is likely to be used to commit additional criminal acts if returned to the claimant.

''(g) PROPORTIONALITY.—

''(1) The claimant under subsection (a)(4) may petition the court to determine whether the forfeiture was constitutionally excessive.

''(2) In making this determination, the court shall compare the forfeiture to the gravity of the offense giving rise to the forfeiture.

''(3) The claimant shall have the burden of establishing that the forfeiture is grossly disproportional by a preponderance of the evidence at a hearing conducted by the court without a jury.

''(4) If the court finds that the forfeiture is grossly disproportional to the offense it shall reduce or eliminate the forfeiture as necessary to avoid a violation of the Excessive Fines Clause of the Eighth Amendment of the Constitution.

''(h) CIVIL FINE.—

''(1) In any civil forfeiture proceeding under a civil forfeiture statute in which the Government prevails, if the court finds that the claimant's assertion of an interest in the property was frivolous, the court may impose a civil fine on the claimant of an amount equal to 10 percent of the value of the forfeited property, but in no event shall the fine be less than $250 or greater than $5,000.

''(2) Any civil fine imposed under this subsection shall not preclude the court from imposing sanctions under rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

''(3) In addition to the limitations of section 1915 of title 28, United States Code, in no event shall a prisoner file a claim under a civil forfeiture statute or appeal a judgment in a civil action or proceeding based on a civil forfeiture statute if the prisoner has, on 3 or more prior occasions, while incarcerated or detained in any facility, brought an action or appeal in a court of the United States that was dismissed on the grounds that it is frivolous or malicious, unless the prisoner shows extraordinary and exceptional circumstances.

''(i) CIVIL FORFEITURE STATUTE DEFINED.—In this section, the term 'civil forfeiture statute'—

''(1) means any provision of Federal law providing for the forfeiture of property other than as a sentence imposed upon conviction of a criminal offense; and

''(2) does not include—

''(A) the Tariff Act of 1930 or any other provision of law codified in title 19;

''(B) the Internal Revenue Code of 1986;

''(C) the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 301 et seq.);

''(D) the Trading with the Enemy Act (50 U.S.C. App. 1 et seq.); or

''(E) section 1 of title VI of the Act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 233; 22 U.S.C. 401).''.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for chapter 46 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 982 the following:

''983. General rules for civil forfeiture proceedings.''.

(c) STRIKING SUPERSEDED PROVISIONS.—

(1) CIVIL FORFEITURE.—Section 981(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking ''Except as provided in paragraph (2), the'' and inserting ''The''; and

(B) by striking paragraph (2).

(3) AUTOMOBILES.—Section 518 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 888) is repealed.

(4) FORFEITURES IN CONNECTION WITH SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF CHILDREN.—Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 2254(a) of title 18, United States Code, are each amended by striking '', except that'' and all that follows before the period at the end.

(d) LEGAL SERVICES CORPORATION REPRESENTATION.—Section 1007(a) of the Legal Services Corporation Act (42 U.S.C. 2996f(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (9), by striking ''and'' after the semicolon;

(2) In paragraph (10), by striking the period and inserting ''; and''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(11) ensure that an indigent individual whose primary residence is subject to civil forfeiture is represented by an attorney for the Corporation in such civil action.''

SEC. 3. COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE TO SEIZED PROPERTY.

(a) TORT CLAIMS ACT.—Section 2680(c) of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking ''any goods or merchandise'' and inserting ''any goods, merchandise, or other property'';

(2) by striking ''law-enforcement'' and inserting ''law enforcement''; and

(3) by inserting before the period at the end the following: '', except that the provisions of this chapter and section 1346(b) of this title apply to any claim based on injury or loss of goods, merchandise, or other property, while in the possession of any officer of customs or excise or any other law enforcement officer, if—

''(1) the property was seized for the purpose of forfeiture under any provision of Federal law providing for the forfeiture of property other than as a sentence imposed upon conviction of a criminal offense;

''(2) the interest of the claimant was not forfeited;

''(3) the interest of the claimant was not remitted or mitigated (if the property was subject to forfeiture); and

''(4) the claimant was not convicted of a crime for which the interest of the claimant in the property was subject to forfeiture under a Federal criminal forfeiture law.''.

(b) DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—With respect to a claim that cannot be settled under chapter 171 of title 28, United States Code, the Attorney General may settle, for not more than $50,000 in any case, a claim for damage to, or loss of, privately owned property caused by an investigative or law enforcement officer (as defined in section 2680(h) of title 28, United States Code) who is employed by the Department of Justice acting within the scope of his or her employment.

(2) LIMITATIONS.—The Attorney General may not pay a claim under paragraph (1) that—

(A) is presented to the Attorney General more than 1 year after it accrues; or

(B) is presented by an officer or employee of the Federal Government and arose within the scope of employment.

SEC. 4. ATTORNEY FEES, COSTS, AND INTEREST.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 2465 of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''§2465. Return of property to claimant; liability for wrongful seizure; attorney fees, costs, and interest

''(a) Upon the entry of a judgment for the claimant in any proceeding to condemn or forfeit property seized or arrested under any provision of Federal law—

''(1) such property shall be returned forthwith to the claimant or his agent; and

''(2) if it appears that there was reasonable cause for the seizure or arrest, the court shall cause a proper certificate thereof to be entered and, in such case, neither the person who made the seizure or arrest nor the prosecutor shall be liable to suit or judgment on account of such suit or prosecution, nor shall the claimant be entitled to costs, except as provided in subsection (b).

''(b)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), in any civil proceeding to forfeit property under any provision of Federal law in which the claimant substantially prevails, the United States shall be liable for—

''(A) reasonable attorney fees and other litigation costs reasonably incurred by the claimant;

''(B) post-judgment interest, as set forth in section 1961 of this title; and

''(C) in cases involving currency, other negotiable instruments, or the proceeds of an interlocutory sale—

''(i) interest actually paid to the United States from the date of seizure or arrest of the property that resulted from the investment of the property in an interest-bearing account or instrument; and

''(ii) an imputed amount of interest that such currency, instruments, or proceeds would have earned at the rate applicable to the 30-day Treasury Bill, for any period during which no interest was paid (not including any period when the property reasonably was in use as evidence in an official proceeding or in conducting scientific tests for the purpose of collecting evidence), commencing 15 days after the property was seized by a Federal law enforcement agency, or was turned over to a Federal law enforcement agency by a State or local law enforcement agency.

''(2)(A) The United States shall not be required to disgorge the value of any intangible benefits nor make any other payments to the claimant not specifically authorized by this subsection.

''(B) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall not apply if the claimant is convicted of a crime for which the interest of the claimant in the property was subject to forfeiture under a Federal criminal forfeiture law.

''(C) If there are multiple claims to the same property, the United States shall not be liable for costs and attorneys fees associated with any such claim if the United States—

''(i) promptly recognizes such claim;

''(ii) promptly returns the interest of the claimant in the property to the claimant, if the property can be divided without difficulty and there are no competing claims to that portion of the property;

''(iii) does not cause the claimant to incur additional, reasonable costs or fees; and

''(iv) prevails in obtaining forfeiture with respect to one or more of the other claims.

''(D) If the court enters judgment in part for the claimant and in part for the Government, the court shall reduce the award of costs and attorney fees accordingly.''.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for chapter 163 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking the item relating to section 2465 and inserting following:

''2465. Return of property to claimant; liability for wrongful seizure; attorney fees, costs, and interest.''.

SEC. 5. SEIZURE WARRANT REQUIREMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 981(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(b)(1) Except as provided in section 985, any property subject to forfeiture to the United States under subsection (a) may be seized by the Attorney General and, in the case of property involved in a violation investigated by the Secretary of the Treasury or the United States Postal Service, the property may also be seized by the Secretary of the Treasury or the Postal Service, respectively.

''(2) Seizures pursuant to this section shall be made pursuant to a warrant obtained in the same manner as provided for a search warrant under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, except that a seizure may be made without a warrant if—

''(A) a complaint for forfeiture has been filed in the United States district court and the court issued an arrest warrant in rem pursuant to the Supplemental Rules for Certain Admiralty and Maritime Claims;

''(B) there is probable cause to believe that the property is subject to forfeiture and—

''(i) the seizure is made pursuant to a lawful arrest or search; or

''(ii) another exception to the Fourth Amendment warrant requirement would apply; or

''(C) the property was lawfully seized by a State or local law enforcement agency and transferred to a Federal agency.

''(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of rule 41(a) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, a seizure warrant may be issued pursuant to this subsection by a judicial officer in any district in which a forfeiture action against the property may be filed under section 1355(b) of title 28, and may be executed in any district in which the property is found, or transmitted to the central authority of any foreign state for service in accordance with any treaty or other international agreement. Any motion for the return of property seized under this section shall be filed in the district court in which the seizure warrant was issued or in the district court for the district in which the property was seized.

''(4)(A) If any person is arrested or charged in a foreign country in connection with an offense that would give rise to the forfeiture of property in the United States under this section or under the Controlled Substances Act, the Attorney General may apply to any Federal judge or magistrate judge in the district in which the property is located for an ex parte order restraining the property subject to forfeiture for not more than 30 days, except that the time may be extended for good cause shown at a hearing conducted in the manner provided in rule 43(e) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

''(B) The application for the restraining order shall set forth the nature and circumstances of the foreign charges and the basis for belief that the person arrested or charged has property in the United States that would be subject to forfeiture, and shall contain a statement that the restraining order is needed to preserve the availability of property for such time as is necessary to receive evidence from the foreign country or elsewhere in support of probable cause for the seizure of the property under this subsection.''.

(b) DRUG FORFEITURES.—Section 511(b) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881(b)) is amended to read as follows:

''(b) SEIZURE PROCEDURES.—Any property subject to forfeiture to the United States under this section may be seized by the Attorney General in the manner set forth in section 981(b) of title 18, United States Code.''.

SEC. 6. USE OF FORFEITED FUNDS TO PAY RESTITUTION TO CRIME VICTIMS.

Section 981(e) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking paragraph (6) and inserting the following:

''(6) as restoration to any victim of the offense giving rise to the forfeiture, including, in the case of a money laundering offense, any offense constituting the underlying specified unlawful activity; or''.

SEC. 7. CIVIL FORFEITURE OF REAL PROPERTY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 46 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 984 the following:

''§985. Civil forfeiture of real property

''(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all civil forfeitures of real property and interests in real property shall proceed as judicial forfeitures.

''(b)(1) Except as provided in this section—

''(A) real property that is the subject of a civil forfeiture action shall not be seized before entry of an order of forfeiture; and

''(B) the owners or occupants of the real property shall not be evicted from, or otherwise deprived of the use and enjoyment of, real property that is the subject of a pending forfeiture action.

''(2) The filing of a lis pendens and the execution of a writ of entry for the purpose of conducting an inspection and inventory of the property shall not be considered a seizure under this subsection.

''(c)(1) The Government shall initiate a civil forfeiture action against real property by—

''(A) filing a complaint for forfeiture;

''(B) posting a notice of the complaint on the property; and

''(C) serving notice on the property owner, along with a copy of the complaint.

''(2) If the property owner cannot be served with the notice under paragraph (1) because the owner—

''(A) is a fugitive;

''(B) resides outside the United States and efforts at service pursuant to rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure are unavailing; or

''(C) cannot be located despite the exercise of due diligence, constructive service may be made in accordance with the laws of the State in which the property is located.

''(3) If real property has been posted in accordance with this subsection, it shall not be necessary for the court to issue an arrest warrant in rem, or to take any other action to establish in rem jurisdiction over the property.

''(d)(1) Real property may be seized prior to the entry of an order of forfeiture if—

''(A) the Government notifies the court that it intends to seize the property before trial; and

''(B) the court—

''(i) issues a notice of application for warrant, causes the notice to be served on the property owner and posted on the property, and conducts a hearing in which the property owner has a meaningful opportunity to be heard; or

''(ii) makes an ex parte determination that there is probable cause for the forfeiture and that there are exigent circumstances that permit the Government to seize the property without prior notice and an opportunity for the property owner to be heard.

''(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)(B)(ii), to establish exigent circumstances, the Government shall show that less restrictive measures such as a lis pendens, restraining order, or bond would not suffice to protect the Government's interests in preventing the sale, destruction, or continued unlawful use of the real property.

''(e) If the court authorizes a seizure of real property under subsection (d)(1)(B)(ii), it shall conduct a prompt post-seizure hearing during which the property owner shall have an opportunity to contest the basis for the seizure.

''(f) This section—

''(1) applies only to civil forfeitures of real property and interests in real property;

''(2) does not apply to forfeitures of the proceeds of the sale of such property or interests, or of money or other assets intended to be used to acquire such property or interests; and

''(3) shall not affect the authority of the court to enter a restraining order relating to real property.''.

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The analysis for chapter 46 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 984 the following:

''985. Civil forfeiture of real property.''.

SEC. 8. STAY OF CIVIL FORFEITURE CASE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 981(g) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(g)(1) Upon the motion of the United States, the court shall stay the civil forfeiture proceeding if the court determines that civil discovery will adversely affect the ability of the Government to conduct a related criminal investigation or the prosecution of a related criminal case.

''(2) Upon the motion of a claimant, the court shall stay the civil forfeiture proceeding with respect to that claimant if the court determines that—

''(A) the claimant is the subject of a related criminal investigation or case;

''(B) the claimant has standing to assert a claim in the civil forfeiture proceeding; and

''(C) continuation of the forfeiture proceeding will burden the right of the claimant against self-incrimination in the related investigation or case.

''(3) With respect to the impact of civil discovery described in paragraphs (1) and (2), the court may determine that a stay is unnecessary if a protective order limiting discovery would protect the interest of 1 party without unfairly limiting the ability of the opposing party to pursue the civil case. In no case, however, shall the court impose a protective order as an alternative to a stay if the effect of such protective order would be to allow 1 party to pursue discovery while the other party is substantially unable to do so.

''(4) In this subsection, the terms 'related criminal case' and 'related criminal investigation' mean an actual prosecution or investigation in progress at the time at which the request for the stay, or any subsequent motion to lift the stay is made. In determining whether a criminal case or investigation is 'related' to a civil forfeiture proceeding, the court shall consider the degree of similarity between the parties, witnesses, facts, and circumstances involved in the 2 proceedings, without requiring an identity with respect to any 1 or more factors.

''(5) In requesting a stay under paragraph (1), the Government may, in appropriate cases, submit evidence ex parte in order to avoid disclosing any matter that may adversely affect an ongoing criminal investigation or pending criminal trial.

''(6) Whenever a civil forfeiture proceeding is stayed pursuant to this subsection, the court shall enter any order necessary to preserve the value of the property or to protect the rights of lienholders or other persons with an interest in the property while the stay is in effect.

''(7) A determination by the court that the claimant has standing to request a stay pursuant to paragraph (2) shall apply only to this subsection and shall not preclude the Government from objecting to the standing of the claimant by dispositive motion or at the time of trial.''.

(b) DRUG FORFEITURES.—Section 511(i) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881(i)) is amended to read as follows:

''(i) The provisions of section 981(g) of title 18, United States Code, regarding the stay of a civil forfeiture proceeding shall apply to forfeitures under this section.''.

SEC. 9. CIVIL RESTRAINING ORDERS.

Section 983 of title 18, United States Code, as added by this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(j) RESTRAINING ORDERS; PROTECTIVE ORDERS.—

''(1) Upon application of the United States, the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds, create receiverships, appoint conservators, custodians, appraisers, accountants, or trustees, or take any other action to seize, secure, maintain, or preserve the availability of property subject to civil forfeiture—

''(A) upon the filing of a civil forfeiture complaint alleging that the property with respect to which the order is sought is subject to civil forfeiture; or

''(B) prior to the filing of such a complaint, if, after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing, the court determines that—

''(i) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the property being destroyed, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, or otherwise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

''(ii) the need to preserve the availability of the property through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any party against whom the order is to be entered.

''(2) An order entered pursuant to paragraph (1)(B) shall be effective for not more than 90 days, unless extended by the court for good cause shown, or unless a complaint described in paragraph (1)(A) has been filed.

''(3) A temporary restraining order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States without notice or opportunity for a hearing when a complaint has not yet been filed with respect to the property, if the United States demonstrates that there is probable cause to believe that the property with respect to which the order is sought is subject to civil forfeiture and that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than 10 days after the date on which it is entered, unless extended for good cause shown or unless the party against whom it is entered consents to an extension for a longer period. A hearing requested concerning an order entered under this paragraph shall be held at the earliest possible time and prior to the expiration of the temporary order.

''(4) The court may receive and consider, at a hearing held pursuant to this subsection, evidence and information that would be inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.''.

SEC. 10. COOPERATION AMONG FEDERAL PROSECUTORS.

Section 3322(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking ''civil forfeiture under section 981 of title 18, United States Code, of property described in section 981(a)(1)(C) of such title'' and inserting ''any civil forfeiture provision of Federal law''; and

(2) by striking ''concerning a banking law violation''.

SEC. 11. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR CIVIL FORFEITURE ACTIONS.

Section 621 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1621) is amended by inserting '', or in the case of forfeiture, within 2 years after the time when the involvement of the property in the alleged offense was discovered, whichever was later'' after ''within five years after the time when the alleged offense was discovered''.

SEC. 12. DESTRUCTION OR REMOVAL OF PROPERTY TO PREVENT SEIZURE.

Section 2232 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking subsections (a) and (b);

(2) by inserting ''(e) FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE SURVEILLANCE.—'' before ''Whoever, having knowledge that a Federal officer'';

(3) by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (d); and

(4) by inserting before subsection (d), as redesignated, the following:

''(a) DESTRUCTION OR REMOVAL OF PROPERTY TO PREVENT SEIZURE.—Whoever, before, during, or after any search for or seizure of property by any person authorized to make such search or seizure, knowingly destroys, damages, wastes, disposes of, transfers, or otherwise takes any action, or knowingly attempts to destroy, damage, waste, dispose of, transfer, or otherwise take any action, for the purpose of preventing or impairing the Government's lawful authority to take such property into its custody or control or to continue holding such property under its lawful custody and control, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

''(b) IMPAIRMENT OF IN REM JURISDICTION.—Whoever, knowing that property is subject to the in rem jurisdiction of a United States court for purposes of civil forfeiture under Federal law, knowingly and without authority from that court, destroys, damages, wastes, disposes of, transfers, or otherwise takes any action, or knowingly attempts to destroy, damage, waste, dispose of, transfer, or otherwise take any action, for the purpose of impairing or defeating the court's continuing in rem jurisdiction over the property, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

''(c) NOTICE OF SEARCH OR EXECUTION OF SEIZURE WARRANT OR WARRANT OF ARREST IN REM.—Whoever, having knowledge that any person authorized to make searches and seizures, or to execute a seizure warrant or warrant of arrest in rem, in order to prevent the authorized seizing or securing of any person or property, gives notice or attempts to give notice in advance of the search, seizure, or execution of a seizure warrant or warrant of arrest in rem, to any person shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.''.

SEC. 13. FUNGIBLE PROPERTY IN BANK ACCOUNTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 984 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking subsection (a) and redesignating subsections (b), (c), and (d) as subsections (a), (b), and (c), respectively;

(2) in subsection (a), as redesignated—

(A) by striking ''or other fungible property'' and inserting ''or precious metals''; and

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking ''subsection (c)'' and inserting ''subsection (b)'';

(3) in subsection (c), as redesignated—

(A) by striking paragraph (1) and inserting the following: ''(1) Subsection (a) does not apply to an action against funds held by a financial institution in an interbank account unless the account holder knowingly engaged in the offense that is the basis for the forfeiture.''; and

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking ''(2) As used in this section, the term'' and inserting the following:

''(2) In this subsection—

''(A) the term 'financial institution' includes a foreign bank (as defined in section 1(b)(7) of the International Banking Act of 1978 (12 U.S.C. 3101(b)(7))); and

''(B) the term''; and

(4) by adding at the end the following:

''(d) Nothing in this section may be construed to limit the ability of the Government to forfeit property under any provision of law if the property involved in the offense giving rise to the forfeiture or property traceable thereto is available for forfeiture.''.

SEC. 14. FUGITIVE DISENTITLEMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 163 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''§2466. Fugitive disentitlement

''A judicial officer may disallow a person from using the resources of the courts of the United States in furtherance of a claim in any related civil forfeiture action or a claim in third party proceedings in any related criminal forfeiture action upon a finding that such person—

''(1) after notice or knowledge of the fact that a warrant or process has been issued for his apprehension, in order to avoid criminal prosecution—

''(A) purposely leaves the jurisdiction of the United States;

''(B) declines to enter or reenter the United States to submit to its jurisdiction; or

''(C) otherwise evades the jurisdiction of the court in which a criminal case is pending against the person; and

''(2) is not confined or held in custody in any other jurisdiction for commission of criminal conduct in that jurisdiction.''.

''2466. Fugitive disentitlement.''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to any case pending on or after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 15. ENFORCEMENT OF FOREIGN FORFEITURE JUDGMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 163 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''§2467. Enforcement of foreign judgment

''(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section—

''(1) the term 'foreign nation' means a country that has become a party to the United Nations Convention Against Illicit Traffic in Narcotic Drugs and Psychotropic Substances (referred to in this section as the 'United Nations Convention') or a foreign jurisdiction with which the United States has a treaty or other formal international agreement in effect providing for mutual forfeiture assistance; and

''(2) the term 'forfeiture or confiscation judgment' means a final order of a foreign nation compelling a person or entity—

''(A) to pay a sum of money representing the proceeds of an offense described in Article 3, Paragraph 1, of the United Nations Convention, or any foreign offense described in section 1956(c)(7)(B) of title 18, or property the value of which corresponds to such proceeds; or

''(B) to forfeit property involved in or traceable to the commission of such offense.

''(b) REVIEW BY ATTORNEY GENERAL.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—A foreign nation seeking to have a forfeiture or confiscation judgment registered and enforced by a district court of the United States under this section shall first submit a request to the Attorney General or the designee of the Attorney General, which request shall include—

''(A) a summary of the facts of the case and a description of the proceedings that resulted in the forfeiture or confiscation judgment;

''(B) certified copy of the forfeiture or confiscation judgment;

''(C) an affidavit or sworn declaration establishing that the defendant received notice of the proceedings in sufficient time to enable the defendant to defend against the charges and that the judgment rendered is in force and is not subject to appeal; and

''(D) such additional information and evidence as may be required by the Attorney General or the designee of the Attorney General.

''(2) CERTIFICATION OF REQUEST.—The Attorney General or the designee of the Attorney General shall determine whether, in the interest of justice, to certify the request, and such decision shall be final and not subject to either judicial review or review under subchapter II of chapter 5, or chapter 7, of title 5 (commonly known as the 'Administrative Procedure Act').

''(c) JURISDICTION AND VENUE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Attorney General or the designee of the Attorney General certifies a request under subsection (b), the United States may file an application on behalf of a foreign nation in district court of the United States seeking to enforce the foreign forfeiture or confiscation judgment as if the judgment had been entered by a court in the United States.

''(2) PROCEEDINGS.—In a proceeding filed under paragraph (1)—

''(A) the United States shall be the applicant and the defendant or another person or entity affected by the forfeiture or confiscation judgment shall be the respondent;

''(B) venue shall lie in the district court for the District of Columbia or in any other district in which the defendant or the property that may be the basis for satisfaction of a judgment under this section may be found; and

''(C) the district court shall have personal jurisdiction over a defendant residing outside of the United States if the defendant is served with process in accordance with rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

''(d) ENTRY AND ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The district court shall enter such orders as may be necessary to enforce the judgment on behalf of the foreign nation unless the court finds that—

''(A) the judgment was rendered under a system that provides tribunals or procedures incompatible with the requirements of due process of law;

''(B) the foreign court lacked personal jurisdiction over the defendant;

''(C) the foreign court lacked jurisdiction over the subject matter;

''(D) the defendant in the proceedings in the foreign court did not receive notice of the proceedings in sufficient time to enable him or her to defend; or

''(E) the judgment was obtained by fraud.

''(2) PROCESS.—Process to enforce a judgment under this section shall be in accordance with rule 69(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

''(e) FINALITY OF FOREIGN FINDINGS.—In entering orders to enforce the judgment, the court shall be bound by the findings of fact to the extent that they are stated in the foreign forfeiture or confiscation judgment.

''(f) CURRENCY CONVERSION.—The rate of exchange in effect at the time the suit to enforce is filed by the foreign nation shall be used in calculating the amount stated in any forfeiture or confiscation judgment requiring the payment of a sum of money submitted for registration.''.

''2467. Enforcement of foreign judgment.''.

SEC. 16. ENCOURAGING USE OF CRIMINAL FORFEITURE AS AN ALTERNATIVE TO CIVIL FORFEITURE.

Section 2461 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(c) If a forfeiture of property is authorized in connection with a violation of an Act of Congress, and any person is charged in an indictment or information with such violation but no specific statutory provision is made for criminal forfeiture upon conviction, the Government may include the forfeiture in the indictment or information in accordance with the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and upon conviction, the court shall order the forfeiture of the property in accordance with the procedures set forth in section 413 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 853), other than subsection (d) of that section.''.

SEC. 17. ACCESS TO RECORDS IN BANK SECRECY JURISDICTIONS.

Section 986 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(d) ACCESS TO RECORDS IN BANK SECRECY JURISDICTIONS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In any civil forfeiture case, or in any ancillary proceeding in any criminal forfeiture case governed by section 413(n) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 853(n)), in which—

''(A) financial records located in a foreign country may be material—

''(i) to any claim or to the ability of the Government to respond to such claim; or

''(ii) in a civil forfeiture case, to the ability of the Government to establish the forfeitability of the property; and

''(B) it is within the capacity of the claimant to waive the claimant's rights under applicable financial secrecy laws, or to obtain the records so that such records can be made available notwithstanding such secrecy laws; the refusal of the claimant to provide the records in response to a discovery request or to take the action necessary otherwise to make the records available shall be grounds for judicial sanctions, up to and including dismissal of the claim with prejudice.

''(2) PRIVILEGE.—This subsection shall not affect the right of the claimant to refuse production on the basis of any privilege guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States or any other provision of Federal law.''.

SEC. 18. APPLICATION TO ALIEN SMUGGLING OFFENSES.

(a) AMENDMENT OF THE IMMIGRATION AND NATIONALITY ACT.—Section 274(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1324(b)) is amended to read as follows:

''(b) SEIZURE AND FORFEITURE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Any conveyance, including any vessel, vehicle, or aircraft, that has been or is being used in the commission of a violation of subsection (a), the gross proceeds of such violation, and any property traceable to such conveyance or proceeds, shall be seized and subject to forfeiture.

''(2) APPLICABLE PROCEDURES.—Seizures and forfeitures under this subsection shall be governed by the provisions of chapter 46 of title 18, United States Code, relating to civil forfeitures, including section 981(d) of such title, except that such duties as are imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury under the customs laws described in that section shall be performed by such officers, agents, and other persons as may be designated for that purpose by the Attorney General.

''(3) PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE IN DETERMINATIONS OF VIOLATIONS.—In determining whether a violation of subsection (a) has occurred, any of the following shall be prima facie evidence that an alien involved in the alleged violation had not received prior official authorization to come to, enter, or reside in the United States or that such alien had come to, entered, or remained in the United States in violation of law:

''(A) Records of any judicial or administrative proceeding in which that alien's status was an issue and in which it was determined that the alien had not received prior official authorization to come to, enter, or reside in the United States or that such alien had come to, entered, or remained in the United States in violation of law.

''(B) Official records of the Service or of the Department of State showing that the alien had not received prior official authorization to come to, enter, or reside in the United States or that such alien had come to, entered, or remained in the United States in violation of law.

''(C) Testimony, by an immigration officer having personal knowledge of the facts concerning that alien's status, that the alien had not received prior official authorization to come to, enter, or reside in the United States or that such alien had come to, entered, or remained in the United States in violation of law.''.

(b) TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS TO EXISTING CRIMINAL FORFEITURE AUTHORITY.—Section 982(a)(6) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by inserting ''section 274(a), 274A(a)(1), or 274A(a)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act or'' before ''section 1425'' the first place it appears;

(B) in clause (i), by striking ''a violation of, or a conspiracy to violate, subsection (a)'' and inserting ''the offense of which the person is convicted''; and

(C) in subclauses (I) and (II) of clause (ii), by striking ''a violation of, or a conspiracy to violate, subsection (a)'' and all that follows through ''of this title'' each place it appears and inserting ''the offense of which the person is convicted'';

(2) by striking subparagraph (B); and

(3) in the second sentence—

(A) by striking ''The court, in imposing sentence on such person'' and inserting the following:

''(B) The court, in imposing sentence on a person described in subparagraph (A)''; and

(B) by striking ''this subparagraph'' and inserting ''that subparagraph''.

SEC. 19. ENHANCED VISIBILITY OF THE ASSET FORFEITURE PROGRAM.

Section 524(c)(6) of title 28, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

''(6)(A) The Attorney General shall transmit to Congress and make available to the public, not later than 4 months after the end of each fiscal year, detailed reports for the prior fiscal year as follows:

''(i) A report on total deposits to the Fund by State of deposit.

''(ii) A report on total expenses paid from the Fund, by category of expense and recipient agency, including equitable sharing payments.

''(iii) A report describing the number, value, and types of properties placed into official use by Federal agencies, by recipient agency.

''(iv) A report describing the number, value, and types of properties transferred to State and local law enforcement agencies, by recipient agency.

''(v) A report, by type of disposition, describing the number, value, and types of forfeited property disposed of during the year.

''(vi) A report on the year-end inventory of property under seizure, but not yet forfeited, that reflects the type of property, its estimated value, and the estimated value of liens and mortgages outstanding on the property.

''(vii) A report listing each property in the year-end inventory, not yet forfeited, with an outstanding equity of not less than $1,000,000.

''(B) The Attorney General shall transmit to Congress and make available to the public, not later than 2 months after final issuance, the audited financial statements for each fiscal year for the Fund.

''(C) Reports under subparagraph (A) shall include information with respect to all forfeitures under any law enforced or administered by the Department of Justice.

''(D) The transmittal and publication requirements in subparagraphs (A) and (B) may be satisfied by—

''(i) posting the reports on an Internet website maintained by the Department of Justice for a period of not less than 2 years; and

''(ii) notifying the Committees on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Senate when the reports are available electronically.''.

SEC. 20. PROCEEDS.

(a) FORFEITURE OF PROCEEDS.—Section 981(a)(1)(C) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking ''or a violation of section 1341'' and all that follows and inserting ''or any offense constituting 'specified unlawful activity' (as defined in section 1956(c)(7) of this title), or a conspiracy to commit such offense.''.

(b) DEFINITION OF PROCEEDS.—Section 981(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'proceeds' is defined as follows:

''(A) In cases involving illegal goods, illegal services, unlawful activities, and telemarketing and health care fraud schemes, the term 'proceeds' means property of any kind obtained directly or indirectly, as the result of the commission of the offense giving rise to forfeiture, and any property traceable thereto, and is not limited to the net gain or profit realized from the offense.

''(B) In cases involving lawful goods or lawful services that are sold or provided in an illegal manner, the term 'proceeds' means the amount of money acquired through the illegal transactions resulting in the forfeiture, less the direct costs incurred in providing the goods or services. The claimant shall have the burden of proof with respect to the issue of direct costs. The direct costs shall not include any part of the overhead expenses of the entity providing the goods or services, or any part of the income taxes paid by the entity.

''(C) In cases involving fraud in the process of obtaining a loan or extension of credit, the court shall allow the claimant a deduction from the forfeiture to the extent that the loan was repaid, or the debt was satisfied, without any financial loss to the victim.''.

SEC. 21. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as provided in section 14(c), this Act and the amendments made by this Act shall apply to any forfeiture proceeding commenced on or after the date that is 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) and the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 1658.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill represents the culmination of a 7-year effort to reform our Nation's civil asset forfeiture laws. We would not be here today without the momentum generated by the House's passage of H.R. 1658 last June by the overwhelming vote of 375–48. That vote was made possible by the tireless support of my colleagues, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary; the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BARR); and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK) and their staffs.

House passage was also made possible by the support of a multitude of organizations who put aside their differences to work toward a common goal: the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, Americans for Tax Reform, the American Civil Liberties Union, the National Rifle Association, the American Bar Association, the National Association of Realtors, the Credit Union National Association, the American Bankers Association, the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association, the National Association of Home Builders, the Boat Owners Association of the United States, United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Apartment Association, the American Hotel and Motel Association, and the Law Enforcement Alliance of America.

H.R. 1658 only got us through the House. Forfeiture reform would not have become a reality had the cause not been adopted by ORRIN HATCH, the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary; and PAT LEAHY, the committee's ranking member. I owe a debt of gratitude to the Senators and their staffs for succeeding in crafting a bill that could get through the Senate and yet retain all the necessary elements of reform.

I must thank Senators SESSIONS and SCHUMER and their staffs for negotiating in the utmost good faith in helping craft a bill that both reforms our forfeiture laws and yet leaves civil forfeitures as an important crime-fighting tool for Federal, State, and local law enforcement.

Similar thanks must go to Attorney General Reno and Assistant Attorney General Robert Raben. They can all be proud of what they helped to accomplish.

I also must thank our former colleague Bob Bauman and Brenda Grantland of Forfeiture Endangers American Rights for their long and dedicated work on behalf of forfeiture reform, and Chicago Tribune columnist Stephen Chapman for first alerting me to the great abuses of forfeiture laws.

And I must thank David Smith, who has been there since the beginning. David helped me draft my first forfeiture reform bill, the Civil Asset Forfeiture Reform Act of 1993, and helped draft Senators LEAHY's and HATCH's reform bill and helped draft the Senate-passed bill we are considering today. This bill is truly his accomplishment.

And finally, George Fishman of our Committee on the Judiciary staff has been tireless in helping shepherd this legislation through the House and Senate.

Let me briefly outline the main points of H.R. 1658 as passed by the Senate. The bill makes eight fundamental reforms:

(1) The bill requires the Government to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the property is subject to forfeiture. Currently, when a property owner goes to Federal court to challenge a seizure of property, all the Government needs to do is make an initial showing of probable cause that the property is subject to civil forfeiture. The owner then must establish that the property is innocent.

(2) The bill provides that if the Government's theory of forfeiture is that the property was used to commit or facilitate the commission of a crime or was involved in the commission of a crime, the Government must show that there was a substantial connection between the property and the crime.

(3) The bill provides that property can be released by a Federal court pending final disposition of a civil forfeiture case if continued possession by the Government would cause the property owner substantial hardship, such as preventing the functioning of a business or leaving an individual homeless, and the likely hardship outweighs the risks that the property will be destroyed, damaged, lost, concealed or transferred if returned to the owner.

(4) The bill provides that property owners who substantially prevail in court proceedings challenging the seizure of their property will receive reasonable attorney's fees. In addition, the bill allows a court to provide counsel for indigents if they are represented by appointed counsel in related criminal cases. Currently, property owners who successfully challenge the seizure of their property almost never are awarded attorney's fees. In addition, indigents have no right to appointed counsel in civil forfeiture cases.

(5) The bill eliminates the cost bond requirement, under which a property owner must now post a bond of the lesser of $5,000 or 10 percent of the value of the property seized merely for the right to contest a civil forfeiture in Federal court. The bill provides that if a court finds that a claimant's assertion of an interest in property was frivolous, the court may impose a civil fine.

(6) The bill creates a uniform innocent owner defense for all Federal civil forfeiture statutes. Importantly, the defense protects property owners who have given timely notice to the police of the illegal use of their property and have in a timely fashion revoked or made a good faith attempt to revoke permission to use the property from those engaging in the illegal conduct.

(7) The bill allows property owners to sue the Federal Government for compensation for damage to their property when they prevail in civil forfeiture actions. Currently, the Federal Government is exempt from liability for damage caused during the handling or storage of property being detained by law enforcement officers.

(8) The bill provides a uniform definition of the forfeitable proceeds of criminal acts. In cases involving illegal goods or services, unlawful activities and telemarketing and health care fraud schemes, proceeds are properties obtained directly or indirectly as a result of the commission of the offenses giving rise to forfeiture, and any properties traceable thereto, and are not limited to the net gain or profit realized from the offenses. In cases involving lawful goods or services that are sold or provided in an illegal manner, proceeds are money acquired through the illegal transactions less the direct costs incurred in providing the goods or services.

H.R. 1658 also contains a number of provisions addressing the needs of the Justice Department and State and local law enforcement.

These include increasing the availability of criminal forfeiture and the civil forfeiture of the proceeds of crimes, relaxing the statute of limitations governing civil forfeiture actions, allowing Federal courts discretionary use of the fugitive disentitlement doctrine, allowing Federal courts to enhance forfeiture judgments of foreign nations, allowing Federal courts to impose sanctions up to and including dismissal of an owner's claim if property owners who have filed claims in civil forfeiture cases refuse to provide the government with access to potentially material financial records in foreign countries, and allowing Federal courts to issue civil restraining orders against property where there is a substantial probability the government will prevail in civil forfeiture actions.

This bill is one we can all be proud of. It returns civil asset forfeiture to the ranks of respected law enforcement tools that can be used without risk to the civil liberties and property rights of American citizens. We are all better off that this is so.

Mr. Speaker, I insert into the RECORD at this point a Congressional Budget Office letter on this matter. I urge my colleagues to support this bill today.

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, April 5, 2000.

Hon. ORRIN G. HATCH,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for H.R. 1658, the Civil Asset Forfeiture Reform Act of 2000.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contacts are Lanette J. Keith (for federal costs), who can be reached at 226–2860, and Shelley Finlayson (for the state and local impact), who can be reached at 225–3220.

Sincerely,

BARRY B. ANDERSON
(For Dan L. Crippen, Director).

Enclosure.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

H.R. 1658—Civil Asset Forfeiture Reform Act of 2000

Summary: H.R. 1658 would make many changes to federal asset forfeiture laws that would affect the processing of about 60,000 civil seizures conducted each year by the Department of justice (DOJ) and the Department of the Treasury. (The Treasury Department makes an additional 50,000 seizures annually that would not be affected by this act.) Assuming appropriation of the necessary amounts, CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 1658 would cost $9 million over the 2001–2005 period to pay for additional costs of court-appointed counsel that would be authorized by this legislation. In addition, enacting the legislation would affect direct spending and receipts; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures would apply.

Because CBO expects that enacting H.R. 1658 would result in fewer civil seizures by DOJ and the Treasury Department, we estimate that governmental receipts (i.e., revenues) deposited into the Assets Forfeiture Fund and the Treasury Forfeiture Fund would decrease by about $115 million each year beginning in fiscal year 2001. Under current law, both forfeiture funds are authorized to collect revenue and spend the balance without further appropriation. Thus, the corresponding direct spending from the two funds would also decline, but with some lag. CBO estimates that enacting this provision would decrease projected surpluses by a total of $46 million over the fiscal years 2001 and 2002 (the difference between lower revenues and lower direct spending over those years), but that by fiscal year 2003 the changes in receipts and spending would be equal, resulting in no net budgetary impact thereafter.

H.R. 1658 also would require the Legal Services Corporation (LSC) to represent certain claimants in civil forfeiture cases and would require the federal government to reimburse the LSC for its costs. CBO estimates that this provision would increase direct spending by $5 million over the 2001–2005 period.

In addition, H.R. 1658 would make the federal government liable for any property damage, attorney fees, and pre-judgment and post-judgment interested payments on certain assets to prevailing parties in civil forfeiture proceedings. CBO cannot estimate either the likelihood or the magnitude of such awards because there is no basis for predicting either the outcome of possible litigation or the amount of compensation.

H.R. 1658 contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA), but CBO expects that enacting this legislation would lead to a reduction in payments to state and local governments from the Assets Forfeiture Fund and the Treasury Forfeiture Fund.

Description of the Act's major provisions: H.R. 1658 would make various changes to federal laws relating to the forfeiture of civil assets. In particular, the act would:

Establish a short statutory time limit for the federal government to notify interested parties of a seizure and to file a complaint;

Eliminate the cost bond requirement, whereby claimants have to post bond in an amount of the lesser of $5,000 or 10 percent of the value of the seized property (but not less than $250) to preserve the right to contest a forfeiture;

Permit federal courts to appoint counsel for certain indigent claimants;

Increase the federal government's burden of proof to a preponderance of the evidence;

Require the federal government to compensate prevailing claimants for property damage;

Establish the federal government's liability for payment of attorney fees and pre-judgment and post-judgment interest; and Authorize the use of forfeited funds to pay restitution to crime victims.

Estimated cost to the Federal Government: As shown in the following table, CBO estimates that implementing H.R. 1658 would increase discretionary spending for court-appointed counsel by $9 million over the 2001–2005 period, assuming appropriation of the necessary funds. (For the purposes of this estimate. CBO assumes that spending for this purpose would be funded with appropriated amounts from the Defender Services account.) In addition, we estimate that over the 2001–2005 period, the reductions in direct spending of funds from forfeited assets would be smaller than the reductions in revenues estimated to occur as a result of enacting H.R. 1658, resulting in a net cost of $46 over the five-year period. Finally, CBO estimates that additional payments to the Legal Services Corporation would be about $1 million each year. The costs of this legislation fall within budget function 750 (administration of justice).

[1] The 2000 level is the amount appropriated for that year. The estimated authorization levels for 2001 through 2005 reflect CBO baseline estimates, assuming adjustments for anticipated inflation.

Basis of estimate: For purposes of this estimate, CBO assumes that H.R. 1658 will be enacted by the end of fiscal year 2000 and that the necessary amounts will be appropriated for each fiscal year. We also assume that outlays for defender services and the use of forfeiture receipts will continue to follow historical patterns.

Spending subject to appropriation

H.R. 1658 would allow for court-appointed counsel for certain parties contesting a forfeiture who already have been appointed counsel in a related criminal case. The act also would eliminate the requirement that claimants post bond before the case is tried in federal court. Consequently, CBO anticipates that enacting H.R. 1658 would make it easier for people whose assets have been seized to challenge the forfeiture of such assets. Based on information from DOJ, we estimate that the percentage of seizures that would result in contested civil cases would increase from 5 percent annually to at least 20 percent in fiscal year 2001. As the defense bar becomes increasingly aware of and more familiar with the provisions of H.R. 1658, CBO expects that the percentage of contested civil cases would increase to about 30 percent each year.

While the decision to appoint counsel would be at the discretion of the judge assigned to each case, CBO expects that judges would not want to encourage litigation in many cases. Moreover, CBO expects that many of the contested cases would involve larger assets, and such cases usually do not involve indigent claimants who would need court-appointed counsel. Based on information from DOJ, CBO estimates that a small number of indigent claimants in civil forfeiture cases would also have a criminal case pending. Specifically, we estimate that court-appointed counsel would be provided in about 5 percent of contested civil cases. In addition, because forfeiture cases involve property, the courts might have to appoint more than one attorney to represent multiple claimants in the same case. Historical data suggest an average of 1.5 claims per case.

While H.R. 1658 does not specify a level of compensation paid to court-appointed counsel for a civil forfeiture case, CBO expects such payment would be equivalent to amounts paid in criminal cases. Based on information from the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, CBO estimates that court-appointed counsel would be paid about $3,000 per claimant per case. In total, we estimate that additional defender services related to civil asset forfeiture proceedings would cost about $9 million over the next five years.

In addition, other discretionary spending could be affected by this act. On the one hand, the federal court system could require additional resources in the future if additional cases are brought to trial and the amount of time spent on each case increases. On the other hand, some savings in law enforcement resources could be realized if fewer seizures and conducted each year. While CBO cannot predict the amount of any such costs or savings, we expect that, on balance, implementing the act would result in no significant additional discretionary spending other than the increases for court-appointed counsel.

Revenues and direct spending

Based on information from DOJ and the Treasury Department, CBO estimates that about 23,000 seizures that would otherwise occur each year under current law would be eliminated under H.R. 1658. (Such seizures primarily involve assets whose value is less than $25,000.) The various changes to civil forfeiture laws under this act would make proving cases more difficult and more time-consuming for the federal government. In many instances, law enforcement agencies, including the state and local agencies that work on investigations jointly with the federal government and then receive a portion of the receipts generated from the forfeitures, many determine that certain cases, especially those with a value less than $25,000, may no longer be cost-effective to pursue. While the federal government and other law enforcement agencies would take a few years following enactment of the legislation to realize the full effects of its provisions on the forfeiture and claims process, CBO expects that the total number of seizures would decrease by nearly 40 percent. CBO estimates that such a reduction in seizures would reduce total forfeiture receipts by about $115 million in fiscal year 2001 and by $575 million over the 2001–2005 period.

The receipts deposited into the Assets Forfeiture Fund and the Treasury Forfeiture fund are used to pay for all costs associated with the operation of the forfeiture program, the payment of equitable shares of proceeds to foreign, state, and local law enforcement agencies, and other expenses not directly associated with a forfeiture case, such as payment of awards to informants. In recent years about 67 percent of total asset forfeiture receipts collected in a given year are spent in the same year in which they are collected; therefore, we estimate that enacting H.R. 1658 would result in a decrease in federal spending of $76 million in fiscal year 2001, $108 million in 2001, and $115 million annually in subsequent years.

In addition, H.R. 1658 would require the Legal Service Corporation to represent claimants in financial need and whose claim involves an asset that is the claimant's primary residence. Under H.R. 1658, the court must enter a judgment in favor of the LSC for the cost of legal representation. Based on historical data, CBO estimates that such judgments would increase direct spending by about $1 million a year.

Additional potential budgetary impacts

In addition, this act would make the federal government liable for any property damage, attorney fees, and pre-judgment and post-judgment interest payments on certain assets to prevailing parties in civil forfeiture proceedings. However, CBO cannot estimate either the likelihood or the magnitude of such awards because there is no basis for predicting either the outcome of possible litigation or the amount of compensation. Compensation payments could come from appropriated funds or occur without further appropriation from the Judgment Fund, or from both sources.

Pay-as-you-go considerations: The Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act sets up pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or receipts. The following table summarizes the estimated pay-as-you-go effects of H.R. 1658. For the purposes of enforcing pay-as-you-go procedures, only the effects in the current year, the budget year, and the succeeding four years are counted.

	By Fiscal Year, in Millions of Dollars
	200	201	202	203	204	205	206	207	208	209	2010
Changes in outlays	0	−75	−107	−114	−114	−114	−114	−114	−114	−114	−114
Changes in receipts	0	−115	−115	−115	−115	−115	−115	−115	−115	−115	−115

Estimated impact on state, local, and tribal governments: H.R. 1658 contains no intergovernmental mandates as defined in UMRA. However, because CBO expects that the seizure of assets would decline under the act, CBO estimates that payments to state and local law enforcement agencies from the Assets Forfeiture Fund and the Treasury Forfeiture Fund would decline by about $230 million over the 2001–2005 period. State and local law enforcement agencies receive, on average, about 40 percent of the receipts in these forfeiture funds either because they participate in joint investigations that result in the seizure of assets, or because they turn over assets seized in their own investigations to the federal government, which conducts the civil asset forfeiture case. In both cases the receipts from a seizure are accumulated in the funds and a portion is distributed to state and local agencies according to their involvement.

Estimated impact on the private sector: This act would impose no new private-sector mandates as defined in UMRA.

Previous CBO transmitted a cost estimate for H.R. 1658 as reported by the House Committee on the Judiciary on June 18, 1999. While the two versions of the legislation are similar, we estimate they would have different costs. CBO estimates the House version would result in a greater loss of forfeiture receipts, by $25 million annually, than the version approved by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary because the House version would place the burden of proof in assets forfeiture cases more heavily on the federal government.

In addition, the House version of H.R. 1658 would not require payments to the Legal Services Corporation for representation of certain claimants whose principal residence has been seized. Finally, CBO estimates that the Senate version of the legislation would authorize less spending than the House version for the legal representation of indigent claimants because it restricts the eligibility requirements for this service more than the House legislation. We estimate this representation would cost about $2 million annually under the Senate version and about $13 million annually under the House version.

Mr. Speaker, since no Committee Report was filed for H.R. 1658 by the Senate Judiciary Committee, the House Judiciary Committee Report remains the best legislative history as to the bill. See H.R. Rep. No. 106–192 (1999). However, since new provisions were added to the bill in the Senate and other provisions were modified from their original House form, it will be useful for me to make a number of clarifying points.

STANDARD OF PROOF (SECTION 2—CREATING 18 U.S.C. SEC. 983(C))

H.R. 1658, as amended by the Senate, reduced the standard of proof the government has to meet in civil asset forfeiture cases from clear and convincing evidence to a preponderance of the evidence. While this is obviously a lower standard, Congress remains extremely dubious as to the probative value of certain types of evidence in meeting this standard.

First, as noted in the Committee Report to H.R. 1658, Congress is very skeptical that a person's carrying of "unreasonably large" quantities of cash is indicative of involvement in the drug trade. See H.R. Rep. No. 106–192 at 8. Many federal courts have ruled that a person's carrying of large amounts of cash does not even meet the current government burden of probable cause. The Seventh Circuit so ruled in U.S. v. $506,231 in U.S. Currency, 125 F. 3d 442 (7th Cir. 1997). The court found that "[a]s far as we can tell, no court in the nation has yet held that, standing alone, the mere existence of currency, even a lot of it, is illegal. We are certainly not willing to be the first to so hold." Id. at 452. The court also found it necessary to remind a U.S. Attorney that "the government may not seize money, even half a million dollars, based on its bare assumption that most people do not have huge sums of money lying about, and if they do, they must be involved in narcotics trafficking or some other sinister activity." Id. at 454 (emphasis in original). The Ninth Circuit found similarly. See U.S. v. $191,910 in U.S. Currency, 16 F.3d 1051, 1072 (9th Cir. 1994) ("[A]ny amount of money, standing alone, would probably be insufficient to establish probable cause for forfeiture."); See also U.S. v. One Lot of U.S. Currency ($36,634), 103 F.3d 1048, 1055 n.9 (1st Cir. 1997); U.S. v. $121,100, 999 F.2d 1503, 1507 (11th Cir. 1993). Congress disagrees with those courts that have suggested otherwise. See U.S. v. $37,780 in U.S. Currency, 920 F.2d 159, 162 (2nd Cir. 1990). Clearly, if large amounts of cash do not meet the probable cause standard, they do not meet the higher standard of preponderance of the evidence.

The government can rely on large amounts of cash in conjunction with other evidence in attempting to meet its standard of proof. For instance, large amounts of cash found in proximity to drugs are often relied upon. However, the probative value of this evidence is much lower when the amount of drugs found is consistent with personal use. See U.S. v. Real Property Located at 110 Collier Dr., 793 F. Supp. 1048, 1052 (N.D. Ala. 1992) ("The simultaneous presence of $8,861 in mildewed currency and a small amount of drugs for personal use . . . does not establish probable cause that the currency was intended to be used for the exchange of drugs.")

In any event, the relative evidentiary contribution of cash in meeting a standard of proof, especially one raised above mere probable cause, should rarely be significant. Why? As the court found in U.S. v. One Lot of U.S. Currency Totalling $14,665, 33 F. Supp.2d 47 (D. Mass. 1998), reliance on cash can involve invidious assumptions: "[m]any immigrants and Americans with limited means—hard working and law abiding—prefer to use cash in lieu of bank accounts and credit cards. * * * Indeed, the whole notion that carrying cash is indicative of illegal conduct reflects class and cultural biases that are profoundly troubling." Id. at 53–54.

Of especially little probative value is the method by which cash is carried. As the court found in One Lot of U.S. Currency Totalling $14,665:

I do not doubt that drug couriers and dealers use rubber bands to bundle their illgotten gains. However, drug dealers also presumably use belts to hold up their trousers; under the government's analysis, if [the claimant] was wearing a belt at the time of the seizure, it would suggest his involvement with illegal activity. Although many courts appear to disagree, I find that the government's 'rubber band' hypothesis doesn't stretch quite that far.

Id. at 54 (footnotes omitted). See also $506,231 in U.S. Currency, 125 F.3d at 452.

The second type of evidence whose probative value is questioned by Congress is the fact that airline tickets are purchased with cash. See H.R. Rep. No. 106–192 at 8. See also One Lot of U.S. Currency ($36,634), 103 F.3d at 1055 n. 9. U.S. v. $40,000 in U.S. Currency, 999 F. Supp. 234, 238 (D.P.R. 1998); U.S. v. Funds in the Amount of $9,800, 952 F. Supp. 1254, 1261 (N.D. Ill. 1996).

The third type of disfavored evidence is narcotic dog alerts on currency. As one commentator has noted:

It has been estimated that one out of every three circulating bills has been involved in a cocaine transaction. Cocaine and other drugs attach to the oily surface of currency in a variety of ways. Each contaminated bill contaminates others as they pass through cash registers, cash drawers, wallets, and counting machines. If, in fact, a substantial part of the currency in this country will cause a trained dog to alert, then the alert obviously has no evidentiary value.

Smith, 1 Prosecution and Defense of Forfeiture Cases sec. 4.03, p. 4–82.3 (footnotes omitted). The author cites experts finding that 70–97% of all currency is contaminated with cocaine. Id. at sec. 4.03, p. 4–82.1–4–82.2.

Many federal courts have agreed as to the low probative value of dog alerts. See, e.g., $506,231 in U.S. Currency, 125 F.3d at 453; Muhammed v. Drug Enforcement Agency, 92 F.3d 648, 653 (8th Cir. 1996)("The fact of contamination, alone, is virtually meaningless and gives no hint of when or how the cash became so contaminated."); U.S. v. $5,000 in U.S. Currency, 40 F.3d 846, 849 (6th Cir. 1994) ("[T]he evidentiary value of narcotics dog's alert [is] minimal.") (footnote omitted); U.S. v. U.S. Currency, $30,060, 39 F.3d 1039 (9th Cir. 1994) ("'[T]he continued reliance of courts and law enforcement officers on [drug dog alerts] to separate 'legitimate' currency from 'drug-connected' currency is logically indefensible.'" Id. at 1043, quoting Jones v. U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration, 819 F. Supp. 698, 721 (M.D. Tenn. 1993) (footnote omitted)); U.S. v. $53,082 in U.S. Currency, 985 F.2d 245 (6th Cir. 1993) ("[A] court should 'seriously question the value of a dog's alert without other persuasive evidence. . . .'" Id. at 250–51 n.5, quoting U.S. v. $80,760 in U.S. Currency, 781 F. Supp. 462, 476 (N.D. Tex. 1991), aff'd, 978 F.2d 709 (5th Cir. 1992); One Lot of U.S. Currency Totalling $14,665, 33 F. Supp.2d at 58. See also U.S. v. $639,558 in U.S. Currency, 955 F.2d 712, 714 n.2 (D.C. Cir. 1992). Dog alerts of little value in meeting a standard of probable cause, and are of even less value in meeting a standard of preponderance of the evidence.

Adding the above factors together, "[t]he government must come forward with more than a 'drug-courier profile' and a positive dog sniff [to meet the standard of probable cause]." Funds in the Amount of $9,800, 952 F. Supp. at 1261." As the court ruled in $80,760 in U.S. Currency, 781 F. Supp. at 475, "[p]rofile characteristics are of little value in the forfeiture context without other persuasive evidence establishing the requisite substantial connection." See also Jones, 819 F. Supp. at 719 ("The mere fact that a traveler matches some elements of a drug courier profile does not amount to even articulable suspicion, much less probable cause."). The same holds true, to an even greater extent, when the standard is preponderance of the evidence.

Lastly, "[a]n owner does not have to prove where he obtained money until the government demonstrates that it has [met its burden] to believe the money is forfeitable." $506,231 in U.S. Currency, 125 F.3d at 454.

I should also note that while hearsay may be used to establish probable cause for seizure, see U.S. v. One 56 Foot Motor Yacht Named Tahuna, 702 F.2d 1276, 1282–83 (9th Cir. 1983), it is not admissible to establish the forfeitability of property by a preponderance of the evidence. And, while the government may use evidence obtained after the forfeiture complaint is filed to establish the forfeitability of the property by a preponderance of the evidence, the government must still have had enough evidence to establish probable cause at the time of filing (or seizure, if earlier). The bill is not intended to limit the right of either party to bring a motion for summary judgment after the filing of the complaint pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(a) or 56(b).

FACILITATING PROPERTY (SECTION 2—CREATING 18 U.S.C. SEC. 983(C))

While H.R. 1658 as it was introduced and originally passed in the House contained no provision reforming the standards regarding "facilitation" forfeiture, this is an issue about which I have been long concerned. See Hyde, Forfeiting Our Property Rights: Is Your Property Safe From Seizure? 61 (1995) I am gratified that it is addressed in the Senate amendment to H.R. 1658.

There are many facilitation-type civil forfeiture provisions in the U.S. Code. Most importantly, the federal drug laws make subject to civil forfeiture "[a]ll conveyances . . . which are used, or intended for use . . . in any manner to facilitate the transportation, sale, receipt, possession, or concealment of [controlled substances] . . . ." 21 U.S.C. sec. 881(a)(4). They also make subject to forfeiture "[a]ll moneys, negotiable instruments, and securities used or intended to be used to facilitate any violation of this subchapter . . . .", 21 U.S.C. sec. 881(a)(6), and "[a]ll real property . . . which is used, or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to . . . facilitate the commission of a violation of this subchapter punishable by more than one year's imprisonment . . . [,]" 21 U.S.C. sec. 881(a)(7). Also, federal law make subject to civil forfeiture "[a]ny property, real or personal, involved in a transaction or attempted transaction in violation of [certain money laundering laws] . . . ." 18 U.S.C. sec. 981(a)(1)(A).

How strong need the connection be between the "facilitating" property and the underlying crime? As to 881(a)(6), courts have interpreted its legislative history as requiring there to be a "substantial connection" between the property and the crime. See Psychotropic Substances Act of 1978, Joint Explanatory Statements of Titles II and III, 95th Cong., 2nd Sess., reprinted in 1978 U.S. Code Cong. & Admin News 9518, 9522.

As to 881(a)(7), many courts require there to be a substantial connection. See, e.g., U.S. v. Parcel of Land & Residence at 28 Emery St., 914 F.2d 1, 3–4 (1st Cir. 1990); U.S. v. 26.075 Acres, Located in Swift Creek Township, 687 F. Supp. 1005 (E.D.N.C. 1988), aff'd sub nom. U.S. v. Santoro, 866 F.2d 1538, 1542 (4th Cir. 1989); U.S. v. Forfeiture, Stop Six Center, 781 F. Supp. 1200, 1205–06 (N.D. Tex. 1991). Others do not. The Seventh Circuit has ruled that the facilitating property need only have "more than an incidental or fortuitous connection to criminal activity . . . ." U.S. v. Real Estate Known as 916 Douglas Ave., 903 F.2d 490, 493 (7th Cir. 1990), cert. denied sub nom. Born v. U.S. 498 U.S. 1126 (1991). See also U.S. v. Property at 4492 S. Livonia Rd., 889 F.2d 1258, 1269 (2nd Cir. 1989) (test is "sufficient nexus").

How significant is the difference? The Seventh Circuit in 916 Douglas Ave. has found that "[t]he difference between th[e substantial connection] approach and our own appears largely to be semantic rather than practical." 903 F.2d at 494. This might be the case—the Fourth Circuit has ruled that under the substantial connection test, "[a]t minimum, the property must have more than an incidental or fortuitous connection to criminal activity[!]" U.S. v. Schifferli, 895 F.2d 987, 990 (4th Cir. 1990). Some courts don't even feel the need to choose between the tests, ruling that facilitation has been shown in particular cases under either test. See U.S. v. Rd 1, Box 1, Thompsontown, 952 F.2d 53, 57 (3rd Cir. 1991); U.S. v. Real Property and Residence at 3097 S.W. 111th Ave., 921 F.2d 1551, 1556 (11th Cir. 1991), cert. denied, 111 S.Ct. 1090 (1991).

As to 881(a)(4), some courts have applied the substantial connection test. See U.S. v. 1966 Beechcraft Aircraft, 777 F.2d 947, 953 (4th Cir. 1985); U.S. v. One 1979 Porsche Coupe, 709 F.2d 1424, 1426 (11th Cir. 1983). Others have not. See U.S. v. 1964 Beechcraft Baron Aircraft, 691 F.2d 725, 727 (5th Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 914 (1983).

H.R. 1658 provides that the substantial connection test should be used whenever facilitating property is subject to civil forfeiture under the U.S. Code. And the test is intended to mean something, it is intended to require that facilitating property have a connection to the underlying crime significantly greater than just "incidental or fortuitous."

In one area in particular, courts have been much too liberal in finding facilitation. An especially high standard should have to be met before we dispossess a person or family of their home. A primary residence should be accorded far greater protection than mere personal property. See U.S. v. Certain Lots in Virginia Beach, 657 F. Supp. 1062, 1065 (E.D. Va. 1987). But, courts have not always felt this way in applying section 881(a)(7). In U.S. v. Premises and Real Property at 250 Kreag Rd., 739 F. Supp. 120, 124 (W.D.N.Y. 1990), the court found a home forfeitable because the owner grew 17 stalks of marijuana in his backyard of home for personal use (standard used was unclear). See also U.S. v. One Parcel of Real Property, 960 F.2d 200, 205 (1st Cir. 1992). The court in 916 Douglas Ave. found a home forfeitable on the basis of three phone calls made to or from it regarding the sale of two ounces of cocaine. "The loss of one's home for the sale of a small amount of cocaine is undoubtedly a harsh penalty", but that is what Congress intended. 903 F.2d at 494 (no substantial connection needed). In U.S. v. Plescia, 48 F.3d 1452, 1462 (7th Cir. 1995), one phone call to set up a large drug deal resulted in the forfeiture of a home (no substantial connection needed). See also U.S. v. Zuniga, 835 F. Supp. 622 (M.D. Fla. 1993) (Under a "substantial connection" or lesser test, ten calls involving drug offenses resulted in the forfeiture of a house (under a criminal forfeiture statute with an "identical" burden as 881(a)(7)).). None of these cases would meet the substantial connection test provided in H.R. 1658.

Under the substantial connection test, should an entire bank account be forfeitable because some of its assets were involved in money laundering? In U.S. v. All Monies ($477,048.62 in account #90–3617–3, 754 F. Supp. 1467 (D.Haw. 1991), the court ruled that under sec. 881(a)(6) and 18 U.S.C. sec. 981(a)(1)(A), the government showed probable cause that an entire bank account worth approximately $477,000 was forfeitable for being involved in/facilitated drug and money laundering offenses, not just the approximately $242,000 in the account representing the proceeds of a drug crime. The court found that "both the legitimate and tainted money in the account aided [the laundering of drug proceeds]. The account provided a repository for the drug proceeds in which the legitimate money could provide a 'cover' for those proceeds, thus making it more difficult to trace the proceeds." Id. at 1475–76 (substantial connection required).

Such a doctrine can quickly lead to unfair and disproportionate results. The 10th Circuit presents the proper limitation:

> [T]he mere pooling or commingling of tainted and untainted funds in an account does not, without more, render the entire contents of the account subject to forfeiture. . . . [F]orfeiture of legitimate and illegitimate funds commingled in an account is proper as long as the government demonstrates that the . . . [owner] pooled the funds to facilitate, i.e., disguise the nature and source of, his scheme. * * *

U.S. v. Bornfield, 145 F.3d 1123, 1135 (10th Cir. 1998) (criminal forfeiture under 18 U.S.C. sec. 982(a)(1)) (citations omitted) (standard used was unclear). See also U.S. v. Contents of Account, 847 F. Supp. 329, 335 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) ("The facilitation theory is appropriate in the present case where [the owner] established and controlled the [accounts], and commingled legitimate and illegitimate funds in these accounts, for the purpose of disguising the nature and source of the proceeds of [the] scheme.") (forfeiture under 18 U.S.C. sec. 981(a)(1)(A)) (standard used was unclear).

Under H.R. 1658's substantial connection test, in order for an entire bank account composed of both tainted and untainted funds to be forfeitable, a primary purpose of its establishment or maintenance must be to disguise a money laundering scheme. This rule should also apply when the government seeks to forfeit an entire business because tainted funds were laundered in a firm bank account. For the business to be forfeitable, a primary purpose for the establishment or maintenance of the entire business must be to disguise a money laundering scheme. See U.S. v. Any and All Assets of Shane Co., 816 F. Supp. 389, 401 (M.D.N.C. 1991) (Business that was a front for money laundering was forfeitable.) (forfeiture under 18 U.S.C. sec. 981(a)(1)(A) (substantial connection required).

PROPORTIONALITY (SECTION 2—CREATING 18 U.S.C. SEC. 983(G))

This provision is designed to codify U.S. v. Bajakajian 524 U.S. 321 (1998).

STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS (SECTION 11)

This provision amends 19 U.S.C. sec. 1621, enlarging the time in which the government may commence a civil forfeiture action by allowing the government to commence an action within five years after the time the alleged offense was discovered, or two years after the time when the involvement of the property in an offense is discovered, whichever is later. 19 U.S.C. sec. 1621 has been construed as requiring the government to exercise reasonable care and diligence in seeking to learn the facts disclosing the alleged wrong. Thus, the courts have held under sec. 1621 that the time begins to run as soon as the government is aware of facts that should trigger an investigation leading to discovery of the offense. See Smith, 1 Prosecution and Defense of Forfeiture Cases sec. 12.02. This construction will require the government to exercise reasonable diligence in seeking discovery of assets involved in an offense once the offense is discovered.

The provision should not be read as extending the statute of limitations in cases that are already time-barred as of the date of enactment of the bill.

UNIFORM DEFINITION OF PROCEEDS (SECTION 20)

S. 1931's uniform definition of proceeds is self-explanatory. However, it is important to note Congress' disapproval of the "ink drop" test for proceeds forfeiture developed by the Eleventh Circuit. In U.S. v. One Single Family Residence, 933 F.2d 976, 981 (11th Cir. 1991) (proceeds forfeiture under 21 U.S.C. sec. 881(a)(6)), the court ruled that "[a]s to a wrongdoer, any amount of the invested proceeds traceable to drug activities forfeits the entire property. We have never held that as to a wrongdoer only the funds traceable to illegal activities may be forfeited." To the contrary, only that portion of a piece of property purchased with tainted funds is forfeitable.

DESTRUCTION OR REMOVAL OF PROPERTY (SECTION 12)

18 U.S.C. sec. 2232 is amended to expand the scope of conduct which constitutes an offense for damaging or removing property which is subject to a lawful search or seizure. Subsection (a), which makes it a crime to damage or remove property which has not yet been seized, should be interpreted in a commonsense fashion to apply to a person or persons who had knowledge that a law enforcement agency is attempting, has attempted, or was about to attempt to seize the property. Subsection (b), which has been added to this section, makes it an offense to remove or destroy property which is already the subject of the in rem jurisdiction of a United States District Court.

EFFECTIVE DATE (SECTION 21)

For purposes of the effective date provision, the date on which a forfeiture proceeding is commenced is the date on which the first administrative notice of forfeiture relating to the seized property is sent. The purpose of this provision is to give the Justice Department and the U.S. courts four months from the date of enactment of the bill to educate their employees as to the bill's changes in forfeiture law.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation has been long in coming. I know on behalf of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), we want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) because this is legislation that the gentleman from Illinois has worked on extensively and without rest. The gentleman from Illinois has worked in a bipartisan manner. He has those of us who have had disagreements sometimes rally around this legislation because in every single one of our districts we found someone's mother, someone's wife, someone's sister, some innocent person who has been law abiding but because we are part of a great family, have found some family member outside of the law who has brought down the heavy hand of the law on hardworking people who have retained, if you will, or worked hard for the properties that they have.

I want to pay tribute to the gentleman; and I know the gentleman from Michigan would because, as I just heard a few moments ago, this is truly a bipartisan bill. I want to distinguish the fact that this is on the suspension calendar because we have had some vigorous debates here just earlier this morning about the process of suspensions bypassing committee, and I would not want this legislation to be defined accordingly.

This bill has been worked and worked and worked and your staff, George, we thank you, we know you have been on the battle line working hard to make sure that this comes together. I want to acknowledge Perry Apelbaum and Cori Flam likewise and say that we rise in support of this legislation, a bipartisan bill that is a result of extensive negotiations and deliberations with our colleagues in the Senate, Senators HATCH, LEAHY, SESSIONS and SCHUMER as well as the Department of Justice. I might do a slight editorial note and say that out of the bipartisan effort, the bill from the House may not be the exact same and I might have wanted the bill from the House maybe because I am a House Member but we are gratified that we finally resolved it and it has come back for a vote.

Mr. Speaker, the Civil Asset Forfeiture Reform Act makes common sense changes to our civil asset forfeiture laws to make these procedures fair and more equitable. H.R. 1658 strikes the right balance between the needs of law enforcement and the right of individuals to not have their property forfeited without proper safeguards. I recall that we actually had hearings on this, and I recall some of the really horrific stories of individuals losing their only house, their only source of income because of this law.

Would you believe that under current law, the government can confiscate an individual's private property on the mere showing of probable cause? That is under current law. Then even though that person has never been arrested, much less convicted of a crime, the government requires a person to file action in a Federal court to prove that the property is not subject to forfeiture just to get the property back. Well, that is true.

We can imagine that the gentleman from Michigan enthusiastically embraced and worked with the gentleman from Illinois on this legislation. There is no question that forfeiture laws can, as Congress intended, serve legitimate law enforcement purposes. My own police department, a simple and small example, promotes and utilizes or has utilized civil forfeiture laws as relates to drug intervention and drug crimes. But they are currently susceptible to abuse. That is why the bill makes reforms to the current civil forfeiture regimen.

To highlight a few examples, the bill places the burden of proof where it belongs, with the government agency that performed the seizure, and it protects individuals from the difficult task of proving a negative, in other words, proving that their property was not subject to forfeiture. H.R. 1658 also permits the awarding of attorney's fees if the claimant substantially prevails, creates an innocent owner defense and permits a court to provisionally return property to a claimant on a showing of substantial hardship where, for example, the forfeiture crippled the functioning of a business, prevented an individual from working or left an individual homeless. Is that not justice for Americans? These reforms simply balance the scales so that innocent people have a level playing field on which to challenge improper seizures.

H.R. 1658 also makes certain changes to help law enforcement crack down on criminal activities. For example, the bill permits courts to enter restraining orders to secure the availability of the property subject to civil forfeiture, and it clarifies that the law prohibiting the removal or destruction of property to avoid prosecution applies to seizures as well as forfeitures.

As I see the ranking member on the floor of the House, I know that he will have much to say about this bipartisan effort. But I am hoping that this bill, although it appears on the suspension calendar, will evidence the hard work that we have done collectively on the Committee on the Judiciary on this very issue. I thank both the chairman and the ranking member for their efforts. I am very proud to support this bill today personally and to ask my colleagues to join us in supporting this important legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I am in support of this bill which calls for civil asset forfeiture reform. This is a good bipartisan bill which now shifts the burden of proof to the government to prove by clear and convincing evidence when seizing property and permits the appointment of counsel for indigent claimants while protecting innocent owners.

Unlike criminal forfeiture, civil forfeiture requires no due process before a property owner is required to surrender their property.

Studies suggest that minorities are acutely affected by civil asset forfeitures. As we are well aware by now, racial profiling by the police has alarmingly increased the number of cases of minorities involved in traffic stops, airport searches and drug arrests. These cases afford the government, sometimes justifiably, with the opportunity to seize property. Since 1985, the justice department's asset forfeiture fund increased from $27 million to $338 million.

Since a deprivation of liberty is not implicated in a civil forfeiture, the government is not bound by the constitutional safeguards of criminal prosecution. The government needs only show probable cause that the property is subject to forfeiture. The burden shifts to property owner to prove that the property is not subject to forfeiture.

The property owner may exhaust his or her financial assets in attorney's fees to fight for the return of property. If the financial burden of attorney's fees is not rushing enough, the owner has to post a bond worth 10 percent of the value of the property, before contesting the forfeiture. Independent owners are not entitled to legal counsel.

Interestingly enough, persons charged in criminal cases are entitled to a hearing in court and the assistance of counsel. The government need not charge a property owner with a crime when seizing property under civil laws. The result is that an innocent person, or a person not charged with a crime, has fewer rights than the accused criminal. This anomaly must end.

Reform of civil asset forfeiture laws is long overdue. I urge you to support this bill to ensure that innocent owners are provided some measure of due process before their property is seized.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BARR).

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding me this time. I would like to commend the gentleman from Illinois for his tremendous work over many years' time on reforming Federal asset forfeiture laws which, as we all know, are an important tool for Federal law enforcement and indirectly for local law enforcement which frequently because of their participation in cases resulting in seized assets participate in the disposition of those seized assets once they are forfeited.

Many of us, including myself as a former United States attorney, while having tremendous regard and respect for our civil asset forfeiture laws and what an important tool they are for law enforcement also recognize they are subject to abuse and have been abused. This legislation on which the gentleman from Illinois has been working for many years and which will be one of the most important hallmarks of his tenure as both chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and his long and distinguished service as a Member of the House of Representatives will go a long way towards bringing back into balance a system that has become sorely out of balance. I commend the gentleman for his work, and I commend both sides of the aisle for bringing this forward in a bipartisan manner. I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I also rise today with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to discuss the intent of section 983(a)(2)(C)(ii) which states, ''A claim shall state the claimant's interest in such property and provide customary documentary evidence of such interest if available and state that the claim is not frivolous.''

Mr. Speaker, I interpret this language to require only prima facie evidence to establish such an interest. I assume the gentleman from Illinois concurs with my representation but would like for the record to clarify what type of documentation would be necessary to establish this interest in the seized property, sufficient to make a claim under this legislation.

This documentary evidence should be fairly easy to obtain while still establishing the claimant has a legitimate, nonfrivolous interest in such property. This interest can be established by documents including but not limited to a copy of an automobile title, a loan statement for a home, or a note from a bank for a monetary account. For property such as cash in which no documentary evidence is normally available, this provision would be loosely applied and there would be an assumption of the claimant's interest in such property by simply making a claim and asserting its nonfrivolous nature.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for bringing this issue to the attention of the House. The gentleman's explanation is accurate and reflects the intent of the legislation. There was a need for such an explanation and I appreciate the gentleman from Georgia's clarification of this issue.

Mr. BARR of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for engaging in the colloquy.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds. I want to thank the gentlewoman from Texas for her very cordial remarks. I want to particularly thank the gentleman from Michigan and his staff and make a point. This Committee on the Judiciary in this House of Representatives can work together in a bipartisan fashion to turn out good legislation. This is one example. There are many others. This bill had its genesis in a newspaper article written by Steve Chapman of the Chicago Tribune several years ago. When I read what was going on under civil asset forfeiture, I thought it was more appropriate for the Soviet Union than the United States, and it has taken 7 years but we are there today and it is a great moment.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY).

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I want to say, a year ago I rose on this floor with my colleagues the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HUTCHINSON) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER) in opposition to this bill. I come today in support of this particular provision. I rose in opposition a year ago because I was concerned about the effects on criminal justice and specifically the effects on law enforcement, but I have to point out that the chairman and the Committee on the Judiciary, as has been noted, in a bipartisan manner has done a tremendous job to ease those concerns.

They have provided us great improvements on the bill. The compromise provides important procedural protections to law-abiding property owners without compromising law enforcement's ability to shut down criminal enterprises. Specifically the bill shifts the burden of proof in forfeiture cases from property owners to the government with the appropriate threshold of a preponderance of the evidence.

The compromise also limits the appointment of court-appointed lawyers to indigent claimants whose primary residence is subject to forfeiture. I want to say that there is one concern that I have and I think a couple of my colleagues have as well as it relates to this legislation, and, that is, that we have a continuing reservation that the removal of the cost bond requirement could impair the asset forfeiture program in the future.

We know that the Justice Department is already overwhelmed with challenges to asset seizures, and I am fearful that the removal of the cost bond could further paralyze that effort. But let me say this, I hope to and I know my colleagues who stood with me a year ago hope to work with the chairman and the committee to oversee the implementation of cost bond provisions requiring up-front certification and posthearing penalties and ensure that my fears do not become a reality for law enforcement. But overall, Mr. Speaker, this is a victory for the American people. I want to salute the Committee on the Judiciary and its great chairman. I urge support for this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Without objection, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) will control the time previously granted to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

There was no objection.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

I would like to begin by pointing out that the chairman of this committee and I have worked together on this measure for at least a couple of Congresses. I have been working on it, also, unbeknownst to the gentleman from Illinois in the Committee on Government Reform. I think we have come quite a long way. The bill retains the core of some of the main reforms that was in Hyde-Conyers.

We have adopted the Senate version. But the shifting of the burden of proof is very important. The appointment of counsel is a critical improvement. The return of property in case of substantial hardship is very important. And the innocent owner defense is now strong in the bill. The claim for property damages while in the government's custody is a valid concern. And an award of interest. The bill allows prejudgment interest to be awarded when cash is improperly seized by the government. And we eliminate the cost of bond which would be a part of the current requirement that a claimant challenging a civil asset forfeiture file a cost of bond.

Who would have believed that under our current law, the government can confiscate an individual's private property on a mere showing of probable cause? Then even though a person has never been arrested, not to mention convicted, of a crime, the government requires the person to file an action to prove that the property is not subject to forfeiture to get the property back.

It is important that we have asset forfeiture, but this puts it under controls that have not existed before.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER), a distinguished member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Senate amendments to H.R. 1658, and I want to commend the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE), our chairman, for his year-long effort to reform our asset forfeiture laws. The gentleman quite literally wrote the book on the subject. When the history is written of his prodigious work in this House, this certainly warrants mention.

Last year, a somewhat divided House considered H.R. 1658. While it garnered the support of the majority of our colleagues, it was adamantly opposed by the administration, as well as by every major law enforcement group. Because of this opposition, I offered, along with the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. HUTCHINSON) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY), a substitute version of H.R. 1658 on the floor of the House.

The substitute would have made needed reforms by placing the burden of proof on the Government to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that property seized was used in an illegal activity. It would have allowed for counsel to be appointed in those proceedings. It would have protected innocent owners, and it would have allowed property to be returned to claimants in instances of hardship.

It was, I thought, a balanced approach that had the support of all major law enforcement organizations, as well as 155 of my colleagues. That amendment failed, although it had some support, and many of us voted against the base bill for that reason.

Mr. Speaker, today's amendment, today's bill I am pleased to vote in favor of. It puts the burden of proof where it should be, on the Government; and it rightfully protects the owners and spouses and children, if they can show they were not involved in illegal activity.

Perhaps, most importantly, today's bill has the approval of the men and women of law enforcement. Like our substitute, today's bill allows civil asset forfeiture to continue to be used as a tool by police and prosecutors across the country to shut down crack houses and seize drug-running speedboats.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud the authors of this compromise and my colleagues who voted in favor of reform originally.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, merely to point out in the colloquy between the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the distinguished chairman of the committee, that I stand in agreement about the interpretation given by the chairman of section 983A(2)(c)(2), which dealt with the claimant's interests in such property and provide customary documentary evidence of such evidence, if available, and state that the claim is not frivolous.

Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to join in a clarification of the intent that, for example, a person should not be barred from challenging an improper forfeiture if he or she has misplaced a receipt or if the person does not have the evidence on hand. I think that response is consistent with the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) and the gentleman from Georgia, and I just wanted to weigh in on that.

This has taken quite awhile, but it is an important measure, and my compliments are out to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the chairman of the committee, and to all of the Members who have gone through a rethinking process to bring the bill to the kind of support that I believe it is enjoying on the floor this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I began looking at this matter from the old Government Operations Committee, and I was very pleased to learn that the gentleman from Illinois had, indeed, studied the matter, had put together his thoughts in a book on the matter, and it led us to bringing forth a bill jointly that now has the imprimatur, I believe, of most of the Members in both bodies.

It is in that spirit that we will want to make sure that it is implemented fairly and that it adds to the good body of law that comes out of the House Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. Speaker, with those remarks, I reserve the balance of our time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my gratitude again to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and his staff and everyone who worked on this bill. We did not mention Jon Dudas and Rick Filkins. I just want to say, George Fishman who is sitting here, he was the single most indispensable element of this bill, and I am grateful to him.

Mr. BARR of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Mr. HYDE for working so rigorously to come to a reasonable agreement with the Senate on civil asset forfeiture reform. The compromise is fair and will restore fairness to this process.

Civil asset forfeiture is a mechanism allowing law enforcement authorities to seize assets such as homes, property, cash, and cars that are used in furtherance of criminal activity. However, in recent years, the laws have been used overly broadly, and have been cited by civil libertarians as excessive and open to abuse.

One of the most important challenges Congress faces is balancing individual liberties against the need for effective law enforcement. Generally, our laws do this fairly well. However, our civil asset forfeiture laws are tilted too far in one direction. Current civil asset forfeiture laws allow police to seize a person's assets, regardless of whether the person has been, or ever is, convicted of a crime, if police have nothing more than probable cause to believe the property was used for criminal purposes. You are presumed guilty until you can prove yourself innocent.

In effect, our current asset forfeiture system targets both criminals and law-abiding citizens, takes their cars, cash, homes, and property away, and then forces them to prove they are innocent in order to get their assets back. The goal of this reform legislation is to change a system that sometimes violates the rights of the law-abiding, while retaining those provisions that allow law enforcement to target criminals, and hit them where it hurts—in their pocket books.

As I know from my service as a federal prosecutor, the majority of jurisdictions in America use asset forfeiture laws sensibly and fairly. Unfortunately, in some cases, law enforcement officers intentionally target citizens and seize their assets, because they know proving innocence under the constraints of the current law is extremely difficult if not impossible. The burden of proof for the government is minimal, the person may have less than 2 weeks to file a defense, and they have to post a bond even though the government has seized their assets.

H.R. 1658 was introduced to address this matter of allowing law enforcement to use this important tool of asset forfeiture, while still requiring them to be more mindful of due process and individual rights.

This legislation enjoys wide bi-partisan support, and passed the House on June 24, 1999 by a vote of 375–48. Additionally, the 65,000 member Law Enforcement Alliance of America supports it, as do many other line officers and retired police chiefs from across America. It returns balance and fairness to an area of law that has been abused to violate the rights of innocent citizens for too long.

This reform legislation does not deny law enforcement the ability to seize and forfeit assets that truly are used for criminal endeavors. It does, however, more properly balance those powers against civil liberties.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this measure. Passage of this bill is long overdue, and I urge all Members to join me in voting to send it to the President for signing into law.

Since the House passed this bill last year, it has been the subject of intensive negotiations that have involved the administration and law enforcement organizations as well as Members of both the House and Senate. Those negotiations have resulted in the revised version of the bill now before the House. I am sure that it is not everything that some might want, but it is acceptable to all concerned, and I think it deserves approval.

Enactment of this bill will correct serious imbalances in the law regarding civil forfeitures—cases in which the government seizes property allegedly connected to a violation of law. Under current law, seized property won't be returned unless the person whose property was seized can prove either that the property was not connected to the alleged crime or that the owner did not know about or consent to the allegedly illegal use of the property.

This bill shifts the burden of proof to the government, where it belongs, so that it would be up to the government to show by preponderance of the evidence that an asset was sufficiently connected to a crime to be subject to civil forfeiture. While this is a somewhat less stringent requirement than in the bill as originally passed by the House, it is a great improvement over the current law.

The bill also makes a number of other important improvements over the current law. It will require that seizures be made pursuant to a warrant. It will eliminate the need for people to post a bond in order to contest a civil-forfeiture case. It will create a uniform "innocent owner" defense for all civil-forfeiture cases. It will allow property to be released from government custody before final disposition of a case where continued custody would be a hardship to the owner outweighing any risk to the government. And it will allow people to seek to recover from the government if seized property is damaged while in custody.

I congratulate all those whose hard work has made it possible for the bill to be on the floor today, and I urge its approval.

Mr. Speaker, with great pleasure, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OSE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) that the House suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendment to the bill, H.R. 1658.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

The motion to reconsider is laid on the table.

SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT MIAMI, FLORIDA, SHOULD SERVE AS PERMANENT LOCATION FOR SECRETARIAT OF FTAA

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and concur in the Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 71) expressing the sense of the Congress that Miami, Florida, and not a competing foreign city, should serve as the permanent location for the Secretariat of the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) beginning in 2005.

S. CON. RES. 71

Whereas deliberations on establishing a "Free Trade Area of the Americas" (FTAA) will help facilitate greater cooperation and understanding on trade barrier reduction throughout the Americas;

Whereas the trade ministers of 34 countries of the Western Hemisphere agreed in 1998 to create a permanent Secretariat in order to support negotiations on establishing the FTAA;

Whereas the FTAA Secretariat will employ persons to provide logistical, administrative, archival, translation, publication, and distribution support for the negotiations;

Whereas the FTAA Secretariat will be funded by a combination of local resources and institutional resources from a tripartite committee consisting of the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), the Organization of American States (OAS), and the United Nations Economic Commission on Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC);

Whereas the temporary site of the FTAA Secretariat will be located in Miami, Florida, from 1999 until February 28, 2001, at which point the Secretariat will rotate to Panama City, Panama, until February 28, 2003, and then rotate to Mexico City, Mexico, until February 28, 2005;

Whereas by 2005 the FTAA Secretariat will have international institution status providing jobs and tremendous economic benefits to its host city;

Whereas a permanent site for the FTAA Secretariat after 2005 will likely be selected from among the 3 temporary host cities;

Whereas the city of Miami, Miami-Dade County, and the State of Florida have long served as the gateway for trade with the Caribbean and Latin America;

Whereas trade between the city of Miami, Florida, and the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean totaled $36,793,000,000 in 1998;

Whereas the Miami-Dade area and the State of Florida possess the necessary infrastructure, local resources, and culture necessary for the FTAA Secretariat's permanent site;

Whereas the United States possesses the world's largest economy and is the leading proponent of trade liberalization throughout the world; and

Whereas the city of Miami, Florida, the State of Florida, and the United States are uniquely situated among other competing locations to host the ''Brussels of the Western Hemisphere'': Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should direct the United States representative to the ''Free Trade Area of the Americas'' (FTAA) negotiations to use all available means in order to secure Miami, Florida, as the permanent site of the FTAA Secretariat after February 28, 2005.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OSE). Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous matter on S. Con. Res. 71.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, S. Con. Res. 71 is a noncontroversial resolution which would express the sense of the Congress that the USTR should use all available means to make Miami, Florida, the permanent site of the Secretariat for the Free Trade Area of the Americas, FTAA, after the year 2005. The resolution passed the Senate by unanimous consent last November.

The FTAA facilitates open cooperation and the reduction of trade barriers throughout the Americas. Right now the Secretariat is rotating among various cities until 2005. The permanent home is important because the host country gains international institution status and economic benefits. This legislation would send an important signal to the administration and to our trading partners in the Western Hemisphere that Congress wants the United States to continue its leadership role in trade negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) and ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to yield blocks of time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of S. Con. Res. 71, expressing the sense of the Congress that Miami, Florida, and not a competing foreign city, should serve as the permanent location of the Secretariat of the Free Trade Area of the Americas beginning in 2005.

In 1994, Miami was host to 34 heads of state and governments who gathered for the historic Summit of the Americas. From this meeting came the idea to create a Free Trade Area of the Americas by the year 2005.

The temporary site of the FTAA Secretariat has been in Miami and will remain there until February 28, 2001, when it will move to Panama City, Panama, and stay there until February 28, 2003. It will then move to Mexico City, Mexico, until February 28, 2005. A permanent site for the FTAA Secretariat will then likely be chosen from the then temporary host cities.

The FTAA Secretariat is potentially the single most important job creation vehicle for Florida in this generation. The city that secures the Secretariat will become the business and trade capital of the Americas.

As a resident of Miami, some may ask, why choose Miami? Trade between Latin America and the Caribbean with Miami totalled $36.8 billion in 1998 as reported by the Beacon Council and the Bureau of the Census. In 1998, $69 billion in international trade passed through Florida. Fifteen of the FTAA countries were among the top 25 trading partners with the Port of Miami. Exports and imports through Miami customs district, mainly with Latin America, reached over $47 billion in 1997. The Miami Free Zone is a valuable asset for international trade.

Mr. Speaker, Miami is home to the tenth largest airport in the world, providing the most flights out of the United States into Latin America and the Caribbean. Miami International Airport is the leading airport for international air cargo. Miami International Airport provides air service that links 200 cities on five continents.

The Port of Miami served 3.2 million passengers in 1997, reaffirming the Port of Miami as the cruise capital of the world. In July 1999, the Port of Miami signed a sister seaport agreement with Buenos Aires. Miami offers a vast highway system and a convenient metrorail system as an alternative to driving.

Miami, Mr. Speaker, is a culturally diverse area. More than 2 million people reside in Miami, bringing a rich cultural diversity to the area. Fifty-four percent of the population of Dade County is Latin. The City of Miami is home to one of the largest number of bi-national chambers of commerce in the country.

As for the quality of security that the FTAA will need, the Miami-Dade Police Department is the largest police force in the southeastern United States, employing over 2,951 officers. They are recognized as one of the leading law enforcement agencies in the Nation. The State of Florida has five Air Force bases, 10 Naval bases, and two Coast Guard stations.

Miami is strategically located between all the FTAA countries, providing a gateway for commerce, cultural exchange, and communication. Securing a permanent Secretariat in Miami is essential because it will expand our businesses' unique access to the international trade process and exposure to the potentially expanding locations of the OAS, IBD, World Bank, and international finance institutions.

There is no doubt that the President should direct the United States Representative to the Free Trade Area of the Americas negotiations to use all available means to secure Miami, and not a competing foreign city, as the permanent site of the FTAA Secretariat after February 28, 2005.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) for this opportunity to represent Miami for the Free Trade Area Secretariat.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY), a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, first I want to applaud both the comments of the gentlewoman from Miami, Florida (Mrs. MEEK), as well as the leadership of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), who represents Dade, Broward and Palm Beach Counties, who has been working very closely with our Florida Secretary of State in establishing what we hope will be an economic opportunity, an outstanding viable trade mission, something that will not only produce and provide jobs for Floridians and people who live in the United States, but will also serve as a welcome station for countries around the hemisphere.

Clearly New York is blessed to have the United Nations, where people from all over the world assemble to debate and discuss the merits of international treaties, trade, and other important things that they consider.

We now have a chance, through this legislation, this resolution, to establish the permanent Secretariat in Miami. The United States has been negotiating with other countries in the Americas to establish free trade area of the Americas. As part of that, we agreed 2 years ago to create a permanent Secretariat to help further the FTAA.

Miami, as was described by the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK), is now the temporary home of the Secretariat. This bill would make permanent Miami as its home, and we believe strongly as members of the South Florida delegation that it ought to be here in Miami, in Florida.

The State of Florida is now already the gateway to trade between North and South America, with much of this trade going through the Port of Miami. It is an international bilingual city that has long had roots in the Latin American culture, making it all the more equipped to be the center of trade of the Americas. Well over 700,000 Cuban Americans call Dade County home, and there are a multitude of other nationalities that equally call Miami their home now, Nicaraguans, Guatemalans, Haitians, all types of nationalities, which makes it even more fitting, and it makes it more equipped to be the center for trade for the Americas.

We have a marvelous opportunity now to make a United States city the focal point for trade within the Americas, and Miami is clearly the best candidate.

Again, I urge my colleagues to vote for this bill, and again, I want to personally commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), who is looking to bring what I believe will be one of the most vital opportunities to his Dade County in both the creation of jobs, in recognizing that the United States is for trade, it is for open trade, and will make a hospitable location for future deliberations.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as indicated, this is a bill that passed the Senate. It was unanimous. It was noncontroversial. This is a bill mainly about facilities, about headquarters for the further negotiations of an FTAA. I want to support it in that vein.

I also want to say, if I might, just a brief word about the content, about the subject matter. There is a reference in the concurrent resolution to greater cooperation and understanding on trade barrier reduction throughout the Americas. I am pleased that, as the ministers have been meeting, that their perspective on trade issues has widened and is more vast than relating only to trade barrier reduction, as important as that may be.

I am pleased that in recent weeks, as I understand it, that the trade ministers have placed on the agenda for discussion at the next meeting of trade ministers in Buenos Aires, Argentina, the issue of core labor standards and their role in the trade equation. I believe very much that that has to be considered, and in the end part of the negotiations relating to an FTAA.

It seems to me that in view of the discussions to date, that there is an understanding among the trade ministers that there needs to be a diligent effort to look at all of the critical aspects of trade in these further negotiations.

As I said, this bill, however, is not basically about the content of the negotiations, it is about where the Secretariat should be located. The Florida delegation very understandably would like to see that placed in Miami. I think there is an advantage not only to Florida, but to the rest of the Nation.

I support this in the vein with the comments that I have made regarding the subject matter of future negotiations regarding an FTAA. At some point there will have to be consideration by this body as to the procedures which will guide the eventual negotiations.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN), a distinguished member of the Florida delegation and chairman of the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade of the Committee on International Relations.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of making Miami, Florida, the permanent location for the Secretariat of the Free Trade Area of the Americas, FTAA. I am a proud cosponsor of this legislation, which is being led by our colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW). His resolution expresses the sense of Congress that Miami, and not a foreign city, should serve as the permanent location for the FTAA.

Mr. Speaker, Miami, Florida, is currently the temporary location for the FTAA, which is comprised of 34 free nations with a combined gross domestic product of $14 trillion. The only city in the United States being considered as the permanent location of the FTAA is Miami, but it is competing with Panama and Mexico City.

I and my colleagues from Florida believe that Florida is indeed the best choice for the FTAA. Its strategic location, which many have hailed as the gateway to the Americas, makes Miami a natural choice for the FTAA. It enables our city to become the cultural, the diplomatic, and the commercial center of the Americas.

Additionally, Miami is already considered by many as the business and trade capital of the Americas. Due to its geographic location, Miami is already positioned to house the permanent Secretariat. The city has the highest number of flights to and from Latin America and the Caribbean, and the Port of Miami serves over 100 ports in this area as well, and a very large number of international companies have already made South Florida their regional headquarters for Latin America, including Federal Express, UPS, DHL, to name just a few. They also have international service centers based in Miami.

Winning the Secretariat means increased and strengthened technological investment, not just for us in Miami but for the entire state of Florida, and indeed, our Nation. The State's ten largest trading partners are located in Latin America and the Caribbean. Therefore, having the permanent Secretariat located in Florida would tremendously increase the State's hemispheric trade.

An important issue that we must also consider in this matter is the opportunity for Florida to become the e-business center for trade and e-business start-up companies, and this is a wonderful opportunity to begin warmer relations with our neighbors to the south.

The current revolution in e-commerce and the boom in e-business start-up companies requires us to seriously consider the consequences of not being a dominant player in the telecommunications industry. We cannot overlook the potential for hundreds and thousands of jobs that would be generated by a strong communications infrastructure arising from having the Secretariat in our Nation.

A great number of high-tech firms have already made Miami their home, and we would capitalize on this fact. The creation of jobs is vitally important to our area, and the Secretariat would provide an environment that encourages more companies to establish their operations, thereby increasing employment opportunities throughout the United States.

Having Florida as the Secretariat's permanent home benefits us as a whole. It would improve trade and commerce between the United States and the Americas, thereby enabling us to retain our current dominant position as a trade partner. It would also allow us the opportunity to surpass European exporters, who are moving forward to redouble their businesses with Latin America.

The issue of having Miami as the home of the permanent Secretariat of the FTAA enjoys strong support throughout the State. The Secretary of the State of Florida has expressed her strong support for this, particularly as it pertains to accelerating e-business and trade in the Americas. The Governor of Florida, Jeb Bush, is also committed to positioning the Internet in Florida for economic growth. The FTAA would help push these goals forward.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to support the legislation of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) making the permanent home of the Secretariat of the FTAA to be Miami. It is a win-win situation, and I urge support of this important issue that is important for all of us in the State of Florida and, indeed, throughout the Nation.

I congratulate the leadership of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) on this and many other issues.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of Senate Concurrent Resolution 71, which is a bipartisan concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that Miami and not a competing foreign city should serve as a permanent location for the Free Trade Area of the Americas Secretariat, FTAA, beginning in the year 2005.

I introduced the companion House concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 217, to the legislation before us today. I am pleased that nearly every member of the Florida delegation is a cosponsor of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, in 1998 the trade ministers of 34 Western Hemisphere countries agreed to create a permanent Secretariat in order to support negotiations on establishing the free trade area of the Americas. The temporary site of the FTAA Secretariat is now located in Miami. Starting next year, the FTAA Secretariat will rotate to Panama City and then rotate to Mexico City until the year 2005.

The purpose of this legislation is to put the Congress on record as supporting Miami for the permanent location of the FTAA talks. This legislation is particularly good news for South Florida. If the FTAA permanently locates in Miami, thousands of jobs will be created to support this institution. Miami will join the ranks of Washington, D.C. and New York as the only American cities to host a large international organization.

If Miami is ultimately chosen, some day Miami may be as closely associated as being the center of world trade as now it is known for its famous beaches and sunshine and climate.

Locating the FTAA talks in Miami also will make sense on a practical level. The city of Miami and Miami-Dade County and the State of Florida have long served as the gateway for trade with the Caribbean Nations and Latin America. Moreover, Miami-Dade County possesses the necessary infrastructure, local resources, and the cultural diversity that is necessary for the FTAA Secretariat's permanent site. Miami also is a multicultural, bilingual city that is de facto financial capital of Latin America today.

In sum, Miami is the logical and most attractive location to permanently hold the FTAA talks. In a broader sense, the home of the FTAA should be an American city. Since the end of World War II, the United States has been the leading proponent of trade liberalization throughout the world. Today our leadership on free trade is under close scrutiny, with many of our allies openly questioning our continuing commitment to expanding world trade.

Let us send a strong signal today that America will continue its leadership position on this issue, especially to our neighbors in this hemisphere, by having a unanimous vote to locate the FTAA Secretariat in Miami.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman CRANE) and the gentleman from Texas (Chairman ARCHER) and all of my Florida colleagues for bringing this important bill to the floor today.

I especially thank Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris, whose tireless work on this legislation was a major reason for its consideration today. I am confident that under Secretary Harris's leadership, Miami will one day be known as the Brussels of the West.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a yea vote on this bill. It is important to Dade County and Miami, it is important to the State of Florida, and as my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) pointed out, it is good for America.

Mr. MILLER of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bi-partisan resolution directing the President and the United States Trade Representative to pursue all available means to insure that the permanent home of the Free Trade Area of the Americas' (FTAA) Secretariat is located in the city of Miami, Florida. Miami already boasts a strong economic and cultural connection to our country's southern neighbors and trading partners, and is now positioned to become the "Brussels of the Western Hemisphere" by hosting the permanent home of the FTAA.

For those who may be unaware, the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) is the product of agreements among the United States and the nations of the Western Hemisphere to establish a means for cooperation to promote trade and further reduce barriers to trade within this hemisphere. As part of that goal, the trade ministers of 34 countries agreed to establish an organization, the FTAA Secretariat, to aid the process of trade liberalization. By 2005 the FTAA Secretariat will have international institution status providing jobs and tremendous economic benefits to its host city akin to the European regional economic and governmental organizations in Brussels. The agreement establishing the FTAA Secretariat calls for its location to rotate on a temporary basis between three cities: Panama City, Panama; Mexico City, Mexico; and Miami, Florida. A choice on the permanent site of the Secretariat has not yet been made from among these three competing cities, but will be soon.

The FTAA Secretariat will be funded by a combination of local resources and institutional resources from a tripartite committee consisting of the Organization of American States (OAS), the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), and the United Nations Economic Commission on Latin America and the Caribbean (ECLAC).

Mr. Speaker, I would advise my colleagues that it does not matter what your position on free trade or on some of our Latin American trading partners may be, this resolution deserves the support of every Member of Congress. This is a noncontroversial and patriotic resolution which simply affirms that we, as a Congress, desire that the FTAA Secretariat should be permanently located in the United States rather than either Panama or Mexico. Miami is the only United States city in contention to become the permanent home of the FTAA Secretariat, and the city of Miami and the State of Florida deserve the support of Congress in this effort.

The city of Miami and the State of Florida have long served as the gateway for trade with the Caribbean and Latin America. Trade between the city of Miami, Florida and the countries of Latin America and the Caribbean totaled $36,793,000,000 in 1998. Furthermore, Miami is better equipped with the necessary infrastructure to support the Secretariat, including the area of information technology. Miami is best positioned of the three locations to further accelerate the already rapid expansion of the Internet and E-commerce into Latin America through the FTAA, and become not only the "Brussels of the Western Hemisphere" but the Latin American gateway to Silicon Valley as well.

I would be remiss if I did not thank Florida Secretary of State Katherine Harris, who is from my own Congressional District, and my colleague Congressman CLAY SHAW for all their hard work to bring this bill to the floor and to bring the FTAA to Miami.

Mr. Speaker, the United States has always been the leader in expanded trade and in this hemisphere, and Congress can help ensure that we do not abdicate that role by doing our part to locate the FTAA Secretariat here in this country, in Miami, Florida. I strongly urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this important resolution.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OSE). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) that the House suspend the rules and concur in the Senate concurrent resolution, S. Con. Res. 71.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the Senate concurrent resolution was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TAXPAYER BILL OF RIGHTS 2000

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4163) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for increased fairness to taxpayers, as amended.

H.R. 4163

TITLE I—PENALTIES AND INTEREST

SEC. 101. FAILURE TO PAY ESTIMATED TAX PENALTY CONVERTED TO INTEREST CHARGE ON ACCUMULATED UNPAID BALANCE.

(a) PENALTY MOVED TO INTEREST CHAPTER OF CODE.—The Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended by redesignating section 6654 as section 6641 and by moving section 6641 (as so redesignated) from part I of subchapter A of chapter 68 to the end of subchapter E of chapter 67 (as added by subsection (e)(1) of this section).

"SEC. 6641. INTEREST ON FAILURE BY INDIVIDUAL TO PAY ESTIMATED INCOME TAX.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—Interest shall be paid on any underpayment of estimated tax by an individual for a taxable year for each day of such underpayment. The amount of such interest for any day shall be the product of the underpayment rate established under subsection (b)(2) multiplied by the amount of the underpayment.

''(b) AMOUNT OF UNDERPAYMENT; INTEREST RATE.—For purposes of subsection (a)—

''(1) AMOUNT.—The amount of the underpayment on any day shall be the excess of—

''(A) the sum of the required installments for the taxable year the due dates for which are on or before such day, over

''(B) the sum of the amounts (if any) of estimated tax payments made on or before such day on such required installments.

''(2) DETERMINATION OF INTEREST RATE.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The underpayment rate with respect to any day in an installment underpayment period shall be the underpayment rate established under section 6621 for the first day of the calendar quarter in which such installment underpayment period begins.

''(B) INSTALLMENT UNDERPAYMENT PERIOD.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'installment underpayment period' means the period beginning on the day after the due date for a required installment and ending on the due date for the subsequent required installment (or in the case of the 4th required installment, the 15th day of the 4th month following the close of a taxable year).

''(C) DAILY RATE.—The rate determined under subparagraph (A) shall be applied on a daily basis and shall be based on the assumption of 365 days in a calendar year.

''(3) TERMINATION OF ESTIMATED TAX INTEREST.—No day after the end of the installment underpayment period for the 4th required installment specified in paragraph (2)(B) for a taxable year shall be treated as a day of underpayment with respect to such taxable year.''.

(c) INCREASE IN SAFE HARBOR WHERE TAX IS SMALL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Clause (i) of section 6641(d)(1)(B) (as so redesignated) is amended to read as follows:

''(i) the lesser of—

''(I) 90 percent of the tax shown on the return for the taxable year (or, if no return is filed, 90 percent of the tax for such year), or

''(II) the tax shown on the return for the taxable year (or, if no return is filed, the tax for such year) reduced (but not below zero) by $2,000, or''.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subsection (e) of section 6641 (as so redesignated) is amended by striking paragraph (1) and redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (1) and (2), respectively.

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (e) (as redesignated by subsection (c)(2)) and subsection (h) of section 6641 (as so designated) are each amended by striking ''addition to tax'' each place it occurs and inserting ''interest''.

(2) Section 167(g)(5)(D) is amended by striking ''6654'' and inserting ''6641''.

(3) Section 460(b)(1) is amended by striking ''6654'' and inserting ''6641''.

(4) Section 3510(b) is amended—

(A) by striking ''section 6654'' in paragraph (1) and inserting ''section 6641'',

(B) by amending paragraph (2)(B) to read as follows:

''(B) no interest would be required to be paid (but for this section) under 6641 for such taxable year by reason of the $2,000 amount specified in section 6641(d)(1)(B)(i)(II).'',

(C) by striking ''section 6654(d)(2)'' in paragraph (3) and inserting ''section 6641(d)(2)'', and

(5) Section 6201(b)(1) is amended by striking ''6654'' and inserting ''6641''.

(6) Section 6601(h) is amended by striking ''6654'' and inserting ''6641''.

(7) Section 6621(b)(2)(B) is amended by striking ''addition to tax under section 6654'' and inserting ''interest required to be paid under section 6641''.

(8) Section 6622(b) is amended—

(A) by striking ''PENALTY FOR'' in the heading, and

(B) by striking ''addition to tax under section 6654 or 6655'' and inserting ''interest required to be paid under section 6641 or addition to tax under section 6655''.

(9) Section 6658(a) is amended—

(A) by striking ''6654, or 6655'' and inserting ''or 6655, and no interest shall be required to be paid under section 6641,'', and

(B) by inserting ''or paying interest'' after ''the tax'' in paragraph (2)(B)(ii).

(10) Section 6665(b) is amended—

(A) in the matter preceding paragraph (1) by striking '', 6654,'', and

(B) in paragraph (2) by striking ''6654 or''.

(11) Section 7203 is amended by striking ''section 6654 or 6655'' and inserting ''section 6655 or interest required to be paid under section 6641''.

(e) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Chapter 67 is amended by inserting after subchapter D the following:

"Subchapter E—Interest on Failure by Individual to Pay Estimated Income Tax

''Sec. 6641. Interest on failure by individual to pay estimated income tax.''.

(2) The table of subchapters for chapter 67 is amended by adding at the end the following new items:

''Subchapter D. Notice requirements.

''Subchapter E. Interest on failure by individual to pay estimated income tax.''.

(3) The table of sections for part I of subchapter A of chapter 68 is amended by striking the item relating to section 6654.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to installment payments for taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 102. EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME FOR INTEREST ON OVERPAYMENTS OF INCOME TAX BY INDIVIDUALS.

"SEC. 139. EXCLUSION FROM GROSS INCOME FOR INTEREST ON OVERPAYMENTS OF INCOME TAX BY INDIVIDUALS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual, gross income shall not include interest paid under section 6611 on any overpayment of tax imposed by this subtitle.

''(b) EXCEPTION.—Subsection (a) shall not apply in the case of a failure to claim items resulting in the overpayment on the original return if the Secretary determines that the principal purpose of such failure is to take advantage of subsection (a).

''(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR DETERMINING MODIFIED ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—For purposes of this title, interest not included in gross income under subsection (a) shall not be treated as interest which is exempt from tax for purposes of sections 32(i)(2)(B) and 6012(d) or any computation in which interest exempt from tax under this title is added to adjusted gross income.''.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 is amended by striking the item relating to section 139 and inserting the following new items:

''Sec. 139. Exclusion from gross income for interest on overpayments of income tax by individuals.

''Sec. 139A. Cross references to other Acts.''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to interest received in calendar years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 103. REDUCTIONS OF PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO PAY TAX.

(a) REDUCTIONS OF PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO PAY TAX.—

(1) REDUCTION OF PENALTY BY 50 PERCENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 6651(a) are each amended by striking ''0.5'' each place it appears and inserting ''0.25''.

(B) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (1) of section 6651(d) is amended by striking ''by substituting '1 percent' for '0.5 percent' '' and inserting ''by substituting '0.5 percent' for '0.25 percent' ''.

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply for purposes of determining additions to tax for months beginning after December 31, 2000.

(b) PROHIBITION OF FEE FOR INSTALLMENT AGREEMENTS USING AUTOMATED WITHDRAWALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 6159 (relating to agreements for payment of tax liability in installments) is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

''(e) PROHIBITION OF FEE FOR INSTALLMENT AGREEMENTS USING AUTOMATED WITHDRAWALS.—The Secretary may not charge a taxpayer a fee for entering into an agreement with the Secretary under this section only for so long as payments under such agreement are made by means of electronic transfer or by similar automated means.''.

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to installment agreements entered into more than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 104. ABATEMENT OF INTEREST.

(a) ABATEMENT OF INTEREST IF GROSS INJUSTICE WOULD OTHERWISE RESULT.—Section 6404 is amended by redesignating subsection (i) as subsection (j) and by inserting after subsection (h) the following new subsection:

''(i) ABATEMENT OF INTEREST IF GROSS INJUSTICE WOULD OTHERWISE RESULT.—The Secretary may abate the assessment of all or any part of interest on any amount of tax imposed by this title for any period if the Secretary determines that—

''(1) a gross injustice would otherwise result if interest were to be charged, and

''(2) no significant aspect of the events giving rise to the accrual of the interest can be attributed to the taxpayer involved.''.

(b) ABATEMENT OF INTEREST FOR PERIODS ATTRIBUTABLE TO ANY UNREASONABLE IRS ERROR OR DELAY.—Subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 6404(e)(1) are each amended by striking ''in performing a ministerial or managerial act''.

(c) ABATEMENT OF INTEREST WITH RESPECT TO ERRONEOUS REFUND CHECK WITHOUT REGARD TO SIZE OF REFUND.—Paragraph (2) of section 6404(e) is amended by striking ''unless—'' and all that follows and inserting ''unless the taxpayer (or a related party) has in any way caused such erroneous refund.''

(d) ABATEMENT OF INTEREST TO EXTENT INTEREST IS ATTRIBUTABLE TO TAXPAYER RELIANCE ON WRITTEN STATEMENTS OF THE IRS.—Subsection (f) of section 6404 is amended—

(1) in the subsection heading, by striking ''PENALTY OR ADDITION'' and inserting ''INTEREST, PENALTY, OR ADDITION'', and

(2) in paragraph (1) and in subparagraph (B) of paragraph (2), by striking ''penalty or addition'' and inserting ''interest, penalty, or addition''.

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to interest accruing on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 105. DEPOSITS MADE TO STOP THE RUNNING OF INTEREST ON POTENTIAL UNDERPAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter B of chapter 67 (relating to interest on overpayments) is amended by redesignating section 6612 as section 6613 and by inserting after section 6611 the following new section:

''SEC. 6612. DEPOSITS MADE TO STOP THE RUNNING OF INTEREST ON POTENTIAL UNDERPAYMENTS, ETC.

''(a) AUTHORITY TO MAKE DEPOSITS OTHER THAN AS PAYMENT OF TAX.—Any taxpayer may make a cash bond deposit with the Secretary to offset any potential underpayment of tax imposed by this title for any taxable period. Such a deposit shall be made in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

''(b) DEPOSITS USED TO PAY UNDERPAYMENT ALSO OFFSET RUNNING OF INTEREST ON UNDERPAYMENT.—Any cash bond deposit used to pay tax under this title shall offset interest under subchapter A during the period of such deposit on such tax under such procedures as the Secretary shall prescribe.

''(c) TAXPAYER MAY REQUEST RETURN OF CASH BOND DEPOSIT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—On written request of a taxpayer who made a cash bond deposit, the Secretary shall return to the taxpayer any amount of such deposit specified by the taxpayer.

''(2) NO INTEREST.—In the case of a deposit which is so returned—

''(A) the amount returned shall not offset interest under subchapter A for any period, and

''(B) except as provided in subsection (d), no interest shall be allowed on such amount.

''(3) EXCEPTIONS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to any amount if—

''(A) such amount has been treated by the Secretary as a payment of tax after a final determination of the disputed items to which such amount relates,

''(B) such amount has been designated by the taxpayer as being a payment of tax,

''(C) the Secretary determines that assessment or collection of tax is in jeopardy, or

''(D) the amount is applied in accordance with section 6402.

Subparagraph (D) shall not apply to a payment to a taxpayer if the taxpayer is entitled to be paid interest under subsection (d) on such payment.

''(d) INTEREST ON AMOUNTS RETURNED IN CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Interest shall be allowed and paid on the amount of any cash bond deposit for a taxable period which is returned to the taxpayer only if the deposit is attributable to a dispute reserve account for such period.

''(2) ATTRIBUTION TO DISPUTE RESERVE ACCOUNT.—For purposes of paragraph (1), an amount is attributable to a dispute reserve account for any taxable period only to the extent that the aggregate of the cash bond deposits for such period (reduced by the amount of such deposits which has been previously returned to the taxpayer or treated as a payment of tax) does not exceed the deposit limit for such period.

''(3) DEPOSIT LIMIT.—For purposes of paragraph (2)—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The deposit limit for any taxable period is the amount specified by the taxpayer at the time of the deposit as the taxpayer's reasonable estimate of the potential underpayment for such period with respect to disputable items identified (at such time) by the taxpayer with respect to such deposit.

''(B) SAFE HARBOR BASED ON 30-DAY LETTER.—In the case of a taxpayer who is issued a 30-day letter for any taxable period, the deposit limit for such period shall not be less than the amount of the proposed deficiency specified in such letter.

''(4) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (3)—

''(A) DISPUTABLE ITEM.—The term 'disputable item' means any item if the taxpayer—

''(i) has a reasonable basis for its treatment of such item, and

''(ii) reasonably believes that the Secretary also has a reasonable basis for disallowing the taxpayer's treatment of such item.

''(B) 30-DAY LETTER.—The term '30-day letter' means the first letter of proposed deficiency which allows the taxpayer an opportunity for administrative review in the Internal Revenue Service Office of Appeals.

''(5) RATE AND PERIOD OF INTEREST.—

''(A) RATE.—The rate of interest allowable under this subsection shall be the Federal short-term rate determined under section 6621(b), compounded daily.

''(B) PERIOD.—Interest under this subsection on any payment to a taxpayer shall be payable from the date of the deposit to which such payment is attributable to a date (to be determined by the Secretary) preceding the date of the check making such payment by not more than 30 days. For purposes of the preceding sentence, cash bond deposits for any taxable period shall be treated as used and returned on a last-in first-out basis.

''(e) CASH BOND DEPOSIT.—For purposes of this section—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'cash bond deposit' means any payment which is designated by the taxpayer as being a cash bond deposit for a specified taxable period.

''(2) AMOUNTS DESIGNATED OR USED AS PAYMENT OF TAX.—A cash bond deposit shall cease to be treated as such for purposes of this section beginning on the date that the taxpayer designates such deposit as a payment of tax for purposes of this title, or, if earlier, on the date such deposit is so used.

''(f) CHANGE IN PERIOD FOR WHICH DEPOSIT MADE.—Subject to the requirements of subsection (d), a taxpayer may change the taxable period to which a cash bond deposit relates.''

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subchapter B of chapter 67 is amended by striking the last item and inserting the following new items:

''Sec. 6612. Deposits made to stop the running of interest on potential underpayments, etc.

''Sec. 6613. Cross references.''

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to interest for periods after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) SPECIFICATION OF DISPUTED ITEMS.—In the case of amounts held by the Secretary of the Treasury on the date of the enactment of this Act as a deposit in the nature of a cash bond pursuant to Revenue Procedure 84–58, the date that the taxpayer makes the identification under subsection (d)(3)(A) of section 6612 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by this section, shall be treated as the date such amounts were deposited for purposes of such section 6612.

SEC. 106. EXPANSION OF INTEREST NETTING FOR INDIVIDUALS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (d) of section 6621 (relating to elimination of interest on overlapping periods of tax overpayments and underpayments) is amended by adding at the end the following: ''Solely for purposes of the preceding sentence, section 6611(e) shall not apply in the case of an individual.''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to interest accrued after December 31, 2000.

TITLE II—CONFIDENTIALITY AND DISCLOSURE

SEC. 201. DISCLOSURE AND PRIVACY RULES RELATING TO RETURNS AND RETURN INFORMATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 6103 (relating to general rule for confidentiality and disclosure of returns and return information) is amended by striking ''title—'' and inserting ''title and notwithstanding any other provision of law—''.

(b) PROCEDURAL AND JURISDICTIONAL RULES.—Subsection (p) of section 6103 (relating to procedure and recordkeeping) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(9) PROCEDURAL RULES APPLICABLE TO CERTAIN DISCLOSURES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall prescribe regulations for purposes of providing for disclosures of return and return information under subsections (c), (e), and (k) (1) and (2). Such regulations shall include a schedule of fees, and waivers and reductions of such fees, applicable to the processing of requests for such disclosures.

''(B) DETERMINATIONS OF WHETHER TO COMPLY WITH DISCLOSURE REQUESTS.—

''(i) INITIAL REQUESTS.—In response to a request that reasonably describes the return or return information sought and is made in accordance with the published rules, the Secretary shall—

''(I) determine within 20 days after the receipt of any request for disclosure of return or return information under subsections (c), (e), and (k) (1) and (2) whether to comply with such request, and

''(II) immediately notify the person making such request of such determination and the reasons therefor, and of the right of such person to appeal to the Commissioner any adverse determination.

''(ii) APPEAL.—The Commissioner shall—

''(I) make a determination with respect to any appeal of any adverse determination under clause (i)(I) within 20 days after the receipt of such appeal, and

''(II) if on appeal the denial of the request for disclosure of such return or return information is in whole or in part upheld, the Commissioner shall notify the person making such request of the provisions for judicial review of that determination under subparagraph (D).

''(iii) EXTENSION OF PERIODS FOR UNUSUAL CIRCUMSTANCES.—

''(I) IN GENERAL.—The time limits prescribed in clause (i) and clause (ii) (as the case may be) may be extended for not more than 10 days in unusual circumstances by providing to the person making such request for disclosure written notice which sets forth the unusual circumstances for such extension and the date on which a determination is expected to be dispatched. No such notice shall specify a date that would result in an extension for more than 10 working days, except as provided in subclause (II).

''(II) MODIFICATION OF REQUEST OR TIME PERIOD.—If, with respect to a request for which the time limits are extended under subclause (I), the Secretary determines that the request cannot be processed within the time limit so specified, the Secretary shall notify the person making the request and shall provide the person an opportunity to limit the scope of the request so that it may be processed within that time limit or an opportunity to arrange with the agency an alternative time frame for processing the request or a modified request. Refusal by the person to reasonably modify the request or arrange such an alternative time frame shall be considered as a factor in determining whether exceptional circumstances exist for purposes of subparagraph (C).

''(iv) UNUSUAL CIRCUMSTANCES DEFINED.—For purposes of clause (iii), the term 'unusual circumstances' means, but only to the extent reasonably necessary to the proper processing of the particular requests—

''(I) the need to search for and collect the requested records from field facilities or other establishments that are separate from the office processing the request,

''(II) the need to search for, collect, and appropriately examine a voluminous amount of separate and distinct records which are demanded in a single request, or

''(III) the need for consultation, which shall be conducted with all practicable speed, with another agency having a substantial interest in the determination of the request or among two or more components of the agency having substantial subject-matter interest therein.

''(v) 20-DAY PERIOD EXCLUDES CERTAIN DAYS.—The 20-day periods referred to in clauses (i) and (ii) shall not include Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays.

''(C) FAILURE TO MEET TIME LIMITS.—

''(i) IN GENERAL.—Any person making a request for the disclosure of return or return information which is subject to this paragraph shall be deemed to have exhausted his administrative remedies with respect to such request if the Secretary fails to comply with the applicable time limit provisions of this paragraph. If the Secretary can show exceptional circumstances exist and that the agency is exercising due diligence in responding to the request, the court may retain jurisdiction and allow the agency additional time to complete its review of the records. Upon any determination by the Secretary to comply with a request for records, the records shall be made promptly available to such person making such request. Any notification of denial of any request for records under this subsection shall set forth the names and titles or positions of each person responsible for the denial of such request.

''(ii) EXCEPTIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES DEFINED.—For purposes of clause (i), the term 'exceptional circumstances' does not include a delay that results from a predictable workload of the Secretary relating to requests subject to this paragraph, unless the Secretary demonstrates reasonable progress in reducing its backlog of pending requests.

''(iii) REFUSAL TO MODIFY REQUEST OR TIME FRAME.—Refusal by a person to reasonably modify the scope of a request or arrange an alternative time frame for processing a request (or a modified request) under subparagraph (B)(ii) after being given an opportunity to do so by the agency to whom the person made the request shall be considered as a factor in determining whether exceptional circumstances exist for purposes of this subparagraph.

''(D) JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.—

''(i) JURISDICTION OF THE DISTRICT COURTS.—

''(I) IN GENERAL.—On complaint, the district courts of the United States in the district in which the complainant resides, or has his principal place of business, or in which his return or return information is situated, or in the District of Columbia, shall have jurisdiction to enjoin the Secretary from withholding return or return information which is subject to disclosure under subsection (c), (e), or (k) (1) or (2), and to order the production of any return or return information improperly withheld from the complainant.

''(II) EXPEDITED PROCESSING.—No district court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review a denial by the Secretary of expedited processing of a request for return or return information after the Secretary has provided a complete response to the request.

''(ii) PROCEDURAL MATTERS.—In a case arising under clause (i), the court shall determine the matter de novo (on the record before the Secretary at the time of the determination in the case of a request for expedited processing), and may examine the contents of such return or return information in camera to determine whether such return or return information or any part thereof shall be withheld under any of the provisions of this title, and the burden shall be on the Secretary to sustain its action. In addition to any other matters to which a court accords substantial weight, a court shall accord substantial weight to an affidavit of the Secretary concerning the Secretary's determination as to technical feasibility relating to, and reproducibility of, such return and return information.

''(E) DEADLINE FOR SECRETARY TO ANSWER COMPLAINT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall serve an answer or otherwise plead to any complaint made under this paragraph within 30 days after service upon the Secretary of the pleading in which such complaint is made, unless the court otherwise directs for good cause shown.''.

(c) ATTORNEY FEES.—Subsection (a) of section 7430 (relating to general rule for awarding of costs and certain fees) is amended by inserting after ''title,'' the following: ''and in any court proceeding in connection with the disclosure of return and return information under section 6103(p)(9),''.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to requests made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 202. EXPANSION OF TYPE OF ADVICE AVAILABLE FOR PUBLIC INSPECTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (A) of section 6110(i)(1) is amended—

(1) by striking ''national office component of the Office of Chief Counsel'' and inserting ''component of the Office of Chief Counsel or of the Service'', and

(2) in clause (i) by striking ''field or service center employees of the Service or regional or district'' and inserting ''employees of the Service or''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 6110(i)(2) is amended by inserting ''or the Service'' after ''Office of Chief Counsel''.

(2) The following provisions of section 6110 are amended by striking ''Chief Counsel advice'' each place it appears and inserting ''official advice'':

(A) Paragraph (1) of subsection (b).

(B) Subparagraph (A) of subsection (i)(1).

(C) Paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (i).

(3) Subparagraph (A) of section 6110(g)(5) is amended by inserting ''official advice and'' before ''technical advice''.

(4) The heading for subsection (i) of section 6110 is amended by striking ''CHIEF COUNSEL'' and inserting ''OFFICIAL''.

(5) The heading for paragraph (1) of section 6110(i) is amended by striking ''CHIEF COUNSEL'' and inserting ''OFFICIAL''.

(6) The headings for paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 6110(i), and for subparagraphs (A) and

(B) of paragraph (4) of such section, are each amended by striking ''CHIEF COUNSEL'' and inserting ''OFFICIAL''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to any official advice issued more than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) DOCUMENTS TREATED AS OFFICIAL ADVICE.—If the Secretary of the Treasury by regulation provides pursuant to section 6110(i)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, that any additional advice or instruction issued by the Office of Chief Counsel shall be treated as official advice, such additional advice or instruction shall be made available for public inspection pursuant to section 6110 of such Code, as amended by this section, only in accordance with the effective date set forth in such regulation.

(3) OFFICIAL ADVICE TO BE AVAILABLE ELECTRONICALLY.—The Internal Revenue Service shall make any official advice issued more than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and made available for public inspection pursuant to section 6110 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended by this section, also available by computer telecommunications within 1 year after issuance.

SEC. 203. COLLECTION ACTIVITIES WITH RESPECT TO JOINT RETURN DISCLOSABLE TO EITHER SPOUSE BASED ON ORAL REQUEST.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (8) of section 6103(e) (relating to disclosure of collection activities with respect to joint return) is amended by striking ''in writing'' the first place it appears.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to requests made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 204. TAXPAYER REPRESENTATIVES NOT SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION ON SOLE BASIS OF REPRESENTATION OF TAXPAYERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (h) of section 6103 (relating to disclosure to certain Federal officers and employees for purposes of tax administration, etc.) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(7) TAXPAYER REPRESENTATIVES.—Notwithstanding paragraph (1), the return of the representative of a taxpayer whose return is being examined by an officer or employee of the Department of the Treasury shall not be open to inspection by such officer or employee on the sole basis of the representative's relationship to the taxpayer unless a supervisor of such officer or employee has approved the inspection of the return of such representative on a basis other than by reason of such relationship.''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 205. DISCLOSURE IN JUDICIAL OR ADMINISTRATIVE TAX PROCEEDINGS OF RETURN AND RETURN INFORMATION OF PERSONS WHO ARE NOT PARTY TO SUCH PROCEEDINGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (4) of section 6103(h) (relating to disclosure to certain Federal officers and employees for purposes of tax administration, etc.) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

''(B) DISCLOSURE IN JUDICIAL OR ADMINISTRATIVE TAX PROCEEDINGS OF RETURN AND RETURN INFORMATION OF PERSONS NOT PARTY TO SUCH PROCEEDINGS.—

''(i) NOTICE.—Return or return information of any person who is not a party to a judicial or administrative proceeding described in paragraph (4) shall not be disclosed under clause (ii) or (iii) of subparagraph (A) until after the Secretary makes a reasonable effort to give notice to such person and an opportunity for such person to request the deletion of matter from such return or return information, including any of the items referred to in paragraphs (1) through (7) of section 6110(c). Such notice shall include a statement of the issue or issues the resolution of which is the reason such return or return information is sought. In the case of S corporations, partnerships, estates, and trusts, such notice shall be made at the entity level.

''(ii) DISCLOSURE LIMITED TO PERTINENT PORTION.—The only portion of a return or return information described in clause (i) which may be disclosed under subparagraph (A) is that portion of such return or return information that directly relates to the resolution of an issue in such proceeding.

''(iii) EXCEPTIONS.—Clause (i) shall not apply to—

''(I) any ex parte proceeding for obtaining a search warrant, order for entry on premises or safe deposit boxes, or similar ex parte proceeding,

''(II) disclosure of third party return information by indictment or criminal information, or

''(III) if the Secretary determines that the application of such clause would seriously impair a criminal tax investigation.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Paragraph (4) of section 6103(h) is amended by—

(1) by striking ''PROCEEDINGS.—A return'' and inserting ''PROCEEDINGS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a return'',

(2) by redesignating subparagraphs (A), (B), (C), and (D) clauses (i), (ii), (iii), and (iv), respectively, and

(3) in the matter following clause (iv) (as so redesignated), by striking ''subparagraph (A), (B), or (C)'' and inserting ''clause (i), (ii) or (iii)'' and by moving such matter two ems to the right.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to proceedings commenced after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 206. PROHIBITION OF DISCLOSURE OF TAXPAYER IDENTIFICATION INFORMATION WITH RESPECT TO DISCLOSURE OF ACCEPTED OFFERS-IN-COMPROMISE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 6103(k) (relating to disclosure of certain returns and return information for tax administrative purposes) is amended by inserting ''(other than address and TIN)'' after ''Return information''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to disclosures made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 207. COMPLIANCE BY STATE CONTRACTORS WITH CONFIDENTIALITY SAFEGUARDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (8) of section 6103(p) (relating to State law requirements) is amended by redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C) and by inserting after subparagraph (A) the following new subparagraph:

''(B) DISCLOSURE TO CONTRACTORS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, no return or return information shall be disclosed by any officer or employee of any State to any contractor of the State unless such State—

''(i) has requirements in effect which require each contractor of the State which would have access to returns or return information to provide safeguards (within the meaning of paragraph (4)) to protect the confidentiality of such returns or return information,

''(ii) agrees to conduct an annual, on-site review (mid-point review in the case of contracts of less than 1 year in duration) of each contractor to determine compliance with such requirements,

''(iii) submits the findings of the most recent review conducted under clause (ii) to the Secretary as part of the report required by paragraph (4)(E), and

''(iv) certifies to the Secretary for the most recent annual period that all contractors are in compliance with all such requirements.

The certification required by clause (iv) shall include the name and address of each contractor, a description of the contract of the contractor with the State, and the duration of such contract.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Subparagraph (C) of section 6103(p)(8), as amended by subsection (a), is amended by striking ''subparagraph (A)'' and inserting ''subparagraphs (A) and (B)''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to disclosures made after December 31, 2001.

(2) The first certification under section 6103(p)(8)(B)(iv) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by subsection (a), shall be made with respect to calendar year 2002.

SEC. 208. HIGHER STANDARDS FOR REQUESTS FOR AND CONSENTS TO DISCLOSURE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (c) of section 6103 (relating to disclosure of returns and return information to designee of taxpayer) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

''(2) REQUIREMENTS FOR VALID REQUESTS AND CONSENTS.—A request for or consent to disclosure under paragraph (1) shall only be valid for purposes of this section or sections 7213, 7213A, or 7431 if—

''(A) at the time of execution, such request or consent designates a recipient of such disclosure and is dated, and

''(B) at the time such request or consent is submitted to the Secretary, the submitter of such request or consent certifies, under penalty of perjury, that such request or consent complied with subparagraph (A).

''(3) RESTRICTIONS ON PERSONS OBTAINING INFORMATION.—Any person shall, as a condition for receiving return or return information under paragraph (1)—

''(A) ensure that such return and return information is kept confidential,

''(B) use such return and return information only for the purpose for which it was requested, and

''(C) not disclose such return and return information except to accomplish the purpose for which it was requested, unless a separate consent from the taxpayer is obtained.

''(4) REQUIREMENTS FOR FORM PRESCRIBED BY SECRETARY.—For purposes of this subsection, the Secretary shall prescribe a form for requests and consents which shall—

''(A) contain a warning, prominently displayed, informing the taxpayer that the form should not be signed unless it is completed,

''(B) state that if the taxpayer believes there is an attempt to coerce him to sign an incomplete or blank form, the taxpayer should report the matter to the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration, and

''(C) contain the address and telephone number of the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration.''.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration shall submit a report to the Congress on compliance with the designation and certification requirements applicable to requests for or consent to disclosure of returns and return information under section 6103(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended by subsection (a). Such report shall—

(1) evaluate (on the basis of random sampling) whether—

(A) the amendments made by subsection (a) are achieving the purposes of this section,

(B) requesters and submitters for such disclosure are continuing to evade the purposes of this section and, if so, how, and

(C) the sanctions for violations of such requirements are adequate, and

(2) include such recommendations that the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration considers necessary or appropriate to better achieve the purposes of this section.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 6103(c) is amended by striking ''TAXPAYER.—The Secretary'' and inserting ''TAXPAYER.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary''.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to requests and consents made after 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(a) NOTICE TO TAXPAYER.—Subsection (e) of section 7431 (relating to notification of unlawful inspection and disclosure) is amended by adding at the end the following: ''The Secretary shall also notify such taxpayer if the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration determines that such taxpayer's return or return information was inspected or disclosed in violation of any of the provisions specified in paragraph (1), (2), or (3).''.

(b) REPORTS.—Subsection (p) of section 6103 (relating to procedure and recordkeeping), as amended by section 201(b), is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(10) REPORT ON UNAUTHORIZED DISCLOSURE AND INSPECTION.—As part of the report required by paragraph (3)(C) for each calendar year, the Secretary shall furnish information regarding the unauthorized disclosure and inspection of returns and return information, including the number, status, and results of—

''(A) administrative investigations,

''(B) civil lawsuits brought under section 7431 (including the amounts for which such lawsuits were settled and the amounts of damages awarded), and

''(C) criminal prosecutions.''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) NOTICE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to determinations made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) REPORTS.—The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply to calendar years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 210. DISCLOSURE OF TAXPAYER IDENTITY FOR TAX REFUND PURPOSES.

Paragraph (1) of section 6103(m) (relating to disclosure of taxpayer identity information for tax refunds) is amended by inserting '', and through any other means of mass communication,'' after ''media''.

TITLE III—OTHER REQUIREMENTS

SEC. 301. CLARIFICATION OF DEFINITION OF CHURCH TAX INQUIRY.

Subsection (i) of section 7611 (relating to section not to apply to criminal investigations, etc.) is amended by striking ''or'' at the end of paragraph (4), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting '', or'', and by inserting after paragraph (5) the following:

''(6) information provided by the Secretary related to the standards for exemption from tax under this title and the requirements under this title relating to unrelated business taxable income.''.

SEC. 302. EXPANSION OF DECLARATORY JUDGMENT REMEDY TO TAX-EXEMPT ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Paragraph (1) of section 7428(a) (relating to creation of remedy) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B) by inserting after ''509(a))'' the following: ''or as a private operating foundation (as defined in section 4942(j)(3))'', and

(2) by amending subparagraph (C) to read as follows:

''(C) with respect to the initial qualification or continuing qualification of an organization as an organization described in section 501(c) (other than paragraph (3)) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), or''.

(b) COURT JURISDICTION.—Subsection (a) of section 7428 is amended in the material following paragraph (2) by striking ''United States Tax Court, the United States Claims Court, or the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia'' and inserting the following: ''United States Tax Court (in the case of any such determination or failure) or the United States Claims Court or the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia (in the case of a determination or failure with respect to an issue referred to in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1)),''.

(c) FAILURE OF SERVICE TO ACT ON DETERMINATIONS TREATED AS EXHAUSTION OF REMEDIES.—The second sentence of paragraph (2) of section 7428(b) (relating to exhaustion of administrative remedies) is amended to read as follows: ''An organization requesting the determination of an issue referred to in subsection (a)(1) shall be deemed to have exhausted its administrative remedies with respect to—

''(A) a failure by the Secretary to make a determination with respect to such issue at the expiration of 270 days after the date on which the request for such determination was made if the organization has taken, in a timely manner, all reasonable steps to secure such determination, and

''(B) a failure by any office of the Service (other than the office which is responsible for initial determinations with respect to such issue (hereinafter in this subparagraph referred to as the 'initial office'), to make a determination with respect to such issue at the expiration of 180 days after the date on which any request for such determination was made by the initial office if the organization has taken, in a timely manner, all reasonable steps to secure such determination.''.

(1) DECLARATORY JUDGMENT.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall apply to pleadings filed with respect to determinations (or requests for determinations) made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) FAILURE OF SERVICE TO ACT.—The amendments made by subsection (c) shall apply to applications received in the national office of the Internal Revenue Service after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 303. EMPLOYEE MISCONDUCT REPORT TO INCLUDE SUMMARY OF COMPLAINTS BY CATEGORY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Clause (ii) of section 7803(d)(2)(A) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: '', including a summary (by category) of the 10 most common complaints made and the number of such common complaints''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to reporting periods ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 304. INCREASE IN THRESHOLD FOR JOINT COMMITTEE REPORTS ON REFUNDS AND CREDITS.

(a) GENERAL RULE.—Subsections (a) and (b) of section 6405 are each amended by striking ''$1,000,000'' and inserting ''$2,000,000''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, except that such amendment shall not apply with respect to any refund or credit with respect to a report that has been made before such date of the enactment under section 6405 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

SEC. 305. ANNUAL REPORT ON AWARDS OF COSTS AND CERTAIN FEES IN ADMINISTRATIVE AND COURT PROCEEDINGS.

Not later than 3 months after the close of each Federal fiscal year after fiscal year 1999, the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration shall submit a report to Congress which specifies for such year—

(1) the number of payments made by the United States pursuant to section 7430 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to awarding of costs and certain fees),

(2) the amount of each such payment,

(3) an analysis of any administrative issue giving rise to such payments, and

(4) changes (if any) which will be implemented as a result of such analysis and other changes (if any) recommended by the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration as a result of such analysis.

SEC. 306. ANNUAL REPORT ON ABATEMENT OF PENALTIES.

Not later than 6 months after the close of each Federal fiscal year after fiscal year 1999, the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration shall submit a report to Congress on abatements of penalties under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 during such year, including information on the reasons and criteria for such abatements.

SEC. 307. BETTER MEANS OF COMMUNICATING WITH TAXPAYERS.

Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration shall submit a report to Congress evaluating whether technological advances, such as e-mail and facsimile transmission, permit the use of alternative means for the Internal Revenue Service to communicate with taxpayers.

SEC. 308. EXPLANATION OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AND CONSEQUENCES OF FAILURE TO FILE.

The Secretary of the Treasury or the Secretary's delegate shall, as soon as practicable but not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, revise the statement required by section 6227 of the Omnibus Taxpayer Bill of Rights (Internal Revenue Service Publication No. 1), and any instructions booklet accompanying a general income tax return form for taxable years beginning in 2000 and later (including forms 1040, 1040A, 1040EZ, and any similar or successor forms relating thereto), to provide for an explanation of—

(1) the limitations imposed by section 6511 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 on credits and refunds, and

(2) the consequences under such section 6511 of the failure to file a return of tax.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE) will each control 20 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous material, on H.R. 4163.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, while some might find it surprising, I still do my own taxes. Often people ask me why, and the answer is easy. I think that as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means I should understand fully all of the difficulties, all of the headaches, all of the confusion, that Americans face in dealing with our complicated tax system.

Over the past 5 years, we have cut taxes and we have tried to simplify the code. Clearly, one of the greatest simplifications is the elimination of taxes on home sales. Now one does not have to bring a shoe box full of receipts to their tax preparer when they sell their home. Yet the Tax Code is still too complicated and confusing, and we eventually need to get the IRS out of the lives of individual Americans.

In the meantime, we should be sure that the current system treats taxpayers fairly while protecting their rights and privacy. That is why we are here today, to begin work on a new taxpayer bill of rights.

This Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2000 builds on the IRS Reform Act which we passed in 1998, which by the way was the first reform of the IRS since 1952. Our new plan will help taxpayers even further to protect taxpayer privacy, level the playing field between taxpayers and the IRS, and take at least some small steps to help simplify the process of paying taxes.

While taxpayer rights are important, we also believe taxes should be lower. Federal taxes, as a percentage of GDP, are the highest since World War II. So we want to fix the marriage tax penalty, help families save for education, and bury the death tax.

We also passed incentives for health research, long-term care, adoption, small businesses and many, many other worthwhile activities; but we are not through yet.

Today I am pleased that my Democratic colleagues have joined with us to make this a bipartisan taxpayer bill of rights, and I commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) of the Subcommittee on Oversight, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) for putting this package together on our side, as well as the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE) and others for joining with us on the other side.

As the old saying goes, there is nothing certain but death and taxes. We cannot do anything about death but we can and should make taxes as fair and easy as possible, and I urge my colleagues to join together and pass this important taxpayer friendly legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight, and that he be permitted to yield blocks of time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OSE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I support H.R. 4163, the measure that is before us today. I would like to commend the chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON), for developing this bipartisan measure that we will be voting on very shortly.

As the ranking member of the subcommittee, I can say that the review of pro-taxpayer proposals by the Joint Committee on Taxation, the Internal Revenue Service's taxpayer advocate, and Treasury proposals was well worth our while.

The bill before us today will help taxpayers nationwide. The bill changes two current failure to pay tax penalty provisions for individual taxpayers. The bill allows the IRS to abate interest in cases that the IRS taxpayer advocate advised us that the IRS made a mistake. Too many taxpayers believe that they paid their taxes only to find out that the IRS calculated the final balance due incorrectly. Taxpayers deserve relief from interest charges in these particular situations.

The bill also addresses situations where the IRS has caused an unreasonable delay or where abatement would prevent gross injustice. This legislation also allows the Congress to obtain more and better information about the IRS to ensure more effective agency and congressional oversight. This bill will make the IRS more accountable by requiring the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration to report to the Congress on the reasons for penalty abatements and awards of attorneys' fees.

The Taxpayer Bill of Rights of 2000 will give us better insight into how the IRS is working 2 years after we passed the IRS Reform and Restructuring Act of 1998. The American people expect that we will continue to work to enhance the fairness of the Tax Code. They also expect to make it easier for people to file and pay their taxes on an annual basis.

At this time I would like to recognize the hard working men and women of the Internal Revenue Service and commend them for the work that they do sometimes under very, very difficult circumstances.

The Taxpayer Bill of Rights of 2000 is a direct response to the enactment of IRS reforms in 1998. It represents timely follow-up of our oversight responsibilities. Unlike the proposals before the Committee on Ways and Means this week, the taxpayer bill of rights is a serious proposal that will be signed into law.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill and continue our efforts to make our tax system more equitable.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would, first of all, like to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE). It has been wonderful to work with the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE) and also the Members of the Democratic group.

As Peter Druker has always said that all great ideas ultimately degenerate into work, and as a result I would like to thank Mac McKenney on our side, Hugh Hatcher, and Beth Vance. They have done a wonderful job, but particularly the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE). It has been wonderful to work with him.

Also I would like to thank my associates, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) who will be speaking and also the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) who is the full committee ranking Democrat.

Now I am not going to review the bill's 25 provisions. That would take too long. Instead, let me give some examples of what this bill would do.

I would like to describe some of the stories we have heard at the Subcommittee on Oversight, and I want to explain what some of these provisions mean to real taxpayers. The National Taxpayer Advocate told us that the IRS erroneously refunded $59,000 to a particular taxpayer. This is the story. The taxpayer sent the check back to the IRS. The IRS sent the check back to the taxpayer. The taxpayer then returned the check a second time and then the IRS manually refunded the money. The taxpayer deposited the money in the bank until the problem could be solved. When the matter was resolved and the taxpayer returned the money, the IRS required the taxpayer to pay interest.

What kind of sense does that make? And so on and so forth.

Under current law, really the problem is the IRS has no authority. There is no law to help it, to abate interest in such a case. So the problem is not the men and women who work very hard, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE) referred to earlier, for the IRS. The problem is the law. The bill requires instant abatement in taxes like this one.

The National Association of Enrolled Agents told us about a taxpayer, here is another story, who went to work for low wages in 1989. The company failed to withhold taxes during the year and at the end of the year the taxpayer was given a form 1099 miscellaneous and he could not pay his taxes. He now owes $17,000; $1,600 in penalties and $9,000 in interest, if one can believe it.

So under this bill, our bill, the failure to pay penalty will be repealed for taxpayers who enter into the installing agreement with the IRS and interest can be waived if a gross injustice would result. Unfortunately, of course, this bill comes too late for our particular taxpayer who I mentioned earlier, but it will help others, we hope, who find themselves in a similar situation.

The Taxpayer Advocate also told us of another taxpayer who discovered that his partners were defrauding the government. The taxpayer helped the IRS in securing a conviction. In 1990, the taxpayer asked the IRS how much he owed in taxes. The IRS said the information was not yet available and told the taxpayer to wait for a bill. So in 1997, 7 years later, the taxpayer received that bill. It was for $113,000. The taxpayer paid the $113,000 in 1998, but the taxpayer received another bill for $115,000 in interest.

See, it does not make any sense at all. Once again, the problem is not the Internal Revenue Service. The problem is the law and that is what we are intending to change. Our bill will allow the taxpayers who find themselves in such a predicament to stop the running of interest by making a deposit in a dispute reserve account. Amounts deposited in escrow could be withdrawn with interest or used to satisfy an underpayment of tax. Any taxpayer in the dispute with the IRS could choose to put the money in the dispute reserve account to stop the running of interest; very important.

So, Mr. Speaker, the Taxpayer Bill of Rights 2000 will do several things. It will reform the penalties and interests. It will strengthen the taxpayer privacy, very important condition. It will reduce the compliance burden and, lastly, level the field between the IRS and taxpayers. It will literally help millions of taxpayers. That is our hope.

Now this is an important first step, and it is a first step. There are needed reforms, but we also need to simplify the Tax Code. Many of these provisions would be unnecessary if the Tax Code was less confusing. So I look forward to working with my colleagues on tax simplification, and I am pleased to join my colleagues from the Committee on Ways and Means, Republicans and Democrats, in bringing this needed bill before the House, and I urge my colleagues to support its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT), who has a very important proposal relative to a financial disclosure amendment that he would like to discuss.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill. I support it. I am a cosponsor of it. I think we need more taxpayer rights, but this afternoon's debate is a strange one. Last week at the scheduling colloquy, the Republican leadership announced that we would have full and open debate on the question of taxpayer rights so that any Member could come forward with their ideas about how we might expand those rights. Today we do not have that opportunity because Republicans discovered one amendment that I have been offering, of which they were very fearful. This amendment addresses the right of taxpayers to know, specifically to know about taxpayer-subsidized, nonprofit political bank accounts that can keep their contributors unknown to the public and can spew out unlimited amounts of hate on the airwaves while they take hidden money. This is the so-called section 527, the new Swiss bank account for politicians this year.

The Republican leadership was so very scared that their members would have to vote out here on the floor today against public disclosure that they terminated the debate. They have now limited us to 20 minutes to a side and prohibited any member from offering any amendment on any subject. Regarding these 527 organizations, I stood with JOHN MCCAIN on Friday, just outside this Capitol, and he said ''527 organizations are the latest manifestation of corruption in American politics.''

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will suspend. Under cl. 1 of Rule XVII, the gentleman may not quote senators.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I would make a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman may quote any American citizen. I did not refer to any Senator. I referred to JOHN MCCAIN, a presidential candidate, and I would ask at this point, Mr. Speaker, if in fact it is not appropriate to quote other American citizens on the floor, particularly when they speak out as eloquently as Mr. JOHN MCCAIN of Arizona did on this question of corruption of American politics by 527 political organizations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise the gentleman that the weight of recent precedent and the purposes of the rule prohibit references to speeches or statements of senators occurring outside the Senate Chamber.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, just so that I am clear, then, and so that I will be able to urge the same point in the future, any reference to a member of the Senate, even though the title Senator is not mentioned, and even though the comments, instead of being on the floor of the Senate, were outside of the Capitol building with Common Cause as they released their ''stealth-PAC'' report against these 527 organizations, I may not utter the name JOHN MCCAIN or that of any other member of the Senate on the floor, even though they speak in a private capacity.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OSE). The Chair would advise the gentleman from Texas that, for the purposes of comity on the floor of the House, that the precedent states that the personal views of the Senator not uttered in the Senate are not allowed to be quoted in the House.

The weight of recent precedent and the purposes of the rule prohibit references to speeches or statements of Senators occurring outside the Senate Chamber, and the reference to Senator MCCAIN, who is clearly a member of the Senate, falls within that purview.

Mr. DOGGETT. So that the Chair is instructing me I may not mention the name ''JOHN MCCAIN'' on the floor of the House, Mr. Speaker. Is this not an exception? I could understand why some might not want it mentioned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would advise the gentleman that, to the extent the quotations of the Senator are occurring outside the Senate Chamber, then it does not come under any of the exceptions to clause 1 of rule XVII.

Mr. DOGGETT. Does a statement that JOHN MCCAIN as a citizen makes outside the Capitol with Common Cause at a press conference to point out the evils of these stealth PACs fall under one of these exceptions or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That does not come under the exception of clause 1 of rule XVII.

Mr. DOGGETT. I am pleased to be informed, though I consider it a strange ruling, Mr. Speaker.

A great American hero from Arizona has said that section 527 organizations are ''the latest manifestation of corruption in American politics.'' Yet this House Republican leadership refuses to let this House deal with this issue today because they are afraid to give taxpayers the right to force groups like this ''Shape the Debate'' group, shown on this poster, to disclose who gave them their dirty money. It could come from China or any foreign source. It could come from a homegrown special-interest group.

This is wrong. Taxpayers should have the right to know about all of this. They are being denied that right to learn who is corrupting the American political system through these 527 political organizations. I do not believe it helps people of either party. I do think it cuts to the heart of our American democracy.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH).

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York, the subcommittee chairman, for yielding me the time.

I will admit the fact that the gentleman from Texas comes to the floor, taking what is a positive piece of legislation, and tearing it asunder, because if there is genuine concern on the part of those who represent all 435 districts in this House about campaign finance abuses, Mr. Speaker, the first place we should look is down at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue.

The gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT) just mentioned China. It is a sad fact that the President of the United States, on numerous occasions, sought the help of the Chinese Communists in his reelection campaign. It is a sadder fact that the presumptive nominee of the Democratic Party was active in soliciting funds from the Chinese Government.

I would just ask Members of this body, if we want to have a real political donnybrook and tug-of-war, we can do that. Never mind the recent amnesia about the fact that every tax bill debate here comes under a closed rule. So we debate the merits of the tax bill.

If my friends were interested in genuine reform, how curious it is that no action was taken in the Committee on Government Reform, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON) in the chair. How curious it is that no one reached out to a Member of this body on the committee of jurisdiction, allegedly. I received no communication from the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT) to take up this alleged reform. But how much more important it would be to do the substantive work to help people.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYWORTH. No, I will not yield.

Mr. DOGGETT. Well, I can understand that.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, it is fascinating to me to watch how the people's work is set aside. I understand the political principle at work. Why go on the defensive? Always be on the offense. Always be involved in misdirection. I guess if I had to defend the legacy of shame that has been brought and heaped upon this country by those who willingly, knowingly took campaign donations from the Communist Chinese, then I guess I would scramble and profess shock and dismay about the current campaign finance structure.

Mr. Chairman, I have said it before; I will say it again: for this crowd to stand in this Chamber and lecture us and the American people on campaign finance reform is akin to Bonnie and Clyde, at the height of their crime spree, holding a press conference to call for tougher penalties on bank robbery.

It is sad. It is despicable. The true search for truth would demand that we look at those who would willingly solicit campaign donations from foreign powers.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL).

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, since the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) would not yield, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts is aware, is he not, that during the Committee on Ways and Means last week, before the Committee on Ways and Means convened, then again on Friday after the Committee on Ways and Means, I invited the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) and every Member of the Republican leadership and Members of this House to join to make this a truly bipartisan effort to clean up what one great Arizonan has said is ''a manifestation of corruption in American politics''?

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, as shocking as it is, I have to agree with the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT). He is right on target.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) who took to the well here, he mentioned a couple of terms to describe the current American campaign finance system. Those people sitting up there in the Chamber, they know that the only word that he said that was accurate was despicable.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. References to visitors in the gallery are inappropriate according to the rules of the House.

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, there are some visitors in this Chamber as well as Members who would describe the current campaign finance system as being despicable. I think that there is general agreement across the Nation today that that is the case.

This legislation as proposed, does indeed make some modest improvements in interest and penalty provisions of the Tax Code, and it ought to be supported by the House. These improvements, however, are overshadowed, unfortunately, by the Suspension Calendar that prevents Democrats from offering a germane amendment. This amendment would have been offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT). It would require the public disclosure of contributions to and expenditures by section 527 political committees.

These committees are increasingly being used to circumvent the public's right to know who is trying to influence elections in this Nation. They are like an underground economy and are increasingly being formed because they exist in the shadows and get around normal election rules that apply to everyone else.

All the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT) wants to do is to apply some antiseptic to these committees. He does not challenge their right to exist. He merely wants them to respect the public's right to know. Disclosure, I thought, was the Republican mantra for campaign finance reform. Now we find out that, for many, it is simply a position that they take.

Mr. Speaker, too little public information exists on these organizations. They seem to be growing dramatically to support the election efforts of the other side. But they are also in support of some Democrats. The truth is we do not really know, and that is why we should move ahead with disclosure right now without delay.

We are going to overwhelmingly pass this modest bill and leave the only significant reform behind. That is too bad, but given the fact that the three days of hearings on tax reform and the other three tax bills on the floor this week exist only for political purposes, I guess at this moment it is the best that we can expect.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN).

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman HOUGHTON) for yielding me this time and for his leadership on this package.

I hate to disappoint the crowd who has gathered here, but I am going to talk about taxpayer rights and not campaign finance reform. As someone who has worked for the last 7 years on IRS reform with the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE) and with others, I think this is something that we ought to focus on, which is expanding taxpayer rights.

I think this campaign finance discussion, while interesting, is an entirely different subject that ought not to be part of this bill. I think it is incorrect to say that tax bills come up on this floor under an open rule or anybody can offer an amendment. It has never happened in the 7 years that I have served.

I think that the legislation that the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT) is talking about is not ready as compared to this legislation, which is carefully considered, the result of numerous reports, including from the Joint Committee on Taxation, including from the IRS, the Taxpayer Advocate.

I think, in fact, that we ought to wait for the Treasury Department's report on this very topic, which is, incidentally, already late, overdue, under the law. It was supposed to already be here; it is not here yet. I think at the very least my friends on the other side of the aisle would want to wait until the Clinton administration Treasury Department comes up with its recommendations on this topic.

Again, I hate to disappoint folks, but rather than killing these important taxpayer rights provisions with a partisan poison pill on 527, a campaign finance issue, rather than focusing on that, I would like to focus on what we are doing together on a bipartisan basis to continue the effort to reform the IRS and make our tax system work better.

Again, I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman HOUGHTON) for his work in this regard; the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH), who was here earlier who worked on the taxpayer rights; the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE); and others who put together this legislation that we are considering.

The gentleman from New York (Chairman HOUGHTON) has touched on a lot of the key provisions. Let me just talk about how this came about because I think it is important for the House to understand where we are and why we are here.

Two years ago, after 2 years of work, this Congress passed the historic IRS Restructuring and Reform Act. It did a lot of things. But it was based on a year-long, bipartisan national commission on restructuring the IRS. It was the most dramatic overhall of the IRS since 1952, long overdue.

Yes, among other things, we dramatically improved taxpayer rights. We added over 50 new taxpayer rights. We affected over 70 taxpayer rights, changing them to make the IRS work better for the taxpayer.

The long-term goal of these reforms is that, within a period of time, we think 3 to 5 years, we will have an IRS that actually offers every taxpayer the level of service, efficiency, and respect that they deserve and that approaches the private sector customer service standards. It is a daunting task.

But by our action today, if we can approve these taxpayer rights and keep to this topic and move this forward, we will actually be continuing our efforts, which are encouraging and bipartisan, to truly have a new IRS and new taxpayer system.

One of the taxpayers rights that we changed, for instance, 2 years ago was shifting the burden of proof. So now when one goes to tax court, rather than having the burden of proof be on one as a taxpayer, it is on the IRS, as it should be, as it is in the criminal justice system, as it is in other forums.

We also do not allow the IRS to seize one's homes and properties anymore unless they are subject to judicial reviews. We also allow taxpayers to seek damages from the IRS for wrongful collection actions.

These are very significant reforms, again, that this Congress put forward after a lot of work over a 2-year period as part of last year's, or 2 years ago, through the Structuring and Reform Act.

Finally, it did two very important things with regard to taxpayer rights for the future. It required that the Taxpayer Advocate issue a report and made the Taxpayer Advocate independent enough to be able to issue a bona fide report on problems taxpayers face, to encourage more taxpayer rights.

What are we talking about today? We are talking about provisions that come from that Taxpayer Advocate's report, which was reported on earlier this year. Second, we required that the Joint Committee on Taxation conduct studies on two issues: one is interest and penalties, a very complex, difficult issue for the IRS and for many taxpayers.

And, second, on taxpayer privacy, such as the disclosure of tax return information.

Two good Joint Tax Committee reports underlie what we are doing today. In fact, a number of our provisions come straight out of those Joint Tax Committee reports that were mandated under the Restructuring and Reform Act.

Again, these are common sense proposals that are the natural next step in our ongoing effort to create a better tax system and to truly reform the IRS. I hope we will keep our focus on that this afternoon.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) again has talked about some of these provisions, and I will just touch on a couple.

One, it does expand privacy with regard to taxpayers. Very important.

We provide more protection against computer hackers gaining access to your and my taxpayer records. We require the IRS to notify taxpayers immediately if taxpayer information has been obtained illegally.

We increase tax fairness in a number of ways, including improving notification of undelivered refund checks.

For taxpayers who pay estimated taxes, we increase the estimated tax threshold providing more of a buffer, doubling it from $1,000 to $2,000.

We have very important provisions that enable taxpayers to stop the escalation of interest charges that build up and up and up during disputes with the IRS and taxpayers. We encourage taxpayers and, by the way, we drafted this provision to get into installment agreements with the IRS to resolve their issues.

These are important provisions. And, Mr. Speaker, I would just say finally that this is a carefully considered, thoughtful package, and I hope all my colleagues will support it.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE) for yielding me this time. I rise today in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT) that the Republicans voted down in committee and blocked from being offered to the Taxpayers' Bill of Rights today.

Every person in America realizes the importance and the necessity of fixing our system of financing elections. This amendment is an important step toward campaign finance reform. It will close another loophole in the financial disclosure laws. It would clean up the mess created by section 527 political organizations.

These organizations can take unlimited money from almost any source, even foreign money, and make expenditures without any disclosure to anyone. It is a sham, it is a shame, and it is a disgrace.

The American people deserve better. Much better. The amendment requires simple disclosure by these organizations. The American people have a right to know. They have a right to know who is funding political campaigns in our country. They have a right to know who is behind the attack ads.

The American people have a right to a free and fair election process. We need to end the pollution of the political process in our country. There is already too much money in the political process. There is no room for secrecy.

Mr. Speaker, I am very disappointed that the Doggett amendment will not be included in this bill. We need to fix the mess and we need to fix it now. I urge all of my colleagues to vote for the Doggett amendment when it finally comes up for a vote on the House floor.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD).

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my frustration with the fact that while this bill itself is worthy, an essential amendment was denied a hearing today, the amendment by my friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

For months, actually for years, we have heard the solution to campaign finance reform is disclosure. Yet when the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT) introduces an amendment calling on disclosure of 527 funds, that amendment is denied consideration.

If we asked the American people a couple of questions, although I think we know the answers, if we asked them, Do you think your representatives should spend more time on the phone or more time with constituents?, they would say more time with constituents. If we asked them, Do you think there should be unlimited, untraceable, unreported donations from whoever chooses?, the American people would say that is wrong.

When we talk about a Taxpayers' Bill of Rights, my colleagues, it is a right of the taxpayers to know where this money is coming from that is influencing our political process, and this amendment should have been ruled in order.

No organization which is granted section 527 status should be allowed to hide their list of donors or be less than forthright when it comes to telling citizens how they are spending their money. If these 527 organizations have the right and ability to influence campaigns, the people have a right to know where the money comes from.

We need to address this issue and address it now.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my frustration with the fact that this important measure has been relegated to the suspension calendar rather than being given a chance to have a full and open debate.

I am dismayed that the House Leadership continues to oppose any and all types of substantive campaign finance reform. They fought tooth and nail to keep the bipartisan Shays-Meehan legislation from coming to the House floor. They have resisted time and time again giving this debate the attention it deserves, maintaining that the American people don't care about this issue.

They are simply wrong. If we ask American voters a couple of questions, we know the answers: Do you want your elected representatives to spend more time on the phone begging for dollars or more time with their constituents and studying issues? Do you want unlimited amounts of external money from untraceable sources to influence the outcome of your election or do you want the character, knowledge and ability of the candidates in competition to influence the outcome of the election? Do you want the legislative process to be skewed by big dollars or to be determined by the merits of the policy arguments?

So why did the Rules Committee make out of order a sound amendment from my good friend from Texas, LLOYD DOGGETT, that would go a long way to making "527 Stealth PAC organizations" more accountable to the American people?

Absolutely no organization which is granted "Section 527" status should be allowed to hide their list of donors, or be less than forthright when it comes to telling citizens how it is spending their money to influence the political process. If these "Section 527" organizations have the right and the ability to influence campaigns, then the American people have a right to know where the money is coming from and how that money is being spent.

I want to be clear—I do not oppose the provisions of this bill; I don't have problems with the content of the bill. What I do have problems with is the tactical maneuvers surrounding today's action. What we're doing today is simply wrong and I urge the Members of this body to give this measure a sufficient amount of time for floor debate.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS).

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I support this bill to give taxpayers more rights when dealing with the IRS, but taxpayers should also be protected from shady political organizations. This would be a better bill if it included the Doggett amendment on so-called 527 groups.

These are tax-exempt political organizations trying to influence elections. They spend millions of dollars on negative ads, direct mail campaigns, and phone banks. Where do they get their money? From the shadows.

527 groups do not have to disclose how much money they raise or where their money comes from. Voters do not know then who is behind the 30-second TV ads trashing their candidates. There is absolutely no accountability, and the American taxpayer is footing the bill.

There is an old saying, Sunshine is the best disinfectant. The Doggett amendment would bring a little sunshine into this shadowy corner of politics.

As tax day approaches, Mr. Speaker, I urge the House leadership to let us vote on the Doggett amendment so we can give the American taxpayer and the American voter the break they deserve.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS).

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I am a little frustrated as well as the other side in listening to some of my colleagues.

The gentleman, with his amendment, is simply trying to divert from the fact that taxpayers have rights in this country. I think the gentleman ought to focus his energy on helping the taxpayer out there. Instead, what we saw in committee over there and what we are seeing now, is that this gentleman is trying to focus attention away from the taxpayers of this country who are demanding some attention from the IRS, as far as the rights they should be entitled to, and he is trying to move it into the trial lawyers' circle. He is trying to move it into the circle of campaign reform.

How interesting all of a sudden that this gentleman steps forward and starts talking about campaign reform. I urge the gentleman to step forward and start talking about taxpayer rights. I urge the gentleman to take a look at the taxpayers of this country and not to raise their taxes, but to give these taxpayers fair notice. Put them on an even playing field with the government.

What is happening here is simply a diversion, and that is all there is to it. It is very easy to see what is occurring here, but it grabs lots of attention. Let us get on the floor and let us draw away as much as we can attention from the needs of the taxpayer and let us talk about this theoretical campaign reform.

And by the way I would be very interested to see the gentleman's entire package and see what it does with the trial attorneys' association. I would be very interested to see the gentleman's package and what it does with the labor unions. I would be very interested to see the disclosures the gentleman himself has filed in regards to his campaign expenditures.

That is not the issue we are here for today. The issue that we are dealing with here today are taxpayers' rights. My colleagues, the burden on the taxpayers is the heaviest it has been since World War II. There are a lot of working men and women out there who deserve to have rights when they deal with the government.

There are a lot of new people in this new generation, I had a small class of them in my office the other day, young people who, for the first time, have taken summer jobs, and they are asking me what do these taxes go for.

I urge the gentleman to withdraw his amendment. Do not put this amendment forward. Put the energy where it needs to be, and that is with the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to the time remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE) has 8½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) has 2 minutes remaining.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT).

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

What we are talking about with the amendment here is getting at the heart of our democracy, of our form of government. Of course we are interested in taxpayer rights, and I support the underlying bill, but the Doggett amendment should be in order.

We are talking about transparency. The 527 organizations seek to influence elections under the cloak of secrecy. And I can tell my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, that we have not seen the worst. The worst is yet to come.

I hope that this House will see fit to adopt the Doggett amendment.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOGGETT. The gentleman is aware that with this measure we are asking the 527s to do the same thing that trial lawyers and labor unions, myself, yourself, and every candidate already does. That is all this bill does; is that correct?

Mr. HOLT. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. DOGGETT. So the last speaker was totally out of order in his suggestion that we were avoiding taxpayer rights, because what we are involved with is giving all American taxpayers a new right, the right to know what these phony organizations do that taxpayers are forced to subsidize—where they get their money, just as they already can learn about the gentleman, myself, or any other candidate for federal office.

Mr. HOLT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I watched the distinguished Member from Colorado and I saw he was lathered up here, and I was really beginning to be fearful for his mental health, watching him go on. He did not seem to understand what political contributions have to do with the Tax Code.

Now, I want to explain something to him. Most Members who get elected have to raise a lot of money. A lot of money has to be raised, and they get it from all these corporations who want something to happen in these hallowed halls. They do not give that money for no reason at all. If they cannot get it from the Member, then they cannot get their message across. So they form up these 527 organizations. They have unlimited amounts of money. They can take money from anywhere in the world, and nobody will ever know where it came from.

So if the gentleman is worried about the taxpayers of this country and he is not worried about what it is that changes the tax structure and who gets the breaks around here, the gentleman ought to go down to K Street and take a little look around. Those offices down there are paid for by the same people who have the 527 organizations who want the tax structure to work for them.

And if the gentleman is worried about taxpayers, he ought to worry about what happens when these organizations can pour unlimited money into the airwaves to assault the Congress with these ads, and the public, about the way things are going.

Now, everybody says there is this terrible problem with all this money in politics. And, as a matter of fact, I read here what Fred Werthheimer, who used to be the head of Common Cause said. ''We have an elected official with power and influence and the ability to do favors for undisclosed donors.'' Undisclosed donors.

Everybody says they want an open book. Then they ought to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, being, myself, a cosponsor of this Taxpayer Bill of Rights, I like the bill we have, but I believe we could make it much better with the amendment that I sought to offer. And so does the Joint Committee on Taxation, which happens to be chaired by a Republican Member, the chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means. That Joint Committee, this January, called for disclosure of these 527 organizations. And what has the House Committee on Ways and Means or this House as a whole done about it until now? Absolutely nothing. Until I offered this amendment in the committee, once again, Republicans were going to sit on their hands to oppose reform.

I just want the American people to know that when they turn on their television set and they begin seeing one attack ad after another, probably from both sides, spewing out hate and misrepresenting someone, that today it was the House Republican leadership that blessed that kind of conduct, because they have denied us an opportunity to at least learn, when the attack ads hit the airwaves, who the attackers are.

As to the phoney claim made today that there is a need to find out more about this or that other organization, all we are trying to do is to apply the same standards to these 527 organizations that already apply to every Member of Congress, Republican and Democrat, with reference to their individual campaigns.

I think that the American taxpayers who are subsidizing these organizations, American taxpayers who are filling out their own tax forms right now, should know that these 527 organizations usually get away tax free. They are subsidized by the hard-working men and women of America. And one of these groups is called ''Shape the Debate.''

My colleagues can pull up that Web page right now, and they will see an advertisement on it to promote more hate ads. It calls for the giving of unlimited amounts of contributions. It says they can be from any source. And I might note that that source, while it can be a corporate treasury written right out of the corporate treasury, it could also be China or Iraq or Cuba or any other country because it is all hidden money.

Just focusing on this as one example, which any American can pull up on the World Wide Web right now, you will find an effort to solicit just that kind of money, unlimited amounts of money that can come directly from a corporate treasury. And what do they go on to promise those who give? Well, these contributions, they tell us, ''are not reported to the Federal Election Commission or any State agency, and they do not count against contribution limits.'' The whole idea is nobody will know.

This Republican Party has become so wed to secret money funding. Within the last week we have heard reports of a million-dollar contribution, a million dollars of undisclosed money from one source we have heard. They can spend it on a townhouse. They can spend it on a truck. They can spend it on sky boxes. Or they can spend it on hate ads. And that is what these 527 organizations do, they spew out hate.

And they want to be able to continue to operate under some pleasant-sounding name like ''Americans for Better Government,'' when, in fact, the money that they are using is from some special-interest group that wants to control the agenda of Congress.

Let me give my colleagues another example of the kind of organization that Republicans are protecting. Many of us have heard from our seniors that they ought not to be having to pay twice as much as the most favored customers of pharmaceutical companies on purchases of their prescription drugs. And so now we have some group out there called ''Citizens for Better Medicare.'' It is a 527 organization just like ''Shape the Debate.''

''Citizens for Better Medicare'' can go around and attack all of us who want to end the price discrimination against our seniors on prescription drugs and claim they are on the side of the seniors. And who is funding that organization? Well, we will never know from the IRS. We will never know from the disclosure reports like I and every other Member of Congress must file. But what we have learned, in fact, is it is the pharmaceutical companies themselves fighting to protect the discrimination they want to continue against our seniors.

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very important and appropriate follow-up, the legislation that we are discussing here today, of the oversight subcommittee's work in the early 1990s under the leadership of Congressman Jake Pickle. The work that the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) has done on this legislation and other members of the subcommittee, I think, warrants us voting for this in overwhelming proportions, and I hope that it passes. It is a good piece of legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE) for his comments.

I am really disappointed that this thing has gone down into sort of the political pits where one party is accusing the other party. That was not the essence of what we were trying to do. We were trying do this on a bipartisan basis, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. COYNE), myself, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL). That was the essence of it.

Every member of the Committee on Ways and Means has a bill he or she would like to add to this. But I have always felt, particularly now, we owe it to the taxpayers of this country to approve the taxpayer rights package and save any campaign finance debate for another forum.

I really feel this, and I feel it not only as a Republican but also as a Member of this Chamber and really in a bipartisan mode. That is the important thing that we do now.

Mr. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I support Representative DOGGETT's proposal to require political organizations operating under Section 527 of the Tax Code to file publicly-disclosed reports with the IRS that include the names of contributors and expenditures. These Section 527 political operations have gained too much political influence and can swing elections without any public monitoring or oversight. I am disappointed the House Republican leadership did not allow this amendment to be offered today on the House floor.

Recently, the Republican led House Ways and Means Committee voted 21 to 15 on party lines to defeat Representative LLOYD DOGGETT's initiative to close this existing loophole in U.S. campaign finance disclosure laws that is enabling an expanding number of organizations to channel tens of millions of dollars into political campaigns. While DOGGETT's initiative would not impose any limits on use of funds, it would require greater disclosure to illuminate the motivation and sponsor of political attacks and help the implied targets of such attacks identify their attackers.

At present, political organizations operating under Section 527 can operate without disclosing who they are and collect unlimited contributions without paying tax on the funds. As long as their activities are focused on ''issues,'' as opposed to specific candidates, they are exempt from the reporting requirements of federal election laws. Representative DOGGET's proposal mirrors the filing and disclosure rules that Federal political parties and campaign committees must follow under the Federal election laws administered by the Federal Election Commission [FEC], and mirrors the existing Internal Revenue Code penalties on tax-exempt organization that fail to file and fail to publically disseminate reports.

We must reform our tax laws and political campaign laws to ensure that money does not destroy our democracy. I support Representative DOGGETT's proposal and am disappointed the House Republican leadership prevented us from debating this issue of critical importance to our democracy.

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, during this dreaded week of headaches and frustration for the American taxpayer who has just finished or is still trying to file their income tax forms to the IRS, I rise today in strong and enthusiastic support of H.R. 4163—The Taxpayer Bill of Rights.

A common theme that we have pursued since attaining the majority in Congress has been to make government smarter, simpler, and fairer in its treatment of our citizens. We should never forget that we are here to serve the people, and not the other way around.

In addition to our continuing efforts to explore ways to make the income tax a fairer and more equitable system, this Republican-led Congress has been working hard to make the Internal Revenue Service more responsive to the American taxpayer. It is essential, Mr. Speaker, that we continue to ensure that the IRS evolves into a responsive service organization for the 21st century, providing better service to the American taxpayer while ensuring that the IRS meets the highest standards for professionalism, accountability, and efficiency. H.R. 4163 is one more step on the road to reform that began just a few years ago when we enacted the IRS Reform and Restructuring Act in 1998.

Today's bill, the Taxpayer Bill of Rights, builds on this success by further simplifying the income tax filing and IRS appeal process, providing even more rights and protections to the American taxpayer, all while holding the IRS accountable for its actions.

For example, the issue of privacy in this age of computerization and inter-connectivity via the internet, is of increasing concern to many Americans today. This bill places additional protections in place to prevent unauthorized access to tax return information by non-IRS organizations. In fact, even IRS employees would need a supervisor's determination that sufficient grounds warrant inspection of a tax return before they would be allowed authorization to review this information.

An additional essential reform to restore fairness to the income tax system is the provision to allow the IRS to eliminate interest on past-due taxes for cases when the IRS makes a mistake or causes an unreasonable delay, as well as cases in which the taxpayer relies on erroneous written statements from the IRS. Mr. Speaker, it's past time that we stop holding the American taxpayer hostage to IRS errors and bureaucracy. This bill goes a long way to restoring common sense and reasonableness to the operation of this agency.

Once again, this bill is just one more step in our hard-fought efforts to try to bring common sense back to our government, and I encourage my colleagues to join me in strong support of H.R. 4163, the Taxpayer Bill of Rights.

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, on April 15, the citizens of this country will once again face the annual task of paying their taxes. For many Americans preparing their tax return has become a daunting endeavor. Under the current tax system there are more than 700 different tax forms and over 17,000 pages of rules and regulations. The system has become so complex that nearly 60% of all taxpayers seek assistance when filing their returns, but the tax system has become so confusing that even these professional tax preparers have trouble properly calculating returns. In a survey conducted by Money magazine in 1997, 46 professional tax preparers were asked to calculate a hypothetical family's tax return, they received 46 different answers.

The problem does not end there. According to a report by GAO during the 1999 tax filing season the IRS committed 9.8 million errors. Who winds up paying for these errors? Ordinary citizens, even when the IRS is at fault. The IRS operates under a dual standard. It is quick to penalize individuals for mistakes, even those to which it contributes, but is very slow and unrewarding when it is at fault. The time has come to level the playing field.

The IRS Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 attempted to resolve some of these problems by reforming the IRS and providing 74 new taxpayer rights and protections. While the reforms and rights and protections included in that bill have generally been successful they were merely the first in a series of steps toward truly reforming the IRS. The Taxpayer Bill of Rights of 2000 builds upon the success of that bill and carries the attempt to reform the IRS another step forward.

First and foremost the bill reforms penalties and interest. It repeals the failure to pay penalty for taxpayers who enter into installment agreements with the IRS, and allows for abatement of interest if a gross injustice would otherwise result, in cases attributable to any unreasonable IRS error or delay, or instances of error where a taxpayer has relied on written advice from the IRS.

The bill also allows taxpayers to stop the running of interest by voluntarily depositing amounts in a ''dispute reserve account,'' similar to an escrow account, that would stop the running of interest on amounts in dispute and allow taxpayers to earn interest on that amount if they prevail.

Additionally, it reduces the compliance burden by raising the threshold at which taxpayers would be liable for interest for underpaying estimated taxes from $1,000 to $2,000 and simplifies the calculation of interest on underpayments by providing one interest rate per underpayment period.

The second main feature of the Taxpayer Bill of Rights of 2000 is that it strengthens taxpayer privacy. It accomplishes this by stengthening safeguards against unauthorized disclosure of federal income tax return information by States and State contractors as well as prohibiting anyone, banks and lenders for instance, from asking or coercing a taxpayer to sign a consent to disclose their tax information unless the form is dated and it is clear who will be receiving the information.

The bill also contains a provision that tightens restrictions on ''browsing'' of taxpayer information by IRS employees. The IRS is required to notify taxpayers after the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration determines that a taxpayer's return or return information has been disclosed or inspected without authorization.

Finally this bill levels the field between the IRS and the Taxpayer. It accomplishes this first by excluding interest paid by the IRS from the income of individual taxpayers. Under current law, taxpayers cannot deduct interest that they pay to the IRS, but they have to pay taxes on any interest payment they receive from the IRS.

Secondly, it provides access to the working law of the IRS. All final, written legal interpretations issued to IRS employees that affect a member of the public are made publicly available. If taxpayers are expected to comply with an IRS interpretation of the law, the interpretation should be available. Currently, taxpayers have no way of determining whether the IRS applying the tax laws evenly across the U.S. This will permit taxpayers to determine what is the appropriate legal analysis applicable to their facts and circumstances.

As the complexity of the tax code increases, the need to pretect taxpayers has also increased. We must be diligent and ensure Americans receive the protection they deserve. This bill takes the steps necessary to endure that taxpayers are treated fairly and the information they disclose is protected. It extends the reforms began in 1998 by reigning in and finally putting the taxpayer on an equal footing with the IRS.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. HOUGHTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4163, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

SENSE OF CONGRESS ON CLINTON/GORE TAX HIKES

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 467) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that the tax and user fee increases proposed by the Clinton/Gore administration in their fiscal year 2001 budget should be adopted.

H. RES. 467

Whereas on February 7, 2000, President Clinton and Vice President Gore submitted a budget for fiscal year 2001 that raises taxes and fees on working families by $116 billion over 5 years, creates 84 new Federal programs, places Government spending increases on auto-pilot, and fails to offer any serious proposal to strengthen social security or medicare;

Whereas over the next decade the Clinton-Gore budget would spend $1.3 trillion on bigger Government—consuming 70 percent of the projected $1.9 trillion in budget surpluses—thus spending more for the Federal bureaucracy, and less for the American family;

Whereas as part of the $116 billion in tax and fee increases—

(1) the President proposes to raise taxes by $12.8 billion on the insurance products which Americans rely on to protect their families, homes, and businesses,

(2) the President proposes a stealth tax on our children by raising the death tax by $3.5 billion,

(3) the President asks us to increase taxes on energy by $1.5 billion at a time of rising energy prices and increasing dependence on foreign oil, and

(4) the President wants to raise medicare premiums and other health care costs by $3.2 billion at the very time we are trying to insure our seniors' health security by preserving and protecting medicare; and

Whereas the President's solution is to take hard-earned money and send it to Washington where politicians can spend it: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That is it the sense of the House of Representatives that—

(1) despite having successfully balanced the budget and created budget surpluses,

(2) despite having protected social security and restored the integrity of the social security trust fund,

(3) despite the fact that in 1999 governments at all levels collected $9,562 in taxes for every man, woman and child,

(4) despite the fact our tax burden is at 20.0 percent of gross domestic product—a post-World War II record high, and

(5) despite the fact that our oversight activities have identified billions of taxpayer's dollars that are subject to waste, fraud and abuse, the Congress should support the adoption of the package of tax and user fee increases proposed by the Clinton/Gore administration in their fiscal year 2001 budget, as reestimated by the Joint Committee on Taxation, and as outlined below.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on H. Res. 467.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution that we have in front of us lays it on the table. It was interesting to hear some of the comments from the people immediately preceding this about sunshine and let us open it up. I think that is exactly what we ought to do with the budget of the President and the Vice President that they have sent over to us.

That budget raises taxes. There is no question about it. It raises taxes. It is hidden in the fine print. What this resolution does is say, hey, let us put all the cards on the table. If the President and the Vice President are going to raise taxes on the American taxpayers, let us be forthright and let us lay it on the table and see exactly how many Democrats are going to vote for it.

That is what this resolution does. It says, does their party really follow the administration wanting to raise taxes, like death taxes for example? And I can go through those in specific. We are going to give them the opportunity to vote on it. Because I think the American people, while our economy is still good, I do not think are very excited about their philosophy to raise taxes. And the administration, I think under the guise of a terrific booming economy, think it is time to squeeze into the pocketbook.

I think it is time to see under openness, under sunshine makes great growing, or whatever that quote was in the last speech. Now is the opportunity for us to see where they stand on raising taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY). I hope he addresses this issue in his comments.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend and colleague from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the floor another package of tax and fee increases proposed by the Clinton-Gore administration for the fiscal year 2001. This legislation proposes additional taxes and fees totaling $116 billion over the next 5 years.

Now, this body a few weeks ago and the Senate just last week and this week, hopefully, will deal with the conference report on our budget. The thing to keep in mind is that our budget does not raise taxes. In fact, it cuts taxes by $150 billion over the next 5 years.

Our budget protects the Social Security Trust Fund. Our budget pays down the public debt. And we did this without asking our constituents and the American public to pay one more dollar of their hard-earned money to the Federal Government. We think it is better that they keep their money in their pockets than in Washington.

This resolution exposes the Clinton-Gore tax-and-fee package for what it really is, $116 billion in new fees and taxes. The President and Vice President propose 84 new spending programs.

So as maybe some of the American public have watched the nightly news, they may have said, how do they do it? I hear them talking about spending or taking down the debt and expanding the size of government. Well, what they are not hearing is the fact that in that proposal is $116 billion worth of new taxes to do that. That is the smoke and mirrors.

This package raises, for example, $12.8 billion on insurance products which Americans rely on to protect their families. Since I have gotten here, I fought hard to eliminate the death tax. This administration has proposed a stealth tax on our children, raising death taxes a whopping $3.8 billion.

At the time that the price of oil and gas have risen to historic heights, and now leveling off, though, the President submitted a budget which included $1.6 billion in new energy taxes.

Congress has made an effort to help our senior citizens by locking away their Social Security and protecting Medicare. Now this administration submits a budget raising Medicare premiums and other health care costs by $3.2 billion. This is what we are fighting to save them from.

Now, I could go on with many more specific examples. But, Mr. Speaker, I will not. There is something in this resolution for everyone to dislike.

I, for one, plan to demonstrate my opposition to this tax package and these fee increases; and I encourage all of my colleagues to join me in voting ''no'' to these fees and tax increases.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a great honor for me to be a part of the Committee on Ways and Means and see that the Republican leadership is now sharing the tax writing authority with other members on their side.

This, I think, is good and healthy. That way, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means does not have the responsibility of having to explain this tomfoolery that we are dealing with on the floor today. Because it just seems to me that anybody on our committee that would be talking about the President's tax revenue raises would also be talking about the President's program.

Because I would welcome the opportunity to vote for a $100 billion tax increase over a 5-year period if I thought for one minute that the majority party was prepared to repair the Social Security system for our kids and our grandkids; if I thought there was just one scintilla of interest in having Medicare be held whole for those that follow up; if I thought this was the price that we would pay so that our senior citizens would have affordable prescription drugs; if I thought that this bill, which my colleagues just pulled out the cost and the pain, that this would be something to allow us to reduce our Federal debt and the interest on that debt; if I thought for one minute that the Committee on Ways and Means was asking people to pay this increase in taxes because we were going to invest in our education system so that all of our kids, from whatever community, will be exposed to the education and the training that will be necessary for this great Republic of ours to maintain our competitive edge in technology.

But I do not know who would do this on our economy to just find out the cost of government and pull that out and say, why do they not pay for the pain when the majority party is not even concerned about the security of our Social Security system.

Now, the reason I am not annoyed is because I know that they are not serious about this. And the reason I know it is because there are a series of so-called ''tax bills'' that would be reaching the floor. Far more exciting, I would think, and far more creative and, of course, far more irresponsible is the idea that they are going to sunset the whole Code and they will do this on the week that Americans have to pay their income taxes. And I would suspect that when they go to sunset the Internal Revenue Code that they will say at some point in time in the distant future they will substitute the Code with something else.

Well, back in Harlem they call that a pig in the poke, that they do not buy what you do not know. And certainly they have not demonstrated the leadership to give us any alternative.

I have been here on the Committee on Ways and Means. The chairman has no bill. The Speaker has no bill to substitute the Code. But we will pull it up by the roots and let America decide what we are going to do in the future.

I know that they have to have something to go back home to at the end of these 2 years that they have been down here in charge, and so it does not bother me that that is the reason why they are bringing this to the floor. But it should bother some of the people on the tax writing committee that have to explain this.

I mean, give the other fellows an opportunity to talk about taxes. But for those who have the responsibility to explain it, give us a break.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, first of all the gentleman from New York talks about the quote out of Harlem called a pig in a pork or something like that. Let us come back to America and talk about a quote in the fine print. That is in the fine print I say to the gentleman from New York. Those tax increases, they are in the fine print. Those 85 new Federal programs are in the fine print. It is his administration that put it in the fine print. I would like to see him vote for that. Is that what he really supports? He really supports a tax increase for the people?

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman want an answer?

Mr. MCINNIS. I control the floor, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. MCINNIS. I tell the gentleman, go ahead and stand up and vote for those 84 programs. Go ahead. But let us be frank with the American people. Let us not tuck it away in a stack of papers this high and stick a tax increase in there. Let us not go into this stack of papers and stick down there 84 new Federal programs and then under the guise of a great economy and under the guise of we are going to save Social Security for Americans, under the guise of all good words that sound hopeful, we are going to stick this tax increase in there. Forget the pig in the pork stuff. Let us talk about the fine print.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I would say to my friend from New York who said he would be willing to vote for these $116 billion in new taxes and fees if he knew we could preserve Social Security and maintain and improve Medicare, I have good news for him. The Republicans are going to make good on our budget resolution that passed the floor and we are going to give him the opportunity to preserve Social Security and improve Medicare, including offering prescription drug coverage, without any tax increases. So I think we can do both. I think we can address the necessary problems, the problems that we face as a country as well as not adding to the already very high burden on the American people of the highest per capita tax that we have faced since World War II.

This resolution is great. It is straightforward. It just says, yes or no, do you support or not support the President's own budget proposal? It is interesting a Republican is offering it because I am going to have to vote no on it. I hope the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from Colorado do not mind.

The reason I have to vote no on it and the reason they are going to vote no on it is that it increases taxes in a number of critical areas. One is Medicare premiums. It contains $3.2 billion in increased Medicare premiums. Again we have disagreements on where Medicare ought to go maybe, but I do not think we want to overburden people even further on the Medicare system and take away even more funding from Medicare by adding $3.2 billion in increased Medicare premiums. $1.5 billion in increased energy costs at a time we are all worried about rising gas prices. $3.5 billion in increased death taxes, $12.8 billion in increased costs and fees on insurance products, primarily these are products that would lead to savings. These are ways in which Americans save for their retirement.

At a time when all economists, right, left and center, agree we have a savings crisis in this country, let us not add $12.8 billion in increased costs and fees on savings. I think that does not make any sense at all. A report issued recently, just last month by the Employee Benefits Research Institute showed that personal savings have dropped by 50 percent in the last 5 years. This is a crisis. It is not something that we ought to tax, it is something we ought to encourage, which is more savings. I am pleased my colleagues will have an opportunity to vote on the Clinton/Gore budget today. I commend my colleagues from Colorado and Nebraska for raising it.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I was asking my friend from the Committee on Ways and Means to yield only because I wanted to respond to what I thought, what I did think were questions to me, and, that is, I was saying that this was a pig in the poke, p-o-k-e, and he was saying that this was reduced to writing, his proposals. It does not make it more accurate just because he has been able to reduce it to words. It is words that are irresponsible. We cannot talk about the President's increase in taxes without talking about a package of benefits that the President has in this package.

But I think the American people, all I can ask them to do is that if you are sincere in the resolution, vote for it, because I am convinced that what you have done is to create a resolution to embarrass the President that has taken all of the facts as relate to the benefit of his budget and stripped that off and just talked about the pain of operating government. Anybody that would vote for this standing alone would be very, very silly. But since the proponent has come from your side, how you intend to handle this, I do not know.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT) a senior member of the Committee on Ways and Means, a member of the Committee on the Budget and someone who truly understands how to be responsible about facing up to the problems facing our great country.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am sitting back here wondering why this bill was out here just now, and I think I broke the code. In the House we try and pick an important day to bring something up. I remember we came out here on Valentine's Day and we passed the marriage tax penalty. I do not know where it is. It went off somewhere but everybody thought they got a valentine from the House of Representatives. Now today we have the Taxpayer Bill of Rights. We get that out here and everybody says, Oh, well, now, I've finally got some rights, right? Now we go over to the Committee on Ways and Means, and it must be tax time.

I cannot explain it any other way except over in the Committee on Ways and Means we are having a hearing about tearing up the Tax Code by the roots and imposing a 30 percent sales tax on everything. Just imagine you are going to buy a house and you are going to pay a 30 percent tax on it, or you are going to buy a car and you are going to pay a 30 percent tax on it. Or you are going to buy a shirt, and you are going to pay a 30 percent tax. That is what they are talking about over in the Committee on Ways and Means now. If the taxpayers had any sense at all, they would be over in the Committee on Ways and Means instead of hearing these silly bills about a Taxpayer's Bill of Rights.

This bill, the one we are on right now, is even more interesting. As the gentleman from New York has pointed out, you pass taxes to pay for something. The President put the ''something'' out there and said I am going to give you a prescription benefit for senior citizens, I am going to take care of the schools, I am going to take care of a whole lot of things and it will cost something. That is how you do it.

No, no, not my distinguished colleagues from the Committee on Ways and Means. They bring the money out here and say, Just vote for the money, just vote for the money, and then trust us, we'll spend it for you. I brought Mr. Bush's tax bill to the Committee on Ways and Means and said to them, this man is running nationwide saying if you elect me, I will give you $500 billion worth of tax cuts. And everybody on the committee has endorsed Mr. Bush. But none of them would vote for Mr. Bush's tax proposal when it was put before them. You have to wonder if this is not just some kind of electioneering rather than any substantive policy.

Bringing the President's bill out here, I consider it the highest form of flattery to be imitated. I put that bill in over in the Committee on Ways and Means a couple of weeks ago and everybody was all exercised when the headlines said, GOP in House Rejects Bush Tax Plan. They just were upset by that so they thought, Oh, I know what we'll do, we'll run out here with the President's taxes and throw it on the table. But it makes no sense. The President said what he would spend it for. We have not done anything about Medicare. We have not done anything about Medicaid. We have not done anything about Social Security. I think everybody is going to vote no on this.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. First of all the previous speaker talks about playing politics because of the fact that we bring out the tax increases that the Democrats want on the American people. I call it sunshine. Bring it out. Get into that big stack of papers and let us reveal exactly what is happening on taxes. You can take a look at the other programs, but let us talk about 84 new Federal government programs, the creation of 84 new programs under this budget. It is tucked away in the fine print.

Let us talk about those tax increases. That is not something we call fair game. That ought to be the legitimate practice of representing the people of this Nation. Tell them what you are about to do to them in regards to tax increases. Tell them about the fact that many Members on your side of the aisle oppose the death tax or at least when people are talking to their constituents they oppose the death tax but when the administration sends a bill over here, it increases the death tax. It does not talk about keeping it the same. It does not reduce the death tax. It increases the death tax. I hope the gentleman gets some expert advice. Come up here, and I would be happy to go over those death tax increases with him.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH).

Mr. HAYWORTH. I thank my colleague from Colorado for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this proposal, but I appreciate the courtesy of my colleagues for bringing this to the floor to really show the American people what is at work here. It is true there are two different philosophies and it is not a matter of breaking a code or, shoot, even listening to cellular telephone conversations, it is just simply a chance to lay out for the people what is clear.

Those on the left are committed to taking more of your hard-earned money to spend on more and more wasteful Washington programs. It is fine. It is a legitimate difference of opinion. But, Mr. Speaker, I would just ask my colleagues to focus on the teacher who visited me this morning with kids from the northern part of my district. I know it will shock the pundits and the spinmeisters who tell us people do not care about the money they send to the Federal Government, but not only the students but the teacher was very interested in taxation. The teacher shared with us the story that he and his spouse will have to write a check close to $600, a good portion of a paycheck for their salary, to the Federal Government this week begging the question, why do those who work hard and play by the rules always find themselves penalized?

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the President's multibillion-dollar tax increase. The simple fact that I understand the money belongs to the people, not to the Washington bureaucrats, and that for years there have been those denizens of the left who tell us again and again and again that families ought to sacrifice so that Washington can do more. Mr. Speaker, I think the opposite is true. I think that Washington bureaucrats ought to sacrifice so that families can have more.

Again not out of embarrassment but out of courtesy, since my friends on the left did not want to offer the current President of the United States a chance to have his tax increases debated, we brought this to the floor as a courtesy. They now have the opportunity to embrace the tax increases. Because, Mr. Speaker, the money has to come from somewhere, and it comes from the hardworking people like the teacher who visited with me this morning who works hard and plays by the rules and wonders where his money goes.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA) a senior member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the vice chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), for giving me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I have been in Congress a couple of years now, and I fought like the devil to get on the Committee on Ways and Means because I wanted to be in a position so I could hopefully shape the tax laws of this country. The committee also deals with Social Security, trade policy, Medicare, but it seems that service on the committee is to be taken for granted today because bills like this just pop up out of nowhere. This bill was introduced yesterday. So for you folks who are watching this thinking that Members have public hearings on bills, read bills, that is nonsense. It was popped in yesterday, we have to come to the floor today to defend it or to argue against it.

As I speak today, the Committee on Ways and Means, the real committee, is meeting across the road here in the Longworth Office Building and before us is a proposal to incept a national sales tax, to pull the tax code out by its roots, throw it away in the garbage can and in lieu you folks will pay a 30 percent sales tax on every good and service that you need or purchase.

But instead of being there to listen to that weighty debate, we are here talking about a bill that just was popped before us yesterday; but it is not new, because it was before us last year.

One of my Republican colleagues indicated that this is the President's budget we are voting on. My friends, it is not the President's budget, so do not be led astray. What it is, and I will read the first paragraph, ''Expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that the tax and user fee increases proposed by the Clinton-Gore administration in their fiscal year 2001 budget should be adopted.'' So the author of the bill says these things should be adopted. So in a short while we are going to have a vote on this, and we are all going to vote no.

Remember when we were growing up there used to be this Shmoo balloon. We blew up the Shmoo and put it in a knot and put it in these little shoes, and the game was to hit the Shmoo, the Shmoo would fall on the ground and it would pop back up. These folks introduced this bill, and the only reason is they want to knock it down.

Well, one would seem to think that after the debate from our Republican colleagues that in here there is an increase for the income tax, an increase for the corporate tax. None of that. These are fees and user taxes for people who use various services. If the user uses the service, they should pay; and if you do not use it, you do not pay. Some are good, some are bad. Some I support; some I do not support.

All right, let me challenge my Republican colleagues to respond to some of these suggested changes in the tax law. Under the corporate tax provision, prevent serial liquidation of U.S. subsidies of foreign corporations. Foreign corporations. What is wrong with that? There is not a one of them who knows what the heck that does.

Another one, require cash method banks to accrue interest on short-term obligations. Sounds like fair tax policy. I bet the author of the bill does not even know what the heck that does.

Here is another one. Prohibit tax deferral on contributions of appreciated property to swap funds. Closing a tax loophole. What is wrong with that? How many of you guys and ladies are going to pay that? Zero. A tax loophole.

But we are asked here to say no to all of these, even though in the entire context of the budget they make some sense. But the President's budget is not here. This is a little silly game we are playing today, and I want everyone to stay tuned, because we have got a sillier one coming on Thursday, and that is to repeal the income tax code, effective year 2002, and replace it with, we have not thought of that yet.

So they are going to repeal the income tax and one day maybe the Committee on Ways and Means I serve on, maybe not, will come up with an alternative, an alternative. But that alternative is not here today.

This is shenanigans. Let us play the game.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The Chair would remind all Members to address their comments to the Chair, and not to members of the audience and not to members outside this Chamber.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I just listened to this previous speaker. He talks about a silly game. Of course it does not mean much to him there is 82 new Federal programs coming in. Of course it does not mean much to him that the people of our country are going to have a tax increase. Why? He does not want the fine print of that Clinton-Gore budget discovered. It has been discovered.

I would caution my friend up here, he talks about why do this bill? Why are you bringing this up today? Well, you know what, it is an old adage: every action brings a reaction. This is the reaction. And what is it a reaction to? It is a reaction to the Democrats going out there and not just raising user fees, but raising death taxes; not just raising taxes, but creating new Federal programs.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I will not yield.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure all the Members on this side of the aisle, the Democrats on this side——

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I have control of the floor. Would the gentleman recognize the courtesies of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has indicated he will not yield.

The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman does not have a point of order, he is out of order; and he continues to be out of order in defiance of the Speaker's demands.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I am just standing here saying nothing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado may proceed.

Mr. MCINNIS. So when you have a reaction, do you want to know why we are here today about these tax increases, about these 80 new Federal programs? It is because you guys recommended them, your administration, GORE, the Vice President, and President Clinton. They come up with these new programs, 80 new Federal programs. Of course we are going to have a reaction to that. Of course we are going to have a reaction to increasing the death taxes.

I wish my colleague could come out to Colorado and visit with some of these ranching families, including some of my own, that are about to get nailed on this death tax. And you guys want to increase it? Of course you are going to have that kind of reaction.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 seconds to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA).

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, the question I was going to ask of my colleague from the Republican side of the aisle was in here is a provision to reinstate the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund excise tax. Evidently he is for oil spills. We want to clean them up. There is one going on right now in Maryland.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I hope I have not said anything to anger the Members on the other side. The only frustration that we feel is that it is very unusual for tax bills to come on the floor that are not sponsored by Members of the committee so that at least they could talk with us about them. It is even more unusual that the bill never would even come through the committee so that our staffs would have been attuned to understand better what the implications would be about the bill; and, of course, one has to be very suspicious when in the middle of the night a bill is introduced and it just reaches the floor on the Suspension Calendar.

Mr. Speaker, you cannot talk about hundreds of billions of dollars, or I guess some people can talk about hundreds of billions of dollars, without having it come before the committee; but we would like to believe that somewhere in here it makes some sense. Obviously, you have not really had enough time to make any sense out of this, because you are bringing up a bill and you are asking Democrats to vote for it, but the people who drafted the bill are asking Republicans to vote against it.

Now, I know people do not think much about the Congress, but this really confuses them. If you have a bill, at least you should be supporting it.

Those of us on the other side are saying this, that if the $100 billion we are talking about seems to be an excessive burden on the taxpayer, should you not in all fairness talk about what this is supposed to pay for? Are you not supposed to say what you have done is said to the President that I am prepared to ignore the Social Security System as it is, I am prepared to ignore the Medicare system, that I am not going to do anything about affordable drugs for the aged, that education is not on our agenda. So, Mr. President, when you talk about all of these things that you would like to see done, all we want to know is how much does it cost, and what we will do is extract these things, put them in a bill, bring it to the floor, and we will not vote for it, but we will ask Democrats to vote for it.

No, no, Mr. Speaker. This not only does not make sense, but I do not really think that it is sound legislative policy. If there is something that you want a vote for, be creative. But if you are going to bring legislation to the floor, and then when people pick up the newspapers tomorrow they find out that the Republicans brought this bill to the floor, House Resolution 467, but after they understood it, they voted against it, what can I tell you?

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important. The gentleman from New York has brought up the question of why would you bring up a resolution that you are going to vote no on? Do you know why? Because you are not bringing up the tax increases. We want to be open to the American taxpayers. We think the American taxpayers ought not to have 82 new Federal programs tucked away in several thousand pages of a budget. We want to bring it up. You all put it in the budget. I want to see if you got enough guts to vote for it on the floor. There is nothing wrong with that.

I believe in sunshine. I want to remind you that the previous speakers talked about the sunshine and how we have to have more of an open process and not have these secrets. That is what we are doing.

Everybody that disagrees with something in that budget ought to have a discussion right here on the House floor. We ought to discuss on this House floor whether or not we want 80 new Federal programs. I do not think we do. Certainly on the Republican side we do not want 82 new Federal programs. We do not want another $116 billion in tax increases on the Republican side, and especially we do not want an increase in the death tax.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I will not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time I told the gentleman I will not yield. I would appreciate the gentleman showing me the courtesy of controlling the floor and proceeding.

On our side of the aisle, take a look at our position on this death tax.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado has to yield for that purpose.

The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, on this side of the aisle, we take ardent opposition to the death tax; and we think in fact it should be expected, it should be a fiduciary duty of ours to bring it up on this House floor, to let people know what you are attempting to do with that death tax. The Clinton-Gore administration wants to increase the death taxes. That is hurting a lot of people out there. We ought to eliminate it.

What I would suggest to the gentleman is why do you not bring up a bill to eliminate the death tax and get everybody over here to support it. We could take away one of the greatest injustices in this tax system, and you can get the credit for it.

We need to have on this floor open exposure to what is happening; 82 new Federal programs. Of course we ought to have sunshine on it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, if I understand the gentleman correctly, if I understand the gentleman from Colorado correctly, the reason he is bringing up this bill today and asking his colleagues on the Republican side to vote against it was so we could kill it. In other words, he does not want to put this tax burden on the American people. So the gentleman has this new creative way of killing legislation by having Republicans to introduce the legislation, and then to kill it. That is his goal.

Well, let me share with the gentleman that your side has been killing legislation in a different way, and you have been very effective, and that is you just do not bring it up. The Social Security legislation, you have not brought up a bill; the Medicare legislation, you have not brought up a bill; giving affordable prescription drugs to the elderly people, you know how to kill that. You do not bring up a bill.

Since when in any legislative body, in any small community, in any county, in any city, in any State legislature, have we come up with such cockamamie idea that the way you kill legislation when you are in the majority is to introduce it? Now, you have got to take a deep breath. You kill legislation when you are in the leadership by introducing the legislation, and then you vote against it.

Now, I have to admit, since there has not been any positive legislation coming from your side in the last couple of years, that this keeps Members' voting records up. But can you imagine the precedent that you are setting, where with everything that you do not like, you introduce a bill and then tell people to vote against it? Talking about wasting taxpayers' money, this is really extreme.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

First of all, the gentleman asked, and I think it is a legitimate question, why do we bring up this bill to kill it?

It is kind of like a tiger in the cage. We have a tax tiger in the cage. This tiger is proposing to raise taxes. This tiger is proposing to raise the death tax. This tiger is proposing 80 new Federal programs. Why not lure it out of the cage? Once we have it out of the cage, we have all kinds of people who will help to take that down.

The American people, they want social security earnings, that waiver that we put in as Republicans; they wanted the Republicans' reduction on capital gains, when we sell our personal property; but they do not want 82 new Federal programs. Republicans and Democrats across the country do not want 82 new Federal programs.

So of course we want to lure the tiger out of the cage, get it out of its safe haven, out in open territory where we have a fair fight going on.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. DEMINT).

Mr. DEMINT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, it is interesting. I do not remember, when the Clinton-Gore administration has talked about their new budget, there is very seldom any publicity about the taxes and fees that are incorporated in this budget to pay for it. That is why I commend my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY), for introducing this bill, to show that not only do we bring it up and do not vote for it, but that very few in this House are willing to vote for the taxes and fees that have been proposed on the American people to pay for more giveaways from this administration.

Mr. Speaker, instead of raising the taxes and fees, we need to look at the terrible waste in the government. I will just give one example from the Employment and Training Administration, that receives $9 billion a year, more than three-fourths of the total discretionary Labor Department funds. But when asked by the Committee on Education and the Workforce for an accounting of these grants and contracts, the agency said the information was not available in single volume or in detail. In addition, they said it was too complicated to report every year.

Mr. Speaker, this is $9 billion in taxpayer money that is not accounted for. There are people in jail who have not been able to account for a lot less money than that.

We need to bring these taxes and fees to the public view, and we will see who votes on them and supports this part of the President's plan.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad the gentleman from Colorado explained the reasoning behind this, that the gentleman has something in the cage and he wants to kill it before it comes out of the cage. That has made more sense than anything I have heard on the floor today. The President's bill is in a cage, so the gentleman now takes the President's bill, takes it out of the cage, because he wants to kill it.

Mr. Speaker, well, now, that is creative legislation. I just would like to say that also in that cage is the social security system, the Medicare system, assistance to our aged for prescription drugs, the education system, the minimum wage system, systems for our national defense. All of these things are in that cage. I just hope that the gentleman does not kill it all.

It seems to me that the gentleman might do better in explaining, a more effective way than this tiger in the cage legislative process is by saying that we are not bringing up any positive legislation, so the gentleman just wants to take those things from the President's budget that might prove to be painful because they do not intend to provide the things that are good for this Republic, for this country, that can make this country proud.

We do not need Republican legislation and Democrat legislation, we do not need to be fighting each other over tigers in cages. What we have to do is pause, work together, and find out what is good for the Congress, but more importantly, what is good for the American people.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY).

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the compliment from my colleague, the gentleman from New York, on my creativity, but I did feel the necessity to unlock that cage so the world could see this tiger. Because what my friends on the other side of the aisle were doing was putting a tarp over it so nobody could see that in this cage was $116 billion worth of new taxes and 84 new programs.

I thought we needed to shed some light on this, and nobody on their side of the aisle took the leadership to show the public this. So I will back up my talk with the walk, and we can vote on it today.

Mr. Speaker, I also heard that we were trying to embarrass the President. Frankly, I wish the teachers that were here today were listening to this and showing it to their civics classes, because today, Mr. Speaker, we saw the difference. We saw the difference between us. We saw how they will advocate for a tax increase of $116 billion to support their 84 more programs. That is taxing and spending, Mr. Speaker. That is the difference.

We are here saying that the way we help everybody in America is that we control the growth of government. In a time when we are dealing with trillion dollar surpluses, that is not a time to grow government for more taxes. Now is the time to start saying, how do we help the people that are overpaying taxes?

Yes, I would be embarrassed to introduce a budget that included $116 billion of new tax increases, several of which include taxation of our senior citizens in Medicare, the Medicare system, creating higher fees for nursing homes, for Medicare+Choice programs.

When we talk about the tigers that are in the cage, what we are talking about is bringing out the new and the healthier tigers, the ones that we on the Republican side have, the healthy social security tigers, the healthy Medicare. I urge all of my colleagues to vote no.

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, when did President Clinton tell the American people that the era of big government was over?

You know, I really can't remember when he made that statement, and I'm willing to believe the President himself has forgotten. And I think it's obvious, with the $1.3 trillion in proposed spending along with $116 billion in tax and user fee increases included in the President's budget.

I think that in actuality the era of big government prior to the Clinton/Gore administration is indeed over. And that's because the Clinton/Gore administration brought in a new era of bigger government. I'm sure my colleagues will remember one of the largest tax increases in history. That was passed by a Democrat controlled House, a Democrat controlled Senate and signed into law by the Clinton/Gore administration. And each year, the administration continues to propose new taxes and user fee increases.

So we are here today to say stop! Stop spending money on wasteful federal programs. Stop increasing user fees and raising taxes on everyday Americans. The average two-income family tax burden is 39% of that family's income. We need to reduce the tax burden on Americans, not increase it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 467.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those having voted in favor thereof, the rules——

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. RANGEL. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, on the voice vote, what was the Speaker's announcement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present having voted in favor thereof, the rules are suspended and the resolution is agreed to, and the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) asked for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANGEL. The Chair is saying this bill passed?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair ruled that the motion was agreed to, and then yeas and nays were ordered.

Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on the motion will be postponed.

BUSINESS CHECKING MODERNIZATION ACT

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4067) to repeal the prohibition on the payment of interest on demand deposits, and for other purposes, as amended.

H.R. 4067

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Business Checking Modernization Act''.

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO DEMAND DEPOSIT ACCOUNTS AT DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.

(a) INTEREST-BEARING TRANSACTION ACCOUNTS AUTHORIZED.—

(1) FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.—Section 19(i) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 371a) is amended by inserting at the end the following: ''Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, a member bank may permit the owner of any deposit, any account which is a deposit, or any account on which interest or dividends are paid to make up to 24 transfers per month (or such greater number as the Board may determine by rule or order), for any purpose, to a demand deposit account of the owner in the same institution. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent an account offered pursuant to this subsection from being considered a transaction account for purposes of this Act.''.

(2) HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 5(b)(1) of the Home Owners' Loan Act (12 U.S.C. 1464 (b)(1)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

''(G) TRANSFERS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this paragraph, a Federal savings association may permit the owner of any deposit or share, any account which is a deposit or share, or any account on which interest or dividends are paid to make up to 24 transfers per month (or such greater number as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may determine by rule or order under section 19(i) to be permissible for member banks), for any purpose, to a demand deposit account of the owner in the same institution. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent an account offered pursuant to this subsection from being considered a transaction account (as defined in section 19(b) of the Federal Reserve Act) for purposes of the Federal Reserve Act.''.

(B) REPEAL.—Effective at the end of the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, section 5(b)(1) of the Home Owners' Loan Act (12 U.S.C. 1464 (b)(1)) is amended by striking subparagraph (G).

(3) FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT.—Section 18(g) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(g)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(3) TRANSFERS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, an insured nonmember bank or insured State savings association may permit the owner of any deposit or share, any account which is a deposit or share, or any account on which interest or dividends are paid to make up to 24 transfers per month (or such greater number as the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System may determine by rule or order under section 19(i) to be permissible for member banks), for any purpose, to a demand deposit account of the owner in the same institution. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prevent an account offered pursuant to this subsection from being considered a transaction account (as defined in section 19(b) of the Federal Reserve Act) for purposes of the Federal Reserve Act.''.

(b) REPEAL OF PROHIBITION ON PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON DEMAND DEPOSITS.—

(1) FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.—Section 19(i) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 371a) is amended to read as follows:

''(i) [Repealed]''.

(2) HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT.—The 1st sentence of section 5(b)(1)(B) of the Home Owners' Loan Act (12 U.S.C. 1464(b)(1)(B)) is amended by striking ''savings association may not—'' and all that follows through ''(ii) permit any'' and inserting ''savings association may not permit any''.

(3) FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT.—Section 18(g) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(g)) is amended to read as follows:

''(g) [Repealed]''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (b) shall take effect at the end of the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 3. INCREASED FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD FLEXIBILITY IN SETTING RESERVE REQUIREMENTS.

Section 19(b)(2) of the Federal Reserve Act (12 U.S.C. 461(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by striking ''the ratio of 3 per centum'' and inserting ''a ratio not greater than 3 percent''; and

(2) in clause (ii), by striking ''and not less than 8 per centum''.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH).

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, under current law, there is a prohibition on the payment of interest on demand deposits, particularly as they affect business institutions. This prohibition has been in law since 1933.

What this bill does is offer and allow banks the right to make daily sweep adjustments and interest to be paid in these daily sweeps to business accounts, and then eventually, that is, at the end of 3 years, for the prohibition on the payment of demand interest to be fully removed.

In essence, this bill symbolically is the most pro-customer banking legislation in modern times. It is pro-small business, for it will allow for the first time small businesses, in small rural settings in particular, to be paid interest on their hard-earned extra funds or savings. It is pro-small bank because small banks are not in a position to use some of the sophisticated techniques of their larger bank competitors in this particular arena. It is pro-competition because it simply says the market should act freely without legislative intervention.

The market today is stilted. One reason banks in the savings business have been declining in size is because of legislative protectionism of this kind of nature. It is no accident that over the last 3½ decades or so, the banks' share of the saved dollars have been reduced from about two-thirds to one-quarter because Americans want to go to places they can get the greatest return on their investments, and they have found when there are legislative restraints, that they have incentives to move assets elsewhere, to money market mutual funds, to CMAs of securities firms.

The American business community deserves a better deal. As far as banks are concerned, we are finding finally the recognition that protectionism is counterproductive.

Let me say as strongly as I can that banking, just like any other business in America, if it is going to be sustaining, has to be concerned for the customer. Pro-customer institutions in America survive. Those that have restraints on dealing with the customer are placed in a more difficult position.

Mr. Speaker, what this bill in the final measure does is say that the free market will prevail, that the customers' concerns will be dominant, and that it is no accident, again, that customers throughout the country, as symbolized by their associations in business and banking, have come to support this legislation. It has been a long time in coming, but I am convinced it is the right thing to do.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4067, the Business Checking Modernization Act. I, too, would like to associate myself with all of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services.

As a result of our bipartisan work on this and other legislation, today we are able to take another step in the modernization of our financial services industry. The ban on interest-bearing checking accounts was adopted in the Great Depression out of fear that banks seeking business accounts would bid against each other with higher interest rates and thus contribute to bank insolvencies.

In the 1980s, Congress recognized these concerns had faded and removed the legislative prohibition against paying interest on the checking accounts of individuals. Of course, Congress was responding to market forces, too, and the tremendous disintermediation that had taken place.

Today we complete that work by permitting the payment of interest on business demand deposits. This is something we should have done years ago. We do it today.

The current law and market conditions prevent many small businesses from obtaining easy access to interest-bearing checking accounts. For this reason, the repeal of the ban on interest-bearing business checking accounts is strongly supported by the business community. A yes vote for H.R. 4067 promotes healthy competition within the financial services community for commercial checking accounts, which can only benefit the business community, particularly the small business community, with more efficient, cost-effective financial services.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, to control the time, to the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentlewoman from Oregon (Ms. HOOLEY) will control the time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE.)

There was no objection.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me first express my enormous gratitude to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) for his tremendous cooperation on this issue, as well as the minority party in general.

But then I would like to note that this is a bill that has been the bedrock concern of one Member of the United States Congress and that is the gentleman from Washington (Mr. METCALF), who is retiring at the end of the year. If there is a bill and sponsor which have been identified together more, I do not know what it is in the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I express to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. METCALF) particular appreciation and gratitude for his thoughtfulness on this piece of legislation, but also for his enormous thoughtfulness on the committee on which he serves. I am very grateful for his leadership and friendship.

Mr. METCALF. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my appreciation of the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), the ranking member, for their strong support of repealing an archaic Great Depression era statute preventing banks from offering interest on business checking accounts.

I am pleased to say that H.R. 4067 enjoys bipartisan support and was passed by the full Committee on Banking and Financial Services by voice vote.

The current prohibition against banks offering interest-bearing business checking accounts makes no sense. Allow me to highlight what a couple of banks have said to me about this issue.

A banker from North Carolina said repeal would save maintaining a separate sweep money market account and expenses related to tracking the number of sweeps per month to ensure compliance.

A banker from Texas said, small businesses have a right to earn interest on their money and national and State banks should have a right to offer this service.

A banker from Wisconsin said that they use a sweep account to pay interest but that repealing the prohibition would make their job easier and more competitive.

A banker from Nebraska summed up his views even more succinctly about abolishing this statute. The sooner the better.

We should vote today to remove this unnecessary regulation and allow banks the opportunity to better address business concerns of their local communities without having to undergo costly, cumbersome procedures.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan has written in support of repealing this prohibition against paying interest on business checking accounts.

The legislation also enjoys broad-based support among others: The U.S. Chamber of Commerce; the world's largest business federation, the National Federation of Independent Businesses, which represents over 600,000 small and independent businesses; America's Community Bankers; the American Banking Association; and the Association for Financial Professionals which represents over 10,000 cash management professionals within the corporate sector.

Let us pass this bill today and move forward to help our financial institutions be more competitive in the marketplace and free small business from outdated regulations.

Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), the ranking member, and the gentleman from Iowa (Chairman LEACH), as well as the gentleman from Washington (Mr. METCALF), for their leadership in bringing to the floor today H.R. 4067, the Business Checking Modernization Act.

This bill is very simple. It allows businesses to earn interest on their checking accounts.

The ban on paying interest on commercial accounts was adopted during the Depression for policy reasons that are no longer relevant today. The banking regulators all agree that this legislation is overdue.

This legislation will promote healthy competition within the financial services community for commercial checking accounts, which will benefit all businesses, especially small businesses who will now be able to earn interest on the business checking accounts.

Currently, business customers are able to earn interest on their bank checking accounts only by placing their funds in banks that are able to offer sweep accounts. So this is really good for big businesses and big banks where they can afford to offer these sweep accounts.

Other businesses use securities firms that offer liberal check writing services or ATM access or similar services through interest-paying transaction accounts.

This compromise legislation appropriately provides a 3-year transition period so that financial institutions that offer sweep accounts or other concessions in lieu of interest can make necessary changes in their pricing to accommodate the repeal of this prohibition.

Finally, during this transition period, all insured depository institutions will be able to offer interest through a 24-transfer per month, money market accounts.

Again, this is a very simple bill, long overdue, that allows businesses to earn interest on their checking accounts with a 3-year period for implementation.

Because the bill opens up competition in the business checking market in a fair and equitable manner, I urge my colleagues to support its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me just say that historically what occurred is that Congress disadvantaged America's business community to protect its banks. Then as time went on, it became clear that the effect was that Congress disadvantaged its banking community in favor of banking competitors. What this legislation amounts to is a free market return to basic American competitive values. It is a congressional ''mea culpa'' to America's business and banking community. It is good for the country, good for the financial system and good for the precept of a free and unfettered market that this country stands for, and I urge its adoption.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the legislation before us. Today in the financial services sector the laws, rules and regulations of the 1930's have little to do with safety and soundness of today's banks. Before us we have legislation to bring some of the laws pertaining to commercial checking accounts into the 21st Century. While I do not consider this package perfect, it does constitute a reasonable middle ground to banks and industry which must be preserved as this legislation moves forward.

This legislation contains a three year transition period that gives banks the ability to sit down with their business customers and decide how their accounts are best served. We must note that while banks have been prohibited from paying interest to their commercial accounts, they have been offering other services to attract their accounts. This three year transition period must be preserved.

In this transition period we give banks the ability to expand their current sweep activities. Sweeps are a way that banks can currently pay interest on commercial accounts by moving a portion or all of the money out of the account into an interest investment, like treasury bills, which is then redeposited in the checking account at a specified time with interest. Currently, banks are only allowed to do this six times a month. This legislation increases this to 24 times a month so an account could be swept every night giving those with smaller balances the ability to participate in these activities.

One of the issues that has troubled me about this legislation is the new cost it will impose upon banks, particularly small banks. This is not the first time a bill with these provisions has come before the House, but in the past the cost of this legislation was at least in part addressed. Last year Laurence Meyer from the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System came before the Banking Committee and stated in this testimony that quote—The higher costs to banks would be partially offset by the interest on reserve balances—end quote. The problem arises because the initiative that allowed Federal Reserve Banks to pay interest on reserve balances is not included in this bill now before us.

I have introduced legislation with the sponsor of this bill [Mr. METCALF] and the Gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] to address this problem. The chairman of the Banking Committee has been supportive of this effort by scheduling a hearing on this issue in the near future. I hope that if this bill is conferenced with a Senate bill that contains the authority to allow Federal Reserve Banks to pay interest on reserves we could accept those provisions. If not, I fear that the cost of this legislation will simply be passed onto the commercial customers through higher loan rates. Without the Federal Reserve Bank interest authority the benefits of this legislation could be lost.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this bill.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill, H.R. 4067, which was reported out of the Banking and Financial Services Committee on a bipartisan basis. This bill will repeal a curious prohibition on banks and thrifts paying interest on business checking accounts. It will help community banks and countless small businesses currently not able to offer or compete for "sweep" accounts that move money out of non-interest earning accounts into other accounts that will earn interest for corporate customers. During the transition period, a new daily sweep—or 24-hour transaction per month allowance—would be an option.

Although there is a small rift within and among the various financial institutions, on the main, the repeal of the prohibition is a shared goal. The bill is broadly supported by small businesses. Not surprisingly, a National Federation of Independent Business membership survey shows that 86 percent of small business owners support this repeal that would allow their checking accounts to earn interest. H.R. 4067 does not mandate the payment of interest. It merely removes the last vestiges of controls on bank accounts that arose during the Great Depression. In so doing, the bill will make possible more competition and hopefully better service to business customers.

Although an immediate repeal would be sensible, there are some entities that have developed the programs and systems to limit the effect of the existing prohibition and that would prefer a "phase in" of the commercial interest repeal. The Committee found that three years from the date of enactment was a good compromise from the starting point of one year and those seeking a six-year sunset period. I am uncomfortable with any further extension of the delay in allowing interest on business checking accounts, a sound public policy change that should really be effective as soon as possible. Three years is long enough time in this Internet e-world. Six years is just too long.

I am pleased that what we have before this House today is not a negative bill. It is a straightforward bill that does not adversely affect customers or undercut our laws that protect safety and soundness of our financial institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I do need to take this opportunity to suggest, however, that here we are again "modernizing" another banking law. This one to help community bankers and small businesses. Yet there is so much consumer protection in financial services that has yet to even receive a hearing, let alone action. We need a consumer financial modernization act that will modernize Truth in Lending limits, high cost mortgage protections, and vital consumer law updates. To just stand still is to lose ground in today's dynamic marketplace and consumers are losing ground. It is well past the time that this Congress should act upon some of the positive, proactive proposals introduced by many of our Colleagues so that these measures might be enacted into law. Sound consumer relief and modernization is needed and should be the order of the day.

I do have reservation about a provision of the bill added in the Committee markup. This provision changes the reserve requirement in the Federal Reserve Act for transaction accounts to give the Federal Reserve the discretion to lower reserve ratios to as little as nothing because the minimum statutory ratios for reserve requirements. Although the Federal Reserve has not argued against this provision, they have stated that this is authority they would not use. However, its addition would certainly shift the field of lobbying solely to the Federal Reserve for the purpose of lowering bank reserves. The Board should use extreme caution in exercising this new flexibility being conveyed in this bill especially if the policy is to reduce the reserves to "zero."

The inherent stability of the banking system and the implementation of monetary policy dictate that a minimal level of reserves is appropriate. Although their role may have waned somewhat, lower reserve levels could lead to increased volatility in the federal funds interest rate, which in turn could harm institutions attempting to manage their clearing and reserves needs. Further, as I stated in the markup of the bill, consultation with the Congress on any adjustment to reserve requirements would be a prudent course of action by the Federal Reserve.

I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting this bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4067, the Business Checking Modernization Act. This critically needed legislation would lift the sixty-five year prohibition against banks paying interest on business checking accounts.

Present law restricts the ability of the banking industry to provide interest-bearing checking accounts for businesses. H.R. 4067 would repeal this Depression-ear ban on such accounts by allowing banks to competitively price their products and services in an open market to business customers. Additionally, this legislation offers an important opportunity for small business owners to establish a more complete relationship with their financial service provider.

I applaud Chairman LEACH and Representative METCALF who when crafting this vital piece of legislation recognized that a transition time period is necessary to allow banks to implement these sweeping changes that would alter the long-standing way banks have been conducting their relationships with business customers. Because of the prohibition against paying interest on corporate demand deposits, many banks have structured their relationship with business customers to take this into account by providing additional services, such as handling payroll accounts, or establishing lower loan rates for these customers. A substantial transition period is needed to allow for the conclusion of these existing relationships and provides banks an opportunity to enter into new relationships with their business customers that are priced to reflect the change in law. I strongly support a reasonable transition period to allow banks to adapt to these new banking practices. Should this bill go to conference, I believe that it would be detrimental to the banking industry to agree to any shorter transition period than that provided in H.R. 4067.

While I do strongly support the positive changes this bill will bring to the banking industry, I do have one concern that this bill failed to address. Several banks in my district have expressed their alarm that the shift towards a direct interest payment on business checking accounts will impose new burdensome costs on banks because of the interest payments themselves and the cost of establishing these new types of accounts. In 1998, when we passed legislation similar to H.R. 4067, we provided banks with an offset for these expenses. In this previous bill the Federal Reserve would have paid interest on required and excess reserves that depository institutions maintain as balances at Federal Reserve Banks. The Federal Reserve has testified in support of paying interest on these "sterile reserves" because it could induce banks to increase their reserve balances.

I am encouraged by Chairman LEACH's promise to further explore this option by holding a Banking Committee hearing on this issue on May 5, 2000. I believe that the hearing will reveal a strong need by the banking industry to ease the cost-burdens associated with this bill and the Federal Reserve's willingness to collaborate on this matter. It is my hope that the Chairman will support allowing for the payment of interest on sterile reserves, as provided for in related legislation in the Senate, should this bill go to conference.

I applaud Chairman LEACH and Representative METCALF for their hard work on this initiative to increase fair competition in the marketplace and economic efficiency in banking practices. It is my hope that we can continue to work towards perfecting this bill at conference in the near future. I urge all my colleagues to vote in support of the Business Checking Modernization Act.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4067, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will now put the question on each motion to suspend the rules on which further proceedings were postponed earlier today in the order in which that motion was entertained.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

H.R. 4163, by the yeas and nays; and

H. Res. 467, by the yeas and nays.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first such vote in this series.

TAXPAYER BILL OF RIGHTS 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 4163, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4163, as amended, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 424, nays 0, not voting 10, as follows:

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. JOHN. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall number 116 and also 117 I was unavoidably detained and was absent for those two votes. Had I been present I would have voted "yea" on 116 and "nay" on 117.

MOTION TO INSTRUCT CONFEREES ON H.R. 1501, JUVENILE JUSTICE REFORM ACT OF 1999

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONYERS moves to instruct conferees on the part of the House that the conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill, H.R. 1501, be instructed to insist that the committee of conference meet and report a committee substitute that includes both:

(1) Measures that aid in the effective enforcement of gun safety laws with the scope of conference and

(2) Common-sense gun safety measures that prevent felons, fugitives and stalkers from obtaining firearms and children from getting access to guns within the scope of conference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) will each be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS).

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

My colleagues, I am delighted to bring this motion to instruct conferees on the part of the House to insist that the committee of conference meet and report a committee substitute.

This motion to instruct suggests to our committee of conference members that we include both measures that aid in enforcement of gun safety and also include common sense gun safety measures that prevent felons, fugitives and stalkers from obtaining firearms and children from getting access to guns within the scope of the conference, and that the conference meet immediately.

I am joined on this motion by the gentlewoman from Indiana (Ms. CARSON), the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD), and the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY). What we are trying to do is to make it clear that this Congress and our instructions include that we meet immediately on our conference and report both sensible gun violence and gun enforcement provisions. We can and should do both.

The President of the United States has been trying to get our conference moving and, hopefully, this motion to instruct will accomplish that very important objective. Remember, the truth is that enforcement of gun laws is up under the Clinton administration. Gun prosecutions are up 22 percent in the Clinton years, the number of people behind bars for violent crimes with guns is considerably up, and violent gun crimes are down by 35 percent.

No President has ever had a more successful record in driving down violent crime than President Clinton, but we should do more and we want to do more. And so the only way that that can happen is that my distinguished colleague, the chairman of the committee, urge that we meet in conference and get the gun violence and the gun enforcement and the juvenile justice matters resolved, and get something on the floor and get a law on the books, or additional laws, as soon as possible.

This motion says that we can do better. So if we want to separate ourselves from the extremities, from the inaction, if we want to associate ourselves with the clear sentiment of the vast majority of Americans, this is our opportunity to do so.

This motion tells the chairman of the conference to stop not meeting, to stop hiding behind process, and to get to work with a conference meeting that deals with both existing loopholes in gun laws and with stronger enforcement by closing loopholes that exist.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I say to my good friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), that I am with him a hundred percent on this resolution. We are going to support it. It asks for what we think ought to happen. We ought to have a meeting. We ought to discuss these things. We ought to settle them.

I would point out parenthetically that paragraph number 2, ‘‘common sense gun safety measure that prevent felons, fugitives and stalkers from obtaining firearms and children from getting access to guns,’’ is already the law.

The Brady bill, the Brady Law, Title 18, section 922(g), already prohibits fugitives, stalkers, and felons from buying or possessing a gun. And children already cannot buy handguns. I am proposing in my offer a ban on assault weapons being available to youngsters.

Now, I have been proposing a gun control bill for many, many months. Last November 4, I sent a copy of it to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), and we have been talking about it on and off for, lo, these many months.

The proposal that I have offered accepts the trigger lock requirement, in fact, as a stand-alone bill, it passed 311–115; a juvenile Brady that says, if a juvenile commits a disqualifying crime, they will never be eligible for a gun. That passed 395–27. We passed a ban on these large ammunition clips, 10 cartridges or more. That passed by voice vote. And then we had a prohibition on juveniles from possessing assault weapons, which I mentioned earlier. That passed 254–69.

So we have already passed these things. We could have the makings of a decent gun bill. There is one sticking point and that is the so-called ‘‘gun show loophole.’’

Now, we are confronted with two versions of a solution to the gun show loophole. We have the solution of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) out here, which is, in my humble opinion, unacceptable because it limits the instant check time to one day.

Now, we can get 95 percent of the applicants in one day. But there is 5 percent that require three business days. They are not easily cleared up. They are not easily answered. And those are the difficult ones. Those are the ones that may have criminal records. Those may be the people we do not want to get a gun. And, therefore, we need three business days. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) does not allow that, so I cannot accept that.

Now, over here we have the other Democrat gun show provision, and that is by the great Senator from New Jersey, Senator LAUTENBERG. Well, his bill literally defines gun shows out of existence. He has the three business days. That is fine. But he also requires such burdensome provisions on people who are conducting a gun show that it is just unsupportable. It is too much the other way.

I propose meeting in the middle, a compromise, that requires every gun sold at a gun show to have an instant check, the purchaser, that requires three business days for the 5 percent that we have trouble getting the instant check on, and creating a class of instant-check registrars who are not licensed gun dealers but, nonetheless, are certified to be able to provide the instant check so the volume can be dealt with.

Now, that is a solution that meets the gun show loophole. It tightens that existing law, gives us the trigger locks, gives us a ban on the large ammunition clips, gives us a juvenile Brady, keeps assault weapons from the children.

What are we waiting for? Nobody will talk to me.

The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) has written me a letter saying he will not negotiate with me unless and until the Senator calls a meeting of the conferees. Let us confront him with an accomplished fact, a fait accompli. Let us say, here is our proposal.

Now, all I need is three Democrats to join and we will have a proposal that they cannot ignore. What do they say? An offer they cannot refuse. Join me and ask the President to help. Give me just three signatures and we are off to the races.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman because I think we have created a way to get there. The 1-day check with the 95 percent that will clear in one day, plus the escape hatch for those who may take longer, two more days.

And so, when the gentleman asks, what we are waiting for, I want him to know I am not waiting for anything. I think that is an excellent way to resolve the matter. I only wish this were the conference committee itself. But I would urge that we both join in together in urging our dear chairman of the committee, based upon this, that we send him a letter telling him what we are agreeing to on the floor if he is not looking at it at this moment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I think that is a great idea. I say to my friend, I will join him in the letter or he can join me. But I suggest that he and I finish our job over here and confront the distinguished Members of the other body, as we refer to them deferentially, with an accomplished fact, our gun bill; and I think they will take it, and then we will have put this honorably to rest.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will continue to yield, I thank the gentleman very much. I am also very grateful for his support of the motion to instruct the conferees.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am now pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Indiana (Ms. CARSON).

Ms. CARSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of his motion to instruct conferees. I am joined by the honorable gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD).

This motion to instruct, Mr. Speaker, promotes the enforcement of existing gun safety laws and advocates for common sense gun safety measures that protect children.

Just today, Mr. Speaker, in my clips that I receive from my Indianapolis office, in Fort Wayne, Indiana, an 8-year-old boy is lucky to be alive after his 12-year-old brother accidentally shot him while playing with a gun.

In Franklin, Indiana, Mr. Speaker, a boy charged in the fatal shooting of his cousin has been moved to a private residential treatment center in Pennsylvania. The boy was charged with criminal recklessness for tampering with his father's illegal gun when he fired it, killing 7-year-old Curtis Smith.

Mr. Speaker, I have been intrigued by the colloquy that has occurred between the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and believe that what I heard is that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) is willing to support the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and others in their motion to instruct the conferees. I am very excited about that. I think it is a time that is long overdue, and I applaud the two gentlemen for their agreement on moving forward with sensible gun legislation in the way that they have described.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS).

This motion to instruct promotes the enforcement of existing gun safety laws and advocates for common-sense gun safety measures that protect children.

I am outraged that once again we are standing here talking about gun violence and yet Congress has failed to act and protect our children.

Over three weeks ago, the House went on record in support of the juvenile justice conference committee holding a meeting within two weeks. As of today, that deadline goes ignored.

We are now standing here again to ask the conferees to move forward and take action.

What are we waiting for? How many more children have to die? This Congressional do-nothing approach on gun violence shows Americans that the NRA lobby is more important than our children.

We have all too often witnessed the devastating effect that gun violence has on our children. Nearly 12 children die each day from gunfire in America, approximately one every two hours. That is the equivalent of a classroom of children every two days.

Next week is the anniversary of Columbine and we still have not passed strong common-sense gun legislation. We have seen a six-year-old shoot and kill his classmate and yet we have failed to provide preventative measures to protect our children.

Recently, I spoke with children from an elementary school within my district (the 10th district of Indiana) about gun violence. I asked the children how many had guns in their homes. About half raised their hands. I asked how many knew where these guns were in their homes. Most of them knew where to find the guns.

The answers to these questions show the scary reality that children face in this country.

I call on the Republican leadership to join together with Democrats in order to promote passage of sensible gun legislation that closes the gun show loophole, requires registration and licensing for all gun owners, and provides child-safety devices on handguns.

We, as Members of Congress, have the great privilege of establishing laws that promote the well-being of Americans, but with that privilege comes great responsibility to do what is right and what is ethical—and that is, supporting strong gun safety legislation and protecting our children.

Please, stand up for our children and support the motion to instruct.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM).

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I think that every one of us here today wants to support this resolution because, on its face, I cannot imagine anybody who is not for effective enforcement of gun safety laws or common sense gun safety measures. That is certainly where I am, and that is where I have been all along on these matters.

I thought the chairman of the committee expressed it very well a few minutes ago that we come to a point now in the debate over what is going on with the juvenile crime bill in discussing the gun issues where common sense ought to prevail. And common sense is very straight forward.

I know because I have been down that road and presented something pretty close to what the chairman has proposed that I am in agreement on now to try to compromise this matter, and we never got a vote on it on the floor. Instead, we had the two opposite ends arguing their motions and their amendments, and they had votes on those and not on the underlying proposition.

The reality is that when they go to a gun show to get their gun and want to buy it, there are certain dealers there and there are certain people who are not and they go to buy and they get an instant check in a matter of just a few minutes, if we have a provision which all of us agree on where an unlicensed person goes to the gun dealer who is the president of the gun show and asks that it be checked.

The problem with it is that about half the States have records that show if they have been arrested for a felony, whether they were convicted or it was dismissed or whether a plea bargain occurred, or whatever; and in those cases the check that they are doing will not show up the answer to that. So if their name goes in, bang, they find that out in a matter of just a few minutes. But in that tiny fraction of those whose names appear from the other 25 States that do not have the disposition results, they just are going to show that they were arrested for a felony, they might or might not be qualified and until the courthouse opens on Monday morning we are not going to know.

And it is only reasonable that we conform the check time for those few people who have their names appear to the current three business-day wait to do the check. And I think that is the right solution. That is the common sense solution.

The problem also, though, is that effective enforcement of gun safety is not what this administration has been doing on other levels; and I am really concerned about that. That is why we had Project Exile out here today in part.

The fact of the matter is that we are talking about the fact that many laws have not been enforced that are on the books. There are some 20,000 of them out there across the country. What I think is great about the bill we passed earlier today called Project Exile is that it provides a grant amount of money to the States and says to those States, for all their criminal justice needs if they want it, they can have this money, this $100 million over 5 years that is available, if they will simply agree to do what Virginia has done; and that is to provide that for those who are found to be in the possession of a handgun, carrying it during the course of the commission of a violent crime or drug trafficking offence or using it in that case, there is going to be a tack-on minimum mandatory 5-year sentence without the right to parole in addition to the underlying sentence.

They get an additional tack-on of 5 years minimum mandatory sentence if they are found to have the gun in their possession during the commission of those crimes. And if the State does not have that law, it can still qualify to get the grant money if it would agree to provide an understanding with the U.S. attorney in the area or the attorney general for the whole State to prosecute with this agreement those who are convicted felons in the State who are found in simple possession of a gun, whether they are in the commission of a crime or not. Because under the existing Federal law, there is a minimum mandatory sentence for 5 years there, too.

Why is this important? This is important because it is truly an effective gun measure. It provides deterrents that say, we are not going to stand for anybody using a gun in the commission of a crime; and if they commit a crime and the States adopt these rules, and most of the crimes in the States are in the States, not in the Federal system, then they are going to go away for a long period of time. And we have avoidable tragedies that are going to finally be avoidable.

They are avoidable in the sense that if they have people out on the streets who have been locked up before who have committed these violent crimes and go back out again, they are there to commit crimes again. And most of the violent crime with guns in this country, unfortunately, are committed by those who have been in prison previously.

So those tragedies are avoidable if the States will come forward and enact what Virginia has done in Project Exile and what we have encouraged in this bill we have passed earlier today, and that is a minimum mandatory 5-year sentence on top of what other crime they have if they committed it with a gun. And in addition, of course, we have the deterrent message that is involved in it. That is the kind of enforcement we need.

We are here today, though, talking about in this motion to instruct getting together on another bill. And I am all for doing it. I am for the safety locks, and I am for trying to have a small capacity involved in this with fewer clips; and I am for a lot of other things that are in that bill.

The sticking point in the gun shows can be resolved. It should be resolved. Common sense, which is the other part of this resolution, says it should be. I am for common sense. Let us adopt this motion to instruct and get it done.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY).

Mrs. MCCARTHY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have to say, since last August, we have certainly been trying to meet and come up with some agreement. But this is spring, and spring is always the rebirth and the rethinking and the replanting and the regrowing. So maybe because we finally are seeing the American people and maybe because the Million Moms March is coming up on Mother's Day we are getting a lot of pressure to get actually something done because the American people want something done.

Certainly this side of the aisle is more than willing to work and hopefully we can get a bill done because I have always said, it does not matter whether you are Republican or Democrat, we should be protecting our children and our citizens. We certainly do support the Senate-backed gun safety provisions. They included closing the gun show loophole, banning high capacity ammunition clips, and requiring child safety locks on all new guns. To me those are all common sense.

Today obviously we have seen the President, he has been right next door in Maryland signing legislation that requires child safety locks in that State. New York State, we have got Governor Pataki putting forth his initiatives on gun violence in this country. We are seeing it with all our governors. I am very happy to see that the NRA has decided to work with us and say, well, maybe we should be doing something here today. I am very happy to work with the NRA. We always have been. Certainly I am sure they will be sitting with us when we come up to the conferees.

The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and I, we agree on something else. Today we passed and voted on the gentleman from Florida's bill, but I happen to think that Enforce, which is a bill that the gentleman from Michigan and I are there with, would add more resources to trying to stop the gun violence in this country, and the only way we are going to be able to do that, if we give our police, our ATF, and our local prosecutors and Federal prosecutors the backup that they need.

I hope while we are all in this good mood right before we go back on vacation that we can get all this done. I would be absolutely thrilled. Actually you might see me smile for the first time in a number of years. But all kidding aside, I am happy that we have come to this point. I am happy we have come to this point and I am happy that we are actually talking, because since August we have lost too many children on a daily basis, we have lost too many citizens on a daily basis, and we do not even have a count on how many are injured and have survived.

So anything that we can do to move this forward, to show the American people that we do care, because I have to tell you, the American people are starting to have a lot of second thoughts about the sanity that was inside this building. If we could all come together and work together to have a meaningful bill passed, with this motion I certainly support it and thank everybody for getting us to this point.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MCCARTHY). She is certainly sincere. I just am concerned that expectations are so high that passing this sort of legislation is somehow going to fill the hearts and the souls of our young people that now somehow are empty and consumed with violence with sweetness and light. There is much more to the problem of the culture that encourages antisocial conduct, much more profound than simply restricting the availability of the weapons that cause all the problems.

I do not mean to demean the fact that we need legislation to narrow the access to these weapons of destruction, but to think that that is going to solve the problem I think misses the mark. There were some 17 Federal laws and some 14 State laws that were violated at Columbine. Adding more laws, I still think it is worth the effort, I do not denigrate that. It is worth the effort. We have to keep the focus on these things. But let us not end our quest for a solution to the wanton destruction of life, especially among our young people thinking if we remove the instruments of death somehow we will remove the incentives for treating life as a thing and as a throwaway item.

As I have said before, and I welcome this opportunity to say it again, we have a bill, we want your support, we have had it for many months, and the only contentious part is the gun show part, and the gun show part that we propose is a middle ground between the Dingell amendment and the Lautenberg amendment. Let us get on this and let us confront the Senate with it, which is another galaxy as we all know, but let us confront them with it and say, Here it is, we need your support.

If we can do that, as I say, the problem, the immediate problem of getting a decent, common sense response to the high school killings can be solved. I believe we can do it. I hate to be cynical. I hate to think that some people want the issue and not a bill, not a solution. I do not believe that. I refuse to believe that. I will not believe that. But right now we need cooperation and consultation. Let us put politics aside and let us agree that we have a plan and it is going to work.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds to thank the gentleman, the chairman of the committee for his remarks, and also to thank him for joining in the letter that we are sending to the chairman of the conference committee, ORRIN HATCH.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD) who has worked on gun safety for a couple of Congresses now.

Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Speaker, let me first thank the ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) for offering this motion, bringing us back to this point where we can engage in, hopefully, dialogue in conference. I would like to thank the gentleman from Illinois for his position in wanting to be open to get this to conference and to resolve this issue.

We have long struggled as mothers and grandmothers in seeing so many children being killed at the touch of a gun, a gun that a trigger lock can be placed on and perhaps prevent the killings of over 13 children per day. Yes, I have introduced a bill in the 105th Congress and the 106th Congress talking about child safety locks. I looked at that as just common sense legislation, nothing too onerous but simply trying to make sure that our children are safe. There are mothers who are crying to me in the area that I represent in Watts, one of the most violent areas in this country, where violence has just absolutely permeated the streets. They are asking for this type of safety measure that will help us to bring our children back to some sensibility and hopefully will bring families together.

I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that this is not the end-all of all of it but it is the beginning of helping us cope with this issue. I say to the chairman and the ranking member, I hope in their final words today that they will give us some definitive dates or date by which we can convene this conference so that we can speak to the many questions that mothers are asking and fathers are asking about gun safety and their children. I say to them that this Nation has entrusted us with trying to do the best we can in the halls of Congress to bring about sensible legislation that will protect our children. I think this is a move in the right direction. I urge the chairman and the ranking member to give us dates as they leave today to help us to come to the point that we want to get to.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio (Mrs. JONES).

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this motion directs members of the conference committee on the Senate-passed bipartisan gun violence bill to immediately meet and report both sensible gun violence and gun enforcement provisions. We can and should do both.

Instead, the majority bowing to the NRA has tried to stifle both gun violence legislation and gun enforcement legislation. They will not have the conference committee meet even though they tell the President they will try to do otherwise. Just weeks ago, the NRA attacked President Clinton with the rhetoric that made members of the majority party run away from them. They even opposed the Lofgren motion that directed the conference to meet.

Even NRA sees that its extremeness has backfired. They are today supporting this motion that goes beyond Lofgren to say that we should meet and report legislation on loopholes and enforcement. Even the NRA is running for cover. But we do not want cover. We want action. Today, an enforcement bill was passed. I did not get a chance to speak on that issue but that bill does nothing more than prosecutors and U.S. attorneys can already do. Janet Reno implemented trigger lock, and trigger lock is already a program that allows U.S. attorneys and local prosecutors to proceed with serious enforcement of offenses committed with guns. So it was, in my opinion, not a good idea to vote for that because it only applied to six States.

The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) talked about it is more than mere enforcement. Yes, it is. Prosecution is more than just mere enforcement. Sometimes for children it means intervention, sometimes for children it means diversion, sometimes for children it means rehabilitation and not just warehousing which is what we traditionally do in this country with children who commit crimes.

I am not for people using guns and violence and I am not for people saying that they ought to be able to carry guns because in many of our States they do have a carrying a concealed weapon provision. You can walk around anywhere and carry a gun.

What I am for and what I am encouraging my colleagues to do is to in fact say, we are tired of this. What we want to do today is pass sensible, common sense gun enforcement and gun safety. Let us stop talking about we want to get rid of guns and in State legislatures enacting carrying concealed weapons provisions. Let us stop talking about we want to reduce violence in our country and then we proceed to pass nonsensical positions. Let us stop talking about we want to do enforcement when we want to say, well, we are not going to pass a loophole because we are going to keep it open for another day, that people ought to be able to buy a gun even when you cannot clear a record check. It does not make sense to me. Let us be sensible. The people of America expect us to be sensible and use common sense.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN), a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, as I have listened to the words here today, I must say that I am more encouraged today than I have been since last August by what has been said. I am hopeful that we will in fact be able to achieve what I think is achievable. I think it is simply wonderful that the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Michigan are going to send a letter over to the chairman of the committee and ask that we meet. I commend both of them for doing that.

I was grateful to hear about the discussion that I know has been discussed privately but never I do not believe on the floor before today of how we can close the gun show loophole in a way that works that the gentleman from Illinois described and the gentleman from Michigan has described. I would just like to say that I hope that the very positive language is followed up with very positive action.

I know that action is hard to do because there are forces in the country that are opposed to taking action, and it will take us all working together to make sure that this gets done. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that there are many problems that face America. The overavailability of guns is one of them. But we know that there are people who are emotionally unstable, people suffering from untreated mental illness that go on rampages, children that have been abused or neglected and who do wrong things. All of those problems will continue to exist. But if we can reduce the availability of weapons that can hurt so many, then we will have achieved something and we will still have the other issues to work on.

I would just say that I am happy to hear the words. I am eager to see the action. I am hopeful that the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Illinois can sit down as soon as possible even after the vote on this motion today. The letter I think has now been reprinted and will be sent off. I am willing to do anything I can to be supportive of achieving this for the children and parents of America. We will be watching very carefully to make sure that we all do our part to make sure that this action actually becomes a reality.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2½ minutes to my friend, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD).

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time, and thank our colleagues for bringing this motion to instruct conferees.

Mr. Speaker, as I think about the fate of some of our felons in America, they cannot vote; it is difficult to get a job. I often have those who have paid their dues and served time calling the congressional office back in Tennessee asking for assistance in trying to get a job to support their family. They have a hard time getting a job.

Yet they can go right across the bridge from where I live, I am from Memphis, TN, Mr. Speaker; and they can go right across the bridge into Arkansas and even parts of my State to a gun show; and, if they are lucky, if it does not come up quite quick enough that they are a convicted felon, they can buy a gun. Now, we do not allow them to get a job to support their family, but if they get mad enough, we allow them to buy a gun to shoot their family. Cannot vote; cannot get a job.

This conference committee has not met since last August. We do a lot of talking in this chamber about caring for American families and American workers. What worker in America cannot go to work for 7 or 8 months and claim that they are on the job?

We claim that we are busy around here. We all know better. We know that we are not accomplishing much legislatively here in this Congress. We have a minimum wage bill languishing in the Senate; we have a Patients' Bill of Rights languishing in conference. Finally those on that conference committee have gotten together. We have seniors clamoring for a seniors drug benefit. What is it we are doing that we are so busy we cannot work on this matter?

The States of Massachusetts, Maryland, and New York, all led by Republican Governors, have all stared down Charlton Heston. Shame on Charlton Heston for referring to the President as a liar. Shame on Wayne LaPierre for suggesting that the President had blood on his hands for the shooting death of the former basketball coach of Northwestern University.

I understand tempers can flair and emotions can rise, and perhaps mine is right now, Mr. Speaker. But I am a member of that generation. I come from that generation that would have to deal with the legacy of laws passed here in this Congress. I applaud the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE) for his reaching out in the earlier part of this debate, and I join my colleagues in hoping that a resolution can be achieved between both sides. But that should not stop this conference committee from doing its work.

I close with this. Some on the other side suggested we ought to be focused on gun enforcement as opposed to gun safety. We can do both, and we know that. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) and Senator SCHUMER have offered something that will allow us to do that very thing.

I thank the chairman. I look forward to working with him. I ask the conference committee on juvenile justice to do the right thing, to come together and meet. I do not know of any worker in America who could not go to work for 8 months and ask for a paycheck.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY).

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this motion; and I am very glad, Mr. Chairman, that according to my colleague, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LOFGREN), a Member who has been working on this issue, and our ranking member of the committee, I am very glad that they seem optimistic that there has been some discussion on the floor today that there will be meetings, that there will be movement, that we can get a bill passed, because I do not know how the rest of my colleagues feel, but I am so frustrated.

I listen to my friends, my neighbors, my constituents. They are angry. They are all preparing for that Million Mom March on Mother's Day, and they are angry. They do not get it; they do not understand it. They feel that no matter how much we argue, no matter how hard we work, our efforts to pass common sense gun safety legislation and to strengthen the enforcement of gun safety laws seem to be blocked by this Congress.

The cries of the American people, the cries that so many of my colleagues and I have tried to echo and amplify in this Chamber, have fallen on deaf ears. While our constituents demand real concrete action, the Republican leadership puts up impassable roadblocks to progress on any front. Any bill with teeth, any bill that will really enforce gun safety laws and will really prevent children and felons from getting guns, is immediately disqualified from consideration.

I do believe the American people get it. They are on to the tactics of the NRA and its friends in this Congress. So it is time for Congress to pay attention to the American people, not just lip service. The Juvenile Justice Conference Committee should meet now, and it should not stop meeting until we have a real bill to consider, with effective common sense gun safety and enforcement provisions.

Preventing the committee from meeting and blocking the debate from happening is undemocratic. We have no room for these tactics. I urge my colleagues to support this motion.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD a letter recently signed by myself and the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE) to Chairman HATCH asking that we have a Juvenile Justice Conference meeting.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, April 11, 2000.

Hon. ORRIN G. HATCH,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN HATCH: We write to request a juvenile justice conference meeting as soon as possible.

As you are aware, in the last two months, we have witnessed a succession of gun violence tragedies. We have been shocked by a six-year-old shooting a six-year-old in Mount Morris Township, Michigan. We have seen a nursing home held hostage and a mass shooting in Pittsburgh. In February, Memphis firefighters responding to a call were shot and killed by a disturbed man. It is clear that the Nation would like Congress to respond.

We know that there is not complete agreement on all of the issues before the Conference. We also recognize the need for compromise. We have already agreed in principle to proposed language to reduce the waiting period to 24 hours in most cases, but are still trying to resolve appropriate ''safety hatch'' exceptions.

We have pledged to each other to begin anew negotiations. We believe, however, that beginning the work of the Conference will play a constructive role in the necessary process of narrowing our differences.

We appreciate your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

HENRY J. HYDE,
Chairman, House Judiciary Committee.
JOHN CONYERS, Jr.,
Ranking Member, House Judiciary Committee.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 4½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, for 4 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), I think I was on the floor earlier today and acknowledged that the legislation that we were debating, the civil asset forfeiture law, was truly a bipartisan legislative initiative. It had wound its way to the floor, and we were glad to support it as both Democrats and Republicans.

I can truly say today that where we are today represents at least bipartisan commitment on behalf of the House of Representatives. So I thank the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE) for being part of this debate, but as well acknowledging that the motion to instruct as offered by the ranking member pursuant to his leadership, along with myself and the gentlewoman from Indiana (Ms. CARSON), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD), and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. MCCARTHY), is in fact the right way to go.

Just a few hours ago I took issue with the Project Exile, not because the State of Texas might not have the opportunity to be a participant, but I used the term ''holistic.'' That is why I think this motion to instruct is effective, because it talks about the holistic approach to gun regulation. It acknowledges that we do have a Constitution, but in fact it talks about preventing children from getting guns. That is the angst of what all of us are crying out, that is the pain of Columbine, that is the pain of Kentucky, that is the pain of Arkansas, when our children get guns and do violence.

The picture of this precious life reflects when a child has gotten a gun. It has nothing to do with Project Exile and locking up grown people that have guns. It has a lot to do with keeping guns out of the hands of children. The motion to instruct talks about keeping guns out of the hands of children.

I would hope that we could encourage the other body to sit down and meet. I would hope that we, Members of the House of Representatives, now knowing that the NRA and Handgun, Inc., is supporting this motion to instruct that deals specifically with access to guns and keeping them away from children, can we not have a meeting of the minds to save lives?

Just last week in my district, a young boy took four pistols, I did not say one, I did not say two or three, but I said four, in his knapsack, if you will, to his school. That shows that locking up criminals, which is extremely important, that use guns, and I am a strong supporter of that, it requires us to have gun prevention; it requires us to hold adults responsible when they have guns, and allow them to get in the hands of children.

So what I say today is can we not stand on the floor of the House with the motion to instruct and have it embedded not only in our heart, but in our action? Can we realize that this life would not have been saved on the basis only of locking up that criminal who had a gun? It would likewise have been saved with a trigger lock. It would likewise have been saved with holding adults responsible for letting guns get in the hands of children.

The American Association of Pediatrics has put it in the right way. This is a health phenomenon. We are losing more children's lives through guns. In 1997, there were 32,000 firearm-related deaths; 4,000 of those victims were children and adolescents 20 years of age and younger.

So the American Association of Pediatrics has said that the most important thing is that we decrease the number of guns in the hands of our children and in the hands of this Nation.

Guns, yes. Guns are something that we happen to own in this country, and I recognize that. I recognize the second amendment. But I think it is important that we also recognize that we collectively can save lives. I would hope that the mutual work of those of us who have offered this motion to instruct, and I would hope that the ranking member and chairman of this Committee on the Judiciary will find the momentum to move us forward to holistically approach this, gun safety, gun regulation, gun wisdom, and, of course, guns that are in the hands of individuals that will not cause us to lose lives.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, finding myself with more time than I need, I would be pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman very much for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I would like in particular to read the statement of the American Association of Pediatrics, and that is that because firearms-related injury to children is associated with deaths and severe morbidity and is a significant public health problem, child health care professionals can and should provide effective leadership in efforts to stem this epidemic.

The statement concludes that while there has been a slight decrees in numbers in the last few years, the number of victims of firearm-related injuries constitutes a public health problem that must be addressed. Therefore, they recognize the importance of a variety of countermeasures, educational, environmental, engineering, enactment, enforcement, economic incentives, and evaluation.

The most important aspect of this is to keep guns out of the hands of children and out of the homes where children are.

So I close my remarks, and I thank the chairman very much, because this has hit all of us very close to home. Because of the fact it has hit us very close to home, I do not think we can wait any longer to pass legislation. So I would hope that though we think that we can only do it by enforcing those hard laws, which are part of it, we can also do it with prevention, closing the gun show loopholes, providing trigger locks, holding parents responsible, so that we can ensure that we do not lose these precious lives on the basis of the reckless use of guns or children getting guns.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for his bipartisan spirit. I hope we get that kind of vote on this motion.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today along with my colleague from Michigan, Mr. CONYERS, Ms. CARSON from Indiana, Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD from California and Ms. MCCARTHY from New York. As a cosponsor of this motion I offer this motion to instruct conferees on the Juvenile Justice legislation. This is the second motion to instruct the conferees to meet to have substantive meetings to offer the President and the people of the United States a viable gun bill.

I strongly support this motion to instruct because the American people have waited long enough for us to act on this legislation. We can no longer delay. We must move forward before another tragedy like that of 3-year old Alisha Jackson who died just a couple of weeks ago because she got a hold of a gun while playing in her home.

Little Alisha Jackson, a vivacious 3-year-old girl who liked to watch Barney and the Teletubbies, was killed Thursday, March 23 as she was playing with a gun in her home. Her father stated that Alisha had found a pistol in the house and was handling it when it somehow discharged.

As the motion states, I agree that the committee on the conference must not only meet to discuss the current Juvenile Justice Bill, the committee report should include:

Measures that aid in the effective enforcement of gun safety laws within the scope of the conference, and

Common-sense gun safety measures that prevent felons, fugitives and stalkers from obtaining fire arms and children from getting access to guns within the scope of conference.

Just yesterday, in my state of Texas a 13-year-old eighth-grader carried four pistols—three loaded—into a junior high school classroom in a gym bag here. Fortunately he was caught, but the question remains how did this child get a hold of these guns.

The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) strongly stresses that the most effective measure to prevent firearm-related injuries to children and adolescent is to remove guns from homes and communities.

Though this may stop the proliference of firearm tragedies, I do believe that there are alternative means to decrease the prevalence of child firearm injuries.

The Juvenile Justice Bill provides such an alternative and it is time for the conferees to meet to address the concerns of the American people.

In the past few weeks my office has received many calls and letters from constituents whom mistakenly believe that we support legislation that will take away their guns.

It is obvious that the propaganda machine of the national Rifle Association is working to change our focus from the issue of children and guns and gun ownership in general. Like many of my Colleagues, I do not oppose responsible gun ownership.

However, like President Clinton, I am concerned about children and their access to guns. I am concerned that guns are not regulated in the same way that toys are regulated.

I am concerned that we do not have safety standards for locking devices on guns. I am concerned that we do not prohibit children from attending gun shows unsupervised. I am concerned that we have not focused on the statistics on children and guns.

According to the AAP statement:

The United States has the highest rates of firearm-related deaths among industrialized countries.

The overall rate of firearm-related deaths for children younger than 15 years of age is nearly 12 times greater than that found for 25 other industrialized nations.

The Academy even predicts that by the year 2003, firearm-related deaths may become the leading cause of injury-related death!

Already, among black males 10 through 34 years of age, injuries from firearms are the leading cause of deaths.

Even more tragic is the fact that most firearm-related deaths of children occur before their arrival at the hospital.

Thus, most of our children that injured by firearms do not even have a chance. This is the reality in our country that must not be denied!

Another important fact pointed out by the American Academy of Pediatrics is that:

In 1994, the mean medical cost per gunshot injury was approximately $17,000 producing 2.3 billion in lifetime medical costs, 1.1 billion of which was paid by U.S. taxpayers.

Thus, it not only makes common sense, but economic sense for the Juvenile Justice bill to include child safety measures so that we can prevent tragedies like Columbine and Littleton Colorado from occurring again.

Thirteen die everyday from firearms. Why can we not rise above our political differences to pass effective gun legislation that would address this heartbreaking situation?

It would seem that in almost the year since the Littleton shootings, we have done little to move forward on the Juvenile Justice Bill.

Despite the majority's reluctance to meet and discuss the current Juvenile Justice Bill, I am confident that the American people will not allow this matter to rest.

This motion to instruct urges the conferees to act immediately on the Juvenile Justice Bill. We cannot wait for another tragedy to occur. I urge my Colleagues to support this motion.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLT).

Mr. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of this motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 1501, the juvenile justice bill. I appreciate the constructive comments made by the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE).

Mr. Speaker, how many Americans must die before Congress makes a commitment to keeping guns out of the hands of children and criminals? How many more news reports do we need to see of innocent children gunned down, of families and communities devastated by gun violence? At Columbine High last year, 13 children were killed, 23 injured, with a weapon originating at a gun show. We thought this was the last straw, but we thought Paducah was the last straw, we thought Conyers was the last straw, we thought Jonesboro was the last straw, we thought Springfield was the last straw.

Just weeks ago, little Kayla Rolland was gunned down in a Michigan elementary school, murdered by a 6-year-old child who learned how to kill with a handgun before he learned how to read.

It is time to put a stop to these tragedies. Compare our record, compare the epidemiology with any other country. We have a serious public health epidemic. Yes, epidemiology is the right word. This is a public health problem.

This motion to instruct conferees on H.R. 1501 to meet and report a committee substitute is important. It would include common-sense gun safety measures. The conferees must take action to close gun show loopholes that allow criminals and children and the mentally ill to buy firearms.

Mr. Speaker, it must include provisions to require child safety locks and other safety measures that save children's lives. They must provide maximum support for measures that help enforce our Nation's gun safety laws and protect our children from gun violence.

Now is the time for action. Let us prevent tragedies. Let us pass this motion.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO).

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, we are approaching the 1-year anniversary of the tragic shooting at Columbine High School. That horrible day not only claimed the lives of innocent students but also shed new light on the gun violence that robs too many of our young people.

The Columbine shootings were a watershed event that reshaped the way that Americans think about gun violence. Parents asked themselves today, Is it safe to send my daughter to school? They pray, Don't let a shooting like Colorado claim my son's life.

People understand that the causes of such tragedies are complex and varied. They also want to keep kids and criminals from obtaining deadly weapons. They overwhelmingly support common-sense measures that would keep guns out of the wrong hands without jeopardizing the rights of law-abiding citizens, but the Republican leadership, taking their cues from the gun lobby, has failed to enact common sense gun safety laws.

In that year since Columbine, the Republican leadership has tried to cover their failure with sleight of hand by presenting a false choice between enforcement and efforts to close gaping loopholes that allow criminals to buy guns. The American people rightly reject this false choice, and we were here to say that Congress should take a strong stand in favor of both enforcement and of enactment of needed gun safety measures.

Mr. Speaker, I call on my Republican colleagues to join Democrats and support effective enforcement of gun laws, support the President's measure to devote more resources and prosecutors to tackling gun crimes. Congress must also send to the President gun safety provisions passed by the Senate, shut down the loopholes at gun shows that puts guns in the hands of criminals, require a child safety lock to be sold with handguns, and ban the importation of high capacity ammunition clips. These are simple steps voted on in a bipartisan way in the United States Senate.

These are simple steps which close dangerous avenues to illegal gun ownership.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The time of the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Ms. DELAURO) has expired.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I yield my last 30 seconds to the gentlewoman from Connecticut.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, if I may, I yield 30 more seconds to the gentlewoman so she may have a full minute.

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, how generous of the chairman.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, this is bipartisan day.

Ms. DELAURO. It is. It is wonderful. I urge the gentleman from Illinois to support the motion.

Mr. Speaker, too much delay, too many lives lost have been destroyed since Columbine. Americans want and they deserve better.

Yesterday, in North Haven, Connecticut, I stood with the head of the Connecticut Chiefs of Police; the Chief of Police, Kevin Connelly of North Haven; with the representatives of Mossberg & Company, gun manufacturers; Marlin Firearms, which manufactured guns in my community; with a representative of the National Sports Shooting Foundation.

Mr. Speaker, the reason why I was there was to talk about gun safety locks on guns. It was a collaborative effort with the industry, with the law enforcement community, and with the political structure that can come together around these issues. If only the Members of this body could come together and say that, yes, in fact, what we are going to do is to make sure that we do have enforcement, but at the same time pass those gun safety measures that would make a difference in the lives of our community today.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) has the right to close. Mr. Speaker, how much time remains?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, might I have a minute for the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL)?

Mr. HYDE. I am happy to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. UDALL).

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) for yielding me the 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I support this motion. Its adoption will remind the conferees that they have a job to do and call on them to get started. Each of us have been elected to debate and act on proposals to address the country's business. Of course, it is not always convenient, and sometimes it does mean foregoing other things that we would like to do.

Mr. Speaker, for example, I would have liked to have accepted the invitation tomorrow to accompany the President when he travels to Colorado for a public appearance related to these very issues we are asking the conferees to consider, gun safety and steps to make it harder for criminals to obtain firearms.

But even though I would have liked to have gone to Colorado, I have decided I am going to stay here in order to take part in the debates and votes on the matters that will come before the House. For me that is the priority, and I think that seeking to reach agreement on these important public safety issues should be a priority for the conferees, so I urge the House to agree to this motion.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am honored to yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN).

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise almost to a point of inquiry of the sponsor of the bill, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), or the supporter of the bill, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE).

Certainly, what the Members have explained to the Congress this afternoon I do not think anyone could object to. I am happy to see that the two Members are drinking out of the same dipper, as we say in Alabama. But there is a question that I have that is sort of confusing to me. That is the underlying bill.

As I understand the motion the gentleman from Michigan has made, we are instructing the conferees to do a couple of things that sound good, measures that aid in the effective enforcement of gun safety laws within the scope of the conference. Certainly we support that. I think all of us in this House would do that.

Two is commonsense gun safety measures that prevent felons, fugitives, and stalkers from obtaining firearms and children from getting access to guns, within the scope of the conference. Who could be opposed to that?

Our problem is, Mr. Speaker, that the Members also instruct the conferees to immediately report out a compromise measure. If I vote in favor of instructing the conferees to do these two things, and then thirdly, instruct them to report a compromise bill out, what if I am opposed to what they compromise on? Does my vote here in favor of this indicate that regardless of what they send out of the conference committee, am I obligating myself to vote for that, in the gentleman's opinion?

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAHAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONYERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding, Mr. Speaker.

There are three things we do. First of all, we ask them to meet, and then accomplish these two things. I will leave to the gentleman's conscience and to the Members' conscience whether we are going to vote on the finished product, because nobody knows what it is going to be. But these are our instructions, and I hope that they can come as close to them as they can.

Two of the members of the conference are on the floor, maybe three, so they will be trying to live up to this commitment in our motion to instruct.

Mr. CALLAHAN. To those of us, Mr. Speaker, who are not famous on the floor of this House for voting for any gun control measures, we could have a strategy where the longer an offensive bill stayed in the conference, the better off we are.

Yet, I am in a position of double jeopardy. I support what the gentleman is saying with respect to effective enforcement of gun safety laws within the scope of the conference, and commonsense gun safety measures. I support that. But this does not compel the conferees, as I understand it, to comply with the gentleman's request. It just simply says, reach a compromise and report back to this House some gun safety law.

I am afraid that if indeed the conferees are inclined, they might bring something back to the floor that is so offensive to me that I might have to vote against it, which is all right. That is my prerogative. But at the same time, I am really giving up the position that I am in now, where I know as long as it stays in conference, it is not going to be offensive to me.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CALLAHAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's analysis. He will at all times retain his autonomy and vote, as he has in the years he has been here, according to the dictates of his conscience and his judgment. But this is simply an effort to get some motion forward.

We are confronted with this issue. It is not going to go away. I think we can solve it on the merits intelligently and effectively. I hope and pray that we can come up with a product that would satisfy the gentleman, and I know the gentleman's predilection against gun control measures. I hope the gentleman gives us an opportunity to proceed.

Mr. CALLAHAN. I will do that, sir.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California (Mr. BILBRAY).

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this motion. I appreciate the manner in which it is presented. I appreciate the fact that the ranking member of this committee and the chairman of this committee can articulate the fact that reasonable people may disagree sometimes on the means to be able to acquire the goal, but there is a common goal here. That is firearms safety, protecting our children, protecting our families.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is very simple. First of all, I think it is the place where we can all meet. The first part of this motion specifically says that we need to take measures to aid in the effective enforcement of gun safety laws within the scope of the conference.

It can also be pointed out, the fact that there is more we need to do in enforcement of the law. The President in the State of the Union pointed out and said that we are not doing enough of enforcing the laws we have on the books. I think we can all agree to that. I think that both Republicans and Democrats can join with the President in saying we need to have more enforcement.

But the other point of this motion also points out that commonsense safety measures are not a threat to the second amendment rights, they are the best guarantee in the long run of preserving those rights. We are not talking about extraordinary measures here.

There have been disagreements between Republicans and Democrats on certain issues. One of those issues that we have been talking about is the gun show loophole. The ranking member, actually the dean of the Democratic Party, may disagree with some of us who are Republicans saying that there is a gap there that needs to be addressed. The ranking member agrees with this Member that there was never meant to be a loophole to allow people to purchase guns at a gun show that they could not purchase outside from a licensed dealer.

Now, I know that there are Members on both sides of the aisle that may talk about the fact that to close the loophole would end gun shows as we know it. I want to point out to the Members that California has a 10-day waiting period, and has the largest gun shows in the world.

It is not the way to destroy gun shows. It is an inconvenience, but frankly, as a gun owner, a lot of us feel that that inconvenience is well worth the process.

Mr. Speaker, I would just ask all of us to look at the motion and let us talk about this. The extremists on either side do not want this motion to pass, and they do not want this issue to be settled before this Congress adjourns. There are people in extreme components on both sides of this aisle that want to see this issue be used for political advantage, rather than public safety.

I want to commend the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), for bridging that gap and leaving those extremists out where they belong, in the wings. I want to thank the Members for bringing this motion up to address this issue.

I would ask everyone to take the words of the chairman saying, as the House of Representatives, let us sit down and build a common agenda to present to the other body so that we can move this agenda and get it done and do what we tell the American people we really want done, that we actually want good gun law, that we actually want gun safety, not just partisan political bickering.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the chance to be able to address this issue. It is a very emotional issue. It is an issue that bears a lot of weight and I just think that those of us that really want to be able to go back to our district and say we stood up for gun safety, we stood up for public safety, we stood up for people's rights to be protected and to be safe in their home and the fact is now is the time for the ranking member and the chairman to get together, for us to follow their leadership and find time to agree on good, common sense safety measures and let us walk away from the excuses of always finding a way to fight about this issue. This is a place we can meet and I thank the chairman for that chance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to instruct offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 406, nays 22, not voting 6, as follows:

□ 1822

Messrs. SOUDER, WAMP, PETERSON of Minnesota, RAHALL, MOLLOHAN, and YOUNG of Alaska changed their vote from “yea” to “nay.”

Mr. BRADY of Texas and Mr. HEFLEY changed their vote from “nay” to “yea.”

So the motion to instruct was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2328, THE CLEAN LAKES PROGRAM

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 106–571) on the resolution (H. Res. 468) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2328) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to reauthorize the Clean Lakes Program, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF MOTIONS TO SUSPEND THE RULES

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 106–572) on the resolution (H. Res. 469) providing for consideration of motions to suspend the rules, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3039, CHESAPEAKE BAY RESTORATION ACT OF 1999

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 106–573) on the resolution (H. Res. 470) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3039) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to assist in the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.J. RES. 94, TAX LIMITATION CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 106–574) on the resolution (H. Res. 471) providing for consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 94) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to tax limitations, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT PRESIDENT OF UNITED STATES SHOULD ENCOURAGE FREE AND FAIR ELECTIONS AND RESPECT FOR DEMOCRACY IN PERU

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on International Relations be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 43) expressing the sense of Congress that the President of the United States should encourage free and fair elections and respect for democracy in Peru, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN).

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California for yielding to me.

This resolution, Mr. Speaker, makes an important statement of American policy towards Peru. It was passed unanimously by the Senate.

Independent election monitors in Peru have expressed grave doubts about the fairness of the electoral process now under way in Peru.

This resolution notes the absence of free and fair elections in Peru would constitute a major setback for the Peruvian people and for democracy in the hemisphere. It could result in instability in Peru and could jeopardize United States anti-narcotic objectives in Peru and the region.

Mr. Speaker, at this moment, Peru's electoral authorities are moving to finalize the vote count for the first round of that election. It is important that the House add its voice to the unanimous voice in the Senate and send a proper signal of U.S. support for democracy in Peru.

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I want to thank the gentleman from New York (Chairman GILMAN) for bringing this resolution to the floor.

This resolution really comes at a very decisive moment in Peru's history. The votes from this past Sunday's election in Peru are being counted as we speak. International and Peruvian observers have already declared the electoral process to be damaged. The Organization of American States, the National Democratic Institute, and the Carter Center are among them.

Mr. Speaker, I have served as an international observer in the recent Nigerian elections and also in the elections in South Africa several years ago. We must value the importance of our international observers in their understanding and clarification of what is taking place abroad.

These nonpartisan Peruvian observers also have included the well-respected group Transparencia, and they have noted that the Fujimori government has attempted to unfairly manipulate this process to President Fujimori's advantage.

Now, the legitimacy of the entire process is in the balance. Pre-election polls and, more telling, election day exit polls and independent quick counts all point to President Fujimori's coming short of the 50 percent vote needed to win in the first round. Official vote counts appear to be inching toward 50 percent while independent tabulations show the count to be 47 to 49 percent.

This resolution, S.J. Res. 43, actually calls on Peru's government to ensure a clean, legitimate electoral process. For the Peruvian people and for the U.S.-Peruvian relations, we implore President Fujimori's efforts, and we implore him to do the right thing in this instance.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 43

Whereas presidential and congressional elections are scheduled to occur in Peru on April 9, 2000;

Whereas independent election monitors, including the Organization of American States, the National Democratic Institute, and the Carter Center, have expressed grave doubts about the fairness of the electoral process due to the Peruvian Government's control of key official electoral agencies, systematic restrictions on freedom of the press, manipulation of the judicial processes to stifle independent reporting on radio, television, and newspaper outlets, and harassment and intimidation of opposition politicians, which have greatly limited the ability of opposing candidates to campaign freely; and

Whereas the absence of free and fair elections in Peru would constitute a major setback for the Peruvian people and for democracy in the hemisphere, could result in instability in Peru, and could jeopardize United States antinarcotics objectives in Peru and the region: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is the sense of Congress that the President of the United States should promptly convey to the President of Peru that if the April 9, 2000, elections are not deemed by the international community to have been free and fair, the United States will review and modify as appropriate its political, economic, and military relations with Peru, and will work with other democracies in this hemisphere and elsewhere toward a restoration of democracy in Peru.

The Senate joint resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider is laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on Senate Joint Resolution 43.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Such record votes on proposed questions will be taken tomorrow.

ENERGY POLICY AND CONSERVATION ACT REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2884) to extend energy conservation programs under the Energy Policy and Conservation Act through fiscal year 2003, as amended.

H.R. 2884

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ENERGY POLICY AND CONSERVATION ACT AMENDMENTS.

The Energy Policy and Conservation Act is amended—

(1) by amending section 166 (42 U.S.C. 6246) to read as follows:

''AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

''SEC. 166. There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 2000 through 2003 such sums as may be necessary to implement this part.'';

(2) in section 181 (42 U.S.C. 6251) by striking ''March 31, 2000'' both places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof ''September 30, 2003''; and

SEC. 2. PURCHASE OF OIL FROM MARGINAL WELLS.

(a) PURCHASE OF OIL FROM MARGINAL WELLS.—Part B of Title I of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6232 et seq.) is amended by adding the following new section after section 168:

''PURCHASE OF OIL FROM MARGINAL WELLS

''SEC. 169. (a) IN GENERAL.—From amounts authorized under section 166, in any case in which the price of oil decreases to an amount less than $15.00 per barrel (an amount equal to the annual average well head price per barrel for all domestic crude oil), adjusted for inflation, the Secretary may purchase oil from a marginal well at $15.00 per barrel, adjusted for inflation.

''(b) DEFINITION OF MARGINAL WELL.—The term ''marginal well'' means a well that—

''(1) has an average daily production of 15 barrels or less;

''(2) has an average daily production of 25 barrels or less with produced water accounting for 95 percent or more of total production; or

''(3) produces heavy oil with an API gravity less than 20 degrees.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of contents for the Energy Policy and Conservation Act is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 168 the following:

''Sec. 169. Purchase of oil from marginal wells.''.

SEC. 3. NORTHEAST HOME HEATING OIL RESERVE.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Title I of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act is amended by—

(2) redesignating section 181 as section 191; and

(3) inserting after part C the following new part D:

''PART D—NORTHEAST HOME HEATING OIL RESERVE

''ESTABLISHMENT

''SEC. 181. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the Secretary may establish, maintain, and operate in the Northeast a Northeast Home Heating Oil Reserve. A Reserve established under this part is not a component of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve established under part B of this title. A Reserve established under this part shall contain no more than 2 million barrels of petroleum distillate.

''(b) For the purposes of this part—

''(1) the term 'Northeast' means the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey; and

''(2) the term 'petroleum distillate' includes heating oil and diesel fuel.

''AUTHORITY

''SEC. 182. To the extent necessary or appropriate to carry out this part, the Secretary may—

''(1) purchase, contract for, lease, or otherwise acquire, in whole or in part, storage and related facilities, and storage services;

''(2) use, lease, maintain, sell, or otherwise dispose of storage and related facilities acquired under this part;

''(3) acquire by purchase, exchange (including exchange of petroleum product from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve or received as royalty from Federal lands), lease, or otherwise, petroleum distillate for storage in the Northeast Home Heating Oil Reserve;

''(4) store petroleum distillate in facilities not owned by the United States;

''(5) sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of petroleum distillate from the Reserve established under this part; and

''(6) notwithstanding paragraph (5), on terms the Secretary considers reasonable, sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of petroleum distillate from the Reserve established under this part in order to maintain the quality or quantity of the petroleum distillate in the Reserve or to maintain the operational capability of the Reserve.

''CONDITIONS FOR RELEASE; PLAN

''SEC. 183. (a) The Secretary may release petroleum distillate from the Reserve under section 182(5) only in the event of—

''(1) a severe energy supply disruption;

''(2) a severe price increase; or

''(3) another emergency affecting the Northeast, which the President determines to merit a release from the Reserve.

''(b) Within 45 days of the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall transmit to the President and, if the President approves, to the Congress a plan describing—

''(1) the acquisition of storage and related facilities or storage services for the Reserve;

''(2) the acquisition of petroleum distillate for storage in the Reserve;

''(3) the anticipated methods of disposition of petroleum distillate from the Reserve; and

''(4) the estimated costs of establishment, maintenance, and operation of the Reserve.

The storage of petroleum distillate in a storage facility that meets existing environmental requirements is not a 'major Federal action significantly affecting the quality of the human environment' as that term is used in section 102(2)(C) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969.

''NORTHEAST HOME HEATING OIL RESERVE ACCOUNT

''SEC. 184. (a) Upon a decision of the Secretary of Energy to establish a Reserve under this part, the Secretary of the Treasury shall establish in the Treasury of the United States an account know as the 'Northeast Home Heating Oil Reserve Account' (referred to in this section as the 'Account').

''(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit in the Account any amounts appropriated to the Account and any receipts from the sale, exchange, or other disposition of petroleum distillate from the Reserve.

''(c) The Secretary of Energy may obligate amounts in the Account to carry out activities under this part without the need for further appropriation, and amounts available to the Secretary of Energy for obligation under this section shall remain available without fiscal year limitation.

''EXEMPTIONS

''SEC. 185. An action taken under this part—

''(1) is not subject to the rulemaking requirements of section 523 of this Act, section 501 of the Department of Energy Organization Act, or section 553 of title 5, United States Code; and

''(2) is not subject to laws governing the Federal procurement of goods and services, including the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (including the Competition in Contracting Act) and the Small Business Act.''.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out part D of title I of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON) and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to insert extraneous material on the bill, H.R. 2884.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minority staff and the minority leadership on the Subcommittee on Energy and Power as well as the full Committee on Commerce, and the majority staff on the same committees for working to put this bipartisan compromise together.

I want to also thank the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY), who was unavoidably detained and could not be on the floor this evening for his support of this very necessary measure.

Mr. Speaker, what we are doing right now is we are authorizing the Energy Policy and Conservation Act through the year 2003. This is an act that was first put on the books in 1992. It includes necessary legislative language for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, which is vital to our Nation's security. I think it is a very worthwhile piece of legislation. It is a clean reauthorization of the existing act, with two exceptions, and I am going to very briefly touch on those.

Under current law, oil that is put into the Strategic Petroleum Reserve has to be purchased from foreign oil sources. It cannot be purchased from domestic sources. The bill, as reported from the committee, included a provision that would allow the Secretary of Energy the discretion, would not mandate but would allow the Secretary of Energy the discretion, if world oil prices fell below $15 a barrel, to purchase oil from stripper wells. Stripper wells are wells that produce less than $15 per barrel.

So this provision would allow the Secretary of Energy the discretion to purchase stripper well oil from domestic sources and put them in the reserve. The oil in the reserve today currently has an average acquisition cost of $27 per barrel. So this provision would be just slightly more than half the current acquisition cost.

What it would do, in strategic terms, is allow a domestic resource, these small wells that are barely producing much oil, to stay in production and not be shut in. Once these stripper wells are shut in, very few of them ever come back.

If we had had this provision in the law 2 years ago, and if the Secretary had used the discretion to implement it, it is estimated that between a half a million and a million barrels of oil would still be being produced today in the United States that is not currently being produced. So we think this is a valuable addition to the SPR and is a worthwhile amendment to come out of committee.

The other amendment that we are adding on the floor this evening that was not put in in committee is at the request and suggestion of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), who is on the floor, the Secretary of Energy at the Department of Energy, and the Clinton-Gore administration and affected Republicans in the Northeast.

It reauthorizes the refined product reserve and it also changes the trigger mechanism for the refined product reserve on a regional basis so that one could get a declaration on a regional basis, like we had the heating oil emergency in the Northeast several months ago. If the Markey language had been law at that time, and if we had had refined products in a reserve, a regional declaration could have been declared by the President and that fuel oil could have been drawn down for homeowners in the Northeast.

So this is, at the top end, I think, a good amendment in a good piece of legislation. It was not put in at full committee but it has been added at the Committee on Rules and is in the bill that is before us.

So, to summarize, Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2884, as amended, is an excellent piece of legislation. It has two additions, one addition when prices are low and, in addition, it would help us when prices are high. So I would hope the House would pass this by unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation, despite my reservations about deficiencies in the measure that could well have been addressed had the bill been brought to the floor in a more timely manner. It is unfortunate that it was not until well after gasoline prices rose sharply that the House leadership awoke to the need to reauthorize EPCA, a statute which expired on March 31.

EPCA is the foundation of our emergency energy preparedness. It permits the United States to participate in activities of the International Energy Agency. It also authorizes the President to maintain and, if necessary, draw down oil from the 570 million barrels in the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. That reserve is not a tool to be deployed lightly.

EPCA stipulates that a drawdown occur only if the President finds that a severe energy supply interruption exists. Moreover, the storage caverns can only be filled and drained a few times before their structural integrity is affected. But the very existence of the reserve provides an insurance policy against a major oil crisis and reminds foreign oil producers that this Nation is not at their mercy.

As part of his effort earlier this year to bring gasoline prices down, the President asked Congress to ensure that this vital authority did not expire. That call has gone unheeded until this late moment.

I supported H.R. 2284 when it was reported by the Committee on Commerce last October. I signed dissenting views, along with a majority of my committee Democrats, protesting the bill's failure to renew important energy efficiency provisions of the original act. Had this legislation been brought to the floor in a more timely manner, under a rule that permitted amendments, this omission could have been rectified.

Let me say that I am very pleased that an accommodation has been reached on an amendment that establishes a heating oil reserve and helps to increase production of U.S. oil reserves as proposed by our friend and colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY). Since the bill was reported from committee more than 5 months ago, it is very difficult for me to understand why we are reduced to what amounts to a last-minute scramble that prevents its consideration under more normal procedures.

Nonetheless, recent events underscore the importance of having EPCA on the books to ensure that the President has the necessary tools at his disposal to respond to an energy emergency. It appears this legislation is the sole legislative vehicle that the majority is willing to make available to avert an extended lapse of this essential statute. So, under the circumstances, we have little alternative other than to support the legislation.

In conclusion, while I recognize the bill's substantive shortcomings, and deplore the unnecessary delay in addressing this matter, I plan to vote for the legislation and I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY).

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I want to compliment the gentleman from Texas for constructing kind of a classic Austin-Boston piece of legislation here.

The gentleman from Texas represents a concern that the stripper well industry has, that they have not had the proper set of incentives in order to continue to keep their wells open. What the legislation says is that when the price of stripper well oil goes below $15 a barrel, that there would be an authorization for that oil to be purchased in order, one, to fill up the Strategic Petroleum Resereve but, secondly, in order to keep the price of stripper well oil high enough so that there is an incentive for that industry to continue to make the proper investment in maintaining them as viable sources of energy for our country.

As well, the legislation makes it possible for there to be constructed a regional home heating oil reserve in the northeastern part of the United States. That is very important to those of us that live within a region that does have, on an ongoing basis, the threat that we are going to be cut off from that home heating oil supply.

Now, maybe over the next 20 years, as Sable Island, this rich resource of natural gas off of the Newfoundland coast comes on line, we will not need this kind of protection. But that is not really going to be possible for another 5, 10, 15 years before it fully penetrates all of the Northeast. And by the Northeast, I also mean eastern Pennsylvania, all of New Jersey, and the State of New York. Those are the parts of our country that are very much dependent upon imported home heating oil.

Now, we have, without question, the need to give the President the flexibility that he needs to release the heating oil from the reserve in the event we have a repetition of the type of severe price spikes or severe weather situations that we saw last winter which drove home heating oil prices over the $2 a gallon level. This provision helps assure that as we are reauthorizing EPCA, that we are addressing both the needs of the producing States, who are worried about what happens when prices go too low, and the consuming States, who worry about what happens when prices get too high.

So this is kind of our Goldilocks solution here. Not too hot. Not too cold. Just right. Try to get the right balance that makes it possible for us, to be honest, to pass legislation. We have to do this. This is the classic deal we have been cutting since Sam Rayburn and John McCormick sat on this floor in the 1930s.

It is a good bill. I want to thank again the gentleman from Texas for bringing it out. I want to compliment the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Rhode Island and the gentleman from Vermont for pushing on this legislation. And by that I mean respectively the gentleman from Maine (Mr. BALDACCI), the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. WEYGAND), and the estimable independent from the State of Vermont, their constant pressure. I see the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CAPUANO) up there as well. This is legislation that, without question, is a perfect compromise.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the suspension calendar because we think that it has broad bipartisan support and should be an automatic ''yes'' for all the Members.

We have worked very hard to reach a compromise both at the policy level and at the political level, and I hope that if and when we have a rollcall vote on this that people would all vote ''yes'' for it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR).

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I want to commend the chairman, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER), for bringing this important measure to this body.

I stand in strong support of it and urge my colleagues to think as this bill moves forward how America can, in fact, be energy independent.

We are two-thirds dependent on foreign sources of supply, and the Strategic Petroleum Reserve offers us a temporary cushion here at home.

I think, as the bill moves forward in the other body and as compromises are reached, I would urge my colleagues to consider swapping a portion of the oil that is in the reserve for ethanol and biodiesel, or even as new fuel is purchased and there is currently a gap in the reserve of several million barrels, to consider looking at ethanol as one of the ways in which America can become more self-sufficient in fuel production and usage.

I would recommend a level of about 300 million gallons of ethanol and 100 million of biodiesel. Both of these are at competitive prices now if one looks at the market. And even if all of that were purchased and stored on farm, we would still only be looking at 1 to 2 percent of the entire fuel reserve being comprised of these biobased fuels.

In terms of what is happening in rural America today, this is absolutely a way forward for our country. And if one looks at the State of Ohio, we are one of the biggest ethanol users in the Nation. About 40 percent of the additives in our fuels, as opposed to MTBE, is actually comprised of biofuels, ethanol being the leading one.

So I would implore the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking member, as these discussions proceed in the Senate, to please consider this. It would make economic sense. I think it makes defense sense. It certainly makes energy sense for our country in view of what is happening across our country with farmers facing the necessity of looking at new fuels. This is a wonderful new market.

In addition to that, representing the coal belt of America, from Pennsylvania through the Virginias, through Illinois, and so forth, I would also recommend looking at cleaning up coal and using the methane that can be spun off of that as another additive. I would hope that as these discussions proceed that those in charge of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve would also be looking at energy self-sufficiency for the Nation as an imperative.

I again commend the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) for this measure and thank him for yielding me the time.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maine (Mr. BALDACCI).

Mr. BALDACCI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) for yielding me the time and for his leadership in the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the subcommittee chairman for his work in trying to craft this legislation and move it forward in an attempt to reach out to everybody to advance the national interest. We appreciate that.

I would like to thank my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), who was here when McCormick and Rayburn were here, as somebody else referred to in the hallway. He gave me that line.

But I would also like to thank the leadership in the Northeast region with the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. WEYGAND) and the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CAPUANO) and many other Members in the Northeast that have worked together bipartisanly so that we could work on this issue.

There has been a gap in the authorization to be able to use the SPR and to be able to begin work on this reserve, but it is better late than never. This legislation is very good legislation. It is bipartisan. It recognizes that these events can happen on a regional basis.

I guess to have been sitting in Boston at a summit that was held, in listening to the discussion go on, and to realize how dangerously low we were on inventory levels and to recognize that all jet fuel, diesel fuel, gasoline and petroleum products had to be reconfigured into home heating oil, putting additional pressures on our gasoline market and causing gasoline prices to spike, we also were able to see how a regional shortage and concern was then developed into a national one and one which we are still dealing with to this day.

So I think that this legislation is a good insurance policy, it is a good beach head, it will protect us against those waves that come in again, and it will be able to help us to be part of a national policy that deals with a comprehensive energy policy that becomes less energy dependent and becomes more energy independent so that we are not relying on foreign sources and that we will have national security and not have to worry about when the next shipment of oil or gas or coal or ethanol or whatever it may happen to be.

So by being able to develop these policies and working with the administration and the Secretary of Energy and the work that has gone on to try to help stabilize the market, which I believe they have gone to great measures to do, along with this legislation, we are going to begin to make sure that what we have gone through in the past does not happen again.

I tell people that the original one was a bad movie and the sequels have not been any better since and, hopefully, we never have to witness this particular situation again in the future.

I would like to thank the chairman and the people who were involved and look forward to advancing this legislation.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. WEYGAND).

Mr. WEYGAND. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) for yielding me the time, as well as our colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), for allowing us to move forward on this bill.

The Northeast has traditionally been a geographically hard location for much transportation of resources, like home heating oil and gasoline. We also have a very older style of architecture which often causes us to have very inefficient buildings and, unfortunately, that leak during the wintertime of heat and resources and energy. We also have a much colder environment in the Northeast than most parts of the country. All these factors lead to us as being big consumers of home heating oil.

Unfortunately, also over the years we have reduced the amount of inventory that we have traditionally had the capability of keeping in the Northeast. In 1991 we had about 4 million barrels of home heating oil on reserve in the Northeast. Since the Gulf War, we have traditionally built it up, to last year we had about 17 million barrels on hand. But this year we dropped to almost an all-time low back down to about 4.5 million barrels.

Inventory is an important part of making sure that the Northeast has an adequate supply to provide for home heating oil. This bill will go a long way to improving the inventory. I compliment the members from the majority side for bringing this bill forward that we have been working so hard on.

We must recognize, though, that only 2 million barrels is hardly a drop in the bucket to what we really need. I would hope that as we move this bill through conference that they would look at increasing the home heating oil reserve to in the neighborhood of 3 or 4 million barrels versus the 2 million barrels that is proposed.

We also must do other things, though. We have to look at alternative sources of energy such as natural gas, such as making sure we have solar power. We must also provide the kinds of tax incentives we need for conservation. That is for better winterization programs, for building materials and other things that will help enhance and reduce the amount of energy loss that we have in our buildings. All of these elements taken in composite will make us a more efficient user of energy, such as petroleum products.

I hope that as we begin to move forward with this session and as we wrap up before this fall, we will truly have a number of tax incentives for winterization and conservation, alternative sources of energy, as well as improving our stocks of inventory, as we are under this bill.

I thank both the majority and minority for bringing this bill forward. I also want to compliment my colleagues who have been working so hard on this, particularly the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CAPUANO), and of course, the gentleman from Maine (Mr. BALDACCI).

We have all been working hard because our constituents hurt very hard this winter. We saw prices in Rhode Island go from 99 cents a gallon to over $2.05 a gallon in a matter of weeks. This will help reverse that trend, and this will be better for the constituents of the Northeast. And I thank my colleagues for that.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS).

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Chairman BARTON), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER) the ranking member, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), the gentleman from Maine (Mr. BALDACCI), the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. WEYGAND), and I also want to thank the President and Secretary Richardson for their support of the consent of a Northeast home heating oil reserve.

Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that this winter the people in the Northeast were hit very, very hard by the large increase in home heating oil prices; and many of the folks in the State of Vermont in the Northeast were having a very, very difficult time paying a doubling of the price of home heating oil from just 1 year before. It was a serious crisis. It remains a crisis. And it is no secret that we were not prepared for it.

On February 4, I introduced H.R. 3608, the Home Heating Oil Price Stability Act; and in this short period of time since then, we now have 98 cosponsors, including 24 Republicans and 27 Representatives who are not from the Northeast. So this is a bipartisan piece of legislation. It is a national piece of legislation.

The bottom line is that we were caught unprepared, and the bottom line is that we have got not to be caught unprepared again. A home heating oil reserve of at least 2 million barrels, and that is the legislation included within this bill, would make certain that when the weather becomes very cold, when home heating oil prices zoom up, we will have something to call upon to control the escalating price of home heating oil. And that is what the reserve does. So I think this is a significant step forward in controlling escalating home heating oil prices.

I would hope, as previous speakers have indicated, that we could expand the concept. Two million barrels in the Northeast is a good start. The original legislation calls for another 4.7 million barrels in the Gulf Coast, which is part of what the Strategic Petroleum Reserve is.

My understanding is that the President has the authority, in fact, to do that on his own; and I hope that he will.

The bottom line is that this is a significant step forward in preventing another spike in home heating oil in the Northeast. It will save substantial sums of money for the people in the Northeast and, in fact, for people throughout this country.

I very much thank the chairman and the ranking member and those who have made this legislation possible.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Mr. Speaker, I use this time to commend my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), the chairman of our energy subcommittee, for his excellent work on this measure. The procedural difficulties that I referenced earlier were not of his doing. I know that, given his way, we would have had a different process and one that I think would have been somewhat more thorough.

I urge my colleagues to approve this measure. It will reauthorize the authority of the President to manage the SPR. That is fundamentally important. I would encourage all Members to support the legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). All time has expired.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2884, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

APPOINTMENT AS MEMBER TO NATIONAL SKILL STANDARDS BOARD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, pursuant to Section 503(b)(3) of the National Skill Standards Act of 1994 (20 U.S.C. 5933), and upon the recommendation of the majority leader, the Chair announces the Speaker's appointment of the following member on the part of the House to the National Skill Standards Board for a 4-year term to fill the existing vacancy thereon:

Mr. William L. Lepley, Hershey, Pennsylvania.

There was no objection.

SO LONG TO SYLVAN RODRIGUEZ, ONE OF HOUSTON'S NATIVE SONS

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, first let me offer my deepest concern and sympathy for the Marines who lost their lives on behalf of this Nation, and to a native son from Houston and his family.

This morning, Mr. Speaker, I rise to salute and acknowledge Sylvan Rodriguez, a ''minister of information,'' a local news anchor for Channel 11 news in Houston, Texas, who passed away last week. Sylvan Rodriguez was an anchor for 23 years, but what we know him most for, those of us who watched him in the community, is as a caring deliverer of the news, someone who believed that the news should be informational but passionate and compassionate.

He died from cancer. The viewers of Channel 11 will miss him and the Houston Community will miss him.

Rodriguez was born in San Antonio, Texas, on March 20, 1948. He came to Houston in 1977. He went to Los Angeles but returned to our Houston family in 1987. He anchored the noon and 6:00 p.m. newscast. He reported on major issues in our community.

He was a founding member of the I Have a Dream Foundation, but most importantly, Mr. Speaker, he loved his family and his community. I salute him and my regrets and sympathy go to his wife; his two daughters; his son; his stepson; and as well his stepdaughter; his mother and three brothers and sister in Louisiana.

Mr. Speaker, we have lost a valued leader, a member of the Houston Community who will be remembered as much for how much he cared for people as for his professional approval to delivering the news to us. Sylvan Rodriguez through his work was a friend to us all, he will be missed by our entire city.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to commemorate the life of Mr. Sylvan Rodriguez, distinguished Houston news anchor, journalist and community activist. Mr. Rodriguez recently passed away after a bout with cancer.

Since the shattering news of his illness, Sylvan showed determination and courage. Instead of turning inward when this disease was diagnosed, Sylvan realized that he could play a special role in educating the community about cancer, its devastation, and one's ability to survive. Sylvan continued to educate the Houston Community about cancer and tirelessly raised funds for numerous charities while still fighting this horrific disease.

More than one of Houston's most beloved news anchor and journalist; Sylvan was a leader in the community and dedicated his life's work to making this world a better place than the way he found it. Sylvan was a very special person and meant a lot to all who knew him. He loved people and he made us better because he educated and challenged us!

At this time, I do not think Sylvan would have wanted the Houston communities to anguish over his passing; instead, he would want all of us to pick up the torch of leadership and responsibility, and work together to ensure that our communities continue to grow and learn from one another, and to continue God's work.

Nevertheless, Sylvan's passing will forever leave a void in all of our hearts in Houston, and throughout the great state of Texas. I hope that in time, his family, friends, and colleagues are comforted by the legacy of accomplishments Sylvan leaves behind. In addition, I hope that fond memories of Sylvan Rodriguez will continue to inspire all who knew him and the Houston community for the future. In closing, I offer my deepest sympathy on Sylvan Rodriguez passing and bid him a fond farewell.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

□ 1800

MICROSOFT BREAK-UP

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. BAIRD) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BAIRD. Mr. Speaker, we are a Nation of laws. Without a codified, uniform, and fairly administered systems of laws, American society would be harmed, lives would be ruined and businesses would falter and fail.

I also know that our system is not perfect. Sometimes it is possible for existing laws to be misapplied or misinterpreted. Sometimes it is possible for reasonable men and women to look at the same set of facts and to simply draw different conclusions. And sometimes our very human and very American desire to side with the little guy overwhelms our objectivity and colors our view of the facts; that I believe is happening in the case of Microsoft versus the Department of Justice.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Microsoft is being unfairly judged, not only in the federal courtroom, but also in the court of public opinion, and I believe this good company stands a chance of being unfairly punished. That is why I am here today to do what I can to stop an injustice from occurring.

Microsoft is the great American success story. Today, it is a company whose products have increased the efficiency of our work force immeasurably. It is a company whose products are used and respected worldwide. It is a company who has shared more of its wealth creation with its workers than any other business in this country. It is a company whose founder has made more charitable contributions than any other business leader in the entire world.

And this American success story is under attack today, because it wanted to offer better products to its customers in order to stay competitive. That seems absurd to me. Even more absurd is the precedent that this decision would set for all of American business, because the attack on Microsoft is not simply an attack on a single very successful company.

It is an attack on the very principles of business competition and technological innovation. It is an attack that threatens to undermine one of the most successful engines of economic growth and technological innovation in our Nation.

One of the first rules of business is to anticipate changing markets, to predict what competitors will do, and try to do better. The way to win in a competitive marketplace is to produce better products more quickly and more economically. That is the basis of our free enterprise system. It is why our economy leads the world, and it is why we are the envy of the rest of the world.

It is a terribly, terribly serious matter for the government to intrude in that process of healthy competition. And it is simply not acceptable or reasonable for our government to seek to destroy a fundamental engine of our economy.

Microsoft is a generous and responsible corporate citizen, one of the most innovative and creative success stories in American history. Microsoft should not be attacked simply because they sought to provide more integrated, advanced, and efficient products to the marketplace, that is what consumers want companies to do. Far from harming consumers, that is what consumers want from products that and the companies that make them.

The theory behind antitrust actions is to prevent monopolistic or anticompetitive practices that could stifle development or competition and thereby hurt the consumer.

I understand that principle, but the key phrase is thereby hurt the consumer. And what is most important to consider here is not whether there is a specific level of competition, but whether consumers have, in fact, been harmed.

It is equally important that we carefully, very carefully, examine the possibility that a proposed response, a proposed response could be more harmful to consumers, more harmful to competition. Let us be clear about something. It is perfectly acceptable to ensure the competition is not unfairly restrained by monopolistic entities. But it is not acceptable, it is not reasonable to use the antitrust process to penalize companies for trying to improve their products for the sake of competitive advantage.

If protecting the consumer is the guiding principle behind antitrust proceedings, it is only fair to ask where the consumers have been in all of this. From the time this process began, right up to the present, there has not been an uprising of consumers demanding Microsoft being prosecuted or penalized.

In fact, consumers use and benefit from Microsoft products every day. And when it comes to choices, consumers have a multitude of choices of various software systems and operating systems.

Competition is alive and well in the software industry. Beyond the matter of choice in consumer satisfaction, it would be difficult to argue that prices have been driven up by Microsoft because every day the price of computer systems and more powerful systems are actually going down.

What is really going on? The case against Microsoft is not fundamentally about protecting consumers, it is really about competing businesses in the States in which those businesses reside seeking to get the upper hand on one another by using litigation where innovation has failed, by using the power of the government to usurp the power of the marketplace.

Our Federal Government should not be party to this, and our government must not stifle competition in the name of protecting consumers. Break up should not be an option.

Mr. Speaker, I have visited Microsoft. I know well the fine work they do, and I know how essential it is for the success of that company that products be integrated. We must not allow break up to harm consumers in the name of protecting them.

COMMEMORATING THE 85TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ARMENIAN GENOCIDE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERWOOD). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow evening on this floor there will be a special order commemorating the 85th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. I will not be present because of a conflict tomorrow evening, and, therefore, I chose this evening to rise in remembrance of all of those who perished during the Armenian Genocide. The commemoration of the Turkish persecution of its Armenian citizens is important because only by educating ourselves about the past can we prevent repetition of similar tragic situations in the future.

April 24 is a special day for the Armenian people. It marks the day that 200 Armenian leaders were arrested in Constantinople and murdered. This was not an isolated incident, rather, it was the beginning of a chain of persecution that had begun under the rule of Ottoman Sultan Abdul.

In just 2 years, between 1894 to 1896, 300,000 Armenians had lost their lives. This event marked the coming of years of oppression, torture and murder for the Armenian-Turkish population.

After Sultan Abdul's reign was over, a new group called the Young Turks came to power. They made pan-Turkism the national ideology, and they set out to rid Turkey of all its minority groups, mainly its Armenians. By 1923, 1.5 million Armenians had been slaughtered and more than 500,000 had been exiled from their homes.

Less than a century ago, the massacre of the Armenian people was unknown to the world. To this day it is still denied by the Turkish government, just as the Nazis two decades later denied the Holocaust. Both of these atrocities could have been prevented, or at least mitigated, if the public had been aware of them. Sadly, it was only after the world learned of the Holocaust and the depths to which human beings could sink in their treatment of each other that the massacre of the Armenian population of Turkey gained attention as genocide.

As we aspire to attain universal human rights for all, we need to have a full knowledge and understanding of the truth. Although we are much more aware of human rights violations, they are still occurring to this day. From the torture of political prisoners, to the Armenian genocide, to the repression of Kurdish people by Turkey and Iraq, to the human rights issues in Kosovo, we can see ethnic cleansing is still in existence. But we can also see the worldwide concern, and we have been able to act to protect innocents.

The denial of this by the Turkish government needs to end and an open and honest acknowledgment of the Armenian genocide must be made before significant progress can be made in Turkish-Armenian relations. To prevent such crimes against humanity from recurring, we must intensify our efforts to establish a growing respect for the truth and oppose and condemn human rights violations wherever they may occur.

THE PASSING OF KENNETH PADDIO AND THE OTHER SOLDIERS WHO PASSED ON THE MV–22 OSPREY TRAGEDY APRIL 11, 2000

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERWOOD). Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to the 19 remarkable and valiant Marines, who made the ultimate sacrifice for their country this past Saturday. My prayers and condolences go out to their family, friends and loved ones during this difficult time.

I urge all Americans to recognize the enormity of what these fallen Marines have afforded us. Our nation is blessed—providing us with a political system that guarantees each of us life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We are free to speak our minds. We are free to practice our faiths. We are free to travel this great land and be with whomever we choose. These precious gifts of freedom have not come free. They have endured through the blood of American heroes and heroines.

President John F. Kennedy once remarked: "A man does what he must in spite of personal consequences, in spite of obstacles and dangers and pressures, and that is the basis of all human mortality." This quote clearly describes these heroes who risked their lives this past weekend so that our great nation's military readiness remains strong and intact.

These Marines were conducting a standard training mission in support of Operational Evaluation when they MV 22 Osprey aircraft crashed near a municipal airport in Marana, Arizona. These Marines conducted this standard evaluation to ensure that this aircraft was suitable for operation by the Marine Corps.

Fittingly, these 19 soldiers symbolize the commitment and dedication that all of our military forces have displayed throughout history in protecting this great democracy. Whether it be peacekeeping missions abroad or training exercises on American soil, members of our Armed Forces risk their lives to ensure that our democracy is preserved. From the early heroes of the Revolutionary War to those who are currently enlisted in our Armed Forces, millions of Americans have sacrificed their lives to preserve our precious freedom and to meet our commitments to allies around the globe. As a nation, we mourn their loss and we are privileged to enjoy the benefits of the ultimate sacrifice that these men and women in our Armed Forces have made on our behalf.

In addition, I pay additional tribute to Private Kenneth O. Paddio, a resident of the 18th Congressional District of Houston, Texas, and one of the 19 solders onboard this fatal military operation. After graduating High School a year ago, Private Paddio moved to the 18th Congressional District of Houston, Texas to be close to his beloved mother Ella. Truly a remarkable young man, his family and loved ones recall that Kenneth was a "quiet, independent and determined young man who joined the Marines to better himself." On behalf of the 18th Congressional District, we mourn your loss and pay tribute to your heroism.

In closing, I again offer all of the families my deepest sympathy. I hope that in time, you are comforted by the legacy of accomplishments that your loved ones have left behind. May God bless you all.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HERMAN B. WELLS, LIVING LEGEND OF INDIANA HISTORY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Indiana (Ms. CARSON) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. CARSON. Mr. Speaker, last month Indiana lost a favorite son of great distinction, a living legend of Indiana history. I rise to acquaint the larger world with Dr. Herman B. Wells of Indiana University who died at the age of 97.

The standard details of his life mark great attainment: Economics professor, then Dean of the Business School, he became President of the University in 1937, and served until 1962. Then, retiring not at all, he continued his service as Chancellor of the University until his death. Were that all there was, he would be worthy of great honor.

But there was more, marking his true greatness: he gave himself to the University and to its many thousands of students, leading learning and leading change in important ways. He protected controversial research; he developed a world-class school of music; he used his personal power to roll back racial discrimination at the campus; he helped the school to integrate its basketball team; and, friend and counselor to generations of students, with his counsel he helped make Indiana and the Nation a better place.

In our loss of Herman Wells, Indiana has lost a towering figure of American higher education.

100TH ANNIVERSARY OF UNITED STATES SUBMARINE SERVICE AND VETERANS HEPATITIS C EPIDEMIC

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor men who bravely served the United States in our most trying times as a Nation. Today marks the 100th anniversary of the U.S. submarine force. Will Rogers once said, ''We can't all be heroes because somebody has to sit on the curb and clap as they go by. Today we applaud the heroes and we honor fellow submariners who remain on eternal patrol. May we never forget them and their brave deeds.'' Those are the words of Mr. Rogers.

The thoughts of Will Rogers live with us today. During the most serious challenges our Nation has faced, the men of the submarine service did their jobs above and beyond the call of duty. They were essential to creating victory in war and remain essential to keeping America strong in peace. War fought under the sea developed its own physics and harsh realities completely different from the experiences of any soldier who came before them. These men placed complete and total trust in their skippers and their skippers had to have the same faith in their men. During World War II, the price they paid for their successes was heavy. The submarine service carried the highest mortality rate of any U.S. service, more than a 20 percent loss of life. However, one has only to look at the statistics to see how effective our submariners really were. With only 1.6 percent of all Navy personnel, the submarine service sank over 55 percent of all Japanese ships sunk in the war, including one-third of all Japanese Men-of-War.

President Roosevelt when he was secretly told of the success of our submarines said, ''I can only echo the words of Winston Churchill: 'Never have so many owed so much to so few.' '' Those lost on submarines in the line of duty for their country will never be forgotten. We must not forget those who still serve in the silent service. Happy birthday to the U.S. submarine force.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to speak about something else that is important to all veterans in this Nation. I want to speak about what the Department of Veterans Affairs has described as an epidemic. I am talking about the staggeringly high infection rates of hepatitis C among our country's veterans population.

Hepatitis C is a fatal disease that can incubate for over 30 years before any symptoms occur. Over 70 percent of those Americans infected with Hepatitis-C are unaware that they even carry the virus. Treatment and testing are both available through the Veterans Administration for any veteran who believes that he or she is at risk.

I am told that my area of the country has a 28 percent infection rate among veterans, while the general population experiences a 1.8 percent infection rate. I represent the greater New York area. With a 28 percent infection rate, I call upon our veterans to be aware of this.

In my hand I hold a very simple home test kit for Hepatitis-C, and I am calling on all of our veterans to try to get tested. The veterans can get one of these test kits if they go to a VA hospital or if they contact the American Liver Foundation at 1–800–GO-LIVER for information about these testing programs.

Testing is very easy. It is a four-step process. It is very, very simple. First you pick up the phone and you get a personal ID number, then you take your sample, it is only one drop of blood, and you mail it in a pre-paid envelope. Ten days later you call for a completely confidential result.

It is important that every veteran who has been exposed to any blood-to-blood contact pick up one of these Hepatitis-C check kits and call 1–800–GO-LIVER or go to their VA hospital, because it is important, especially in our greater New York area, that the veterans in that area get tested. Please get tested, especially if you are a veteran, before the symptoms of severe liver disease begin to show themselves. By the time that they do, it is almost too late.

LOWERING THE COST OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS IN AMERICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERWOOD). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. GUTKNECHT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. GUTKNECHT. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to talk about an important issue that more and more Americans are concerned about, and that is the high cost of prescription drugs here in the United States. I want to show a chart that reflects just how severe this problem is.

This chart talks about one of the most commonly prescribed drugs in the United States, called Prilosec. It is a drug that deals with a gastrointestinal problem of too much acid. If you buy that drug, a 30-day supply in Minneapolis, Minnesota, it will sell for about $99.95. Now, if you happen to be vacationing in Manitoba, in Winnipeg, Manitoba, you take exactly that same prescription into a prescription supply of some kind, a drugstore, you will be able to buy that drug for $50.88, exactly the same drug, made in exactly the same plant, same dosage, everything. But, interestingly enough, if you take that same prescription into a drugstore in Guadalajara, Mexico, you can buy that drug for $17.50.

Mr. Speaker, this is the day and age of NAFTA, the North American Free Trade Agreement. Goods and services are supposed to be able to go across our borders freely. That is true of almost every other product, except drugs.

We are not alone in saying that prescription drugs have gone up a lot. Our own estimates by our own government say that over the last 4 years, prescription drugs here in the United States have gone up 56 percent. Last year alone they went up 16 percent. Talking about these differences, just between Minnesota and Canada, one of the HMOs in Minneapolis estimates if they could simply buy their drugs for their HMO Members, subscribers, in Manitoba, they could save over $30 million a year for their subscribers. We are talking about real money.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that we need to do something. The Canadian government itself has done its own study, and this is the latest study comparing drug prices in the United States to drug prices in Canada. Again, this is for exactly the same drugs. They estimate the last year that they had the figures that the differences are over 50 percent, the difference between the drug prices in Canada and Mexico.

There is another group out of Utah, the Life Extension Foundation; and every Member, if they will contact my office, we will send them one of these brochures. They have done a beautiful job of differentiating the price differences between us and Europe, for example.

Let me read some differences in drug prices. A very commonly prescribed drug, Premarin, in the United States two capsules will sell for $14.98 on average. In Europe, they pay only $4.25. Synthroid, another commonly prescribed drug, the United States price, $13.84. In Europe they can buy it for $2.95 equivalent. Coumadin, this is a drug that my dad takes, a blood thinner, in the United States that drug sells for $30.25. In the European market it sells for $2.85. Mr. Speaker, this goes on and on and on.

Now, I believe the drug companies have to be allowed to make a reasonable profit. We understand that they have to have reasonable profits if they are going to plow it back into research. But the unvarnished truth is that American consumers are paying most of the freight for the research being done; and worse than that, we are paying for most of the profit.

There is an answer. I have a bill, H.R. 3240, which would allow importation of drugs that are approved by the FDA.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that we should do more to make prescription drugs available to seniors who cannot afford them. But we should not be foolish enough to do nothing to make those drugs more affordable for all Americans. We should not allow our own FDA to stand between Americans and lower drug prices.

I hope all Members will join me in supporting and cosponsoring H.R. 3240.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I remind Members if they would like a copy of this brochure, they simply have to call my office. We will send it out to them. It explains better than I can why it is important that we allow markets and competition to bring drug prices into line here in the United States.

PROJECT EXILE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. EHRLICH) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. EHRLICH. Mr. Speaker, my good colleague, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) will join me in this special order. I welcome my colleague.

Mr. TANCREDO. I thank the gentleman. It is a pleasure to be here.

Mr. EHRLICH. Mr. Speaker, we have a very important topic this evening,

Project Exile, a bill that passed on the floor of the House today by an overwhelming majority on the Suspension Calendar, something I know that pleases the gentleman, pleases myself, and should please our respective constituents and the people of the United States of America.

My personal experience with this program, Mr. Speaker, began about a year and a half ago when a member of my staff came in to me and expressed frustration about my frustration concerning the fact that on gun control debates, we always talk by one another. We could not get anything done, and the PACs and interest groups raised money, and that helps politically, but it does not hit the bottom line, which is bad guys with guns.

I heard about Project Exile, and he said, and this was a former Baltimore county detective, and he said I am going to go find out about this program. I said, Go for it. We found out about Project Exile and took a bipartisan group of Maryland State legislators to Richmond, Virginia, and talked to the attorneys down there, and talked to the street cops; and we talked to the Federal prosecutor and the business community and NAACP. We talked to everybody, and, you know what? It works. It works, because it is common sense.

This is an interesting initiative, because rarely do you hear the NRA and handgun control supporting the same gun-related initiative. It is certainly working in Richmond, it works in Virginia, it works in New York, it works in Texas, and now hopefully around the country, given what we passed on this floor today.

I also heard during the course of the debate today some unfortunate mischaracterizations from the minority party. The two that really came to mind was, one, who supports this program. The observation was made that this is an NRA initiative. It is only the NRA. Of course, as I just said, it is also supported by the handgun folks, handgun control. It is the right and left coming together to get something done for a change.

Finally, the representation was made that this money could be wasted on all sorts of frivolous activities, and the fact is the bill specifies how the money can be used with respect to police, prosecutors, courts, probation officers, the juvenile justice system, prison expansion, criminal history, records retention, case management programs, innovation, crime control, the bottom line.

I personally want to congratulate the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM) who has been a great leader in this effort, who brought this issue to the national limelight, in conjunction with Governor Gilmore and other members of our conference. I truly believe that this is a logical follow-up to Truth in Sentencing, another issue initiative initiated by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MCCOLLUM) some years ago.

Mr. Speaker, I want to recognize my colleague from Colorado, I know who has some salient observations to make about this common sense approach that targets gun-toting felons, people who should not have guns in the first place, and, when caught, sentences them, exiles them to either Federal time if the State status is not in place, or State time if the State legislatures have really gotten on board with respect to Project Exile.

I recognize my colleague.

Mr. TANCREDO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman; and I appreciate the opportunity to share a few thoughts about this.

In many ways our experience was the same in terms of how we came to know this issue. I was reading a newspaper article out of Virginia where they had arrested a suspect for possession of narcotics. The amount of narcotics in the possession of this individual was quite significant. It was not just a baggy; it was like a truckload.

In the past, any time that this kind of thing had happened before, any time that an individual with this much narcotics in his possession had been arrested, they had found a weapon with him. So they kept looking, because the police naturally assumed that he had to have one. When they did not find it initially, they kept pressing. Then they kept pressing him as to where it was, essentially why he did not have it. This went on for hours.

Finally, the suspect, frustrated at being pummeled by the police, figuratively speaking, said, ''It is 5 years, man. It is 5 years, man.'' What he was, of course, saying to the policemen was that he had gotten the message, the message of Project Exile. If he had been caught with a firearm in the commission of the crime, in this case transportation of illegal narcotics, he would get a minimum of 5 years tacked on to anything else that he ended up with.

Now, here was a, I cannot say convicted, but a suspect, someone who had been arrested, explaining it essentially to the rest of the world as to why he did not have a firearm in his possession.

At that point in time when I read that article, I thought to myself, you know, this is pretty common sense stuff. No wonder it is so hard for many of us, maybe in the Congress of the United States or in the administration, to actually come to grips with the possibility that this could work.

What we are saying to people, make it clear here, what Project Exile is saying, whether it is in Richmond, or now in Denver, Colorado, or in the other places that my colleague mentioned, what we are saying is if you use a gun in the commission of a crime or if you are in possession of an illegal firearm, you are going to look at hard time and you are going to look at a minimum of 5 years, and you are not getting out of it.

Lo and behold, when you put this into effect, surprise, surprise, levels of gun violence begin to go down. They have gone down in Virginia; they are going down every place else where this has been put into place. So it is not theoretical. This is empirically proven to work. Again, it is such common sense stuff that you wonder why people have not really kind of warmed up to it.

I wonder certainly why some of our colleagues from the other side today were so adamant in their opposition to it. I wondered why, frankly, as I was driving over here, I heard on the radio that the President of the United States referred to this bill, to the passage of it today, as a cruel joke. A joke.

Well, let me tell you what the joke might be. It just may be, Mr. Speaker, that we have a joke being perpetrated on the American public. But it is not this bill. Let me tell you what that joke may in fact be.

It may be the allusion to a desire on the part of the minority party and on the part of the President of the United States to actually have something work, to actually get to a solution; not the ultimate solution, of course. I am sure, even if we put this in place in every city in America, that there would still be some aspect of gun violence, but this is a positive step that we know works.

Why would we be opposed to this? Why would we refer to it as a joke if in fact we really want a solution? But maybe, just maybe, that is the joke, that some people in this body and maybe even the President of the United States in fact do not want a solution, they want an issue to continue to debate into the campaign. If that is true, it is a cruel joke.

But I will tell the Members what this bill is not: This bill is not a joke. This bill provides financial support to communities all over the country to do something about gun violence.

Mr. EHRLICH. The gentleman's point is very well taken, Mr. Speaker. It may not just be the agenda of the left. That may be the reason they do not like Project Exile, because to the extent Exile works it takes some steam away from their true agenda, which is gun control. Reasonable people will agree or disagree on gun control, but we are talking about crime control.

So I think the gentleman's point is very, very well taken and well articulated.

Mr. Speaker, I love the way the gentleman found out about it, because we have all found out about it through the press, because they have done a pretty good job in publicizing Project Exile. What I like is the multi-tiered approach. We start out federally but go to State legislatures, ask them to pass laws, which is what today's bill is all about. If we do the right thing, there are the dollars, so resource is really not an issue.

What struck me about Richmond is the lack of ego of State prosecutors and Federal prosecutors. They work together. They divide up the case. They sit down on a weekly basis and divide up the cases as a function of which bad guy is going to get hit hardest in which system; a terrific idea, a lot of common sense.

Probably the best part of Exile is the private sector. It is not government money that funds the communications effort, it is the people whose livelihoods depend upon safe streets. It is asking them to invest in their own communities, what the merchants in Richmond, Virginia, and now all over the country and in Denver have done, come up with the dollars, put their money where their mouth is, fund the communications effort in order to educate that relatively narrow group of bad guys who have guns, who shoot other people, who make us less free.

Is this not a great idea?

Mr. TANCREDO. If the gentleman will continue to yield, Mr. Speaker, it is such a good idea and so bipartisan in its original intent that in Colorado, actually, and this is another interesting point, Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States today, as I say, called this a joke. Yet it is in fact his U.S. Attorneys who have put this in place in Richmond, Virginia, and in Denver, Colorado, attorneys appointed by this administration who do not believe that it is a joke, who believe that it is in fact a very good program.

When we inaugurated this in Denver, I was there. I was invited to participate in the kickoff of the program. On the stage were a lot of individuals, but just let me name two. One was Jim Brady and one was Wayne LaPierre, the head of the NRA, and Mr. Brady, of course, the unfortunate victim of an assassin's bullet who now, of course, is doing everything possible to bring about gun control legislation. Both of them were on the podium supporting Project Exile.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the President would actually consider going to Mr. Brady and telling him that Project Exile is a joke. I doubt it. I doubt that he would do that, because in fact we know that this is not a joke. This may in fact work.

Mr. Speaker, here are the Federal laws on guns. Here are the Colorado laws on guns. The point I make here, Mr. Speaker, is that it is not a lack of inventory that is the problem. I am not saying that maybe other gun laws would not be necessary. I am not saying that. I have actually voted on this floor, I have voted for other gun laws. I voted for the juvenile justice bill. Actually, it went down. I voted for it. I believed that those would be positive steps. So I am not telling the Members that nothing is necessary.

However, I am saying that no one could suggest for a moment that it is a lack of gun law inventory that is the problem, that is causing all of the problem in America with regard to gun violence. It has been a problem with regard to enforcement. That is where we are. That is where we are coming down with this issue of Project Exile. We are telling people that we are in fact going to begin to enforce the laws on the books; again, a very logical, commonsense approach that is no joke.

Mr. EHRLICH. The President's words are profoundly disturbing, but when we are a press release politician, of course, the act is done when the press conference is over. Forget about the laws. I could do the same pile of papers in the State of Maryland, and I am sure all my colleagues could do with their respective States.

I think the gentleman's point is so well taken. I hope the President did not mean what he said, because, as my colleague rightfully points out, many, not all, not in Maryland, but many of his U.S. Attorneys, particularly in Richmond, were the driving force behind Project Exile.

Just as a bottom line, when we think about it, we take a situation where egos do not matter, unbelievable in this town, but we force people to cooperate. Who cares who gets the credit. It is the bottom line, the bad guys. So we take egos and put them aside.

Then we target not nonviolent criminals, not even some violent criminals, but we target the most dangerous, people who shoot other people; a rather narrow group as we know, recidivists all, usually. So we target that particular group.

We ask the business community to fund it. We ask the State legislature to pass the laws. We give the resources, as we did today with our Federal bill, to local prosecutors to let them do what they wish with these extra dollars. And what do we get? Safer streets. Look at the dramatic numbers. Look at the results.

It may not be the agenda of some Members in this Chamber, and that is a philosophical orientation. We can debate that until the cows come home, and I am sure we will. But at least let us agree that Exile works. Let us fund it and let us pass it.

I yield to the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. TANCREDO) for a few final words.

Mr. TANCREDO. I sincerely appreciate my colleague's willingness to bring this point to the attention of our colleagues here, and hopefully to the general public, because this is one of those things that needs greater exposure.

People have to understand what was done today, what was the purpose of this legislation, and what we hope to achieve based upon what has in fact happened where Project Exile has been put into place. Yet, it has been with the support or actually the inspiration of, the idea came from members of the administration who are now acting in the capacity of U.S. Attorneys.

I give them full credit. There is no pride of authorship here. I did not come up with the idea of Project Exile. I wish I had. I did not. I simply am a supporter. A Democrat U.S. Attorney in Colorado held an event that I went to and gave as much support as I possibly could, because it works, because the concept is good.

Again, it is not the only thing we can do, but it is an insult to suggest that this piece of legislation today is anything but an honest attempt on the part of the Members of this Congress to deal with the issue of gun violence in America.

Mr. EHRLICH. I thank my friend. Mr. Speaker, there is no pride of authorship here, just enthusiasm for what works.

Today, Mr. Speaker, six States in this country will qualify for these dollars. Unfortunately, my State, Maryland, would not. Hopefully my General Assembly next session, in the 2001 session of the Maryland General Assembly, will pass the laws needed to qualify for these dollars so Project Exile can be implemented in Maryland and in Colorado and all the States in this great Union.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE CHEVENE BOWERS KING, A GREAT GEORGIAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SHERWOOD). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I am honored and humbled to have the opportunity today to take this time with some of my colleagues to pay tribute to the life of a good and a great Georgian, the late Chevene Bowers King.

On last Monday, April 3, this House passed a measure, Senate bill 1567, which designated the United States courthouse located at 223 Broad Avenue in Albany, Georgia, as the C.B. King United States Courthouse.

Oh, what a wonderful tribute, what a tribute to a life that has been given in unselfish service for so many people.

Someone wrote the poem:

GOOD TIMBER

''A tree that never had to fight
For sun and sky and air and light,
That stood out in the open plain
And always got its share of rain,
Never became a forest king,
But lived and died a scrubby thing.

A man who never had to toil
By hand or mind in life's turmoil,
Who never had to earn his share
Of sun and sky and light and air,
Never became a manly man,
But lived and died as he began.
Good timber doesn't grow in ease;
The stronger winds, the tougher trees.
The farther sky, the greater length,
The rougher storm, the greater strength.
By wind or rain, by sun or snow,
In trees or man good timbers grow.''

Chevene Bowers King was a man who was great timber, he was good timber, and the legacy that he left in his beloved Southland is one that will be enjoyed and revered and remembered for many, many years to come.

When we talked about introducing the bill to name the courthouse after C.B. King, it was interesting that there were four chief cosponsors, two of them United States Senators from the State of Georgia, Senator PAUL COVERDELL, Senator MAX CLELAND, and two of them House members from the State of Georgia, the honorable gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), and myself, SANFORD BISHOP. We introduced bills in both houses to designate the courthouse on Broad Avenue in Albany, Georgia, the C.B. King United States Courthouse.

How ironic it is that two white U.S. Congressmen, perhaps the descendents of slave owners, and two African-American Congressmen, perhaps the descendents of slaves, were able to come together with a common history in our beloved South to give tribute to a man who brought the races together and who helped to break down the walls of racial discrimination.

Just as Robert Benham, Chief Justice of the Georgia Supreme Court, wrote a letter in support of legislation to name the courthouse, he described C.B. King as ''A man who proved to be all things to all people. His vision, innovation, brilliant legal reasoning skills, compassion, and courage led to reforms that impacted not only the good people of the State of Georgia, but the entire Nation.''

He felt that it was fitting that a Federal courthouse is named in his honor. ''His leadership and legal mastery in several landmark cases established a groundwork for school desegregation, voting rights, and jury selection reform. He worked tirelessly to promote equal access to employment, health care, public facilities, and services on a national level.''

There is no finer example of professionalism, he said, than C.B. King, extremely competent, a public servant, community activist, led the fight for the rights of all people; an organizer, a participant, an attorney for the Albany Movement. The Albany Movement was a series of demonstrations and sit-ins held during the early 1960s designed to help end discrimination and segregation in South Georgia and throughout the South.

Dr. Martin Luther King viewed the Albany Movement as a pivotal campaign in the civil rights movement. C.B. King was Dr. Martin Luther King's lawyer, his trusted friend, his confidant. C.B. represented many noted leaders who were forerunners in the fight for equality; and as a result, he motivated countless minorities and women to become part of the noble legal profession.

His shining example has inspired lawyers and judges everywhere. So I am just honored and humbled that I am able to come today to stand here in these hallowed chambers to pay tribute to a man who not only touched my life but touched the lives of so many others across Georgia and across this Nation.

I have been joined by one of my colleagues who knew C.B. as I did, the honorable gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS). In a moment I will yield to him after I make a few more brief comments about C.B.

Chevene Bowers King was born October 12, 1923, in Albany, Georgia, the third of eight children of Clinton King, owner of an apparel shop and supermarket, and Mrs. Margaret Slater King. He attended Mercer Street Elementary School and Madison Street High School in Albany, Georgia, and after graduation he attended Tuskegee University and then he enlisted in the United States Navy.

After his 3 years of service in the Navy, he enrolled at Fisk University where he earned his bachelor's degree in political science. Pursuing his education further, he attended Case Western Reserve University School of Law in Cleveland, Ohio. He attended Case Western Reserve because for a young black college graduate in the South, there were no law schools for him to attend. So he had to go North.

He went to Case Western. He graduated from law school, but unlike so many who fled the South, C.B. was committed to returning to his homeland to make a difference, to try to break down the walls of discrimination and the racism that inhibited the growth and development of millions and millions and millions of young people. So he returned to Albany, Georgia, and he started up the practice of law.

He married Carol Roumain and he had a family; four sons, Chevene, Jr., Kenyan, Leland, Clennon, and a daughter, Peggy.

C.B. practiced law for many years, and he truly made a difference.

The kinds of cases that C.B. handled are the kinds of cases that inspired us and that ultimately transformed the South from a land that was dreaded to a land of opportunity and a land which now leads the Sunbelt in these United States. C.B. is remembered, perhaps, most for his legal activism in the South. He became the leading civil rights attorney in southwest Georgia, being only one of three African American lawyers in the entire State of Georgia. He worked closely with the local chapters of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and was a cooperating attorney with the NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund.

His work spanned the entire range of civil rights litigation. He handled school desegregation cases. He was a lead attorney in the school desegregation cases in Dougherty County, in Georgia, in Muscogee County in Georgia, in Colquitt County in Georgia. He was one of the earlier manifestations of the need for political involvement by African Americans, and he led the fight to ensure the right to peaceably assemble and to demonstrate. He led the fight to allow African American voters and candidates for office to not be subjected to unconstitutional segregation and discrimination, whether it be on the registration being denied the opportunity to register to vote or being forced to vote in separate voting booths.

C.B. led the fight for voting rights and political rights. Not only did he lead the fight in terms of voting, in terms of desegregation, but he also, in the halls of justice, saw injustice when women and African Americans were denied the right to serve on juries. So he went into the Federal courthouse in Albany, Georgia, and attacked these matters. As a result of several of these jury discrimination cases, in Mitchell County, Quitman County, Dougherty County, Terrell County, Baker County and indeed in the Federal court system there in the Middle District of Georgia, he led and successfully opened the opportunity for blacks and for women to serve on juries.

Of course, it is interesting that he also expanded his civil rights struggle to block discrimination in employment, particularly public employment. The city of Albany, he handled that case. He was known as a legal scholar. He was an excellent orator. He had a royal presence, and he brought an intensity to the civil rights movement. I am just honored and delighted that this House and this Nation has finally recognized the legacy and the contribution of this great Georgian.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), a son of the South, a product of the civil rights movement, who knew C.B. King as I did on a personal basis and who has personal experiences and a personal legacy that he can relate regarding C.B. King. At this time I would like to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS).

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my friend and my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), for yielding and for bringing to the attention of this body and to our Nation the life and times of C.B. King.

C.B. King possessed a gifted legal mind. He was an amazing member of the bar. C.B. King combined a flair for words with the unique ability to talk to people from all walks of life. He could give simple legal advice to a poor client and a minute later force a judge to dust off his dictionary. Along with other lawyers in his staff like Fred Gray of Montgomery, Arthur Shores and Peter Hall of Birmingham, and Jack Young of Jackson, Mississippi, C.B. King used his gift to bring about a nonviolent revolution under the rule of law.

In the struggle for civil rights, even the shield of law was often not enough. Despite intimidation and the attacks, C.B. King refused to retreat from his principles. When a cane-swinging Albany sheriff split his head open for showing up at the local jail to meet a client, C.B. King refused to back down. When his pregnant sister-in-law lost her child after being slapped and kicked by police during a protest in South Georgia, C.B. King refused to back down; and when his brother Preston King was forced to flee the country rather than be unjustly imprisoned, C.B. King refused to back down.

C.B. King came by his resolve honestly. He often compared his father's determination to that of Hannibal, the general who led his troops on elephants across the Alps. Like his father, C.B. was driven and he paid little mind to long odds.

In 1970, I recall C.B. King became the first black person since reconstruction to run for governor of Georgia. I had the great honor of hosting a fund-raiser for him that summer in the backyard of my home. C.B. King did not win the governor's office but he did win hundreds and thousands of followers and friends, and C.B. King understood that one had to plow the field before they planted the crop.

C.B. King plowed that field and the seeds of change were sown in his wake. Today I stand as a Member of Congress with my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), as a living legacy to his struggle. I owe him a great deal of gratitude. I think we all do. So tonight I must thank my colleague, my friend and my brother, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), for offering the legislation to name a courthouse in honor of C.B. King.

C.B. King would be very proud of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) and the way he represents the good people of South Georgia. So it is fitting that the gentleman leads the effort to honor this legend of the Georgia bar, this humane and good man that helped to make our Nation a different place, a better place. I can think of no better tribute than to name a courthouse in C.B. King's honor.

The mention of C.B. King's name once prompted an undertaker who was busy burying one of C.B.'s brothers to pause, look down at C.B. King's simple headstone and a family plot and say, ''He was something else.''

I have to admit I could never have said it any better because he was something else.

I thank my friend, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), for holding this special order.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), my good friend and a friend of C.B. King. I found it so very interesting that the gentleman and I, both natives of Alabama now residents of Georgia and Georgia citizens, have now begun to live out the legacy of C.B. King.

Interestingly enough, for C.B. fighting for voting rights, for the end of segregation in voter registration, the end of segregation in the voting booths in Georgia, South Georgia in particular, that was not enough for him. He thought that the transformation could not just stop at the courthouse doors. So as the gentleman pointed out, he demonstrated for us that it was possible for us to run for office.

He ran for President in 1960 and he ran for governor in 1970, and in 1964 he ran for Congress in the Second Congressional District, the seat that I now hold. It is also interesting that at the same time C.B. King was contesting the Georgia primary in 1970, one of his opponents was Jimmy Carter, who was then running for governor. C.B. did not win the primary. Jimmy Carter ultimately did and became governor, but there were hundreds of thousands of people all across the State who gained a new respect for C.B. King and for the fact that there was an articulate orator, eloquent, debonair who could use polysyllabic words in a way that none had been heard on the campaign stumps in Georgia. When he did his televised debate, we all were proud knowing that perhaps he would not win but he represented us well. So he planted the seed for us that, yes, one day it is possible that we might not only run but we might win. For that, we all owe C.B. King a debt of gratitude.

I was contacted by a constituent after the naming of the courthouse where C.B. King was introduced and it appeared in the press. I received afternoon e-mail from a constituent who was very irate, who just did not think that it was appropriate for that courthouse to be named after C.B. King.

I was struck, but then I understood that, perhaps, there are so many in our beloved State of Georgia, so many across the Nation who really do not fully understand the tremendous import of the life and career that this man had in transforming our native Georgia into the place that it is now, not perhaps as perfect as we want it to be, but certainly so much better than it used to be, better because of the life of C.B. King.

I responded to this constituent by reminding him that it was C.B. King's accomplishments, peacefully utilizing the Constitution and the laws of the United States to assure equal opportunity under the law for all Georgians regardless of race.

I reminded this constituent that it should never have been an issue, that given the course the history of slavery and Jim Crow, segregation, discrimination, the Civil Rights Movement, and eventually the successes and the acknowledgment by the courts that all Americans of all races must be afforded equal rights under the law, that C.B. King had, indeed, made a positive difference.

I raised the question, what would southwest Georgia be like had C.B. King not challenged the status quo in Federal court and forced desegregation of the public schools and many of our south Georgia school systems.

Had he not gone into that Federal courthouse in Albany, Georgia, would we ever have seen the talent of a Herschel Walker, the talent of a Charlie Ward, or the talent of a Judge Herbert Phipps who now sits on the Georgia Court of Appeals, or a Robert Benham who is chief justice of the Georgia Supreme Court.

Had C.B. King not gone into Albany's Federal court to force the City of Albany to comply with laws prohibiting discrimination in employment based on race, creed, color, religion, or sex under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, Albany and many south Georgia municipalities would have been deprived of the talents of countless African American public sector employees, such as the current city manager in Albany or the police chief or the fire chiefs, and many, many, many others who have served in various capacities in the public sector.

This was a milestone in the history of the south. It was a milestone in south Georgia. It was the life and the efforts of C.B. King that really made it possible.

What kind of justice system would we have in southwest Georgia if C.B. King had not gone into our Federal courthouse to end the age-old practice of excluding blacks and women from serving on juries in State and Federal cases?

What if C.B. King had not been there to have our Federal courts protect the rights of citizens of all colors to peaceably assemble and petition their government, to be free of discrimination and voter registration in the voting booth and in running for office?

Indeed, I, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CLYBURN), the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), and many of the members of the Congressional Black Caucus would not be here serving in this body, and many thousands of others would not be serving in municipalities, on school board, in the State legislatures all across the south had it not been for the work of C.B. King.

I have been joined by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CLYBURN), another of my colleagues who was a part of the movement, who even participated in the Albany Movement, who knew C.B. King, and who has gone on to, in the legacy of C.B. King, distinguish himself. He is the chairman of the Congressional Black Caucus. He perhaps, as well as any, knows, feels, experienced, and has lived the legacy of C.B. King.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to yield to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CLYBURN), my friend and colleague.

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia so much for yielding me a few moments to speak about that period in our lives that tend to mold and make us what we are today. I often reflect upon my childhood growing up in South Carolina.

I remember when I was but a teenager, when my mother, who owned a beauty shop, came one day and asked that I accompany her to the Sumter County, South Carolina courtroom because she wanted me to see some transformation taking place in our State and Nation.

When I went down that day, I had the great honor of watching in utter amazement a great South Carolinian, Matthew Perry, who was arguing a case called Nash against the South Carolina Conference of Branches of NAACP.

My mother wanted me to see Matthew Perry because she said to me on that day, ''I want you to see what you can be if you stay in school, study hard, and grow up to live out your dreams.'' I always held that day with me as I went away to college at South Carolina State University.

It was in my junior year that I was bitten by the bug that we all call the Student Movement. In the spring of my junior year, I went to Raleigh, North Carolina where I joined with other black students from all over the country in trying to fashion a response to what had just taken place in February of that year at North Carolina A&T University.

That following fall, we all met in Atlanta, Georgia. I will never forget the weekend, October 13, 14 and 15 of 1960. It was that weekend that I met the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), and so many others. There we were fashioning what later became known as the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee. Many of us on that weekend met for the first time Martin Luther King, Jr.

It was in discussions that took place there that we learned at his knee. I will never forget sitting up all night in a dormitory, I never remember the name of the dormitory there at Moorehouse College, where we sat with Martin Luther King, Jr. all night until 5:30, 6:00 a.m. in the morning, as he tried to get us to understand his nonviolent philosophy.

It was from there that many of us followed him to Albany and the now famous Albany Movement where I first had an encounter, and I did not know really who he was at the time, I now know, and of course I have known for some time, that it was C.B. King.

So when I saw that the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) had introduced legislation to name a courthouse in the State of Georgia in honor of C. B. King, I began to think about all of that.

Of course those of us in South Carolina, we always looked upon what was going on in Atlanta and Georgia, at those guys as being the forerunners in so much of this. But I teased the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) over the last few weeks about having come here with him in 1993 and having vowed when I got here that the very first thing I was going to do was to erect in my own way a memorial to that period in my life that meant so much to me and now my children and grandchildren.

I did that by introducing as my first piece of legislation a bill to name the new courthouse plan for Columbia, South Carolina in honor of Matthew J. Perry. That bill is now law. We are getting ready to break ground on that courthouse, and that courthouse is going to be named for Matthew J. Perry. Now Matthew's name is going to go on the courthouse a little bit later. C.B. King's name will go on the courthouse in Georgia.

But for the first time in our lives, I got out in front of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) on something with connection with that period in our lives.

But it is important to him to memorialize the life of C.B. King in this way, just as it was important to me to memorialize the life of Matthew J. Perry. Because in that period of our history, we see a lot going on today that people sort of take for granted.

But at that period, in 1960, 1961, 1962, those men and women who took it upon themselves to represent us as we filled up the jails all over the south, many times took their own human safety into their hands.

I still remember another attorney from Columbia, Boulware. Boulware was kind of interesting. Boulware, on one instance, I think it was Greenwood, South Carolina, had to be smuggled out of town in the trunk of his automobile.

This is what C.B. King, Matthew J. Perry, and many others across the south, practicing attorneys had to endure in order to lay the groundwork that eventually led to many of the court decisions that eventually brought many of us here to these hallowed halls.

So to be here this evening to participate in this special order is something that I find very, very satisfying to me, because it tends to bear out a little admonition that my mother laid on me when I was about 12 years old when I was saying to one of her customers in the beauty shop, it was a long-time family friend, what I wanted to be when I grow up. I told that young lady on that day about my dreams and aspirations to be involved in the body politic of South Carolina and this Nation. On that day, that lady said to me, ''Son, don't you ever let anybody else hear you say that again.''

On that evening, my mother said to me, as she brought me to the kitchen table and told me not to pay any attention to what I had been told in the beauty shop that day, for me to hold fast to my dreams. As I later read from National Views, ''For if dreams die, life is a broken winged bird that cannot fly.''

I held to those dreams. And with my mother's love, my father's support, that of family and friends, and with the hard working sacrifice of the C.B. Kings of the world, I was able to get here as a Member of this august body.

To have this courtroom, this courthouse, named for C.B. King, as we are doing in Columbia for Matthew J. Perry, these are living memorials to a period in our history that makes this country get closer to living out its great dream for all of us, to fulfill all that we can be.

So I am pleased to be here tonight to participate in this special order, and I thank my good friend, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), for having the wisdom and the fortitude to honor this giant among men, C.B. King, in this way.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to how much time we have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TANCREDO). The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) has approximately 22 minutes.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, at this time I am delighted to yield the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT).

The gentleman from North Carolina, as I was in my life before coming to Congress, was a practicing attorney. In fact, we both were civil rights attorneys. We both shared an experience as Earl Warren Fellows of the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund. In that capacity, we attended biyearly conferences where we were studying the recent developments in civil rights law.

The gentleman from North Carolina, of course, was with one of the most, if not the most, prominent civil rights law firm in Charlotte, North Carolina, Chambers, Stein, Ferguson and Lanning. And I, of course, was in Georgia, after leaving New York, practicing there in Columbus, Georgia.

I met the gentleman during those years, 1971–1972. All up through the next 10 years we would run into each other at least twice a year as we labored in the vineyards of civil rights litigation across the south, and as we came to Airlie House in Warrenton, Virginia to meet with stalwarts like C.B. King and Julius Chambers. The gentleman from North Carolina knew C.B. as I knew C.B., and I am delighted to yield to him.

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to put a slightly different spin on this this evening, because I was wondering, when they write the history of the 20th Century, what will they write? When they write the history of the Civil Rights movement, what will they write?

They, obviously, will write about Martin Luther King and Fannie Lou Hamer and the tremendous sit-ins and the movement. But I submit to my colleagues that if they write an accurate history of that period, they will write about Thurgood Marshall and Jim Nabrit at the NAACP Legal Defense and Education Fund; they will write about Julius Chambers and James Ferguson in Charlotte, North Carolina; they will write about Matthew Perry and Ernest Finney in South Carolina; they will write about Avon Williams in Nashville, Tennessee; they will write about Don Hollowell and Howard Moore in Atlanta, Georgia; and Jack Young in Mississippi, and Arthur Shores and Fred Gray in Alabama; and, of course, they will write about C.B. King in Albany, Georgia.

Everybody that I have named, almost one black lawyer per State, maybe two in some instances, were the people who were not always participating in the sit-in demonstrations because somebody had to be out there available to go and make the legal arrangements to get those people out of jail after they got locked up. They had to represent the demonstrators. They had to be in the courtrooms after Brown versus Board of Education said ''You shall desegregate the schools with all deliberate speed.'' And the deliberate speed took 10 years and 15 years.

These lawyers had to be showing up in court to convince southern jurors and southern judges, who did not want to implement what the United States Supreme Court had said in Brown versus Board of Education. They wanted it to take place with the kind of ''all deliberate speed'' that would have still had us trying to desegregate the schools today. But these lawyers, these fearsome lawyers, were in there fighting for justice. Quietly sometimes. Sometimes with very soft voices, as Julius Chambers always had. Sometimes with that big bass voice, like C.B. King, who could just as well have been a Southern Baptist preacher with a booming voice like that.

That is what I remember about this man who was about the size of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP). He was not a big guy, but he had that big magnificent voice. And he had a sense of timing and understanding of what was needed in the Civil Rights movement, and no less commitment to change than any of the people who were demonstrating in the streets. But the knowledge that he had, the skills and training and education, would make our legal system and the laws live out the promise that the constitution had committed to us.

And all of these wonderful lawyers, Julius Chambers, James Ferguson, Matthew Perry, Ernest Finney, Avon Williams, Don Hollowell, Howard Moore, Fred Gray, C.B. King, all of them had one thing in common: They would stand before a judge, sometimes be called all kinds of names that we dare not mention in this chamber today, but they would stand firm in the eye of the legal storm that was taking place. They would strategize. They would always be there.

So it is from that angle that I give my high tribute to all of these wonderful people, the lawyers whose story may never be written, certainly will never be written in an adequate fashion, because they were the people behind the scenes. But for these brave people, the Civil Rights movement and the changes that we have experienced, indeed our very presence here in this Congress of the United States, would never have occurred.

I commend my colleague for doing this special order. I commend the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CLYBURN) for his tribute to Matthew Perry. I commend the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) for his tribute to C.B. King and for naming these buildings for them. And I hope that we will give them the kind of justice they are due when the history books are written about the 20th Century and the Civil Rights movement.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back to the gentleman.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), Lawyer WATT.

I truly can say that the Matthew Perrys, the Donald Hollowells, the Avon Williamses, the John Walkers in Arkansas, the Jack Ruffins of Augusta, Georgia, the Horrace T. Wards in Georgia, all of these have been inspirations to us. The late Tom Jackson of Macon, Georgia. They were dignified. They were fearless. They were courageous. They were intelligent. They were lawyers' lawyers. They were committed to upholding and defending the dignity of the common man, the black man, the black woman, the disenfranchised. They were true advocates. And for them, and the likes of C.B. King, we are grateful.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to the distinguished gentlewoman from Houston, Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE), who was also an Earl Warren Fellow, and who grew in the legacy of these great legal giants like C.B. King; and who, like those of us who have spoken before her this evening, are living the legacy of their hard work.

I am delighted to yield to her to hear her perspective on this great legal giant Chevene Bowers King.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), Mr. Speaker, and I would say to him and to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), and to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), and to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. CLYBURN) that as the gentleman has called the role, C.B. King is smiling.

He is smiling, I say to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), because the gentleman has come to this place, these hallowed halls and, as he C.B. King has watched the gentleman legislate, as he has watched the gentleman advocate, he is smiling to see that, in the tradition of a lawyer's lawyer, the gentleman has made his work to be not in vain.

I thank you for your leadership. I thank you for honoring C.B. King, both in terms of a fixed memorial in Georgia and for this special hour.

I had the pleasure of being one of the beneficiaries, as so many who are unnamed and who are not here, of the kind of legal activism of a C.B. King, so I could not miss this opportunity to cite him as one of the soldiers who complimented the activism of a John Lewis and a Martin King.

I marched with the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) in a re-commemoration of the Selma to Montgomery march. The marches I had were slightly different from those that were experienced by Martin King and John Lewis and Jose Williams and many others of the SCLC and SNCC. We engaged in the Black Student Movements in the institutions in the North throughout the 1960s and the 1970s.

I think the specialness of why we salute C.B. King is because their work in the courts was universal to all of us who advocated through agitation. I think it motivated all of us who were given the opportunity to go on to college, and then choose a way of acting out this activism, to choose law school and, out of the opportunity, to see and admire those heroes in the courtrooms in the days when it was not as light as the times that we may have gone, who established the precedent upon which we could argue our cases.

Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of my activism on death penalty cases, being able to use the old civil rights laws or the cases that many had already plowed ahead. This is a special time to honor C.B. King. He is not an unknown hero. He is part of that cadre of men and women we should be repeating time after time in our schools and in our celebration and commemoration of Black History Month. These were the mechanics, the intellectual mechanics, these who fixed things and put them back together again.

They were fearless. They were articulate. They stayed up long hours. They were paid few dollars. Their hearts and their minds were strong.

On this coming Sunday, April 16, it will be Census Day in Houston, Texas, Census Sunday, in fact. And I will spend my time encouraging our churches and those who gather in them the value of being counted, the value of acknowledging that you are somebody, the value of saying to the United States of America we need to be counted. We are claiming our birthright and claiming our rights and our responsibility as a citizen, and we will act upon it.

Why is that relevant to C.B. King? It is relevant because C.B. King was part of the mechanics to translate what one person, one vote truly meant. He is part of the mechanics of allowing us to assemble peaceably, to partition against segregation, to allow us to vote freely and to speak upon who we want to represent us. C.B. King would be proud if we got ourselves counseled, for he is well aware that approaching in the year 2000, we will be looking ahead to see whether or not these seats, of which all of us hold from the South, all creatures of Thurgood Marshall and C.B. King and Julius Chambers and Horace Ward and so many others, all creatures of this whole concept of the Voting Rights Act and redrawing of the lines, to ensure there is one vote, one person.

Would it not be a tragedy in 2001, similar to 1901, 100 years ago when Congressman White stood in this very place as he was drawn out of the United States Congress, the last African American Congress person to have come through the reconstruction and to stand here in these chambers, but he said to this very hollowed body, the Negro will rise like the phoenix. Although, this is my last opportunity to debate, my last opportunity to be representative, the Negro would rise like the phoenix.

To C.B. King, I owe him much. I owe his mother and his father who trained him well. I owe the fact that he left Albany, Georgia, and went on to Case Western Reserve Law School, but he came back home. I owe the fact that I had the honor of working for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference as a young college student. I came to Albany, Georgia, to continue part of the Albany Movement that was still going on in the 1970s, to press for the right to vote and the right for individuals to choose their elected representatives.

This evening as we honor these heroes, I would like to accept the challenge of the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT), the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), I would like us to chronicle the numbers of heroes who use the law in the courtroom as the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) has done for us this evening, maybe we can collaborate and get all of these individuals who silently worked, starting with Thurgood, who we well know, but there are others who quietly worked in the 1940s, who we may not even have knowledge of them, to be able to say that they truly took the law, the tools that were given them, and did not use them selfishly or for personal self aggrandizement, but they used them to free a people. America is a better place because they worked to make us free.

With that, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP) for giving me the courtesy of allowing me to salute a gentleman that I admired greatly and that I tried among others to emulate as I got the skills of a lawyer. I hope we will be able to honor them more and more.

Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to pay tribute to Chevene B. King an outstanding man and distinguished attorney. As a participant in the Earl Warren NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund training program, I am honored to inform the American people of a man who championed civil rights and carried the movement into the political arena.

Chevene Bowers King was born on October 12, 1923, in Albany, Georgia, the third of eight children of Clennon W. King, the owner of an apparel shop and supermarket and Mrs. Margaret Slater King. Mr. King attended Mercer Street Elementary School and Madison Street High School in Albany. After graduation he attended Tuskegee University for a year and then decided to enlist in the United States Navy. After three years of service, Mr. King left the Navy and enrolled at Fisk University where he earned his bachelors degree in Political Science.

Pursuing his political education, Mr. King attended Case Western Reserve University, School of Law in Cleveland, Ohio. After law school he became a pre-eminent civil rights attorney in southwest Georgia, working with other African American lawyers from Atlanta, Macon, and Savannah. He worked closely with the local chapter of the NAACP, and was a cooperating attorney with the NAACP legal Defense and Educational Fund.

His accomplishments and work spanned the entire range of civil rights from school desegregation to the Voting Rights Act. He represented African American voters and candidates for office in the struggle against at the time unconstitutional segregation and discrimination. He led the way in making the basic right to serve on juries a reality in rural Georgia by bringing a series of lawsuits that exposed the discriminatory practices that had continued for more than 100 years after the U.S. Supreme Court first held that discrimination in the selection of jurors violated the Fourteenth Amendment.

When the civil rights struggle secured the ability to work in America free from discrimination, Mr. King fought to ensure that this right was enforced. Mr. King brought a number of actions to enforce the provisions of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and to provide equal job opportunities for African American workers.

Mr. King was known as a great scholar of jurisprudence and a superb orator. His regal demeanor in the courtroom brought a thoughtful and tranquil specter to the meaning of the civil rights movement. In the tradition of men like Charles Houston, Thurgood Marshall, and William H. Hastie he approached the practice of the law with activism and a commitment to excellence in legal scholarship. Because of his reputation he was counsel to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Elijah Muhammad and the Albany Civil Rights Movement of the early 1960's.

In 1960, Mr. King ran for President of the United States and for governor of Georgia in both cases as a write in candidate. In 1964, with utter determination he ran for the congressional seat of the 2nd District of Georgia.

For his courage and commitment to civil rights he received the N.C.B.L. Lawyer of the year Award in 1975, A.T. Walden Library Award in 1977, and the L.S.C.R.R.C. Pro Bono Public Award of the State of Georgia. On March 15, 1988, Mr. King passed away at the age of 64 survived by his wife, Carol Roumain, and his four sons, Chevene B. Jr., Leland, Clennon, and his daughter Peggy.

In closing, I am reminded of the great quote by President Theodore Roosevelt,

> The credit belongs to the man who is actually in the arena, whose face is marred by dust and sweat and blood; who strives valiantly; who errs and comes short again and again, who knows the great enthusiasms, the great devotions, and spends himself in a worthy cause; who at best, knows the triumph of high achievement; and who, at the worst, if he fails, at least fails while daring greatly, so that his place shall never be with those cold and timid souls who know neither victory nor defeat.

Chevene Bowers King the American people will always remember your contributions and we shall always remain in your debt.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) for her comments. As we draw this special order to a close, this hour to a close, I am just personally grateful that I had the opportunity to know C.B. King. He made a tremendous impact on my life, as did Howard Moore, Jr. and Donald Hollowell.

I remember attending law school and wondering if the courses I was taking in law school were relevant to the Movement, and contemplating leaving law school to engage in some more direct action and getting the advice and counsel that the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. WATT) so aptly described, that when people in the Movement are locked up, somebody has got to be there legally to get them out.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to have a useful skill. I followed in their footsteps, went to New York with the Legal Defense Fund, went back to Georgia to do as my grandmother said, son, try to brighten the corner where you are, improve the community where you live. The South is my home. It is my native land. It is where I belong and where I will do all within my power to make better following the role models of these great giants and, in particular, C.B. King.

C.B. King really is good timber. Just like the tree that never had to fight for sun and sky and air and light, that stood out in the open plain and always got its share of rain, but never became a forest king, but lived and died a scrubby thing.

A man who never had to toil by hand or mind in life's turmoil, who never had to earn his share of sun and sky and light and air, never became a manly man, but lived and died as he began.

Good timber doesn't grow in ease, the stronger winds, the tougher trees, the farther sky, the greatest length, the rougher storm, the greater strength.

By wind or rain, by sun or snow, in trees or man, good timbers grow. C.B. King was good timber. We are all better because he lived and passed this way.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank our two senators, Senator COVERDELL and Senator CLELAND, for their commitment and their vision in introducing the legislation on the Senate side, which ultimately passed this House, which was a companion legislation to the legislation introduced by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) and myself here on the House floor to name the United States Courthouse on Broad Avenue in Albany, Georgia the C.B. King United States Courthouse; what a fitting tribute.

NIGHTSIDE CHAT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. MCINNIS) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to address my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP). Having been here for a while and listened to the remarks of the various people, I wish I would have had the privilege to meet the gentleman. That was fabulous. I thought your presentation was very, very good, and what a remarkable man. I just wanted to tell you. I thought it was terrific.

Mr. Speaker, it is time for another nightside chat from the mountains of Colorado, so to speak. As you know, my district is the 3rd Congressional District in Colorado. There are a number of different areas that I would like to cover this evening.

We have April 15th coming up, Tax Day. And I think there are a number of issues we need to talk about relative to the taxes in this country. Now, look, this is not going to be a horse and pony show. What is important here is to talk about substantive changes, changes that you can take to the bank that have occurred under the Republican leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I can say that tonight it is not my intent to get into a partisan battle with my colleagues, but clearly when it comes to taxes, that is one of the distinguishing elements between the Democratic party and the Republican party.

I would like to go through a few of those elements. Now, again as I said, it is not an attack, but it is a statement to clarify and to highlight what the differences between the parties are when it comes to many of these tax issues. By the way, I want to go through the tax issues, then I would like to cover a little on some of the education issues. Of course, we can mix all of that.

If we have an opportunity this evening, I would like to talk with my colleagues about the jobs and the economy. These jobs, even though we have a very healthy economy today, we cannot ignore the fact that to survive tomorrow, to keep our jobs strong in this kind of an economy, we have to work on our education. We have to have the best education.

This world that we are in is going to become very, very competitive in the years ahead. Fortunately, one of the finest tools you can get your hands on, the United States has it, and that is that next generation behind us.

On a regular basis, I have many high school students through a program called Close-up and 4H programs, programs like that, excellent programs. I will tell you they come into my office, they visit with me, I give them an opportunity to ask questions. These kids are bright. If we can give them the educational opportunities that they need and that they deserve and that this country needs to preserve its status as the only superpower in the world, we are going to be in pretty good shape, but it is a challenge we have to take. I am going to talk a little bit about that.

If we have time, I would like to talk a little about Microsoft, my feelings on the Microsoft judgment that came down.

RELIGIOUS HYPOCRISY

Mr. MCINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I do want to begin this evening with a little concern I have about some hypocrisy that I think has probably gone on. As many of you know, in the last few weeks, we have had some verbiage, I guess you would say, some talk around the Capitol about the issue of Catholics. I am a Roman Catholic. I am no saint, obviously, but I know something about the church.

I also know that the Roman Catholic Church, it does not matter what color you are, it does not matter what your nationality is. There are Catholics throughout the world. In the last few weeks, there has been kind of a focused effort, primarily from the Democrats, saying that for some reason the Republicans are biased against Catholics. Obviously, you can take a look at that comment on its face, and you know that it is typical political rhetoric during an election year.

I thought it was especially pointed to note, not very many months ago, I stood up here in front of my colleagues and I asked for the support in condemning a museum in New York City that decided to put up a showing of an art piece called Sensation.

It was a painting, a portrait or some structure, of the Virgin Mary.

Now, in the Catholic religion the Virgin Mary is a very sacred symbol in our church. What happened is this museum allowed, with taxpayer dollars, allowed this exhibit to be shown. What the exhibit was was the Virgin Mary with dung, or cow pie, so-to-speak, in this particular case it was elephant dung, thrown against the picture, clearly degrading, if you want to take a shot at Catholic Church degrading that religious symbol.

What was more appalling to me than this particular art exhibit was the fact that the Board of Directors and other members affiliated with this museum actually stuck up for the artist and said that the artist should be entitled to utilize taxpayer dollars to degrade the Catholic religion by putting the Virgin Mary up there in a portrait that shows the Virgin Mary with crap thrown on the picture. Excuse my language, but that is what it is. It was appalling. It was amazing to me.

Come on. There is a lot of at the Brooklyn Art Museum. Why would they lower themselves to do this? It is not freedom of expression. The issue here is should taxpayer dollars be used by this museum, and then should this museum endorse that kind of degrading art towards a religion?

I want you to know that when I brought that issue up, I did not have very many, in fact, I cannot remember one, Democrat who came up to me and said, ''Boy, we are with you. You talk about bias against the Catholic religion. We feel so strongly about protecting the Catholics from bias, that we are going to join you in your criticism of the Brooklyn Art Museum.'' Not one person on that side of the aisle came up.

I think it is important, not to be overly combative here tonight, but I just want to point out, when I hear members on your side of the aisle criticizing Republicans because we had a Catholic mass last week, that somehow this is some kind after prejudice, and yet when the real test comes, when the real McCoy is out there, and that is that kind of exhibit degrading it, you sat silent. You sat silent.

If that would have been a symbol from the Jewish religion, or a Buddhist symbol, or would have been a symbol against some other type of religion in this country, I suspect all of you would have come off your hands, gone to that Brooklyn Art Museum, you would have had protests and been protesting violently, or ''strongly'' I guess is a better word. But not one. You sat on your hands when we talked about the Brooklyn Art Museum and the Catholic church and the degrading of that symbol.

So I hope this pro-Catholic, anti-Catholic stuff kind of dies down, because I am telling you, some of you that start to criticize the fact that the Republicans had a Catholic mass, I am telling you that you are not entering this with clean hands.

What needs to happen is this issue ought to just resolve itself. Let everybody in this chamber practice the religion that they wish to practice. I do not think you need to go on an attack, telling a person, whether they hold public office or not, that they are biased against one religion or another. I just do not think it is necessary.

THE BUDGET AND THE DEATH TAX

Let us move off of that issue to an issue that I think is fundamentally more important.

First we have got to talk a little about the process when we work through the budget. We have a process back here in the United States Congress called the annual budget. The President as a guiding tool for Congress proposes his own budget. Now, this is a very complicated document, as is the budgetary document that comes out of the House of Representatives. The budget is very complex. Obviously it involves a lot of money. But when we got the President's budget, of course, and I am a Member on the Committee on Ways and Means, and the Committee on Ways and Means decides the tax issues. We have the broadest jurisdiction probably of any committee in Congress. We decide the trade issues, very active in that area this year, Medicare-Medicare issues, very active in that area, Social Security issues, very active in that area.

But when the President's budget comes, we analyze that budget. We look at the fine print on that budget. We take a look and see, you know, what is in that budget that we ought to understand. Is it a wolf in sheep's clothing, what is contained in the fine print.

I will tell you what we found in the fine print, we had a lot of debate about it today on the House floor, and that is we discovered there are 84, mark this, 84 new, brand new programs, in the Federal budget under the President's budget. Eighty-four new programs.

I need to tell you, our economy is going well and our constituents are pretty satisfied with the economy. But let us do not try and throw a bunch of new Federal programs on them, because this economy may not stay strong forever.

We know if you look on an historic basis of our economy, you see dramatic shifts throughout the years. At some point in time the big boom we are having, the strong growth that we have enjoyed, it is going to turn. We know that. It is cyclical in its nature and by its nature.

So when the times are good, you have to practice self-restraint. You cannot go out and blow all the money. It is kind of like coming across a windfall of money individually in your own budget. I think it would be a mistake, personally, for you to take a sudden windfall of money and go out and spend it all, or even overcommit yourself to the future, assuming at some point in time you are going to come across another windfall of money.

This is not the time to be building up the size of the Federal Government. This is the time to start reducing the size of the Federal Government and shifting these programs to the state and local government, where accountability is much, much better, where management of their budget is much more accountable to the taxpayer.

That is why today we had some pretty heated debate. We had a very heated debate about these 84 programs. The Democrats, frankly, were trying to defend the programs. In fact, one of the arguments that came across was why do you just bring out the fact that 84 new programs are there? Why do you not bring out the good things in the budget?

Look, our job is to point out things that I think are going to create some problems. That whole budget is not bad. There are some things in that budget that are acceptable, we all know that. But we have an obligation, in fact I think we have a fiduciary responsibility to the taxpayers of this country, to go through that budget line-by-line and point out what is going to happen.

Somebody said, well, why do you bring it out? The reason we bring it out is I want all of our constituents to know that if we adopt the President's program, the President's budget, they are going to have with the signing of a pen 84 new Federal programs, in addition to what we have right now.

There is also something that I found very alarming in the President's budget. It impacts my district significantly, and I venture to say it impacts every one of my colleagues' districts significantly. Let me tell you what it is about.

The death tax. When you take a look at the Federal tax system, probably the most punitive element of our tax system, the element that has the least amount of justification, although it is followed closely by the marriage penalty, is the death tax.

What is the death tax? The death tax means that the Federal Government comes to your estate, i.e., the property left after you pass on, they come to your estate, and if your estate is valued over a certain amount of money, $650,000 or a little more than that, they then assess what in essence is a very punitive or punishing tax against your estate.

Now, mind you, this is the United States of America. This is the country where we tell our young people, go out and build a fortune, go out, and it does not have to be in money, go out and build a farm, go out and have a ranch, go out and be a great teacher, go out and find the home of your dreams. And yet when they do, if you are too successful, all of a sudden you see your own government saying whoa, whoa, whoa, you have been too successful. You actually were able to build a farm that maybe you can pass on to the next generation. We do not want that to happen. We better punish you for success.

That is exactly what the death tax is about, punishment for success. The incentive that makes our country great, that makes the capitalistic system work, is that you are rewarded for success. You are not punished for success, you are rewarded for success.

This death tax needs to be eliminated. It is in our system today. How did it get in the system? If you look back at the history of taxation, what happened was some people decided, hey, that is the way to transfer wealth. Instead of transferring wealth through the capitalistic system, i.e., you come up with a better idea, or you come up with a product, they decided we need to do it by fiat. We need to go ahead and have the government waive a magic wand and look at people and say hey, you have been too successful, so we are going to penalize you when you die. Instead of allowing your family to continue the operation of your small business or the operation of a ranch or a farm or for you to have assets, by the way, of which you have paid taxes on your entire life, these are not untaxed assets, these are assets of which you have already paid your taxes on, you have paid your fair share, and the government comes in and says we are going to transfer it.

You know, after a while it begins to bother the person who works, if you continue to transfer things of gain from the person who works and award it to the person who does not. How long do you think a society can continue to operate if you penalize the working person and reward the person that is not working, who, by the way is capable of working? I am not talking about disabled people. I am talking about fully capable of working?

This is a transfer tax. It is a defiance of the capitalistic system. It is a tax that would have Adam Smith turn in his grave. His Wealth of Nations has a special chapter devoted to just exactly this problem in a capitalistic system.

But when we discuss the death tax, let us take a look at what the President's budget does with the death tax. The Republicans have a pretty simple proposal: The Republicans say about the death tax, let it meet its death. No pun intended. Let us strike it. Get rid of the death tax. You cannot justify it. It is not fair to the taxpayers.

When you really look at the details of the death tax, the amount of revenue that we collect is not a whole lot more than the amount of revenue that we put in, and when you take a look what the death tax does to the environment in terms of damage, and you say, wait a minute, SCOTT, you are confused. You are saying the death tax has something to do with the environment, it hurts the environment?

I can tell you in Colorado, the 3rd Congressional District, I am proud as the dickens of my district out there in Colorado, proud as punch of the district and proud as punch of the people out there. But our district has been discovered, and we have got a lot of people who want to move out into our district.

I will tell you, we want to sustain our farm and our agriculture base and our ranches out there, it is important, and that open space, beautiful, spectacular. Any of you that have skied in Colorado, you skied in my district, colleagues. You know where it is. It is the mountains, the highest district in the Nation. Many of you would love to live out there. Many of your constituents do live out there.

But what is happening, because of the punitive nature of the death tax and because of the increasing value of the property in my district, we are having families who not in their wildest imagination ever thought that the Federal Government would come in, take the ranch or the farm or the small business they put together and break it up, and break it up. Not because of antitrust, not because of some violation of the law by this family, but because that family worked too hard and they became, God forbid, successful.

So our government decides to tax it. That is why the Republicans, and there is a distinct line drawn between the parties on this, has said get rid of the death tax.

The President has made it very clear, and the vice president has made it very clear, and the Secretary of Treasury has made it very clear, the Secretary of Treasury as you might remember said about this: ''This is selfish for you to talk about getting rid of that. How selfish of you to talk about that.'' How dare you say to the government, why are you entitled?

Maybe somebody else ought to ask the government, why are you entitled to take this? What gives you the fundamental right to go into a family and take it, a ranching family for example, who for generations struggled to make this go, and, all of a sudden the property goes up in value, and somebody meets an untimely death and the government is able to take it away?

The President's and vice president's position is hey, we oppose doing away with the death tax. The reason? Well, it is unfair. It is unfair. You know, it is unfair to the government to do away with it. Not unfair to the people, but unfair to the government to do away with it.

Well, I have accepted the fact that until we have a change in administration, that Vice President GORE's and President Clinton's policy is going to continue to be to have the death tax. I was not caught off guard by that. They made their statements very clear. The Republicans have made it very clear they want to eliminate the death tax, and President Clinton and Vice President GORE have made it very clear they want to sustain, they want to keep the death tax.

So I was not caught off guard until I read that budget, the President's budget. I feel like they have sold us down the river on this.

Do Members know what they do with the death tax? They keep it, all right. They keep it. They increase it, they do not cross it out. They do not cross it out, they keep it. Then do Members know what they do? Look at this word: Increase the death tax. That is exactly what the President's budget does.

That caught us off guard. We knew the President was going to defend this tax, which I think is indefensible. We knew the Vice President was going to stand right by him, as he has with all the other troubles that the President has had. But we did not expect it, and I am not sure, maybe the Democratic Party expected it, maybe they knew about it in advance, but it caught us off guard.

Today several Members on that side of the aisle got very aggressive. When we brought that up, they said, why do you bring up the death tax in the President's budget? Why do Members not bring up the good programs in the President's budget? Because there are a lot of programs that are good programs in the President's budget that we may not have a problem with.

But the Republicans have a real problem with, one, the existence of the death tax, and two, the audacity of the administration through its policies, and the Vice President through his policies, to increase the death tax, increase it.

If we talk about an insult to the working people of America, come on, government. Back off. Do we want to destroy these ranches and family businesses?

It has always been a father's and mother's dreams that some day they could be in a business they could pass on to the next generation, or to the next 50 generations. We all work at that. Every one of us in these chambers think of our demise at some point in the future and we want to build something for our kids. We want to build something to give to them, whether it is a small business or something of a value to help them get a start. We all want that.

The government ought not to be stepping in there to take it away from us, and they sure as heck should not be increasing it. I would hope that every one on the Democratic side would join us on the Republican side and say no to any further increase in the death tax.

It does not take a hero to say no on this thing. It is an easy policy question. It should not have occurred.

I want to move on a little and talk about some of the taxes and the tax breaks and things we talked about.

Every time we have tax season, we hear people get up on both sides and they talk about, well, this is how much taxes have raised. It is true, the biggest bite in the history of the country, I think, or since World War II, the biggest percentage of tax bite in the country exists today. There are a lot of statistics I can tell Members about.

But what I think we need to do, I think we need to say, hey, let us face the music. Let us talk about really what kind of substantive tax changes have taken place that benefit our constituents, the people out there who are working for a living; what really have we done?

I want to take an example of what the Republicans have done. I am very proud of the Republican leadership on taxes. I can tell the Members that there has been a diversion, a red herring thrown out there, so to speak, by the Democrats talking about, well, the Republicans want to cut taxes and they are going to ruin social security, or the Republicans want to cut taxes and it is going to ruin Medicaid or Medicare, or the seniors are not going to be able to eat tomorrow. We hear all that rhetoric.

Let us, though, put the rhetoric aside. Let us talk about the differences, because it is a fair discussion. It is not under-the-belt politics, it is a fair discussion, what are the differences in taxes.

Another fair question is, since control of the House of Representatives is going to be up in November, another fair question to ask of the Republicans, all right, Republicans, where is your proof in the pudding? What is the proof in the pudding? What have you done for the American people about taxes? What have you done?

Let us go through a few things. The one that I am probably the most proud of is the House. When we took control of the United States Congress, despite opposition from the Democratic Party, we looked out there and said, what is a reasonable tax reduction program that we can do to help the average Jane and the average Joe out there working away? What can we do to give them some help?

We sat down and we had lots of discussions about this. The conclusion we came up with is that there are a lot of people in American that own homes. Even since we had that discussion, the amount of home ownership has gone like this. What a great country. It is a wonderful country that people, most people in this country have the opportunity to own their own home.

That opportunity starts at a very young age. I have employees who owned their own home when they were in their early twenties, 21 or 22 years old. That is great news. But what happens with this house? How can we help the homeowner in this country, which are most of Members' constituents? Most of our constituents own homes out in our districts.

So the Republicans decided as a priority we should get some kind of tax relief for the homeowner. Does it amount to anything more than a hill of beans? You bet it does. You bet it does. This tax reduction that we put in place a couple of years ago is probably the largest tax break that any of our constituents have gotten in the last 20 years. It is a huge tax break if someone owns a home in this country.

What are we talking about? Let us go through a little history on this. Let me talk about the old law before the Republicans changed it. It was our leadership, and I am proud of that. Again, let me just caution, I am not trying to get partisan here, but I am describing somebody that deserves a pat on the back and a distinguishment between the parties. That is fair game, as I said.

The old law on home ownership is that if you bought a home say, for example, for $100,000, and you were in an area of growth 15 or 20 years ago, although today with the kind of economy we have we see this appreciation in value occurring at a much faster rate, but let us say over 15 or 20 years you bought a $100,000 house and you sold it for $350,000. Unless you were over 55 years of age, and even then only once in a lifetime, then you would get an exemption up to, I think, $125,000.

But what happened, you bought the home for $100,000. Let us say you are under 55, or maybe over, but you already took your once-in-a-lifetime exemption. Let us say this is a 40-year-old couple. Let us say they bought a home, using this example here, they bought the home for $200,000. They bought it 20 years ago. The years are not important, but let us just give the years for appreciation and value of the home.

They sold the home for $700,000. That means their profit on the home was $500,000. They made $500,000 on the profit of their home. Under the old law, they were taxed on the $500,000 net profit. Under the law that the Republicans passed, and we did have, by the way, support, and initially we had opposition by the Democratic leadership, but they came around when they saw it was going to be a done deal. We did have some support from some Democrats, and some conservative Democrats helped us all along, by the way.

What we did is passed a bill that goes out to couples, individual homeowners as well. It says, we are going to allow you the first $250,000. The first $250,000 of profit that you make on the sale of your home, we are going to allow you to have that tax-free. You get to put that first $250,000 per person, and now remember, most homes are owned by couples, so it is $500,000 per couple, you get to take that money, put it in your pocket, no taxes.

Under the old law, the only way one could defer the taxes, and they still had to pay the taxes, but the only way to defer the taxes was to go ahead and buy a home of at least the same cost or a greater cost than the price that you sold your home for.

So what we did is went out to every homeowner in this country, and we have said, if you have had any kind of value growth in your home and you sell that home recognizing that value growth, or in other words, you sell that home for a profit, that profit, up to $250,000 goes right into your pocket.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues have had many of their constituents, probably, who have sold homes in the last 2 years. Members ought to go see what kind of smile is on their face because of the fact we went out to the homeowner, and it did not break the government, and despite what the administration says, it did not break social security, it did not cost us money in education, it did not impact in any kind of negative fashion the health care delivery in this country.

What it did do is it went out to people, and in most cases this is our constituents' largest asset in their holdings, is their home. We went out to their largest asset for the average American and said, look, when the time comes that you can sell that home for a profit, you get to keep as an individual up to $250,000, and you get to put it right in your pocket and walk away from the deal. If you are married, you each get to keep up to $250,000.

What else is great about this? It does not happen once in a lifetime. The old law says you get to do it once. The new law says you get to do it every 2 years. You can take the money, go buy another home, and let us say a more reasonable approach, let us say you sell a home today as a couple, you make a couple of hundred thousand dollars profit, tax-free, put it in your pocket. Let us say you go buy another home. You buy a $100,000 home. You live in that home for the next 2 years. Let us say that the economy continues to grow stronger and you sell it for $175,000, so you have made $75,000 profit.

Two years have gone by, you get to take that $75,000, which, by the way, it is your money, and you get to put it in your pocket tax-free. That is probably the most significant tax break that our constituents have received in the last 20 years. By gosh, I am proud to be a Republican and I am proud to say it was under our leadership that we got that done.

Let us talk about another tax bill that we got done out of this House, and I am confident it is going to move out of the Senate. It was done under Republican leadership, despite opposition by the administration, although now the administration says they will sign it. Why? They see the writing on the wall. It is fair. How can anyone argue against it? That is the conclusion, in my opinion, that the White House reached.

What is it? Remember some of the great things that have made our country such a superpower, a superpower in many definitions of the word? We can start it by talking about family. Family is a fundamental pillar in this country. Religion is a fundamental pillar in this country. Freedom is a fundamental pillar in this country. Education is a fundamental pillar in this country.

Let us talk about one of those pillars: Marriage. This country as a policy should encourage marriage, should encourage families. Families are what have made this country great. We have an obligation to build as strong families as we can. In the government, we have an obligation to encourage families, encourage marriage.

What did this government do? They penalized people who got married. Our tax rate in many cases was higher simply because of the fact that you were married. For no other reason besides the fact that you were married you paid a higher tax than if you were to file as two single individuals.

Is that intelligent thinking? Is that how we encourage people to go out and get married, is to penalize them for getting married? We just talked about what we do, we penalize people, their survivors, when they die. But that was not enough for this government. They had to go out and hit in the other end, as soon as they die, and in between we are going to nail them again and again.

The marriage penalty, this House passed it. Again, I am proud of the Republican leadership. We took the lead on that. We should feel no shame in going out to our constituents and talking about the fact that we want to get rid of that death tax, that it is unfair; that the marriage penalty that we lead on, we are going to get rid of that. The homeowner tax break that we put in place, there was that. We are giving homeowners an opportunity. Those are three major pieces of legislation that have been accomplished under Republican leadership.

But we are not done. We are not done. What else happened in the last couple of years?

A big factor, a big thing. Almost it is somewhere pushing, I think certainly over 50 percent, but years ago not very many people owned stock in the stock market. That really was kind of a rich man's, a rich woman's, game. It was a sophisticated operation. It still is sophisticated, but really one only saw the upper echelon of our society in economic categories investing in the stock market. That has changed dramatically just in the last 10 years.

Today, Mr. Speaker, well over 50 percent of our constituents have investments in the stock market. Now a lot of them may not realize they have investments in the stock market because they own shares of a mutual fund or they do not know that their retirement monies are invested in a stock market, but they are. They also do not realize that when these investments are sold that this government has another tax they pull out of the sky called the capital gains taxation.

Where did this tax come from? Let me say, first of all, most of the European countries do not have it or if they have it it is at a much lower rate. Why? Because it does not create capital. It defies the system of capitalism. It encourages nonproduction. It encourages people to sit on their duff and not do anything because if they do do something the government comes in as a partner that did not participate much and takes a big chunk out of it, what is called capital gains taxation.

What we did in the Republican leadership, and again I am proud of it, and I do have to say there were some conservative Democrats that joined us, but frankly the Democratic leadership did not. They opposed us. They said it was a rich man's game. Well, let me say, if this is a rich man's game I have a lot of rich people in my district playing a rich man's game, and these rich people happen to be everything from stocker at the local grocery store to teachers and so on and so forth. They are not wealthy as far as an asset category is concerned. They may be wealthy in their profession and wealthy in love and so on, but this covers a lot of people.

We felt an obligation to lower that tax which at one time was 28 percent. It was 28 percent when we got our hands on it. We lowered it to 20 percent. We wanted to get rid of it but the President would not hear of it. The President insisted it stay at 28 percent. We were able to compromise. We got it down to 20 percent and it was signed into law.

Now one says 8 percent. Come on, what is 8 percent? What kind of a difference does 8 percent make? It makes a lot of difference and it makes a lot of difference to our constituents. Take 8 percent off that tax bite and that means something. Those are a lot of dollars.

I have had several constituents come up to me and say, wow, thanks. That was terrific. Know what happened when we lowered the capital gains taxation rate? We did not break Social Security. We did not cause anyone to get less delivery in health care. We did not have all of these kind of nightmare scenarios that people that are opposed to legitimate, logical tax reductions, we did not see the sky fall in, not at all.

Now let me say, some of the people who criticized some of the ideas for tax reduction, some of their criticisms are right with particular ideas. Some ideas work the opposite way. I mean, our government has to have taxes to operate. We all acknowledge that, but we acknowledge that the government ought to be accountable with those tax dollars. We think the government ought to have individual responsibility in this country and the government should not go under the days of the great society like we had under Lyndon Johnson where the government provided for everything; that they felt that the individual power and responsibility should be shifted to a central government in Washington, D.C. It was a huge failure. It was an experiment that failed.

There are some ideas that are pretty wild about tax reduction. Some people would like to have no taxes at all. Logic, your gut, your gut reaction says that is not going to work. We have to approach this in a fair and in a balanced manner. That is what we have done.

Let me again go through these tax reductions. Number one, we need to get rid of that death tax summarily. That death tax is punitive and it is unfair, and eliminating the death tax, certainly opposing the President and vice president's proposal in their budget this year to raise the death tax, to increase the death tax, is a non-starter.

I wish the vice president and the President would work towards elimination of the death tax, not towards increasing their dependence on it and hiking it up. We are going to continue that fight. With the proper changes in November, I hope we can eliminate the death tax but in the meantime we have to fight this proposed increase by the Clinton-Gore team to raise the death tax.

The second thing we have done, we repealed the capital gains tax on the sale of that home. Remember I talked about that, the capital gains, when someone sells their home we give them a $250,000 per person renewable every two years tax break. One gets to keep that income, gets to put it in their pocket.

Take a look at the marriage penalty. Out of this House we said and it was under Republican leadership, it is not fair to punish people that are getting married. We eliminate that marriage penalty tax. It is not right. I think we are going to get that to the President in the not too distant future and I think the President who originally opposed it is going to sign it.

Our capital gains reduction program, remember that we have taken capital gains from 28 percent down to 20. It was a logical move.

If one wants to see what had a major impact and boosted this economy over the last 3 or 4 years, I think we can tie a great portion of that gain directly to the fact that we freed up capital by reducing the capital gains taxation. That was a smart, logical tax reduction.

The sale of one's own personal residence is a smart, logical tax deduction. Elimination of the death tax is not only smart, it is not only logical, it is punitive to keep it. It is unfair to keep it. The marriage penalty, if we want to encourage families, it is a logical, fundamentally fair path to take by eliminating that.

Now some people have said, hey, what about seniors? What is going to be done about seniors, Republicans? It is interesting how in an election year all of a sudden we hear bashing, Republicans do not care about seniors. That is ridiculous. I do not know one Member on this floor, Democrat or Republican, I do not know one Democrat or Republican, in fact I do not know anybody anywhere, who is going to stand up and say I do not care about seniors. Yet that statement is a political statement that actually picks up some votes, perhaps, for people making the statement.

I mean really, think about it. How many people do any of us know, Mr. Speaker, that do not want to help seniors; that want to just abandon seniors; that do not want seniors to have health care? Well, I can say that in the 40 years when the Democrats held control of this House, they did not eliminate the death tax. In fact, it was put in place. They did not eliminate the homeowner tax. In fact, it was put in place. They did not eliminate the marriage penalty. In fact, it was put in place. Now when they talk about seniors, there is a delineation again.

It is the Republicans, after repeated opposition by the President and the vice president and the Democratic leadership on the floor, it is the Republicans who stepped forward and said, wait a minute, we have something wrong in our tax system as it deals with seniors. Let us talk about what is happening to seniors out there, specifically seniors between 65 and 69 years old.

Under the current tax system, if one is a senior and there are 800,000 out of them out there, if one is a senior in that age bracket and they go to work, the government, after they make more than $17,000, punishes them for working. What? Yes. Let us repeat that. The government says if seniors want to work and they are between 65 and 69 years old, we are only going to allow them to make $17,000 and no matter how hard they work, no matter how badly they need seniors to fill this job, we are going to penalize them $1 for every $3 they make. That is right, we are going to penalize them $1 for every $3 that they make.

How can something like that come into being? Logically, what brought that about? What happened is many, many decades ago there were not enough jobs. Today we face just exactly the opposite scenario; there are too many jobs. I guess we can never have too many jobs. Let us say there are too many jobs that are not filled. Back then, there were not enough jobs so once again Washington, the think-tank back here in the Potomac, turned on the light and said, well, this is what we will do, let us penalize, let us force seniors, let us push them out of the job market. Let us get those old fogies, let us move them out of there, by gosh.

It is not right, but that is what happened. The policy adopted just like the great society in the sixties, which was a great failure, and I guess we cannot call a failure great, it was a huge failure, this, too, has become a huge failure. Why would we push senior citizens out of the labor market?

Well, under Republican leadership I am proud to say, and it is interesting to note, that after all of the years that we have tried to get this done and we have had objections from the other side of the aisle, from the Democrats, it is interesting to note that when we finally, when we finally put it up so that this bill could face the music, when we really put the challenge up there and the vote had to be registered on this board up here, I think that left the House a week or so ago unanimously. I do not think there was a no vote in the Chamber. I do not think there was a no vote in the Chamber.

What does it do? We now say to seniors between 65 and 69 years old, guess what? The government has changed its policy. We have determined that it is not a good policy to punish seniors for staying in the labor market. So every one of us on both sides of the aisle can go back, but I have to say while I say on both sides of the aisle, in fairness when my colleagues go back to their constituents they ought to say it was Republican leadership that got it done. Democrats had 40 years to do some of these things: The house credit, the capital gains reduction, the death tax, the marriage penalty and now the seniors. But they deserve some of the credit. After all, they voted for it when it came up. We did not have any no votes on the House Floor.

The fact is this: Seniors, 800,000 of them between 65 and 69, they have good news headed their way. The President is going to sign that bill and they are not going to pay taxes, they are not going to be punished because they want to work in the labor force. In fact, we encourage them to be in the labor force. I think it makes them live longer. I think it is great for them and I think they provide a terrific asset to our economy.

Well, let me move from all of these taxes. The reason I have hit taxes in our night side chat this evening so intensely is because we have April 15 coming up but it is time for a new topic.

AMERICA, THE ONLY SUPERPOWER IN THE WORLD

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to travel fairly extensively throughout the world, and there are a few things I want to talk about regarding the United States of America, Mr. Speaker. First of all, we are the only superpower in the world, and we are the superpower because of American ingenuity, because of American energy, because of patriotism within our borders and friendliness and strength demonstrated outside of our borders. That is why we are a superpower.

When I travel in the world I carry a little index card about a fourth the size of this, and on that index card I have an American flag; actually, a little picture of an American flag. When I travel to different countries, I make it a point of getting away off the regular path and kind of going down an unknown path. As they say, never walk the same path twice. I go down an alley or find a merchant and show them that index card. I have yet to find one person anywhere in the world that cannot identify the flag of the United States of America.

People know the strength of the United States of America, but it did not just fall out of the skies. Many of our European colleagues have a much, much longer history. Speaking from an industrial aspect, they have a lot longer history. Most of the countries in the world are much older than our country but no country in the world even comes close to matching our country. Why? Because we have a few principle beliefs that we push, and one of them, one of the fundamental ones, happens to be education. There are others. Health care, a strong military. One can never be number two in the military. The stronger one is in the military, the less fights they are going to get into. Religion, family, we could talk and on about those, but let us just go down to a couple of them.

First of all, let me say that also in my travels throughout the world I have an opportunity not because of SCOTT MCINNIS but because of the position as a U.S. Congressman, I have an opportunity to meet people in other countries that are very wealthy. I have had opportunities to meet kings and queens and members of parliament and members of respected governments and prime ministers. I have had those opportunities. To the best of my recollection, when I have asked the question, whenever somebody in some other country other than the United States wants to send their kids to college, a lot of the time they send those kids to be educated where? In the United States of America.

What else? When those families have somebody who has a deadly disease or a terrible disease like cancer, most of those wealthy people, what their choice is, they send them for health care to the United States of America.

Our country is a leader in health care. We are number one in the world. Our country is number one in the world on education. Now, sure, we have test score problems, we have areas we have to shore up on. We have to rededicate ourself to the proposition that the most important person in the classroom is the student and that the resources going to that classroom should be focused on the student, not on all kinds of Federal programs, not on all kinds of Federal bureaucracies that we find in the Department of Education and other areas. We have to focus on the student. Education is an important issue but there are some concerns that I have out there.

One of the concerns that I have about education in our country is discipline in the classroom. Our country, again, another fundamental pillar to our success, is that we exercise and we expect individual responsibility; and that if an individual did not carry out that responsibility, there were consequences. There were consequences for their lack of action.

It is the same thing in the classroom. There was a book, and for the life of me, I cannot think of the title of it, a lot of my colleagues out here will remember this book, I cannot remember, but anyway the book compared the 10 most serious discipline problems 30 years ago or 40 years ago. In that list, chewing gum, talking out loud in the classroom, talking out of turn, not answering the teacher ''yes, ma'am'',

''yes, sir''. It was those kind of things. I remember that. That is what I used to get in trouble for.

Then it talked about the 10 most common discipline problems in today's classroom. I will tell my colleagues, I think one can draw a coalition between chewing gum and drugs. I think one can look in there and see that the government, not the teachers, the teachers, in my opinion, for the most part, have done a commendable job. Unfortunately, we keep bad teachers, and we are not rewarding the good teachers in my opinion. But if one drew a line, I think one can draw a direct coalition between the discipline, between the fact that our society, our government all of a sudden is starting to say, look, we should not have consequences.

It is interesting, the other day I read about or heard about some students that got in a fight at their school. For the first time, I heard a term, ''third-year freshman''. I thought, third-year freshman? What is a third-year freshman?

I asked my sister Kathleen, she is a school counselor, what is a third-year freshman? Oh, that is somebody who has been in high school three years and does not have any high school credits. What? In the old days, look, if one did not want to try in school, if one were not going to make an effort at it, get out. We have got a lot of students in our schools that want to make an effort at it. We have got a lot of students in our schools that want to succeed.

Our society has become so politically correct in education that discipline has almost all but been taken away from our teachers. How can we expect teachers and instructors that will deliver the kind of product that will continue to make this country a superpower if we do not give them the tools they need? One of those tools happens to be discipline, to make our students accept responsibility for their actions and to have consequences for the actions that they take. That is where we are going to increase production out of our schools.

I have been very excited lately because, frankly, in the State of Colorado, in my opinion, we have ended up with a darn good Governor, and he has been very aggressive on education reform. It is very interesting. He came out and said we are going to grade schools.

What was interesting about the criticism, a number of people from schools, school administrators, and people dealing with the schools came out and said, ''Governor, how could you possibly use grades, grade schools?'' It is pretty interesting. I always thought, ''Wait a minute, schools. That is what you do. You use grades to grade students. Why should we not use grades to see whether your school is doing what it ought to be doing?''

We have got a Governor in Colorado who stood up to some pretty tough opposition from people in my opinion who do not want to change the status quo and people in my opinion that I would question whether the focus is on the student or on the well-being of some bureaucrats that have opposed this plan.

But this plan was signed into law. This is a good plan. Who is the winner? The winner are the students. When students win, who else wins? The teacher wins. The teachers. I will tell my colleagues, most teachers I know are very proud. Most teachers dedicate a lifetime to a career of seeing success in their students.

My sister, for example, or my aunt, Jewel Geiger, down there in Walsenburg, Colorado, they take great pride, not in the money they make, they do not make much money as teachers, they take great pride when years after they have sent a student on their way, the student comes back and has a remarkable pattern of success because they were taught responsibility at the lower levels of school.

I will tell my colleagues I am excited about education. I have got to tell my colleagues I had a group of students in today. We had some students from Ouray, Colorado. We had some students from Steamboat Springs, Colorado. I had some 4–H students, one from Grand Junction, Delta. So I had several communities in my district represented today, and not all at once. So I had three or four meetings with these students. Canyon City students.

I asked the students, I said, let us open it up for questions. I am telling my colleagues, they have experienced it, my gosh, these questions were solid, well-thought-out questions. Their thoughts on policy were well thought out.

We have got a great bunch of young people coming up behind us. This next generation is going to have multitudes of more opportunities than any generation that has ever preceded them. This generation has more possibilities, more capabilities than any other generation that preceded them. But this generation could be handicapped by being too politically correct in our schools, by being too politically correct to say to our students they have individual responsibility. They have certain behavior that they have to recognize. There are consequences for misbehavior.

If we can give this generation with so much hope and so much promise, if we can set aside the politically correct stuff and just react from our gut and let our local people work on their school boards, I will tell my colleagues this, there is nothing that will stop this next generation. They will lead our country to continue to be the greatest country the world has ever known.

We can be safe knowing that, when we turn our country over to this next generation, that we are turning it over to a better management team, to a management team that will make our results look somewhat slow.

But we have got to give these young people the tools. It is as good for them as it is for our society to teach individual responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, let me wrap up, then, by my conclusion. Number one, I want to caution my colleagues, I am not trying to use this floor for a partisan attack, but we do have in this country, we do have a balance of powers. I spoke tonight about the Republican program, the tax reduction on capital gains, the tax reduction for the homeowners in this country, the tax reduction on the marriage penalty, our pursuit to eliminate the death tax and our elimination of the earnings limit on seniors. We have hit every category out there that I can think of. I am proud of that as a Republican. I think that we should go out, and when we talk to our constituents, we should remember these programs, because what we have done is give incentive to the capitalistic system.

Now, everybody out there, regardless of their economic category, wants success. Government only impedes success with taxes that are unfair or punitive or have no sense on their face. We have recognized that, and the Republicans have taken the lead to do something about it.

I thank my conservative colleagues on the Democratic side who have joined us. I also thank all of my colleagues who, when the real vote came up there, when it came time to face the music, we had all ''yes'' votes to eliminate for the seniors that earnings limitation.

This country is a great country. But we must resolve to be fair to our taxpayers. We must resolve to deliver the best educational product that we can to our next generation, our young people. We must resolve to keep the foundations, the pillars in our foundations strong, those of a strong military, of a strong education system, of a strong health care system, and of a strong military.

HMO REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. VITTER). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GANSKE) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GANSKE. Mr. Speaker, tonight we will talk about two aspects of health care that are important. The first will be about the conference committee that is going on in regards to the HMO reform bill that passed both the House and the Senate. For our colleagues and constituents, it should be noted that the bipartisan Managed Care Reform Act of 1999, the Norwood-Dingell-Ganske bill passed the House back in October 275 to 151. The Senate bill had passed sometime before that.

So the Speaker of the House and the Majority Leader in the Senate, as well as the minority leaders in both bodies, appointed Members of Congress to meet together to iron out the differences between the bill that passed the House and the bill that passed the Senate. Once that is done, then the unified bill is brought back, both to the House and to the Senate for a vote. If it would pass in both Houses, then it would be sent to the President for signature and become law.

Now, the conference committee has been meeting for some time. I am told that they are currently working on internal and external appeals. Even though I helped write the bill, I unfortunately was not named to the conference, and I cannot be more specific than that. I would note that, of all the Republicans from the House that were named to the conference, only one actually voted for the bill that passed the House with such a large margin.

But I want to talk about one particular aspect of the Managed Care Reform bill that is crucial to getting it right, and that is on the issue of whether the HMO at the end of the day can define as ''medically necessary'' anything that they want to. Now, my colleagues may say, well, how can that be? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that, under a 27-year-old law that Congress passed, Federal legislation, an employer plan can define as ''medically necessary'' anything they want to, regardless of whether it meets medical standards of care.

Now, way back in 1996, a year or so after we started debate on HMO reform, so it has already been 4 years, a woman who was a medical reviewer at an HMO gave testimony before my committee, the Committee on Commerce. I think it is important to go back through her testimony, even though I have read this testimony on the floor several times in the past, because it is so crucial to whether we are going to get a bill that is worth the paper that it is written on.

This medical reviewer said, ''I wish to begin'', this is her testimony before the Committee on Commerce, ''I wish to begin by making a public confession. In the spring of 1987, I caused the death of a man. Although this was known to many people, I have not been taken before any court of law or called to account for this in any professional or public forum. In fact, just the opposite occurred. I was rewarded for that. It brought me an improved reputation in my job and contributed to my advancement afterwards. Not only did I demonstrate that I could do what was expected of me, I was the good company employee. I saved half a million dollars.''

She continued, ''Since that day, I have lived with this act and many others eating into my heart and soul.''

For me, a professional is charged with the care or healing of his fellow human beings. The primary ethical norm is do no harm. I did worse, ''I caused death.'', said this HMO reviewer.

She went on to say, ''Instead of using a clumsy bloody weapon, I used the simplest cleanest of tools; my words. This man died because I denied him a necessary operation to save his heart. I felt little pain or remorse at the time. The man's faceless distance soothed my conscience. Like a skilled soldier, I was trained for this moment. When any moral qualms arose, I was to remember, 'I am not denying care, I am only denying payment.' ''

She then listed the many ways managed care plans deny care to patients, but she emphasized one particular issue, the right to decide what care is medically necessary.

She went on to say, ''There is one last activity that I think deserves a special place on this list, and this is what I call the smart bomb of cost containment, and that is medical necessity denials. Even when medical criteria is used, it is rarely developed in any kind of standard traditional clinical process. It is rarely standardized across the field. The criteria is rarely available for prior review by the physicians or members of the plan.''

She went on, ''We have enough experience from history to demonstrate the consequences of secretive, unregulated systems that go awry.'' And the thought of the Holocaust came to my mind at that point.

She finished by saying, ''One can only wonder how much pain, suffering, and death will we have before we have the courage to change our course. Personally, I have decided even one death is too much for me.''

Well, Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about here is the ability of an employer health plan to define as medically necessary anything they want to or to exclude anything they want to.

Let me give my colleagues an example. Before coming to Congress, I was a reconstructive surgeon. I still go overseas and do these types of operations. Here was one of my patients. This was a little baby born with a complete cleft lip and cleft palate.

Now, the standard of care for this birth defect is surgical correction of the lip and of the roof of the mouth. But, Mr. Speaker, there are some HMOs out there that are defining as medically necessary ''the cheapest, least expensive care as defined by us, the HMO.''

Now, some of my colleagues may say, what is wrong with the cheapest, least expensive care? Here is an example. Let us take this little baby with this hole in the roof of his mouth. He cannot speak normally. He will never learn to speak normally if that is not corrected. Food goes up his nose and comes out his nose. He cannot eat right. But under that HMO's ridiculous definition of medical necessity, the HMO could justify not treating this child with surgery to fix the roof of his mouth but by merely requiring or authorizing the construction of a little piece of plastic, like an upper denture; something to sort of plug the hole. That is wrong. Where is the quality?

The parents of that little baby would have no recourse with their health plan, because a 27-year-old Federal law, the Employee Retirement Income Security Act, says that an employer health plan can define that medical care in any way they want to.

And so what has been the result? Well, more than 50 percent of the reconstructive surgeons in this country who have had children with this type of birth defect, and who requested to perform operations to correct this, have been denied as not medically necessary by HMOs.

Here is a little baby that was born with a lack of fusion of the bones between the eyes, so that the eyes are very widely spaced, as my colleagues can see. Much more widely than normal. I have treated some children with this defect where the eyes are almost on the sides of their head, almost like a fish.

Now, there is a surgical operation, it is an intensive operation, it is a big operation, to fix that. It involves making an incision across the top of the head, peeling the soft tissues off the bones, taking some of the bones of the face out and the skull out, remolding them and putting them back together, and then bringing all the tissues back up so that the gap between the eyes is narrowed.

This is a birth defect. That is not a cosmetic operation. A cosmetic operation is where we have a normal process, like aging, where there are droopy eyelids or droopy skin of the face and we make it, or we try to make it better than normal. A reconstructive procedure like this is where we are trying to get that person back to normal so that they do not look so abnormal that they feel like they cannot even go out in public.

A few weeks ago we had a press conference here in Washington in which some families and some children with these types of birth defects came to town. Stacy Keach, a famous actor, was the emcee. He did this because he was born with a cleft lip and a cleft palate and he has a real feeling in his heart for children born with this type of deformity and for the problems that they are experiencing with HMOs in denying their treatment as not medically necessary.

So I am going to take the opportunity tonight to read to my colleagues some of the statements by the mothers and fathers of some of the children that were born with these types of defects.

This little girl's name is Breanna Fox. Here she is before her operation. This is after the operation. This shows that Breanna's skull bones came together, grew together prematurely, and resulted in a significant deformity of her forehead, her eyes, and her skull. These are the words from her mother and the problems that they had with an HMO in trying to get this birth defect fixed. This is Breanna's mother's words.

''Our daughter Breanna was born July 30, 1998. We knew she would be arriving into this world with a craniofacial deformity, as this had been detected during a prenatal sonogram in my 8th month of pregnancy. As predicted, Breanna was born with a misshapen head and was diagnosed with craniosynostosis, that is where the bones of the skull fuse together, and a severe plagiocephaly, that is the description for the type of facial anomaly that she has.

''Before we left the hospital, we learned that a baby's skull is really a collection of many smaller bones adjacent to one another at sites known as sutures. As the brain grows, the sutures allow for expansion of the skull. When brain growth is complete, the sutures gradually become fused. In Breanna's case, two of the sutures had already fused. Her growing brain was forced to grow away from the fused sutures, resulting in an abnormally-shaped face and skull. Fortunately, surgery could correct her condition.

''Because the first year of life is when the most rapid brain growth takes place, surgery should be performed in early infancy. Delayed surgery could lead to brain damage or worsen the facial deformity requiring more complex and risky surgery later on. Our pediatrician, neonatologist and obstetrician all recommended the same skilled surgeon. We were comforted by the wealth of information we had obtained and the knowledge that this surgeon had been successfully treating children with craniofacial deformities for almost 30 years.

''Then the insurance nightmare began. When we left the hospital to take Breanna home, we planned to see this doctor as soon as possible. Our HMO told us that a craniofacial surgeon was not available in the physician network. We assumed that because Breanna's condition required a team of craniofacial specialists she would be allowed to go out of network to a qualified surgeon. We confidently sent our HMO a form requesting an out-of-network referral. Boy, was our assumption wrong. We had no idea that the next 3½ months would turn into a constant battle with our HMO.

''We were ready to do whatever was necessary to ensure our daughter's health. Our initial referral request was turned down. The insurance company found a surgeon in-network that performed cranial vault reconstruction 'every now and then.' We were advised to 'stay in-network.' To appease our HMO, we made an appointment with the network physician. We were not satisfied with the surgeon's experience and qualifications. It was his opinion that only one, not two, of Breanna's skull sutures were fused, and had not bothered to look at her CT Scan results.'' The mother said, ''We shudder to think what could have happened.''

Mom continued. ''We requested a reconsideration of the denial for an out-of-network referral. After numerous calls, the HMO authorized one visit to Dr. Salyer. The authorization letter stated 'service approved', not services. We knew the battle was on.

''At age 7 weeks our surgeon finally examined Breanna. My husband and I were impressed with his qualifications and experience. We were shown before and after photos of other children with craniofacial deformities. We were assured Breanna would be fine. What a sense of relief. We knew we were in the right place.

''So we sent the HMO a request for a follow-up visit to this doctor. One additional visit was approved. One. The HMO asked, 'We have an in-network provider. Why can't Breanna stay in-network?' Breanna's complex case requires experienced specialists that are not available in-network, we explained.

''During the second appointment, a January 18 surgery date was set. It was critical that surgery be completed on schedule to prevent brain damage. Our doctor explained the role of a multidisciplinary team, including an assisting neurosurgeon and a geneticist. The mandatory referral request forms were sent to the HMO, along with all the required medical documentation. Our HMO questioned the medical necessity of each and every appointment and x-ray.

''At this point, the sixth precertification manager,'' sixth, ''to follow Breanna's case continued the company line and pressured us to go in-network. We again explained that our little girl's complex case required an experienced team of specialists who were not on staff at the in-network hospital. We were told that we were not following protocol and we should have known what we were getting into when we signed up for an HMO.

''Breanna's future quality of life and health was on the line. We simply could not sit back and risk delaying the surgery or the possibility of pending brain damage. Two weeks prior to the appointment with the multidisciplinary team of specialists, we filed a complaint with the Texas Department of Insurance.

''Authorization for the CT Scan and specialist visit had still not arrived 2 days before the scheduled appointments. After numerous calls to the HMO, I was advised that because the primary care physician had not forwarded the necessary documentation, a medical necessity decision could not be made on the geneticist and neurosurgeon's visits.''

This mother was furious. Why? Because this mother works for Breanna's primary care physician, and she had witnessed the office insurance manager sending the requested documentation on many occasions.

She continued. ''I had been in communication with the HMO by phone or fax at least twice a week for the entire month of November. I faxed all the requested documentation again for the fifth time. I received approval for the CT Scan and the surgeon and the geneticist visit 1 day before the preop appointments. The HMO reported no record of a request to see the neurosurgeon and again accused the primary care physician of not supplying the necessary information.''

Remember, this is her boss. ''I faxed the requested documentation for the sixth time. After repeated phone calls and complaints, I received the last preop appointment authorization approval at 4:45 p.m.

The Texas Department of Insurance's investigation of our HMO must have helped Breanna's case. Suddenly, the intimidation and the obstruction ceased.

This mother continued. I am sure many of you have children and can remember a time when they were ill. Remember the pain you felt as a parent when you wanted so badly for them to feel better, how much you wanted to take away their pain. Now, imagine a child with a severe craniofacial deformity, and magnify that pain and misery 10 times.

Our hope today is that insurance companies will no longer be allowed to intimidate the families whose children suffer from birth defects or deformities. Families should never have to encounter the same obstacles we experienced. Please do not allow insurance companies to dictate who can or cannot treat these children. Many children with craniofacial deformities require the expertise of surgeons and other skilled medical professionals.

Remember this is a child's face, and all children must be allowed a chance at a normal life. And she finished her testimony.

I would say to my colleagues, this mother worked in a doctor's office, she knew how to negotiate the system. She knew that they had sent from the primary care doctor's office the information six times. What was that HMO doing? They were doing what they do all the time, they were delaying. They were denying. They were obstructing, because, you know, they figured that if they do that often enough, a lot of people will not know how to navigate the system, and they will just give up.

In this case, fortunately, for this little girl, her mother was an insider. She worked in a doctor's office and she knew how to navigate the system. But I ask my colleagues, how many of our constituents would have been able to have done what this mother did to get her daughter the kind of care that she needed?

Another mother testified, her little daughter Brenna was born August 25, 1987. This is her picture before surgery. You will note her craniofacial deformity. She has protrusive eyeballs. The middle face is forward. She has basically no jaw. Her eyes are widely set. This is her mother's testimony. We knew at the time of her birth that Brenna had a congential birth defect, but it was not until 2½ years that she was diagnosed with Hajdu-Cheney syndrome.

Brenna has the abnormal facial features characteristic of this syndrome. Her eyes are set too far apart, with overgrowth of the eye sockets causing the eyeballs to protrude unprotected. Like any preteen girl, this is in the mother's words, as Brenna has grown older, she has become more and more aware and concerned with her appearance. But, unlike her peers who endure the usual adolescent bad hair days, Brenna suffers from the knowledge that she truly does look different.

As you may have expected, Brenna has been teased by her peers. She is hurt by these remarks. It is not something that someone just gets used to; however, despite the emotional pain, she has hope. Through consultation with a reconstructive surgeon, we learned that reconstructive surgery is available to reconstruct her face to a semblance of normality. However, because of this severity of her deformity, she will need a series of operations.

The first surgery was scheduled, a minor procedure, to see how well she would tolerate surgery. The remaining procedures would be more intensive, involving reconstruction of the bones around her eyes.

With high hopes, we sent the preauthorization forms to our HMO. Two days before Brenna's surgery, we received a letter from Cigna HealthCare denying the first procedure. Brenna's surgery was categorized as ''cosmetic'' and, therefore, not a covered defect. See, we are back here again to the definition of medical necessity.

When Brenna was informed of the insurance company's denial, she became distraught. She was worried that she could not have the surgery and also worried about the financial burden it would place on her family. We simply cannot understand how the insurance company could possibly consider her surgery ''cosmetic.''

Simple every day activities, like a trip to the mall or grocery store are not enjoyable for Brenna. People stare at her. The looks come from other children, as well as adults. I have seen people go out of their way to get a better look. Brenna rarely says anything about it, but I watch her shift her position, this is her mother telling the story, usually trying to get behind me to avoid the stares.

She may suddenly claim to have a headache and want to go home. At times like this, her mother continued, my fierce protective instincts kick in, and I shield Brenna as much as possible. However, this is part of Brenna's life every single day. I am not with her every moment. She is remarkably brave, but she is a child.

Will she limit her participation in education and social activities fearing that she looks like a funny-looking kid? Without the medically necessary care she needs, of course, I worry about the lifelong impact that this may have on her.

Her mother finished by saying, Brenna's craniofacial surgery will not be performed on a normal face to remove wrinkles or to make her face appear more youthful. Her reconstructive surgery will be performed on a face with congential abnormalities with the goal of constructing her face to appear more normal. These are not cosmetic procedures.

She finished by saying, no family should have to wonder if their child will receive medically necessary care. No family should be forced to take on a financial burden for medically necessary care the insurance companies refuse to pay for.

Insurance companies should be required to cover reconstructive surgical procedures for those children with congential or developmental abnormalities.

I would add this, a famous surgeon from the Midwest a long time ago, one of the founders of the Mayo Clinic, Will Mayo had this to say, it is the divine right of man to look human. When somebody is born with their eyes on each side of their head, they do not look human.

This little girl has functional reasons why she needs surgery. Her eyeballs, as you can see, are very protuberant. When she grows older, that will get worse. It may even affect her vision, but it certainly leaves her eyes in an unprotected position because they are not surrounded as eyes normally are by a bony socket. She is at increased risk for trauma to her eyes.

I would say this, even if that were not the case, it is an arbitrary definition by her insurance company to deny her the coverage of this.

Let me talk about a few other types of medical necessity denials that HMOs have done. This woman with her family was denied a type of treatment for breast cancer by her HMO. She was featured on a cover story in Time magazine a few years ago. Her doctors and consultants recommended the treatment, but the HMO said it wasn't ''medically necessary.'' And they denied it, and this woman died.

Mr. Speaker, I recently received a letter from an emergency room doctor in Iowa who had sent this letter to the medical director of an HMO in my home State. Let me read this letter to you. Dear Dr. so and so, Dear Dr. medical doctor, this letter is in response to the ''educational'' letter I received from your HMO regarding the admission of, let us call him Smith, Mr. Smith presented with a hypertensive urgency to the emergency room, and after two doses of IV Trandate, his continued hypertensive urgency required hospital admission.

He previously had a documented myocardial infarct and stent treatment in September 1999. He had been observed in the emergency room for persisting extreme elevation of his blood pressure, and he was admitted to the intensive care unit, because we cannot monitor patients in our emergency room by our hospital regulations in Marshalltown. His blood pressure became well controlled that night.

He was discharged the following day. The patient's risk factors and extreme blood pressure elevation necessitated ICU admission for monitoring, and I had no recourse but to admit the patient.

He had got an educational letter from the patient's HMO questioning why would that patient have to go spend a night in the hospital. He went on and continued, routine harassment by HMO organizations for cases like this demonstrates why physicians and patients will push Congress for legislative relief.

I have to spend time responding to questions about a very appropriated mission when my time would be much better spent taking care of patients, especially when I was obligated by hospital regulations that the patient be admitted. Your HMO continues to place roadblocks and unnecessary obstacles in front of both patients and physicians for obtaining routine care.

I will continue to fight inappropriate letters and hassles by HMOs, including yours, and I will do everything I can to try to see that the Federal regulations are changed, and HMOs have to be responsive both to their patients and the physicians taking care of those patients.

Let me give you another example, Mr. Speaker, of the emergency care problems that could be taken care of if we could deal with the emergency care provisions in the Bipartisan Consensus Managed Care Reform Act that passed this floor, but also if we could take care of the problems as it relates to HMOs, employer health plans' ability to define as medically necessary anything they want to.

This is a well-known case of a young woman who fell off a 40-foot cliff, 50 miles, 60 miles west of Washington, D.C. When she was out hiking with her boyfriend, she fell off a cliff. She was lying at the bottom of the cliff with a fractured skull, broken arm, broken pelvis, semicomatose. Her boyfriend managed to get a helicopter in there.

This is her picture as they are bundling her up to take her to the emergency room. They took her to the emergency room. They stabilized her. They put her in the hospital. She got IV morphine for the pain and was treated. Needless to say, she was out of touch with the world for several weeks.

Her insurance company refused to pay the bill. Why, you ask. Well, because she did not phone ahead for prior authorization. Mr. Speaker, I just have to ask you, what was this young lady supposed to do? Was she supposed to have a crystal ball and know she was going to fall off this 40-foot cliff and before that happened phone ahead and get prior authorization from her HMO?

Then the HMO backed down a little bit and said, well, you know, once you were in the hospital, you should have phoned and let us know, we are still not going to pay your bill. She pointed out that she had been on IV morphine for a considerable period of time, and the thought just did not cross her mind that she had to phone her HMO.

This young lady was fortunate, because the type of health plan she had enabled her to go to her State insurance commissioner, a State ombudsman, and get help, and the HMO ended up paying the bill.

But the problem, Mr. Speaker, is that most people in this country receive their health insurance through their employer, and those employer plans are shielded from state insurance oversight. So they have nowhere to turn when an HMO would arbitrarily say, you know, ''It does not fit our definition of medically necessary. We are just not going to pay for this.''

Let me give you another example of a real live tragedy caused by an HMO's decision, which under current Federal law they can defend as ''medically necessary.'' This was a little boy a few years ago, you see him here tugging at his sister's sleeve, who one night had a temperature of about 104 degrees. It is about 3 in the morning. His mother and dad look at him and they know he is sick and he needs to go to the emergency room, so they do what they are supposed to do, they phone their HMO. They dial that 1–800 number, and they get some clerk 1,000 miles away, and they explain that little Jimmy here has a really high temperature and looks sick and he needs to go to the emergency room.

That clerk makes a medical decision, over the phone, never having seen the child, and that decision is well, we will authorize a visit, but only to our hospital which is 60, 70 miles away. If you go, by the way, to another hospital as an emergency without our authorization, you will pay for that visit.

So mom and dad bundle up little Jimmy and they start their trek about 3:30 in the morning. It is stormy and rainy out. They live south of Atlanta, Georgia. The hospital that they have been authorized is clear on the north side, so they have to drive through Atlanta. Less than halfway there they past three hospitals with fine emergency rooms that they could have stopped at, but they did not have an authorization from that HMO.

Not being medical professionals, they push on. Unfortunately, en route, before they get to the authorized hospital, little Jimmy has a cardiac arrest. Picture yourself as the dad driving frantically trying to find the hospital, the mother trying to keep this little baby alive. They go squealing into an emergency room entrance, mother leaps out carrying Jimmy, screaming ''help me, help me, help save my baby,'' and a nurse comes out, starts resuscitation. They get the IVs in, and they get little Jimmy back to life.

Unfortunately, they are not able to save all of little Jimmy. At least as a contributing factor, his arrest en route, when he could have gone to a nearer hospital, Jimmy ends up with gangrene in both hands and both feet. No blood supply, both hands and both feet are dead. So the doctors have to amputate both hands and both feet. Here is a picture of Jimmy after his HMO treatment.

Now, if this happens to you and your baby and your insurance is in an ERISA self-insured plan, an employer plan, your recourse, the responsibility of that health plan under Federal law, is simply to provide the cost of treatment, in this case the cost of Jimmy's amputations.

Is that fair? Is that justice? Knowing that you, the health plan, are not legally liable for anything other than the cost of care denied, are you likely to skimp on definitions of medical necessity?

Well, it sure happens, my friends. It sure happens, and it needs to be fixed, and the only way it can be fixed is for Congress to fix it.

Jimmy today is able to pull on his leg stumps, his leg prosthesis, with his arm stumps, and he is able to hold a pen with his arm stumps. He does have bilateral arm prosthesis hooks, but he needs help to get them on. And he is a good little guy, and because of particular circumstances with his insurance, he was able to receive some compensation. But most people who would have gotten their insurance through their employers would not be able to recover anything other than the cost of care denied.

So, my friends, as the conference is meeting, we need to adopt the provisions on external appeals that were in the bipartisan Consensus Managed Care Reform Act, the Norwood-Dingell-Ganske Act, that passed the floor of the House, and that basically said that if there is a disagreement between the patient or his parents and the company on a denial of care, that you can take that through an internal appeals, but then take it to an independent appeals board consisting of doctors that have no relationship to the HMO, and that that group of physicians is able to determine what is medically necessary, as long as it does not involve a specific exclusion of coverage in the plan, i.e., a plan might say our plan does not cover liver transplants. But as long as there is not a specific exclusion of coverage, then the independent panel ought to be able to make that determination, and these are the crucial words that need to be in the legislative language that comes out of the conference, that independent panel should ''not be bound by the plan's guidelines.''

They can take the plan's guidelines under advisement, they can consider the patient's history, they can consider NIH Consensus Statement, they can consider the medical literature, all sorts of things, but they should not be bound by the plan's own guidelines.

That is what is in the Senate bill. That is why the Senate bill is not worth the paper that it is written on, because it is a circular bill. It does not do anything. At the end of the day, it does not address the problem that you have to address if you are going to do HMO reform, and that is you have to break the Federal law that says that an employer health plan can define as medically necessary anything they want to, or can deny it, according to their own guidelines.

TOBACCO

Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk just a few minutes about probably the number one public health problem in the country today, and that is tobacco. Each year more than 400,000 people in this country die of disease related to tobacco. Mr. Speaker, that is more people than die in a single year combined from AIDS, automobile accidents, homicides, suicides, burns, certainly medical errors. You can add all those things together, and it is still less than the number of people that are dying each year from tobacco-related diseases.

Each day in this country, each day, 3,000 children, 3,000 adolescents, start smoking, and 1,000 of those kids will die of a disease related to smoking.

As a surgeon, I have had to take care of people who have cancers of their mouth, that have required resection of most of their mandibles. In response to that, many states have done settlements, including my own State of Iowa, so we are now seeing billboards like this one, which is in Des Moines. This was put up by the Attorney General of Iowa, Iowa Department of Public Health, Centers for Disease Control. It shows two Marlboro-type cowboys. ''Bob, I have got emphysema.'' There is another one in Des Moines that says ''Bob, I have lost my lung.''

These will help, but we need to do more, because we know that the tobacco companies have in the past and are continuing to target and market kids. We know from internal tobacco company documents that they know that nicotine is one of the most addictive drugs we know of. It is more addictive, or at least as addictive, as morphine and cocaine, and they know that, the tobacco companies know, that the earlier they can get kids addicted, the harder it is to quit. That is why this cartoon shows big tobacco lighting up a ''kids'' cigarette with a ''victims'' cigarette, a chain smoker.

And it is not just that the tobacco companies have marketed and targeted cigarettes towards kids. Did you know, for instance, Mr. Speaker, that a survey was done not too long ago that showed that 80 percent of five-year-old children could associate cigarettes with Joe Camel?

Tobacco companies are also marketing and targeting kids, especially high school boys, for smokeless tobacco, chewing tobacco. There are over 1 million high school boys today who regularly use chewing tobacco.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that we have not had tobacco spittoons in this House chamber for a long, long time.

What is the consequence of chewing tobacco? Well, as a surgeon I can tell you firsthand what the consequences are. It is like this surgical specimen. This shows the teeth of the anterior lower jaw, part of the tongue, the lymph nodes underneath the jaw. This is a surgical resection for a cancer caused by chewing tobacco. And what have the tobacco companies done? Well, they have made that chewing tobacco taste good. They have tested the flavors to see which flavors would be enticing to kids, and that is how they get them hooked on that tobacco product.

Just in Iowa alone, 37 percent of high school students smoke. Each year in Iowa, each year in Iowa, and we only have about 2.8 million people in my home state, each year 12,000 kids under the age of 18 become new smokers. Each year in Iowa more than 3 million packages of cigarettes are illegally sold to kids.

The number of people who die each year in Iowa from smoking is almost 5,000. The number of Iowa kids alive today who will die from smoking is 53,000.

It annually costs Iowa $610 million to take care of diseases directly related to tobacco use. The Iowa government Medicaid payments directly related to tobacco use are $70 million.

Mr. Speaker, I could go on with a whole bunch of statistics, but the reason that we are talking about this is that 3 weeks ago the Supreme Court by a 5 to 4 decision said Congress must authorize the Food and Drug Administration to regulate tobacco.

□ 2230

I can read from Sandra Day O'Connor's closing statement. The Supreme Court said that because there are implications for other regulatory agencies. But that did not mean that they did not think that Congress should do that, and they certainly did not think or give any indications that there would be anything unconstitutional with Congress giving the FDA that authority.

Here is what Sandra Day O'Connor said:

''By no means do we question the seriousness of the problem that the FDA has sought to address. The agency has amply demonstrated that tobacco use, particularly among children and adolescents, poses perhaps the single most significant threat to public health in the United States.'' Justice O'Connor is practically begging Congress to grant the FDA authority to regulate tobacco.

So last week I introduced, along with the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), a bill that would do that. The bill simply says that the FDA has authority to regulate tobacco; that the 1996 FDA regulations would be law.

Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a tax bill. There would be no increases in the price of cigarettes with this bill. This is not a liability bill. This does not confer any legal immunity to tobacco companies.

This is not a prohibition bill. I have in this bill a provision that says that the FDA does not need to ban this substance. All of the health groups agree that we cannot just cold turkey all of the addicted smokers out there. After all, this is a very strong addiction.

The bill has nothing to do with the tobacco settlement.

This bill simply recognizes the facts: Tobacco and nicotine are addicting. Tobacco kills over 400,000 people in this country each year. Tobacco companies have and are targeting children to make them addicted to smoking. The FDA should have congressional authority to regulate this drug and, as they put it, the ''delivery devices.'' That is in the tobacco companies' words, those cigarettes are drug delivery devices.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to call on my colleagues to cosponsor this legislation. This is H.R. 4207. As I said, I introduced this with the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL). Here are some of the people who are currently already cosponsors:

The gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH), the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), the gentleman from California (Mr. COX), the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BOSWELL), the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN), the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. SNYDER), the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST), the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY), the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN), the gentlewoman from New Jersey (Mrs. ROUKEMA), the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT), another physician, just like the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. SNYDER), the gentleman from California (Mr. HORN), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY), the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SALMON), the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), the gentleman from California (Mr. MCKEON), the gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE), the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. BONO), the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER), the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON), the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. PORTER), Mr. BARRETT, the gentleman from California (Mr. BILBRAY), the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. OLVER), the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM), the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER), the gentlemen from California, Mr. GALLEGLY and Mr. HUNTER, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), the gentleman from California (Mr. CAMPBELL), the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. WEINER).

These are just cosponsors. Many others are looking at this bill. This is a very, very important issue that Congress should address. We need cosponsors for this. It will not be easy to get an FDA tobacco authority bill to the floor. But the more people that we have sign up for this, the better the chances are that we will have to address the number one public health problem in the country today, and especially for children.

Once again, I call on my colleagues from both sides of the aisle to join in a bipartisan effort to do the right thing. As I said, this is not a tax bill. This is not a liability bill. This bill would allow the FDA to regulate tobacco, especially as it is marketed and targeted to children, and it would allow the 1996 regulations to go into effect.

These are the regulations that the FDA put out that said, tobacco companies cannot market kids. They cannot put billboards up by schools, they cannot put tobacco enticement ads into children's magazines. Vending machines, cigarette vending machines, need to be in adults-only places so kids cannot just go and get cigarettes, and that kids should be carded to make sure they are the proper age before they can receive cigarettes. Those are reasonable regulations.

Also, we ought to have full disclosure on the contents of tobacco products as well, not proprietary trade secrets.

THE PROBLEM OF ILLEGAL NARCOTICS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. PEASE). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 6, 1999, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to come to the floor again tonight to talk about the subject I usually attempt to address on Tuesday night before the House when we have these Special Orders to call to attention to the House of Representatives, my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, and the American people, one of the most serious social problems we are facing as a Nation. That is the problem of illegal narcotics, their disastrous impact on the United States, our economy, on families across this Nation, the tremendous toll it takes on our judicial system, and the loss of lives.

In fact, in the last recorded year, 1998, some 15,973 Americans lost their lives as a direct result of illegal narcotics. If we take in all of the other figures that are not reported, our national drug czar, the director of our Office of National Drug Control Policy, Barry McCaffrey, has testified before our Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy, and Human Resources that the toll exceeds some 50,000 each year in the United States.

That is truly a devastating number when we consider that we have incarcerated nearly 2 million Americans, and that some 70 percent of them are there because of drug-related offenses or committing crimes, in most cases two and three felonies on their record, under the influence of illegal narcotics and substance abuse, and we know that something is seriously wrong and something needs our attention, not only as a Congress but as a people who care about people and should care about their fate.

Unfortunately, the toll continues to mount, the tremendous impact illegal narcotics have had again on our Nation. Tonight I wanted to cite just some of the most recent statistics we have, and how some of the people who are most at risk in our national population are some of the highest victims as far as percentage, again in this terrible conflict with illegal narcotics.

According to the 1998 National Household Survey on Drug Abuse, drug use increased from 5.8 percent in 1993 to 8.2 percent in 1998 among young African-Americans; again, the victims of illegal narcotics and drug use, in particular the minority population, and in this case not quite doubling but a dramatic increase for African-Americans.

Also, according to this 1998 survey on drug abuse, drug use increased from 4.4 percent in 1993 to 6.1 percent in 1998 among young Hispanics. The Hispanic minority in this country, and particularly the youth, have been tremendously impacted by illegal narcotics. If we look at the population in our prisons, if we look at the population in our detention facilities and jails across this Nation, we would see a disproportionate number of minorities incarcerated in those facilities, and many of them there because of drug-related problems.

We hear a great deal about legacies at this time of year, especially after a 7-year administration. I do not have blow-ups of these particular charts tonight, but certainly when history records the legacy of the Clinton administration, some of these charts must be included in the pages of that history.

These were recently given to me by the director of our agency called SAMHA, the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Agency, Dr. Chavez. Dr. Chavez presented me with these charts that show from 1992 problems relating to amphetamine and methamphetamine use, and these are admission rates for abuse treatment from 1992 to 1997.

If we look at these charts we see dramatic increases, almost turning entirely dark on this chart here in the numbers that are now required for treatment and addiction to methamphetamine. This is particularly among our young people, but also among our adult population.

In fact, we get to the Midwest and the West and we have methamphetamines in epidemic proportion and use. I am going to talk about methamphetamine in a hearing that I did in California just several weeks ago, and again, what has taken place in this particular area.

If we look at heroin substance abuse treatment, again, this chart is not very big, but we can barely see some coloring here in 1992, up to some solid coloring in 1997. My own State of Florida is not darkened in, but in my area and Central Florida, heroin substance abuse and use of heroin has so dramatically increased that now last year the headlines blurted out in what is really tranquil Central Florida, the greater Orlando area, that heroin drug overdoses now exceed homicides; again, part of what has not been done to address a very serious problem and growing problem across our land.

The marijuana chart is even more revealing. We barely see any severity in admission rates or high admission rates in 1992 for marijuana substance abuse and admissions, particularly young people addicted to the marijuana. And it is not the marijuana of the sixties and seventies, with the low purity and low toxicity level. We see now again areas almost totally darkened in from a policy of ''Just say maybe,'' or ''If I had it to do all over again, I would inhale.'' Certainly that type of policy, those statements, have an impact, particularly among our young people, a legacy for substance abuse that again I think is part of the failure of this administration to address this.

In fact, with the President we can count on probably two hands the number of times that he has talked about drug abuse at any length. Even in his last speech before the State of the Union, and only less than a sentence, a passing note, did the President address this problem again that has incredible social impact across our land.

The results are pretty dramatic. It may not be talked about. We did spend several days of debate just in the last 2 weeks here because of the crisis in Colombia, because of the sheer amount and volume of illegal narcotics now pouring into our country because some of the guards that we have traditionally had in place, such as Panama, which was a forward operating surveillance operation for all of our drug operations in the Caribbean and over South America, had been dismantled, again with the Clinton administration's failure to negotiate a treaty to allow even our drug surveillance operations to continue in Panama.

With that closed down we have lost most of our surveillance capability, and now have cobbled together in Ecuador and the Dutch Antilles some minor coverage, but there is a huge gap that allows heroin or cocaine and other illegal narcotics to pour in almost unabated.

It certainly must be one of the primary responsibilities of this Congress to see that illegal substances and substances that harm our population, and particularly when we have this number of people incarcerated, when we have somewhere in the area of a quarter of a trillion dollars of damages to our economy and to our country every year with illegal narcotics, and some close to 16,000 direct deaths in just one year, that is 1998, the last recorded, and some 50,000 total, certainly it is incumbent upon the representatives of this Nation to do something about that problem.

The Federal portion of that problem certainly is to interdict and stop those illegal substances from coming onto our shores before they even reach our borders, but that, in fact, has not been the policy of this administration. It has been a policy of changing the emphasis on taking apart successful programs of the Reagan and Bush administrations, where we had drug abuse on a steady decline and drug use on a steady decline, and have it now skyrocketing as these charts so aptly describe.

I spoke for a few minutes about methamphetamine and the national epidemic that we have. We have held several hearings on the subject of methamphetamine, both here in Washington and field hearings. I was shocked to find the incredible impact that methamphetamines have had in the West, also, of course, in the Midwest, rural areas like Iowa, other tranquil areas like Minnesota, where we heard testimony at our hearings here in Washington of incredible amounts of Mexican methamphetamine coming in to those areas, and the action of the individuals who consume methamphetamine is as bizarre, as strange and damaging as anything we had in the crack cocaine epidemic of the 1980s, in fact probably even more of a detrimental impact on families and individuals.

One hearing that I conducted at the request of the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) was in his district, which encompasses part of the capital city of California, which is Sacramento. Testimony that we had in Sacramento by one caregiver there was particularly revealing, something that even shocked me and I have heard testimony from a number of witnesses that is quite moving, but this individual who testified put together a program in Butte County, and Butte County is a small county in California compared to others, I think it is in the 200,000 population range, and this witness testified that since 1993 they created a drug endangered children's program which was established and actually allowed the program to detain 601 children from drug houses.

Now, again, we have to think of this as a small county, but 601 children were rescued from drug houses. One hundred sixty-two of those children were detained from methamphetamine labs so these children actually lived where their parents or guardians who were producing methamphetamine. This all came about as a result of an L.A. newspaper staff reporter, I believe his name was Don Winkle, who began writing a story after three children were left to burn to death by their mother when a methamphetamine lab exploded in Los Angeles. His story brought him to Butte County, and there this particular reporter reviewed the program that had been put in place. The testimony by this social worker was most revealing, and of course we hear on the news from time to time the very attention-getting child killing child with a gun case, and I have also cited both of the most recent cases where a 6-year-old child killed a 6-year-old child, brought in a gun and a horrible crime and everyone focused on the gun but very few in the media and others took time to reveal to the public or discuss that the child came, in fact, from a crack house, from a cocaine-infested home, if it could be called that. The father, I believe, was in jail and had been involved in illegal narcotics charges, but again the focus was on the gun but not on the setting.

Many of the other children who I will talk about here have not been publicized. This one particular case, where 3 of these children died in Los Angeles, again illustrates some of the problems that we face from illegal narcotics; in this case, from methamphetamines. The 601 children that this care worker talked about, she went on to describe in her testimony to us and let me read a little bit of what she said. The 601 children's names and faces are different but each case and story is the same. One would think that 9 years later, with hundreds of suspects arrested, countless doors kicked in and the writing of thousands of reports that I would grow callous, but upon entering the bad guy's house again and seeing those small, round, innocent eyes looking up at me, finally someone came to save me, I turn a marshmallow. I do not have to make up stories or use the same photographs or tell the worst of the worst. They are all bad.

Her testimony went on, and let me describe this, if I may, the yard is covered with garbage, old bicycles, toys and rusted car parts. Three or four dogs run under the house or aggressively approach. Inside the house it is dark with no electricity. The stench of rotten food, animal urine and feces and soiled diapers permeate the house. Chemical odors irritate my eyes and nose. We fumble down hallways into bedrooms stepping on filthy clothing and debris. The children are startled when a flashlight shines in their way. They are sleeping on soiled mattresses with no sheets or blankets. They sleep in clothes for the third day in a row. They have not had a bath in days and cannot remember when they last ate. They rarely attend school due to lice infestation and cockroaches have become their pets. The soiled food stored in an ice chest is moldy. There is no running water and the methamphetamine laboratory is all over the kitchen. The children draw pictures for me of mommy with a methamphetamine pipe and show me bruises where mom's boyfriend hit them. The oldest child comforts the younger sibling as obviously trying to parent. None of the kids cry or, for that matter, show any emotion at all. They all exhibit a classic attachment disorder. Domestic violence is obvious with the holes kicked in the doors and the walls. A loaded firearm is found next to the couch and another under the bed, both where children have access.

Again she goes on, a description of what she sees in this house and it is unfortunately very typical. She told us that she saw these scenes over and over and over again. She said these children were lucky. We rescued them before they were injured, maimed or killed.

The newspaper clippings I collected from all over the State and even a few other States tell more horrific stories. These are some of the clippings that she provided our subcommittee and stories: Fifteen month overdoses on methamphetamine; five month old tests positive for methamphetamine and succumbs to death with 12 rib fractures, a burned leg and scarred feet by a methamphetamine addict in Los Angeles; 13 month old dies of heart trauma, broken spine and neck by methamphetamine addict. She was also raped and sodomized.

Twenty-five month old Oregon toddler overdoses on methamphetamine; a 2 year old dies with methamphetamine in the system, San Jose, California; a 2 year old eats methamphetamine from a baby food jar in Twenty-Nine Palms, California; a 14 month old drinks lye in water from a parent's methamphetamine laboratory, hospitalized permanently with severe organ damage; new baby dies from mother breast milk laced with methamphetamine in Orange County; 8 week old, 11 pound boy dies from methamphetamine poisoning found inside baby bottle in Orange County; an 8 year old watches and hears mom die in a methamphetamine laboratory in Oroville, California; a 6 month old overdoses semi-comatose seizuring, hospitalized, drank methamphetamine, also in Oroville, California; a 4 year old tests positive for methamphetamine, beaten and hair pulled out by mom and boyfriend, Chico, California; 8 children exposed to methamphetamine laboratory in day care center in southern California; and mom on methamphetamine and her addicted boyfriend drown a 2 year old in a bathtub in Sacramento.

This is just a sampling of the death, destruction and mayhem that was provided to us by this one witness from one county in California.

Most people do not know much about methamphetamines, and the addiction and epidemic is limited at this point to the Midwest and to the far West, but spreading across the country. We had Dr. Leshner, who is head of NIDA, National Institute of Drug Abuse, come and testify before our subcommittee and give us the latest information on what methamphetamines do to people. Most people who are involved in taking methamphetamine really do not know that they are setting themselves up for brain damage and destruction. We found also that the damage that is done to the brain causes such bizarre behavior that parents abandon their children.

In California, we were told where they attempted to return 35 of these children to their parents, only 5 parents were capable or willing, after being on methamphetamines, to take their children back. We were told of one parent on methamphetamine who tortured their child and then finished the child off by boiling the child alive.

This is the type of bizarre behavior that methamphetamine produces in the brain in individuals who take methamphetamine.

This is the scientific data that Dr. Leshner provided our subcommittee. This first slice of brain and this view of the brain shows dopamine, with normal dopamine levels that are required for an active, healthy brain. The second and third illustration here is a gradual reduction in dopamine levels in the brain due to methamphetamine uses. The fourth illustration here that has been provided is a brain from an individual who suffers from Parkinson's disease, and we can see the deterioration of methamphetamine from a normal brain into various stages of methamphetamine, the most severe stage, this happens to be Parkinson's but also mirrors methamphetamine. So this is what this wonderful drug has done for one county in California, what it can do for an individual, and again the damage that can be imposed on individuals. It really is shocking and I do not think most people who get hooked on methamphetamines have any idea what they are doing to themselves or the potential damage they can do to their family or their children.

The cases we have are just unbelievable.

Again, I do not want to go into any more of them tonight, but I will be glad to provide Members upon request additional information on what our subcommittee has found relating to methamphetamine and its horrible impact.

The other chart that I showed is heroin. I showed how heroin has now caused tremendous problems across the United States. We have a heroin epidemic in many regions of the country, including the area that I represent, which is central Florida. Heroin use and abuse is up dramatically.

Heroin is not the heroin of the 1960s, 1970s, or even 1980s. The purity in those days was in the low percentile, single digits, a 9 percent pure. The heroin that we are getting in from South America and Mexico is now running 70, 80 percent pure. That is why we have an incredible death rate in Central Florida and around the country.

Young people and others are taking heroin. They are mixing it with some other substance, alcohol or some other drug. Or even first-time users are hit with this high 70 percent pure heroin, go into convulsions, and die.

Now, I think that many people would believe that heroin has been glorified by Hollywood, and heroin is the type of drug that the stars and others in important places use. Most people do not realize the severe consequence of heroin.

Unfortunately, I am one Representative that has heard more about the tragedy of heroin than many of my colleagues. As I said, in Central Florida, our heroin overdose deaths, particularly among our young people, now exceed our rate of homicides.

One of the parents provided me with the permission to show the effects of heroin. This is particularly a gruesome depiction of the end of the life of this constituent's death, a young man in Central Florida. This is how the coroner placed the body before the body was removed.

Now, again, I know young people and many people across this land think that heroin use is somewhat glamorous. The picture I am about to show is her son as the coroner found him in Orlando, a rather gruesome picture. I show it only to show what the potential holds for using this high purity heroin. This young man died a horrible death. His mother told me. The autopsy would reveal that.

This is not glamor. This is not celebrity status. This is death by heroin. The pure deadly heroin that suffocates one to death, causes one's blood vessels to burst. It causes one to go into uncontrollable seizures and then die one of the most horrible deaths imaginable.

Time and time again, in Central Florida, this has happened and happened in record numbers again this last year. This is only one victim. But people must understand what is happening with heroin and what heroin, what methamphetamines, and some of these other narcotics can do to their lives and their bodies. One ends up being taken out by the coroner in this fashion. These pictures end up as the last reminder your parents have of you or your family has of you.

Unfortunately, I have met many of the parents of young men and women in my district whose child has or loved one has ended up in that condition. That is one reason why I come to the floor every Tuesday night, why I continue to hammer away to get the attention of the House of Representatives, the Congress, and the American people on what is taking place with illegal narcotics. We should not have one more person fall victim as we have had in Central Florida.

Some of the most disturbing news I received is during a recent recess when I was home and talking with our law enforcement officials. They told me that we have, in fact, more drug-related deaths in Central Florida, particularly heroin. Again, there is an unabated flow coming in from Colombia, from Central and South America.

Tomorrow, we are going to focus a hearing on some of that trafficking pattern, particularly as it relates to Haiti. We have focused on the major source of production which is Colombia, which produced the heroin that killed the young man whose picture I showed just a few minutes ago.

But what is particularly sad about all of this is that, in fact, we could prevent much more of this death and destruction. We could stop a great deal more of the hard narcotics coming into this country. Certainly we have a responsibility to stop illegal narcotics coming into this country.

Unfortunately, the Clinton administration in 1993 dramatically changed the policy that kept some of these illegal narcotics from coming into our borders.

In fact, we were making good progress. Heroin was dramatically down. Cocaine was dramatically down. As my colleagues saw from the charts I presented earlier, methamphetamines were not even on the charts in 1992.

Unfortunately, this administration made a complete reversal in policy. They decided to put all of their eggs in the treatment basket.

Since 1993, we have nearly doubled the amount of money in treatment. In fact, we have also, through Republican efforts, added another billion dollars in money for education. But it has been the focus, particularly treatment, treating the wounded in this battle, rather than conducting a war on drugs as we had in the 1980s under the Bush and the Reagan administration.

The results are most telling. The Clinton administration slashed the international programs, the programs of stopping drugs at their source in the source countries by some 50 percent beginning in 1993 when they controlled the House, the White House, and the other body.

Next they slashed the interdiction programs. Interdiction is also cost effective in that it stops illegal narcotics before they get to our borders. The most expensive way to go after illegal narcotics is once it gets into our streets and communities. It requires us to put massive police forces and massive resources in law enforcement to keep up with the sheer volume that spreads and is diffused among our communities and our streets and our schools throughout our society.

But a very serious mistake was made in 1993 in cutting the source country programs and cutting the interdiction programs and use of the military for surveillance. The military never has and never will, because of our laws, become involved in enforcement. They merely provide intelligence and surveillance and information, particularly to source countries, so they could go after both the production of illegal narcotics, the trafficking of illegal narcotics, and the transit of illegal narcotics out of their country. A very effective strategy because, again, we had dramatic decreases in drug use and drug trafficking and the sheer availability of hard narcotics.

The results again are devastating. We are seeing, particularly in the last few years, huge, huge volumes of heroin coming in.

In 1993, there was almost zero, almost no heroin produced in Colombia. Almost none. Since 1993, again through a policy that really has been a policy of failure, the Clinton administration has managed to turn Colombia into the major source of heroin coming into the United States.

This is hard to believe, but in 1993, there was almost no coca, no cocaine produced in Colombia. There was transit from Peru and Bolivia, and some processing and transshipment from Colombia, but it was not the source of growth of coca and production. Today, Colombia is now the source of some 80 percent of the cocaine coming into the United States. And, again, a much more deadly and purer form of cocaine that is reaching our shores and killing our population.

It was not easy for the Clinton administration to make Colombia the largest producer and transiter in some 6 or 7 years, but they did manage to do it. And it has been in spite of protests by the Republican majority, in spite of direct legislative actions, in spite of appropriations trying to get resources to Colombia.

The fiasco started in 1994, when the Clinton administration stopped information sharing to Colombia and stopped intelligence exchanges with that country and some of the other source countries. It took us several years to straighten out that fiasco. And, again, in the last 2 years, the Clinton administration is now repeating the fiasco. And we see where we have been able to decrease the production of cocaine in Peru by some 66 percent, in Bolivia by some 55 percent. For the first time in just the last few months some increase in production in Peru, again because the Clinton administration has shut down some of the exchange of intelligence.

That is all documented in a report that was provided to me by GAO. I asked this independent agency to conduct a review of what is taking place. This report was produced by the General Accounting Office. It says Drug Control Assets DOD Contributes to Reducing the Illegal Drug Supply Have Declined. This is a documentation and information of what has taken place.

In fact, even the President's own ambassador to Peru cautioned that the United States should not drop its surveillance information being provided to Peru because a successful program of the information sharing was reducing the production of illegal narcotics and transiting of illegal narcotics in that country. So we have even the representative of the President speaking out against the administration's change in policy, a second disastrous change after the 1994 fiasco.

Then we have documentation here that, in fact, the DOD assets as far as flight times have dramatically decreased; that, in fact, flying hours dedicated to tracking suspect shipments in transit to the United States declined from 46,264 to 14,770, or a 68 percent decline in flight time.

So, basically, when they closed down the war on drugs, they did a very effective job not only with flight surveillance but also with the maritime shipments. This report also indicates a 62 percent decrease in maritime tracking of illegal narcotics shipments. Again, documentation of a policy that has failed and steps, including the decertification of Colombia without a national interest waiver, which would have allowed resources to get to Colombia to fight illegal narcotics.

So, basically, for the last number of years, they have allowed Colombia no assistance. Aid even appropriated and designated by this Congress has been denied to that country. And that is what has brought us to the situation we currently find ourselves in requesting the President coming forward, with a region in disarray, with 35,000 people being killed in Colombia, with complete disruption of that important and strategic region of our hemisphere, the President coming forward at the last minute with a request for a billion dollar-plus aid package. We have passed that in the House. We hope that the Senate will take action on that.

That is a little bit of the history of where we are and how we have gotten ourselves into this situation with Colombia and also with the tide of illegal narcotics coming into the United States. We know the programs we have put in place, where we have been allowed to in Peru and Bolivia, will work if properly resourced, and with very little money, very few funds in comparison to a $17.8 billion drug budget having gone to the source country programs or to alternative crop substitution programs or stopping drugs at their source or before they get to our border.

The other thing that I wanted to address tonight is the attack on some of the zero tolerance policies. We know that zero tolerance policies have worked very well across the landscape where they have been instituted. Probably the most successful example of a zero tolerance drug policy in the United States has been that of New York City and that devised by the current mayor, Rudy Giuliani.

I know that Rudy Giuliani has been attacked recently for some of the problems that they have had with their enforcement of some of the laws in that community. And to watch television and to hear the liberal media, one would think that New York City police are out of control and that, in fact, a zero tolerance policy somehow is a policy of intolerance and a policy that would abuse the rights of individuals.

A story by, and I guess an editorial piece by columnist Judy Mann in the Friday March 24 Washington Post really set me off, and I spoke before about this, but the title of her liberal piece was The War on Drugs Can't Help But Run Amuck. She's a very determined liberal and she has used the case of Patrick Dorismond, who was shot in New York City, as a case in point for a zero tolerance drug policy that has run amuck; a war on drugs that cannot work.

She went on in her article saying that the attempted drug buy that led to Dorismond's death was part of Giuliani's latest scheme to reduce the rising homicide rate in the city.

This liberal reporter would have you believe that murders and homicides are up under Mayor Giuliani. Our subcommittee called Mr. Giuliani in last January, we have updated some of this information.

Before Mayor Giuliani came into office in New York, there were actually over 2,000 murders per year in New York City. In 1998, it was 629, and it rose slightly to about 670 in 1999, last year, which we do not have on the chart. Does this in any way show an increase in murder? In fact, if we had stayed at the same rate, we would be killing some 1,300 to 1,400 per year under this policy.

Now, this liberal columnist would also have you believe, and she says so, civil liberties have been another casualty on the war on drugs. This is the type of liberal nonsense that she spews out.

In fact, we looked at New York City from our subcommittee research, and we found the latest statistics revealed that crime is down 57.6 percent overall for major crimes. Murder is down 58.3 percent. Rape is down 31 percent under the Giuliani plan. Robbery is down some 62.1 percent. Felony assaults are down 35.4 percent. Burglary in New York City is down 61.7 percent. Grand larceny is down some 41.9 percent. Grand larceny auto is down some 68.8 percent.

Now, Ms. Mann and the liberals on the other side of the aisle here would have you believe that the Giuliani policy is a failure. These happen to be the facts. Now, of course, the liberals do not like to deal with facts. The facts only confuse the situation. These are the facts about crime in New York City under a zero tolerance policy.

Now, Ms. Mann and the liberals and the media out there would have you believe that there is some type of intolerance, their loss of civil liberties, or that the New York City Police department or Mayor Giuliani is in some way out of control, and that there are these rampant shootings by police officers and abuse by police officers.

The facts are, and we checked this carefully, our subcommittee did, for example, the number of fatal shootings by police officers in 1999, 11 was the lowest any year since 1973. What is absolutely more amazing is Mayor Giuliani increased the police force by 25 percent. Now, that may sound like just a small figure, or a minor figure, but New York went from 30,000 to 40,000 police, a 25 percent, 10,000 increase in police officers, and the lowest number of fatal shootings by police officers since 1993.

This zero tolerance policy that is so offensive to the liberal population, it has probably saved thousands and thousands of lives, people that would have been murdered. And we cannot even calculate the number of people that would have been raped, robbed, victims of felony assault, burglary, grand larceny or auto larceny.

Now, they go on. They would have you believe that, in fact, this drug policy and zero tolerance policy enforcement would take its toll in some other way. I wonder where Ms. Mann and the liberals were when Mayor Giuliani was not in office back in 1990, under that administration in the city. In 1990, 41 police killings took place with a fewer number of police. Moreover, the number of rounds intentionally fired by police declined 50.6 percent since 1993.

This is tough policy that is so impossible for the liberals to deal with, and the facts relating to what has taken place in New York City and the number of intentional shootings, incidents by police dropped 66.5 percent, while the number of officers actually increased during that period some 37.9 percent.

In the last 5 years alone, there were 159 cases in which police were fired upon and did not return fire, 42 officers were wounded and 6 killed in those incidents. There is probably not a more restrained-on an incident basis or population basis, police or law enforcement agency in the United States of America.

Now, where were the liberals when David Dinkins was in office? There were 62 percent more shootings by police officers per capita in the last year of David Dinkins' administration than last year under Mayor Giuliani. Specifically in 1993, there were 212 incidents involving police officers in intentional shootings; in 1994, there were 167; in 1998, under Mayor Giuliani, there were 111.

It is terrible when the liberals have to deal with fact. Heaven forbid Ms. Mann should ever research fact. Heaven forbid she should ever look at the actual statistics relating to New York City and what Mayor Giuliani has done, but she can slam a zero tolerance enforcement policy, a zero tolerance on drug policy. She can slam and try to twist facts that murders have somehow increased.

These listed are the seven major felony categories from 1993 to 1998 from 429,000 down to 212,000. I am not great at math, but I think that is about half, 50 percent reduction. Ms. Mann and the liberals would want you to be confused and make you think that zero tolerance and tough law enforcement is done in some harmful way.

These, in fact, are the facts. These, in fact, are the statistics. I always liked to contrast them, and I will close tonight, contrast with the liberal policies, the hero of the liberal side, try those drugs, folks, they are fine for you. Go ahead, let your kids use them. God forbid we should have any enforcement.

Baltimore, Maryland is the example. Thank heavens Mayor Schmoke is gone. Thank heavens we have a new mayor, Mayor O'Malley. We conducted a subcommittee hearing there a little over a week ago, the best thing that came from that hearing, I believe the mayor fired the police chief, and we have hired in Baltimore one of the prime developers of the New York City's zero enforcement policy, but this is the record of Baltimore, where Mayor Schmoke said we are not going to enforce.

I was stunned at the hearing to find out that HIDTM, high intensity drug traffic money, made available by the Federal Government for tough enforcement in Baltimore, the police chief, who again was removed, told me that they did not use those funds to go after major open drug markets. These are the results, the deaths in 1998, 212; 1999, 300.

In the last 8, 10 years under this policy, probably 3,000 young people in Baltimore were slaughtered. These are the constant kinds of numbers that we have seen in Baltimore.

What was more stunning with this liberal policy that the other side embraces that Ms. Mann thinks is the way to go in Baltimore is now, from the chart that we have here that was provided by DEA, Baltimore has gone from some 39,000 drug addicts to somewhere between 60,000 and 80,000 drug addicts in just the City of Baltimore. It is absolutely incredible, the damage that has been done to Baltimore through this liberal policy. In fact, one of the City Council Members, Councilwoman Ricki Spector, said it is more like 1 in 8 is now a drug addict in Baltimore.

The former Mayor Schmoke's non-enforcement liberal policy provided these things for Baltimore. In 1996, Baltimore led the Nation in drug-related emergency admissions, 785 per 100,000 population. Of 20 cities analyzed by NITA, or the National Institute of Drug Abuse, Baltimore ranked second in heroin emergency admissions. Baltimore accounted for 63 percent of all of Maryland's drug overdoses.

This is the policy that the other side is advocating, along with the liberal commentators. This is just a health problem. The tough enforcement will harm people, their civil rights will be violated, there will be shootings, that there will be some type of harmful enforcement.

This is the harm, an addicted city population, dead in incredible numbers. Remember the numbers in New York City, which is 20 to 30 times the population of Baltimore, is just about double this figure, and that is a reduction of some 60 percent since Mayor Giuliani took office.

So these are the facts, these are the options. Tomorrow our subcommittee will focus on the emerging drug threat from Haiti, part of the Clinton Administration's failed foreign policy no one likes to focus on, but a policy in which we spent nearly $4 billion in taxpayer money in nation building, primarily to support a law enforcement and judiciary which is now in charge of the biggest drug trafficking operation in the Caribbean and probably the source of more transit of illegal hard narcotics into the United States from across Haiti through the Dominican Republic up through Puerto Rico and the Caribbean into Florida and other parts of the United States, and then into our streets and schools, and their gift to our children, after spending so much of the money of American taxpayers in that nation in an effort to rebuild it.

Tomorrow we will hear that failed story, and we will find out where the Clinton Administration intends to go from here, and, hopefully, we can develop a better policy, learn by the mistakes, learn by the failures of this administration, and not repeat them. To do otherwise would be an injustice to the American people and to the next generation.

Mr. Speaker, I know my time is about to expire and I will not return until after the break for one of these, when we will provide another update, but I do appreciate your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and the staff, who stayed to this late hour. But this is an important message. It needs to be repeated over and over again, until we have action by the Congress, until we have interest by the American people, and that we turn this deadly situation and plague on our population around.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

THE SENIORS HEALTH CHOICE PRESERVATION ACT

HON. MARK FOLEY

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing the Seniors Health Choice Preservation Act. This bill will protect Medicare+Choice HMOs from additional payments cuts. Furthermore, the bill will assist Medicare HMO's that cover preservation drugs so that they can continue to provide this important benefit.

I believe we have a commitment to America's seniors to provide dependable health care through the Medicare program.

I strongly supported giving seniors more options and flexibility when I voted for Medicare+Choice in the Balanced Budget Act.

Empowering consumers to choose their care is the best way to improve quality and affordability in the health care system.

Unfortunately, more than 700,000 Medicare beneficiaries in Medicare+Choice HMOs nationwide have had their coverage either disrupted or discontinued over the past two years.

In some congressional districts—like mine—many seniors were forced to return to fee-for-service Medicare because there were no other options in this area. Even in areas that still have Medicare HMOs, seniors have been hit with increased out-of-pocket costs and reduced benefits, Seniors in my district love their HMOs. They get things like prescription drug coverage, dental care, and eye exams and glasses. At a time when HMOs are getting a bad rap in a lot of places, we want to keep our HMOs in Florida.

Unfortunately, the policies of the Health Care Financing Administration are making this very hard to do. They have taken some well-intentioned provisions in the Balanced Budget Act and twisted them in order to cut payments to the HMOs who need it most, forcing them to leave certain areas—like rural areas—where they can't cover their expenses.

Even though we provided these HMOs with some relief last year, we need to build on this work to guarantee that current and future generations of Medicare beneficiaries have a strong health care system that offers them choices in how they receive care.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the Seniors Health Choice Preservation Act in order to preserve their constituents health care choices and to prevent future crisis for seniors on Medicare.

COMMENDING JAMES SPELLMAN, SR. OF PAWCATUCK, CONNECTICUT

HON. SAM GEJDENSON

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, today I commend Mr. James Spellman, Sr. of Pawcatuck, Connecticut for more than five decades of public service on behalf of his Town, State and Country. On April 28, Mr. Spellman will mark his 80th birthday.

Mr. Spellman has dedicated the better part of his adult life in roles assisting the residents of his community and beyond. He served as a member of the Board of Education between 1948 and 1953. From 1955 and 1961, he was Judge on the Stonington Town Court. In 1961, Mr. Spellman was elected to his initial term as First Selectman. He would be reelected to this position successively for another 11-terms until he stepped down in 1985. His long tenure is a testament to the excellence of his service which was marked by innovation, foresight and a balanced stewardship of Town affairs.

During those years, the Town of Stonington went through a period of considerable growth, adding three new schools, a police station and a significant amount of public infrastructure necessary to serve a growing population and to respond to economic development fueled by the tourism industry. Throughout his career as Chief Elected Official and Chief Administrative Officer, Mr. Spellman was known for his concern for all segments of the community, his willingness to respond to constituent needs at all times of the day and night, and his sincerity in pursuing the duties of the office.

Jim Spellman has also served his nation in a number of capacities. He was in the Navy in the Pacific during World War II. He was a member of the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission for nearly 15 years. In this assignment, he worked to ensure that the region's fishery resources would be healthy for existing and future generations of fishermen from Stonington and throughout southeastern Connecticut.

Mr. Speaker, James Spellman, Sr. has a record of service to his community that few will ever equal. Although he no longer holds formal positions on boards or commissions, he continues to remain active in the community offering his bountiful experience and energy to help Stonington in the Twenty First Century. I joint citizens in Stonington in wishing him all the best in the years ahead.

HONORING STEVEN T. KOIKE

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, today I honor Steven T. Koike for being named the recipient of the second annual Award for Outstanding Achievement, by the Friends of Agricultural Extension.

The Friends of Agricultural Extension is a volunteer group that supports the Agricultural Extension program in the San Joaquin Valley. Each year Friends of Agricultural Extension publicly recognizes the author of an outstanding program in adaptive research and extension, which addresses a problem or opportunity facing production agriculture. This year, Koike's program, on the subject "Research and Education about Spinach Diseases: A Model for Responding to the Needs of Growers of Minor Crops in California", has been selected.

Steven T. Koike serves as the Plant Pathology Farm Advisor for Monterey County as well as the counties of Santa Cruz and San Benito. Koike's research specializes in regional diagnosis of diseases of vegetables and floral plants.

Koike, in assuming the position he now holds, brought to the region the vision of a country-based pathology laboratory to provide rapid diagnostic and research services to the farming community.

Koike envisioned and brought into being (through grants, industry support, and county resources) a pathology laboratory fully equipped to deal with most fungal, bacterial, and nematode pests.

Steven T. Koike, with the laboratory in place, is able to provide California farmers timely and accurate diagnostic methods, serving growers and farm advisors from no less than 15 California counties.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to honor Mr. Steven T. Koike for his extraordinary research in the field of plant pathology, and to congratulate him on being named the recipient of the second annual Award for Outstanding Achievement. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing Mr. Koike many more years of continued success.

AMERICAN HOMEOWNERSHIP AND ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT OF 2000

SPEECH OF

HON. BILL PASCRELL, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, April 6, 2000

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 1776) to expand homeownership in the United States:

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment by my estimable colleague from California, Congresswoman WATERS.

As a former Mayor of a large city, I know a thing or two about depending on Community Development Block Grants (CDBG) and the HOME Investment Partnership Program (HOME) to pay for services and housing for poor communities. And let me tell you—there is never enough money in the pot to meet the needs of those communities.

I think the proposals made here today are great. I think creating incentives for teachers and police officers to move into distressed communities is a great idea. Mixed income communities provide lower income neighborhoods with much-needed role models and opportunities.

But let us be very clear about the funding for these changes. The money for these proposals we are discussing here today will have to come from the same pot of money that is currently set aside for the very neediest of Americans.

And there isn't enough of it to go around.

Today the floor is filled with talk about the need to reinvest in our communities. What I want to know is—when we are all back here in the fall debating the budget, will we be as committed to these programs—to these communities—as we are today?

Will we be willing to put our money where our mouth is today?

I support this underlying legislation. We should work together to revitalize those areas that need our attention.

If we are going to take these programs beyond their intended mission, we should be prepared to increase the funding necessary to add each of the groups we want to make eligible.

We cannot stretch dollars too thin at the expense of the people we say we are trying to lift up. I look forward to working with the sponsors of this legislation to ensure that the funding is in place to meet our shared goals.

HONORING THE DISTINGUISHED CAREER OF RAY MINTON

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Ray Minton on his retirement as the Cannon County Election Commission's Administrator of Elections. He has served as Cannon County's chief election officer for 32 years.

A lot has changed since 1968, the year Ray started working for the Cannon County Election Commission. Ballots have gone from paper to computer, and records from handwritten to typed to computer. District lines have been redrawn. Candidates have won or lost by the will of the voting public.

No doubt the biggest change in Ray's life and the event that led him to the election commission was the discovery of a cancerous spinal tumor. After losing the use of his legs, he began to work part time at the election commission as part of his recovery. Ray has said that the work kept him busy and made him feel needed. And I can assure you that Ray has been, and still is, needed by his community and friends like myself.

We will sorely miss him, but I'm sure Ray will continue to be a positive role model, admired for his attitude and service to his community.

Ray, I wish you the best of luck in any new endeavors you decide to take on and for you to have a long and happy retirement spent with your family and friends.

HONORING DOCTOR ROCCO ORLANDO FOR OUTSTANDING SERVICE TO THE COMMUNITY

HON. ROSA L. DeLAURO

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today and join the Italian American Historical Society of Greater New Haven as they pay tribute to one of our community's outstanding citizens, my cousin, Dr. Rocco Orlando. This evening family, friends, and colleagues will gather as Rocco is honored with this year's Distinguished Service Award.

I often speak of our Nation's need for talented, creative, enthusiastic teachers who are ready to help our children learn and grow. Rocco is just that kind of educator. Throughout his career he has touched the lives of children from elementary school to college. His career culminated as he was appointed as a professor in the Sixth Year Graduate Program in Educational Leadership at Southern Connecticut State University—charged with preparing students for administrative positions in public school systems themselves.

Public education is the cornerstone of the American dream, leveling the playing field and providing every child with the opportunity to make the most of his or her talents. It is talented professionals like Rocco who truly shape the leaders of tomorrow. His unique dedication to education extends outside the classroom into the community itself. Rocco has long been affiliated with the New Haven Scholarship fund, currently serving as vice president, enabling hundreds of needy students to continue their education.

Shortly after the Connecticut General Assembly passed a collective bargaining law in 1966, Rocco began to study the effectiveness of the provided mediation process. His doctoral dissertation studied the collective bargaining negotiations between teacher organizations and Boards of Education in Connecticut. His extensive research led to his appointments, which he continues to hold, as an Arbitrator with the Connecticut State Board of Arbitration and Mediation, the Connecticut Board of Education and the Office of Policy and Management of the State of Connecticut. Rocco has worked diligently to ensure that the concerns and goals of employees and management are heard in a fair and just forum—helping to create an environment which meets the best interests of all Connecticut residents.

Today, as Rocco is honored with this very special award, I would like to express my deepest thanks and appreciation for his tireless efforts on behalf of our young people. He has made a real difference in the lives of many, leaving an indelible mark on our children and community. I am honored to join with his wife, Rae; children, Lisa and her husband Michael, Rocco and his wife, Joanne; grandchildren, Laura, Alexander, and Rocco; family; friends; colleagues; and the Italian American Historical Society to congratulate Rocco as the recipient of this year's Distinguished Service Award. His remarkable contributions are a reflection of the very spirit of this award.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FEDERAL WORKFORCE DIGITAL ACCESS ACT

HON. ELIJAH E. CUMMINGS

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, with the Government's increasing dependence on information technology to accomplish agency goals, and at the fast pace with which technology is changing, the Government is finding it difficult to hire, train, and retain a technology literate workforce. The ability to use computers and the Internet has become indispensable to employees' education, career, social, and cultural advancement. Technology literacy has become not only a basic job requirement, but also a basic life skill.

Economists and policymakers have highlighted an acceleration in the growth of productivity, which measures worker output per hour, as a key reason the economy has performed so well in recent years. Economists have attributed the rise in productivity to better management, and to a wave of business investment that has allowed firms to take advantage of major technological advances, particularly in computing and information processing. The Government is no exception.

Last month, David Walker, Comptroller General for the General Accounting Office (GAO), testified before the Senate Government Affairs Committee on "Managing Human Capital in the 21st Century." He stated, and I quote:

"One of the principal strategies that agencies have used to deliver services with fewer staff has been an increased reliance on information technology. However, the agencies' ability to make the most of this strategy could be jeopardized by the competitive disadvantage they report facing in hiring and retraining skilled information technology staff."

He went on to say that if the government does not improve its human resource systems, in this regard, it will earn GAO's high risk designation in 2001. The Federal Times, a federal employees newspaper, recently reported that federal agencies are facing skills gaps, particularly in the area of technology, and are facing the potential loss of 30 percent of their employees within five years.

Which the advent of the Information Age, the need for technologically skilled people is escalating. Meanwhile, the number of skilled American high technology workers has declined. This comes at a time when efforts are underway to create an e-Government. E-Government is the widespread application of information and communications technology to deliver government services—fostering digital government.

Filing your income taxes on-line is just the beginning. In e-Government, citizens can log onto one Internet site, easily find the government services they are looking for, and use that site to conduct online transactions; businesses can fill out one Internet form for all their local, state and federal environmental regulatory compliance requirements and government officials can make all purchases and payments electronically, saving millions of dollars. To support e-Government, you must have an e-workforce.

In response to an increasingly competitive job market, federal agencies will need tools and flexibilities to attract, hire, and retain technologically savvy talent. The work that federal agencies do requires a workforce that is sophisticated in new technologies, flexible, and open to continuous learning. The present federal workforce is aging. The baby boomers, with their valuable skills and experience, are drawing nearer to retirement and will be replaced by new employees who have different employment options and different career expectations from the generation that preceded them.

These new employees place a great premium on opportunities to learn, a work life personal life balance, independence and creativity, and flexible work arrangements. The relative security offered by federal jobs is no longer an important factor for many Generation X'ers who expect to change jobs frequently to learn new skills, earn a higher salary, and make a variety of contributions.

Continuing education and training is critical in today's marketplace, where job skills are changing rapidly and global competition demands world-class and ever-improving productivity. The federal Government must equip its employees with the skills and knowledge required of a high performance workforce. The Federal Workforce Digital Access Act allows the Government to take steps to do just that.

The Federal Workforce Digital Access Act (FWDA) provides that permanent employees in the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of the federal Government, who complete one year of employment, will be eligible to receive a computer, and Internet service at home at no charge. The benefit provides that federal agencies make use of, primarily, Internet Based Training (IBT) and onsite training to enhance the technological skills of their employees. The benefit provided for under the FWDA is called the ''digital access benefit.'' The employee has the option of declining the digital access benefit package or choosing Internet service only.

In order to promote greater technological proficiency within the Government's workforce, the General Services Administration (GSA) and the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) will work together to establish and operate the digital access benefit program. GSA will be responsible for negotiating the digital access benefit contract. OPM will be responsible for general oversight of the program. To evaluate the program's operation, agencies will submit a report to the Office of Management and Budget on cost efficiencies, organizational performance, increased productivity, and training opportunities realized from the implementation of the Act. The report, which must be submitted to Congress in the fourth year of the program's operation, will help Congress assess whether the program should be reauthorized.

Agencies will be appropriated the funds to execute the Act and will deposit those funds in the Employees' Digital Access Fund. The Fund is available for all payments for goods and services under the Act, including GSA's and OPM's administrative costs.

FWDA is an imperative for those Federal employees across the country who work in mail rooms or who serve in the field as law enforcement officers, who have limited contact with a computer. It is also an imperative for those employees who daily underutilize computers by using them for simple word processing and e-mail functions. Providing federal employees with computers at home will expose employees to computer technology on a daily basis and IBT will broaden their knowledge and application of new technologies.

Internet or web-based delivery of educational content, supplemented by numerous online tools, is an inexpensive, flexible and convenient way to empower Federal employees to become technologically proficient. IBT provides a hands-on approach to technology education. It permits employees to access content from inside and outside brick and mortar training facilities, to learn at their own pace, view video and other visual explanation of technology, and allows them to test themselves online to assess comprehension and retention. IBT takes the fear and intimidation out of learning new and emerging technologies. The result is a technologically savvy and creative employee that can not only support e-Government, but can help to create and develop it.

The FWDA gives the Federal government and its future and current workforce, the tools it needs to better serve the citizenry and be a leader in a knowledge-based economy.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE KEITH J. DAVIS

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, today I pay tribute to Keith J. Davis, a longtime friend, who passed away on January 23, 2000. He was 77. Mr. Davis was a Veteran as well as an upstanding member of the community.

Mr. Davis was born on August 31, 1923 in Salt Lake City, Utah. He graduated from the University of Utah with a degree in engineering. Mr. Davis joined the United States Army in 1942 and retired in 1978 with the rank of Colonel.

Throughout his life Mr. Davis held many positions in his community. He was a member of the Mariposa Veterans of Foreign Wars Post #6042. He was also a member of the Elks Lodge, a member of the Operating Engineers Union, and a past president of the Mariposa County Republicans Central Committee. He was a private pilot and an avid hunter, as well.

Mr. Davis is survived by his daughters, Kathleen Saz of Citrus Heights and Kristi Smith of Sacramento; son James Subisaretta of Texas; sisters Miriam Hurley of Davis and Dorothy Hendrickson of Oregon; eight grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Mr. Speaker, I pay tribute to Keith J. Davis for his dedication to his community and his service to this country. His family members, and those who knew him, will remember Mr. Davis for his integrity, honesty, and hard work. I urge my colleagues to join me in extending my condolences to the Davis family.

TRIBUTE TO GROVER ROBINSON III AND SANDRA LOWREY ROBINSON

HON. JOE SCARBOROUGH

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Escambia and Santa Rosa Counties and the State of Florida have been blessed with two people who have dedicated their careers to the pursuit of excellence in all aspects of life. These fine people have distinguished themselves as community leaders and the models of honesty and integrity in public service. The couple that I speak about today is Grover Robinson III and Sandra Lowrey Robinson.

Most of the residents of Northwest Florida remember and admire Grover for his years of public service, during which he served as the District 3 Representative in the Florida House. However, what I admire most about Grover is that he always went above and beyond the call of duty to help others. At a time when our nation calls out for principled leadership from public officials, it is fitting that today we honor a true gentleman who always went the extra mile to represent the under-represented and to promote excellence within the community, the State of Florida, and the nation. During his distinguished career. Grover never forgot how important the little guy is to the American way of life. It is little wonder that Grover Robinson III is known as one of the most popular elected officials in Escambia County history.

When he ended his political career in 1986, he joined his wife, Sandra, in putting new life into community and church life, serving the people of Northwest Florida with compassion and loving care.

Grover was active in the Pensacola Jaycees, the March of Dimes, the Pensacola Chamber of Commerce, the United Way, and most especially Christ Episcopal Church.

His wife, Sandra Lowrey Robinson, was made from the same cloth as Grover. She was active in the Northwest Florida community and a member of the Pensacola Junior College Foundation Board, and Baptist Hospital Foundation Board, the Junior League of Pensacola, and Episcopal Church.

Mr. Speaker, the lives of these two people were cut tragically short earlier this year. But as we celebrate the accomplishments and the lives of Grover and Sandra, we can take pride in knowing they have influenced so many people in a positive way. As a fellow elected official and as a friend, I appreciate the importance of dedication and devotion to public office and the community. Their legacy will be a constant reminder that together, two people can make an extraordinary difference in the lives of many.

BACK TO HEALTH WEEK

HON. SUE W. KELLY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, today is the first day of "Back to Health Week," a national campaign created to increase awareness of back pain as well as possible causes and prevention. Sponsored by the North American Spine Society, this week is designed to educate Americans about their spine and how they can prevent common back pain.

The facts of back pain speak for themselves. Did you know that at some point in their lives, more than 80% of American adults experience back pain? Or, that 1 out of 14 adults will visit a physician this year due to back or neck pain and that back pain is the second most common reason people visit a physician? These statistics demonstrate how important it is to raise awareness about this health problem that affects so many Americans.

One Famous American who suffers from back pain is two-time Cy Young Award winner and Major League Baseball pitcher Randy Johnson. After Johnson won the Cy Young in 1995, he was sidelined because of back problems for most of the 1996 season. Johnson captured his second Cy Young last year after surgery to correct a herniated disk and months of physical therapy.

Another highlight of "Back to Health Week" is an event to distribute information about back pain. "Back to Health Day" will be held Thursday April 13th in the Capitol. "Back to Health Day" will provide an array of educational materials, including guidelines to a healthy back, exercises to strengthen your back, and how to prevent back pain. In addition, representatives from the North American Spine Society will be on hand to discuss commonly asked questions about back pain, causes, and prevention. I encourage my colleagues to join us for "Back to Health Day" as we learn the most effective ways to prevent and alleviate back pain.

I commend the North American Spine Society for organizing "Back to Health Week" and for their commitment to ensuring Americans learn to keep their backs healthy.

"THE QUILTS OF TEARS"—HONORING VIETNAM VETERANS AND THEIR LOVED ONES WHO HAVE SUFFERED FROM AGENT ORANGE

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, the loss and suffering of Vietnam veterans and their loved ones due to the use of Agent Orange is one of the sad legacies of the Vietnam War that continues to haunt our nation. Because of our nation's use of herbicides during the war, tens of thousands of Vietnam veterans have died or live daily with the scars of disease. As any veteran will tell you, the scars of war are not just physical, but also emotional. Too many veterans and their loved ones live each day with the continuing pain of dealing with the loss and the illnesses caused by Agent Orange.

Next week, the "quilts of tears" will arrive in Washington, DC. This is an important event because the quilts tell many of the stories that need to be told about the devastation this tragedy has exacted on too many lives.

Recently, I received a letter from Ms. Jennie R. LeFevre, an Agent Orange widow, who eloquently describes her own experiences as well as the legacy left of broken soldiers and broken families. I believe it captures the essence of the Agent Orange tragedy as well as the costs that our nation continues to pay for a war that ended almost twenty-five years ago.

The quilts will arrive on the Mall on April 17 and will be available for viewing near the Vietnam Memorial. They will also be on display on Memorial Day on the banks of the Reflecting Pool. I urge my colleagues to visit this moving and unforgettable memorial. The letter from Ms. LeFevre follows:

THE QUILTS OF TEARS

Agent Orange has been interwoven into the fabric of the lives of many Vietnam Veterans and their families. To tell their story, the "Quilts of Tears" project was created. It is to show the world the suffering and pain that the Agent Orange Victims and their families have endured. Each block in the "Quilts of Tears" reflect their struggles with life and death issues of Agent Orange. Agent Orange has left invisible scars on the hearts and minds of these victims and their families.

I have recently heard these words about Vietnam Veterans. The words are, "All gave some, but some gave all". Such is the case of the thousands of who have already lost their lives to the great tragedy Agent Orange, for they were killed in Vietnam and didn't know it. They were killed by the silent and invisible bullet, Agent Orange. Their names do not appear on the black granite Wall in Washington, DC, the "Quilts of Tears" are their Wall.

The "Quilts of Tears" was founded by Jennie R. LeFevre of Shady Side, MD, Founder and President of the Agent Orange Victims and Widows Support Network. The quilts are a Tribute, Memorial and Honor to the Vietnam Agent Orange Victims, both living and dead. Each block represents a victim, and they show the victim's unit in Nam, years served in Nam and the nature of the victim's health problems relating to Agent Orange. At present, there are ten quilts, each measuring 80 by 100 inches, each quilt contains 20 blocks. At displays, the quilts are hung on walls or spread on the ground with walking space between each one to allow viewing from any angle. "The Quilt of Tears" project is mentioned throughout the Internet on many of the Vietnam Veterans websites and e-mail forums and indeed the "Quilts of Tears" has a website of its own as well.

Mothers, sisters, and other family members have adorned the blocks with their loved one's picture, unit patches, military emblems, medals, awards, etc., etc. The quilts were displayed for the first time on the Mall in Washington, DC several years ago. They have since traveled to a quilt show in NJ, several Vietnam Veteran's Reunions in St. Louis, MO, and were also displayed at the Vietnam Veteran Reunion in Kokomo, Ind. They were on display a year ago Veterans Day in the Rotunda of the Utah State Capitol. The quilts are called the "Quilts of Tears" because many tears have been shed for these victims. "The Quilts of Tears" already have letters of acknowledgment and endorsement from both the Agent Orange Coordinating Council and Vietnam Veterans of America, Inc., headquarters in Washington, DC.

I am an Agent Orange widow myself, my late husband, a veteran of both the Korean and Vietnam War, died with cancer in ten parts of his body. Unfortunately, the VA states the cancer he had was not related to his exposure to Agent Orange so there I am not compensated. I believe Agent Orange did cause his death. I am a member of the Agent Orange Coordinating Council, chaired by the late Admiral Zumwalt and have been on the Council for seven years. I made a block for Admiral's son with the words inscribed "A Great Warrior Son" which Admiral Zumwalt requested to be put on his son's block. The block is now a part of the Quilts of Tears.

"The Quilts of Tears" are the Wall for the Agent Orange Victims. Their stories need to be mentioned for all of the suffering and pain they have endured in love and honor for their country, the quilts do just that. One has only to look at the quilts to see for themselves what has happened to these victims. After the display in Kokomo, I received a letter from a veteran who stated the quilts were the most moving piece of art he had seen since the Wall in Washington, DC. A veteran with Agent Orange problems saw the display in Washington, he said he had no one to make a block for him, I told him that I would do it for him. Later he sent me his Purple Heart to put on the block. One of his prized possessions, he insists that it be placed on his block.

These quilts are very dear to the hearts of the Vietnam Veterans, the Agent Orange Victims, and their families. Over Memorial Day weekend last year, a big burly veteran looked at the quilts beside the Reflecting pool, walked a short distance away, fell to his knees and burst into tears. When I went to him and hugged him, he asked "Am I next?". The next display of the quilts will be on Monday April 17, 10:00 a.m. at the "In Memory" ceremony near the Wall, weather permitting, and they will be on the banks of the Reflecting Pool over memorial Day weekend. I invite you and the general public to come and view them.

Recently, I was at an Agent Orange meeting and another Agent Orange widow took a pin off her blouse and put it on my sweater. The pin was a black heart edged in gold, a jagged streak was across the heart to represent a broken heart and in the center of the heart was an orange teardrop. Yes, our hearts are broken for the Agent Orange Victims.

The late Admiral Elmo Zumwalt Jr. was a real friend and advocate for the Agent Orange Victims and their families. May his memory and devotion to the Agent Orange issue live on in our hearts forever. Those of us who are a part of the Agent Orange struggle say ''We will never allow the Agent Orange Victims to be Forgotten''.

Most Sincerely,

JENNIE R. LEFEVRE,
Agent Orange Widow.

CONGRATULATIONS TO DR. IRWIN JACOBS

HON. RANDY ''DUKE'' CUNNINGHAM

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate my friend and constituent, Dr. Irwin Jacobs. America is well aware that Dr. Jacobs is the founder and CEO of Qualcomm, home of the CDMA wireless telecommunications standard. In addition to his work with Qualcomm, however, Dr. Jacobs is very active in San Diego's technology community.

Dr. Jacobs was named scientist of the year by the San Diego Chapter of Achievement Reward for College Scientists. Ms. Toni Nickell, the president of the San Diego chapter, said that Dr. Jacobs was given this award ''because of his great contributions to technology''. Specifically, Dr. Jacobs, as the CEO of Qualcomm, has been conducting research that would expand the use of cellular phones and make them the personal computers of tomorrow.

Irwin Jacobs deserves our congratulations for a job well done. Thanks in no small part to him, San Diego County is the global headquarters for CDMA wireless telecommunications technology.

I commend my colleagues to read this attached article from the San Diego Union Tribune of April 6, 2000 describing this most recent honor for Dr. Jacobs.

[From the San Diego Union-Tribune, Apr. 6, 2000]

QUALCOMM CHIEF NAMED SCIENTIST OF THE YEAR BY WOMEN'S GROUP

(By David E. Graham)

Technology is emerging now that will blur the distinctions between a cellular phone and a desktop computer, Irwin Jacobs, the CEO of Qualcomm, said last night at an awards banquet in his honor.

The leader of the San Diego wireless telecommunications company was named scientist of the year by the San Diego chapter of Achievement Reward for College Scientists. The women's group raises money for scholarships for university students studying science.

While celebrating the need for talented students to fuel innovation, Jacobs said his company is interested in expanding the capabilities of digital cellular phones. ''That device is able to do many, many things for us,'' Jacobs said.

The company's code-division-multiple-access technology is a standard technology for transferring information to the phones. Soon, however, cellular phones will be able to tell users that location in a city or within a building, using a global-positioning technology. Other changes likely will include the ability to connect to the Internet and download and store great amounts of information—and even download and play back music.

Holding a cellular phone, he told the audience: ''I believe for many people it will be their computer.''

When someone needed a larger keyboard for writing and a screen for large display of information, the phone could be dropped into a device at a hotel or airport, for example, where work could be done.

The information could be used from within the phone set or against plugged into another larger display at another site, he said.

Many consider Jacobs a voice not to be ignored. Buoyed by the CDMA technology used in portable phones and by other business moves, Qualcomm has been a darling of Wall Street, its stock having soared last year.

Jacobs said he also is interested in the distribution of cinematic film to theaters digitally rather than on traditional film.

Jacobs was chosen for the Achievement Reward for College Scientists award ''because of his great contributions to technology,''said Toni Nickell, president of the group's San Diego chapter.

The chapter provided $425,000 in scholarships last fall to 49 graduate and undergraduate students at UCSD, SDSU and The Scripps Research Institute.

Since the chapter was organized in 1985, it has given more than $2.4 million in scholarships to 375 students.

THE PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY CAN AFFORD A MEDICARE DRUG BENEFIT AND MORE RESEARCH

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, the pharmaceutical industry alleges that government intervention will lead to cost containment and price controls which will stifle research and development of new drugs. In fact, they are not spending enough on R&D.

According to today's Wall Street Journal survey on executive compensation, the average CEO of a pharmaceutical company received $14.9 million in salary, bonus, and stock options in 1999.

Rather than maximizing the R&D of new therapies and cures for diseases, they are spending it on pay for their executives. Today's Wall Street Journal article shows what the pharmaceutical industry's real priorities are.

The top five highest compensated CEOs of pharmaceutical companies surveyed were: (1) Charles A. Heimbold, Jr., $44 million, Bristol-Myers Squibb; (2) Richard Jay Kogan, $36.7 million, Schering-Plough; (3) Ralph S. Larsen, $34.9 million, Johnson & Johnson; (4) Sidney Taurel, $33.3 million, Eli Lilly; and (5) Fred Hassan, $15 million, Pharmacia & Upjohn.

The income of these 5 men is roughly half the cost of discovering a blockbuster drug that could cure millions of people.

Mr. Speaker, we shouldn't let this industry tell us they can't afford to participate in a Medicare drug benefit and continue research.

HONORING GILBERT SERVIN

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, today I honor Gilbert Servin, the outgoing President of the Central California Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. The Central California Hispanic Chamber of Commerce (C.C.H.C.C.) is the largest Hispanic business organization in the Central Valley.

Servin, a founding Board member of the C.C.H.C.C., was the California Hispanic Chamber of Commerce President for one year. Along with his achievements as President of the Central California Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Servin was also elected to serve for two years as treasurer for the State Hispanic Chamber.

Gilbert Servin graduated from California State Polytechnic University in Pomona in March 1976. For the next fifteen years he was employed by the Clinicas de Salud Del Pueblo, In., in Brawley, California, as a Business Manager and Assistant Executive Director. In 1980 Gilbert Servin accepted the opportunity of serving as Business Manager for United Health Centers of San Joaquin Valley, Inc., a considerably larger health center.

Gilbert Servin's experience and expertise, obtained while employed by the United Health Centers and the Clinicas de Salud, propelled him to become an independent consultant in healthcare financing and management in March of 1983. In addition, Gilbert Servin, CEO for CAGSI International (previously Gilbert Servin Associates), and his highly experienced staff provide professional services in the preparation of financial feasibility studies. Currently, Gilbert Servin has focused his efforts in expanding its services to assist local governments and community groups in financing projects. These projects will promote economic development, with an emphasis on rural areas.

Mr. Speaker, I want to honor Gilbert Servin as the outgoing President of the Central California Hispanic Chamber of Commerce. I urge my colleagues to join me in wishing Gilbert Servin many more years of continued success.

HELP FOR THE NATION'S PREMIER TEACHING HOSPITALS

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join today with Senator PATRICK MOYNIHAN,and a number of my House and Senate colleagues in introducing legislation to stop further Medicare cuts in the indirect medical education (IME) program.

IME payments are extra payments made to teaching hospitals for the fact that they are training the next generation of doctors, and that the cost of training a young doctor—like any apprenticeship or new person on the job—is more expensive than just dealing with experienced, older workers. The young person requires mentoring, orders more tests, and makes mistakes unless closely supervised. It is natural that a group of young residents in a hospital will reduce a hospital's efficiency and increase its costs. Medicare should help pay for these extra ''indirect'' costs, if we want—as we surely do—future generations of competent, highly skilled doctors.

The Balanced Budget Act took the position that the extra adjustment we pay a hospital per resident should be reduced from 7.7% in FY 1997 to 5.5% in FY 2001. This provision was estimated to save about $6 billion over 5 years and $16 billion over ten—in addition to about another $50 billion in hospital cuts in other portions of the BBA. In the Balanced Budget Refinement Act which was enacted last November, we recognized that these cuts were too much, and froze the fiscal year 2000 rate at 6.5%, reduced it to 6.25% in 2001 and then dropped it to 5.5% thereafter.

Mr. Speaker, last fall's delay and spread out of the cuts is helpful—but these cuts are still too much. The nation's teaching hospitals, which do so much to serve the uninsured and poor, and which are the cradle of new clinical research and technical innovation, are hemorrhaging red ink.

Our bill stops further scheduled cuts in the IME, freezing the adjustment factor at 6.5% rather than letting it fall to 5.5%, and saving teaching hospitals about billions of dollars that would otherwise be taken from them.

I hope this legislation will receive consideration this year, before the cuts resume, and these premier medical institutions are faced with cuts, layoffs, and reduced service that will literally cost us lives in the years to come.

HONORING THE CENTENNIAL OF THE U.S. SUBMARINE FORCE

HON. SAM GEJDENSON
OF CONNECTICUT
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. GEJDENSON. Mr. Speaker, it is with tremendous pride that I rise today to congratulate the U.S. Navy Submarine Force on the occasion of its 100th anniversary of service to America.

We have a rich maritime heritage in southeastern Connecticut and a long legacy of outstanding craftsmen as well as patriots. When the Navy purchased the Holland from a relatively unknown shipyard on April 11, 1900, it set in motion a legacy unequaled in our nation's history. Commanded by Lt. Harry H. Caldwell, the Holland traveled through yet uncharted depths, setting the standard for all who followed. For shipbuilders and sailors, having set the technological clock in motion, the Submarine Force has never looked back. The Submarine Force has met challenge after challenge head on—first identifying them, then dissecting them, and finally overcoming them.

In April 1775, the first Minute Men confronted the British regulars to begin the American Revolution. One hundred and 25 years later, the early patriots—Washington, Adams, Hancock, Revere, and Hale—were joined by the likes of Nimitz, O'Kane, Dealey, Cromwell, Fluckey, and Gilmore. While Nathan Hale's defiant proclamation ''I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country!'' was immortalized as unselfish patriotism, so was that of Commander Howard Gilmore, who commanded, ''Take her down!'' Helping to turn the tide in the Pacific, United States submarines sank 5½ million tons of Japanese naval and merchant shipping—55 percent of Japanese shipping destroyed—at a loss of 52 submarines and more than 3,500 valiant men. Adm. Chester A. Nimitz, commander of the United States Navy in the Pacific during the Second World War, said: ''It is to the everlasting honor and glory of our submarine personnel that they never failed us in our days of great peril.''

During the cold war, the ''Forty-One for Freedom'' Polaris/Poseidon and succeeding Trident submarines ensured that our nation would never be the target of nuclear aggression. Daring intelligence missions provided a clear picture of the capabilities and the goals of the Soviets and other nations which threatened our national interests. As Secretary of Defense William S. Cohen said, ''the peaceful end to 45 years of confrontation is the modern legacy of the Submarine Force.'' Following in the footsteps of the Minute Men, our modern day submariners are ready at a moment's call and spend every moment in constant vigilance.

But even in peace time, our submariners were not free from the dangers of the sea. Along with the many sacrifices during wartime, there were other tragic losses, such as the S–4, the Thresher and Scorpion.

The insignia of the Submarine Force is a submarine flanked by two dolphins. Dolphins or porpoises are the traditional attendants to Poseidon, Greek God of the Sea and patron deity of sailors. They are symbolic of a calm sea and are called the ''sailor's friend.'' Every individual who sports this insignia may truly be recognized for their significant contributions to a tranquil sea of peace in which they valiantly fought and sacrificed so much.

Supporting the greatness of their achievements are the ships in which they sail. John Holland, a schoolteacher born in Ireland, designed the Navy's first submarine. Isaac Rice merged the Electro-Dynamic Company with the Holland Torpedo Boat Company in 1899, to form the Electric Boat Company of Groton, CT, Electric Boat has continued to be in the forefront of design and construction over the past century.

During World War I and the years immediately following, Electric Boat built 85 submarines for the U.S. Navy. It produced another 74 submarines during World War II. Working under the watchful eye of Adm. Hyman G. Rickover, who provided the major impetus behind the development of nuclear-powered submarines and surface ships, EB built the world's first nuclear-powered submarine—the U.S.S. Nautilus (SSN–571). EB followed less than a decade later with the Navy's first fleet ballistic-missile submarine—the U.S.S. George Washington (SSBN–598). Improving on that accomplishment it designed and developed the mammoth 560-foot Ohio-class ballistic-missile submarine capable of carrying a total of 24 Trident missiles. The company constructed the U.S.S. Seawolf (SSN–21) and the U.S.S. Connecticut (SSN–22)—the two fastest, quietest, most heavily armed submarines in the world. Today, Electric Boat is designing and building the first of the New Attack Submarines, now known as the Virginia-class after the first ship in the line. It will team with Newport News Shipbuilding to produce the remainder.

On behalf of the citizens of the Second Congressional District, our State of Connecticut and the Nation, I congratulate the exceptional performance of the Submarine Force and extend our deepest appreciation to our submariners and their families for a century of service to America.

THE FEDERAL WORKFORCE DIGITAL ACCESS ACT

OF MARYLAND
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker, today I have introduced the Federal Workforce Digital Access Act. A section-by-section analysis follows:

Section 1 provides that the title of this legislation is the ''Federal Workforce Digital Access Act.''

Section 2 amends title 5, United States Code, to include digital access, for the purpose of residential use, a computer and Internet service as a benefit option for employees in the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of Government.

Provides that a permanent employee who completes a probationary period, or who has been employed not less than 1 year, will be eligible to receive a computer and Internet service at home at no charge. The employee has the option of declining the digital access package or choosing Internet service only.

In order to promote greater technological proficiency within the Government's workforce, the General Services Administration (GSA) and the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) shall, in addition to duties and responsibilities assigned to each of them by the President, establish and operate the digital access benefit program.

The digital access benefit must allow the employee to perform office automation and e-learning functions. Internet-based and on-site training in the use of the computers and software applications, shall be included in the package. Upgrades to the digital access benefit will be made at the employee's request and expense.

Section 2 also provides that residential Internet service must link the employee to Government sites and resources, and support communication between Government agencies and the employee.

GSA may contract with any qualified person to carry out this section. The contracts shall include: the time and manner in which ownership of the digital access package shall be transferred to the employee; options for the technological refreshment of the benefit package; restrictions on commercial advertising to subsidize benefits; measures to prevent unauthorized tracking of computer use and to protect the user's privacy; measures to prevent unauthorized sale or release of names or other identifying information; options for the renewal or extension of benefits; provisions to make benefits accessible to persons with disabilities, such as appropriate modifications or accessories; measures to permit the donation of used equipment to schools or community-based organizations; and measures to terminate, when the employee leaves the government, access to Government databases, sites, and other functions not extended to non-employees.

OPM shall establish guidelines and specifications for the program. OPM shall also: provide technical assistance to GSA or any other agency, on Internet-based training for employees, communication of information to and from employees, procedures for election of benefits, and general oversight and coordination functions to ensure the efficient delivery of the program.

Under this section, OPM shall establish provisions for any employee abroad to whom it may be impracticable to provide this benefit; and in the case of an employee who has previously received or declines benefits, how that employee will be eligible for benefits based on subsequent employment.

The GSA and OPM shall consult with each other to execute their duties and responsibilities under this section. Each employing agency shall keep records and furnish information to GSA and OPM to carry out their duties and responsibilities.

Such sums as may be necessary will be appropriated annually to each agency, including OPM and GSA, both as employing and administering agencies, to carry out this Act. The costs associated with furnishing this benefit will be payable by the employee's employing agency to GSA as specified by applicable requirements.

The amounts paid by the agency shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Employees' Digital Access Fund. The fund is available for all payments to persons providing goods and services under this section, and to pay the respective administrative expenses of GSA and OPM within the annual limitations specified by Congress.

Section 3 amends chapter 79 of title 5 to state that the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) shall submit to the President and Congress a report on the operation of the program based on the first 3 years of its operation. The report shall address the following aspects of this program: any cost savings, efficiencies, improved individual or collective organizational performance; increased productivity; greater work flexibilities; enhancement of Government recruitment and retention efforts; reduced printing and mailing costs, improved communications with respect to individuals in rural or remote locations; new Internet-based training opportunities; best practices of particular agencies; the extent that family members utilize the computer; and the extent to which it helps to bridge the digital divide. Each agency shall submit to OMB such information as the Office requires to prepare for the report.

Section 4 provides that any contract under this Act shall be subject to such amounts provided for in advance in appropriations Acts.

Section 5 provides that the benefits provided under this Act will be furnished to those employees who made elections during the 48 month period beginning 1 year after the legislation is in enacted.

H.R. 1070, THE BREAST AND CERVICAL CANCER TREATMENT ACT

HON. SUE W. KELLY
OF NEW YORK
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I am in support of H.R. 1070, the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act. This legislation will give States the ability to provide a reliable method of treatment for uninsured and underinsured women battling breast or cervical cancer.

The program currently provides screening for cancer, but it provides no treatment options for these women. So if they are diagnosed with cancer, they have no option to be cured, which is a harsh reality. Giving States the option of providing Medicaid coverage for women will help save thousands of lives.

I urge the Speaker to bring this critically important legislation to the House floor for a vote by Mother's Day, May 14. The bill has 289 bipartisan cosponsors, well over the required number to pass a bill on the Suspension Calendar. In addition, the funding for this bill was also included in the House passed budget resolution.

Mr. Speaker, let's bring H.R. 1070 to the House floor before Mother's Day, in time to give our mothers, our sisters, our daughters the most important gift of all, the gift of life.

HONORING LT. DENNIS HOLMES, MILPITAS POLICE DEPARTMENT

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK
OF CALIFORNIA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Lt. Dennis Holmes upon his retirement from the Milpitas Police Department after nearly 33 years of exemplary service to law enforcement.

Lt. Holmes joined the police force in Milpitas in 1967. He was promoted to sergeant in March 1974 and rose to the rank of lieutenant in September 1980.

During his early years as a police officer, Lt. Holmes was the first officer to be selected to serve as a field-training officer. As a supervisor, he helped develop structured localized field-training programs that he managed for nearly 15 years. He sat on the advisory board of the regional police academy and was a strong advocate for specialty and professional training for all departmental employees.

Lt. Holmes served in almost all of the available sections of the Milpitas Police Department. He started in Patrol, and then transferred into Traffic Enforcement and Investigation. He was later selected to head up the Traffic Section. As a sergeant he supervised in Patrol, was transferred into Generalist Investigations, and was then selected to supervise a proactive enforcement.

As supervisor of the proactive team, drug related arrests more than doubled and the residential burglary rate plummeted. He also introduced an objective employee performance appraisal system that was later adopted citywide. This system has been in place with few modifications for over 20 years.

As investigative lieutenant, he implemented and formalized case management procedures, which brought accountability to the investigation function. In addition, he implemented an automated case tracking system and instituted a subjective case-screening model.

Lt. Holmes served as president of the Milpitas Police Officer's Association for 4 years. He was lead negotiator for two employee relations contracts, and served on two additional negotiation teams. He was instrumental in obtaining the first fully confidential police psychological counseling benefit for Milpitas police employees.

I have highlighted some of Lt. Holmes' many accomplishments and I ask my colleagues to join me in paying tribute to this outstanding public servant. He has been an innovator and a change agent in law enforcement. His unselfish dedication to the Milpitas community is appreciated and will be long remembered.

THE FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SOUTHERN ILLINOIS HEALTHCARE FOUNDATION

HON. JERRY F. COSTELLO
OF ILLINOIS
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, today I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the 15th anniversary of the Southern Illinois Healthcare Foundation.

In the early 1980's, a group of community residents became concerned about the lack of healthcare services in southern Illinois. At that time, there were very few physicians in the area. Residents of the region suffered from a lack of adequate healthcare services. Infant mortality rates and rates of other health related concerns were on the rise. Most physicians in the region expressed their reluctance to participate in federal programs to assist the poor. Several communities in the area were also federally designated as under served and a health care professional shortage was also recognized.

In 1983, this concerned group of citizens formed an not-for-profit organization to promote health care concerns. The original charter members of the corporation included Harvey Jones Jr., Francis Touchette, Bob Bergman, Callie Mobley, Don Sminchak, Virginia "Betty" Knuckles, Kathleen Touchette, Dr. Mays Maxwell and Rev. Father Jerry Wirth. I was also proud to also be part of that original committee. The Southern Illinois Healthcare Foundation opened it's first center in one side of the public health department building at 6000 Bond Avenue in Centreville, Illinois on January 7, 1985.

With assistance of an initial Federal grant, the center began it's operations in the Centreville facility, providing health care services to the surrounding communities in the area. The foundation's services expanded in the 90's with facilities opening in East St. Louis, Washington Park and Brooklyn, Illinois. In 1913, the foundation partnered with Touchette Regional Hospital in Centreville and with the East Side Health District to expand it's reach further into the area. I was happy to assist the center procure various grants to improve services to reduce infant mortality rates in the area and in 1997 the foundation opened a facility in Alton, Illinois. School based clinics also operate in East St. Louis and Cahokia, Illinois.

In recognition for it's work to reduce the amount of low-birth weight babies, the Southern Illinois Healthcare Foundation and Touchette Regional Hospital was one of the first winners of the ''Models that Work'' program, as sponsored by the National Committee For Quality Healthcare. Other awards and recognition for the system include the American Hospital Association and the Baxter Allegiance Foundation. The Baxter Award recognized the system's work with the various foundation communities. The foundation was also a finalist in the Premier Cares Award sponsored by Premier Healthcare.

Just last year, the foundation further expanded it's services by opening a second site in Madison County in Bethalto, Illinois. Private grants have also been awarded to the Southern Illinois Foundation from the W.K. Kellogg Foundation to allow them to address Medicaid Managed Care issues and provide funds for planning and study for healthcare issues.

Locally, the foundation has also been presented the Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Award from the Kimmel Leadership Center. Dr. Bob Klutts is the chief executive officer and has been the executive with the foundation since 1988.

Operations in all of the Foundation Health center sites are now well established. The foundation system has grown from an initial 8,678 patient visits in 1988 to currently over 85,000 patient visits. In addition to the clinic sites they operate in several communities, they also operate three Quick Care sites with one site devoted to the needs of mother and child care and also a site directed to the needs of adults. It is one of the strongest Healthcare networks operating in Illinois today.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring the anniversary and service of the Southern Illinois Healthcare Foundation.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. JIM RYUN

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. RYUN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, last evening I was unavoidably detained and was not present for rollcall votes 111–114.

Had I been present I would have voted ''yes'' on rollcall vote 111, ''yes'' on rollcall vote 112, ''yes'' on rollcall vote 113 and ''no'' on rollcall vote 114.

RECOGNIZING THE NORTH FORK CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

HON. GEORGE RADANOVICH

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. RADANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize the North Fork Chamber of Commerce for its outstanding contributions to the community.

During the last year, the North Fork Chamber of Commerce has accomplished a great deal. They have increased their membership to 64 members. The Chamber began quarterly town hall meetings with Supervisor Gary Gilbert and Sheriff John Anderson, holding three meetings in 1999. The Chamber has also joined SUPERCHEX (Superior California Chamber Exec's) to network with neighboring Chambers of Commerce. In collaboration with neighboring Chambers, the North Fork Chamber began advance planning, one year in advance, of chamber projects.

The North Fork Chamber started a weekly ''North Fork Chamber Chat'' column in the Sierra Star, a local newspaper. The Chamber also resumed monthly newsletters and monthly mixers for its members.

The North Fork Chamber secured $52,500 in grants and matching funds to add new sidewalks, mini-parks, and tourist signs on Northfork's Main Street.

The Chamber began a part-time paid staff, courtesy of the USFS SCSEP program, which also provided mileage and classes on Microsoft programs and project management. Along with their many achievements, the Chamber also acquired a new office, courtesy of CDC, at the Mill Site Office Building, furnished and staffed by Jim Flanagan.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize the North Fork Chamber of Commerce for its service to the community. I urge colleagues to join me in wishing the North Fork Chamber of Commerce many more years of continued success.

A TRIBUTE TO THE WATCHFUL SHEPHERD AND JOSEPH FEMIANI

HON. FRANK MASCARA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. MASCARA. Mr. Speaker, today, during National Child Abuse Prevention Month I praise the organizations which work tirelessly to end our children's suffering. I am proud to say that one such organization and its originator in my district are part of the crusade to make all children safe from harm. I am speaking of The Watchful Shepherd and Joseph Femiani.

Every day, 78 babies die, 2162 babies are born into poverty and 3,453 babies are born to unwed parents. Added to the likelihood that one in two children will live in a single parent family at some point in childhood, one in eight is born to a teenage mother and one in 60 sees their parents divorce in any year, it is no wonder that our children live in peril.

While Congress works to reverse these trends, The Watchful Shepherd protects children already suffering at the hands of relatives and family friends. Piloted in Southwestern Pennsylvanian hospitals in 1993 and 1996, The Watchful Shepherd program unites the resources of Children and Youth Services agencies, police departments health care professionals and community residents in a unique effort to improve the protection of children at risk for abuse.

Since its successful adoption by Washington County Children and Youth Services, other communities such as Tom's River, New Jersey; Dover, Delaware; and Chesapeake, Virginia have employed the program with great success for families currently enrolled in Watchful Shepherd. Surprisingly, most families voluntarily agree to the program, which consists of a panic button worn on the child and a telephone unit which are monitored by hospital, police or trained volunteer personnel. Many law enforcement agencies take Watchful Shepherd calls so seriously that they have classified the alarms as a level one priority. To date, there have been no false alarms and the system is constantly improving to serve children and their families together.

All great ideas have a creator. The chief champion of The Watchful Shepherd program is Joseph Femiani, whose idea has become a noble crusade. Borne out of personal experience, The Watchful Shepherd has no greater promoter. Mr. Femiani, a successful Washington County business owner, husband and father, could have savored the good life he had created for himself after a painful childhood, but he chose to make life safer for children everywhere.

Joe Femiani's tireless promotion of child abuse prevention and The Watchful Shepherd program has led to a feature in Time, an interview with National Public Radio and a segment on NBC's Dateline in addition to numerous grassroots campaigns to get the message out about his lifesaving program. All of this effort is not in vain. Mr. Femiani continues to receive national and international interest in The Watchful Shepherd program and works endlessly to organize financial support for those communities seeking to adopt the program.

Many marvel at Joe's stamina and commitment to his cause, as was the case in an interview with the Pittsburgh Catholic. ''Whenever Joseph Femiani questions whether his efforts makes a difference, he reaches for a card he carries in his wallet which bears the names of children who have been murdered.'' That—it seems—has made all the difference.

IN HONOR OF THE WESTINGHOUSE HIGH SCHOOL BASKETBALL TEAM

HON. DANNY K. DAVIS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. DAVIS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate and commend the Westinghouse High School, and in particular the men's senior basketball team. Westinghouse High School located in the 7th Congressional District of Illinois, in the heart of the Westside, has a long tradition of academic and athletic excellence. The school has graduated several professional basketball players, including Mark Aguire and former College Player of the Year and NBA All-Star Hersey Hawkins.

The dream of winning a state championship inspired the Westinghouse Warriors to diligently practice and perform throughout a grueling 33 game season. This year, with a season record of 31–2, the team clinched the city of Chicago championship. Their success led them to Peoria, Illinois to compete for the Class AA state title, their ultimate goal. Their hard work and determination had rewarded them with their first major achievement, the city title. However, upon the completion of the very competitive state championship game the Westinghouse Warriors came short of the victory.

In spite of their loss, I commend this hardworking and dedicated team. This team has epitomized hard work and persistence. In addition to their feats on the basketball court, team members have maintained their dedication to academics, they are truly student-athletes, students first, then athletes—and champions in both.

My fellow colleagues, please join me in honoring the Westinghouse High School men's basketball team for their outstanding performance and dedication. The team, along with its head coach Mr. Chris Head, have worked hard to achieve their accomplishments. They should be honored by all of America.

NEW CROP INSURANCE OFFERS FARMERS MORE PROTECTION

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member commends to his colleagues the following editorial from the April 3, 2000, Norfolk Daily News. The editorial expresses support for a new form of crop insurance which allows farmers to protect themselves against both natural disasters and low prices. This Member is pleased that legislation passed last year by the House makes many improvements in the current program, including providing additional assistance for producers to purchase insurance that provides protection from price or income loss, as well as production loss. This Member encourages expeditious action on resolving the differences between the risk management bills passed by the House and Senate.

[From the Norfolk Daily News, Apr. 3, 2000]

CROP INSURANCE AN IMPROVEMENT

WITH NEW INSURANCE TYPE, FARMERS CAN FINALLY CONTROL PART OF THEIR OPERATIONS

With the weather and market price swings completely out of their control, an increasing number of farmers are embracing one of the few things that can give them at least some control over their income.

It comes in the form of crop insurance but not the type that most people think of. For years, crop insurance was a way to insure against crop disasters caused by weather debacles.

The problem was that it often was expensive, didn't provide complete coverage and many farmers shunned it, choosing instead to hope that Mother Nature would cooperate and, if that wasn't the case, that the federal government would come through with emergency assistance.

That kind of crop insurance still is available, but a newer type—one that insures against price dips and weather-related problems—is fast becoming the preferred option.

That's partly because the federal government has chosen to provide $400 million in additional subsidies, meaning the premiums for crop insurance have been reduced by about 25 percent. A lower price for better coverage is the kind of deal anyone needs to take a close look at.

The other factor is the kind of insurance available. While more expensive than the traditional type that insures against weather-related problems, the new revenue coverage offers farmers more peace of mind in that it guarantees an income level regardless of what happens with the weather.

It also provides more marketing flexibility for participating farmers and even could provide some supplemental income during a bumper crop year—assuming market prices are low as a result.

If that sounds too good to be true, there's more. Although government subsidies have increased for crop insurance, it is predicted that if enough farmers take advantage of the insurance options available to them, there will be significantly less chance of the government having to provide emergency bailouts because of droughts or other conditions. Those usually are more expensive to taxpayers than the subsidies.

Farming always has been one of the highest risk occupations in terms of financial results.

If this new type of crop insurance can help reduce that risk, while also reducing emergency expenditures by the federal government, then virtually everyone should benefit.

THE NATIONAL MEDIA TREATS THE SOUTH DIFFERENTLY

HON. FLOYD SPENCE

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the following article from the Lexington County Chronicle, Lexington, South Carolina.

[From the Lexington County Chronicle, Mar. 9, 2000]

WHERE HAVE YOU GONE, DAN RATHER?

(By Jerry Bellune)

Before you call me a racist, you should know that I cut my reporting teeth covering the civil rights movement of the early 1960s. It was a beat few white reporters wanted. And at one time, I was the only reporter in Charlotte, N.C., the demonstrators trusted.

When we went north in 1964, we found racism rampant there, too. One Yankee landlord refused to rent to us because, to her northern ears, our southern accents sounded African-American.

Jump ahead from the 1960s to the Year 2000. Southern schools have been desegregated. Discrimination is illegal. African-Americans have established more than a foothold in business and the middle class. In the arts and sports, they have become a dominant force.

Yet the national media seems ignorant of—or worse, indifferent to—the Deep South's dramatic social changes. They can't seem to balance changes in attitude with the other big Southern story—the Sun Belt's economic explosion.

This came home to me last week in two tragic stories. In Pennsylvania, a black man went on a rampage, killing three white people and wounding two others. In Michigan, the 6-year-old son of a jail bird took a gun to school and "got even" by shooting a white classmate to death.

Both stories were one-day sensations on TV and the local daily's front page. After that, both stories slipped deep into the inside pages.

That made me wonder how the two stories would have been handled had the races of the killers and their victims been reversed.

What might Dan Rather have had to say about a white man going on a rampage, singling out black victims. Or a white boy shooting a black classmate to death? Would the Revs. Al Sharpton and Jesse Jackson have descended on Michigan and Pennsylvania to lead street marches against the perpetrators of these "racist" murders?

If they are for civil rights for everybody, where are they now? And where are the TV cameras?

If either of these crimes had occurred in the South, would they have been reported as examples of the climate of violence and racism in this backward section of our great nation?

HONORING DR. THOMAS M. McFADDEN

HON. STEVEN T. KUYKENDALL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. KUYKENDALL. Mr. Speaker, today I honor Dr. Thomas McFadden, this year's recipient of the Community Association of the Peninsula's (CAP) Agnes R. Moss Volunteer Award.

The Agnes R. Moss Award is presented annually by the CAP Board of Trustees to the person who has been most instrumental in assisting the association to fulfill its goals. Dr. McFadden is being honored for his expertise, talent, and leadership in enhancing CAP programs.

The mission of CAP is to bring cohesiveness to all residents of the Peninsula and to respond to unmet community needs. CAP programs include the Norris Theatre for the Performing Arts, the Spirit of the Peninsula Telethon, Study Skills Workshops, the Multicultural Committee, and the Peninsula Cultural Organization.

Dr. McFadden's contributions to CAP and its programs are extensive. He has been a member of the CAP Board of Trustees since 1993 and previously served as its president for two one-year terms. In addition to his service to CAP, Dr. McFadden has been an active member of the community serving on several Peninsula advisory boards including the Palos Verdes Chamber of Commerce and the Skirball Institute.

I congratulate Dr. McFadden on receiving this award. He is a valuable member of this Peninsula community. His contributions are much appreciated.

HONORING MEMBERS OF ARMED FORCES AND FEDERAL CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES WHO SERVED NATION DURING VIETNAM ERA AND FAMILIES OF THOSE INDIVIDUALS WHO LOST THEIR LIVES OR REMAIN UNACCOUNTED FOR OR WERE INJURED DURING THAT ERA

SPEECH OF

HON. SILVESTRE REYES

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, April 10, 2000

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H. Con. Res. 228.

This bill recognizes and honors the sacrifice of our Vietnam-era veterans, their families, and those who are still unaccounted for and remain missing.

It is important for our nation to never forget the service of these military personnel.

Over 3.5 million U.S. military personnel served in the Republic of Vietnam and Southeast Asia, and millions more served around the world during the Vietnam era.

As a Vietnam Veteran, I am proud of the service of these men and women.

I saw first hand their incredible commitment and unwavering dedication to our national defense and American ideals.

After a quarter of a century since the end of the Vietnam War, it is important for all Americans to reflect on the incredible sacrifices made by these veterans who stood up to communism in Southeast Asia and around the world.

Our Vietnam-era veterans are heroes for their incredible courage and bravery both here in the United States and while deployed overseas.

They fought for freedom during a time when public support for their efforts was divided.

They returned to a nation that unfortunately did not welcome them back with the gratitude they deserved.

This was after they had withstood some of the most vicious and difficult combat conditions imaginable.

The effects of these circumstances on the lives of our Vietnam-era veterans and their families can never be fully measured.

Therefore, let us never forget the honorable service of our Vietnam-era veterans, and the heavy price paid by their friends and families.

Their sacrifice paved the way for the freedom and security we enjoy today, and no American should take for granted their willingness to serve in support of our national security and to turn back the tide of totalitarianism.

This resolution serves as a strong reminder of our gratitude to our Vietnam-era Veterans and to our soldiers currently deployed around the world.

It sends a message that we will never forget the memory of those who paid the ultimate price for the cause of freedom, and maintains our commitment to those who remain unaccounted for and are still missing.

Let this bill strengthen our resolve on behalf of our Vietnam-era veterans and their families, and serve as an expression of our appreciation and gratitude.

As someone who serves on the House Armed Services and Veterans' Affairs Committees, I salute our Vietnam-era Veterans and am proud to co-sponsor this legislation.

HONORING THE TOWNSHIP OF LOWER MERION IN MONTGOMERY COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA

HON. JOSEPH M. HOEFFEL

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. HOEFFEL. Today I congratulate the township of Lower Merion in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania on its 100th anniversary. On March 5, 1900 Lower Merion formed what has become a model township government in Montgomery County.

Lower Merion's roots extend to 1682 when Welsh Quakers were granted a tract of land by William Penn just outside Philadelphia. In 1713, Lower Merion established an independent Township with about 52 landholders and tenants. The 1850s brought rapid change to Lower Merion with the advent of the railroad and marked the birth of the area known today as the "Main Line." Philadelphians soon began settling in the township and commuting to Philadelphia. In 1900, the Township was incorporated as a Township of the First Class.

The citizens of the township of Lower Merion have many achievements of which to be proud. They have a deep sense of civic pride and involvement. In fact, the Township maintains a "Community Resources Leadership Bank" of citizens interested in participating in Township Boards or Commissions. This innovation and vision distinguishes Lower Merion and it remains one of the most progressive townships in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Township officials in Lower Merion are deeply committed to the environment. Through open space conservation and environmental protection, the Lower Merion Township continually works to improve the quality of life for its residents. Lower Merion officials have demonstrated a strong commitment to their schools and community, and the township has one of the highest ranking school systems in Pennsylvania.

I am proud to represent such an extraordinary municipality. This anniversary should serve as a tribute to hard work and dedication for all who have made the Lower Merion Township the place it is.

HONORING THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE CITY OF SANTA BARBARA

HON. LOIS CAPPS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, today I commemorate the 150th Anniversary of the City of Santa Barbara. This past Sunday, I was honored to join the citizens of Santa Barbara in celebrating the rich history and legacy of our community.

Santa Barbara is a vibrantly diverse city that draws its heritage from the Chumash, Spanish, Mexican, American and European peoples. Although the incorporation of the city was in 1850, there are other milestones that preceded this date. The community was named in 1602 by Sebastian Vizcaino, a Spanish employer, who came to the area on Saint Barbara's day. In 1782, the King of Spain directed that a presidio be constructed in Santa Barbara and in 1786, the Mission was founded. Both the Presidio and the Mission hold much cultural significance to the citizens of Santa Barbara today and serve as an important reminder of our shared history. In 1850, a charter was adopted by a vote of the citizens and established Santa Barbara as one of the five California charter cities. As a charter city, the citizens of Santa Barbara enjoy "home rule" and as a result, the city is a model of how a community can preserve and sustain a high quality of life for its people.

Today, Santa Barbara boasts strong public and private schools, the nationally recognized University of California, Santa Barbara, Westmont College and Santa Barbara City College, as well as thriving small businesses, high-tech and tourism industries. But above all, as Santa Barbarans, we pride ourselves on the beauty of our environment and the quaint charm of our community. The importance of clean water, clean air and open spaces has long been recognized as a key to our community's success and we remain committed to protecting the unparalleled beauty that Santa Barbara possesses today.

Mr. Speaker, I am very honored to represent Santa Barbara in Congress and I ask that my colleagues join me in celebrating the many achievements of the citizens of Santa Barbara and the contributions that the city has made to America. We wish the community of Santa Barbara 150 more years of success and prosperity.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BARBARA LEE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, due to what may have been a technical difficulty, I was not recorded on rollcall vote 114. Had I been recorded, I would have voted "yes."

HONORING THE SOUTHERLAND HEAD START PROGRAM ON THEIR 35TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. NICK LAMPSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, today I congratulate the Southerland Head Start program on their 35th Anniversary. For thirty-five years this school has been serving children in need and making sure that they have the resources necessary for a successful educational future.

In Beaumont there were originally two Head Start Centers, one at Dunbar and the other at South Park. Mavis Bryant was the director at Dunbar from 1965–1984, and Claire Collier was the director at South Park from 1966–1984. In 1984, the districts merged and the center became known as Southerland Head Start, where Claire Collier served as director until her retirement in 1994. Two principals/directors have followed Claire Collier, Charles Vanderburg served from 1994–1999, and Gloria Harrison is currently serving.

Southerland serves the community well, and there are currently 460 students enrolled in the program. Southerland's motto is "Touching Children . . . Reaching Families," and they truly live up to that motto. They reach out to children, improving their self esteem, health, and physical development. Children at Southerland learn and grow in an environment that promotes positive experiences and an understanding of the world around them.

I believe that we must provide an opportunity for every child in America to fulfill her or his potential through participation in an enriching and challenging learning environment starting at birth, and programs such as Southerland Head Start help us achieve that goal. I would like to thank Dr. Carrol Thomas, Superintendent of Schools, Dr. Mae E. Jones-Clark, Deputy Superintendent for Curriculum and Instruction, and Gloria Harrison, Head Start Director/Principal, and all of the other people who are serving the school with unparalleled dedication.

Mr. Speaker, Southerland has served the children of Beaumont for thirty-five years, and I congratulate them as they celebrate this milestone of achievement.

LET'S CRAFT A FAIR DEAL FOR OUR VETERANS

HON. BOB FILNER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Speaker, today I testified before the VA, HUD Appropriations Subcommittee. In that testimony which follows, I emphasized our duty to provide adequate funds for the vital programs that serve our Nation's veterans.

I am pleased that the administration's budget for the year 2001 recognizes that the men and women who have served in uniform deserve an adequate budget for the Department of Veterans Affairs [VA], and I believe that the efforts of many members of the House VA Committee and the efforts of our veterans' service organizations, specifically in formulating the Independent Budget, have been instrumental in producing a much better budget proposal than last year. I want to acknowledge these efforts.

The $1.4 billion increase in the health care budget will assure our aging and disabled veterans who need medical care—especially long-term care, emergency care and specialized services—that their needs are a high priority. However, I join my colleagues and the authors of this year's Independent Budget in objecting to the proposal that $350 million of new resources for medical care authorized by the recently passed Veterans Millennium Act be deposited to the Treasury. Funds collected from veterans for the provision of veterans' health care should be used to enhance the health care for veterans—not as a substitute for appropriated dollars.

I also want to emphasize my continuing concern that the VA is not adequately meeting the benefit and health care needs of veterans who served in the Gulf war and who now suffer from various diagnosed and undiagnosed disabilities. It has been almost 10 years since the men and women of our armed services were sent to the gulf! The veterans of the Gulf war are sick with illnesses whose causes and cures remain a mystery. We must not relax our efforts to fund necessary and appropriate research. I join the authors of the Independent Budget in supporting an increase in funding for VA medical research, and specifically request that the medical research budget be increased by $65 million as recommended in the Independent Budget and that at least $30 million of that increase be directed to research involving the health of Gulf war veterans.

As our veterans population ages, the need for long-term care increases. One means of providing access to such care is through the funding of State Veterans Homes. A new home will be opening in April in my congressional district, and already there is a waiting list. I want other areas to have the same opportunity as the veterans in the San Diego region will have with the opening of this new home. Therefore, I am opposed to the proposed decrease in funding for State Homes and urge this committee to provide adequate funding for this critical program.

I am also pleased that this administration has recognized what Members of Congress have known for years. Additional personnel are needed if the VA is to promptly and accurately adjudicate claims for compensation and pension benefits. This budget will help to provide a well-trained corps of adjudicators to replace those who are nearing retirement age. I want to emphasize that the continued loss of experienced adjudicators over the past 7 years together with an increased workload in the number of issues which must be decided in each claim have led to serious problems of quality and timeliness. The increased staffing in this budget is essential to stem the tide of deterioration in claims processing.

As a former college professor, I recognize the value of a quality education for our Nation's veterans. I am disappointed that no increase for the G.I. bill is provided in the administration's budget. The G.I. bill currently provides far less than is needed to obtain an education at a public institution, and I support raising the basic education benefit. I have joined with The Partnership for Veterans' Education, a coalition representing a number of associations advocating on behalf of veterans, in calling, as a first step, for an increase in the basic monthly stipend from $535 to $975 a month.

Veterans comprise about one-third of our Nation's homeless population, but only 3 percent of HUD funding for the homeless is directed to specific programs for homeless veterans. I strongly urge this committee to heed the testimony of Ms. Heather French, Miss America 2000, and allocate $750,000 from the HUD fiscal year 2001 appropriation to the National Coalition for Homeless Veterans to provide technical assistance to homeless providers. This assistance is critically needed to help veteran specific homeless programs receive a fair share of Federal funding for our Nation's homeless veterans.

I also urge the committee to fund the Department of Labor's Homeless Veterans Reintegration Program [HVRP] at its authorized level of $15,000,000 for fiscal year 2001. These programs are effective in placing homeless veterans in taxpaying jobs. They work and should be funded.

The administration's budget proposal recommends paying full disability benefits to Filipino World War II veterans who reside in the United States. Currently, these brave veterans who were drafted into service by President Roosevelt receive only half the amount received by their counterparts—U.S. veterans with whom they fought side by side to defeat our mutual enemy. I support this increase as an important step toward equity for Filipino World War II veterans.

However, more is needed. Because Congress, in 1946, rescinded the health care benefits for most of these veterans, Congressman GILMAN and I have introduced legislation, H.R. 1594, to provide access to VA medical facilties—both in the United States and in the Philippines—for Filipino World War II veterans. Health care is a crucial need for these men who are now in their 70s and 80s! $30 million is all that is required to provide health care access to Filipino veterans, with the same priority status as veterans currently using the VA. I request that this amount be added to the fiscal year 2001 budget.

As we honor our veterans during their lives, so must we honor their remembrance in death. The administration's increase in funding for the National Cemetery System will improve the appearance of our cemeteries by a long-overdue and much needed renovation of grounds, gravesites, and grave-markers. I urge this committee to fund the National Cemetery Administration and the State Cemetery Grants at the levels recommended by the House Veterans Affairs' Committee.

Again, may I say that the proposal before you represents a fine starting point. I hope that my suggestions will be useful as the members of this committee work toward a budget that gives our Nation's veterans a fair deal.

TRIBUTE TO GRAND MASTER JHOON GOO RHEE

HON. NICK SMITH

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor today to recognize a great American on the occasion of his recent selection by the National Immigrant Forum, in conjunction with the Immigration and Naturalization Service, as one of 200 most famous American immigrants of all time: Grand Master Jhoon Goo Rhee.

Master Rhee, who shares the honor with such American icons as Albert Einstein, Hyman Rickover and Knute Rockne, is the sole immigrant of Korean ancestry to make the list. Well known as one of the world's foremost authorities on the martial arts and recognized as the father of Tae Kwon Do in the United States, Grand Master Rhee has established himself as more than just a famous instructor. But his road to success and achieving the American dream wasn't easy, nor would he have wanted it that way.

When Jhoon Rhee came to the United States in 1956, he spoke little English and had less money—$46 to be exact. Still, he enrolled at Southwest Texas State Teachers College in San Marcos determined to create a better life for himself. Although at first it took him a half-hour to read one page of text, he became increasingly proficient in English through discipline and perseverance, traits that for decades he has so eloquently translated from the martial arts for people from all walks of life.

Those traits also are the core of his action philosophy, a philosophy grounded in the principles of the martial arts, but applicable to everyone. It calls for people to build confidence through knowledge in the mind, honesty in the heart and strength in the body, and then to lead by example.

Leading by example is exactly what Master Rhee does. Despite his 68 years, each day as part of his daily stretching and meditation regimen, he does 1,000 push-ups and 1,000 sit-ups. Not even the fittest 20 year-old can match those feats. But the discipline, determination and perseverance involved are life lessons that far transcend martial arts and athleticism. He has enabled people everywhere to realize their potential and apply themselves successfully to whatever it is they set themselves to do. It's the philosophy Master Rhee embraced so long ago and which has stood the test of time—the same philosophy which took him from someone who barely could speak the language of his new country, to one of the world's most sought-after motivational speakers.

There is no dream too large for Grand Master Rhee, but I'm sure even he has difficulty comprehending how many millions of people around the world owe their positive, constructive ways of living to his wholesome influences.

Many of our colleagues, Mr. Speaker, know first hand Master Rhee's call to realize the aspects of life larger than self. We know this because he founded the U.S. Congressional Tae Kwon Do Club and has taught more than 250 current or former Members of Congress not only the art of Tae Kwon Do, but also the art of living a healthier and happier life. We know the affection he engenders to all who make his acquaintance, whether through athletics, business or when hearing his motivational presentation.

Master Rhee's success is wide ranging. Aside from his accomplishments in Tae Kwon Do and in training world-class athletes, he has starred in feature films, authored a number of books, served as a goodwill ambassador and started a hugely successful business venture. He also is held in the highest regard as an innovator and teacher.

But perhaps where he excels most is in an area that is missing so dearly in today's world—the role of husband, father and citizen. Jhoon Rhee deports himself with the utmost respect and dignity for those with whom he deals and with society in general. For more than 50 years, he has embraced the role model aspect of a life that comes with international renown, a role taken for granted by so many and perfected by so few. He gladly accepts the responsibility of presenting himself and his way of life as an emblem to be worn proudly.

This is not just my assessment. His contributions to buttress America's culture with pride and decorum are echoed by many distinguished citizens in and out of government. Among his biggest fans are boxing legend Muhammad Ali, Parade magazine Publisher Walter Anderson and motivational speaker Tony Robbins. Jack Valenti of the motion Picture Association of America has said, ''Master Rhee defies the assumed rush of years. He is an ageless patriot, whose brand of unbreakable loyalty is seldom seen. . . .''

Our esteemed colleague IKE SKELTON says, ''Master Rhee is an American treasure.'' Our esteemed former colleague Bob Livingston says it quite simply: ''Master Rhee is one of the greatest Americans I know.''

At an age when even the most industrious of people tend to enjoy the leisure of their later years, Master Rhee at age 68 continues with remarkable energy to exert his positive influence on people of all ages throughout the country and the globe. He has recently launched a new global project, the JhoonRhee.com Web site, where he continues to promote the martial arts, fitness, the healing arts and a way of life whereby, in his words, ''Everybody is happy with every breath of life.''

On March 17, 1992, President George Bush named Master Rhee one of his Daily Points of Light. President Bush said, ''The true measure of any individual is found in the way he or she treats others—and the person who regards others with love, respect and charity holds a priceless treasure in his heart . . . any definition of a successful life must include others. Your efforts provide a shining example of this standard.''

Master Rhee's devotion to the principles of America's Founding Fathers is unsurpassed. He instills in his countrymen the Founders' vision and demonstrates the power of that vision to people throughout the world to show them the path to freedom, peace and prosperity. He understands that everyone on this planet has the right to be happy. But to achieve that happiness, individuals must accept the foundation of perfect human character that entails exercising true freedom approved by one's conscience, and never to practice false freedom licensed by selfishness.

Master Rhee is a proud American who cherishes the words freedom, free enterprise, democracy and heritage. He lives the American Dream. Indeed, he exemplifies it. He inspires all, and with a special enthusiasm toward the young, to live lives of honor and integrity. The eloquence and conviction of his message to live noble lives of grand purpose penetrates the most hardened hearts and cynical souls.

His accomplishments are legion. A 10th Degree Black Belt, he introduced the martial arts to Russia in the early 1990s, where now there are 65 studios that bear his mane. He is the author of five books on Tae Kwon Do, a member of the Black Belt Hall of Frame and the recipient of the National Association of Professional Martial Artists' Lifetime Achievement Award.

He was named by Black Belt Magazine as one of the top two living martial artists of the 20th Century and also as ''Martial Arts Man of the Century'' by the Washington, D.C., Touchdown Club. He has been featured on the cover of Parade, collaborated on several projects with Bruce Lee and had the lead role in the films. When Tae Kwon Do Strikes and The Silent Master. Additionally, he created and choreographed the martial arts ballet—the basis for today's popular ''musical forms'' competition—and invented and implemented the safety equipment used in major open tournaments, including the 2000 Olympic Games in Sydney.

I would like to summarize some of Master Rhee's accomplishments, a truly impressive list of famous firsts. He was the—

First master to teach Tae Kwon Do in America: Master Rhee introduced Tae Kwon Do to America in 1956.

First master to work out to music: Master Rhee created the Martial Arts Ballet and gave birth to the Exercise to Music craze.

First master to invent safety equipment: Master Rhee invented martial arts safety equipment after one of his students was injured in a competition. The introduction of safety equipment enabled martial arts studios to get insurance. Because of that, parents began to send their kids to martial arts instructors, and the martial arts industry was born.

First master to promote martial arts in the U.S. through television advertising.

First master to use the color belt system: At one time, martial arts awarded only white, brown or black belts. Master Rhee introduced the color belt award system now used worldwide.

First master who also is a concert musician: Master Rhee was the featured musician with the Washington Symphony Orchestra. He played classical music on the harmonica.

First master to require black belt scholastic excellence: For more than 30 years, Master Rhee has required his students to maintain a ''B'' average or better to qualify for a black belt.

First master to train Members of Congress in martial arts: Master Rhee founded the U.S. Congressional Tae Kwon Do Club, where he has taught Members of Congress without interruption since 1965.

First American to open martial arts studios in the Soviet Union: Master Rhee first traveled to Moscow in 1991 to teach Tae Kwon Do and now has 65 Jhoon Rhee Do studios throughout the Commonwealth of Independent States. Learning English is a requirement for a black belt.

First to teach martial arts in America's public schools: Master Rhee launched his Joy of Discipline program of martial arts and character education in America's public schools in the early 1980s.

First Tae Kwon Do master to star in his own movies: Master Rhee starred with Angela Mao in When Tae Kwon Do Strikes. As Grand Master Lee, he is the underground leader of a group of patriots in Japanese occupied Korea.

First martial artist to train a world heavyweight boxing champion: Master Rhee taught the legendary Bruce Lee his kicking techniques, and Bruce Lee taught him how to punch. Master Rhee then taught Muhammad Ali what Ali later called his powerful "Accu-punch." Ali used it in 1976 to knock out Bruce Denn in Munich and also in the Joe Frazier heavyweight title bout.

First martial artist to be named Man of the Century: And now, Master Rhee is the first and only native Korean to be named as one of America's top 200 immigrants of all time. Mr. Speaker, the National Immigrant Forum made a wise choice. He is a man of character and the prototype role model for the new century. I can think of few others so worthy of such a designation.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. WILLIAM L. JENKINS

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, April 10, 2000 if I had been present, I would have voted "nay" on the Spratt Motion to Instruct Conferees on H. Con. Res. 290 instead of "yea" as indicated in my explanation.

A MEMORIAL TRIBUTE TO MARTHA MANUEL CHACON

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to your attention the recent passing of Martha Manuel Chacon, and elder and tribal leader of the San Manuel Band of Mission Indians, who helped the tribe maintain its pride and traditions and simultaneously setting it on a course of future self-reliance. Mrs. Chacon passed away on March 28 at the age of 89.

Martha Manuel Chacon was born in a two-room adobe house without floors and was raised on the San Manuel Reservation in Highland, California. She was the granddaughter of Santos Manuel, the Serrano Indian leader who was responsible for holding the tribe together during difficult times in 1866, and for whom the reservation was named.

After attending Highland Elementary School and St. Boniface Catholic School on the Morongo Indian Reservation, Martha Manuel worked in any job she could find as a young adult, commuting weekly to Los Angeles when she couldn't find them locally.

She became a tribal leader and regularly traveled to the state capital in Sacramento as a spokesman for the San Manuel Band. Tribal members give her credit for bringing electricity to the reservation in the last 1950s and running water to tribal homes in the 1960s. Her strong devotion to her Serrano ancestry, culture and heritage helped the San Manuel Band improve its quality of life and set out on the path to self-reliance.

Martha Manuel Chacon is survived by her husband of nearly 60 years, Raoul Chacon, six children, 18 grandchildren, 31 great-grandchildren and four great great grandchildren.

Mr. Speaker, words do not begin to convey the love and admiration with which Martha Manuel Chacon was held by her family, friends, and supporters. Her life journey stands as a remarkable testament to leadership, courage, strength and honesty and her memory will continue to inspire countless people. It is only appropriate that the House pay tribute to this courageous woman today.

THE NEW HOUSE OF WORSHIP FOR THE JEWISH FELLOWSHIP OF HEMLOCK FARMS

HON. DON SHERWOOD

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform my colleagues of the dedication of a new house of worship for The Jewish Fellowship of Hemlock Farms which will be celebrated with an open house on Sunday, May 28, 2000, from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Hemlock Farms is a private four-season recreational community in the heart of the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania. Its 4,500 acres include state forests, lakes, deer, bears, tennis courts, indoor and outdoor swimming pools, a club house with a fitness center and auditorium, a private country club with an 18-hole golf course, 72 miles of paved roads and more than 2,700 homes. About a third of the population are year-round residents. The others who spend their summers or weekends in Hemlock Farms come from the metropolitan areas of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, and other areas of Pennsylvania. They include a growing number of Jewish residents.

In 1971, a small group of Jewish residents met to form The Jewish Fellowship of Hemlock Farms. Representing the heart of the Jewish community in the Poconos, the Fellowship completed the religious presence of the three major faiths in Hemlock Farms. The Fellowship flourished, and it has taken an active role as a member of the Interfaith Council. For the first 7 years, services were held in members' homes and community buildings.

Rapidly increasing membership made possible the construction of its first permanent home in 1980—designed to seat 120. By 1992, the membership had grown to more than 400. The happy result is a new Jewish house of worship and community center designed to seat more than 500. It is under the full-time leadership of Rabbi David Spritzer. It is significant that an increasing number of Jewish families residing in other areas of the Poconos outside of Hemlock Farms are joining the Fellowship.

The Fellowship conducts religious services on Friday nights, Saturday mornings, and on the traditional religious holidays throughout the year. There are also many celebrations of Jewish life-cycle events such as weddings and Bar and Bat Mitzvahs. The Hebrew School and other activities of the Fellowship enrich Jewish cultural life. Through lectures, discussion groups, media presentations, socials, and auxiliary volunteer groups of men and women serve the needs of the Fellowship and the extended community. In doing so, the Fellowship enhances the identity of the Jewish people in the midst of diverse populations.

The Pocono Mountains region and Pike County in particular constitute the fastest growing sectors of Pennsylvania today. This includes, of course, the increasing number of Jewish residents. This change could not have happened during the first half of the twentieth century because of the existence of social, economic, and educational discrimination. According to historical reports in The Jews of Wilkes-Barre (Levin, Marjorie: Ed.), early nineteenth century Jewish establishment in the area took the form of mercantile service to both the coal industry and commerce along the local waterways. Jews were kept out of utility and banking industries until the 1950's and 1960's.

In 1955, because of the efforts of Pennsylvania Attorney General Herbert Cohen, Pocono Mountain hotels and resorts were compelled to comply with state law with the admissions of guests or have their liquor licenses revoked. Educational institutions, at the same time, publicly stated they would no longer condone discrimination regarding admissions. Since then, people of all ethnic origins have been increasingly welcome in the area.

At the dedication ceremony on May 28, 2000, the two Torah Scrolls, presently in the old building, will be passed to the new building from member to member lining the path connecting them. One Torah Scroll that was presented to the Jewish Fellowship several years ago had been written for and dedicated to an Eastern European community that no longer exists. It wandered with the generation of the Holocaust and survived like the Jewish people.

At the presentation ceremony, the president of the Fellowship declared:

> Today we will give a new home to this homeless survivor of the Holocaust. This Torah was to have been part of the collection of Hitler's Museum of an Extinct Race, a dream that happily did not come to fruition. Rather, it should be a reminder of the indestructibility of the Jewish people.

Marjorie Leven and Paul Zbiek in The Jews of Wilkes-Barre state:

> It is certainly true that many of today's Jewish professionals and business leaders do not need the economic and psychological security of a tightly-knit Jewish society to the same degree as their forebears. It is also true that maintenance of a unified Jewish community is more difficult in today's increasingly mobile and secularized society. Local Jewish institutions, through their programming, try to reinforce Jewish identity and help ensure Jewish continuity.
> On an individual and family level, the future for area Jews appears to be positive. On a communal level, Jewish institutions must meet the difficult challenge of assuring their relevancy to Jews while maintaining tradition and competing with general community activities for Jewish attention.

Members of Jewish Fellowship believe that the new building will facilitate the ability to do just that.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join with me in congratulating the Jewish Fellowship of Hemlock Farms, Pennsylvania, and wishing them every happiness in their new home.

INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 4228—CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF NUCLEAR TRANSFERS TO THE NORTH KOREA ACT OF 2000

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I introduced H.R. 4228, the Congressional Oversight of Nuclear Transfers to North Korea Act of 2000. I am pleased to be joined in offering this bipartisan legislation by the distinguished ranking Democratic member of the Subcommittee on Telecommunications, Trade, and Consumer Protection of the Committee on Commerce, Mr. MARKEY, and by the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Asia and the Pacific of our Committee on International Relations, Mr. BEREUTER, and by the distinguished chairman of the House Republican Policy Committee, Mr. COX.

This bill is designed to ensure that any transfers of United States nuclear equipment or technology to North Korea pursuant to the Agreed Framework of 1994 are carefully reviewed and fully supported by the United States Congress before they take place.

For all practical purposes, this bill already has passed the House of Representatives. On July 21st of last year, Congressman MARKEY and I offered an amendment to the Foreign Relations Authorization Act requiring the President to certify to Congress that North Korea has fulfilled all of its obligations under the Agreed Framework before a nuclear cooperation agreement between the United States and North Korea can enter into effect. Without such a nuclear cooperation agreement, key nuclear components cannot be transferred to North Korea from the United States as contemplated in the Agreed Framework. Our amendment further required that Congress enact a joint resolution concurring in the President's certification before such a nuclear cooperation agreement can enter into effect. That amendment was approved with strong bipartisan support. The final vote was 305 in favor to 120 against.

We later negotiated with the administration over our amendment in the conference committee on the Foreign Relations Authorization Act. We reached agreement with the administration over the language of the certification, but the administration refused to agree that Congress should have a role in evaluating North Korea's compliance with the Agreed Framework by means of a requirement that Congress enact a joint resolution concurring in the President's certification. Our certification requirement was enacted into law late last year as the North Korea Threat Reduction Act of 2000.

The bill we are introducing today amends the North Korea Threat Reduction Act to require that Congress concur in any certification submitted by the President pursuant to that act before a nuclear cooperation agreement between the United States and North Korea can enter into effect. To ensure that the Congress will carefully review such a certification, our bill includes expedited procedures for consideration in both the House and Senate of a joint resolution concurring in the President's certification.

TRIBUTE TO SARA MARTINEZ TUCKER

HON. HENRY BONILLA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, April 11, 2000

Mr. BONILLA. Mr. Speaker, today I recognize Sara Martinez Tucker for her outstanding leadership. Sara is the president and CEO of the Hispanic Scholarship Fund [HSF], the nation's leading Hispanic scholarship granting organization. In 1999, Sara secured a $50 million grant from the Lily Foundation, which was the largest direct donation for Hispanic higher education ever. Under Sara's leadership, HSF has instituted community college transfer and high school senior scholarship programs.

Sara is a native of Laredo, Texas. She graduated from my alma mater, the University of Texas in Austin, with a bachelor's degree in journalism. She returned to get her master's of business administration graduating with high honors. She is currently a member of UT's Chancellor's Council, the College of Natural Sciences Foundation Advisory Council, and the College of Communication Foundation Advisory Council.

Sara is also the chair of the Golden Gate University Board of Trustees. At a national level, she sits on the board for the steering committee of the Council for Aid to Education and the Coca-Cola Scholars Foundation's National Selection Committee. For the third consecutive year, Mrs. Tucker was honored as one of Hispanic Business Magazine's 100 Most Influential Hispanics. In 1998, she received HISPANIC Magazine's Heritage Achievement Award for Education.

Before HSF, Mrs. Tucker was a key executive with AT&T. In 1990, she became the first Hispanic female to reach AT&T's executive level. Sara served as the national vice president for AT&T's Global Business Communications Systems in her last assignment with AT&T.

I would like to congratulate Sara on these significant achievements, and I would also like to thank her for the great contribution she has made to increase educational opportunity.

SENATE—Wednesday, April 12, 2000

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Today's prayer will be offered by our guest Chaplain, the Reverend William K. Simmons, of Lexington, KY.

We are glad to have you with us.

PRAYER

The guest Chaplain, the Reverend William K. Simmons, offered the following prayer:

Let's pray together.

Almighty God, this body gathers today to conduct the business of the Republic. We pause to give thanks for Your blessing on our land and to seek Your continued care. Honor, we pray, the deliberations of these, selected by the people to represent them in guiding our Nation toward the goals of freedom, justice, and equality for all. Give each Member a sense of Your presence as he or she deliberates; may their judgments be those You can and will bless.

We also remember the families of these present. Care for them whether they be here or back home. Keep them safe within Your protective Spirit.

May we always be mindful that governance is a sacred pact between the government and its people. Let us not in this seat of power fail to hear them. Bless these Senators this day and inspire them to serve the people with wisdom and humility. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable WAYNE ALLARD, a Senator from the State of Colorado, led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The able Senator from Colorado is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. President, on behalf of the leader, I announce that today the Senate will be in a period of morning business until 12 noon. Following morning business, it is hoped that an agreement can be reached regarding the consideration of the marriage tax penalty legislation. If an agreement is reached, Senators may expect votes throughout the day. If no agreement is reached, the Senate will remain in morning business, with Senators speaking for up to 5 minutes each. As previously announced, the Senate will consider the budget resolution conference report and the McConnell stock options bill prior to the Easter recess.

I thank my colleagues for their attention and yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that during the period of morning business today Senators DORGAN and DURBIN be recognized for up to 15 minutes each. This would kind of balance out the time on both sides; that is, after the 2-hour block of time that has been set aside for others already.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLARD). Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there shall now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 12 noon, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

Under the previous order, the time until 11:30 a.m. shall be under the control of the Senator from Kansas, Mr. ROBERTS, and the Senator from Georgia, Mr. CLELAND.

The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, it is my understanding that Senator CLELAND and I have 2 hours reserved under the previous order in morning business. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is correct. Your time is reserved until 11:30 a.m.

NATIONAL SECURITY INTERESTS

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I am going to begin my remarks. We had originally intended for Senator CLELAND to begin this dialog. But I am going to go ahead since he has been detained. Then he can follow me. I do not think that is going to upset the order at all.

I thank my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Georgia, for this continued initiative and for his leadership in continuing our bipartisan foreign policy dialog.

As I said back in February during our first discussion, our objective is to try to achieve greater attention, focus, and mutual understanding—not to mention a healthy dose of responsibility—in this body in regard to America's global role and our vital national security interests. Our goal was to begin a process of building a bipartisan coalition, a consensus on what America's role should be in today's ever-changing, unsafe, and very unpredictable world.

This is our second dialog. We will focus today on how we can better define our vital national interests.

In doing our homework, both Senator CLELAND and I have been doing a lot of reading and pouring over quite a few books and articles and commentaries and reports and legislation and speeches and position papers and the like. If it was printed, we read it.

We have also been seeking the advice and counsel of everybody involved—in my case, the marine lance corporal about to deploy to Kosovo, to the very serious and hollow-faced old gentleman I visited at a Macedonian refugee camp, as well as foreign dignitaries and the military brass we admire and listen to as members of the Armed Services Committee, and all of the current and former advisors and experts and think tank dwellers and foreign policy gurus and intelligence experts. Needless to say, our foreign policy and national security homework universe is ever expanding and apparently without end. I hope I didn't leave anybody out.

We both now have impressive bibliographies that we can wave around and put in the RECORD and we can recommend to our colleagues to prove that our bibliography tank, as it were, is pretty full. We have very little or no excuse if we are not informed.

There was another book I wanted to bring to the attention of my colleagues. Its title is ''Going for the Max.'' It involves 12 principles for living life to the fullest, written by our colleague and my dear friend, with a most appropriate and moving foreword from the Senate Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd Ogilvie. This is a very easy and enjoyable read with a very inspirational message.

Chapter 10 of MAX's book states—and this is important—that success is a team effort, that coming together is a beginning, keeping together is progress, and working together is a success.

That is a pretty good model for our efforts today and a recipe for us to keep in mind in this body as we try to better fulfill our national security obligations and to protect our individual freedoms.

Thank you and well done, to my distinguished friend.

Senator CLELAND, in his remarks, will quote Owen Harries, editor of the publication, the National Interest. He will point out the need for restraint in regard to exercising our national power. Editor Harris warned—and this is what Senator CLELAND will say—

It is not what Americans think of the United States but what others think of it that will decide the matter.

When we are talking about ''matter,'' the ''matter'' in this case is stability and successful foreign and national security policy. I could not agree more. Senator CLELAND will go on to quote numerous statements from foreign leaders and editorials from leading international publications and commentaries from respected observers around the globe, from our allies and from the fence sitters and our would-be adversaries.

Sadly, I have to tell my colleagues that all were very critical of U.S. foreign policy. The basic thrust of the criticism, as described by Senator CLELAND—and he will be saying this. Again, I apologize that I started first. In the order of things, we are sort of reversing this. I am giving him a promo, if that is okay. At any rate, Senator CLELAND will state:

The United States has made a conscious decision to use our current position of predominance to pursue unilateralist foreign and national security policies.

Senator CLELAND is right. Dean Joseph S. Nye of the Kennedy School of Government and former U.S. Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Affairs warns about the CNN effect in the formulation and conduct of our foreign policy; the free flow of information and the shortened news cycles that have a huge impact on public opinion, and placing some items at the top of the public agenda that might otherwise warrant a lower priority; diverting attention from the A list of strategic issues of vital national security. What am I talking about? What does this criticism really suggest?

We need to take the spin off. We need to take off our rose-colored, hegemonic glasses and take a hard look at the world and what the world thinks of us. I have a suggestion. It would only take Senators 10 minutes a day. Every Member of the Senate can and should receive what are called ''Issue Focus Reports.'' These are reports on foreign media reaction to the world issues of the day. They are put out by the State Department. We at least should be aware of what others think of us and our foreign policy. Unfortunately and sadly, it is not flattering.

For instance, the February 24 Issue Focus detailed foreign commentary from publications within our NATO allies, those who comprised Operation Allied Force in Kosovo, headlines of 39 reports from 10 countries. If my colleagues will bear with me a moment, these are some of the headlines. This is the Issue Focus I am talking about. It is a very short read. Senators could have that or could have this report at their disposal every week. Again, these are leading publications—some liberal, some conservative, some supportive of the United States and some not. Just as a catch-as-catch-can summary, listen to the headlines:

Kosovo Unrest—A Domino Effect; Another War?; Wither Kosovo?; Holding Back The Tide Of Ethnic Cleansing; Losing The Peace; By The Waters of Mitrovica; West Won The War, But Now Faces Losing The Peace; Holding Fast In The Kosovar Trap; Speculation On U.S. Domination In The Balkans; Whoever Believed In Multi-Ethnic Kosovo; Kosovo Calculations; The U.S. Is Playing With Fire; The West Is Helpless In Kosovo; Mitrovica, The Shadow Of The Wall Is Back; Military Intervention Against Serbia A Mistake; U.S. and Europe Are Also Clashing In Mitrovica; Kosovo Chaos Is A Trap For NATO; A Failure That Burns; The Difficult Peace.

It goes on and on.

This kind of reading would help us a great deal in understanding how others really think of us. The March 24 Issue Focus, based on 49 reports from leading newspapers and publications in 24 countries, assessed the U.S. and NATO policy 1 year after Operation Allied Force in the bombing of Kosovo. Summed up, the articles conclude it is time to ask some hard questions. Some unsettling headlines—again, this is a wide variety of publications from all ideologies and the whole political spectrum:

A War With No Results; No End To The Kosovo Tragedy; Europe's Leaders Warned Of A New Crisis; The West Fiasco In Kosovo; Halfway Results; A Year Later: Where Do We Stand; A Victory Gambled Away; No Sign Of Will For Peace; Making Progress By Moving Backwards In The Balkans.

Again, it goes on and on.

I don't mean to suggest that we should base our foreign policy on foreign headlines or perceived perception with regard to criticism in foreign countries. If we take the spin off, I think a case can be made that we are seeing a world backlash against U.S. foreign policy no matter how well-intentioned.

A timely article last month by Tyler Marshall and Jim Mann of the Los Angeles Times summarized it very well when they said:

The nation's prominence as the world's sole superpower leaves even allies very uneasy. They fear Washington—

By the way, I certainly include the Congress—has lost its commitment to international order. America's dominant shadow has long been welcomed in much of the world as a shield from tyranny, a beacon of goodwill, an inspiration of unique values. But, ten years after the collapse of Communism left the United States to pursue its interests without a world rival, that shadow is assuming a darker character. In the State Department, it is called the hegemony problem, a fancy way of describing the same resentment that schoolchildren have for the biggest, toughest, richest and smartest kid in school.

The Marshall and Mann article goes on to say that America is suffering from a bad case of ''me first,'' that during the administration years we have seen a lot of focus and it has been on new objectives, pressing American commercial interests, the championing of democracy—certainly nothing wrong with that—and then the intervention, militarily, to protect human rights. They state the goals that concern the foreign leaders are less than the manner in which they have been pursued, a manner that appears inconsistent and sporadic and capricious. The article cites very serious backlash. Thirty-eight nations rallied to fight Iraq in 1991. Only Britain answers to the call today. Today, the French—our oldest ally—along with China, India, and Russia, have all discussed independently, or in consultation, ways to counter the balance of the enormity of American power.

Japan is making plans to develop an independent military capability. In Europe, pro-Americanism is on the wane. European leaders cut their teeth on the protests of the 1960s, not the American aid packages of the 1950s. The situation in Russia is especially perilous with Russians seeing secondhand treatment—by their definition—with the U.S. in regard to their continued economic morass, NATO expansion, Kosovo, and the American condemnation of Moscow's war against Chechnya.

Under the banner of the law of unintended effects, Washington Post columnist Charles Krauthammer opined the cost of our occupancy of Bosnia and Kosovo which has already cost tens of billions of dollars, drained our defense resources, and strained a hollow military which is charged with protecting vital American strategic interests in such crises areas as the Persian Gulf, the Taiwan Strait, and also the Korean peninsula. But he cited another cost, as he put it, more subtle and far heavier. He said that Russia has just moved from the democratically committed, if erratic, Boris Yeltsin to the dictatorship of the law, as promised by the new President, former KGB agent Vladimir Putin. I have his article. It is called ''The Path to Putin.'' I ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PATH TO PUTIN

(By Charles Krauthammer)

In late February, as the first anniversary of our intervention in Kosovo approached, American peacekeepers launched house-to-house raids in Mitrovica looking for weapons. They encountered a rock-throwing mob and withdrew. Such is our reward for our glorious little victory in the Balkans: police work from which even Madeleine K. Albright, architect of the war, admits there is no foreseeable escape. (''The day may come,'' she wrote on Tuesday, ''when a Kosovo-scale operation can be managed without the help of the United States, but it has not come yet.'')

The price is high. Our occupations of Kosovo and Bosnia have already cost tens of billions of dollars, draining our defense resources and straining a military (already hollowed out by huge defense cuts over the last decade) charged with protecting vital American strategic interests in such crisis areas as the Persian Gulf, the Taiwan Strait and the Korean Peninsula.

But there is another cost, more subtle and far heavier. Russia has just moved from the democratically committed, if erratic, Boris Yeltsin to the ''dictatorship of the law'' promised by the new president, former KGB agent Vladimir Putin. Putin might turn out to be a democrat, but the man who won the presidency by crushing Chechnya will more likely continue as the national security policeman of all the Russias.

What does that have to do with Kosovo? ''Without Kosovo, Putin would not be Russian president today,'' says Dimitri Simes, the Russia expert and president of the Nixon Center.

The path from Kosovo to Putin is not that difficult to trace. It goes through Chechnya. Americans may not see the connection, but Russians do.

Russians had long been suffering an ''Afghan-Chechen syndrome'' under which they believed they could not prevail in local conflicts purely by the use of force. Kosovo demonstrated precisely the efficacy of raw force.

Russians had also been operating under the assumption that to be a good international citizen they could not engage in the unilateral use of force without the general approval of the international community. Kosovo cured them of that illusion.

And finally, Russia had acquiesced in the expansion of NATO under the expectation and assurance that it would remain, as always, a defensive alliance. Then, within 11 days of incorporating Hungary, Poland and the Czech Republic, NATO was launching its first extraterritorial war.

The Russians were doubly humiliated because the Balkans had long been in their sphere of influences with Serbia as their traditional ally. The result was intense anti-American, anti-NATO feeling engendered in Russia. NATO expansion had agitated Russian elites; Kosovo inflamed the Russian public.

Kosovo created in Russia what Simes calls a ''national security consensus:'' the demand for a strong leader to do what it takes to restore Russia's standing and status. And it made confrontation with the United States a badge of honor.

The dash to Pristina airport by Russian troops under the noses of the allies as they entered Kosovo was an unserious way of issuing the challenge. But the support this little adventure enjoyed at home showed Russian leaders the power of the new nationalism.

The first Russian beneficiary of Kosovo was then-Prime Minister Yevgeny Primakov. But it was Prime Minister Putin who understood how to fully exploit it. Applying the lessons of Kosovo, he seized upon Chechen provocations into neighboring Dagestan to launch his merciless war on Chechnya. It earned him enormous popularity and ultimately the presidency.

One of Putin's first promises is to rebuild Russia's military-industrial complex. We are now saddled with him for four years, probably longer, much longer.

The Clinton administration has a congenital inability to distinguish forest from trees. It obsesses over paper agreements, such as the chemical weapons treaty, which will not advance to American interests one iota. It expends enormous effort on Somalia, Haiti, Bosnia and Kosovo, places of (at best) the most peripheral interest to the United States. And it lets the big ones slip away.

Saddam Hussein is back building his weapons of mass destruction. China's threats to Taiwan grow. The American military is badly stretched by far-flung commitments in places of insignificance. Most important of all, Russia, on whose destiny and direction hinge the future of Eastern Europe and the Caspian Basin, has come under the sway of a cold-eyed cop, destroyer of Chechnya and heir to Yuri Andropov, the last KGB graduate to rule Russia.

Such is the price of the blinkered do-goodism of this administration. We will be paying the price far into the next.

Mr. ROBERTS. Charles Krauthammer points out in the article—and I will read a little of it—that, basically, what the Russians thought was the path from Kosovo to Putin is not that difficult to trace. It goes through Chechnya.

Americans may not see the connection, but the Russians do. The Russians have been operating under the assumption that to be a good international citizen, they could not engage in the unilateral use of force without the general approval of the international community. Well, Kosovo certainly cured them of that illusion. Finally, Russia acquiesced in the expansion of NATO under the expectation and assurance that it would remain always a defensive alliance. I am not arguing the pros and cons of that, but simply the reaction in Russia. Russians were doubly humiliated because the Balkans had long been in their sphere of influence, with Serbia as their traditional ally. The result was an intense anti-American, anti-NATO feeling engendered in Russia, and NATO expansion had really agitated the Russian elites, and Kosovo inflamed the Russian public.

So Kosovo created what has been called a national security consensus. The demand for a strong leader to do what it takes to restore Russia's standing and status made the confrontation with the United States a badge of honor. I will tell you, in going to Moscow and talking with Russian leaders regarding the very important cooperative threat reduction programs that happened to come under the jurisdiction of my subcommittee, you get a lecture on Kosovo for a half hour even before you have a cup of coffee. So this article has some merit.

In regard to Mr. Krauthammer's article:

The first Russian beneficiary of Kosovo was then-Prime Minister Primakov. But it was Prime Minister Putin who understood how to fully exploit it. Applying the lessons of Kosovo, he seized upon the Chechen provocations into neighboring Dagestan to launch his merciless war on Chechnya. It earned him enormous popularity and ultimately the presidency.

We are now saddled with him for four years, probably longer, much longer.

We hope the man without a face—which is how some describe Putin—we hope we can work with him and build a positive relationship. I think under the law of unintended effects, this is a good example.

In China, obviously, the political wounds fester in the wake of the U.S. bombing of the Chinese Embassy in Belgrade; the Taiwan issue, charges of espionage, and the criticism of human rights; and continued controversy over whether or not Congress will approve a trading status that will result in the U.S. simply taking advantage of trade concessions that the Chinese have made to us.

In Latin America, the lack of a so-called fast-track authority and U.S. trade policy is muddled. You can drive south into Central America and into trade relations with our competitors in the European Union. My friend from Nebraska, Senator HAGEL, who will join us in about an hour, put it this way:

It worries me, first, because most of us are not really picking this up on our radar—this sense that we don't care about what our trading partners or allies think. It is going to come back and snap us in some ways. It will be very bad for this country.

Well, the criticism from the Marshall and Mann article becomes very harsh when they cite why the U.S. has become so aloof. I am quoting here:

* * * a President who engages only episodically on international issues and too often has failed to use either the personal prestige or the power of his office to pursue key foreign policy goals. * * * a Congress that cares little about foreign affairs in the wake of the Cold War and seems to understand even less. * * * a poisonous relationship between the two branches of our Government putting partisanship over national interests * * * an American public inattentive to world affairs and confused by all of the partisan backbiting now that the principal reference point—the evil of communism—has all but vanished as a major threat.

Indeed, that is a pretty harsh assessment. Aside from all the criticism and 20/20 hindsight—and it is easy to do that, trying to chart a well-defined foreign policy course is more complicated and difficult today than ever before. Both Senator CLELAND and I understand that. As chairman of the newly created Emerging Threats and Capabilities Subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee, it seems as if we have a new emerging threat at our doorstep almost every day. I am talking about the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, rogue nations, ethnic wars, drugs, and terrorism.

Concluding our second hearing on the subcommittee this session, and again asking the experts, ''What keeps you up at night?'' the answer came back: ''Cyber attacks and biological attacks'' from virtually any kind of source, and the bottom line was not if, but when.

So it is not easy, but if we are worried about proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, we should also be worried about the proliferation of overall foreign policy roles, not to mention the role the U.S. should play in the world today.

Some may say events of the day will determine our strategy on a case-by-case basis. That seems to be the case. But I say that is a dangerous path, as evidenced by adversaries that did not or will not believe we have the will to respond.

Former National Security Adviser, Gen. Brent Scowcroft, put it this way in a speech at the Brookings Institution National Forum, and he said this in response to some questions:

The nature of our approach to foreign policy also changed from, I would say, from foreign policy as a continuing focus of the United States, which it had been for the 50 years of the Cold War, to an episodic attention on the part of the United States, and thus without much of a theme, and further to that, a foreign policy whose decisions were heavily influenced by polls, by what was popular back home or what was assumed to be popular.

General Scowcroft went on to say:

So at a period when we should have been focusing on structures to improve the possibility that we could actually make some changes in the way the world operated, and some improvements, we have frittered away the time. I think never has history left us such a clean slate as we had in 1991. And we have not taken advantage of it.

One point on looking ahead from here. I think we have begun engaging on a fundamental transformation of the international system with insufficient thought.

We, NATO, President Clinton, the U.N. Secretary General, are moving to replace the Treaty of Westphalia, replacing the notion of the sovereignty of the nation-state with what I would call the sovereignty of the individual and humanitarianism. That is a profound change in the way the world operates. And we're doing it with very little analysis of what it is we're about and how we want this to turn out.

Evidenced by the Charles Krauthammer article.

Again I quote from the general:

In Kosovo, just for example, we conducted a devastating bombing of a country in an attempt to protect a minority within that country. And, as a result, we're now presiding over reverse ethnic cleansing. What's the difference between Kosovo and Chechnya?

That is a question not many of us want to ponder.

How many people must be placed in jeopardy to warrant an invasion of sovereignty? Where? By whom? How does one set priorities among these kind of crises?

And, events of the day, again dominated by the so-called CNN effect, ignore the same kind of core questions posed by General Scowcroft and reflected again in an article by Doyle McManus the Washington Bureau Chief of the Los Angeles Times: When should the United States use military power?

President Clinton has argued in the Clinton Doctrine that Americans should intervene wherever U.S. power can protect ethnic minorities from genocide. I would add a later UN speech seemed to indicate a backing off from that position.

How will the United States deal with China and Russia, the two great potentially hostile powers?

What is the biggest threat to our nation's security and how should the U.S. respond? Weapons of mass destruction head the list of course, but the President has added in terrorism, disease, poverty, disorder to the list.

I know about the Strategic Concept of NATO, when that was passed during the 50-year anniversary last spring in Washington. Those of us who read the Strategic Concept and all of the missions that entailed—moving away from a collective defense—we were concerned about that. We asked for a report as to whether that obligated the United States to all of these missions.

Finally, we received a report from the administration of about three pages. The report said we are not obligated and not responsible. If we are not responsible for the Strategic Concept of NATO, what are we doing adopting it?

When the U.S. acts, should it wait for the approval of the United Nations, seek the approval of our allies, or strike out on its own?

However, my colleagues, the biggest question remains and it was defined well by retired Air Force Brigadier General David Herrelko who wrote in the Dayton Daily News recently:

''The United States needs to get a grip on what our national interests are, what we stand for and what we can reasonably do in the world before we can size our military forces and before we send them in harms way. We must hammer out, in a public forum, just what our national priorities are.'' He says, and I agree, we cannot continue adrift. Consider this retired military man's following points:

More Americans have died in peacekeeping operations (Lebanon, Somalia, Haiti, Bosnia) than in military actions (Iraq, Panama, Grenada and Yugoslavia).

We have a president seeking United Nations approval for military intervention but skipping the dialogue with Congress.

I might add, the Congress skips the dialog with the President.

We commit our military forces before we clearly state our objectives.

We gradually escalate hostilities and we leave standing forces behind.

Some 7,000 now in Kosovo, and the peacekeepers. When there was no peace, they became the target.

General Herrelko ends his article with a plea: ''We are starved for meaningful dialogue between the White House and the Congress.''

I agree Mr. President and would add we are starved for dialogue here in the Senate as well and that is why we are here.

And, as Senator CLELAND has pointed out, our goal is not to achieve unanimity on each and every issue but to at least contribute to an effort to focus attention on our challenges instead of reacting piecemeal as events of the day take place.

And, goodness knows even if the foreign policy stadium is not full of interested spectators, we do have quite an array of players. LA Times Bureau Chief McManus has his own program:

Humanitarian interventionists, mostly Democrats and President Clinton with Kosovo being the prime example. Nationalist interventionists, mostly Republicans who would intervene in defense of democracy, trade and military security.

Realists, both Republicans and Democrats skeptical about intervention but wanting the United States to block any concert of hostile powers.

I think Senator CLELAND would be in that category.

Minimalists, those who think the United States should stay out of foreign entanglements and quarrels and save its strengths for major conflicts.

Richard Haass, former foreign policy advisor in the Bush administration and now with the Brookings Institution, has defined the players in the foreign policy program much along the same lines as Senator CLELAND did in his opening remarks during our first forum last month:

Wilsonians who wish to assist other countries achieve democracy;

Economists, who wish to promote trade, prosperity and free markets;

Realists, who wish to preserve an orderly balance of power without worrying too much what kind of states are doing the balancing;

Hegemonists who want to make sure the United States keeps its status as the only superpower;

Humanitarians, who wish to address oppression, poverty, hunger and environmental damage;

And, Minimalists, who wish to avoid spending time or tax dollars on any of these matters.

I'm not sure of any of my colleagues would want to be identified or characterized in any one of these categories but again the key question is whether or not the members of this foreign policy posse can ride in one direction and better define our vital national interests and from that definition establish priorities and a national strategy to achieve them.

Fortunately, as Senator CLELAND has pointed out, some very distinguished and experienced national security and foreign policy leaders have already provided several road maps that make a great deal of sense. What does not make a great deal of sense is that few are paying attention.

Lawrence Korb, Director of Studies of the Council on Foreign Relations, in a military analysis published in a publication called ''Great Decisions'' has focused on the Powell Doctrine named after retired Joint Chiefs Chairman Colin Powell, citing the dangers of military engagement and the need to limit commitments to absolutely vital national interests. On the other hand, the sweeping Clinton Doctrine emphasizes a global policing role for the United States.

How do we reconcile these two approaches?

I am not sure there is only one yellow brick foreign policy road but there are several good alternatives that have been suggested:

First, I am going to refer to what I call the ''Old Testament'' on foreign policy in terms of vital national interests. This is the Commission on America's National Interests, 1996.

Second, a national security strategy for a new century put out by the White House this past December. If you are being critical, or suggesting, or if you have a different approach than the current policy, as I have been during my remarks, you have an obligation to read this. The White House put this out as of December of 1999.

Third, adapting U.S. Defense to Future Needs by Ashton Carter former Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security in the first Clinton administration and currently professor of science and international affairs at Harvard.

We had him testify to this before the Emerging Threats Subcommittee just a month ago.

Fourth, defining U.S. National Strategy by Kim Holmes and Jon Hillen of the Heritage Foundation, a detailed summary of threats confronting us today with appropriate commentary about their priorities.

Fifth, transforming American Alliances by Andrew Krepinevvitch of the Center for Strategic and Budgetary Assessments.

He has been of real help to us in regard to the Emerging Threats subcommittee, and also the full Committee on Armed Services.

Sixth, a highly recommended article ''Back to Basics: U.S. Foreign Policy for the Coming Decade,'' by James E. Goodby, a senior fellow at the Brookings Institution and former Ambassador to Finland and Kenneth Wisebrode, Director of the International Security Program at the Atlantic Council of the United States.

In this regard, Messrs. Goodby and Weisbrode have summarized the concerns of Senator CLELAND and myself very well when they said:

The most common error of policymakers is to fail to distinguish among our levels of interest, leading to an over commitment to higher level interests. In other words, strategic or second tier interests, if mishandled, can threaten vital interests. But, strategic interests, if well understood and acted upon, can support vital interests.

Goodby and Weisbrode do us a favor by following the example of others in prioritizing our vital national security interests:

First and vital, homeland defense from threats to well being and way of life of the American people. I can't imagine anyone would have any quarrel with that.

Second and strategic, I am talking about peace and stability in Europe and northeast Asia and open access to our energy supplies.

Third, and of lesser interest, although it is of interest, stability in South Asia, Latin America, Africa, and open markets favorable to the United States and to world prosperity.

The authors suggest how to accomplish these goals with what they call three essential pieces of foreign policy balance:

First, stability and cohesion in Europe and between the European Union and the United States; second, mature and effective relations among China, Russia, and the West to include first among all others, a regular forum to oversee the reduction of the risk of nuclear weapons; and third, systematic patterns of consultation and policy coordination of the States benefiting from the global economy and positive relations between those States and the developing world.

The authors also suggest the means to their ends by looking ahead and stressing the need for eventual NATO and Russian cooperation and stability, the need for a similar organization and effort between the United States and China, Japan, Russia, and Korea, and lastly, American support for the United Nations.

In a self-acknowledged understatement, they state this is going to be a hard and tedious task. This is not easy. But it is absolutely necessary.

Now, Mr. Goodby and Mr. Weisbrode are not critical per se, but they issue a warning and this is what we are trying to bring to the attention of the Senate. It is central to what Senator CLELAND and I are trying to accomplish with these foreign policy and national security dialogs.

The public perception and the private reality suggest worrisome disorganization and a certain degree of impatience with a foggy conceptual foreign policy framework. It is time to return to the basic elements of the American role in the world and to raise the public understanding of them.

American strategic planners and policymakers cannot afford to be arbitrarily selective about where and when to engage U.S. power. This would make our foreign policy aimless and lose the support of the American people.

They continue:

We should set out each of America's interests and how they best may be achieved with the cooperation of other powers. However, this cannot take place until the executive and legislative branches of government resurrect the workable partnership in foreign affairs that once existed but exists no more.

And Senator CLELAND, my colleagues, that is why we are here today and that is why we are involved in this forum. In my personal view, we are starved for meaningful foreign policy and national security dialog between the White House and the Congress and within the Congress. The stakes are high.

I recall well the meeting in Senator CLELAND's office between Senator CLELAND, myself, and Senator SNOWE, worried about our involvement in the Balkans. I had an amendment, we had an amendment; we passed both amendments, setting out guidelines that the administration would respond, saying that before we spend money in regard to the defense appropriations or in the authorization bill, hopefully we can establish a better dialog, trying to figure out what our role was in regard to our constitutional responsibilities, I say to my good friend, without having to come to the floor with appropriations bills and have an amendment and say you can't spend the money for this until you explain this. That is no way to operate.

It seems to me we can do a much better job. The stakes are high.

As Carl Sandberg wrote of Americans: Always there arose enough reserves of strength, balances of sanity, portions of wisdom to carry the Nation through to a fresh start with ever renewing vitality.

I hope this dialog and these discussions, all of the priority recommendations we have had from experts in the field, will help us begin that fresh start. We cannot afford to do otherwise.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a chart that outlines and prioritizes the vital national security interests of the United States as recommended by the many experts and organizations I have discussed earlier in my remarks. This chart was prepared by Maj. Scott Kindsvater, an outstanding pilot in the U.S. Air Force and a congressional fellow in my office.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEFINING U.S. NATIONAL INTEREST

Source	Vital Interests	Important Interests	Other Interests
''A National Security Strategy for a New Century''; The White House; 1/5/2000.	1. Physical security of our territory and that of our allies. 2. Safety of our citizens. 3. Economic well-being of our society. 4. Protection of critical infrastructures from paralyzing attack (energy, banking and finance, telecommunications, transportation, water systems, and emergency services).	1. Regions where we have sizable economic stake or commitments to allies. 2. Protecting global environment from severe harm. 3. Crises with a potential to generate substantial and highly destabilizing refugee flows.	1. Responding to natural and manmade disasters. 2. Promoting human rights and seeking to halt gross violations of those rights. 3. Supporting democratization, adherence to the rule of law and civilian control of the military. 4. Promoting sustainable development and environmental protection.
''Americans and the World: A Survey at Century's End,'' Foreign Policy, Spring 1999.	American public's foreign policy priorities—1.—Prevent the spread of nuclear weapons. 2. Stop the influx of illegal drugs into U.S. 3. Protect American jobs. 4. Combat international terrorism. 5. Secure adequate energy supplies.—(American foreign policy leadership priorities)—1. Prevent the spread of nuclear weapons. 2. Combat international terrorism. 3. Defend the security of U.S. allies. 4. Maintain superior military power worldwide. 5. Fight world hunger.
''America's National Interests,'' Commission on America's National Interests; 7/1996.	1. Prevent, deter, and reduce the threat of nuclear, biological, and chemical (NBC) weapons attacks on the United States. 2. Prevent the emergence of a hostile hegemon in Europe or Asia. 3. Prevent the emergence of a hostile major power on U.S. borders or in control of the seas. 4. Prevent the catastrophic collapse of major global systems: trade, financial markets, supplies of energy, and environmental. 5. Ensure the survival of US allies.	(Extremely Important)—1. Prevent, deter, and reduce the threat of the use of nuclear or biological weapons anywhere. 2. Prevent the regional proliferation of NBC weapons and delivery systems. 3. Promote the acceptance of international rules of law and mechanisms for resolving disputes peacefully. 4. Prevent the emergence of a regional hegemon in important regions, such as the Persian Gulf. 5. Protect U.S. friends and allies from significant external aggression. 6. Prevent the emergence of a reflexively adversarial major power in Europe or Asia. 7. Prevent and, if possible at reasonable cost, end major conflicts in important geographic regions. 8. Maintain a lead in key military-related and other strategic technologies (including information and computers). 9. Prevent massive, uncontrolled immigration across U.S. borders. 10. Suppress, contain, and combat terrorism, transnational crime, and drugs. 11 Prevent genocide.	Just Important—1. Discourage massive human rights violations in foreign countries as a matter of official government policy. 2. Promote pluralism, freedom, and democracy in strategically important states as much as feasible without destabilization. 3. Prevent and, if possible at low cost, end conflicts in strategically insignificant geographic regions. 4. Protect the lives and well-being of American citizens who are targeted or taken hostage by terrorist organizations. 5. Boost the domestic output of key strategic industries and sectors (where market imperfections may make a deliberate industrial policy rational). 6. Prevent the nationalization of U.S.-owned assets abroad. 7. Maintain an edge in the international distribution of information to ensure that American values continue to positively influence the cultures of foreign nations. 9. Reduce the U.S. illegal alien and drug problems. 10. Maximize U.S. GNP growth from international trade and investment.
''Adapting to U.S. Defence to Future Needs,'' Ashton B. Carter, Survival, Winter 1999–2000.	A-List: Potential future problems that could threaten U.S. survival, way of life and position in the world; possibly preventable—1. Danger that Russia might descend into chaos, isolation and aggression. 2. Danger that Russia and the other Soviet successor states might lose control of the nuclear, chemical and biological weapons legacy of the former Soviet Union. 3. Danger that, as China emerges, it could spawn hostility rather than becoming cooperatively engaged in the international system. 4. Danger that weapons of mass destruction (WMD) will proliferate and present a direct military threat to U.S. forces and territory.	B-List: Actual threat to vital U.S. interests; deterrable through ready forces—1. Major-Theater War in NE Asia. 2. Major Theater War in Southwest Asia.	C-List Important problems that do not threaten vital U.S. interests—1. Kosovo. 2. Bosnia. 3. East Timor. 3. Rwanda. 4. Somalia. 5. Haiti.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUTCHINSON). The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I cannot express strongly enough what an honor it is to be on the floor of the Senate and listen to my distinguished colleague talk about the need for a meaningful dialog on a subject that often gets put down at the bottom of the list when it comes to public issues. I am reminded of a line from one of Wellington's troops after the battle at Waterloo, after the battle was won, that in time of war, and not before, God of the soldier, men adore; but in time of peace, with all things righted, God is forgotten and the soldier slighted.

Unfortunately, I think my dear colleague, Senator PAT ROBERTS, and I have sensed that the vital interests of the United States, the interests that cause us to go to war, the interests that compel us to fight for our vital national interests, these basic fundamental principles have been lost in the shuffle. Somehow they have been slighted and somehow the issue of foreign policy and defense has been shoved to the background. We have lost sight of the basis of who we are and what we are about as we go into the 21st century, which is why we have tried through this dialog to call attention to this issue.

We have some wonderful colleagues joining in our dialog, including my fellow Vietnam veteran, Senator KERREY, and Senator HAGEL, as well as Senator HUTCHINSON and Senator KYL.

For a few weeks, I wondered whether I was a little bit out of touch and wondered whether or not this dialog on American foreign policy and global reach was something that was out of touch with what was going on in the world. I went back home the last few days and in my own hometown paper in Atlanta I came across an article, a New York Times piece, Anti-Americanism Growing Across Europe.

Hello. Good morning. I realized that what I was seeing in a daily newspaper was what I was attempting to engage here in terms of a perspective on our global reach, a sense that we were overcommitted in the world and yet underfunded, a sense of mismatch between our ends and our means to achieve those ends. I realized we really were on target.

In my State, we say that even a blind hog can root up an acorn every now and then. I think my distinguished colleague and I from Kansas have rooted up an acorn.

We are on to something. That is a reason why I am strengthened in pursuing this dialog, and I am delighted we will have additional Senators entering into this dialog because unless we ourselves begin to define who we are as a nation, what we want out of our role as a nation, and where we want to go and how we exercise our power, unless we decide it, it will occur by happenstance. We will move from crisis to crisis. We will not have a plan and we will end up in places in the world where we know not of what we speak.

One of the quotes I have come across, one of the lines that continues to reinforce my view of my own concern and caution about America's expanded role in the world, is from our first dialog back in February when Owen Harries, editor of the National Interests, summed up his views on the appropriate approach for the United States in today's world with the following comments: I advocate restraint because every dominant power in the last four centuries that has not practiced it, that has been excessively intrusive and demanding, has ultimately been confronted by a hostile coalition of other powers. Americans may believe that their country, being exceptional, need have no worries in this respect. I do not agree. It is not what Americans think of the United States but what others think of it that will decide the matter. Anti-Americanism is growing across Europe. The distinguished Senator from Kansas has accumulated, in a shocking way, some headlines from 40 or 50 newspapers among our allies and our friends, questioning our role, particularly in the Balkans, but questioning our exercise of power, as it were.

The foreign perspective is not one to which we generally devote much attention in the Congress, certainly after the cold war is over, but our attention to foreign affairs has been slight. We do not really devote much attention to foreign affairs and consideration of our foreign policy options unless we are threatened.

I am delighted Senator ROBERTS is sitting as the chairman of the Emerging Threats Subcommittee in the Armed Services Committee. He has his eye on the ball, certainly an emerging ball in terms of threats to our country. I think the overall threat is that we do not realize one could occur now that the cold war is over.

I think, also, one of the emerging threats, from my point of view, is that we will overcommit and overexpand and overreact and, instead of being only a superpower working with others and sharing power, we will wind up imposing—by default, almost, in the power vacuums around the world—a pax Americana that cannot be sustained by the will of the people in this country—again, a mismatch between means and ends.

But it is important, as Mr. Harries suggests, to focus on this issue.

I have spent some time, over recent months, as has the distinguished Senator from Kansas, reviewing what foreign opinion makers and leaders are saying about the United States. While we may think, as I do, that our country has not made a clear choice about our global role, the view from abroad is very different. Many people think we have chosen the path we are now on.

A Ukrainian commentator, in the Kiev newspaper Zerkalo Nedeli, wrote in April of last year:

> Currently, two opinions are possible in the world— the U.S. opinion and the wrong opinion. . . .

He said the U.S.

> . . . has announced its readiness to act as it thinks best, should U.S. interests require this, despite the United Nations. And let those whose interests are violated think about it and draw conclusions. This is the current world order or world disorder.

That, from Kiev.

The influential Times of India editorialized in July of last year:

> New Delhi should not lose sight of the kind of global order the U.S. is fashioning. NATO's policies towards Yugoslavia and the U.S.-led military alliance's new Strategic Concept are based on the degradation of international law and a more muscular approach to intervention. Such a trend is certainly not in India's interest.

So India has concluded: Why don't we go it alone? Why don't we develop ourselves as a nuclear power?

The President of Brazil was quoted on April 22 of last year in an interview with a Sao Paulo newspaper as to his views about the United States: While President Cardoso was generally sympathetic to the United States and supportive of good bilateral relations between our two countries, the President of Brazil nonetheless expressed certain misgivings about our approach to international relations.

He said:

> The United States currently constitutes the only large center of political, economic, technologic, and even cultural power. This country has everything to exert its domain on the rest of the world, but it must share it. There must be rules, even for the stronger ones. When the strongest one makes decisions without listening, everything becomes a bit more difficult. In this European war, NATO made the decision, but who legalized it? That's the main problem. I am convinced more than ever that we need a new political order in the world.

I think I am correct that Jack Kennedy once indicated we would seek a world where the strong are just and the weak preserved. Because we are strong now, I think we have to have an inordinate sense of being just. But these are all voices from countries that have not traditionally been close to the United States. Let's look, then, at some of our NATO allies, nations with whom we presumably share the closest relationships and common interests.

In a commentary from February of last year in Berlin's Die Tageszeitung, a German writer observes:

> There is a growing number of people with more and more prominent protagonists who are at odds with American supremacy and who are inclined to see the action of the State Department as a policy of interests. And Washington is offering no reason to deny the justification of these reservations. As unilateral as possible and as multilateral as necessary—that's the explicit maxim under which U.S. President Bill Clinton has pursued his foreign and defense policies in the last 2 years.

From Italy, an Italian general expressed the following view in the December 1999 edition of the Italian geopolitical quarterly LiMes:

> The condition all the NATO countries as a whole find themselves in is closer to the condition of vassalage with respect to the United States than it is to the condition of alliance. NATO is not able to influence the policy of the United States because its existence in effect depends on it. No member countries are able to resist the American pressures because their own resources are officially at the disposal of everybody and not just the United States.

What evidence do our foreign friends cite for such concerns? The influential left-of-center Dutch daily NRC Handelsblad wrote last October:

> The U.S. Senate's rejection of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty does not just represent a heavy defeat for President Clinton. Far more important are the consequences for world order of treaties designed to stop the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and hence boost world security. . . .

According to this newspaper in the Netherlands:

> Unfortunately, the decision fits in with a growing tendency on the part of U.S. foreign policy to place greater emphasis on the United States' own room for maneuver and less on international cooperation and traditional idealism.

In a similar vein, the Times of London carried a commentary last November. It said:

> The real fear is of an American retreat, not to isolationism, but to unilateralism, exacerbated at present by the post-impeachment weakness of President Clinton and his standoff with the Republican Congress. That's shown by the Senate's rejection of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, the stalling of free trade initiatives, and the refusal to pay arrears to the United Nations. The U.S. is seen as wayward and inward-looking.

While there are some exceptions, the majority of statements I looked at expressed the view the United States has indeed made the conscious decision to use our current position of predominance to pursue unilateralist foreign and national security policy.

When I first came to Washington 30-some-odd years ago as a young intern, I found out there could not be a conspiracy here. We are not that well organized. There cannot be a unilateralist conspiracy in the world by the United States—we are not that well organized. What has evolved is a sense in which we have moved from crisis to crisis and looked at power vacuums and said, ''We need to be there.''

I like the notion that General Shelton has about the use of American military power. He says:

> We've got a great hammer, but not every problem in the world is a nail.

I do like President Kennedy's insight, too, that there is not necessarily an American solution for every problem in the world.

Yet we act as if there is. If one looks at the outcomes of recent American foreign policy debates, it is easy to see how those viewing us from a distance might come to such a conclusion. Since I have come to the Senate, the U.S. Government through the combined efforts of the executive and the legislative branches—what are, relatively speaking, nondiscussions, I might add—has made the following decisions: Withheld support from the international landmines treaty; rejected jurisdiction by the new international criminal court; been slow to pay off long overdue arrears to the United Nations; rejected the current applicability of international emissions standards set at Kyoto; rejected fast-track international trade negotiating authority for the President; rejected the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty, apparently committed to a national missile defense system which will violate the ABM Treaty; and established a principle of ''humanitarian intervention'' where national sovereignty can be violated without United Nations sanction under certain circumstances.

My purpose here is not to argue for or against any of these individual positions; for, indeed, I have supported some of them as, indeed, have virtually every Member of the Congress and the administration. But, as far as I know, not one of us has supported them all.

If the Republican congressional majority has been largely responsible for the actions rejecting multilateral commitments and entanglements in the national security sphere, it is my party, the Democrats, who has taken the lead in opposing international trade obligations, and the Democratic administration which has espoused the cause of humanitarian interventions in violation of national sovereignty. In short, the sum total of our actions has been far more unilateral than any of us would have intended or carved out for ourselves.

This is relatively incoherent, and I can see why other nations might view us as more organized than we are.

It is also very damaging to our national interest and is one of the major motives for our efforts to promote this development of a bipartisan consensus through these floor debates. We have to get back to some basic understanding of who we are and what we are doing in the world.

As was discussed in our first dialog, there are certainly some leading voices among America's foreign policy thinkers who do, indeed, advocate a unilateralist course for America in the post-cold-war era, but not even that group actually believes we have actually embarked upon that course. Very few believe we are willing to invest sufficient resources today to even pursue the somewhat less demanding multilateralist approach which seems to have more support among our foreign policy establishment.

The direct danger to America from this mismatch between means and ends, between our commitments and our forces, between our aspirations and our willingness to pay to achieve them is one of the central concerns for our discussion today and one I will turn to later. However, I want to conclude these opening remarks with an observation about indirect consequences of this situation with respect to the credibility of American foreign policy abroad.

The chief of the research department of the Japanese Defense Agency's National Institute for Defense Studies wrote in March of last year:

> (O)pinion surveys in the United States show that people are inclined to think that the United States should bear as little burdens as possible even though the country should remain the leader in the world. This thinking that the United States should be the world's leader but should not bear too much financial burden may be contradictory in context, but is popular among Americans. This serves as a warning to the international community that the United States might get at first involved in some international operations but run away later in the middle of the operations, leaving things unfinished.

Because we do not have a comprehensive strategy, because we do not talk to each other enough, because we do not have a proper dialog, particularly in this body, and because we move from crisis to crisis in our foreign policy and come up with different solutions for different situations without a clear understanding of who we are and where we are going, we are sending a mixed message to even our best friends.

To me, the case is clear: If we are to avoid misunderstandings at home and abroad, if we are to prevent unwanted and unintended conclusions and consequences, as the distinguished Senator from Kansas mentioned, about our objectives, we have to pull together and forge a coherent, bipartisan consensus to guide our country in the uncertain waters of the 21st century. Those who came before us and built this country into the grand land it is today, and those who will inherit it from us in the years ahead deserve no less.

I am honored to yield to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ROBERTS. Parliamentary inquiry: I believe I have 1 hour reserved in morning business and that the distinguished Senator from Georgia has 1 hour; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 2 hours under the control of both Senators.

Mr. ROBERTS. I inform my colleagues that Senator HUTCHISON of Texas and Senator HAGEL will be taking part, and I think perhaps Senator KERREY will be coming to the floor. Senator HAGEL will be arriving in about 9 minutes. If my distinguished colleague wants to summarize any other comments or perhaps go over the Commission on America's National Interests, I think now is the time to do so, if he is prepared to do that.

Mr. CLELAND. Mr. President, I want to add some additional comments, if that is all right with my distinguished colleague.

Earlier, I spoke about the mismatch between the goals of American foreign policy and the means we employ in achieving them. Whether one espouses a unilateralist or multilateralist approach, or something in between, most of those with a strong interest in American foreign policy have major goals for that policy, whether in preventing the emergence of global rivals or in promoting the spread of democracy, whether in halting the spread of weapons of mass destruction or in protecting human rights. Yet today we devote a little over 1 percent of the Federal budget for international affairs, compared to over 5 percent in 1962 in the middle of the cold war.

Of particular concern to me as a member of the Armed Services Committee, since the 1980s we have gone from providing roughly 25 percent of the budget for national defense to 18 percent today. We have reduced the active-duty armed forces by over one-third but have increased overseas deployments by more than 300 percent. I have often said we have, as a country, both feet firmly planted on a banana peel. We are going in opposite directions. That cannot last. We have a mismatch between our commitments and our willingness to live up to those commitments. We are sending a mixed message abroad.

What is the result of all of this? Newspapers reported that last November, for the first time in a number of years, the U.S. Army rated 2 of its 10 divisions as unprepared for war. Why were they unprepared for war? Because they were bogged down in the Balkans. That was never part of the deal going into the Balkans, that an entire U.S. Army division would be there for an indefinite period of time. No wonder these other two divisions were unprepared for war because they had elements in the Balkans doing something else—not fighting a war, but peacekeeping missions.

The services continue to struggle in meeting both retention and recruiting goals, and the service members and their families with whom I meet and who are on the front lines in carrying out the policies decided in Washington are showing the visible strains of this mismatch between our commitments and our resources. They deserve better from us.

I hope other Senators had an opportunity to watch Senator ROBERTS' discussion of our national interests during our February 24 dialog. If not, I commend my colleagues' attention to those remarks as printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

In brief, he stated the opinion, which I share, that in the post-cold-war world, our country has had a hard time in prioritizing our national interests, leading to confusion and inconsistency. He went on to cite the July 1996 report by the Commission on America's National Interests, of which he was a member, along with our colleagues Senators JOHN MCCAIN and BOB GRAHAM and my distinguished predecessor, Sam Nunn.

Of particular relevance to our topic today of defining and defending our national interests, the Commission found:

> For the decades ahead, the only sound foundation for a coherent, sustainable American foreign policy is a clear public sense of American national interests. Only a national-interest-based foreign policy will provide priorities for American engagement in the world. Only a foreign policy grounded in American national interests will allow America's leaders to explain persuasively how and why specific expenditures of American treasure or blood deserve support from America's citizens.

As my colleagues will note from the charts I have, the Commission went on to divide our national interests into four categories. They defined ''vital interests'' as those:

> Strictly necessary to safeguard and enhance the well-being of Americans in a free and secure nation.

And as Senator ROBERTS has discussed, and you can see on the chart, they found only five items which reached that high standard.

In addition to attempting to identify our national interests, the commission also addressed the key issue of what we should be prepared to do to defend those interests:

> For ''vital'' national interests, the United States should be prepared to commit itself to fight, even if it has to do so unilaterally and without the assistance of allies.

But there is a lower priority than that.

Next in priority come ''extremely important interests''—these are not vital; but they are extremely important—defined as those which:

> . . . would severely prejudice but not strictly imperil the ability of the U.S. Government to safeguard and enhance the well-being of Americans in a free and secure nation—

And for which:

the United States should be prepared to commit forces to meet threats and to lead a coalition of forces, but only in conjunction with a coalition or allies whose vital interests are threatened.

Next, third, we have another set of interests. These are called ''just important interests.'' They are not vital, not necessary. These are important, which would have major negative consequences:

The United States should be prepared to participate militarily, on a case-by-case basis, but only if the costs are low or others carry the lion's share of the burden.

Finally, last, comes the most numerous but lowest priority category of ''less important or secondary interests,'' which:

Are intrinsically desirable but that have no major effect on the ability of the U.S. government to safeguard and enhance the well-being of Americans in a free and secure nation.

My colleagues in the Senate, this is exactly the kind of exercise—of defining and differentiating our national interests, and of gauging the proper kind and level of response for protecting such interests—that we need to be engaging in if we are to bring coherence and effectiveness to our post-cold war foreign and national security policy. Everything is not the most important thing to do. Everything is not necessarily in America's vital interest to do. It is, in my judgment, what we must do in considering our policies, particularly toward the Balkans and now with a plan in Colombia to involve ourselves in a war against narcotraffickers in Colombia. We need to do several things. We need to ask ourselves: How vital are our interests in those areas? And what are we willing to pay to protect those interests?

What about the role of other countries, who, for reasons of history and geography, may have even greater national interests at stake?

Senator ROBERTS pointed out back in February the similarities between the Commission on America's National Interests list of ''vital'' interests and related compilations by other groups and individuals. I believe, for example, that the commission's definitions of ''vital'' and ''extremely important'' national interests are quite compatible with the relevant portions of the January 2000 White House ''National Security Strategy for a New Century.'' The conflicts will lie in applying these general principles to specific cases. That is what Senator ROBERTS and I intend to do with the remaining sessions of these global role dialogs, including such applications as the role of our alliances and the decision on when and how to intervene militarily.

However, from my perspective, though we may have some implicit common ground as to our most important national interests and what we should be prepared to do in defending them, in the real world where actions must count for more than words and where capabilities will inevitably be given greater weight than intentions, the picture we too often give to the world—of unilateralist means and narrowly self-interested ends—and to our own citizens—of seemingly limitless aspirations but quite limited resources we are willing to expend in achieving them—is surely not what we should be doing.

Samuel P. Huntington writes in the March/April edition of Foreign Affairs:

Neither the Clinton administration nor Congress nor the public is willing to pay the costs and accept the risks of unilateral global leadership. Some advocates of American global leadership argue for increasing defense expenditures by 50 percent, but that is a nonstarter. The American public clearly sees no need to expend effort and resources to achieve American hegemony. In one 1997 poll, only 13 percent said they preferred a preeminent role for the United States in world affairs, while 74 percent said they wanted the United States to share power with other countries. Other polls have produced similar results. Public disinterest in international affairs is pervasive, abetted by the drastically shrinking media coverage of foreign events. Majorities of 55 to 66 percent of the public say that what happens in western Europe, Asia, Mexico, and Canada has little or no impact on their lives. However much foreign policy elites may ignore or deplore it, the United States lacks the domestic political base to create a unipolar world. American leaders repeatedly make threats, promise action, and fail to deliver. The result is a foreign policy of ''rhetoric and retreat'' and a growing reputation as a ''hollow hegemon.''

One of my favorite authors on war and theorists on war, Clausewitz, put it this way:

Since in war too small an effort can result not just in failure but in positive harm, each side is driven to outdo the other, which sets up an interaction. Such an interaction could lead to a maximum effort if a maximum effort could be defined. But in that case, all proportion between action and political demands would be lost: means would cease to be commensurate with ends, and in most cases a policy of maximum exertion would fail because of the domestic problems it would raise.

I think we are maximally committed around the world. I think we have to review these commitments because I am not quite sure we have the domestic will to follow through on them or the budgets to take care of them. We do not want to risk failure.

Once again, I thank all of the Senators who have joined in today's discussion. I have benefitted from their comments, and encourage all of our colleagues of whatever party and of whatever views on the proper U.S. global role to join in this effort to bring greater clarity and greater consensus to our national security policies through these dialogs. Our next session will be on the role of multilateral organizations, including NATO and the United Nations, and is scheduled to occur just after the Easter break.

During the Easter break I intend to go visit our allies and friends in NATO, in Belgium, to go to Aviano to get a background briefing on how the air war in the Balkans was conducted, to go on to Macedonia and into Kosovo itself to see our forces there. That would be over the Easter break. I will go back through London to get a briefing from our closest ally, our British friends.

I hope to come back to the Senate in a few weeks with a more insightful view of what we should do, particularly in that part of the world, regarding our responsibilities.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. ROBERTS. First, again, I thank my good friend, the distinguished Senator from Georgia, for this continued initiative and his leadership in what we think is a bipartisan foreign policy dialog. I hope it is successful.

We said back in February during our first discussion that our objective was to try to achieve greater attention, focus, and mutual understanding—not to mention a healthy dose of responsibility—in this body in regard to our global role.

I repeat again, in chapter 10 of the Senator's book that he has provided to every Senator, with a marvelous introduction by our Chaplain, the Senator stated that success is a team effort, that coming together is a beginning, keeping together is progress, and working together is success. That is a pretty good motto for our efforts today, as well as a recipe for our foreign policy goals.

I am very privileged to yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, Mr. HAGEL. He is a recognized expert in the field of international affairs, and more especially, a strong backer of free trade. I seek his advice and counsel often on the very matters that we are talking about.

I am delighted he has joined us. I yield 15 minutes to the distinguished Senator and my friend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. President, first, let me acknowledge the leadership of my colleagues from Georgia and Kansas for bringing attention and focus to an area that does not often get appropriate focus. It is about international affairs—the connecting rods to our lives in a world now that is, in fact, globally connected.

That global community is underpinned by a global economy. There is not a dynamic of the world today, not an action taken nor a consequence of that action, that does not affect America, that does not affect our future. I am grateful that Senators CLELAND and ROBERTS have taken the time and the leadership to focus on an area of such importance to our country.

I point out an op-ed piece that appeared in Monday's Washington Post, written by Robert Kagan, and I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 10, 2000]

A WORLD OF PROBLEMS . . .

(By Robert Kagan)

Call me crazy, but I think it actually would serve the national interest if George W. Bush spent more time talking about foreign policy in this campaign. Not to slight the importance of his statements on the environment and the census. But perhaps Bush and his advisers can find time to pose a simple, Reaganesque question: Is the world a safer place than it was eight years ago?

A hundred bucks says even James Carville can't answer that question in the affirmative—at least not with a straight face. A brief tour d'horizon shows why.

IRAQ

As the administration enters its final months, Saddam Hussein is alive and well and Baghdad, pursuing his quest for weapons of mass destruction, free from outside inspection and getting wealthier by the day through oil sales while the sanctions regime against him crumbles. The next president may see his term dominated by the specter of Saddam Redux.

THE BALKANS

You can debate whether things are getting better in Bosnia, or whether Kosovo is on its way to recovery or to disaster. And Clinton deserves credit for intervening in both crises. But Slobodan Milosevic is still in power in Belgrade, still stirring the pot in Kosovo and is on the verge of starting his fifth Balkan war in Montenegro. Milosevic was George Bush Sr.'s gift to Bill Clinton; he will be Clinton's gift to Al Gore or George Jr.

CHINA-TAIWAN

Even Sinologists sympathetic to the Clinton administration's policies think the odds of military conflict across the Taiwan Strait have increased dramatically. Meanwhile, the administration's own State Department acknowledges the steady deterioration of Beijing's human rights record. Good luck to Al Gore if he tries to call China policy a success.

WEAPONS PROLIFERATION

Two years after India and Pakistan exploded nuclear devices, their struggle over Kashmir remains the likeliest spark for the 21st century's first nuclear confrontation. If this is the signal failure of the Clinton administration's nonproliferation policies, North Korea's and Iran's weapons programs come in a close second and third. Even the administration's intelligence experts admit that the threat to the United States has grown much faster than Clinton and Gore anticipated. And where is the missile defense system to protect Americans in this frightening new era?

HAITI AND COLOMBIA

After nobly intervening in Haiti to restore a democratically elected president in 1994, the administration has frittered away the past 5½ years. Political assassinations in Haiti are rife. Prospects for stability are bleak. Meanwhile, the war in Colombia rages, and even a billion-dollar aid program may not prevent a victory by narco-guerrillas. When the next president has to send troops to fight in Colombia or to restore order in Haiti, again, he'll know whom to thank.

RUSSIA

Even optimists don't deny that the election of Vladimir Putin could be an ominous development. The devastation in Chechnya has revealed the new regime's penchant for brutality.

Add to all this the decline of the armed forces—even the Joint Chiefs complain that the defense budget is tens of billions of dollars short—and you come up with a story of failure and neglect. Sure, there have been some successes: NATO expansion and, maybe, a peace deal in Northern Ireland. Before November, Clinton could pull a rabbit out of the hat in the Middle East. But Jimmy Carter had successes, too. They did not save him from being painted as an ineffectual world leader in the 1980 campaign.

Bush maybe gun-shy about playing up foreign policy after tussling with John McCain in the primaries. But Gore is no McCain. He is nimble on health care and education, but he is clumsy on foreign policy. Bush may not be a foreign policy maven, but he's got some facts on his side, as well as some heavy hitters. Colin Powell, Dick Cheney, Goerge Shultz and Richard Lugar, instead of whispering in W.'s ear, could get out in public and help build the case. John McCain could pitch in, too.

The offensive can't start soon enough. The administration has been adept at keeping the American people in a complacent torpor: Raising the national consciousness about the sorry state of the world will take time. And if Bush simply waits for the next crisis before speaking out, he will look like a drive-by shooter. Bush also would do himself, his party and the country a favor if he stopped talking about pulling U.S. troops out of the Balkans and elsewhere. Aside from such talk being music to Milosevic's ears, Republicans in Congress have been singing that neo-isolationist tune for years, and the only result has been to make Clinton and Gore look like Harry Truman and Dean Acheson.

Some may say it's inappropriate to "politicize" foreign policy. Please. Americans haven't witnessed a serious presidential debate about foreign policy since the end of the Cold War. Bush would do everyone a service by starting such a debate now. He might even do himself some good. Foreign policy won't be the biggest issue in the campaign, but in a tight race, if someone bothers to wake the people up to the world's growing dangers, they might actually decide that they care.

Mr. HAGEL. Mr. Kagan is a senior associate at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. He echoes what Senators ROBERTS and CLELAND have talked about; that is, the vital interests of our country in world affairs. He suggests that America's two Presidential candidates this year, Governor Bush and Vice President GORE, focus attention in the remaining months of this Presidential campaign on international issues. He lays out a number of areas in the world that are of vital consequence and concern to not only those particular regions but to the United States.

The point is, others are coming to the same conclusions and realizations as our friends from Georgia and Kansas: that international relations is the completeness of all of our policies—trade, national security, economy, geopolitics. It is, in fact, a complete policy.

We are living in a most unique time in history, a time when everything is possible. We live in a time when we can do more good for mankind than ever in the history of the world. Why is that? It deserves some perspective and some review.

Over the last 50 years, it has been the multilateral organizations of the world, beginning with the visionary and foresighted leadership of Harry Truman after World War II and a Republican Congress, working jointly to develop and implement multilateral policies and organizations such as the United Nations, such as what was born at Breton Woods, the IMF, the World Bank, trade organizations, multilateral peace, financial organizations—all are imperfect, all are flawed. But in the real world, as most of us understand, the choice is seldom between all good, the easy choice, and all bad. Normally our foreign policy and every dynamic of that foreign policy, be it foreign aid, be it national security interests, be it geopolitical interests, falls somewhere between all good and all bad. It is a difficult position to have to work our way through.

With this weekend's upcoming annual meetings for the IMF and the World Bank and the number of guests who will be coming to Washington—I suspect not exactly to celebrate the IMF and the World Bank and the World Trade Organization and other multilateral organizations—it is important that we bring some perspective to the question that fits very well into the larger question Senators ROBERTS and CLELAND have asked; that is, is the world better off with a World Trade Organization, with a world trade regime, its focus being to open up markets, break down barriers, allow all nations to prosper? And how do they prosper? They prosper through free trade. Underpinning the free trade is individual liberty, individual freedom, emerging democracies, emerging markets.

We could scrap the World Trade Organization, 135 nations, and go back to a time, pre-World War II, that essentially resulted in two world wars, where there would be no trading regime. Those countries that are now locked in poverty have to go it on their own. That is too bad. We can scrap the World Trade Organization. While we are at it, have the IMF and the World Bank added to any prosperity in the world? Have they made mistakes? Yes.

Let's examine some of the underlying and most critical and realistic dynamics of instability in the world. We do know that when there is instability, there is no prosperity and there is no peace. What causes instability?

Let's examine what it is that causes instability. When you have nations trapped in the cycle of hopelessness and the perpetuation of that cycle because of no hope, no future, poverty, hunger, pestilence, what do we think is going to happen? History is rather complete in instructing us on this point: conflict and war. When there is conflict and war, is there an opportunity to advance the causes of mankind? No. Why is that? Let's start with no trading. There are no markets. Do we really believe we can influence the behavior of nations with no contact, no engagement, no trade? I don't think so.

As many of our guests who are arriving now in Washington, who will parade up and down the streets, burning the effigies of our President and the Congress and the World Trade Organization and the IMF and the World Bank—and I believe sincerely their motives are pure; that they wish to pull up out of abject poverty the more than 1.5 billion people in the world today, which is a worthy, noble cause—I think the record over the last 50 years is rather complete in how that has been done to help other nations over the last 50 years do that a little differently than tearing down the multilateral institutions that have added to prosperity and a better life and a hope for mankind.

I will share with this body a couple of facts from the 1999 Freedom House survey. Most of us know of the organization called Freedom House. It issued its first report in 1978. This is what Freedom House issued on December 21, 1999: 85 countries out of 192 nations today are considered free. That represents 44 percent of the countries in the world today. That is the second largest number of free countries in the history of man. That represents 2.34 billion people living in free countries with individual liberties, 40 percent of all the people in the world. Fifty-nine countries are partly free, 31 percent of the countries. That represents 1.5 billion people living in partly free countries, 25 percent of the world's population.

What are the real numbers? Seventy-five percent of the countries, largest in the history of mankind, are living in either free or partly free countries. Forty-eight countries not free. That represents 25 percent of the population of the world.

What does that mean? Let's go back and examine about 100 years ago where the world was. At the turn of the century, no country on Earth, including the United States, had universal suffrage. Less than 100 years ago, the United States did not allow women to vote, and there were other human rights violations we accepted in this country. My point is, the United States must be rather careful not to moralize and preach to the rest of the world. Yes, we anchor who we are on the foundation of our democracy and equal rights, but it even took America 250 years to get as far as we have come.

So we should, if nothing else, at least be mindful of that as we dictate to other countries. Now, as we examine a number of the points that have been made this morning and will be made throughout the next few months about foreign policy, it is important for us to have some appreciation and lend some perspective to not only the tremendous progress that has been made in the world today, and the hope we have for tomorrow, and the ability and the opportunities we have to make the world better—and it is fundamentally about productive capacity, individual freedoms, trade, free markets, private investment, rule of law, rights, contract law, all that America represents, all that three-fourths of the world countries and population represent. It is solutions, creative solutions, for which we are looking.

Creative solutions will come as a result of imaginative and bold leadership. As I have said often when I have been challenged about America's role in the world and is America burdening itself with too much of a role—incidentally, what should our role be? That is a legitimate debate. But I have said this: America has made its mistakes. But think of it in this context. If America decides that its burden is too heavy, whether that be in the area of contributions to the United Nations, to NATO, wherever we are around the world, as an investment, we believe in markets, in freedom, in opportunity, in less war, less conflict, a future for our children, for whatever reason, if we believe we are too far extended—and that is a legitimate question—and we will have an ongoing dynamic debate on the issue and we should remind ourselves of this—the next great nation on earth—and there will be a next great nation if America chooses to recede back into the cold, gray darkness of mediocrity—that next great, powerful nation may not be quite as judicious and benevolent with its power as America has been with our power. That is not the world that I wish my 7-year-old and 9-year-old children to inherit.

If there is an additional burden—and there is—for America to carry on to be the world's leader, for me, it is not only worthy of the objective to continue to help all nations and raise all nations' opportunities, but realistically, geopolitically, it is the only answer for the kind of world that we want not just for our children but for all children of the world.

So rather than tear down organizations and tear down trade regimes and tear down organizations that are focused on making the world better, we should ask our friends who are coming to Washington this week to give us creative solutions and be part of those creative solutions.

Mr. President, I am grateful for an opportunity to share some thoughts and hopefully make a contribution to what my friend from Georgia and my friend from Kansas have been about today and earlier in our session. This will continue throughout this year because through this education and this information and this exchange of thoughts and ideas we will fundamentally broaden and deepen the foundation of who we are as a free nation and not be afraid of this debate in front of the world. It is the debate, the borderless challenges of our time—terrorism, weapons of mass destruction, the scourge of our time, illegal drugs—that must be confronted and dealt with as a body of all nations, all peoples. Understanding and dealing with these fundamental challenges and issues are in the common denominator, mutual self-interest of all peoples.

Again, I am grateful for their leadership. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. L. CHAFEE). The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator for his very valuable contribution and for taking part.

How much time does the Senator from Texas need? We have approximately 25 minutes still remaining under morning business.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Up to 15 minutes, or if someone else is scheduled in, let me know.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I will soon yield to the Senator from Texas. She has been a champion on behalf of our men and women in uniform. She is a former member of the Armed Services Committee, now a very valued and influential member of the Appropriations Committee. These are the folks who have the obligation and responsibility to pay for a military that I believe today is stressed, strained, and somewhat hollow, unfortunately.

I think Senator HUTCHISON, probably more than any other Senator, has been very diligent expressing concern and alerting the Senate and the Congress and the American people as to our commitments abroad, what is in our vital national security interests, and the problems we have talked about regarding an overcommitment.

The Senator has come to me on repeated occasions when proposing amendments. Sometimes she has withdrawn them, and other times she has proceeded but always prompting a debate on the Senate floor where there literally has been none in regard to our military policy and when we commit the use of force. She has pointed out, I think in excellent fashion, the paradox of the enormous irony that we have in Bosnia where we are supporting a partitioned kind of society among three ethnic groups, or nationalities; whereas, just to the south, in Kosovo, our goal is to somehow promote a multiethnic society where the divisions are at least equal to that in Bosnia.

Senator HUTCHISON not only comes to the floor and expresses her opinion, but her opinion is based on facts and on actually being present in the area with which we are concerned. She has been a repeat visitor to Bosnia, Kosovo, and every troubled spot I can imagine, including Brussels and Russia. She does more than talk to officials. Senator HUTCHISON, when she goes on a co-del, not only talks to the briefing folks, but she actually goes out to the people involved and talks about their daily lives, their individual freedoms, their pocketbooks. She talks to these folks individually and gives us a healthy dose of common sense and reality when she is reporting on it. We are glad to welcome her to this debate. I yield the Senator 15 minutes.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I thank the Senators for taking time on the Senate floor to discuss an issue which is not before us this very minute, but it is something that requires much more thought, much more long-term debate in the Senate.

I commend the leadership of these two distinguished members of the Armed Services Committee on a bipartisan basis. Certainly, both have served in our military quite honorably, and especially Senator CLELAND, who has given so much for our country. I say thank you for setting aside this time. I look forward to participating on future occasions that you are setting aside for discussion of the big picture items.

I think one of the problems we face today is we haven't truly come to grips with what America's role in the world is in the post-cold-war era. The issues you are bringing forth are exactly what we should be setting out in order to have a policy in the post-cold-war era that allows the United States to take its rightful place and do the very best job we can for America and for our allies around the world.

It is an understatement to say that the United States is the world's only superpower. In pure military terms, we are a colossus. Our troops are in Japan, Korea, throughout Europe, and in the Middle East. We guard countless other nations. We keep tyrants in check from Baghdad to Pyongyang to Belgrade. No other nation has ever wielded such military power.

Leadership on this scale requires discretion, the confidence to know the right course, and the will to pursue it—the confidence to know when not to engage but to encourage others to do so.

True leadership is striking out on a right course of action grounded in a central philosophy of advancing the American national interests. Simply put, both our allies and our enemies must know what to expect from the United States of America. We must always be strong. We must rely upon diplomacy to maintain much of our leadership. But when diplomacy fails, global leadership may require the use of military force.

When and how should the United States use our military power?

There was a time when the answer was clear. During the cold war, we determined we should only use military force when our vital national interests were clearly threatened. In the cold war, there was a clear military focus on a threat we could easily identify. We knew that if we acted, the Soviets would react. There was a clarity.

Today, however, because we are the only superpower, we are often called upon to act when there is a crisis anywhere in the world. Leadership in this instance requires much more discipline than in the past.

In our political system, that discipline comes from the checks and balances that have been built into it.

The only clear authority our Constitution grants to the President in committing our forces to conflict is in the role of Commander in Chief to deploy troops. But equally clear in the Constitution, Congress alone has the power to declare war, to raise and support an Army, and to provide for the Navy.

Our framers couldn't have been more clear on this issue. They did not break with the monarchy in England to establish another monarchy in America. They feared placing in the hands of the President the sole power to commit to war and also implement that war. Yet, especially in the last 50 years, Presidents have sent our troops into conflict without formal declaration of war that would be required by Congress, and not only for emergencies such as repelling sudden attacks that were envisioned by our founders.

Congress is being gradually excluded in its constitutional role in foreign policy. The consultation process is broken, and it must be fixed.

In a representative democracy such as ours, elected officials must stand up and be counted when the fundamental decisions of war and peace are made.

I believe it is important for Congress to reclaim its deliberate role intended by the Constitution. I have proposed limits on the duration and size of a force that can be deployed without congressional approval. I have proposed that the President be required to identify the specific objectives of a mission prior to its approval by Congress.

Too often operations such as those we have seen in Bosnia, and now Kosovo, become open ended with no milestone to measure success, no milestone to measure failure, and no exit strategy.

It is the hallmark of this administration for the United States to go into regional crises and displace friendly, local powers who share our goal and could act effectively on their own. In Kosovo, we fought and sustained an unsustainable government. We are trying to prevent the realignment of a region where the great powers have tried and failed many times to impose their will on ancient hatred and atrocities.

In fact, I am interested in working with others to see if we can address this issue. We must condition future peacekeeping funds on the requirement that the administration reconvene the parties to the Dayton peace accords that ended in the Bosnia conflict, and those involved in the Rambouillet talks that resulted in Kosovo, and other regional interests.

We must review the progress we have made and begin developing a long-term settlement based on greater self-determination by the governed and less wishful thinking by outside powers. This will probably involve tailoring the current borders to fit the facts on the ground. But this will create the condition for a genuine stability and reconstruction. When we take up further funding of Bosnia and Kosovo, I am not going to try to determine the outcome of these talks, but it is essential that we reconvene the parties to see where we are. For Heaven's sake, that is a modest proposal from the world's only superpower.

Years ago, President Nixon laid out principles on how our military forces should be used overseas. Based upon his principles, I offer the following outline for a rational superpower to try to bridge the ethical question:

First, we should acknowledge that bold leadership means war is the last resort—not the first. We cannot let our allies and our enemies suck us into regional quicksand. This is what happened in Bosnia and Kosovo. Our allies refused to act on their own, insisting they could not take military action without a commitment of U.S. troops. That was not the case. Our European allies have sophisticated military forces. We should have been ready with backup assistance with heavy air and sea support, intelligence monitoring, supplies, and logistical coordination, but they did not need our combat leadership for a regional conflict that could be contained by their own superb ground forces.

Second, we should not get involved in civil conflicts that make us a party to the conflict. We learned this with tragic consequences in Somalia when we got in between warring forces trying to capture one warlord. Yes, Serbia has a terrible leader. And it was tempting to punish him with our military force. But look who pays the price with many innocent civilians in Serbia as well. Often these types of missions are ones in which our allies can do a better job because oftentimes it takes more money and it is less efficient for American troops to do peacekeeping missions.

When we commit 10,000 troops, it is not 10,000 troops. It is 10,000 troops on the ground and 25,000 troops in the surrounding perimeter to protect them. This is because American troops are always the target wherever they are, as they were in Somalia and as they have been in Kosovo. You are never going to hear me say we should not have the protection force. Of course, we are going to have the protection force if our troops are involved.

I have heard it said by many in our military who come home from overseas that if there is an incident, it is going to be against us.

I have heard our military people say if they are walking with other groups of military on parade, that people who are wishing to protest will let the Turks go by, the French go by, and the Brits go by. They wait for the Americans to hurl the epitaphs. We have to have a protection force. But that is not the case for many of our allies.

Third, why not help those who are willing to fight for their own freedom? The administration seems to see no option between doing nothing and bombing someone into the stone age. There are, too often, other options. These options that we ignore, and sometimes even oppose, include local forces willing to fight for their own freedom.

In Bosnia, for example, since 1991, we have maintained an arms embargo on the Muslim forces who wanted, and begged, to be able to fight for themselves. I met with them many times. I have been to Bosnia and that region seven times. I am going again next week. I am going to have Easter services with the great 49th Division, the reserve unit that is in control of the peacekeeping mission in Bosnia. Congress voted to lift the arms embargo and allow the Muslims to have arms to defend themselves, but the administration opposed it. For 3 years the Muslims and Croats were routed because they could not fight. They didn't have the arms. But the Croats got the arms, they ignored the arms embargo, and they fought back. When they did, President Milosevic cut a deal.

I think we need to look at the option of helping people who are willing to help themselves rather than keep a fight artificially unfair.

Fourth, we should not even threaten the use of troops except under clear policies. One clear policy should be if the security of the United States is at risk. When should we deploy our troops? We need a higher standard than we have seen in the last 6 years. Look at the war in the Persian Gulf. The U.S. security interests were at stake. A madman, with suspected nuclear and biological weapons, invaded a neighboring country and threatened the whole Middle East. It could have realigned the region in a way that would have a profound impact on the United States and our allies and subjected the entire territory to chemical, biological, and perhaps nuclear weapons.

We, of course, should always honor our commitments to our allies. If North Korea invades the south, we are committed to helping our allies. We also have a responsibility toward a democratic Taiwan, which has been under constant intimidation from Communist China. We have the world's greatest military alliance, NATO, where we are committed to defend any one of those countries that might be under attack from a foreign power.

It is in the U.S. interest that we protect ourselves and our allies with a nuclear umbrella. Yes, we would use troops to try to make sure a despot didn't have nuclear capabilities.

These are clear areas of U.S. security interests. However, the United States does not have to commit troops on the ground to be a good ally. If our allies believe they must militarily engage in a regional conflict, that should not have to be our fight.

The United States does not have to commit troops to be a good ally. If our allies believe they must militarily engage in a regional conflict, that should not have to be our fight. We could even support them in the interest of alliance unity. We could offer intelligence support, ''airlift,'' or protection of noncombatants. We do not have to get directly involved with troops in every regional conflict to be good allies.

When violence erupted last year in Indonesia, we got it about right. We stepped aside and let our good ally Australia take lead. We helped with supplies and intelligence, but it wasn't American ground troops facing armed militants.

Instead, we should focus our resources where the United States is uniquely capable; in parts of the world where our interests may be greater or where air power is necessary.

It is not in the long-term interest of our European allies for U.S. forces to be tied down on a peacekeeping mission in Bosnia or Kosovo while in some parts of the world there is a danger of someone getting a long-range missile tipped with a germ warhead provided by Saddam Hussein and paid for by Osama Bin Laden.

A reasonable division of labor—based on each ally's strategic interests and unique strengths—would be more efficient and more logical.

What has been the result of our unfocused foreign relations? Qualified personnel are leaving the services in droves. In the past 2 years, half of Air Force pilots eligible for continued service opted to leave when offered a $60,000 bonus.

The Army fell 6,000 short of the congressionally authorized troop strength last year. We used up a large part of our weapons inventory in Kosovo. We were down to fewer than 200 cruise missiles worldwide. That may sound like a lot, but it's just a couple of days worth in Desert Storm.

So let's be clear that if we do not discriminate about the use of our forces it will weaken our core capabilities. If we had to send our forces into combat, it would be irresponsible to send them without the arms they need, the troop strength they need, and the up-to-date training they must have. It takes 9 months to retrain a unit after a peacekeeping mission into warlike readiness.

As a superpower, the United States must draw distinctions between the essential and the important. Otherwise, we could dissipate our resources and be unable to handle either. To maximize our strength, we should focus our efforts where they can best be applied. That is clearly air power and technology. This will be the American responsibility, but troops on the ground where those operations fall short of a full combat necessity can be done much better by allies with our backup rather than us taking the lead every time.

Any sophisticated military power can patrol the Balkans, or East Timor, or Somalia. But only the United States can defend NATO, maintain the balance of power in Asia, and keep the Persian Gulf open to international commerce.

I thank the distinguished Senators ROBERTS and CLELAND for allowing Members to discuss these issues in a way that will, hopefully, help to solve them in the long term.

Mr. ROBERTS. Senator CLELAND and I thank the distinguished Senator from Texas for her contribution.

MEASURE READ FOR THE FIRST TIME—H.R. 1838

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I understand H.R. 1838 is at the desk, and I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the bill for the first time.

The legislative assistant read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1838) to assist in the enhancement of the security of Taiwan, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I now ask for its second reading, and I object to my own request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

The bill will be read the second time on the next legislative day.

Mr. ROBERTS. I yield the floor.

ELIMINATION OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Mr. CLELAND. I understand Senate Resolution 286 expressing the sense of the Senate that the U.S. Senate Committee on Foreign Relations should hold hearings and the Senate should act on the Convention on the Elimination of all forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), introduced earlier today by Senator BOXER and 32 cosponsors, is at the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. ROBERTS. On behalf of the majority of the committee, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

The resolution will go over under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. If there is a 5-minute limit on morning business speeches, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 9 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The remarks of Mr. GRASSLEY pertaining to the introduction of S. 2404 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Ms. LANDRIEU. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Ms. LAUDRIEU, Mr. GRAMM, and Mr. CRAIG pertaining to the introduction of legislation are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

Ms. LANDRIEU. I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business, with Members permitted to speak up to 10 minutes each, until the hour of 1:30 p.m. today, with time to be equally divided between the two leaders.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 2323

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at 1:30 p.m. today the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 481, S. 2323, under the following limitations: 1 hour for debate on the bill, equally divided between the majority and minority leaders or their designees. I further ask consent that no amendments or motions be in order to the bill, and that following the use or yielding back of time, the bill be read a third time and, finally, the Senate then proceed to a vote on the passage of the bill, with no intervening action or debate, at a time to be determined by the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRAIG. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that though we have the previous unanimous consent agreement, I be able to speak for up to 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, yesterday, as I listened to our Democrat colleagues talking about the marriage penalty elimination, and their opposition to our bill, I got interested in this debate and eager to speak on it.

I know we have not been able to work out an agreement yet to bring the bill to the floor. I know our Democrat colleagues have refused to agree to limiting it to amendments relevant to the marriage penalty. We all know the easiest way to kill something around here is to pile a bunch of extraneous amendments on it.

I am hopeful we can work out these differences and that we can have a vote on eliminating the marriage penalty. The American people have a right to know where Members of the Senate stand on this critically important issue.

The repeal of the marriage penalty was adopted in the House by an overwhelming vote. I believe it should be repealed. I am hopeful the President will sign the bill, even though to this point in time he says he will not. But rather than waiting around for some agreement to be made—that may never be made—I felt I had something to say that ought to be heard on this issue.

What I would like to talk about today is, first, to set this debate within the context of the President's budget and basically highlight the choice we are making between spending here in Washington, where we sit around these conference tables and make decisions to spend billions of dollars, and spending back home in the family, where the families sit around the kitchen table and try to decide how to spend hundreds of dollars or thousands of dollars for themselves.

I would like to talk about our repeal of the marriage penalty and why it is the right thing to do, why it is not just a tax issue, why it is a moral issue. This is a moral issue we are talking about.

I want to talk about the so-called marriage bonus that some of our colleagues have thrown up. I want to try to point out how it is one of the more phony issues that has ever been discussed.

I want to talk about President Clinton's alternative to our repeal of the marriage penalty.

Finally, I want to talk about the last form of bigotry that is still acceptable in America; that is, bigotry against the successful.

I would like to try to do all that in such a way as to deviate from my background as a schoolteacher and be brief.

First of all, let's outline the choices we have. The President has proposed in his budget that we spend $388 billion over the next 5 years on new Government programs and expansions of programs.

This is brand new spending. This is $388 billion the President's budget says we ought to spend above the level we are currently spending, and we ought to do it on a series of new programs and program expansions—about 80 new programs and program expansions.

We have proposed that we give the people of America $150 billion of the taxes they have paid above the level we need to fund the Federal Government, and at the same time to save every penny of money that came from Social Security taxes for Social Security.

Many people who have followed this debate heard our Democrat colleagues spend all of yesterday saying, it is dangerous, it is irresponsible, it is reckless to let the American people keep $150 billion of this non-Social Security surplus we have in the budget because the American economy is generating more revenues than we need to pay for the current Government.

The question I would ask, and that I would ask Americans as they are sitting in front of their television screens or as they are sitting around the kitchen table doing their budget, is: How come it is irresponsible for us to let working families spend $150 billion more of their own money, but it is not irresponsible to let President Clinton and Vice President Gore and the Democrats spend $388 billion of their money? How come it is irresponsible when families get a chance to keep more of what they earn, and yet it is not irresponsible to take more than twice that amount of money and spend it in Washington, DC?

Why repeal the marriage penalty? Gosh, most people are shocked when they discover that we have such a thing. Let me quickly point out, I do not think anybody ever set out with a goal of imposing a penalty on marriage.

When many of the provisions of the Tax Code were adopted, only 30 percent of adult women worked outside the home; now it is roughly 60 percent. The world has changed dramatically since much of the Tax Code was written.

As Abraham Lincoln recognized long ago: To expect people to live under old and outmoded laws is like expecting a man to be able to wear the same clothes he wore as a boy. It just does not work.

No matter who set out to do it, we have in today's Tax Code a provision of law that basically produces a situation where, if two people, both of whom work outside the home, meet and fall in love and get married, they end up paying on average about $1,400 a year in additional income taxes. Paradoxically, that is true if they meet, fall in love, and decide to get married on the last day of December. They pay $1,400 more of income taxes for the right to live in holy matrimony for one day. The number gets much bigger for working couples who make substantial income, and it gets bigger for working couples who make very moderate income.

Today, if a janitor and a waitress—the janitor has three children; the waitress has four children; they are both working; they are struggling, trying to do the toughest job in the world, which is to make a single-parent home functional—meet and fall in love and have the opportunity to solve one of their great problems, by their getting married, they not only both lose their earned-income tax credit but they end up in the 28-percent tax bracket. We literally have a disincentive in the Tax Code for people to form the most powerful institution for human happiness and progress in history; that is, the family.

This obviously makes no sense. Nobody argues that it makes sense. Even the people who oppose repealing it agree that the Tax Code does not make any sense. They simply want to spend the money that would be given back, and so they don't want to give it back. They don't say it makes sense. They don't say it is fair.

I think it is not only unfair, it is immoral. How dare we have a Tax Code that penalizes people for getting married? So we want to repeal it.

Where does the penalty come from? I know people's eyes glaze over when we talk about numbers. I will not talk about many of them today, but let me try to explain why it happens.

If you are single and filing your tax return, you pay at the 15-percent rate on income up until you earn $25,750. Let's say you and your sweetheart both get out of school and begin teaching, and you both make $25,000 a year, and you are both paying 15-percent marginal tax rates. If you get married, then, at a combined income of $43,000, roughly, you go into the 28-percent tax bracket.

So the first reason for the marriage penalty is that in the case of these two young people who fell in love, got married, were making $25,000 each, they were paying 15-percent marginal tax rates each, and they got married, $7,000 of their joint income is taxed at 28 percent.

Secondly, the standard deduction is such that you end up losing and getting a smaller standard deduction by getting married than if you stayed single.

The net result is, the standard deduction for a married couple is less than the sum of the two deductions for two individuals who are single. You get into the 15-percent tax bracket at a lower income. You get into the 28-percent tax bracket at a lower income.

The bottom line is, when you take into account that rather than getting $8,600 in a combined standard deduction, you only get $7,200, and when you take into account that you get into the 28-percent tax bracket $7,000 sooner, the net result is, on average, for those Americans who fall in love and get married, they pay on average $1,400 a year for the privilege of being married.

We get rid of the marriage penalty for everyone. How do we do it? First of all, we say, whether you are single or whether you are married, you get the same standard deduction. If it is you and your wife filing a joint return, you get twice what you would have gotten filing individually, or you get the combination of what she would have gotten and what you would have gotten. We then stretch the 15-percent tax bracket to assure that by getting married, married couples do not get pushed into a higher tax bracket. Then we stretch the 28-percent tax bracket to be sure that by getting married, people don't get pushed into the 31-percent tax bracket.

The net result of our bill is, we totally repeal the marriage penalty. As a result, the average taxpaying family in America would get about $1,400 more that they could spend themselves on their own families.

I know every time we talk about appropriations here, spending money in Washington, people talk about compassion: We are spending money on education, housing, nutrition, those things we are all for. By repealing the marriage penalty and letting families keep $1,400 of their own money to spend on their own children, they are going to spend it on education, housing, and nutrition—the education they choose, the housing they choose, and the nutrition they choose. That is what we want to do.

The alternative is proposed by President Clinton. I want people to know that when the President stands up and says, I am for repealing the marriage penalty just as the Republicans are, only I want to do it differently, he is not quite leveling with you. You need to know that.

How can I possibly say such a thing? First of all, when you look at the fine print of the President's tax cut, the first year, he raises taxes by $10 billion; the second year, he raises taxes by $1 billion. At the end of 5 years, which will be in the second term of the next President—or it could be two Presidents from now—finally, the Clinton plan will grant a grand total of a $5 billion tax cut. When the President is saying he gets rid of the marriage penalty, he is not leveling with you.

Let us talk about who is excluded. I am sure people know the code. If they don't know the code, I want them to know it. Whenever President Clinton and Vice President GORE and the Democrats want to deny people the ability to keep money they earn, or whenever they want to raise their taxes, there is one label they always stick on them—they are "rich." Every time taxes are raised, if you listen to President Clinton and Vice President GORE, we raised taxes on "the rich."

Go back and look at the President's tax increase he proposed in 1993. It turned out that if you were earning $25,000 a year and were drawing Social Security, you were rich. That is how they define rich. Then they had tax increases on families making $44,000 a year. Ask yourself, how did they get rich?

Well, when you looked at the way President Clinton and Vice President GORE proposed their tax increase, to calculate who had to pay it, they added what you would have to pay in rent to rent your home if you owned your home, they calculated what your retirement had grown by, they calculated the value of your health insurance, they calculated the value of your parking place. Some family in Texas making $44,000 a year, thinking they were a long way from being rich, suddenly, with all of President Clinton's amazing ability to twist the facts, they were making $75,000 a year, if they owned their own home, owned their own car, had a parking place at work, if they owned life insurance.

But the point was that supposedly they were rich. Now, I am sure if you followed this debate, you have heard our Democrat colleagues say that the Republican bill gives relief from the marriage penalty to people who are rich. Well, who are they talking about?

Well, under the President's bill, he raises the standard deduction, though not enough to eliminate the marriage penalty coming from it, and he does nothing to eliminate the fact that young people, or people who are married, get into the 28-percent tax bracket $7,000 earlier. So when we stretch the 15-percent tax bracket, who are we helping that the President says is rich? It seems to me that is a reasonable question. Who are these rich people we are helping that the President's bill would not give the tax relief to by stretching the 15-percent tax bracket?

Well, the people we are helping, as it turns out, are people who make $21,525 each. So that if you have a fireman and you have a dental technician and they meet and fall in love, under the President's notion of rich, you are rich. And to quote one of our Democrat colleagues: "You don't deserve to have this penalty eliminated because you don't need it; you are rich." Under their bill, two people who get married and who each make $21,525 would be denied the relief we grant by stretching the 15-percent tax bracket.

Now, ultimately, I ask people, if you are making $21,525, are you rich? You may not think you are, but realize that when President Clinton and Vice President GORE and the Democrats are talking about rich people, they are not talking about Rockefeller, they are not talking about Mellon, and they are not talking about all of these new rich people who came from the information age; they are talking about you if you make over $21,525.

Under the President's proposal, he gives no marriage penalty relief if one parent stays at home. So under the President's plan, if you sacrifice and give up things in order that one parent can stay at home, you are rich. Under the President's proposal, you don't deserve any relief under eliminating the marriage penalty. Let me quickly add, I don't want to get into a judgment—and I am not going to—on whether one parent should stay at home. My mama worked my whole life because she had to. My wife has worked the whole lives of our children because she had a career and she wanted to. I think people have to make the decision for themselves. This is the point. You are not rich because you make a decision that one of you should stay home and take care of your children.

The President says that if you itemize your deductions—and about half of all families who make $30,000 or more itemize deductions, and everybody does that owns a home—you are rich and therefore you don't get marriage penalty relief. The President's plan would grant marriage penalty relief at a maximum of $43.50 the first year.

This is my point. Does anybody really believe that somebody making $21,525 is rich? Does anybody believe that every family in America where one of the parents stays at home with their children is rich? Does anybody believe that every family who owns a home is rich? Does anybody believe that anybody who makes $30,000 a year and itemizes on their taxes is rich? I submit that nobody believes that. But why does the President say it? Why does the Vice President say it? Why do our Democrat colleagues say it?

Let me tell you the only thing I can figure out. The alternative to saying that you are against repealing the marriage penalty, because it goes to the rich, is to say you are against it because you want to spend it in Washington. I think what the President, the Vice President, and their supporters have concluded is that it is not viable to stand up on the floor of the Senate, or in front of a television camera anywhere, and say it probably is unfair that you are paying $1,400 for the right to be married; but, look, we can spend the money in Washington better than you can, and it is better to let us keep it because we will spend it and we will make you better off. I don't think anybody would believe that and so, as a result, we see an effort to confuse people by saying, well, look, we just don't want to give this to the rich. But who gets tax relief to eliminate the marriage penalty under our bill and ends up not getting the full relief under the President's bill? People making $21,525 each, people who choose to have one parent stay at home, people who own their home or itemize deductions.

So the plain truth is, those are the people who are being called rich. I don't think that is an accurate portrayal of rich. But, look, what is wrong with being rich? I will address that in a moment. You have heard, and you will hear again as this debate progresses, about a marriage bonus. Let me not mince words. If there has ever been a fraudulent idea in any debate in American history, it is the marriage bonus. Clearly, some minion at IRS was ordered by a politician to give a justification for continuing the marriage penalty, and after great exertion and twisting of logic, they came up with the concept of a marriage bonus—that there are actually people getting a bonus from being married—an average of about $1,300, I think it is, for these people who supposedly get the bonus.

What is this bonus? The bonus is the following thing. I have two sons; one is 24 and one is 26. They have been on my payroll for those corresponding numbers of years. I, as many parents, look forward to them being off my payroll. If a wonderful, successful girl came along and married one of them, she would get a marriage bonus. She would get to take a standard deduction by having them on her payroll instead of my payroll. She would be able to file jointly with them and stay in the 15-percent tax bracket, up to $43,000 a year. She would end up getting, on average, about an $1,300 benefit by marrying one of my sons. I would lose the benefit, but would I complain? Would this be a great economic deal for her? I mean, let's get serious. Can you feed, clothe, house, educate, and entertain somebody for $1,300 a year, or $1,400 a year, or $4,000 a year?

We insult the intelligence of the American people by talking about a marriage bonus as if the piddling amount of deduction that people get when they marry someone who doesn't work outside the home as if somehow that is a bonus to them, when it is a tiny fraction of what it costs, basically, to care for someone in America.

Let me say I would be willing to supplement the marriage bonus that someone would get by taking one of my sons off my payroll. Maybe for love someday it will happen. I hope so. But for economic reasons, nobody is going to marry somebody to get their standard deduction because they cannot feed them, house them, clothe them, and all the other things they need for them.

Let's not insult the intelligence of the American people by sighing: Oh, yes, it is true that the average family with two members who work outside the home pay $1,400 of additional taxes for the right to be married, but there are these people who get a bonus. The bonus is a fraud. The tax penalty is very real.

I want to turn to the final question. It is one about which I have thought a lot and about which I feel very strongly. That is all this business about, every time we debate anything related to the Tax Code, we are always talking about rich people.

For some reason, the President and the Vice President and many members of their party believe you have to constantly divide Americans based on their income. I strongly object to it because I think it is very destructive of everything this country stands for.

There are a lot of things I have always admired about my mama. But the one thing I think I admire the most is, when I was a boy and we were riding around in a car, we would ride down the nicest street in town, and my mama would almost always say, ''If you work hard and you make good grades, someday you can live in a house like that.''

By the logic of the President and the Vice President and many members of their party, my mother should have been saying: Those are rich people. They probably stole this money from us. It is outrageous that they have this money. They don't deserve this money. We ought to take some of this money away from them.

If we had some landed aristocracy, or something, maybe you could make that argument. But the people who were living in those nice houses when I was growing up as a boy didn't get there by accident. Most of the people didn't inherit that money, most of them earned it. Why should they be singled out?

Under their logic, my wife's father would have been a rich person to be singled out. Both his parents were immigrants. Neither of them had any formal education. He won $25 for an essay contest when he was a senior on ''What I can do to make America a greater country.'' His essay was, the only part of America he could control was himself; the only way he could make it a greater country was making something out of himself.

He won $25 in 1932 for writing that essay. And he decided he was coming to the mainland from Hawaii and was going to become an engineer.

He took a freighter from Hawaii, got on a train, met a boy going to an engineering school, went there, went out looking for a job, went to a restaurant, and the guy at the restaurant said: You are in luck. There is a guy coming here with a machine that says it will wash dishes. If you can outwash the machine, you have the job. Joe Lee outwashed the machine.

He went on, and 3 years later he had a degree in electrical engineering.

He became the first Asian American ever to be an officer of a sugar company in the history of Hawaii.

Is he the kind of person we ought to hold up and say, He is rich?

He was president of the Rotary Club. He was president of the Little League. He was the head lay leader of his church.

Is that something in America where we single people out and say they are rich? I don't think so.

There is only one form of bigotry that is still acceptable in America, and that is bigotry against the successful. It is bigotry against the people who, through their own exertions, succeed.

I would just like to say, obviously, it is a free country. If the President and the Vice President and people in their party who constantly engage in this class warfare want to do it, they have a right to do it. But I don't think it is right. And I think they are stretching the truth to the breaking point when they claim that in repealing the marriage penalty, as we do that, we are helping rich people when in fact the President's proposal to ''eliminate the marriage penalty'' denies marriage penalty relief to people who earn $21,525 a year.

Where I am from, that is not rich. But there is nothing wrong with being rich.

Look, if we are against the marriage penalty, aren't we against it if a young lawyer and a young accountant meet and fall in love? Why should it exist for some people and not for others? Should marriage penalties be paid by people who have high incomes and not by those with low income?

Our position is very simple. The marriage penalty is wrong. It is immoral. It should be repealed, and we are going to repeal it.

I hope the President will sign this bill. If he doesn't, we are going to have an election. If people want it repealed, they will know how to vote.

I thank my colleagues for their indulgence, having listened to speeches all yesterday about the rich and how we were trying to help them by repealing the marriage penalty. Let me simply say I thought some response was needed. Let me also say I don't have any objection to people being rich. I wish we had more rich people. When our programs are in effect, we will have more rich people because they will have more opportunity. They won't be paying the death tax, and they won't be paying the marriage penalty.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 2323

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that with respect to S. 2323, the vote occur on passage at 2:30 p.m. today, with all other provisions of the previous consent still applicable and paragraph 4 of rule XII being waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

WAIVING THE MARRIAGE PENALTY

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I want to take a few minutes to follow the Senator from Texas and talk about one of the most important issues we are going to be considering this week. Especially for young families, this could be one of the most important issues we are going to vote on maybe this year. That is the question of waiving the marriage tax penalty.

The Senator from Texas has done an excellent job in laying out some of the concerns, some of the questions, and some of the boundaries of how this is imposed and who is paying this tax.

Is it a fair tax? When you make a commitment to somebody to get married, should you also have to somehow make a commitment to Uncle Sam? And that commitment is to pay higher taxes. That is not fair. It would be like going into a store and buying a suit. The suit is $100. And they ask: Are you married? You say yes. They say: Well, that will be $150.

Why would we pay more? Why would we penalize someone just because they are married or if they are single?

I also want to give a lot of credit to Senator KAY BAILEY HUTCHISON, the other Senator from Texas, for all the work over these last couple of weeks—working with her and others to highlight the problems with the marriage penalty, whom it affects, and how much money it really means to those couples.

We just held a news conference outside the Capitol. Among those speaking were, of course, representatives of a number of groups that represent working families across this country that are there supporting it, along with the Senators who were there to support it; but I think most importantly there were three couples who also came to tell their story, why they thought getting rid of this marriage tax penalty was so important, how they urged Congress to pass this bill, and not only urged the Congress to pass it but urged President Clinton to sign this into law.

Their stories were about young couples with one child and expecting another and how, after they are married, they look at the tax forms and find because they are married—young families not making a lot of money—their tax this year is going to be about $1,100 more because they are married—nearly $100 in penalty every month for this young couple.

Another couple from Maryland talked about the penalty they have—well over $1,400 a year. Again, why? Because they are married.

Go to the Tax Code, to the page referring to you, and look down the lines, and if you are married, there is a penalty.

As one man said, at many weddings across the country today there is an uninvited guest. That uninvited guest is the tax man. He says: Good, you are getting married; when you fill out your tax forms this year, you will pay more to Washington in taxes.

Some in the Senate who say we don't need to repeal this marriage tax penalty. As Senator GRAMM of Texas says, some say they are rich people; they can afford to pay this tax. Don't give them this break. They are rich.

They are the ones who are advocating somehow Washington needs these dollars more than the couples.

There are over 21 million couples across the country penalized at an average of $1,400 a year just because they are married. A young couple Senator CRAIG and I will talk about, when Senator CRAIG comes back to the floor, has a story I have heard a number of times; that is, the couple planned on marrying toward the end of the year, but after filling out their taxes and comparing it to what they would pay in taxes next year because they were married, they have decided to put the wedding off at least for a couple of weeks beyond the December 31 date so as a couple they will not be penalized because they are getting married. This is a young couple who have made a decision based on economics that because Uncle Sam wants to take a bigger bite out of their wallet, they are going to have to put off their plans to get married for at least several weeks just to get around the corner.

We have heard stories of friendly divorces where people have actually decided to have a friendly divorce so they save some money. Or the story of the 78-year-old man who called his wife of over 50 years and said: Do you want a divorce? She said: What are you talking? He said: I am at the tax man's office and if we get a divorce we could save a lot of money.

They didn't do it, but it is unfair that the couple is having to pay more dollars in taxes because they are married.

There are going to be stories during this debate, as the Senator from Texas pointed out, that somehow there is a marriage bonus, many people on one side are getting this bonus because they are married; or the couple on this side who is being penalized. Somehow that is supposed to wash out and be fair and even. I don't think that is true. These families should not be overtaxed, incur a tax penalty, only because they have decided they are going to get married.

I hope, when we consider this legislation this week, we consider these millions of families across the country who are paying on average about $1,400 a year. Nearly $30 billion will be collected for Washington this year from these families. There is a belief that Washington needs this money more than the families do to raise their kids, to buy the clothes, to buy the food, to pay for the mortgage, to put away money for the education of their children. All this is so important, but Washington needs it more.

Several years ago, President Clinton was asked at a news conference if he thought the marriage tax penalty was fair. He said, no, it is not really fair, or something to that effect. But the underlying message from the President was, even if it is not fair, Washington can use this money a lot more than the families can. Washington needs these dollars more than the families need these dollars.

I hope, when we get a chance to vote on this, we remember these families struggling to make ends meet, families looking for that extra dollar they can put into a savings account for their child's education, or just maybe buying something extra, maybe putting money away for a vacation or a night out for pizza, whatever is important to them. I think $1,400 a year speaks loudly for them.

As I said, Washington might believe it needs the money more than these families. However, if we have the families on the floor of the Senate, and one by one ask them if this is an important bill, are these dollars important to your family, could these dollars help out in your budget decisions, or should we give the money to Washington and hope and pray that Washington will give a few of the dollars back? I think if we leave the dollars in the pockets of the families to begin with, they will make the best decisions and they will not have to look to Washington or ask Washington or beg Washington for a few of the dollars to help them raise their families.

I defer to my colleague from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I will be brief. I see our colleague from Illinois on the floor. I stepped back to do this colloquy with my colleague from Minnesota.

I ask the Senator from Minnesota, hasn't the marriage penalty earned a special contempt in our eyes from a firsthand experience involving our two offices?

Mr. GRAMS. The Senator from Idaho is correct. Two young people who we care deeply about, one a dedicated employee in my office and one an employee in the office of the Senator from Idaho, are among the latest victims of this insidious provision of the Tax Code.

One of my legislative assistants is a young man from Minnesota. He worked for me in Minnesota and also here in Washington, DC, for over 5 years. He is engaged to be married to a young woman in the office of the Senator from Idaho, a native of Idaho who has worked in my colleague's office for almost 3 years.

This young couple, very much similar to other couples all around the Nation, is moved by faithful affections, shared values, common life goals to become a family. But the Federal Tax Code is saying something different to this young couple.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, this couple are about the same ages as my own children. I say to everyone of my generation, they are a lot like all of our children and we want to see them succeed. They are like many young couples ready to start a new life together, as we have seen generation after generation.

They originally planned their wedding date for late this autumn this year, but then friends actually started asking them, ''What about taxes?'' So they did an interesting thing; they sat down and computed their marriage penalty. Guess what. They found out their combined incomes together as a married couple would cause them to have to pay out of their pockets an additional $1,400 more than they are currently paying as single people working on our two staffs.

We are talking about average earners. In fact, the marriage penalty for our young Idaho-Minnesota couple is just about exactly the average-sized marriage penalty American couples are paying across the country, about $1,400. That could be the cost of a honeymoon or a wedding gown or part of a college education, if properly saved and invested for children who might come as a result of this union.

It is critically important we deal with this issue. Yes, they have delayed their wedding only a few weeks, but I asked my friend from Minnesota, does the Federal Government have any business forcing any kind of a decision such as this on families and couples?

Mr. GRAMS. I answer the Senator from Idaho by saying it does not. Again, if there are those in the Senate who believe this is one of those rich families who can afford to pay this tax, believe me, these are not rich young people. They are a hard-working young couple but by no means rich. They will work hard and probably will get there someday but right now they are not.

It is the furthest thing from fairness. That is the Federal Tax Code. Even if this couple escapes the marriage tax penalty this year, they will still have to pay next year and the next year and the year after, for most of the rest of their lives, unless we change that, as we are trying to do this week with the legislation before the Senate.

We are not talking about abstract tax policy. We are not talking about economic theory. We are talking about average families, real families, who are hurt every year by the marriage tax penalty. In many cases, we are not talking about a delay of a wedding. We are talking about a Tax Code that says do not get married if your family may need that second income because the IRS has first claim on that income.

I asked that member of my staff why they felt they needed to postpone their wedding a few weeks. He told me it did not make any sense for him and his fiance to fork over another $1,400 to the Federal Government.

Some might think that is cheating the Government, but he didn't think so. He said they already pay too much in taxes, and they simply cannot afford to give the Government even more of what is rightfully theirs. My staff member said they can use that money for their wedding, they can use it to help take a trip, or to plan for their family's future, rather than giving it to the Federal Government at a time when the Government simply does not need it. I think he made an excellent point.

Washington is taking this money from young couples at a time when it doesn't need the money and these young couples do. I think it is not only wrong but a disgrace that Washington has the large appetite for the hard-earned money of people across America who simply want to get married, start a family, and to begin their lives together.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I do not think either my colleague from Minnesota or I could ever put romance in the Tax Code. But I hope we can stop the Tax Code from punishing folks such as the two young folks on our staffs we have talked about who are having to change their plans by postponing a wedding date by more than a month, contrary to their hearts, but because of the dictates of a heartless tax code.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I fully agree with Senator CRAIG. I ask for an additional 3 minutes.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I will not object, but I believe time is being taken from the Democratic time; is that correct? The Republicans have used all their time in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. DURBIN. In a spirit of fairness, I will yield because I do want to respond to some of these wonderful assertions, 3 minutes.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, to wrap up, our staff's story is not uncommon. There are many young couples who are forced to make similar decisions.

The marriage penalty tax has discouraged women from marriage. It even has led some married couples to get friendly divorces. They continue to live together, but save on their taxes.

Dr. Gray Burtless of the Brookings Institution recently found that the decline in marriage may be a major reason why income inequality has increased across families. He believes that many poor unmarried workers suffer because they do not have a spouse's income to help support their family.

The Economist magazine offered a possible implication of this finding:

Mr. Burtless's research suggests that the Clinton administration, rather than fretting about skills and trade, would do better to encourage the poor to marry and make sure their spouses work.

The family has been, and will continue to be, the bedrock of our society. Strong families make strong communities; strong communities make for a strong America. We all agree that this marriage penalty tax treats married couples unfairly. Even President Clinton agrees that the marriage penalty is unfair.

Contrary to these American values, the Federal tax code contains 66 provisions that can penalize married couples and force them to give more of their income to Washington. The Government's own study shows that 21 million American couples or 42 percent of couples incurred marriage penalties in 1996. This means 42 million individuals pay $1,400 more in tax than if they were divorced, or were living together, or simply remained single—more taxes than they should have.

This was not the intention of Congress when it created the marriage penalty tax in the 1960s by separating tax schedules for married and unmarried people.

If we do not get rid of this bad tax policy that discourages marriage, millions of married couples will be forced to pay more taxes simply for choosing to commit to a family through marriage.

The marriage penalty is most unfair to married couples who are both working, it discriminates against low-income families and is biased against working women. As more and more women go to work today, their added incomes drive their households into higher tax brackets. In fact, women who return to the work force after raising their kids face a 50-percent tax rate—not much of an incentive to work.

The good news is, Congress is working hard to provide marriage penalty relief to married couples. American couples may finally get a congressional blessing this year to eliminate the unfair marriage penalty taxes if our colleagues from the other side cooperate and join in our effort.

The marriage penalty repeal legislation which we currently debate would eliminate the marriage penalty in the standard deduction; provide broad-based marriage tax penalty relief by widening the 15-percent and 28-percent tax brackets; allow more low-income married couples to qualify for the earned income credit; and preserve the family tax credits from the bite of the alternative minimum tax which allow American families to claim full tax credits such as the $500 per child tax credit, which I authored.

Millions of American families are still struggling to make their ends meet. Repealing the marriage penalty will allow American families to keep an average of $1,400 more each year of their own money to pay for health insurance, groceries, child care, or other family necessities.

Elimination of the marriage penalty tax brings American families one step closer to the major tax relief they deserve. It is particularly important to note that this repeal will primarily benefit minority, low- and middle-class families.

Studies suggest the marriage penalty hits African-Americans and lower-income working families hardest. Repeal the penalty, and those low-income families will immediately have an 8-percent increase in their income.

It is unfair to continue the marriage penalty tax. There is no reason to delay the passage of the legislation. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to pass the marriage penalty relief legislation.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, what an interesting world we live in that a Republican Senator and a Democratic Senator can look at a similar issue and see it in so many different ways. I sit here incredulous at times when I hear Republicans on the floor describe their view of the world. They live in a world where a young man and young woman fall in love and contemplate marriage and start to make plans for their future but stop cold in their tracks and say: Before we go a step further, we better go see an accountant.

I can barely remember my courtship with my wife. It was a long time ago. But it never crossed my mind to go see a bookkeeper or accountant before I decided to propose marriage. We thought there was something more to it. We knew there would be good times and bad, and we were prepared to make whatever sacrifice it took to live a life together. When I listen to my Republican colleagues, it sounds as if they want to change the marriage vows from ''love, honor and obey, in sickness and in health'' to ''love, honor and obey, in sickness and in health, so long as there is no income tax disadvantage.''

I do not think that is the real world of real people. Nor do I think we can amend the Tax Code in a way that is going to create a great incentive for people to run out and get married. I think there are more basic human emotions at stake. I think it trivializes a very sacred decision by two people making an important decision in their lives to suggest this is all about money and it is all about how many tax dollars you have to pay.

I will readily concede there is unfairness in the Tax Code. Yes, I will concede it is fundamentally unfair for us to increase the taxes on two people because they are being married. But if you would listen to the Republican logic, they grab this hook and take off and run out of town with it.

Their proposal on the marriage tax penalty is so far afield from the argument you have heard on the floor, you just cannot recognize it. In fact, let's describe the situation. If two people are about to be married and their combined income, when they file a joint return, puts them in a higher tax bracket, that is called a marriage tax penalty. However, if two people are married and their combined income puts them in a lower tax bracket, some would call that a marriage bonus. How does that happen? Perhaps one person in the marriage is not working and the other one is; the combined income on a joint return merits a lower tax rate. If both of them are working, their combined income raises them to a higher tax rate, a penalty.

We, on the Democratic side, believe we should eliminate the penalty, eliminate the unfairness, eliminate the discrimination against married people under the Tax Code. You would think from their arguments on the floor that is where the Republicans are. But that is not what their bill says, not at all. In fact, when you look closely at their bill, you find two amazing things: First, on the whole question of the marriage tax penalty, there are about 65 provisions in the Tax Code that could be associated with a marriage tax penalty. The Republicans, who have given speeches all morning about the marriage tax penalty, address how many of the 65 provisions? In the most generous definition: three, leaving some 62 discriminations in the Tax Code against married people untouched in the Republican bill.

The Democratic alternative addresses all 65.

So after all these pronouncements about ending Tax Code discrimination, the Republican bill falls flat on its face when it comes to addressing the 65 different provisions in the Tax Code that apply. The Democratic bill applies it to all 65.

The second thing that strikes you right off the bat is that the Republican bill goes further than eliminating the marriage tax penalty. It, in fact, creates an additional tax bonus for those not suffering the penalty. We are not talking about couples who are calculating how many days they have to wait to avoid paying taxes before they decide to get married. We are talking about couples who really benefit from marriage, and their taxes go down—the Republicans add more tax cuts for them.

Everybody loves a tax cut. If we could give a tax cut to every American, that would be the dream of every politician. But the voting public in America, the people watching this debate, have the right to step back and say: How many of these tax cuts can we afford, as a nation, to give away? I think that is a legitimate point. The Finance Committee in the Senate writes the tax laws, the committee that sent us this bill that is pending. If you look at the minority views, from the Democratic side, you find many Democratic Members believe the best thing we can do with our surplus is to pay down the Federal debt. That is my position. That is the position of the President and most Democrats. Why is that important? Because today in America we will collect $1 billion in taxes from individuals, families, and businesses, and that money will be used not to educate a child, to pay a soldier, or to build a highway; it will be used to pay interest on old debt of the United States.

If we do not change that, it means my grandchild, who is now about 4 years old, will continue to pay taxes, to pay interest on debt incurred by my generation to build our roads and educate our kids.

Some of us think the fairest thing we can do for future generations is to reduce the public debt with our surplus so that perhaps that $1 billion tax bill each day will be reduced for future generations. Relieving this burden is a good gift to give our children and grandchildren.

If one listens to the other side of the aisle, they do not want to take the surplus and pay down the debt. They want to dream up more and more tax cuts. The George W. Bush tax cut is so big, so massive, and so risky that last week not a single Republican would vote for it on the Senate floor when I called for a vote.

He wants to spend—I hope I get these figures right—$1.3 trillion. I believe it was $400 billion or $500 billion more than the surplus. He obviously wants to reach deep into the Social Security trust funds to pay for his tax cuts or to cut spending on basic services for education, protection of the environment, and defense. Not a single Republican would stand up for that, and I am glad they did not. Most Americans know better.

The Senate Republicans now have a George W. Bush tax cut; they want to come in and keep hacking away at the surplus instead of putting it to reducing the national debt, which on the Democratic side we consider to be the highest priority.

The expected 10-year budget surplus, according to the Finance Committee, is $893 billion. It is amazing that in a short period of time, we can talk about those surpluses.

If this bill passes, the Republicans will have already spent over half that in this session on tax cuts. Instead of lowering the national debt, reducing the tax burden on future generations, preserving Social Security and Medicare, they would have us continue on with tax cuts.

Take a close look at the Republican marriage tax penalty bill. First, the tax cuts they offer are piecemeal rather than comprehensive. They are not fiscally responsible because we are not putting money away for reducing the national debt. More than half the taxpayer benefits in their bill go to people already receiving a tax bonus. These are not people discriminated against; these are people doing well under the Tax Code, and they want to give them an additional tax cut.

They do not eliminate the marriage penalty, some 65 provisions; at best, they only address 3. Here is the kicker about which they do not want to talk. They have drawn their bill up in a way so that 5 million Americans will actually pay higher taxes. Their intent was to reduce the tax burden for married people. They went further than they had to. On the bottom, the last page, take a look around the corner. Five million Americans end up paying higher taxes under the alternative minimum tax.

Isn't that something? Take a look at this on a pie chart to get an idea, from the Republican plan, how much is being spent on the actual marriage tax penalty relief: 40 percent. Of the amount of money they have put on the table—$248 billion roughly over 10 years in tax cuts—40 percent of it goes to marriage penalty relief; 60 percent goes to people already receiving a bonus under the Tax Code for being married; and, of course, they raise taxes on 5 million Americans by increasing the alternative minimum tax.

On the Democratic side, we think there is a better alternative. In the Finance Committee proposal, the one that will be before us, married couples will be allowed to file separately or jointly, whatever benefits them from a tax point of view. We fully eliminate all marriage penalties in the Tax Code —all of the 65 provisions. It is fiscally responsible. The price tag is about $150 billion over 10 years, a little over half of what the Republican proposal costs. It does not expand marriage bonuses, and it does not exacerbate the singles penalty.

Why do we want to reduce this idea of tax cuts? First, we think we should be reducing the national debt, paying it down, which is good for the economy, as Chairman Alan Greenspan of the Federal Reserve tells us. In so doing, we strengthen Social Security; most Americans agree that is a pretty high priority for all families, married or not.

We also believe strengthening Medicare, which is something the Republicans never want to talk about, is good for the future of this country, for the elderly and disabled. It is an absolute lifeline. We believe if we are careful and target tax cuts, there are some things we can achieve which are good for this Nation.

One is a proposal which, in my State of Illinois, is very popular, which is the idea of the deductibility of college education expenses up to $10,000. It means if parents are helping their son or daughter through college and pay $10,000 of the tuition bill, they can deduct it, which means a $2,800 benefit to the family paying college expenses. That is going to help a lot of families in my home State. I certainly think that makes more sense than the Republican approach in the marriage tax penalty bill which provides a bonus to people already receiving the tax bonus.

The other item we think should be the prime focus when we talk about targeting tax benefits relates to the prescription drug benefit which has been talked about for years on Capitol Hill. The Medicare plan, conceived by President Lyndon Johnson and passed in the early sixties, was a health insurance plan for the elderly and disabled which made a significant difference in America. Seniors live longer; they are healthier; they have better and more independent lives. I have seen it in my family; most have seen it in theirs. We want it to continue.

There is a noted gap in that Medicare policy, and that noted gap is prescription drug coverage. Virtually every health insurance policy in America now covers prescription drugs but not Medicare. The Republicans have come in with all sorts of ideas for tax cuts, but they cannot come up with the money to pay for a prescription drug benefit under Medicare.

We on the Democratic side think this should be the first priority, not the last. In fact, we put a provision in our budget resolution, with a contentious vote, I might add, to raise that to $40 billion to pay for it. It has already been cut in half in the budget conference committee. There is no will on the Republican side for a prescription drug benefit.

They want to talk about a marriage penalty benefit for those who are not suffering a penalty. We want to talk about a prescription drug benefit for the elderly and disabled who are penalized every day when they cannot afford to pay for their prescriptions.

Perhaps my friends on the other side of the aisle do not understand the depth of this problem. We have seniors in some States who are literally getting on buses and riding to Canada to buy prescription drugs because they cost half as much in Canada as they do in border States such as North Dakota, Minnesota, and Montana. They understand this. They want us to do something about it, but the first tax cut bill that comes before us since we passed our budget resolution is not about prescription drugs, it is about a marriage penalty bonus for people who are not facing a marriage penalty.

I will tell you how bad this drug crisis is for seniors. Their coverage is going down. About a third of seniors have great coverage on prescription drugs, a third mediocre, and a third none at all. At the same time, the cost of these drugs is going up. There was a time when drug prices went up once a year. Then the drug companies realized they could hike their prices twice a year, then once a month, and then every other week. If my colleagues talk with pharmacists or doctors or seniors themselves, they will tell you exactly what I am talking about: Prescription drug costs are going up; coverage is going down.

Take a look at the type of bills seniors are facing. Prescription drugs are a burden on moderate income beneficiaries: typical drug costs versus income. For a patient with heart trouble and osteoporosis, typical drugs cost $2,400, 20 percent of pretax income—20 percent if they are living at 150 percent of poverty. That is an income of about $12,000 a year.

High blood pressure—one can see the percentages go up: 20 percent, 26 percent; arthritis and osteoporosis, 31 percent; high blood pressure, heart disease, 40 percent. Heart disease and severe anemia, more than a person's income.

In the city of Chicago, we had a hearing on prescription drug benefits. Some of the stories that were told were memorable. I can recall several organ recipients, transplant recipients, who came to us facing monthly prescription bills of $1,000 or $2,000. These people, on a fixed income, could not handle it. Medicare only covered it for 3 years. They knew what the cost of prescription drugs meant because for them it was a matter of life or death. Without their drugs, after transplant surgery, they could not survive.

There were some who were not in a serious condition but they could tell me about $200, $400, and $500 a month in prescription drug costs. Many times, seniors then make a choice: Will they take the medicine or not? Will they take half the prescription or the full prescription? Will they choose between food or medicine? That is a real world choice.

We on the Democratic side think a prescription drug benefit should be the first priority out of the box. We believe we can pass marriage penalty relief that addresses the problem, solves it for the vast majority of couples affected by it, and leaves enough money for a prescription drug benefit. That is our alternative to the Republican proposal.

The Republicans want it all to be on the side of marriage tax penalty relief and marriage bonus. We think prescription drug benefits should be part of it. That will be the choice on the floor for Democrats and Republicans.

Let's hear your priorities, whether or not you think a prescription drug benefit should be a high priority. We certainly do.

Look at how drug costs are growing each year. I mentioned earlier, they go up almost on a weekly basis: 9.7 percent in 1995; continuing to grow to 16 percent in 1999.

Of course, drug companies are in business to make a profit. They need to make a profit for research to find new drugs. That is a given. I accept that. A company such as Schering-Plough, that sells Claritin, that spends a third of its revenue on advertising—how many times have you seen the Claritin ads on television, in magazines, in newspapers?—Spends only 11 percent of their revenue on research. We realize the costs are going up for the advertising more than for the research.

We believe that as these costs continue to rise, seniors will continue to be disadvantaged. As I have mentioned, seniors —most of them—are on a fixed income and really have nowhere to turn to pay for these drugs.

Mr. President, 57 percent of seniors make under $15,000 a year; 21 percent make above that but under $25,000. You get to the categories of seniors who make over $25,000, and that is about one out of five seniors; four out of five make less. So as the prescription drug costs go up, their ability to pay is being stretched.

We think this prescription drug benefit then will have a great advantage for seniors. It will give them some peace of mind. The doctors who prescribe these drugs will understand that their patients will be able to afford them and take them.

What is the alternative? If an elderly person goes to see a doctor, and the doctor prescribes a drug, and the elderly person goes to the pharmacy and finds out they cannot afford the drug, and they then do not take the drug, and they get sick enough to go to the hospital, who pays for the hospitalization under Medicare? Raise your hands, taxpayers. We all do.

When someone gets sick and goes to the hospital, under Medicare, taxpayers pay for it. Yet we do not pay for the prescription drugs to keep people well and out of the hospital. That does not make any sense. It does not make sense medically. No doctor, no senior, would believe that is the best way to deal with this.

So we are talking about changing this system for the prevention of illness and disease, for the prevention of hospital stays, and for reductions in the costs to the Medicare program. It is a real cost savings.

It isn't just enough, as I have shown from these charts, for us to provide the benefit for seniors so they can pay for prescription drugs. We have to deal with the whole question of pricing, the cost of these drugs.

How will we keep these costs under control? People in my part of the world, probably all across the United States, get a little nervous when you talk about the Government being involved in pricing. They say: I am not quite sure the Government should be doing that.

They have a right to be skeptical. But let's step back and take an honest look at this. Is there price fixing now when it comes to the cost of drugs? Yes.

Insurance companies contact drug companies and say: If you want the doctors under our insurance policy to prescribe your drugs, we will pay you no more than the following cost. That is a fact of life. The bargaining is going on.

If these same drug companies take their drugs up to Canada to sell them, the Canadian Government says: You cannot sell them in Canada unless we can establish the ceiling for your prices.

That is why the same prescription drugs—made by American companies, in American laboratories, by American technicians, approved by the Food and Drug Administration of the United States of America—when they cross that border, in a matter of minutes, they become a Canadian product sold at half the cost. That is why American seniors get on buses and go up there, to buy those drugs at half the cost.

The Canadians speak out when it comes to the price of drugs, as do the Mexicans and the Europeans and every other industrialized country in the world.

Oh, the Veterans' Administration here in the United States bargains for drugs, too. We want to get the best deal for our veterans. We tell the pharmaceutical companies: This is the maximum we will pay. They sell it to us.

The only group that does not have bargaining power is the seniors and disabled under Medicare. They are the ones who pay top dollar for the drugs in America. Is that fair? Is it fair that the people of moderate income, of limited resources, are the ones who pay the highest price?

That is why we on the Democratic side believe a prescription drug benefit should be the first tax cut that we consider, if you want to call it that, because it affects a program such as Medicare.

But on the Republican side, no, it isn't a high priority. It isn't in this bill. There is no money set aside for it. There isn't a sufficient amount of money set aside for it in the budget resolution presently in conference.

That is the difference. It is a significant difference.

If you take a look at the prescription drug coverage by income level, here is what you find. Those who are below the poverty level, 35 percent of them have no prescription drug coverage. For those barely at poverty and above, it is 44 percent. You will see that as you make more and more money, you have more and more likelihood that you will have drug coverage.

The lower income Americans, the lower income seniors, and the disabled are the ones who do not have prescription drugs protection.

We think the prescription drug benefit should really hit several principles. Any plan that does not is a phony plan. The plan should cover all. There should be universal coverage. Do not pick and choose. Every American should be allowed to be covered under this plan. No. 2, it should have basic and catastrophic coverage. No. 3, it should be affordable.

We think if you put these together, you can come up with a prescription drug benefit the President has asked for, which the Democrats in Congress support, and which the Republican bill before us does not even consider.

We will come back with an alternative, a Democratic substitute, to give this Chamber a choice. You can take the Republican approach and give tax cuts to those who do not need them or you can take the Democratic approach and eliminate the marriage tax penalty for the vast majority of young people who want to be married—all 65 provisions in the Tax Code—and have enough money remaining to deal with a valid prescription drug benefit.

The difference is this. We buy the premise of what the President said in his State of the Union Address, that we happen to be living in good times but we should be careful about our future. If we are going to have surpluses, let us invest them in things that count. Let us pay down the national debt. Let us strengthen Social Security. Let us strengthen Medicare and target the tax cuts where they are needed the most.

Some of the Republicans are running around Capitol Hill like folks with hot credit cards. They cannot wait to come up with a new tax cut—needed or not needed. We think we have to be more careful. If we are more careful, if we show some fiscal discipline, we can not only avoid the deficits of the past, heaping them on the national debt, but we can be prepared for any downturn in this economy as well. I think that is fiscally conservative—a term Democrats aren't usually allowed to use but certainly applies in this situation—and it is fiscally prudent. It is the way a family deals with its situation. Before you run out and pay for that big vacation, you might think about paying off some of the credit card debt. I think a lot of families think that way. The Republican leadership in the Senate does not.

Instead of paying down the debt of this country, they want to give away the tax revenues in a surplus, give it back to the people. They can give it back, but still we will collect $1 billion a day in interest on old debt.

The provision we will be bringing before the Senate during the course of this debate will offer those who are truly fiscally conservative on both sides of the aisle a viable option. We are going to address all 65 provisions in the Tax Code that have a marriage tax penalty effect. The Republican bill goes after the standard deduction and partially addresses two others: Rate brackets and earned-income tax credits.

Among the 62 provisions the Republican bill does not address on the marriage tax penalty but the Democratic optional, single-filing alternative does are adoption expenses. Doesn't that make sense, that we wouldn't want to discriminate against couples who may want to adopt?

Child tax credits, think about that for a second. A couple wants to get married. They may have some children. We want to give them the child care tax credit. The Republican bill doesn't protect them against the discrimination that might be part of it.

Taxation of Social Security benefits, savings bonds for education, none of these is covered by the Republican bill; IRA deductions, student loan interest deductions, elderly credits—the list goes on.

After their pronouncements and speeches about what a serious problem this is, their bill really comes up short. It doesn't address the basic problem. It provides tax cuts that are not asked for or needed. It shortchanges the opportunity to put money into a prescription drug benefit.

We think it is far better to take an approach which is fiscally prudent, conservative, sensible, and straightforward.

We also believe that during the course of this session we will be considering other targeted tax benefits. We can only have limited amounts and still bring down this national debt, so let's spend the money where it will be the most effective: A prescription drug benefit, No. 1; the deductibility of college education expenses, No. 2. If you send a son or daughter to college, you will have a helping hand from the Tax Code to pay for those growing expenses.

A third, which the President has proposed and which I think makes sense, is a long-term care credit. How many people have parents and grandparents who are growing older and need additional care? We know it is expensive. Because of that additional expense, we want to provide a tax credit to help defray some of those costs. Those are very real and serious family challenges.

As much has been said on the floor about the marriage penalty and the reverence for families, which I agree is the backbone of this country, let's take a look at families in a little different context, not just on wedding day but when those families are raising their children and sending them to college, when those families are caring about their parents and grandparents who meant so much to them. Our targeted tax cuts go after all of those elements because, on the Republican side, they heap tax cuts on those who, frankly, do not need them, those who are not facing a marriage penalty. They cannot have enough money left to pay down our debt and have the resources for a targeted tax cut along the lines I have suggested.

I see my colleague from Wisconsin has come to the floor. I know my time is limited. I ask the Chair how much time I have remaining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMS). The Senator has 16 minutes remaining.

Mr. DURBIN. I thank the Chair and yield the floor to my colleague from Wisconsin, Senator FEINGOLD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Mr. President, one thing observers of the Senate are not likely to see today is anyone defending the marriage penalty. The tax code should not discourage the act of getting married, and it should not encourage divorce.

There is widespread agreement that Congress should pass marriage penalty relief. The President's budget included a proposal to address the marriage penalty. And last week, the Senate voted 99–1 in favor of sense of the Senate language calling on us to ''pass marriage penalty tax relief legislation that begins a phase down of this penalty in 2001.''

The marriage penalty is particularly burdensome for lower-income couples—and many young couples don't have much to spare. For some of these couples, the amount of their taxes could actually affect their decision whether or not to marry. Luckily, in the vast majority of cases, in the words of a recent law review article, love triumphs over money.

But in this debate that the majority has scheduled for the week before the April 15 tax deadline, one can be forgiven for harboring the suspicion that more than marriage penalty relief is involved.

For one thing, on this subject on which there is a broad consensus, the majority appears unwilling to work out a compromise with the President or with Democrats. Rather, the majority seems driven more to create election-year campaign talking points than real tax relief.

For another thing, on this bill, for the third time this year already, the majority seems willing to plow ahead on major tax cut legislation before even adopting its own fiscal plan in the form of a budget resolution. To recount, in early February, the Senate passed a $103 billion tax cut as part of the bankruptcy bill. Then, in early March, the Senate passed another $21 billion tax cut for education savings accounts. And now in April, the Senate is considering another $248 billion in tax cuts labeled as marriage penalty relief. So the majority this year has already moved $372 billion in tax cuts—at an average rate of $124 billion a month—before it has even adopted its budget resolution.

And you need to add to that the approximately $80 billion in debt services that tax cuts of such a size would require. That yields roughly $450 billion of the surplus that this Senate will have spent in just three months—an average of $150 billion a month. And that doesn't even count the health tax cut provisions that we can expect in the Patients Bill of Rights bill. And that also doesn't count the other multi-billion-dollar reconciliation tax cut that the budget resolution calls for no later than September 22.

Some said that the majority brought up the amendment to the Constitution to prevent flag burning when they did because the American Legion was having a convention that week. Now, it seems that they are bringing up the marriage penalty because tax day is coming. What the majority chooses to call up seem more driven by the calendar than by legislative sense.

Moving so many tax bills so early in the year raises another suspicion as well—that if we waited, we would find that there is not enough money to do everything that the majority wants.

The Senate's consideration of a tax cut this size is also premature because the majority continues to push tax cuts before doing anything to extend the life of Social Security, before doing anything to extend the life of Medicare, or before doing anything to make prescription drugs available to seniors who need them.

Yes, Social Security is projected to run cash surpluses on the order of $100 billion a year for the next decade, but beginning in 2015, it is projected to pay out more in benefits than it takes in in payroll taxes. Medicare Hospital Insurance benefit payments will exceed payroll tax revenues as early as 2007.

The tax cuts that the Senate has passed and that we debate today would phase in so that their full impact would come just as the Nation begins to need surpluses in the non-Social Security budget to help address these Social Security and Medicare commitments.

In 2010, the marriage penalty bill before us today alone will cost $40 billion a year. Rather than pay down our debt to free up resources for our coming needs, these tax cuts would add to our future obligations. To commit resources of this magnitude without addressing the long-term solvency of Social Security and Medicare is simply irresponsible.

The size of the tax cut before us today flows in large part from its scatter-shot approach. According to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, it delivers a comparable amount of benefits to those who enjoy marriage bonuses as to those who suffer from marriage penalties. And according to Citizens for Tax Justice, more than two-thirds of this tax bill's benefits would go to the fewer than one-third of couples with incomes of more than $75,000. Are tax cuts for the well-off really our most pressing national need? A more targeted approach could save money and leave us better prepared to address our coming fiscal commitments.

Our economy is strong and has benefitted from sound fiscal policy. Monday's papers reported that unemployment has remained below 4½ percent for fully two years now. The Nation continues to enjoy the longest economic expansion in its history. And home ownership is at its highest rate on record.

We have this strong economy in no small part because of the responsible fiscal policy we have had since 1993. That responsible policy has meant that the government has borrowed less from the public than it otherwise would have, and indeed is projected to have paid down nearly $300 billion in publicly-held debt by October. No longer does the government crowd out private borrowers from the credit market. No longer does the government bid up the price of borrowing—interest rates—to finance its huge debt. Our fiscal policy has thus allowed interest rates to remain lower than they otherwise would be, and businesses large and small have found it easier to invest and spur new growth.

Passing large tax cuts like the one before us today without addressing the long-run needs of Social Security and Medicare risks returning to the budgets of 1992, when the government ran a unified budget deficit of $290 billion and a non-Social Security deficit of $340 billion. It risks returning to the Congressional Budget Office's 1993 projection of a unified budget deficit that would climb to $513 billion in 2001, instead of the unified budget surplus of $181 billion and non-Social Security surplus of $15 billion that we now enjoy.

Any young couple would be well-advised to do a little financial planning before entering into a marriage. We can ask the Senate to do no less.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana is recognized.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I know there will be a lot of time for debate later today and tomorrow, and perhaps in the future, on the so-called marriage penalty. I want to respond to two points that several of our Republican colleagues have made with respect to the Finance Committee bill, the majority bill.

The first claim is that the Finance Committee bill, the majority bill, eliminates the marriage penalty. Not true. It does reduce the marriage penalty for some people, to some extent, but it does not eliminate the marriage penalty.

Why do I say that? Well, first, let me show you this chart. This chart basically shows, in the main, that there are 65 provisions in the Tax Code that create a marriage tax penalty; 65 different provisions in the code create the so-called marriage tax penalty, the inequity that married people pay. The Republican bill, the Finance Committee bill, addresses some of them. How many? Out of the total of 65, how many do you suppose the Finance Committee addresses? A grand total of three. So 62 of the provisions in the Internal Revenue Code that cause a marriage tax penalty are not addressed by the Finance Committee bill.

Let me give you an example. One is the deduction for interest on student loans. The phaseout for this begins at $40,000 for unmarried individuals and about $60,000 for joint return filers. So if two young people each earn $35,000 and they marry, they get hit harder by the phaseout. In other words, they pay a marriage tax penalty. It is not covered by the Finance Committee bill. It is covered by the alternative to be offered by Senator MOYNIHAN.

Another example in the Finance Committee bill is not covered. A marriage tax penalty that is not taken care of is Social Security for seniors. The tax threshold for Social Security for seniors is $25,000 for individuals and $32,000 for couples. Again, a marriage tax penalty. What does the Republican bill, the Finance Committee bill, do about these provisions? Nothing. They are not among the three penalties the Republican bill addresses. The Democratic proposal, in contrast, addresses all 65 marriage tax penalty provisions—all of them. Not 3, not 4, not 5, but all of them, all 65.

So, again, the Finance Committee bill does not eliminate the marriage tax penalty. The Democratic alternative does.

There is a second point made on the floor today that I would like to address. About half of the relief in the Finance Committee bill goes to people who don't pay a marriage tax penalty today. They get a so-called bonus, or they get neither a penalty nor a bonus. That is this chart. This chart shows that less than half of the relief in the majority bill goes to the marriage tax penalty; that is, more than half goes to people who don't have a marriage tax penalty, who are already in a bonus situation.

Some argue, well, gee, we should not penalize couples, such as those with a stay-at-home spouse, by denying them the same tax cut we provide to couples who face a marriage tax penalty. Frankly, that is a red herring, as lawyers say. That is totally beside the point. Obviously, we have nothing against people who receive a tax bonus. Nobody wants to penalize them. But let's be honest. If we are providing half the relief to people who don't pay a marriage tax penalty, it is simply not a marriage tax penalty bill anymore; it is a tax cut bill, and we should evaluate the bill on that basis.

Let's talk about singles, for example. The marriage tax penalty relief bill that we are talking about is going to proportionally put more burden on individuals, single taxpayers, on widows who are not heads of households, widowers. They are going to be hit indirectly because of the action that will probably be taken at a later date on this floor. In the main, this is not a marriage tax penalty bill out of the Finance Committee; it is primarily a tax cut bill.

That kind of tax cut compared with other priorities may or may not make sense. What about prescription drugs, long-term care, retirement security? I don't think we have addressed those issues enough on this floor; that is, trying to determine what our priorities should be, given the limited number of dollars we have in the budget surplus.

Another thing. Viewed as a tax cut, the majority bill is completely arbitrary. There is no particular rhyme or reason to it. If you are married and pay a marriage tax penalty, you get a tax cut. If you are married and pay no marriage tax penalty, you get a tax cut. That is what the Finance Committee bill does, in the main. If you are married and get a tax bonus, you still get a tax cut. That is what the committee bill does.

If you are single, you get no tax cut. In fact, the disparity between married and single taxpayers widens to where it was before 1969.

Think about this for a moment. If you are married, have no children, you are receiving the so-called marriage bonus, you get a tax cut. If, on the other hand, you are a single mom and you have three kids, you get zero tax cut. Is that what we want to do?

So the Finance Committee bill doesn't eliminate the marriage penalty. It simply does not. Sixty-two of the marriage penalties in the code are not addressed by the Finance Committee bill. Only three are.

There are many others I have not mentioned which are very big and have a very big effect.

In addition, the majority committee bill provides a large tax cut unrelated to the marriage tax penalty. It is a large tax cut which has nothing to do with the marriage tax penalty.

I am saying briefly, because my time is about to expire, that there are some major flaws in the majority bill. I have only touched on a couple of them. There are many more which will be brought out later in the debate.

I urge my colleagues, people around the country watching this on C-SPAN, other offices, and the press to take a good look at the majority bill because there are some real problems with it. I hope we can straighten them out and fix them very soon.

I yield the floor.

WORKER ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report S. 2323 by title.

The bill clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2323) to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to clarify the treatment of stock options under the Act.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the quorum call not be charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The distinguished Senator from Kentucky, Mr. MCCONNELL, is recognized.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I want to speak on behalf of the pending measure, the Worker Economic Opportunity Act, which the Senate will pass shortly.

This bipartisan bill will ensure that American workers can receive lucrative stock options from their employers—once considered the exclusive perk of corporate executives.

Senator DODD and I have worked closely with Senators JEFFORDS and ENZI, ABRAHAM, BENNETT, and LIEBERMAN, the Department of Labor, and others to develop this critical bill.

We have the support of groups representing business and workers, as well as Secretary Alexis Herman. In short, everybody wins with this proposal.

All over the country today, forward-thinking employers are offering new financial opportunities—such as stock options—to hourly employees.

Unfortunately, it appears that our 1930's vintage labor laws might not allow the normal workers of the 21st century to reap these benefits.

When we realized this, we decided to fix this problem. It would be a travesty for us to let old laws steal this chance for the average employee to share in his or her company's economic growth.

The Workers Economic Opportunity Act is really very simple. It says that it makes no difference if you work in the corporate boardroom or on the factory floor—everyone should be able to share in the success of the company.

In sum, the bill would amend the Fair Labor Standards Act to ensure that employer-provided stock option programs are allowed, just like employee bonuses already are.

Also, this legislation includes a broad ''safe harbor'' that specifies that employers have no liability because of any stock options or similar programs that they have given to employees in the past.

I hope that this bill will be the first of many commonsense efforts to drag old labor and employment laws into the new millennium.

Mr. President, we need to pass this law. The Federal Reserve Board of Governors recently estimated that 17 percent of firms have introduced stock option programs.

They went on to say that over the last two years, 37 percent of these employers have broadened eligibility for their stock option programs—allowing even more American workers to share in their employers' prosperity.

The Employment Policy Foundation estimates between 9.4 million and 25.8 million workers receive benefits through some type of equity participation program.

This trend is growing, and given the current state of the economy, it is likely to continue to grow.

However, we have one last thing we have to do to make sure that American workers can have this incredible opportunity—we have to pass this bill.

Without it, our ''New Deal'' labor laws will strangle the benefits our ''New Economy'' offers to American workers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter of support from the United States Chamber of Commerce be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, April 7, 2000.

Hon. MITCH MCCONNELL,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCONNELL: I am writing to express the support of the United States Chamber of Commerce, the world's largest business federation representing more than three million businesses and organizations of every size, sector and region, for S. 2323, the Worker Economic Opportunity Act.

Last year the U.S. Department of Labor issued an advisory letter stating that companies providing stock options to their employees must include the value of those options in the base rate of pay for hourly workers. Employers must then recalculate overtime pay over the period of time between the granting and exercise of the options. This costly and administratively complex process will cause many employers to refrain from offering stock options and similar employee equity programs to their nonexempt workers.

Clearly, the Fair Labor Standards Act needs to be modernized to reflect the fact that many of today's hourly workers receive stock options. For this reason, the Chamber strongly supports S. 2323, which would exempt stock options, stock appreciation rights, and employee stock purchase plan programs from the regular rate of pay for nonexempt workers. This carefully crafted legislation will provide certainty to employers who want to increase employee ownership and equity building by offering stock options and similar programs to their hourly workers. We commend you for negotiating a bill that is broadly supported and look forward to working with you to ensure its passage as soon as possible in this legislative session.

Again, thank you for your leadership in introducing S. 2323, legislation that is important to millions of American workers and employers.

Sincerely,

R. BRUCE JOSTEN.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the sponsors' statement of legislative intent be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JOINT STATEMENT OF LEGISLATIVE INTENT BY THE SPONSORS OF S. 2323, THE WORKER ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY ACT

I. INTRODUCTION AND PURPOSE

The purpose of S. 2323, the Worker Economic Opportunity Act, is to allow employees who are eligible for overtime pay to continue to share in workplace benefits that involve their employer's stock or similar equity-based benefits. More working Americans are receiving stock options or opportunities to purchase stock than ever before. The Worker Economic Opportunity Act updates the Fair Labor Standards Act to ensure that rank-and-file employees and management can share in their employer's economic well being in the same manner.

Employers have provided stock and equity-based benefits to upper level management for decades. However, it is only recently that employers have begun to offer these programs in a broad-based manner to non-exempt employees. Historically, most employees had little contact with employer-provided equity devices outside of a 401(k) plan. But today, many employers, from a broad cross-section of industry, have begun offering their employees opportunities to purchase employer stock at a modest discount, or have provided stock options to rank and file employees; and they have even provided outright grants of stock under certain circumstances.

The Federal Reserve Board of Governors recently estimated that 17 percent of large firms have introduced a stock options program and 37 percent have broadened eligibility for their stock option programs in the last two years.[1] The Employment Policy Foundation estimates between 9.4 million and 25.8 million workers receive benefits through some type of equity participation program.[2] The trend is growing, and given the current state of the economy, it is likely to continue.

The tremendous success of our economy over the last several years has been largely attributed to the high technology sector. One of the things that our technology companies have succeeded at is creating an atmosphere in which all employees share the same goal: the success of the company. By vesting all employees in the success of the business, stock options and other equity devices have become an important tool to create businesses with unparalleled productivity. The Worker Economic Opportunity Act will encourage more employers to provide opportunities for equity participation to their employees, further expanding the benefits that inure from equity participation.

II. BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

A. Background on stock options and related devices

Employers use a variety of equity devices to share the benefits of equity ownership with their employees. As the employer's stock appreciates, these devices provide a tool to attract and retain employees, an increasingly difficult task during a time of record economic growth and low unemployment in the United States. These programs also foster a broader sense of commitment to a common goal—the maintenance and improvement of the company's performance—among all employees nationally and even internationally, and thus provide an alignment between the interests of employees with the interests of the company and its shareholders. They can also reinforce the evolving employer-employee relationship, with employees viewed as stakeholders.

Employer stock option and stock programs come in all different types and formats. The Worker Economic Opportunity Act focuses on the most common types: stock option, stock appreciation right, and employee stock purchase programs.

Stock Option Programs.—Stock options provide the right to purchase the employer's securities for a fixed period of time. Stock option programs vary greatly by employer. However, two main types exist: nonqualified and qualified option programs.[3] Most programs are nonqualified stock option programs, meaning that the structure of the program does not protect the employee from being taxed at the time of exercise. However, the mechanics of stock option programs are very similar regardless of whether they are nonqualified or qualified. Some of these characteristics are described below.

Grants. An employer grants to employees a certain number of options to purchase shares of the employer's stock. The exercise price may be around the fair market value of the stock at the time of the grant, or it may be discounted below fair market value to provide the employee an incentive to participate in the option program.

Vesting. Most stock option programs have some sort of requirement to wait some period after the grant to benefit from the options, often called a vesting period. After the period, employees typically may exercise their options by exchanging the options for stock at the exercise price at any time before the option expires, which is typically up to ten years. In some cases, options may vest on a schedule, for example, with a third of the options vesting each year over a three-year period. In addition to vesting on a date certain, some options may vest if the company hits a certain goal, such as reaching a certain stock price for a certain number of days. Some programs also provide for accelerated or automatic vesting in certain circumstances such as when an employee retires or dies before the vesting period has run, where there is change in corporate control or when an employee's employment is terminated.

Exercise. Under both qualified and nonqualified stock option programs, an employee can exchange the options, along with sufficient cash to pay the exercise price of the options, for shares of stock. Because many rank-and-file employees cannot afford to pay the cost of buying the stock at the option price in cash, many employers have given their employees the opportunity for ''cashless'' exercise, either for cash or for stock, under nonqualified option plans. In a cashless exercise for cash, an employee gives options to a broker or program administrator, this party momentarily ''lends'' the employee the money to purchase the requisite number of shares at the grant price, and then immediately sells the shares. The employee receives the difference between the market price and the exercise price of the stock (the profit), less transaction fees. In a cashless exercise for stock, enough shares are sold to cover the cost of buying the shares the employee will retain. In either case, the employee is spared from having to provide the initial cash to purchase the stock at the option price.

An employee's options usually expire at the end of the option period. An employee may forfeit the right to exercise the options, in whole or in part, under certain circumstances, including upon separation from the employer. However, some programs allow the employee to exercise the options (sometimes for a limited period of time) after they leave employment with the employer.

Stock Appreciation Rights.—Stock appreciation rights (SARs) operate similarly to stock options. They are the rights to receive the cash value of the appreciation on an underlying stock or equity based security. The stock may be publicly traded, privately held, or may be based on valued, but unregistered, stock or stock equivalent. The rights are issued at a fixed price for a fixed period of time and can be issued at a discount, carry a vesting period, and are exercisable over a period of time. SARs are often used when an employer cannot issue stock because the stock is listed on a foreign exchange, or regulatory or financial barriers make stock grants impracticable.

Employee Stock Purchase Plans.—Employee stock purchase plans (ESPPs) give employees the opportunity to purchase employer stock, usually at up to a 15 percent discount, by either regularly or periodically paying the employer directly or by having after-tax money withdrawn as a payroll deduction. Like option programs, ESPPs can be qualified or nonqualified.

Section 423 of the Internal Revenue Code[4] sets forth the factors for a qualified ESPP. The ability to participate must be offered to all employees, and employees must voluntarily choose whether to participate in the program. The employer can offer its stock to employees at up to a 15 percent discount off of the fair market value of the stock, determined at the time the option to purchase stock is granted or at the time the stock is actually purchased. The employee is required to hold the stock for one or two years after the option is granted to receive capital gains treatment. If the employee sells the stock before the requisite period, any gain made on the sale is treated as ordinary income.

Nonqualified ESPPs are usually similar to qualified ESPPs, but they lack one or more qualifying features. For example, the plan may apply only to one segment of employees, or may provide for a greater discount.

B. The Fair Labor Standards Act and stock options

The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938[5] (FLSA) establishes workplace protections including a minimum hourly wage and overtime compensation for covered employees, record keeping requirements and protections against child labor, among other provisions. A cornerstone of the FLSA is the requirement that an employer pay its nonexempt employees overtime for all hours worked over 40 in a week at one and one-half times the employee's regular rate of pay.[6] The term ''regular rate'' is broadly defined in the statute to mean ''all remuneration for employment paid to, or on behalf of, the employee.''[7]

Footnotes at end of article.

Section 207(e) of the statute excludes certain payments from an employee's regular rate of pay to encourage employers to provide them, without undermining employees' fundamental right to overtime pay. Excluded payments include holiday bonuses or gifts,[8] discretionary bonuses,[9] bona fide profit sharing plans,[10] bona fide thrift or savings plans,[11] and bona fide old-age, retirement, life, accident or health or similar benefits plans.[12] By excluding these payments from the definition of ''regular rate,''[13] Congress recognized that certain kinds of benefits provided to employees are not within the generally accepted meaning of compensation for work performed.

Thus, by excluding these payments from the regular rate in section 207(e) of the FLSA, Congress encouraged employers to provide these payments and benefits to employees. The encouragement has worked well—employees now expect to receive from their employer at least some of these benefits (i.e., healthcare), which today, on average, comprise almost 30 percent of employees' gross compensation./14/ For similar reasons, Congress decided that the value and income from stock option, SAR and ESPP programs should also be excluded from the regular rate, because they allow employees to share in the future success of their companies.

C. The Department of Labor's opinion letter on stock options

The impetus behind the Worker Economic Opportunity Act is the broad dissemination of a February 1999 advisory opinion letter[15] regarding stock options issued by the Department of Labor's Wage and Hour Division, the agency charged with the administration of the FLSA. The letter involved an employer's stock option program wherein its employees would be notified of the program three months before the options were granted, and some rank-and-file employees employed by the company on the grant date would receive options. The options would have a two-year vesting period, with accelerated vesting if certain events occurred. The employer would also automatically exercise any unexercised options on behalf of the employees the day before the program ended.[16]

The opinion letter indicated that the stock option program did not meet any of the existing exemptions to the regular rate under the FLSA, although it did not explain the reasons in any detail. Later, the Administration's testimony before the House Workforce Protections Subcommittee explained that the stock option program did not meet the gift, discretionary bonus, or profit sharing exceptions to the regular rate because, among other reasons, it required employees to do something as a condition of receiving the options—to remain employed with the company for a period of time.[17] Such a condition is not allowed under the current regular rate exclusions. The testimony also noted that the program was not excludable under the thrift or savings plan exception because the employees were only allowed to exercise their options using a cashless method of exercise, and thus the employees could not keep the stock as savings or an investment.[18]

The opinion letter stated that the employer would be required to include any profits made from the exercise of the options in the regular rate of pay of its nonexempt employees. In particular, the profits would have to be included in the employee's regular rate for the shorter of the time between the grant date and the exercise date, or the two years prior to exercise.[19]

Section 207(e)'s exclusions to the regular rate did not clearly exempt the profits of stock options or similar equity devices from the regular rate, and thus from the overtime calculation. Thus, the Department of Labor's opinion letter provided a permissible reading of the statute. A practical effect of the Department of Labor's interpretation was stated by J. Randall MacDonald, Executive Vice President of Human Resources and Administration at GTE during a March 2 House Workforce Protections Subcommittee hearing on the issue: ''[i]f the Fair Labor Standards Act is not corrected to reverse this policy, we will no longer be able to offer stock options to our nonexempt employees.''[20]

As the contents of the letter became generally known in the business community and on Capitol Hill, it became clear that the letter raised an issue under the FLSA that previously had not been contemplated. It further became clear that an amendment to the FLSA would be needed to change the law specifically to address stock options.

A legislative solution was not only supported by employers at the House hearing, it was also supported by employees and unions. Patricia Nazemetz, Vice President of Human Resources for Xerox Corporation, read a letter from the Union of Needlework, Industrial and Textile Employees (UNITE), the union that represents many Xerox manufacturing and distribution employees, in which the International Vice President stated:

''Xerox's UNITE chapter would strongly urge Congress to pass legislation exempting stock options and other forms of stock grants from the definition of the regular rate for the purposes of calculating overtime. . . . It is only recently that Xerox has made bargaining unit employees eligible to receive both stock options and stock grants. Without a clarification to the FLSA, we are afraid Xerox may not offer stock options or other forms of stock grants to bargaining unit employees in the future.''[21]

At the House hearing, the Administration also acknowledged that the problem needed to be fixed legislatively in a flexible manner, ''Based on the information we have been able to obtain, there appears to be wide variations in the scope, nature and design of stock option programs. There is no one common model for a program, suggesting the need for a flexible approach. Given the wide variety and complexity of programs, we believe that the best solution would be to address this matter legislatively.''[22]

The general agreement on the need to fix the problem among these diverse interests led to the development of the Worker Economic Opportunity Act.

III. EXPLANATION OF THE BILL AND SPONSORS' VIEWS

Congress worked closely with the Department of Labor to develop this important legislation. The sections below reflect the discussions between the sponsors and the Department of Labor during the development of the legislation, and the sponsors' intent and their understanding of the legislation.

A. Definition of bona fide ESPP

For the purposes of the Worker Economic Opportunity Act, a bona fide employee stock purchase plan includes an ESPP that is (1) a qualified ESPP under section 423 of the Internal Revenue Code;[23] or (2) a plan that meets the criteria identified below.

1. Qualified employee stock purchase plans

Qualified ESPPs, known as section 423 plans, comprise the overwhelming majority of stock purchase plans. Thus, the intent of the legislation is to deem ''bona fide'' all plans that meet the criteria of section 423.

2. Nonqualified employee stock purchase plans

As described above, section 423 plans are considered bona fide ESPPs. Further, those ESPPs that do not meet the criteria of section 423, but that meet the following criteria also qualify as bona fide ESPPs:

(a) the plan allows employees, on a regular or periodic basis, to voluntarily provide funds, or to elect to authorize periodic payroll deductions, for the purchase at a future time of shares of the employer's stock;

(b) the plan sets the purchase price of the stock as at least 85% of the fair market value of the stock at the time the option is granted or at the time the stock is purchased; and

(c) the plan does not permit a nonexempt employee to accrue options to purchase stock at a rate which exceeds $25,000 of fair market value of such stock (determined either at the time the option is granted or the time the option is exercised) for each calendar year.

The sponsors note that many new types of ESPPs are being developed, particularly by companies outside the United States, and that many of these companies may also intend to apply them to their U.S.-based employees. These purchase plans have several attributes which make them appear to be more like savings plans than traditional U.S. stock purchase plans, such as a period of payroll deductions of between three and five years, or an employer provided ''match'' in the form of stock or options to the employee.

Further many companies are developing plans that are similar to section 423 plans. The sponsors believe that it is in the best interests of employees for the Secretary of Labor to review these and other new types of plans carefully in the light of the purpose of the Worker Economic Opportunity Act—to encourage employers to provide opportunities for equity participation to employees—and to allow section 7(e), as amended, to accommodate a wide variety of programs, where it does not undermine employees' fundamental right to overtime pay. It is the sponsors' vision that this entire law be flexible and forward-looking and that the Department of Labor apply and interpret it consistently with this vision.

B. ''Value or Income'' is defined broadly

The hallmark of the Worker Economic Opportunity Act is that section 7(e)(8) provides that any value or income derived from stock option, SAR or bona fide ESPP programs is excluded from the regular rate of pay. For this reason, the phrase ''value or income'' is construed broadly to mean any value, profit, gain, or other payment obtained, recognized or realized as a result of, or in connection with, the provision, award, grant, issuance, exercise or payment of stock options, SARs, or stock issued or purchased pursuant to a bona fide ESPP program established by the employer.

This broad definition means, for example, that any nominal value that a stock option or stock appreciation right may carry before it is exercised is excluded from the regular rate. Similarly, the value of the stock or the income in the form of cash is excluded after options are exercised, as is the income earned from the stock in the form of dividends or ultimately the gains earned, if any, on the sale of the stock. The discount on a stock option, SAR or stock purchase under a ESPP program is likewise excludable.

C. The act preserves programs which are otherwise excludable under existing regular rate exemptions

The Worker Economic Opportunity Act recognizes two ways that employer equity programs may be excluded from the regular rate. Such equity programs may be excluded if they meet the existing exemptions to the regular rate pursuant to Section 7(e)(1)–(7), which apply to contributions and sums paid by employers regardless of whether such payments are made in cash or in grants of stock or other equity based vehicles, and provided such payment or grant is consistent with the existing regulations promulgated under Section 7(e). Employer equity plans also may be excluded under new section 7(e)(8) added by the Worker Economic Opportunity Act.

This is reaffirmed in new section 207(e)(8), which makes clear that the enactment of section 7(e)(8) carries no negative implication about the scope of the preceding paragraphs of section (e). Rather, the sponsors understand that some grants and rights that do not meet all the requirements of section 7(e)(8) may continue to qualify for exemption under an earlier exclusion. For example, programs that grant options or SARs that do not have a vesting period may be otherwise excludable from the regular rate if they meet another section (7)(e) exclusion. This would be true even if the option was granted at less than 85% of fair market value. This language was not intended to prevent grants or rights that meet some but not all of the requirements of an earlier exemption in 7(e) from being exempt under the newly created exemption.

D. Basic communication to employees required because it helps ensure a successful program

For grants made under a stock option, SAR or bona fide ESPP program to qualify for the exemption under new section 7(e)(8), their basic terms and conditions must be communicated to participating employees either at the beginning of the employee's participation in the program or at the time of grant. This requirement was put into the legislation to recognize that when employees understand the mechanics and the implications of the equity devices they are given, they can more fully participate in exercising meaningful choices with respect to those devices. As discussed below, this is a simple concept, it is not intended to be a complicated or burdensome requirement.

1. Terms and conditions to be communicated to employees

Employers must communicate the material terms and conditions of the stock option, stock appreciation right or employee stock purchase program to employees to ensure that they have sufficient information to decide whether to participate in the program. With respect to options, these terms include basic information on the number of options granted, the number of shares granted per option, the grant price, the grant date or dates, the length of any applicable vesting period(s) and the dates when the employees will first be able to exercise options or rights, under what conditions the options must be forfeited or surrendered, the exercise methods an employee may use (such as cash for stock, cashless for cash or stock, etc.), any restrictions on stock purchased through options, and the duration of the option, and what happens to unexercised options at the end of the exercise period. Pending issuance of any regulations, an employer who communicated the information in the prior sentence is to be deemed to have communicated the terms and conditions of the grant. Similar information should be provided regarding SARs or ESPPs.

2. The mode of communications

The legislation does not specify any particular mode of communication of relevant information, and no particular method of communication is required, as long as the method chosen reasonably communicates the information to employees in an understandable fashion. For example, employers may notify their employees of an option grant by letter, and later provide a formal employee handbook, or other method such as a link to a location on the company Intranet. Any combination of communications is acceptable. The intent of the legislation is to ensure that employees are provided the basic information in a timely manner, not to mandate the particular form of communication.

3. The timing of communications

The legislation specifies that the employer is to communicate the terms and conditions of the stock option, SAR and ESPP programs to employees at or before the beginning of the employee's participation in the program or at the time the employee receives a grant. It is acceptable, and perhaps even likely, that the relevant information on a program will be disseminated in a combination of communications over time. This approach allows flexibility and acknowledges that types of participation vary greatly between stock option and SAR programs, on the one hand, and ESPPs on the other.

For example, under an ESPP, an employee may choose to begin payroll deductions in January, but not actually have the option to purchase stock until June. By contrast, with an option or SAR program, employees are given the options or rights at the outset, but those rights may not vest until some year in the future.

The timing of the communication is flexible, because often it is difficult to have materials ready for employees at the beginning of a stock option or stock appreciation right program, immediately following approval by the Board of Directors, because of confidentiality requirements. Thus, within a reasonable time following approval of a stock option grant by the Board of Directors, the employer is required to communicate basic information about the grant employees have received. For example, an initial letter may notify the employees that they have received a certain number of stock options and provide the basic information about the program. More detailed information about the program may precede or follow the grant in formats such as an employee handbook, options pamphlet, or an Intranet site that provides options information.

E. Exercisability criteria applicable only to stock options and SARs

As discussed above, a common feature in grants of stock options and SARs is a vesting or holding period, which under current practice may be as short as a few months or as long as a number of years. For a stock option or SAR to be excluded from the regular rate pursuant to the Worker Economic Opportunity Act, new section 7(e)(8) requires that the grant or right generally cannot be exercisable for at least six months after the date of grant.

For stock option grants that include a vesting requirement, typically an option will become exercisable after the vesting period ends. Some option grants vest gradually in accordance with a schedule. For example, a portion of the employee's options may vest after six months, with the remaining portion vesting three months thereafter. Options may also vest in connection with an event, such as the stock reaching a certain price or the company attaining a performance target.

In addition, the sponsors recognize that a grant that is vested may not be currently exercisable by the employee because of an employer's requirement that the employee hold the option for a minimum period prior to exercise. In other words, there may be an additional period of time after the vesting period during which the option remains unexerciseable. An option or SAR may meet the exercisability requirements of the bill without regard to the reason why the right to exercise is delayed.

Further, if a single grant of options or SARs includes some options exercisable after six months while others are exercisable earlier, then those exercisable after the six month period will meet the exercisability requirement even if the others do not. The determination is made option by option, SAR by SAR. In addition, if exercisability is tied to an event, the determination of whether the six-month requirement is met is based on when the event actually occurs. Thus, for example, if an option is exercisable only after an initial public offering (IPO) and the IPO occurs seven months after grant, the option shall be deemed to have met the provision's exercisability requirement.

However, section 7(e)(8)(B) specifically recognizes that there are a number of special circumstances when it is permissible for an employer to allow for earlier exercise to occur (in less than 6 months) without loss of the exemption. For example, an employer or plan may provide that a grant may vest or otherwise become exercisable earlier than six months because of an employee's disability, death, or retirement. The sponsors encourage the Secretary to consider and evaluate other changes in employees' status or circumstances.

Earlier exercise is also permitted in connection with a change in corporate ownership. The term change in ownership is intended to include events commonly considered changes in ownership under general practice for options and SARs. For example, the term would include the acquisition by a party of a percentage of the stock of the corporation granting the option or SAR, a significant change in the corporation's board of directors within 24 months, the approval by the shareholders of a plan of merger, and the disposition of substantially all of the corporation's assets.

The sponsors believe it important to allow employers the flexibility to construct plans that allow for these earlier exercise situations. However, this section is not intended to in any way require employers to include these or any other early exercise circumstances in their plans.

F. Stock option and SAR programs may be awarded at fair market value or discounted up to and including 15%

Stock options and SARs generally are granted to employees at around fair market value or at a discount. New section 7(e)(8)(B) recognizes that grants may be at a discount, but that the discount cannot be more than a 15% discount off of the fair market value of the stock (or in the case of stock appreciation rights, the underlying stock, security or other similar interest).

A reasonable valuation method must be used to determine fair market value at the time of grant. For example, in the case of a publicly traded stock, it would be reasonable to determine fair market value based on averaging the high and low trading price of the stock on the date of the grant. Similarly, it would be reasonable to determine fair market value as being equal to the average closing price over a period of days ending with or shortly before the grant date (or the average of the highs and lows on each day). In the case of a non-publicly traded stock, any reasonable valuation that is made in good faith and based on reasonable valuation principles must be used.

The sponsors understand that the exercise price of stock options and SARs is sometimes adjusted in connection with recapitalizations and other corporate events. Accounting and other tax guidelines have been developed for making these adjustments in a way that does not modify a participant's profit opportunity. Any adjustment conforming with these guidelines does not create an issue under the 15% limit on discounts.

G. Employee participation in equity programs must be voluntary

New section (8)(C) of the Worker Economic Opportunity Act states that the exercise of any grant or right must be voluntary. Voluntary means that the employee may or may not choose not to exercise his or her grants or rights at any point during the stock option, stock appreciation right, or employee stock purchase program, as long as that is in accordance with the terms of the program. This is a simple concept and it is not to be interpreted as placing any other restrictions on such programs.

It is the intent of the sponsors that this provision does not restrict the ability of an employer to automatically exercise stock options or SARs for the employee at the expiration of the grant or right. However, an employer may not automatically exercise stock options or SARs for an employee who has notified the employer that he or she does not want the employer to exercise the options or rights on his or her behalf.

Stock option, SARs and ESPP programs may qualify under new section 7(e)(8) even though the employer chooses to require employees to forfeit options, grants or rights in certain employee separation situations.

H. Performance based programs

The purpose of new section 7(e)(8)(D) is to set out the guidelines employers must follow in order to exclude from the ''regular rate'' grants of stock options, SARs, or shares of stock pursuant to an ESPP program based on performance. If neither the decision of whether to grant nor the decision as to the size of the grant is based on performance, the provisions of in new section 7(e)(8)(D) do not apply. For example, grants made to employees at the time of their hire, and any value or income derived from these grants, may be excluded provided they meet the requirements in new sections 7(e)(8)(A)–(C).

New section 8(D) is divided into two clauses. The first, clause (i), deals with awards of options awarded based on pre-established goals for future performance, and the second, clause (ii), deals with grants that are awarded based on past performance.

1. Goals for future performance

New section 7(e)(8)(D)(i) provides that employers may tie grants to future performance so long as the determinations as to whether to grant and the amount of grant are based on the performance of either (i) any business unit consisting of at least ten employees or (ii) a facility.

A business unit refers to all employees in a group established for an identifiable business purpose. The sponsors intend that employers should have considerable flexibility in defining their business units. However, the unit may not merely be a pretext for measuring the performance of a single employee or small group of fewer than ten employees. By way of example, a unit may include any of the following: (i) a department, such as the accounting or tax departments of a company, (ii) a function, such as the accounts receivable function within a company's accounting department, (iii) a position classification, such as those call-center personnel who handle initial contacts, (iv) a geographical segment of a company's operations, such as delivery personnel in a specified geographical area, (v) a subsidiary or operating division of a company, (vi) a project team, such as the group assigned to test software on various computer configurations or to support a contract or a new business venture.

With respect to the requirement to have ten or more employees in a unit, this determination is based on all of the employees in the unit, not just those employees who are, for example, non-exempt employees.

A facility includes any separate location where the employer conducts its business. Two or more locations that would each qualify as a facility may be treated as a single facility. Performance measurement based on a particular facility is permitted without regard to the number of employees who are working at the facility. For example, a facility would include any of the following: a separate office location, each separate retail store operated by a company, each separate restaurant operated by a company, a plant, a warehouse, or a distribution center.

The definitions of both a business unit and a facility are intended to be flexible enough to adapt to future changes in business operations. Therefore, the examples of business units set forth above should be viewed with this in mind.

Options may be excluded from the regular rate in accordance with new section 7(e)(8)(D)(i) under the following circumstances:

Example 1—Employer announces that certain employees at the Wichita, Kansas plant will receive 50 stock options if the plant's production reaches a certain level by the end of the year (note that in order to fit within this subsection, the grant does not have to be made on a facility wide basis);

Example 2—Employer announces that it will grant employees working on the AnyCo. account 50 stock options each if the account brings in a certain amount of revenue by the end of the year, provided that there are at least 10 employees on the AnyCo. account.

Employer 3—Employer announces that certain employees will receive stock options if the company reaches specified goal.

New section 7(e)(8)(D)(i) also makes clear that otherwise qualifying grants remain excludable from the regular rate if they are based on an employees' length of service or minimum schedule of hours or days of work. For example, an employer may make grants only to employees: (i) who have a minimum number of years of service, (ii) who have been employed for at least a specified number of hours of service during the previous twelve month period (or other period), (iii) who are employed on the grant date (or a period ending on the grant date), (iv) who are regular full-time employees (i.e., not part-time or seasonal), (v) who are permanent employees, or (vi) who continue in service for a stated period after the grant date (including any minimum required hours during this period). Any or all of these conditions, and similar conditions, are permissible.

2. Past performance

New section 7(e)(8)(D)(ii) clarifies that employers may make determinations as to existence and amount of grants or rights based on past performance, so long as the determination is in the sole discretion of the employer and not pursuant to any prior contract. Thus, employers have broad discretion to make grants as rewards for the past performance of a group of employees, even if it is not a facility or business unit, or even for an individual employee. The determination may be based on any performance criteria, including hours of work, efficiency or productivity.

Under new section 7(e)(8)(D)(ii), employers may develop a framework under which they will provide options in the future, provided that to the extent the ultimate determination as to the fact of and the amount of grants or rights each employee will receive is based on past performance, the employer does not contractually obligate itself to provide the grant or rights to an employee. Thus, new section 7(e)(8)(D)(ii) would allow an employer to determine in advance that it will provide 100 stock options to all employees who receive ''favorable'' ratings on their performance evaluations at the end of the year, and it would allow the employer to advise employees, in employee handbooks or otherwise, of the possibility that favorable evaluations may be rewarded by option grants, so long as the employer does not contractually obligate itself to provide the grants or in any other way relinquish its discretion as to the existence or amount of grants.

Similarly, the fact that an employer makes grants for several years in a row based on favorable performance evaluation ratings, even to the point where employees come to expect them, does not mean in itself that the employer may be deemed to have ''contractually obligated'' itself to provide the rights.

Some examples of performance based grants that fit within new section 7(e)(8)(D)(ii) are as follows:

Example A—Company A awards stock options to encourage employees to identify with the company and to be creative and innovative in performing their jobs. Company A's employee handbook includes the following: ''Company A's stock option program is a long-term incentive used to recognize the potential for, and provide an incentive for, anticipated future performance and contribution. Stock option grants may be awarded to employees at hire, on an annual basis, or both. All full-time employees who have been employed for the appropriate service time are eligible to be considered for annual stock option grants.''

Company A provides stock options to most nonexempt employees following their performance review. Each employee's manager rates the employee during a review process, resulting in a rating of from 1 to 5. The rating is based upon the manager's objective and subjective analysis of the employee's performance. The rating is then put into a formula to determine the number of options an employee is eligible to receive, based on the employee's level within the company, the product line that the employee works on, and the value of the product to the company's business. Employees are aware a formula is used. The Company then informs the employee of the number of options awarded to him or her.

Managers make it clear to employees that the options are granted in recognition of prior performance with the expectation of the employee's future performance, but no contractual obligation is made to employees. This process is repeated annually, with employees eligible for stock options each year based on their annual performance review. Most employees receive options annually based upon their performance review rating and their level in the company.

Example B—Company B manages its program similarly to company A, with some notable exceptions. Company B has a very detailed performance management system, under which all employees successfully meeting the expectations of their job receive options. The employee's job expectations are more clearly spelled out on an annual basis than under Company A's plan. Once a year, the employee undergoes a formal, written, performance review with his or her manager. If work is satisfactory, the employee receives a predetermined but unannounced number of options. Unlike Company A, which provides different amounts of options to employees based upon a numeric performance rating, Company B provides the same number of options to all employees who receive satisfactory employment evaluations. Over 90 percent of Company B's employees receive options annually, and in many years, this percentage exceeds 95 percent.

In both Example A and Example B, the employers set up in advance the formula under which option decisions are made; however, the decisions as to whether an individual employee would receive options and how many options he or she would receive was made based on past performance at the end of the performance period, but not pursuant to a prior contractual obligation made to the employees. The fact that the employer determines a formula or program in advance does not disqualify these examples from new section 7(e)(8).

I. Extra compensation

The Worker Economic Opportunity Act also amends section 7(h) of the FLSA (29 U.S.C. § 207(h)) to ensure that the income or value that results from a stock option, SAR or ESPP program, and that is excluded from the regular rate by new section 7(e)(8), cannot be credited by an employer toward meeting its minimum wage obligations under section 6 of the Act or overtime obligations under section 7 of the Act. The language divides section 7(h) into two parts, 7(h)(1) and 7(h)(2). Section 7(h)(1) states that an employer may not credit an amount, sum, or payment excluded from the regular rate under existing sections 7(e)(1–7) or new section 7(e)(8) towards an employer's minimum wage obligation under section 6 of the Act. When section 7(h)(1) is read together with section 7(h)(2), it states that an employer may not credit an amount excluded under existing sections 7(e)(1–4) or new section 7(e)(8) toward overtime payments. However, consistent with existing 7(h), extra compensation paid by an employer under sections 7(e)(5–7) may be creditable towards an employer's overtime obligations. This change shall take effect on the effective date but will not affect any payments that are not excluded by section 7(e) and thus are included in the regular rate.

J. The legislation includes a broad pre-effective date safe harbor and transition time

In drafting the Worker Economic Opportunity Act, the sponsors hoped to create an exemption that would be broad enough to capture the diverse range of broad-based stock ownership programs that are currently being offered to non-exempt employees across this nation. However, in order to reach a consensus, the new exemption had to be tailored to comport with the existing framework of the FLSA. The result is a series of requirements that stock option, SAR and ESPP programs must meet in order for the proceeds of those plans to fit within the newly created exemption.

Because of the circumstances that give rise to this legislation, the pre-effective date safe harbor is intentionally broader than the new exemption. The sponsors did not want to penalize those employers who have been offering broad-based stock option, SAR and ESPP programs simply because these programs would not meet all the new requirements in section 7(e)(8). Thus, the safe harbor in section 2(d) of the Act comprehensively protects employers from any liability or other obligations under the FLSA for failing to include any value or income derived from stock option, SAR and ESPP programs in a non-exempt employee's regular rate of pay. The safe harbor applies to all grants or rights that were obtained under such programs prior to the effective date, whether or not such programs fit within the new requirements of section 7(e)(8). If a grant or right was initially obtained prior to the effective date, it is covered by the safe harbor even though it vested later or was contingent on performance that would occur later. In addition, normal adjustments to a pre-effective date grant or right, such as those that are triggered by a recapitalization, change of control or other corporate event, will not take the grant or right outside the safe harbor.

On a prospective basis, the sponsors realized that many employers would need time to evaluate their programs in light of the new law and to make the changes necessary to ensure that the programs will fit within the new section 7(e)(8) exemption. Consequently, the sponsors adopted a broad transition provision to apply to stock option, SAR and ESPP programs without regard to whether or not they meet the requirements for these plans set forth in the legislation. Specifically, section 2(c) of the legislation contains a 90-day post enactment delayed effective date. The sponsors believe that the vast majority of employers who offer stock option, SAR and ESPP programs to non-exempt employees will be able to use the transition period in section 2(d)(1) to modify their programs to conform with the requirements of the legislation.

In addition, the sponsors felt that there were two circumstances where a further extension of this broad transition relief was appropriate. First, the legislation recognizes that some employers would need the consent of their shareholders to change their plans. Section 2(d)(2) provides an additional year of transition relief to any employer with a program in place on the date this legislation goes into effect that will require shareholder approval to make the changes necessary to comply with the new requirements of section 7(e)(8). Second, the legislation extends the transition relief to cover situations wherein an employer's obligations under a collective bargaining agreement conflict with the requirements of this Act. Section 2(d)(3) eliminates any potential conflict by allowing employers to fulfill their pre-existing contractual obligations without fear of liability.

V. REGULATORY IMPACT STATEMENT

The sponsors have determined that the bill would result in some additional paperwork, time and costs to the Department of Labor, which would be entrusted with implementation of the Act. It is difficult to estimate the volume of additional paperwork necessitated by the Act, but the sponsors do not believe that it will be significant.

VI. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Sec. 2. (a) Amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act—The legislation amends Section 7(e) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. § 207(e)) by creating a new subsection, 7(e)(8), which will exclude from the definition of the regular rate of pay any income or value nonexempt employees derive from an employer stock option, stock appreciation right, or bona fide employee stock purchase program under certain circumstances. Specifically, the legislation adds the following provisions to the end of Section 7(e) of the Fair Labor Standards Act:

(8) The new exclusion provides that when an employer gives its employees an opportunity to participate in a stock option, stock appreciation right or a bona fide employee stock purchase program (as explained in the Explanation of the Bill and Sponsor's Views), any value or income received by the employee as a result of the grants or rights provided pursuant to the program that is not already excludable from the regular rate of pay under sections 7(e)(1–7) of the Act (29 U.S.C. § 207(e)), will be excluded from the regular rate of pay, provided the program meets the following criteria—

(8)(A) The employer must provide employees who are participating in the stock option, stock appreciation right or bona fide employee stock purchase program with information that explains the terms and conditions of the program. The information must be provided at the time when the employee begins participating in the program or at the time when the employer grants the employees stock options or stock appreciation rights.

(8)(B) As a general rule, the stock option or stock appreciation right program must include at least a 6 month vesting (holding) period. That means that employees will have to wait at least 6 months after they receive stock options or a stock appreciation rights before they are able to exercise the right for stock or cash. However, in the event that the employee dies, becomes disabled, or retires, or if there is a change in corporate ownership that impacts the employer's stock or in other circumstances set forth at a later date by the Secretary in regulations, the employer has the ability to allow its employees to exercise their stock options or stock appreciation rights sooner. The employer may offer stock options or stock appreciation rights to employees at no more than a 15 percent discount off the fair market value of the stock or the stock equivalent determined at the time of the grant.

(8)(C) An employee's exercise of any grant or right must be voluntary. This means that the employees must be able to exercise their stock options, stock appreciation rights or options to purchase stock under a bona fide employee stock purchase program at any time permitted by the program or to decline to exercise their rights. This requirement does not preclude an employer from automatically exercising outstanding stock options or stock appreciation rights at the expiration date of the program.

(8)(D) If an employer's grants or rights under a stock option or stock appreciation right program are based on performance, the following criteria apply.

(1) If the grants or rights are given based on the achievement of previously established criteria, the criteria must be limited to the performance of any business unit consisting of 10 or more employees or of any sized facility and may be based upon that unit's or facility's hours of work, efficiency or productivity. An employer may impose certain eligibility criteria on all employees before they may participate in a grant or right based on these performance criteria, including length of service or minimum schedules of hours or days of work.

(2) The employer may give grants to individual employees based on the employee's past performance, so long as the determination remains in the sole discretion of the employer and not according to any prior contract requiring the employer to do so.

(b) Extra Compensation—The bill amends section 7(h) of the Fair Labor Standards Act (29 U.S.C. 207(h) to make clear that the amounts excluded under section 7(e) of the bill are not counted toward an employer's minimum wage requirement under section 6 of the Fair Labor Standards Act and that the amounts excluded under sections 7(e)(1)–(4) and new section 7(e)(8) are not counted toward overtime pay under section 7 of the Act.

(c) Effective Date—The amendments made by the bill take effect 90 days after the date of enactment.

(d) Liability of Employers—

(1) No employer shall be liable under the FLSA for failing to include any value or income derived from any stock option, stock appreciation right and employee stock purchase program in an non-exempt employee's regular rate of pay, so long as the employee received the grant or right at any time prior to the date this amendment takes effect.

(2) Where an employer's pre-existing stock option, stock appreciation right, or employee stock purchase program will require shareholder approval to make to the changes necessary to comply with this amendment, the employer shall have an additional year from the date this amendment takes effect to change its plan without fear of liability.

(3) Where an employer is providing stock options, stock appreciation rights, or an employee stock purchase program pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement that is in effect on the effective date of this amendment, the employer may continue to fulfill its obligations under that collective bargaining agreement without fear of liability.

(e) Regulations—the bill gives the Secretary of Labor authority to promulgate necessary regulations.

Mr. MCCONNELL. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Mr. DODD, is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I appreciate how the Chair pronounces that name so well. I am very grateful to the Chair.

I am deeply pleased to be joining my good friend and colleague from Kentucky in authoring this legislation, along with several of our other colleagues. Senator MCCONNELL mentioned several of them. But certainly Senator ENZI, Senator BENNETT, Senator ROBB, Senator MURRAY, Senator BINGAMAN, Senator REED, Senator KERREY, among others are also cosponsors of this bill.

I am also pleased to inform this body that the Clinton-Gore administration is a strong backer of the Worker Economic Opportunity Act, which is presently before us.

We have one of those unique opportunities that is not always available to us in this Congress of the United States; that is, we are actually going to do something this afternoon that couldn't have any rancor associated with it. It will make a difference in the lives, we think, of millions of people who would like to share in the remarkable prosperity we are enjoying.

We are backed by the administration. It is a bipartisan effort in this body. I am told that a similar version of this bill has been introduced in the other Chamber, the House of Representatives.

This is actually something we may accomplish, and we are not packing the galleries. It is not going to be a headline story tomorrow, but it will make a difference in people's lives.

We are in a period of sustained economic growth, almost unprecedented, if not unprecedented, in the 210-year history of our Nation. The unemployment rate today at 4.1 percent is the lowest it has been in 30 years. More than 21 million jobs have been created since 1993.

I see my colleague and good friend from Wyoming here. He is one of the cosponsors of this bill as well. I mentioned him earlier. We are pleased he is with us.

We are enjoying almost unprecedented prosperity in the country along with the remarkable results of low unemployment, the lowest in some three decades. More than 21 million new jobs have been created in the last 7 years in our Nation. Inflation is down, and real wages are rising and have grown in 5 consecutive years; again, almost an unprecedented record in our Nation's history.

For the first time in 50 years, the country posted three consecutive surpluses. Think of that. For the first time in decades, we are watching the deficit clock run in the opposite direction. Instead of how much debt we are accumulating every minute and every second, we are now reducing the national debt with the prospect of eliminating it by the year 2013.

What greater gift could we give to the next generation than to burn the national mortgage, if you will. The economy is roaring. It is producing a prosperity in the confidence which very few people could have imagined a few short years ago.

Factory workers, secretaries, and other nonexempt workers form the backbone of companies, large and small, that are also making a difference. These individuals have been driving our economy. It is the view of those who sponsor this bill since they are driving so much of this economy, they ought not to have to take a back seat to anyone in sharing in the prosperity this economy has produced.

In today's new economy, many companies look for creative ways to recruit, train, and reward employees. The Federal Reserve Board of Governors estimated approximately 17 percent of large firms in the United States introduced a stock option program and 37 percent have broadened eligibility for the stock option programs in the previous 2 years.

Ten years ago these options were a perk for the chief executive officer and other corporate executives in the corporation. Less than 1 million people received stock options in the early 1990s.

Today, between 7 and 10 million people across this country are offered stock options. According to the National Center for Employee Ownership, more than 6 million workers receiving options are nonexecutives. In a 1997 survey, NECO reported that the average option grant value was $37,000 for professional employees, $41,000 for technical employees, and $12,500 for administrative employees.

This is very good for the long-term economic prospects in this country.

Clearly, the trend is that a broad cross section of companies offers stock option programs. In these changing times, I am concerned, as is my colleague from Kentucky and others, about laws working for businesses and employees. We need to work with them to find new ways to reward working people. As the economy changes, it is only fitting we update our laws, as well. That is why I join with my colleagues, and why others have joined, why the administration has joined, to change the 1938 Fair Labor Standards Act.

The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 is the benchmark of worker protection laws. I want to make very clear that the bill that is before the Senate today, S. 2323, does absolutely nothing to undermine the foundation of that critical and important piece of legislation.

My colleagues in the administration determined that the 1938 law needed to be amended in order to incorporate the emergence of stock option programs being offered to hourly employees. Our bill amends the Fair Labor Standards Act to clarify that the gains from stock options do not need to be included in the calculation of overtime pay. That is what the 1938 law said. That is where a lot of the confusion arose.

Our legislation strikes a balance between protecting employee rights and offering flexibility to employers. This bill excludes from the regular rate stock options, stock appreciation rights or bona fide stock purchase programs that meet specific vesting, disclosure and determination requirements. A safe harbor is in effect to protect those companies that already had established stock option programs for nonexempt employees, including those programs provided under a collective bargaining agreement or requiring shareholder approval.

I would like to commend the staff for their hard work on this bill—Sheila Duffy of my staff, Denise Grant with Senator MCCONNELL, and Leslie Silverman and Elizabeth Smith with the HELP Committee.

This proposal has broad bipartisan, bicameral support between the executive and legislative branches.

I ask unanimous consent two letters, one from the Union of the Needletrades, industrial and textile employees, and one from the ERISA Industry Committee, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNION OF NEEDLETRADES, INDUSTRIAL AND TEXTILE EMPLOYEES, ROCHESTER REGIONAL JOINT BOARD, Rochester, NYC, February 22, 2000.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I am writing on behalf of UNITE and its approximately 5,300 United States bargaining unit employees covered by a contract with Xerox Corporation. It is our understanding that Congress is currently considering legislation to clarify the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) treatment of stock options and other forms of stock grants in computing overtime for non-exempt workers Xerox' UNITE chapter would strongly urge Congress to pass legislation exempting stock options and other forms of stock grants from the definition of the regular rate for the purpose of calculating overtime.

It is only recently that Xerox has made bargaining unit employees eligible to receive both stock options and stock grants. Without a clarification to the FLSA, we are afraid Xerox may not offer stock options or other forms of stock grants to bargaining unit employees in the future. In addition, without such a change in the law if options are granted there could be tremendous differentials in the amount of overtime each individual employee received based on what he or she decides to exercise an option or sell stock. However, our position that stock options should be exempt from the regular rate for purposes of overtime in no way diminishes our position that bargaining unit employees must have the right to receive overtime pay for actual hours.

As we begin the 21st century, UNITE hopes more companies will begin to provide all their employees with stock options and other forms of stock. It is a great way to assure that when the company does well the employees share the reward through employee ownership. Thank you for your consideration of this matter.

Sincerely,

GARY J. BONADONNA,
Director,
International Vice President.

THE ERISA INDUSTRY COMMITTEE,
Washington, DC, April 10, 2000.

DEAR SENATOR: The ERISA Industry Committee (ERIC) strongly urges you to support S. 2323, the "Worker Economic Opportunity Act." S. 2323 is expected to come before the Senate for a vote during the week of April 10. Timely enactment of this legislation is critical to the continued viability of broad-based stock options and other similar programs that provide employees with equity ownership in the companies for which they work.

Introduced March 29 by Senator Mitch McConnell, the "Worker Economic Opportunity Act" enjoys strong bipartisan and bicameral support. The bill is the result of a cooperative effort between congressional leaders, the Department of Labor, and the business community.

Stock options increasingly are available to a broad range of employees, not just executives. A recent survey by William M. Mercer, Inc. reports a better than twofold increase since 1993 in the percentage of major industrial and service corporations that have a broad-based stock option plan.

In spite of the growing enthusiasm for employee equity ownership among employers and employees, an advisory letter interpreting current law issued by the Department of Labor's Wage and Hour Division has effectively stopped this movement in its tracks.

According to the Department's interpretation of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) of 1938, any gains from the exercise of stock options recognized by rank and file workers must be included in their "regular rate of pay" for purposes of computing overtime wages. Thus, in order to comply with the Wage and Hour Division's interpretation of the FLSA, employers would be required to track stock options granted to rank and file employees and recalculate their overtime payments once the options have been exercised.

No rational employer will subject itself to this impracticable burden. As a result, rank and file workers will be denied the valued opportunity to become a stakeholder in their employer's future.

S. 2323 is narrowly tailored to directly address the issues raised by the Wage and Hour Division's advisory letter without compromising any long-standing worker protections under FLSA. Most important, this legislation will benefit millions of working Americans by facilitating the continued expansion of equity-based compensation programs. It should be enacted without delay.

Thank you for considering our views. Please feel free to call on us if you have any questions or need additional information.

Very truly yours,

MARK J. UGORETZ,
President.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, this bill is about fundamental fairness. I urge our colleagues to support this Worker Economic Opportunity Act to give working Americans a chance to share in our Nation's prosperity.

I ask further unanimous consent that during the remainder of this debate and the remainder of the day the bill be left open for additional cosponsorships. We have 20 or 30, but I suspect there may be others who would like their names associated with this bill. I ask unanimous consent cosponsorship of the bill be left open for the remainder of today's legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DODD. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBERTS). The distinguished Senator from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Kentucky for their work on the bill being presented today. We are here today because we believe that all workers should have the opportunity to share in the success of their companies and it is incredibly important we do all we can to make sure that this legislation gets passed with the vote it deserves.

More and more employers are providing equity ownership opportunities to all of their employees and we are here today because we want to foster this trend which is good for our workers and for our nation's economic growth. The Worker Economic Opportunity Act will encourage this trend by changing the Fair Labor Standards Act to address the needs of the 21st century.

Over the last ten years, we have witnessed tremendous change in the structure of our Nation's economy in large part due to the birth of the internet and e-commerce. The vitality of our economy is a tribute to the creative and entrepreneurial genius of thousands of individual business people and the indispensable contribution of the American workforce.

As legislators during this exciting time, we are challenged to maintain an environment that will foster the continued growth of our economy. We must work to ensure that our laws are in sync with the changing environment. However, many of the laws and policies governing our workplace have fallen out of sync with the information age and there has been particular resistance to changing our labor laws. As chairman of the Senate Committee with jurisdiction over workplace issues, I believe it is time to examine and modify these laws to meet the rapidly evolving needs of the American workforce.

The Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), for example, was enacted in the late 1930s, to establish basic standards for wages and overtime pay. While the principles behind the FLSA have not changed, its rigid provisions make it difficult for employers to accommodate the needs of today's workforce. In early January, we discovered the problem that we are addressing here today. It is extremely important. We learned that the sixty-year old law actually operates to deter employers from offering equity participation programs, such as stock options, to hourly employees.

These programs are most prevalent in the high tech industry, yet increasingly employers across the whole spectrum of American industry have begun to offer them. And, while these programs used to be reserved for executives, recent data shows that they are making their way down the corporate ladder. A recent Federal Reserve Board of Governors study found that 17% of firms have introduced stock options programs within the last two years and 37% have broadened eligibility for their stock option programs in the last two years.

Broad-based equity programs prove valuable to both employers and employees. For employers, these programs have become a key tool for employee recruitment, motivation and retention. Employees seek out companies offering these programs because they enable workers to become owners and reap the benefits of their company's growth.

When I first heard about the FLSA's application to stock options, I became very concerned about its impact on our workforce. I was pleased to discover that Senators MCCONNELL, DODD, and ENZI shared similar concerns and that the Department of Labor also recognized that we had a problem on our hands that would require a legislative solution. Together we crafted the legislation we are debating here today.

We have also worked together on a Joint Statement of Legislative Intent on S. 2323 which is intended to reflect the discussions the sponsors had with the Department of Labor during the drafting of the legislation, and the sponsors' intent and understanding of this legislation.

I urge all my colleagues to join me in supporting this important legislation. It is a symbolic first step in the process of aligning our labor laws with the new economy.

I commend the Senator from Wyoming who is one of the initial people who understood the importance of this issue and who came forward to help other Members understand the dangers of the present situation and to bring about the bill we have before the Senate. I am happy to yield the floor to my wonderful Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GREGG). The distinguished Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I commend the chairman of the Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions Committee, the jurisdictional committee, for this very important piece of legislation. I appreciate his allowing me to be the subcommittee chairman for the labor portion of that committee, which is referred to as the Employment, Safety and Training Subcommittee. We get to work on these kinds of issues on a regular basis. In the past, it has been known as one of the more contentious committees. But I recommend people take a look and note it is one of the more reasonable committees now, where we are reaching bipartisan solutions to problems for people in the workplace. That has always been our intent. We are actually having some confidence in each other now and are able to achieve those sorts of things.

I am pleased to be able to rise today to speak in favor of S. 2323, the Worker Economic Opportunity Act. The large number of bipartisan cosponsors on this bill says a great deal for both its importance and its balanced, fair nature. I commend the hard work of my colleagues, Senator JEFFORDS, Senator MCCONNELL, and Senator DODD, both in crafting a solution on the issue and in garnering the bipartisan support for the bill.

Elizabeth Smith, the legal counsel for the Employment, Safety and Training Subcommittee, has been one of the coordinators of the bill and has helped us to bring it all together. That is not only coordination between the House and Senate, between Republicans and Democrats, but it is also with the administration. A few days ago we had an opportunity to gather and talk about this bill and Secretary Herman was there, and she has played a role in getting this done.

The problem was brought to us from where it should come, and that is the workers. Workers were being told that because of the labor laws, their employers may have to stop giving them stock options.

That is an important factor because stock options are seen as a way for people throughout this country, workers throughout this country, to own a share of the company. The better the company does, the better they do. It is a way that from their job, and the risk they take having that job, employees get to benefit from the productivity and returns they put into the business.

And, boy, some of these businesses are really doing well; millionaires are being created overnight—and we want hourly workers to be able to take advantage of those stock options.

A little flaw, because of the amount of time that has gone by since fair labor standards passed, said you will have to do some calculating so the value of that stock option shows up as a direct payment.

Nobody really knows what the value of those stock options are, particularly at the time they receive them. They do know sometime down the road, when they take advantage of them, and probably even further down the road when they actually get to sell them, but there is a huge change, hopefully, in the value of that stock between the time it is awarded to them and the time there is some value to it. So how do you calculate that back in years, to the time they received it, to calculate it into overtime? The difficulty of calculating it led the companies to say: We can't figure out a formula for doing it. The Department has a formula for doing it, but we can't possibly process that through so we can avoid court action. So what we are going to do is we are going to end stock options. That is when the workers said to Congress: Solve this problem for us.

That is what brings everybody together for a solution, the people at the far end asking that they be allowed to continue participating in the prosperity of this country. That is what has happened in this instance. We are here today because the workplace has changed for the better, but the labor statutes have not. Many employers now give stock options, not only to the executives and the managers, they give it to secretaries, factory workers, janitors, mailroom clerks—everybody. Those are the hourly employees who provide the critical support on which a company's success is built.

I am proud of those employers who give stock options to those employees. They recognize the value of giving workers a stake in the company's business. They are leading the charge to move workplaces into a new, modern era of better employer-employee relations. In fact, the line is dimming on who is the employer and who is the employee.

Unfortunately, the decades-old Fair Labor Standards Act has not kept pace. This statute, drafted during a very different time in the history of the American workplace, threatened to prevent employers from giving hourly employees stock options. S. 2323 removes this threat and ensures that companies can continue to give stock options to hourly employees so they can share in the success of their employer and this country's economic growth.

This legislation takes an important step toward bringing an outdated labor statute up to date with the modern workplace. I am very concerned there are many other examples of problems such as the one we are solving today, examples of other obsolete restrictions in the 30- to 60-year-old labor statutes that are stifling the development of the new creative ways to benefit employees, such as the stock options program and telecommuting arrangements. We should be encouraging these advances in employer-employee relations, not stifling them. By passing this Worker Economic Opportunity Act we can provide encouragement. I hope we can continue to look for ways to solve similar problems.

I am particularly pleased the Department of Labor has worked with us in this bipartisan group. As chairman of the Employment, Safety and Training Subcommittee, I firmly believe cooperation between lawmakers and agency is the best way to develop practical solutions that benefit both the employees and the businesses.

I want to mention we have been doing that for about 2 years now. We passed the first changes in OSHA in 27 years, a year and a half ago; little incremental changes that will make a difference to the workers, that will make the workplace safer. That is what we are trying to do.

Recently we worked together on home inspections. OSHA, through a letter, had suggested they were going to go into the homes and check and see how telecommuters were operating. Home is the least safe place there is. It worried a lot of companies about how they were going to do the inspections without imposing on the privacy of their employees. Employees were worried about companies coming into their homes. The Department and OSHA and Congress saw the error of that. The Department withdrew the letter. Both OSHA and congress agreed that OSHA should not be a threat to people working in their home offices. People who work in their homes really enjoy doing that. There are a lot of benefits to them, many of which people who work in the District would understand because of the parking and the traffic problems. I was very pleased that the agency and congress agreed on this.

Last week we had agreement on a funding proposal, a sense-of-the-Senate proposal that would have been on the budget agreement except for a parliamentary move that was done at the last moment. But there was agreement on both sides that there needs to be not only enforcement of OSHA—which does get attention—but justification by OSHA of how it is reducing workplace illnesses and injuries and a discussion of the value of compliance assistance activities, which are extremely important.

There are 12,000 pages of OSHA regulations. It is difficult for a small businessman to make it through that many pages of that kind of rhetoric. So we have been trying to make it more incentive-based, so the agency would participate more in telling them what they need to do instead of beating them over the head for what they did not do. We think, with a more cooperative program, there will be more safety in the workplace; that employers will not live in fear of OSHA, but rather in anticipation of help from OSHA and an understanding of the way they can keep their employees safe.

Those are a few of the things we are working together on to have a better workplace. This legislation is a key piece and a key beginning to a number of changes we can make to affect the workers of this country. I look forward to working together on similar measures in the future as we move toward the shared goal of better matching our Federal laws to the needs of the modern workplace.

I yield the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Wyoming for his work not only on this bill but on the other legislation he discussed. I also commend him for his help in the review of existing labor laws. The Senator understands the import of bringing our labor laws in line with the needs into the 21st Century. I depend upon him, and he produces.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the Worker Economic Opportunity Act. This bipartisan legislation, also supported by the Department of Labor, will encourage employers to provide stock options to all employees, not just executives, ensuring that all of our workers will continue to have the opportunity for an ownership stake in their company.

In recent years, there have been revolutionary changes in the workplace, creating new opportunities for our working families—opportunities, which for a long time, frequently existed only for a select privileged few. One of the most positive developments has been the significant increase in the availability of stock option plans for workers, specifically hourly workers.

The decades-old employment laws do not accommodate newer workplace innovations and their application would unfairly punish hourly workers by making their stock-option programs disproportionately expensive and complex for employers. Subsequently, recent Department of Labor legal interpretations and policies have threatened the availability of stock option plans for hourly employees.

Mr. President, it is imperative that Congress send a clear message that the positive developments taking hold around the country should be encouraged, not thwarted.

The Worker Economic Opportunity Act would send just a message, ensuring that all employees will continue to have the opportunity to share in the economic growth and success of their company formerly enjoyed only by corporate executives. Moreover, companies, especially smaller companies with high capital costs in development, will be able to maintain the capital resources necessary to compete in the rapid evolving global economy and, at the same time, reward and retain highly qualified and valued employees.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to thank Senator MCCONNELL for his work and dedication toward this legislation and the Department of Labor for recognizing the need to accommodate today's employee and workplace innovations.

I yield the floor.

Ms. COLLINS. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support for S. 2323, the Worker Economic Opportunity Act. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation, which has broad bipartisan support in both the Senate and the House of Representatives.

In recent years, we have seen substantial growth in the use of employee equity programs such as stock options, stock appreciation rights, and employee stock purchase plans. This growth has not only been in the number of companies which offer such plans, but also in the employees to whom such plans are available. While long used as a form of incentive for corporate executives, equity programs are now available to more employees than ever. In fact, a 1998 survey by Hewitt Associates found that in excess of two-thirds of large U.S. companies offered stock options to non-executive employees, and more than a quarter of these companies make such plans available to their entire workforce.

Unfortunately, the Fair Labor Standards Act, which was enacted in 1938, does not recognize the importance of stock options as an employee benefit. Thus, when asked how to deal with stock options when calculating overtime pay for hourly-wage employees, the Department of Labor ruled that the options would have to be included in the calculations.

The end result of this decision left employers with two options: One, go through the burdensome task of recalculating an employee's regular pay rate, retroactively, based on the change in the value of the stock from the time the option was granted until it was exercised; or, two, do not offer any form of equity program to any employee who is not exempt from the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Since complying with the Department of Labor's onerous ruling would not likely be worth the benefit of offering an equity plan, the vast majority of companies would be left to face option two, thus eliminating the use of a benefit that is popular with both employers and employees.

Recognizing the need to remedy this matter, for the good of companies and workers alike, a bipartisan group of legislators worked to craft the bill we have before us today, the Worker Economic Opportunity Act. This legislation would exempt employee equity programs from the overtime requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act, just as profit sharing and holiday bonus plans are exempted. In addition, the bill protects employers who offered employee equity programs prior to the date this legislation is enacted.

This legislation will allow employers to offer the kind of benefits which will allow them to attract a quality workforce, while providing employees with a benefit they truly want. It is all too rare for Congress to come up with a win-win solution to a problem, but in this case we certainly have.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, since its enactment in 1938, the Fair Labor Standards Act has played a fundamental role in ensuring a fairer standard of living for all American workers. The act created basic rights for workers by establishing a federal minimum wage, a 40 hour work week and overtime pay for additional hours. It also protects children from abusive working conditions and helps ensure that women and men receive equal pay. Throughout its existence, the act has been indispensable in improving the standard of living for vast numbers of Americans.

The Department of Labor has effectively carried out its responsibility to interpret the law with this purpose in mind. Given the high value of the act in protecting workers' rights to a fair workplace, Congress must remain vigilant to ensure that any changes in this important law do not undermine the wage and hour protections guaranteed to workers under the act.

I support the current bill because it helps ensure that employers cannot misuse the act as an excuse to exclude rank and file workers from the stock option plans, stock appreciation rights, and stock purchase plans they provide to higher paid employees.

I commend Senator DODD, Senator JEFFORDS, Senator ENZI, and Senator MCCONNELL for developing this narrow, but important, clarification of the act. It is a needed modernization of the law, and it arose from unique circumstances. I am confident that the Secretary of Labor will promulgate regulations interpreting this bill in a way that protects the fundamental right of workers to receive overtime pay and not be forced to work overtime to participate in stock plans. It is of the utmost importance that any change in the act serves to strengthen the protections for workers, not weaken them.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today to express my support for the Worker Economic Employment Opportunity Act. Mr. President, every time we turn around it seems that we hear about how strong our nation's economy is right now—and how America's workers are daily facing new-found employment opportunities. We are in a period of almost unprecedented prosperity and sustained economic growth. And the bill we are voting on today is a direct consequence of that growth.

It wasn't long ago that benefits such as stock options were available only to the upper levels of management. Companies are now offering stock options as a way not only to attract, but to retain quality employees at all levels. This is a way of providing fairness to our nations workers—the ones who manage the daily ins-and-outs of the business, the ones who have quite literally built today's economy.

S. 2323 will clarify that providing stock options will not be counted toward overtime pay for hourly employees. The vitality of our economy is a tribute to the hard work and creativity of these workers. Accordingly, it is unacceptable that the Fair Labor Standards Act would be interpreted in a manner that would effectively preclude the offering of this valuable benefit to hourly employees who form the backbone of American business.

The Fair Labor Standards Act already exempts some employee benefits such as discretionary bonuses, health insurance, and retirement savings plans from overtime calculations. We do this to encourage employers to provide these critically needed benefits and incentives for their employees—stock options should be no different.

We should not hinder the ability of our nation's workers to participate in the economic success of the companies they are helping to building. If employers choose to offer profit-sharing options, they should not be penalized when calculating over-time wages.

Mr. President, I support this critical clarification of the Fair Labor Standards Act and I urge my colleagues to vote for the bill. Thank you, Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I rise today to support Senator MCCONNELL's stock options legislation, S. 2323, and commend him for his hard work on this issue. This legislation allows companies who currently offer non-salaried employees a stock options program to continue to incentivize their work force without the threat of sanctions of the U.S. Department of Labor.

This is an easy one to support. The United States is unique in the world with regard to how our stock options and the wealth generated in our companies are shared with those who significantly participate in their creation. As in most of the rest of the world, it used to be that only our top executives received stock options from their companies. Today, many high tech companies offer stock options to all of their employees, from the clerk to the CEO. Particularly with regard to an individual's retirement needs, stock options are a tremendous financial opportunity for all workers and their families. We must do everything in our power to preserve these positive wealth- and risk-sharing developments in our economy.

Employees at every level should be allowed to reap the rewards of the success of their company. All throughout the United States, it has become common place for employees to quit their job and go to work for progressive companies who allow them to share in the wealth that their corporations generate. I hear repeatedly from industrial companies whose compensation structure is often very different, that they are losing their most talented and valuable employees to these new, often high-tech, corporations. And Mr. President, that kind of competition for employees benefits all Americans and it's a positive development.

The Department of Labor's ill-considered advisory opinion, threatened this development, and would have resulted in the cessation of often generous stock option plans for non-managerial and non-professional employees in many of America's most progressive corporations. It is critical that we recognize the importance of these wealth- and risk-sharing developments to the health of the American economy and carefully weigh each new regulation, interpretation, and law before we rashly risk the financial health and well-being of the hard-working families who have everything to do with the level of productivity our economy enjoys.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I will vote in favor of the Worker Economic Opportunity Act, S. 2323. Stock options have traditionally been distributed only to highly salaried executives, used as an incentive to promote hard work on behalf of the company. As a company's bottom line improves due in part to the executive's efforts, the value of the company's stock increases, eventually rewarding the executive when he or she ultimately exercises the option and later sells the stock. I have long maintained that stock options ought be provided to all types of employee—whether hourly or salaried, management or clerica—and not just the top brass. That is why I introduced the Ending the Double Standards for Stock Options Act last Congress, which would have encouraged corporations to adopt plans in which a minimum of 50% of all options would go to non-management employees. After all, a company's success depends on the efforts of more than just its executives.

I am hopeful that the Worker Economic Opportunity Act will encourage the growth of broad-based employee stock option plans in corporate America. The Act excludes stock options from overtime pay calculations for hourly employees. Current law also excludes benefits like discretionary bonuses, employer-provided health insurance, and retirement benefits from overtime pay rates. But current law doesn't address stock options. Last year, the Department of Labor indicated that, without action by Congress, companies would likely have to include the value of stock options when figuring an hourly employee's overtime pay rate. Corporate America has argued that the administrative and financial burdens associated with such inclusion, given a huge number of different employees having different amounts of options with different exercise dates and strike prices, outweigh the benefits of having a broad-based stock option plan.

This legislation is not inconsistent with my proposal to require the reporting of stock options as an expense on a company's financial statements, a key part of the Ending the Double Standards for Stock Options Act. Therefore, I support the Worker Economic Opportunity Act to remove a potential barrier to workers' participation in the prosperous American economy they helped create.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that for the next 5 minutes the time be held open, and then at 2:05 p.m. I will yield back all the time on the measure, and I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business from 2:05 p.m. until 2:30 p.m., with the time equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, what is the order of business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senate is S. 2323.

The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) and the Senator from Maine (Ms. SNOWE) are necessarily absent.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KERRY), the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROCKEFELLER) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 95, nays 0, as follows:

The bill (S. 2323) was passed, as follows:

S. 2323

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Worker Economic Opportunity Act''.

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1938.

(a) EXCLUSION FROM REGULAR RATE.—Section 7(e) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 207(e)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (6), by striking ''or'' at the end;

(2) in paragraph (7), by striking the period and inserting ''; or''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(8) any value or income derived from employer-provided grants or rights provided pursuant to a stock option, stock appreciation right, or bona fide employee stock purchase program which is not otherwise excludable under any of paragraphs (1) through (7) if—

''(A) grants are made pursuant to a program, the terms and conditions of which are communicated to participating employees either at the beginning of the employee's participation in the program or at the time of the grant;

''(B) in the case of stock options and stock appreciation rights, the grant or right cannot be exercisable for a period of at least 6 months after the time of grant (except that grants or rights may become exercisable because of an employee's death, disability, retirement, or a change in corporate ownership, or other circumstances permitted by regulation), and the exercise price is at least 85 percent of the fair market value of the stock at the time of grant;

''(C) exercise of any grant or right is voluntary; and

''(D) any determinations regarding the award of, and the amount of, employer-provided grants or rights that are based on performance are—

''(i) made based upon meeting previously established performance criteria (which may include hours of work, efficiency, or productivity) of any business unit consisting of at least 10 employees or of a facility, except that, any determinations may be based on length of service or minimum schedule of hours or days of work; or

''(ii) made based upon the past performance (which may include any criteria) of one or more employees in a given period so long as the determination is in the sole discretion of the employer and not pursuant to any prior contract.''.

(b) EXTRA COMPENSATION.—Section 7(h) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 207(h)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''Extra'' and inserting the following:

''(2) Extra''; and

(2) by inserting after the subsection designation the following:

''(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), sums excluded from the regular rate pursuant to subsection (e) shall not be creditable toward wages required under section 6 or overtime compensation required under this section.''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date that is 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(d) LIABILITY OF EMPLOYERS.—No employer shall be liable under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 for any failure to include in an employee's regular rate (as defined for purposes of such Act) any income or value derived from employer-provided grants or rights obtained pursuant to any stock option, stock appreciation right, or employee stock purchase program if—

(1) the grants or rights were obtained before the effective date described in subsection (c);

(2) the grants or rights were obtained within the 12-month period beginning on the effective date described in subsection (c), so long as such program was in existence on the date of enactment of this Act and will require shareholder approval to modify such program to comply with section 7(e)(8) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (as added by the amendments made by subsection (a)); or

(3) such program is provided under a collective bargaining agreement that is in effect on the effective date described in subsection (c).

(e) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Labor may promulgate such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the amendments made by this Act.

Mr. LOTT. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. JEFFORDS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I had hoped we would be able to announce a unanimous consent agreement at this time as to how we will proceed on eliminating the marriage tax penalty and what amendments would be in order and how much time. I have now received a list of amendments from Senator DASCHLE, but we have had only a couple of minutes to review that. We need a little time. I understand several of the amendments actually have been filed. There may be one or two on which we don't actually have access to an amendment. For instance, Senator TORRICELLI may have an amendment prepared and we would like to get a copy of the amendment. We would like to have a little time to review the list and the substance of these amendments. We have agreed we should go forward with general debate while we do that.

I ask consent the Senate resume the pending legislation for debate, equally divided, until the majority leader is recognized at 4:30 this afternoon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY RELIEF ACT OF 2000—Resumed

Pending:

Lott (for Roth) amendment No. 3090, in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, in his capacity as a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, suggests the absence of a quorum.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I know the majority leader is looking over amendments that Members on this side of the aisle want the opportunity to offer to the bill on the marriage tax penalty. I certainly hope the majority leader will be able to accommodate us. After all, if we were using the regular rules of the Senate, we could offer any and all amendments; that is, the rules of the Senate provide Members can, in fact, offer amendments on bills that come before the Senate.

The Senator from Montana, who has done so much work on this marriage tax penalty issue, and I were talking about how much the procedure around here is like the House of Representatives with tremendously restricted opportunities for debate and restricted opportunities to offer amendments. We are working very hard, on our side of the aisle, to fight for the right merely to put matters before the Senate. We may not win every time, but the fact is we are here for a reason and that is to legislate; it is to bring these matters before the American people in this forum called the Senate.

The bill purports to take care of the marriage tax penalty, but I have big news for everyone: It does not take care of the marriage tax penalty. Why do I say this? I get this directly from Senator MOYNIHAN's work on this issue as the ranking member of the Finance Committee. We know there are 65 marriage tax penalties in the code for all taxpayers—65.

So if you really believe the marriage tax penalty is your biggest priority and that is all you want to do, that it is the most important thing as you look at the Tax Code—and, frankly, from my point of view, it is not the only thing I want to do and there are more important things we can do to help the middle class in this country—the most honest thing to do is repeal the penalty in these 65 occasions in which it appears in the Tax Code.

However, the GOP plan fully eliminates only 1 of these penalties, partially eliminates 2 others, and it leaves 62 marriage penalties in the code.

We have a situation where we are told we can do away with the marriage tax penalty, but when we look at the fine print, we are not doing away with the marriage tax penalty at all. We are only doing it in one place, completely, where it appears, and partially in another couple. And we are leaving 62 penalties in place.

So I do not really think this is a good way for us to proceed because it is so expensive and we have not taken care of the marriage tax penalty. It is another one of these risky tax schemes that is going to come back to haunt us because it is going to rob us of debt reduction.

When you add it to all the tax bills that have already passed the Senate with majority support from the Republicans, it is breaking the back of the non-Social Security surplus. We will have no surplus. Pretty soon, we are going to start eating into that surplus.

We are going to hear Senator BAUCUS talk about why he believes this plan is flawed. It actually hurts some people at the lower end of the scale. It does not do what it purports to do.

We are going to hear from Senator BAYH, who has another idea that is certainly more affordable and would allow us to do other things we need to do for our people, such as the prescription drug benefit.

We now know for sure that our people are suffering because they cannot afford prescription drugs. If we listen to Senator WYDEN, who has spoken on this eloquently, we know our senior citizens are not taking their prescription drugs. They are cutting their pills in half. They risk getting strokes. They risk getting heart attacks. They cannot afford the prescription drugs.

While we are talking about a marriage tax penalty—and a lot of relief goes to people who are earning a lot of money in this country—what about the prescription drug benefit? What about a tuition tax break for parents who are struggling to send their kids to college and college tuition goes up each and every year?

We cannot do these things in a vacuum. We have to look at the entire picture. We have to ask ourselves: Do we want to give tax breaks or do we want all the money to go to debt reduction? I myself would like to give targeted tax breaks that we can afford to the middle class, who needs them, and use the rest of the money for debt reduction and for investments in our people, in our children.

In closing, there is something we can really do for married people here, those at the lowest incomes who are working at the minimum wage, more than 60 percent of whom are women. Raising the minimum wage would go a long way to doing something good for people who are married and in the low brackets. A tuition tax break for people who send their kids to college would go a long way to helping married people and their families. A prescription drug benefit would help those families who are seeing their moms and dads struggling along, not being able to afford prescription drugs.

So the question we face, just to sum it up as we look at this Republican plan, is this: Why would we do something that says it is relieving the marriage tax penalty when it leaves 62 marriage tax penalties in place? Why would we do that? It is not real. We are telling people we are doing something we are not doing. We are backloading it. We are breaking the Treasury. We are eating into the non-Social Security surplus. Why would we do that?

Why not look at a more modest plan? We have some ideas on that. We are going to hear about one of them today. Why don't we look at raising the minimum wage? Why don't we look at the prescription drug benefit or the tuition tax break for our families who are struggling to send their kids to college? Why don't we look at this economic recovery and together, both sides of the aisle, say we do not want to derail it by doing these tax breaks, one after the other after the other after the other. They are adding up to hundreds of billions of dollars.

If our President were not so strong in saying let's keep this country on a fiscally sound basis, we would be in a lot of trouble, if those bills had been signed.

I asked of the Senator from Montana yesterday—I was talking to his staff—how many tax bills have already gone through here with the votes of the other side of the aisle. I think his staff told me it was about $500 billion at this point, $500 billion of tax breaks—by the way, most of them to people who do not want them, who do not need them, who are asking us to keep the economy strong, reduce the debt, and do targeted tax breaks for the people who really need them.

I hope the majority leader will accept these amendments we have come up with, allow us to debate as Senators, not turn us into the House of Representatives which gives its Members very few rights to offer amendments. I hope we will reject this Republican plan because it does not do what it says it does. It is fiscally irresponsible, and it stops us from doing the good things we need to do for our families.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I support legislation which would provide tax relief to the working families who are currently paying a marriage penalty. Such a penalty is unfair and should be eliminated. However, I do not support the proposal the Republicans have brought to the floor.

While its sponsors claim the purpose of the bill is to provide a marriage penalty relief, that is not its real purpose. In fact, only 42 percent of the tax benefits contained in the legislation go to couples currently subject to a marriage penalty. The majority of the tax benefits would actually go to couples who are already receiving a marriage bonus and to single taxpayers. As a result, the cost of the legislation is highly inflated. It would cost $248 billion over the next 10 years.

As with most Republican tax breaks, the overwhelming majority of the tax benefits would go to the wealthiest taxpayers. This bill is designed to give more than 78 percent of the total tax savings to the wealthiest 20 percent of the taxpayers. It is, in reality, the latest ploy in the Republican scheme to spend the entire surplus on tax cuts which would disproportionately benefit the richest taxpayers. That is not what the American people mean when they ask for relief from the marriage penalty. With this bill, the Republicans have deliberately distorted the legitimate concerns of married couples for tax fairness.

All married couples do not pay a marriage penalty. In fact, a larger percentage of couples receive a marriage bonus than pay a marriage penalty. The only couples who pay a penalty are those families in which both spouses work and have relatively equivalent incomes. They deserve relief from this inequity, and they deserve it now.

We can provide relief to the overwhelming majority of the couples simply and at a modest cost. That is what the Senate should do. Instead, the Republicans have insisted on greatly inflating the cost of the bill by adding extraneous tax breaks primarily benefiting the wealthiest taxpayers.

A plan that would eliminate the marriage penalty for the overwhelming majority of married couples could easily be designed and cost less than $100 billion over 10 years. The House Democrats offered such a plan when they debated this issue in February. The amendment which Senator BAYH intends to offer to this bill would also accomplish that goal. If the real purpose of the legislation is to eliminate the marriage penalty for those working families who actually pay a penalty under current law, it can be accomplished at a reasonable cost.

The problem we have consistently faced is that our Republican colleagues insist on using marriage penalty relief as a subterfuge to enact large tax breaks unrelated to relieving the marriage penalty and heavily weighted to the wealthiest taxpayers. The House Republicans put forward a bill which would cost $182 billion over 10 years and give less than half the tax benefits to people who pay a marriage penalty. That was not enough for the Senate Republicans. They raised the cost to $248 billion over 10 years. A substantial majority, 58 percent of the tax breaks in the Senate bill, would go to taxpayers who do not pay a marriage penalty.

Nor is this the only tax bill the Republicans have brought to the floor this year. They attached tax cuts to the minimum wage bill in the House of close to $123 billion and tax cuts to the bankruptcy bill in the Senate of almost $100 billion. They have sought to pass tax cuts of $23 billion to subsidize private school tuition and reduce the inheritance tax paid by multimillionaires. Not including the cost of this bill, the Republicans in the House and Senate have already passed tax cuts that would consume $443 billion over the next 10 years. The result of this tax cut frenzy is to crowd out necessary spending on the priorities which the American people care most about—education, prescription drugs for senior citizens, health care for uninsured families, strengthening Medicare and Social Security for future generations.

Finally, I want to bring another matter to the attention of the Senate. It is another marriage penalty, and that is, there are 13 States—which represent 22 percent of the American people—that have laws saying when one gets married, they lose the coverage under Medicaid they might otherwise have if they were single. For example, in the State of Maine, one is eligible as a single person for Medicaid up to $14,000, but if it is a couple, each earning $7,000 so the family income is $14,000, neither of them gets Medicaid coverage. That is true in 13 States.

If we are going to take a look at the marriage penalty for the wealthier individuals in this country, what about the marriage penalty for some of the working poor who are trying to make ends meet? That is an issue I hope to have an opportunity to debate when we get into a discussion of the proposal put forward by the Democratic leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire). The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak for up to 15 minutes on an unrelated topic.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, we are now on the marriage penalty bill. I suggest to the Senator, since there are no other Members on the floor, he can take time off the majority side on the pending measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized.

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, since this is coming off our time on the marriage tax penalty bill, I commend Senator HUTCHISON and all those who have worked so diligently on both sides of the aisle and in the House of Representatives to provide relief on this onerous and perverse provision in our Tax Code that puts the institution of marriage in a disadvantageous position and costs American families thousands of dollars each year. It is something that should have been eliminated long ago.

I look forward to supporting the Marriage Penalty Relief Act. I hope there will be an overwhelming vote in the Senate for this bill.

MILITARY RECRUITER ACCESS ENHANCEMENT ACT OF 2000

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise today to speak in favor of S. 2397, the Military Recruiter Access Enhancement Act of 2000. This bill is designed to assist armed services recruiters in gaining access to secondary schools and school student directory information for military recruiting purposes.

The matter of recruiting and retaining military personnel of the highest quality and in the quantity needed to maintain the optimal personnel strength of our armed services has been a topic of great interest to myself and my colleagues on the Senate Armed Services Personnel Subcommittee.

I have heard detailed testimony in hearings this year from top Department of Defense manpower officials and actual military recruiters—those on the front lines doing the recruiting—regarding the challenges of contacting and informing young people today about the benefits of a career in the military. As I have contemplated the detailed testimony received on the subject, it is clear there are several factors combining to make the tough job of recruiting young people for military service even tougher.

We found the following: The combined effects of the strongest economy in 40 years, the lowest unemployment rate since the establishment of an all-volunteer force, and a declining propensity on the part of America's youth to serve in the military make the recruitment of persons for the Armed Forces unusually challenging in the economic climate in which we exist.

For the recruitment of high quality men and women, each of the Armed Forces face intense competition from the other branches of the Armed Forces. They face competition from the private sector, and they face competition from postsecondary educational institutions recruiting young people as well.

It is becoming increasingly difficult for the Armed Forces to meet their respective recruiting goals. Despite a variety of innovative approaches taken by recruiters and the extensive programs of benefits that are available for recruits, recruiters have to devote extraordinary time and effort to fill monthly requirements for immediate accessions.

Unfortunately—and this is, I think, dismaying and surprising to most Americans—a number of high schools, thousands of high schools, have denied recruiters for the Armed Forces access to the students or to the student directory information of those high schools.

In 1999, there were 4,515 instances of denial of access to the Army. There were an additional 4,364 instances in the case of the Navy, 4,884 instances in the case of the Marine Corps, and 5,465 instances of denial of access to Air Force recruiters. In total, there were over 600 high schools across this country that denied access to at least three branches of the services, the largest of those school districts is San Diego, CA.

As of the beginning of 2000, nearly one-fourth of all high schools nationwide did not release student directory information to Armed Forces recruiters.

In testimony presented to the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, recruiters of the Armed Forces stated that the single biggest obstacle to carrying out their recruiting mission is the denial of access to directory information about students, for a directory listing of high school students is the recruiter's basic tool. When directory information is not provided by schools, recruiters must spend valuable time, otherwise available for pursuing recruiting contacts, to construct a list from school yearbooks and other sources. This dramatically reduces both the number of students each recruiter can reach and the time available communicating with the students that the recruiters can eventually locate.

The denial of direct access to students and denial of access to directory information unfairly hurts America's young people.

High schools that deny access to military recruiters prevent students from receiving all of the information on the educational and training incentives offered by the Armed Forces, thus impairing the career decisionmaking process of students by limiting the availability of complete information on what options they have before them.

The denial of access for Armed Forces recruiters to students or to directory information ultimately undermines our national defense by making it harder for our Armed Forces to recruit young Americans in the quantity and of the quality necessary for maintaining the readiness of the Armed Forces to provide national defense.

The bill I have introduced legislates a series of formal steps to be taken with secondary schools that deny access to students or student directory information to recruiters.

Step 1: The Department of Defense will be required to send a general officer or flag officer to visit the local education agency to arrange for recruiting access within 120 days following a report of access denial.

Should a school say, no, we are not going to let military recruiters access, the first step is, negotiations. They would try to work this out. You would have a flag officer, or a general officer, who would go to the school, visit with the superintendent, the principal, the counselors, and find out what the problem is.

Step 2: Should access still be denied, within 60 days of the visit in step 1, the Secretary of Defense must then notify the State's chief executive—presumably the Governor—of the denial and request his or her assistance. A copy of this request is also sent to the Secretary of Education.

Step 3: If access for recruiters is still not achieved a year after the Governor has been notified—a full 18 months since the initial discovery that they are denying access—and if it is found that the school in question denies access for two or more of the Armed Services, that school will be placed on a list maintained by the Department of Defense and will be denied Federal funds until such time as recruiter access is restored.

People may say that is having a heavy hand. May I say, there is no school in America that ought to ever lose Federal funding under this law because no school should ever have to deny access to military recruiters. There is an ample amount of time—a full 18 months—for negotiations, discussion, in bringing in the Governor of the State, to try the reconcile whatever problems there might be.

I think the importance of this bill cannot be overstated. We have an obligation to provide an environment for our recruiters that, at the very least, places them on a level playing field with the recruiters of colleges and universities and with representatives from private industry.

Today, the recruiting of high school students actually starts in junior high school for colleges, for universities, and even for private-sector jobs. To say a recruiter cannot have contact until that student is out of high school puts them at an incredible disadvantage.

While DOD has had the ability to withhold Federal funding from colleges and universities which denied access to military recruiters, there has not been any significant recourse available at the secondary school level.

In some cases, a few select administrators can make decisions about recruiter access based on their own personal bias or lack of familiarity with the positive aspects of military service. These ''gatekeepers'' effectively block information from students by denying access to recruiters. These nonaccess policies may actually exist when the community at large in the school's area is very much supportive of the Armed Forces and recruiting efforts.

We must work collectively as a nation to keep our military ''connected'' with the people they serve. The concept of an all-volunteer force will only continue to be successful when the compensatory benefit package we offer young people is competitive and the career information on current educational and financial incentives is readily available to potential recruits.

There are those who are understandably concerned about maintaining the privacy of personal contact information. It is ironic, however, that student directory information is often shared by high schools with cap and gown companies, college recruiters, and private industry representatives, but denied to Armed Forces recruiters. We must take active steps to eliminate that sort of bias, whether intended or not, and reestablish an equal footing for our Armed Forces recruiters with other groups seeking to contact students. We must remember that recruiters represent the primary tool of not only the Department of Defense but Congress, as well, in fulfilling our constitutional requirements to raise and maintain an army, the Armed Forces.

There is no doubt in my mind that the recruiting professionals in all branches of our Armed Forces are top-notch role models, fully capable of succeeding in their respective recruiting missions, but they need to have a supportive and conducive contact environment.

This bill will provide school officials of institutions currently restricting access to recruiters with additional incentive to improve or restore that access.

This bill will bring attention locally and nationally to the problems of access restriction to Armed Forces recruiters.

This bill sends a clear signal to DOD leaders and to the people of our country that we recognize the problem recruiters face in supporting the concept of our all-volunteer force.

This bill provides a reasonable and calculated approach to improving access with a phased escalation in the negative consequences for schools insisting upon perpetuating nonaccess policies. It is nonantagonistic, it is nonconfrontational, but it is firm.

This bill does not attempt to dictate local practices from Washington, as some may charge. This bill merely requires schools to provide—and I quote from the bill's language—

> . . . the same access to secondary school students, and to directory information concerning such students, as is provided generally to post-secondary educational institutions or to prospective employers of those students.

We are just simply saying: Make the playing field level. If you are going to deny access to Army recruiters, Air Force recruiters, Marine recruiters, Navy recruiters, then we expect the same denial would be applied across the board to private industry recruiters and to colleges and universities. If you are going to provide access to private industry and to colleges and universities, likewise, that access must be provided under this legislation to those seeking to recruit for our Armed Forces.

The size of our Armed Forces has decreased significantly over the past decade. The number of veterans is decreasing daily. Fewer and fewer young people today have a close relative or friend with military service experience. We have in the Congress a corporate responsibility to make an extra effort to invite young men and women to bring their talent into the service of their country and to take advantage of the outstanding educational and training benefits currently available. Few occupations offer the patriotic satisfaction of military service.

A healthy all-volunteer force does not just happen. When I asked recruiters appearing before a recent Personnel Subcommittee hearing what Congress could do to help them bring the best and brightest into today's military, of course they responded that educational benefits would help, they responded that health care benefits would help, they responded that improving housing would help. But equally important was their request for help in convincing parents and educators that enlisting their children and students was ''not the last choice'' but a first choice, and to help them gain access to students on school grounds and access to student directory information.

In response to the DOD request for assistance, I would like to respond in two ways:

First, by inviting all of my colleagues in the Senate, regardless of where they hail from, to join with me in pledging to visit one or more high schools in their home States this year and to promote military service as an attractive career opportunity while addressing students and facility members. This is one positive step we can all take to demonstrate our support for a healthy Armed Forces recruiting process.

Secondly, I urge my colleagues to support this bill, the Military Recruiter Access Enhancement Act of 2000, in an enthusiastic and bipartisan fashion. We want and need the brightest and the best to serve in our Armed Forces. I cannot help but think of the many outstanding citizens in all walks of life, indeed, including many of my esteemed colleagues right here in the Senate, who began their adult lives with service to our Nation in one of the branches of the Armed Services. We owe it to the recruiters of our services to do all we can to help them succeed in their tireless efforts to bring in quality men and women for the defense of our country.

Mr. President, I thank you for your indulgence and thank the Senator from Texas for her willingness to yield to me this time and for her tireless efforts on behalf of tax relief for the families in this country.

I yield the floor.

MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY RELIEF ACT OF 2000—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I rise to speak on behalf of the Targeted Marriage Penalty Relief Act of 2000. I do so because I believe it affords us the best opportunity to deal with this problem in a way that will relieve this penalty from the vast majority of Americans.

Approximately 80 percent of the Americans who currently pay the marriage tax penalty would have their penalty eliminated entirely under our approach.

Secondly, I favor this approach because it allows us to deal with this problem in the most affordable manner, also giving us the freedom to address other important issues that have faced our great country. I support the Targeted Marriage Penalty Relief Act of 2000 because it strikes the right balance between fiscal responsibility and a socially progressive policy, which I think is best for our country.

I support relief of the marriage tax penalty for several important reasons. First, as a matter of basic justice. It is not right that two individuals should pay more in taxes simply because they are married. When our Tax Code falls into ridicule, compliance drops and the Government, as a whole, falls into disrepute. We should not allow this to happen. We can take an important step to preventing this from happening by dealing with the marriage penalty problem.

Secondly, I support marriage tax penalty relief as a matter of social policy. Marriages and families are the basic building blocks on which our society is built. Too many marriages today end in disillusion. Too many families today are fractured because of the strains they face, often financial strains. If we can take action to strengthen families and marriages, to provide a sound and secure environment in which children can be raised, it is better for our country in a whole host of important ways.

I support the marriage tax relief provisions I speak to today as a matter of economic policy. During prosperous times when we enjoy surplus, it is only right that we share some of that hard-earned benefit with those who have generated it in the first place: the taxpayers of our country.

All of this is not to say we can afford just any approach to resolving the marriage penalty situation. We have to get it right. We have to do it in a way that is affordable and balanced with the other needs our country faces. This cannot be said of all the approaches currently before this body. Some of the approaches are poorly targeted, more than we can afford and, in fact, do not deserve the title of marriage tax penalty relief at all.

I admire the work done by the Democrats on the Senate Finance Committee; in particular, the leadership of the ranking member, Senator MOYNIHAN, and Senator BAUCUS. Their approach is truly targeted to ending the marriage tax penalty problem. It is intellectually elegant, and I appreciate the work they have done in this regard. We have several practical issues we are working through, but their approach truly deserves the title ''marriage tax penalty relief.''

The same cannot be said of the approach taken by the majority. Their approach claims to be a marriage tax penalty reduction bill but, as has been alluded to by several other speakers, more than half of the benefits go to those who do not have a marriage tax penalty at all. Many things can be said about this proposal. Calling it a marriage tax penalty bill is not one of them.

Secondly, it is too slow. It is phased in over a 7-year period. Why should we wait so long to give this important relief to the taxpayers of America? If it is truly a pressing problem, surely we can afford to act much sooner than that.

Third, it is regressive in nature. More than half of the benefits under the approach taken by the majority go to those earning more than $100,000 a year.

I have no trouble with the wealthy in our society. In fact, I wish we had more wealthy in the United States of America. But at a time when we have to make difficult decisions and allocate scarce resources among competing priorities, I think relief of the marriage tax penalty needs to be more squarely focused upon the middle class, an approach not taken by the majority.

Finally, and most significant of all, is the issue of affordability. The approach taken by the majority would use fully $248 billion over the next 10 years to solve this problem, severely limiting our ability to deal with other pressing matters that face our country.

If you care about a drug benefit for Medicare, not only is the majority position silent about your concerns, it in fact limits our ability to do something about your concerns. If you care about making college more affordable by including a college tax deduction or credit to lower the cost of college, not only does the majority position do nothing to address your concerns, in fact it makes addressing your concerns and reducing the burden of the college expense on working families more difficult to accomplish. If you care about caring for the elderly, a sick parent or grandparent, not only is the majority approach silent about your concerns, it in fact makes it more difficult to deal with this important and pressing matter. If you care about debt relief or about education reform, not only is the majority position silent about your concerns, it in fact makes it more difficult to consider.

Fortunately, there is another alternative, one that is targeted, one that is immediate, one that is progressive, and one that is affordable. The approach I speak to today, as the approach taken by the Democrats in the Senate Finance Committee, is a true marriage tax penalty relief bill. No one who does not currently pay a marriage tax penalty will be eligible for a tax cut under this provision. It helps those who have the problem get relief, which is the way it should be.

Secondly, the relief is immediate. In the first year of this approach, fully 51 percent of Americans who pay a marriage tax penalty will have their marriage tax penalty eliminated entirely. After 4 years, when this approach is fully implemented, more than 80 percent of the American people, everyone making under $120,000 a year, will have their marriage tax penalty fully eliminated—100-percent elimination of the marriage tax penalty for everyone making $120,000 a year in just 4 years, not the 7 proposed by the majority.

Third, this approach is progressive. Everyone making under $120,000 will have the marriage tax penalty eliminated, and the majority, more than half, of the benefits go to those making between $50- and $100,000 a year. Working families, the middle class, those who are struggling most can make ends meet.

Finally, on the issue of affordability, while the majority proposes $248 billion over 10 years to deal with this problem, our approach would take only $90 billion—more than 80 percent of the problem eliminated at only a fraction of the cost—thereby freeing up billions and billions of dollars to deal with other pressing matters that face our society.

Let me put this in perspective: the difference in cost of the majority's position versus our position is $158 billion over 10 years. The difference in cost would completely fund a Medicare drug benefit proposed by the President of the United States for every senior citizen across our country qualifying for Medicare, helping to lower the cost of prescription drugs. Even if you don't adopt the President's approach to a Medicare drug benefit and instead adopt the less costly provisions proposed by the majority—let's take the Republican drug benefit, costing around $70 billion over the next 10 years—you would still have the ability to fully fund that and, in addition, adopt a $10,000 tax deduction for people with children in college, allowing them to write off the first $10,000 of college tuition.

In addition, you would allow a $3,000 credit for senior citizens who are being cared for by their children or grandchildren, lowering the cost of long-term care for the elderly in our society. You would allow for the $30 billion of education reform proposed by Senator GRAHAM on the floor of the Senate just last year.

Let me briefly review the affordability provisions. On the one hand, you have a so-called marriage tax penalty relief bill that costs $248 billion over 10 years, the majority of which goes to people who, in fact, don't pay the marriage tax penalty, or you can eliminate 80 percent of the marriage tax penalty, eliminate it entirely for everyone making under $120,000 and, in addition to that, fully fund the Medicare drug benefit proposed by the majority, and fully fund the college tuition deduction proposed by Senator SCHUMER, and fully fund the long-term elderly care credit proposed by myself and others, and fully fund the money for education reform proposed by Senator GRAHAM.

The choice is clear: a marriage tax proposal on the one hand that goes to largely benefit those who don't pay the marriage tax penalty or a marriage penalty relief proposal that eliminates the vast majority of that problem and adds a Medicare drug proposal and makes college more affordable and provides for long-term care for the elderly and invests funds in the quality of education. I believe the choice is clear.

I thank my colleagues for their indulgence and, again, commend the Senate Finance Committee Democrats for their dedication to this issue and the hard work they have devoted to it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, this is a very important debate. I hope we are going to be able to move to pass this bill before people have to write their checks during the weekend deadline for income taxes this year.

Right now, there are negotiations underway between the Republicans and the Democrats about what kind of amendments should be offered. I very much hope that the Democrats will agree to offer some relevant amendments because I think there are surely legitimate disagreements about how we would give marriage tax penalty relief. But I also hope we will not have extraneous amendments offered, no matter how good the cause, which would take away from what President Clinton asked us to do, and that is to send him a marriage tax penalty bill that does not include extraneous legislation. That is what we are attempting to do.

So I hope we can move forward into the amendment phase and talk about our differences. I think the distinguished Senator from Indiana wants tax relief for hard-working married couples. I think we may have a few differences, but in the end I suspect that he and I will both vote for the bill that is passed out of this Senate; that is, if we can get to the vote. That is what I hope we can do.

I think we need to be very careful in the debate, though, about accuracy and what the different proposals are going to do. I heard a Senator earlier today in debate say that this bill on the floor will break the Treasury. I think the distinguished Senator from California, Mrs. BOXER, perhaps didn't look at the numbers and didn't match it to the budget resolution because, clearly, this not only doesn't break the Treasury, it doesn't even spend half of the allocation in the budget we passed last week for tax relief. In fact, it is $69 billion over 5 years, and the budget we passed last week is $150 billion over 5 years. So this is not even half.

We do hope to give tax relief to other people in our country. We want to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. We want to let seniors work if they are between 65 and 70 and not be penalized for it, and that bill has already been passed. We want small business tax cuts to make it easier for our small businesses to create the jobs that keep our economy thriving. We would like to give education tax cuts. Under the leadership of Senator COVERDELL, we passed education tax cuts that would help people give their children the education enhancements that would increase their education quality. All of these things fit within the $150 billion tax relief in the budget that we passed last week.

I think this is quite responsible and I think it is long overdue. We are talking about a tax correction as much as anything, because it is outrageous to talk about people who are single, working; they get married and they don't get salary increases, but all of a sudden they owe $1,000 more in taxes. It is time to correct this inequity. That is exactly what the bill before us does. It corrects the inequity all the way through the 28-percent tax bracket. It helps people all the way through those income brackets.

Mr. President, I ask my distinguished colleague from Alabama if he would like to speak. I don't know if others are waiting to speak, but he was waiting earlier. I am happy to yield to him at this time because he has been a leader in this effort.

How much time does the Senator need?

Mr. SESSIONS. Ten minutes would be fine.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. I will stop my remarks and yield to Senator SESSIONS for 10 minutes from our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. SESSIONS. I thank the Senator from Texas for her stalwart leadership in this bill. The President of the United States said in his State of the Union Message that the marriage tax penalty should be eliminated. Polling data shows that the overwhelming number of American citizens believe it should be eliminated. I had a meeting and a press conference with a number of families in Alabama on Monday, and we sat down and talked with them about the struggles they have. One couple had eight children. They are paying additional taxes because they are married. Another couple had just gotten married and had a young child, and they are paying more because they are married. Those are the kinds of things that are unexplainable to the American people. They are unjustifiable in logic, fairness, and justice. On a fundamental basis, the marriage tax penalty is an unfair and unjust tax. It is not that we are doing a tax reduction so much as we are eliminating a basic unfairness.

As I have said before, the challenge we are facing today is to create, as Members of this Senate, public policy that improves us as a people, that helps us to be better citizens. On every bill that comes through, every piece of legislation that we consider, we need to ask ourselves: Will this make us better or improve us as a nation? When we have legislation and laws in force that give a bonus to people to divorce, we have something wrong.

I have a friend who went through an unfortunate divorce. They got that divorce in January. I was told: Jeff, had we known about it and thought about it at the time, we could have gotten the divorce in December and we would have saved another $1,600 on our tax bill.

The Federal Government is paying a bonus to people who divorce. In effect, that is what our public policy does. If they are married, they are paying a penalty. It is $1,600, according to CBO, for an average family who pays this penalty, and $1,400, according to the Treasury Department, President Clinton's own Treasury Department, that says the families who pay this penalty pay an average of almost $100 per month. That is a lot of money. That is tax-free money that they could utilize to fix their automobile, get a set of tires, go to the doctor, take the kids to a ball game, or buy them a coke after a game, or go to a movie, and do the kinds of things families ought to do.

Mr. BAUCUS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SESSIONS. Yes.

Mr. BAUCUS. I ask the Senator, is the so-called marriage tax penalty a consequence of getting married or is it a consequence of getting married and the proportion of incomes each spouse earns? I might ask the question differently. How many people in America—if the Senator knows, and he may—get a bonus under our tax laws, not a penalty? What percentage of American taxpayers today receive a bonus as opposed to a penalty?

Mr. SESSIONS. I am not sure about any bonus factor.

Mr. BAUCUS. That is because when they get married, they pay less taxes.

Mr. SESSIONS. Well, 21 million, I believe, pay more taxes.

Mr. BAUCUS. I ask the Senator, are there some people getting married and, as a consequence, pay less taxes?

Mr. SESSIONS. That is perhaps so.

Mr. BAUCUS. It is so.

Mr. SESSIONS. It is a factor, as the Senator indicated, relative to the income that each person earns.

Mr. BAUCUS. What we are trying to do is find a solution that solves the problem of the disparity in what each spouse makes, which might then cause the penalty. For example, we all know when you have a married couple and one spouse receives more income than the other—considerably more—the joint tax is going to be less than if they are filing separately. We all know that. That is mathematically a given. The consequence, though, of a married man and woman who earn roughly the same amount is that couple pays more in taxes than they would pay if they were separate.

So what we are trying to do is solve the problem—if the Senator would agree with me—and to make sure that when a man and woman get married, we address the problem created when the two people have somewhat similar incomes, which then creates the penalty. So some who are married pay a penalty and some get a bonus. Aren't we only trying to solve the penalty problem for those couples who find themselves in a penalty position?

Mr. SESSIONS. I will just say this. The Senator is correct in saying this legislation deals with the penalty provision and does not attempt to increase taxes on married couples, to try to reach some sort of ideal level.

It is designed to provide relief from the penalty that occurs.

Does the Senator propose that we increase the taxes on those who may be paying less because they are married?

Mr. BAUCUS. If we are trying to solve the so-called marriage penalty problem, then we should try to solve the so-called marriage tax penalty problem.

Mr. SESSIONS. We are solving the marriage tax penalty problem. You may be complaining about the bonus some might get.

Mr. BAUCUS. If I could answer the question, on the other hand, if we want to do something else in addition to solving the marriage tax penalty problem, that is a different debate, and we should try to figure out how best to do that. As it is today, there are 25 million Americans who find themselves in the penalty position when they get married. But there are 21 million Americans who find themselves in a bonus situation when they get married. It is about 50–50. It makes sense, I think, to try to give relief to those in the penalty situation.

I am not sure if those who are already in the bonus situation need more relief, as contained in the Finance Committee bill, the majority bill.

I was asking the Senator why we are doing that. Why are we doing more than fixing the penalty?

Mr. SESSIONS. I think it would be a matter of some discussion if the Senator would like to have some hearings in the Finance Committee on whether or not these bonuses occur. I don't think they are as substantial as the penalties may be. They are not. But, at any rate, if the Senator wants to have hearings on whether they ought to be raised, then I think that is something that is worthy of evaluation.

Mr. BAUCUS. This Senator is not advocating any increase in taxes; no way at all. I want to make that clear. I know the Senator didn't mean to imply that I was thinking of raising taxes because I am not.

Mr. SESSIONS. We have a problem when two people are working and they are making $30,000 a year—just two, a man and woman. They fall in love. They get married. At $30,000 a year each, they end up paying about $800 more a year, which is $60 or $80 a month in extra tax simply for getting married. I want to eliminate that. If somebody wants to deal with the other problem, they can.

Frankly, I am beginning to observe there is a feeling on the other side that this bill needs to go away, that people are not willing to confront it directly. I hope that is not so. I hope we can see this legislation go forward.

Mr. BAUCUS. If I might ask the Senator one more question, is it better to try to find some way to pay down the national debt at the same time we are fixing the marriage tax penalty problem?

The Senator gave a hypothetical of a man and woman each earning $30,000. They get married and have to pay more taxes. That is not right. I totally agree that is not right. That ought to be fixed. Somebody who pays more income taxes as a consequence of getting married should not be facing that situation, and we should, in the Congress, figure out a way—as various proposals do—so a couple does not have to pay any more income taxes as a consequence of getting married. I agree with the Senator. That is not right.

Mr. SESSIONS. That is exactly all it does. Does the Senator disagree? This bill eliminates the penalty. That is what it intends to do. That is what the President says he supports. That is what the Senator from Montana says he supports. That is it.

I have the floor. I will yield for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FITZGERALD). The 10 minutes yielded to the Senator from Alabama have expired.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield the Senator 5 minutes so we can continue this discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SESSIONS. I would be glad to hear the Senator's question on the point.

Mr. BAUCUS. The question I am asking is this: More than half of the Finance Committee bill does not address the marriage tax penalty problem. More than half goes to married couples who have no marriage penalty problem but who are already in a bonus situation.

I am asking the Senator: Most Americans would rather have the national debt paid down. Doesn't it make more sense for us to address the marriage tax penalty problem directly and to take the rest and help pay down the national debt?

Mr. SESSIONS. We are paying down the national debt in record amounts. As the Senator knows, we are down $175 billion this year. That will continue. The tax reduction that would be affected by this bill represents only, let us say, a small fraction of the total surplus we will be looking at in the next number of years.

If these so-called bonuses that the Senator refers to are primarily given to the one-income earner couple where a mother stays home and is not working, they receive some benefit from that. I think the bonus is not sufficient to make up for the fact that one of them stays at home.

Also, one of the most pernicious parts of this bill—the Senator from Texas has talked about this previously—is that we are attempting in America today to break through the glass ceiling to have women move forward and achieve equal income in America. That is happening to a record degree. But under the present Tax Code, the more equal the marriage partners are in income, the more tax penalty falls on them. In a way, as a practical matter, it seems to fall against working women in a way that you would not expect it to, and it is something we would not want to see happen.

We have unanimous agreement that the marriage tax penalty is a matter that ought not to continue. This legislation deals directly and squarely with that. It doubles the standard deduction. It doubles the brackets for married couples, which is the simplest and best way to achieve that. It will give hard-earned relief to married couples.

We had the spectacle reported of the witness who testified in the House committee that each year he and his wife would divorce before the end of the year, file separately, get the lower tax rate, and then remarry at the beginning of the next year.

We ought not to have tax policies that would make somebody feel as if they could get ahead of the system and save money for their family by divorcing every year. It is the kind of thing that is not healthy.

I appreciate the fact we are finally moving. I hope in a bipartisan way to see this bill become law.

I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, these are very interesting discussions. I think that for a long, long period of time people at the grassroots of America have understood there should not be a policy that hurts people who join in bonds of matrimony. Everybody realizes that the strength and foundation of our society is the family. The husband and wife are the strength of our society and the foundation of our society.

We have legislation before us that finally will end the penalty against people who marry and get hit with a higher level of taxation rather than two people who aren't married and filing separately making the same amount of income.

Basically, we are talking about the issue of fairness—in this case, fairness within the Tax Code; economic fairness for people who are married.

For about 30 years, our Tax Code has been penalizing people just because they happen to be married.

This is, of course, a perfect example of how broken our Tax Code is, and perhaps is an example that can be given with many other examples of why there ought to be a broader look at greater reform and simplification of the Tax Code. That debate is for another day. Even though 70 percent of the people in this country feel the Tax Code is broken and ought to be thrown out, there is not a consensus among the American people whether a flat rate income tax, which about 30 percent of the people say we ought to have, or a national sales tax, which about 20 percent of the people say we ought to have, should take the place of the present Tax Code.

I use those two percentages to show there is not much of a consensus of what should take its place and therefore probably not enough movement being reflected in the Congress for an alternative to the present Tax Code. Therefore, we find ourselves refining the Tax Code within our ability to do it—a little bit here and a little bit there.

One of the most outstanding examples of something wrong with our Tax Code is that people pay a marriage penalty, pay a higher rate of taxation because they are married as opposed to two individuals filing separately. As with the earnings limitation that discriminated against older Americans, a bill was recently signed by the President of the United States. This unfair marriage penalty needs to be dumped, as well.

I applaud my side of the aisle because it took a Republican-led Congress to repeal the Social Security earnings limit, but the President of the United States was very happy to sign that Republican-led effort. To be fair to the other side, it eventually did pass unanimously. It is the same Republican-led Congress that is taking the lead in repealing the marriage penalty tax.

I listened to a number of comments from the minority side yesterday. I came away with the conclusion they want the American people to believe that the other side of the aisle is for getting rid of the marriage penalty tax. Of course, the minority party had control of the Congress for decades and never once tried to repeal it. Even more interesting, I am afraid we could be victims of the old bait-and-switch routine. For instance, as this bill was being considered in the Senate Finance Committee, an amendment was offered by the minority to delay any marriage penalty relief until we fixed Social Security and Medicare. That is a ''manana'' type of amendment, meaning if we wait to do these other things tomorrow before we have a tax cut, we are never going to have a tax cut.

We may see that amendment again on the floor of the Senate. Remember, in committee, all of the Democrats voted for delay until Social Security or Medicare was fixed, and all the Republicans voted to fix the marriage penalty tax now. We all know neither the administration nor the Democratic side have comprehensive proposals to fix Social Security and Medicare. I have to admit, I am participating with two or three Democrats on a bipartisan effort to fix Social Security, but the administration has refused to endorse that bipartisan effort. There are also bipartisan efforts in the Senate to fix Medicare, but the White House has not endorsed those bipartisan efforts.

Saying that Social Security and Medicare ought to be fixed before we give some tax relief, and particularly tax relief through the marriage penalty tax, is like saying you don't want a tax cut. I am sorry to say at this late stage of this Congress, I don't think we will see from the Clinton-Gore administration any efforts to fix these problems this year in a comprehensive way. When they say we ought to fix Social Security or Medicare first, it is a manana approach—put it off until later; that day will surely never come if we follow that scenario.

The national leadership of the unions in America, the AFL–CIO leadership, put out their marching orders in a legislative alert making these very same arguments that I am sure is only coincidental. They urge that the marriage penalty relief should be delayed until these other problems—presumably Social Security and Medicare—are solved.

My friends on the other side of the aisle say they are for marriage penalty relief but only some time in the unknown future. That is, in fact, Washington, DC, doubletalk that continues to make the American people more cynical about whether Congress is ever determined and willing and committed to deliver keeping our promises. Delaying this tax relief means no tax relief at all. I hope taxpayers across the country will let their Senators know they have had enough of this doubletalk and that they will demand real action now, and sooner or later we will get this bill brought to a final vote.

Another misguided argument used yesterday is that under the majority bill married couples get a tax cut but single mothers with kids wouldn't get one. This is a complicated aspect of the bill, but the argument is not correct. Senators making these arguments repeated it, bringing emphasis to it, as if something new has been discovered, that some kind of smoking gun had been discovered. Unfortunately, for those Members' arguments, the statements are inaccurate. An important part of our bill repeals the alternative minimum tax for over 10 million people. Many helped in that provision will be single mothers.

There is something much more interesting about this argument; that is, the alternative that presumably will be offered by the other side of the aisle is the bill that flatout, without question, doesn't help single mothers at all. But that isn't even the most important point.

That important point is, if a single mother chooses to eventually get married—and since marriage is the foundation of our society, I think we all agree that this is a good move, both for the mother and the children—then, under our bill, she will not be penalized for being married. There will not be a higher rate of taxation just because that single mother gets married. Under current law, if she continues to work after being married, the Government is going to slap her and her husband with a big tax increase. It is that sort of very bad situation our bill will eliminate.

In addition, it is important to note the alternative, from our friends on the other side of the aisle, discriminates against stay-at-home moms. Why should we have proposals before us indicating, if you decide you want to stay at home and raise your kids, spend full time doing it—probably the most important economic contribution you can make to American society, and you are not going to get paid for it, but it is a great contribution to American society. It might not be much of an economic contribution to the family because there is no income going to come as a result of it, but it is good for American society for kids to have parents who are able to be at home with them.

So if you decide to stay at home with the kids, you are going to be discriminated against under the alternative from the Democrat side of the aisle.

That proposal only helps two-earner couples. It not only doesn't help those single mothers over whom the other side of the aisle cries crocodile tears frequently, it hurts those families where one parent decides to stay at home with the children. I hope all of you stay-at-home parents out there listening understand what the Democratic alternative would do to your families.

It seems to me we should be helping people get married, encouraging marriage—it is the solid foundation of our society —not penalizing them for doing it. So, I hope we can get this bill to discussion without cloture. Obviously, there is a legitimacy for amendments from the other side of the aisle. There is even probably legitimacy for amendments from our side of the aisle. There ought to be agreement to those amendments.

It is really time for the gridlock to be over, to move to this bill, to get to a final vote. Now is the time to pass this very important reform, and I urge the Members of this body to come together on amendments, on limitations on discussions, and do what is right by passing this legislation.

Before I yield the floor, if I could do something for the leader: I ask unanimous consent the debate only continue on the marriage tax penalty until 5 p.m. today, with the time equally divided, and the majority leader recognized at the hour of 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SESSIONS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I yield the floor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I think it is important to lay things out as to what this issue is and what it is not. There is a lot of talk that this is a marriage tax penalty. There is even an implication by some that there is something put in the Tax Code to penalize couples because they are married; that is, they have to pay more taxes. Of course that is not true. A little history, I think, is instructive as to why we are here and what perhaps some solutions might be.

When the income tax was enacted, the Congress treated individuals as the unit of taxation, whether or not one was married. If somebody made a certain amount of money, he or she paid income taxes. If he or she got married, he or she was subject to the same rates, the same schedule. The individual was treated as the unit.

That was the case for a while. But many States in our Nation are community property States. They have different laws which determine to what income a man or woman in married status is entitled. In community property States, the rule is any income earned by a spouse is automatically community property and therefore is equally divisible. As a consequence, in community property States, each, the man and wife, would combine their incomes and file separately. That was upheld by the courts. That created a big discrepancy between community property States and common law States.

In common law States, an individual still had to pay the individual rates, whether or not he or she got married, which was just not fair. So Congress in 1948 changed the law to make it fair. What did Congress do? Congress in 1948 said: OK, we are going to double the deductions for married couples as opposed to singles, so when you get married, you do not pay any more taxes than you would pay if you were single. That was the rule of thumb. The brackets for the married were doubled, and the deductions were doubled.

That created another inequity. In this area of tax law, when you push down the balloon someplace, it pops up someplace else. The inequity created was the inequity for individual taxpayers because individual taxpayers say: Wait a minute, here I am as an individual taxpayer. I am paying up to 42 percent more in income taxes on the same income that a married couple earns. If the married couple earns $100,000, hypothetically, my taxes as a single individual earning $100,000 are up to 42 percent more than the couple's. That is not right.

Congress in 1969 agreed that was not right, so Congress went in the other direction. In 1969, Congress said: We are going to raise it, widen the brackets, adjust the brackets for individuals so they are a little more in line with those for people who are married.

The rule of thumb was a tax paid by an individual could not be more than 60 percent more than the taxes paid by a married couple. That was fine for a while. Then over the years we have a lot more couples where both members of the family are earning more income.

This is a long way of saying when we make some change in the law here, it is going to cause some inequity someplace else. It is a mathematical truth that we cannot have marriage neutrality and progressive rates and have all married couples with the same total income pay the same taxes. It is a mathematical impossibility to accomplish all three objectives. It cannot be done. So we have to make choices. The choices are whether to tilt a little more in one direction or the other. The bill before the Congress now is a good-faith, honest effort to try to solve that problem.

There are different points of view. The bill passed out by the Finance Committee attempts to solve that problem one way. The provision offered by Senator MOYNIHAN, the ranking member of the Finance Committee, had a different approach to solve that problem. Let me very briefly lay it out so people have a sense of what the two different approaches are to solve the marriage tax penalty problem.

Recognizing that today, to be honest about it, more married couples receive a bonus when they get married, not a penalty—or, to state it differently: More people, men and women, when they get married today, will receive a bonus; that is, they will pay less taxes as a consequence of getting married than they would individually.

It is true that about half of the people who get married end up paying more taxes, and that is called the marriage tax penalty. It is a consequence of the progressive nature of our Tax Code, along with a desire to be fair to widows and widowers and other single taxpayers, and to be fair to married taxpayers, making sure that some married taxpayers, who have the same income as other married taxpayers, do not pay more. It is a very hard thing to do.

The majority bill tries to solve it this way: It raises the standard deduction. It raises the 15-percent and 28-percent brackets. It changes the earned-income tax credit for lower income people. It makes no other change. It is pretty complicated.

As a consequence, some people who are married and pay a marriage tax penalty will receive relief but not all will. This is a very important point. The majority committee bill addresses only 3 of the 65 provisions in the code which cause the marriage tax penalty. That is standard deduction and the two brackets. That is all.

The chart behind me shows the situation. On the left is current law. There are 65 provisions in the Tax Code today which cause a marriage tax penalty. The GOP proposal, which is the column in the middle of the chart, addresses only 3, leaving 62 provisions in the code which cause a marriage tax penalty.

What is one of the biggest? Social Security, and it is a big one, too. It costs about $60 billion to fix. The majority committee bill says: No, we are not going to help you seniors. If two of you get married, you have to pay more taxes. You have a marriage tax penalty; we are not going to help you. The majority committee bill does not deal with seniors at all.

There are a lot of senior citizens in our country who are not going to find any relief as a consequence of the majority bill. There are 61 other provisions in the code on which the majority committee bill will not give people relief.

The bill offered by Senator MOYNIHAN, the ranking member of the Finance Committee, is very simple. It says to taxpayers: OK, you have a choice. You, as a married couple, can file jointly or you can file separately. That is your choice. You run the calculation, and whatever comes out lower is presumably the one you are going to make.

What is the beauty about that? Why is that better? It is better because it is simple. The majority bill further complicates the code, and the code is complicated enough. The majority bill adds more complications by trying to deal with changing the deductions, phase-ins, and so forth. There are a lot more complications.

The minority provision is very simple. It says: You choose. It does not add more complications. In addition, it addresses all 65 of the marriage tax penalty provisions in the code today. There are many of them. I mentioned one such as Social Security. That is one the majority bill does not address.

Other are like interest deduction of student loans. Many students have loans, and as a consequence of current law, when you get married, sometimes you pay more taxes. The majority committee bill does not do anything about that. The majority committee bill does not address that. It only deals with 3 provisions—the standard deduction and two brackets, 15- and 28-percent brackets. Those three provisions sometimes cause a marriage tax penalty.

The minority bill takes care of all the penalty provisions in the code. Look at the chart again. The zero under the Democratic proposal means there are zero marriage tax penalties as a result of the Democratic proposal. The GOP proposal has 62 remaining marriage tax penalties.

I am curious as to why they did not address those. I may ask some Members on that side as to why they did not address some of them. A lot of folks are going to wonder, senior citizens are going to wonder, somebody who takes an IRA deduction is going to wonder, someone who takes a Roth IRA deduction is going to wonder: Gee, why don't they take care of marriage tax penalties that affect me? I do not know. Maybe sometime the majority can answer why they do not address those other marriage tax penalties.

There are other inequities, but I am not going to get into all of them right now. We will get into them at a later date.

It is important to point out that there are two attempts to solve the marriage tax penalty problem: The majority committee bill only deals with three of the provisions in the Tax Code which cause a marriage tax penalty. The minority bill deals with all of them. There is no provision left as a consequence of the minority bill.

In addition, the minority bill is much simpler; one only has to choose, whereas in the majority committee bill, my gosh, one cannot choose; they are forced into a situation, and they are not part of the solution. They have to deal with extra complexities. It does not solve the problem.

I yield the floor and reserve the remainder of the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Kansas wants to speak, but if I can take a couple minutes to respond to some things the Senator from Montana stated, I think I should do that.

I yield to the Senator from Kansas such time as he might consume. I should wait until the Senator from Montana is on the floor before I give my response to him. I yield Senator BROWNBACK such time as he consumes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Iowa, Mr.

GRASSLEY, for his leadership on this issue and for yielding me time to speak on this bill.

I, too, want to comment on the Marriage Penalty Act and the marriage tax penalty elimination, and some of the comments of the Senator from Montana. I wish he was still on the floor.

He says we have differences of opinion: The Democrats have a marriage tax penalty bill; the Republicans have one. He thinks theirs is better. Great. Let's have a debate on those two. Let's vote. I do not know when we have had as much clarity of differences between a Democratic bill and a Republican bill, where both parties have said we want to pass a bill on any issue this year, than the bill we have before us.

I am pleading with the members of the Democratic Party: Let's have a vote. Let's have a great debate. We will debate your bill for 2 hours, ours for 2 hours, vote on both of these, and let's get this moving forward.

If they want to pass a marriage tax penalty elimination bill, we have the time; we have the place; we have the floor; we can have this vote now. If they do not want to, and really all this is about is: Well, we do, but we are going to block this with eight or nine irrelevant amendments; we are really not that interested in doing this, then that should be said as well. They should be out here saying, no, this really isn't a high priority for the Democratic Party to pass, rather than saying, OK, we have a bill, you have a bill, and let's vote.

It is time we vote up or down, and we have the time before we go into a recess.

The other thing I would like to point out is the President sent us his budget for the fiscal year 2001. I have a copy of the budget the President submitted to us. In his budget, he inserted his support for eliminating the marriage tax penalty. In the President's budget, on the EITC, on page 57, entitled, ''Supporting Working Families,'' he says at the bottom of this page:

> In this budget, the President builds upon these policies that are central to his agenda of work, responsibility, and family.

He says:

> The budget expands the EITC to provide marriage penalty relief to two earner couples . . . .

That is what our bill does. We have a chance to get that particular provision that he is calling for in the budget to the President.

Going back now in his budget to the tables of his proposals and his 10-year estimates on it—this is on page 409—he provides for, and it states:

> Provide marriage penalty relief and increase standard deduction.

He does a much smaller one than we have put forward. I think he also even has a smaller one than Senator MOYNIHAN's proposal that came forward in the Finance Committee. But the President has said all along: Let's eliminate the marriage tax penalty. Let's do this.

It is in his budget.

He has asked us not to send him these gargantuan bills that have 20 different items in them. He asked us to send him one like we did on the Social Security earnings limit test. We passed that bill and sent it to the President. He signed it into law. He appreciated being able to have that degree of clarity and that degree of focus on a particular issue.

We have another one. We are having the debate on it. It is the time and the place for us to consider and vote on this now. We need to consider the proposals that the other party has, and to consider our proposals. Let's move this topic forward.

The President has said he wants it. I hope the President gets involved in this debate and urges the Senate and my colleagues on the other side of the aisle to vote on this issue and to get it to him—if he wants it. He said he did in his budget. If he truly wants this marriage tax penalty relief, let's have a vote, and let's get it to the President. We can do this now.

I am fearful. What I am sensing is that we are just getting a lot of delay tactics and no real interest in passing the marriage penalty tax relief. Clearly, there is not an interest to pass it before April 15.

People have the right to do those sorts of tactics, if they want to. But I do not think they should hide and say they just have a different bill, when the true desire here is to not have any bill go through at all.

This affects a lot of people. We have been over and over this lots of times. It affects 25 million Americans. In Kansas, 259,000-plus people are affected by this marriage tax penalty that we have in place. The Senator from Montana has 89,000 people who are affected.

I am looking forward to the chance and the time when we get to actually vote on these issues. Frankly, I think we have had enough discussion about the Democratic proposal and the Republican proposal. We know what is in these proposals now. We know the costs of these proposals. We are ready to pass this. It is time to vote. I really do not understand too much what is holding this up from moving forward.

My colleagues and I have had a number of people contacting our offices saying that this is a penalty they want to see done away with.

They have contacted us numerous times. I have worked with the Members of the House of Representatives who have passed this bill already. They have sent to me letters from a number of people from across the country with their specific examples of how they are penalized by the marriage tax penalty.

This is a letter from Steve in Smyrna, TN. He says:

> My wife and I got married on January 1, 1997. We were going to have a Christmas wedding last year, but after talking to my accountant we saw that instead of both of us getting money back on our taxes, we were going to have to pay in. So we postponed it. Now, for getting married, we have to have more taken out of our checks to just break even and not get a refund. We got penalized for getting married.

Then he concludes:

> And that just isn't right.

I agree. I presume the Senator from Montana agrees. I presume most of the people on the other side of the aisle agree as well. Let's vote then and get a proposal out of here so we can actually deal with this.

Here is one from Wayne in Dayton, OH:

> Penalizing for marriage flies in the face of common sense. This is a classic example of government policy not supporting that which it wishes to promote. In our particular situation, my girl friend and I would incur an annual penalty of $2,000 or approximately $167 per month. Though not huge, this is enough to pay our monthly phone, cable, water, and home insurance bills combined.

I think that is pretty huge when you are talking about that size of a marriage penalty.

This one is from Marietta, GA. Bobby and Susan wrote this one:

> We always file as married filing separately because that saves us about $500 a year over filing married, filing jointly. When we figured our 1996 tax return, just out of curiosity, we figured what our tax would be if we were just living together instead of married. Imagine our disgust when we discovered that, if we just lived together instead of being married, we would have saved an additional $1,000. So much for the much vaunted ''family values'' of our government. Our government is sending a very bad message to young adults by penalizing marriage this way.

This is from Thomas in Hilliard, OH.

> No person who legitimately supports family values could be against this bill. The marriage penalty is but another example of how in the past 40 years the federal government has enacted policies that have broken down the fundamental institutions that were the strength of this country from the start.

This one is from David in Guilford, IN:

> This is one of the most unfair laws that is on the books. I have been married for more than 23 years and would really like to see this injustice changed so my sons will not have to face this additional tax. Please keep up the great work.

He goes on.

We have a number of different letters. I do not think it really bears going into much longer because what I hear everybody saying is: We are for eliminating the marriage tax penalty. The American public is for doing that. It is the time to do that. We now just have procedural roadblocks to getting it done.

That is the bottom line of where we are today. We could vote on this today. We could vote on the Democratic alternative. We could vote on the Republican alternative. We could have up-or-down votes on this today and get this through this body, get it to conference, and on down to the President, and see if he really meant it when he said in his budget that he wanted to do this, the EITC, the marriage tax penalty elimination, to see if he really wants to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. We could see if the President really meant that.

I invite the President to get involved in this debate so we can pass this through.

I have worked with the administration on a number of bills. I would hope they would start engaging us here saying: Yes, we want to do this and pass this on through.

Let's not stall it. Let's get this thing moving forward so we can send this message out across the country.

With that, Mr. President, I see several other Members on the floor. It is time to get this moving forward.

I just call on my colleagues on the other side of the aisle and say let's not play on this thing. Let's say we are going to pass it. Let's take the votes, and let's move forward.

I yield back to my colleague from Iowa.

Mr. President, if I have a minute or 2 more—I don't want to take up the time from my colleague of Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I thought the Senator yielded the floor.

I would like to speak now if the Senator has yielded the floor.

Mr. BROWNBACK. I yield the floor.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I yield myself 5 minutes.

First of all, I think there is a very general proposition about the Tax Code. I want to relate it to the philosophy of higher taxation on the part of the Democratic Party members; and that is, that the higher the marginal tax rate, the worse the marriage tax penalty is.

We have in 1990 the drive for increasing taxes by Senator Mitchell when he was majority leader. That increased marginal tax rates at that particular time. Then we have had the highest tax increase in the history of the country, which was the one that was passed within 7 months after the Clinton administration was sworn in in 1993, in which we still had two higher brackets put into the Tax Code.

Remember, that tax increase passed with 49 Democrats for it, and all Republicans and a few Democrats against it. It passed by Vice President GORE breaking the tie. Remember that we have a much worse tax penalty now than we did under the tax policies of the 1980s, when we had two brackets, 15 and 28 percent. The extent to which the marriage tax penalty is worse now than before is a direct result of higher marginal tax rates promoted by the other side of the aisle.

I also have to make a point in reference to what the Senator from Montana said today, as well as what he had said yesterday; that is, his accusation that the tax bill that reduces the marriage tax penalty before us is further evidence of the majority party trying to benefit higher income people. The Senator should be aware that his Democrat alternative actually benefits more higher income people than the bill that is before us by the Republican Party. I hope he will take a look at the distribution tables that show his bill helps more higher income people than the bill we are trying to get passed.

We have also heard arguments that this legislation does not end the marriage tax penalty in every way. This legislation ends the marriage tax penalty in the standard deduction and the 15- and 28-percent rate brackets and reduces it for virtually every family that suffers from the marriage tax penalty. This is the largest attack on the marriage tax penalty since its inception in 1969.

For many working couples, those in the 15-percent and the 28-percent tax bracket, which would be up to about $127,000 under this bill, this legislation effectively ends the marriage tax penalty. For those couples in higher income brackets, this legislation provides a significant reduction in the marriage tax penalty.

It is correct that this bill does not end all marriage tax penalties in the Tax Code. There are over 60 instances of the penalty in the code. This bill is about hitting the marriage tax penalty where it hits hardest—in the middle income tax brackets, the standard deduction, and the earned-income tax credit.

There is also talk about the bill before us resulting in more Tax Code complexity. Our bill is simpler than the Democrat alternative. Our legislation eliminates the marriage tax penalty in the standard deduction and the 15-percent and 28-percent rate brackets. How could this be more simple?

I hope we can have further discussion of these disagreements because I am convinced we can soundly overcome the arguments of the other side of the aisle.

I yield the floor. The Senator from Texas may use whatever time she needs or is available.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, how much time remains on our side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 6 minutes remaining.

The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Iowa for making those points because I think they are very important. The differences between the Democrat alternative and the Republican plan that is on the floor are actually quite extensive.

In the first place, the Democrat plan is $100 billion less in tax relief for American families. We are trying to cover more families. Not only are we trying to cover the people who are in the 15-percent bracket and the 28-percent bracket, which takes us through everyone who pays taxes up to $127,000 in joint income, but it also increases the earned-income tax credit for those who don't pay taxes at all. This is what helps a person who has been on welfare who goes to work and actually makes a salary of from $15,000 to $30,000 not have to pay any kind of penalty, even though they don't pay taxes.

We want to add to the $2,000 earned-income tax credit $2,500 more to the salaries that would qualify for the earned-income tax credit. This is an incentive for working people who are in the lowest levels of pay to continue working and to realize that it is more important for them to work and to have an incentive to work than to be on welfare.

The points made by the Senator from Iowa are very appropriate. The Republican plan not only offers more relief, it offers more relief to more people, $100 billion more.

Secondly, the Democrat plan is phased in over a very long period of time. It doesn't become fully effective until 2010. It is very backloaded. Fifty percent of it doesn't even take effect until 2008. We want to try to make that timeframe less, and we want to have significant tax cuts for hard-working American families.

Of course, we truly do believe that people will be able to make the decisions with the money they earn better than they will be able to live with decisions made in Washington, DC. In fact, I think it is very important that people realize, as they are writing their checks on April 15—or Monday, April 17, if they can wait until the very end—that the chances are they are in the 48 percent of the married couples. If they are in that 48 percent that has a penalty, their tax bill next year will be an average of $1,400 less, if we can pass the Republican plan, send it to the President, and if the President will sign it. The President has said he is for tax relief for married couples. We certainly think he should sign the bill. If he doesn't sign the bill, we would really like to know why because this is a better tax cut plan.

There is probably just a difference on what is a marriage bonus. For a married couple where one spouse decides to stay home and raise the children and they don't pay as much in tax as the single person doubled, I don't think that is a bonus. I would not want to tell my daughter, who has three children, that she is not working when she is staying home with them. Thank goodness we have people who want to stay home and raise their children. I don't want to make that decision for them, but I certainly want them to have the option and not be penalized in any way.

I think everything we can do to encourage families to be able to make that choice we should do. I do not consider it a bonus. What I want is total fairness. What I want is, if a person is single and marries another single working person, when they get married there is no penalty whatsoever. The $1,000 we now make them pay because they got married would be spent instead by them, to start building their nest egg, to have their first home, to buy the second car, whatever it is they need, as newlyweds, who are the ones who struggle the hardest. We want them to have the benefit of not having discrimination in the Tax Code.

What we are talking about is tax relief; it is a tax correction. It is saying that we don't want to penalize people for getting married. When 48 percent of the married couples in this country do have that penalty, what we want to do is correct it. I hope the Democrats will work with us to have relevant amendments that could be put forward. This is a good debate. I think we can differ on the way we would give marriage tax penalty relief. But my plea with the Democrats is let us take it up. Don't say that you have to offer extraneous amendments which don't have anything to do with marriage tax penalty, especially when President Clinton has asked us to send him a marriage tax penalty bill. That is what I hope will happen at 5 o'clock.

I hope the President will work with the Democrats and tell them he believes in tax relief. I hope we can pass that relief for the hard-working Americans who deserve a break. I urge my colleagues to help us offer these amendments. Let's debate them and let's give Americans tax relief as they are signing those checks to the Federal Government this week.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana controls the remainder of the time until 5 o'clock.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I see my good friend, the Senator from Texas, still on the floor. I will ask her a couple of questions.

Clearly, we both want to solve the marriage tax penalty. It is my judgment that we are going to pass legislation this week—I hope so. There will be a couple of amendments. It is normal and proper in the Senate for Senators who think they can improve upon a bill to offer amendments. I certainly hope we can dispose of the issue this week. I expect that to happen. I hope so. In doing so, obviously, we want to do what is right. When you do something, you should do your darndest to make sure you do it right the first time so you don't have to correct mistakes later on.

I am wondering why it would not make more sense to address all of the marriage tax penalty problems in the code in this bill rather than only a few. As the Senator knows, there are about 65 provisions in the Tax Code, the consequence of which sometimes results in a marriage tax penalty for some married couples—not all but for some.

I am not being critical of the provision offered by the majority. But as the Senator knows, in the proposal offered by the majority, they deal with only 3 of those 65 provisions; whereas, the way the minority attempts to solve this, or proposes to solve the marriage tax penalty problem is to allow optional filing; as a consequence, all 65 provisions in the code are dealt with, so that in the minority position all of the marriage inequities are solved—all 65 provisions.

I am wondering why—without being critical—it doesn't make more sense for us while we are here, while we are going to pass a bill relieving couples of the marriage tax penalty, to entirely solve the problem, as is the case in the minority bill, rather than only for a few, as is the case in the majority bill.

Mrs. HUTCHISON. I thank the Senator from Montana for saying, first of all, he thinks we will have a marriage tax penalty relief bill passed. I certainly think a couple of amendments—five or six or so—on either side, which are relevant, to try to perfect legislation is quite reasonable. I hope that is what the Democrats intend to offer. That isn't what we have seen so far. So perhaps we are coming to a conclusion. I hope so.

Let me say that if the only bill on the floor were the Democratic alternative, I would vote for it because I have voted for it before. It is not a bad plan. But I think the Republican plan is better. Here is why. First of all, our plan helps more people who are in the lower levels, the middle-income levels, who really need this kind of help. We say that if a single person making $35,000 married, or a single person making $30,000, you double the bracket so their combined bracket is going to be the same. They will not be penalized in the 15-percent bracket or the 28-percent bracket. Now, I would be for going all the way through those brackets because I am for tax relief for hard-working Americans.

Ours is a bigger bill. It covers more people. I think it is the better approach. I would be for bracket relief across the board, too, because I think the tax burden is too heavy and we are talking about the income tax surplus, not the Social Security surplus. So this is the money people have sent to Washington that is beyond what the Government needs for the Government to operate. So I think ours is better, but I don't think yours is bad. I just hope we can give the most tax relief to the most people.

Mr. BAUCUS. Maybe the Senator is not addressing the question, for many good reasons. The question is, why not deal with all 65 of the inequities rather than only 3?

Mrs. HUTCHISON. If we took our plan and yours and put them together, I would think that would be better than the Republican plan. Your plan alone is not as good as the Republican plan because it doesn't give that much relief. Our plan gives $2,500 more in the earned-income tax credit. This is helping people come off of the welfare rolls and have the opportunity to be paid to make them whole. These are people who make $12,000 to $30,000 a year, when they have two children, a family of four. It also helps people in the 15-percent bracket and in the 30-percent bracket.

Mr. BAUCUS. I appreciate the Senator's remarks. We are on my time, so I will finish up.

Briefly, I think it is important to point this out. One of the provisions not dealt with in the majority bill is taxation of Social Security benefits. That is no small item. It would cost about $60 billion over 10 years if it were to be addressed. I remind people that today the majority bill before us is about $248 billion over 10 years. So, in addition, $60 billion is the amount that senior citizens would have to pay as a consequence of the marriage tax penalty, which is not covered by the Finance Committee bill.

I might add that, again, the minority bill does solve the Social Security benefits problem, as it does each of the other 62 remaining provisions in the Tax Code which may result in a marriage tax penalty. I hear people say, well, theirs is a better bill. But that doesn't get down to the specifics of what it actually does. I remind Senators that over half of the tax reduction in the bill offered by the Finance Committee goes to people who are already in a bonus situation. It has nothing to do with the marriage tax penalty.

I am suggesting that those are dollars that could be perhaps better spent for debt reduction. I think most Americans would like to see the national debt paid off. That makes a lot more sense to me. Or perhaps they would prefer that it go to education, health care, or whatnot.

We are here to address the marriage tax penalty. I think we should focus on the marriage tax penalty and, by doing that, I submit that the proposal offered by Senator MOYNIHAN, the minority alternative, focuses only on the marriage tax penalty. It is very simple to understand. Essentially, the taxpayers choose whether to file jointly or separately. I think that sort of empowers the taxpayers to decide for themselves what they want to do. They can be part of the solution where they pay lower taxes and not have to pay any marriage tax penalty at all. Again, $60 billion of Social Security benefits is not fixed by this bill.

I want to add this, and I know my time is about to expire, the AMT. One consequence of the committee bill is that there are 5.6 million more taxpayers who are going to have to file under the alternative minimum tax than today—5.6 million new taxpayers, new people who are not filing under the alternative minimum tax, separate and filing today, will not have to under the Finance Committee bill.

That is not the case in the minority committee bill.

I think we should give relief to those folks so they don't have to go to the AMT situation; or, to say it differently, the Finance Committee bill gives some relief to AMT taxpayers and then takes it back by saying now you new taxpayers have to file the AMT.

Why is that result? Why does that happen? It happens because of what I have said for a good part of this day; namely, the Finance Committee bill only deals with 3 of the 65 provisions. Those three are: the standard deduction, the 15-percent and 20-percent brackets. As a consequence, there is this AMT shift.

I don't think we want to say to 5.6 million Americans that you do not have to file the AMT today, the alternative minimum tax, and go through all of that and pay that tax, but now you will, as a consequence of the Finance Committee bill. I don't think we want to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VOINOVICH). The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, may I inquire about the situation now? I believe we had general debate until 5 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is correct.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I understand Senator DASCHLE will be here momentarily. For his benefit, I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, the Democratic leader and I have been working to try to reach an agreement to consider the very important Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act. We started working on it yesterday afternoon sometime around 3:30 or 4. Senator DASCHLE indicated they had a number of amendments that they would like to have considered, and, of course, we asked for a chance to see what those amendments were. We, of course, urged that they be relevant amendments.

At about 3 o'clock today, we received a list of amendments that members of the minority wanted to offer to the Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act. The list included nine amendments, five or six of which were clearly not related to the marriage tax penalty relief bill. And then about an hour or so later an additional amendment was added by Senator HARKIN. The list is now up to 10 amendments.

I indicated all along—like we worked it out earlier this year on the education savings account—that we could go with alternatives and relevant amendments. That is eventually what we did with the education savings account. Of course, I had hoped with the very overwhelmingly popular Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act that we could do something similar to what we did on the Social Security earnings test elimination. That was something that had been pending in this body and on Capitol Hill for 20 years.

Finally, we worked it out. We had a couple of relevant amendments to which we agreed. We had a good discussion. We voted, I think, on one of those amendments. It passed unanimously. The President signed it last week with great fanfare that we had achieved this worthwhile goal.

I think we can do the same thing with the marriage penalty tax. But in order to do it, we need to keep our focus on what is the best way to provide this marriage penalty tax relief. Is it a phaseout? Should it apply to everybody? What can you do for those in the lower income brackets in how you deal with the EITC, earned-income tax credit, how you deal with the lowest and middle brackets? Is there a better way to do it or another way to do it?

Senator MOYNIHAN, Senator BAUCUS, and others on the Finance Committee, had a different approach. I described it then, and publicly I think it is a credible approach. I don't think it is as good as the one we had in the basic bill, but it is one that is worthy of being talked about and thought about. I hope we can work it out so we can do that.

We could have debate on the bill and then go to a vote on the alternatives and relevant amendments and get this finished by the close of business on Thursday or Friday at the latest. But the list we have is not only not relevant, but, first of all, we haven't had a chance to really look at how they would work or the details of the proposals.

One of them by Senator ROBB has to do with prescription drugs. Senator WELLSTONE has one which is something similar to the Canadian system of prescription drugs. But it looks to be a pretty detailed proposal that I don't think the Finance Committee has had a chance to consider.

We have one by Senator GRAHAM dealing with Medicare and Social Security priorities. I think he offered something similar to this in the Finance Committee. This is not one of which we were unaware. We could have a discussion on that, and I think have a vote, but it certainly doesn't relate to the marriage tax penalty.

We have one on the college tuition tax credit. There is one on the CRT income. This is an agriculture issue. We have one on changing how you deduct a natural disaster impact on your tax form. I don't even know. That may be something we would want to look at doing. Don't we want to consider that in the Finance Committee, see what the budgetary impact is, and see what people are doing now versus what they might do under this proposal? It is something I would like to talk to Senator TORRICELLI about to see exactly what he is trying achieve.

Then, at 3:45, we got the amendment from Senator HARKIN. Honestly, I can't even quite tell you what it did. I believe that one relates to the marriage tax penalty. It would probably be relevant. Three or four of these could probably be relevant, and we could get them done.

I hope the Democratic leader would try to reduce his list or, at a minimum, make them work with us in getting relevant amendments to the marriage tax relief bill. I think that is a reasonable request.

I emphasize again that is what we did on the education savings account and on the Social Security earnings limitation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now resume the pending legislation and that there be 10 relevant amendments in order for the Democratic leader, or his designee, and 2 relevant amendments in order for the majority leader to the pending substitute, with no amendments in order to the language proposed to be stricken, or motions to commit or recommit. I further ask unanimous consent that following the disposition of the listed amendments—certainly 10 would be an awful lot of amendments—and any relevant second degrees, the bill be advanced to third reading, and passage occur, all without any intervening action or debate.

I further ask unanimous consent that following passage of the bill, the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House, and the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on behalf of the Senate.

I finally ask unanimous consent that the cloture vote scheduled for Thursday of this week be vitiated, in view of this request, if it is agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the 10 amendments to be considered during the debate on the marriage tax penalty be the following:

An alternative amendment offered by Senator BAUCUS, or his designee; an alternative amendment offered by Senator BAYH; an alternative amendment offered by Senator KENNEDY having to do with Medicaid and family care, or a motion to commit on the part of Senator KENNEDY; a Robb motion regarding marriage tax penalty and prescription drugs; a Wellstone amendment on prescription drugs; a Graham amendment on Medicare and Social Security priorities having to do with the marriage tax penalty; a Schumer amendment having to do with college tuition tax credit and the marriage tax penalty; a Dorgan amendment having to do with taxation of CRP income; a Torricelli amendment having to do with tax consequences of national disaster assistance; and a Harkin amendment having to do with capping benefits in the bill and putting the savings into Medicare and Social Security trust funds on the marriage tax penalty relief legislation, as well.

I further ask that each amendment be limited to debate for 1 hour equally divided.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, could I inquire, is this the same list I was given earlier today plus the Harkin amendment that was added after that original list?

Mr. DASCHLE. That is correct.

Mr. LOTT. Is there any difference? I thought you indicated on a couple of these—and I referred to the earlier Kennedy amendment, which really is a major Medicaid change—you made it sound as if it might be relative to the marriage penalty tax.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, on several occasions we have had debates with the Parliamentarian and with the majority with regard to the issue of relevancy. I point out to my colleagues, the concept of relevancy is only defined as it relates to an appropriations bill. There is no definition of relevancy.

In our view, all of these issues are relevant to the debate on marriage tax penalty. We believe relevancy ought to be taken in that context. I am troubled by the interpretation we have gotten from the Parliamentarian a couple of times on the issue of relevancy. In our view, these matters are certainly relevant to the debate on tax consequences and marriage penalties.

Mr. LOTT. Is the Senator saying in each one of these cases what is offered would be in place of the Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act in whole or in part?

Mr. DASCHLE. No. I am simply saying in most of the amendments offered there is a direct relevancy to the issue of marriage tax penalty.

I am also suggesting in all cases we would be prepared to limit the debate to 1 hour equally divided. Regardless of its relevancy, the fact is the majority leader would be able to begin this debate, conduct his debate as he has anticipated, with an expectation that we could finish by the end of the day tomorrow.

He has noted, of course, that he doesn't necessarily support or endorse many of these amendments. It is the right of the majority leader, especially given the fact that we have now submitted to a 1-hour time limit, that he can oppose them, he can table them.

Mr. LOTT. How about second-degree them?

Mr. DASCHLE. We would not agree to second-degree amendments.

To ask for the details on top of all of that seems to me to be a real stretch. I am sure that in good faith we can work through these amendments one by one.

That is quite an acknowledgment on our part, a willingness to submit to the debate, 10 amendments, 1 hour equally divided on each of these, most of them directly relevant to marriage tax penalty, but in all cases certainly relevant to the debate about priorities of the money being spent.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I object to that with at least two observations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Mr. LOTT. For instance, the taxability of the CRP income—I don't know how anyone can stretch that to make it applicable to the Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act.

Second, the request by the Democratic leader did not allow for second-degree amendments, or any alternatives, or any option—even side-by-side amendments by the majority. We certainly need to work through that.

I still think we can go forward and continue to work to try to find a list of, hopefully, relevant amendments that could be offered to get to a conclusion on the marriage penalty tax.

Since we are not able to reach an agreement at this time, I announce that the cloture vote will occur tomorrow unless we come to an agreement that allows a vitiation of that cloture vote.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, maybe you have to be in the minority to appreciate the position in which the minority has now been put once again.

The Republican majority is saying, first and foremost, we want to debate the marriage tax penalty. We say to that, absolutely; we want to debate the marriage tax penalty. We strongly support marriage tax penalty relief.

Then they say, we want you to limit your amendments. So we say, OK, we will limit our amendments.

Then they say, we not only want you to limit your amendments, we want to be able to tell you which amendments you can offer.

After saying first of all we will debate the marriage tax penalty, after secondly saying we will limit amendments, to give the majority now the right to dictate to the minority that they have the ability to determine what the context, what the definition, what the scope of our amendments ought to be, it seems to me to be an abrogation of all that is fair in debating an important issue such as this.

If we are going to spend $248 billion, there are other ways in which we can spend that money. Every one of these amendments in that context is relevant. Should we spend $248 billion on a marriage tax relief bill, 60 percent of which does not go to those experiencing a marriage tax penalty? Sixty percent of that $248 billion does not have anything to do with the marriage tax penalty. It goes in most cases to people who get a marriage bonus.

We are saying let's fix the marriage tax penalty. But if you are going to spend all that money, we have a whole list of other things we think we ought to be looking at. It is in that context that I think we are being reasonable and fair, especially given the fact that we are simply saying we will agree to a limit on amendments, we will agree to a limit on time.

I think this Republican bill is a marriage tax penalty relief bill in name only. It is a Trojan horse for the other risky tax schemes that have been proposed so far this year. If this bill passes, Republicans will then have enacted $566 billion in tax cuts this year before they have even completed the budget resolution. That is not even counting the audacious $1.3 trillion their Presidential candidate, George W. Bush, has proposed as their standard bearer. Add $1.3 trillion and the $566 billion, and that is $2 trillion in tax cuts they are proposing without a budget resolution.

Is this the way we ought to spend the surplus, including the Social Security surplus? We are saying we can do better than that. We are saying we ought to look at providing prescription drugs for our senior citizens. We are saying we ought to look at college tuition tax credits. We are saying we ought to look at the Medicaid and CHIP health programs.

I remind my colleague, just this day last week, 51 Senators—Republican and Democrat—voted for passing a prescription drug benefit before we pass the first dollar in tax cuts. Mr. President, 51 Senators voted for that; a majority of Senators said we are for a prescription drug benefit before we are for a tax cut, any kind of tax cut.

We want to deal with the marriage tax penalty. We want to come up with an agreement on the marriage tax penalty. But if some Republicans want to run for Democratic leader so they can dictate to the Democratic caucus what our agenda ought to be and what our amendments ought to be, let them run. I will take them on. We can have that debate. We will have a good election in the Democratic caucus.

But until they are elected Democratic leader, I think Democrats ought to make the decision about what Democrats offer as amendments.

They can agree with us on time, on a limitation on numbers, but not on context, not on text, not on substance. That is what this is all about.

We will have the debate time on cloture if we have to. Like the majority leader, I am an optimist. I am hopeful we can come to some agreement. It certainly is within reach. But not if we are dictated to with regard to the text of the amendments.

I yield the floor.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. LOTT. I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business with Senators permitted to speak——

Mr. REID. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. LOTT. For up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The assistant minority leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, before the two leaders leave the floor, I want to say, first of all, the Democratic leader is being so generous. We, the Democrats, 44 of us, follow him in lockstep. But the fact is, he has gone a long ways towards accommodating the majority leader.

I would just say this in passing: If we are going to be logical about this debate, then if you look at the underlying bill, that is the marriage tax penalty the Republicans are pushing forward, you will find 60 percent of it is not relevant to the marriage tax penalty—60 percent of it is not relevant. So if he is talking about relevancy, which I think should have no bearing on the proceedings here, 60 percent of their own underlying bill is not relevant.

So I think, I repeat, our leader has been so generous, trying to move things along. I think his statement is underlined by all the other 44 Democratic Senators. We support every step he has made. We think he is doing the right thing in protecting the prerogatives of the Senate, having this debate in the Senate where there is free debate. We are not even asking for free debate; we are asking there be some debate, which is not being allowed.

VISIT BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF COLOMBIA, ANDRES PASTRANA

Mr. L. CHAFEE. Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs, it is a great pleasure to welcome the President of Colombia to the Senate of the United States. I have been listening with rapt attention. He has been trying to explain to us his hopes for the future.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I join my distinguished colleague from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere Affairs; along with the chairman of the full committee, Senator HELMS; the distinguished majority leader; the minority leader; and other colleagues who are here—Senator BIDEN—in extending a very warm welcome to the distinguished President.

We have great admiration for him and the people of Colombia. The struggle in which we are all engaged affects all of us in this hemisphere, particularly those in the United States. And we know we are going to do everything we possibly can to see to it the support of the United States is forthcoming to President Pastrana and the people of Colombia.

Mr. President, you are warmly welcome here today. We are delighted you are with us.

RECESS

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate recess for 2 minutes for the purpose of the Senate welcoming and receiving to the U.S. Senate, the President of Colombia, President Andres Pastrana.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 5:23 p.m., recessed until 5:28 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. VOINOVICH).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I seek to be recognized to speak as in morning business for up to 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

THE MARRIAGE PENALTY TAX

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I appreciate the leadership on both sides and their discussion on us moving forward and dealing with the marriage penalty tax. I am glad we are finally coming together, but I would note the Senator from South Dakota has put forward, on behalf of the Democrat side, 10 amendments on this issue. Many of these are not directly relevant to what we are trying to get done. With all due respect to him putting these forward, and I appreciate them working with us some, we have a pretty direct issue in front of us. It is the marriage tax penalty.

To tie with it a discussion on prescription drugs, to tie with it discussions on Medicare, on Social Security priorities, on a college tuition tax credit, on conservation reserve programs, on the natural disaster assistance program, really just goes contrary, completely, to us ultimately trying to get this bill through.

What we have before us is a marriage tax penalty. We have two alternatives put forward by the Democrat Party. That is good. I think we can have good, direct, clear votes on that, and then we can press forward.

With all due respect to the Democratic leader, to call this a risky tax strategy, I think what is at risk if we do not deal with the marriage tax penalty is the institution of marriage in this country. What has happened is there is the fall-off in the number of people getting married, and then we tax them on top of that. That is risky.

They have said a number of times that 52 percent does not deal with the marriage tax penalty. It is all directly applicable to the marriage tax penalty.

The Democratic proposal actually enshrines in law a new homemaker penalty; that is, when one of the spouses decides to stay at home and take care of the children. The Democrat proposal makes families with one wage earner and one stay-at-home spouse pay higher taxes than a family with two wage earners earning the same income. Why discriminate against one-wage-earner families? That is a direct connection to the marriage tax penalty. That is a marriage tax penalty taking place with the one-wage-earner family.

Why do we want a Tax Code that penalizes families because one spouse chooses to work hard at home and one chooses to work hard outside the home? I do not see why we would want to do that.

There are a lot of things I like about the Democratic alternative, as far as doing away with the marriage tax penalty in a number of other places in the Tax Code. This notion of penalizing a single-wage-earner family is really not something we should be pressing.

More to the point, it makes the entire issue of the marriage tax penalty, all 100 percent of the tax cut, relevant to marriage. They are saying 52 percent of it is not relevant to the family. It is directly relevant to that one-wage-earner family. In many of those cases, they are saying it is not.

The other point, and I do not think it needs to be belabored: If we are ready to pass marriage tax penalty relief and both sides agree we need to pass marriage tax penalty relief, why would we take up a series of additional amendments on Medicaid, prescription drugs, Social Security, college tuition tax credit, Conservation Reserve Program, natural disaster assistance? Those are not relevant to the issue. We have a chance to do this particular issue, agree or disagree.

If the Democrats think this is too rich, let's vote on their bill; let's have a vote on it. We have the chance now to do that, to hone in on that. I am fearful that what I am seeing is more a block to dealing with the marriage tax penalty.

Mr. LOTT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWNBACK. I will be delighted to yield.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I asked the Senator to yield because I very much agree with what he is saying and want to emphasize a couple points.

There is a Democrat alternative. I indicated even yesterday we would be glad to take up debate and vote on it. I note even the Washington Post yesterday said the problem, for instance, with the Democratic bill is it is backloaded and would actually cost more over a 10-year period and more of it would affect the upper end, the more wealthy people. That is the alternative that was offered in the Finance Committee.

I believe our bill is much more in line with what the average working American—a young couple and older couple, for that matter—would like to have. I appreciate the Senator's remarks.

I want to say something else for the record. A complaint was made a few weeks ago by the Democratic leader about the cost of this bill and whom it will affect. I will, once again, read briefly what this bill will do.

It will provide a $2,500 increase to the beginning and ending income level for the EIC phaseout for married filing jointly; in other words, a $2,500 increase for the earned-income tax credit joint or married couples. That is the low-end, entry-level couples who need help. There is a specific provision that will cost, over a 10-year period, about $14 billion.

It also provides the standard deduction set at two times single for married filing jointly, and it doubles the brackets for the 15-percent and 28-percent. Then it provides for permanent extension of the alternative minimum tax treatment of refundable and nonrefundable personal credits.

What is it in these provisions to which the Democrats object? It is aimed at low-end married couples. It is aimed at correcting a problem that was never intended, where people in the middle income are paying higher taxes because of the alternative minimum tax, and it is aimed at the lowest and the middle brackets. It makes good sense.

Once again, what the Democrats are suggesting is a diversion. They want to get into agricultural policy. They want to get into Medicaid reform. They want to get into anything to distract from the issue at hand.

We are perfectly willing to go ahead with relevant amendments on the marriage tax penalty. In the end, the question is: Are you for eliminating the marriage tax penalty or not? If you are, this is the opportunity. We will have a chance to see tomorrow who is really for it and against it.

I thank the Senator for yielding, and I thank him for his leadership on this issue. It is an issue he has been talking about ever since he arrived in the Senate. Now we have a chance to get it done. We should not get off on side trails on issues that will complicate or maybe even defeat our entire effort. I thank the Senator. Keep up the good work.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader for his leadership and willingness to schedule this time. I am interested in dealing with this issue because we have been pressing it for years. We have been talking about it. Some have talked about it in campaigns.

Why do we want to tie in 10 other topics? We should not. I hope the Democratic leader and our side can get together and agree on a set of alternatives that are relevant. Let's have a series of votes up or down so we can deal with this marriage tax penalty relief bill. It is time to do that. We have the wherewithal to do it. I hope we will deal with this now.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I actually want to proceed to morning business to introduce a bill, but having listened to the majority leader and having listened to Senator DASCHLE, I want to briefly respond to what I have heard on the floor of the Senate.

This is the Senate, and I thank Senator DASCHLE for representing me as a Senator from Minnesota so I can represent the people in Minnesota.

This proposal the Republicans have brought to the floor can easily be debated tomorrow. Senator DASCHLE made a proposal where there would be other amendments. They would be limited to an hour equally divided and up-or-down votes. It is a matter of whether or not my colleagues, the majority leader, and others, want to vote and want to be accountable for votes.

As it turns out, in the Senate, we come to the floor and we try to represent the people in our States. We will have an opportunity to focus on the Republicans' proposal. The problem with their proposal is it blows the budget, and the hundreds of billions of dollars that go into their proposal disproportionately go to people at the top. It is money that can be invested in other areas.

There are a number of Senators with amendments. Our amendments say some of that money, as my colleague from Montana mentioned, should be invested in kids and education; some of that money should be invested in making sure prescription drugs are affordable for senior citizens and others.

In my particular case, the proposal I talked about—and I have worked with Senator DORGAN, Senator SNOWE, and others on it—essentially says that when it comes to FDA-approved drugs in our country, there should be a way for our pharmacists and wholesalers to import those drugs back from other countries at half the cost and pass that savings on to consumers. That is called free trade. As a matter of fact, then people have less to deduct and there is less of a penalty.

My point is, with all due respect—and I am just speaking for myself—for too long the majority leader has come out here and has basically said: I am not going to let other Senators come out here with amendments that deal with issues that are important to the lives of people they represent; I am going to insist on only the amendments I say you can do, and if you are not willing to do that, I will file cloture and that is it.

That is not the way I remember the Senate operating for most of the years that I have been here. The thing that I have always loved about the Senate, the thing that I think has led to some really great Senators, is the ability for Senators to offer amendments, to speak out for the people they represent, to have up-or-down votes, and we would go at it.

If it takes us a week, it takes us a week. If we start early in the morning, and we go late in the night, that is the way we do it. We are legislators. We are out here advocating and speaking and fighting for people we represent.

I thank Senator DASCHLE from South Dakota for essentially saying there is no way we are going to let the majority leader basically dictate to us what issues we should care about, what amendments we get to offer.

We have a different view about good tax policy. We have a different view about how to get the benefits to families. We also have a different view about other priorities that we ought to be dealing with on the floor of the Senate as well.

I will tell you, coming from a State where 65 percent of the elderly people have no prescription drug coverage whatsoever, I would like to see the Senate get serious on that issue. I would like to have an up-or-down vote. I would like to thank the minority leader for protecting my rights.

Finally, I ask the Chair, how much time do I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes 58 seconds.

(The remarks of Mr. WELLSTONE pertaining to the introduction of S. 2414 are located in today's RECORD under ''Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.'')

Mr. WELLSTONE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. I ask unanimous consent to be recognized to speak as in morning business for a period not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator is recognized.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I know there is a great deal of discussion going on about the marriage penalty tax. I wanted to stay out of the politics of it, if I could, and just speak about the merits of the proposals for a few moments.

Essentially, what we have are three proposals: the Finance Committee proposal of $248 billion, over 10 years; the Moynihan proposal, which is the Democratic proposal, of $150 billion over 10 years; and then I believe a proposal that is really worthy of very serious consideration by this body, and one which I would support, which is a proposal by Senator EVAN BAYH of Indiana for $90 billion over 10 years.

I believe this proposal is the most sensible and most fiscally responsible way to go about addressing the issue. More than 21 million couples suffer from the marriage tax penalty. In my State, there are close to 3 million of them.

I think providing marriage tax penalty relief is a measure of common sense and a measure of decency. The Tax Code not only can be used for revenue producing, but it is also used to encourage behavior that one believes one should encourage. Certainly getting married is a behavior that one wishes to encourage.

Who generally believes that the marriage tax penalty is unfair? They are young couples. They are getting married. Both of them work. They find out, for the first time, they actually pay more taxes if they get married than they do if they remain single.

These people are generally under the $100,000 earning limit. I have never heard anyone at the top brackets say they find the marriage tax penalty to be unfair. But I have heard considerable testimony from young couples getting married, young professionals: My goodness, we have to pay this penalty. Why is it? How is it fair?

Senator BAYH's proposal strikes right at that heart, and it does so in a way that you can say and I can say—every one of us in this body can say—we eliminate the marriage tax penalty for those earning under $120,000 all across this land within 4 years. I think it is simple. I think it is direct. It is cost effective. And it gets the job done. I think it makes a great deal of sense.

The targeted Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act provides significant relief by creating a dollar-for-dollar tax credit, calculated by the taxpayer, using a simple worksheet, which offsets and eliminates the marriage penalty for families making under $120,000. The credit is phased out at $140,000.

The bill would also broaden the availability of the earned-income tax credit for low-income working families.

Under this legislation, half of all taxpayers with marriage penalties will have their penalties eliminated the first year. By 2004, it completely eliminates the penalty on earned income for all couples making under $120,000. That is approximately 17.5 million couples.

If you look at the fact that the impact of the majority proposal by the Finance Committee eliminates most of the marriage tax penalty on 21.6 million couples who currently face penalties by year 10, and provides a bonus—this does not provide a bonus; the phaseout in that bill is over 10 years—the phase in the Bayh bill is over 4 years. In the Moynihan bill, 21.6 million couples who currently incur a marriage tax penalty would find relief by year 10.

The beauty of this bill is that all of the marriage tax penalty is eliminated for 17.5 million people by year 4. And less than 10 percent of all households earn more than $120,000 a year. So, effectively, it covers not only 17.5 million people, but it covers over 90 percent of the population who would be affected. It does it at a cost that is much lower than the other two bills—$90 billion.

What I like about it is it gives us the opportunity to actually see tax reduction happen, to actually say that within 4 years the marriage penalty tax is completely eliminated for working families earning under $120,000 a year. We do it for a modest amount of $90 billion over 10 years.

The other bills deal with all kinds of different so-called hidden penalties, but those are not the real things that I think impact the people's drive to eliminate the marriage penalty. It is what happens when you get married. It is the increase in the tax when you get married. This is entirely eliminated within a 4-year period of time. I support Senator BAYH's proposal, and I will be pleased, when he offers it, to be a cosponsor of it. I hope it will have very serious debate and discussion before this body.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I thank my good friend from California for her statement.

This will come out later when we debate this more. I think it is important to note that the proposal advocated by my good friend from California has a certain deficiency, which is that it does not at all address the marriage tax penalty caused by unearned income. The proposal advocated by my friend from California deals only with the marriage tax penalty caused by earned income; that is, by wages and salaries. There are a lot of senior citizens in our country, as we know. Most of their income is unearned income. It is pension benefits, Social Security income. It is not wages or salary. As a consequence, there is about a $60 billion tax penalty over 10 years for senior citizens that is not addressed in the proposal offered by or mentioned by and advocated by the Senator from California but which is covered by the proposal offered by the Senator from New York, the Democratic proposal.

I will address another situation. There are lots of aspects of the marriage tax penalty provision. Again, there is nothing in the code that imposes a penalty on marriage. It is just that because of our combination of progressive rates, a desire to achieve neutrality between married taxpayers and individual taxpayers with the same income, a desire to achieve equality between married couples with the same income but with different distribution in earnings, we end up with this problem. There is no total fix. It is just a matter of trying to figure out what makes the most sense.

This chart deals with only one aspect of the so-called marriage tax penalty. That is the example of the marriage tax penalty in the earned-income tax credit, the EITC, a provision in the law which is to help low-income people who otherwise face a significant tax burden, let alone all the other difficulties they are facing in life with low income. This chart shows first a single mother with two children. Let's say her income is $12,000 a year, which is very common. She, today, would receive an earned-income tax credit benefit of $3,888.

Let's take a single father with no children. Let's say his income is the same; it is $12,000. Obviously, he receives a zero earned-income tax credit. Let's say the single mom with two children marries the individual with no children. Now they are married with two children. Their total income will be $24,000, hers $12,000 and his $12,000. But because of the marriage tax penalty, because of the way the Tax Code works, and in particular the EITC provisions which are very complex, as a consequence of the man and the woman getting married, their now joint earned-income tax credit will no longer be the $3,888, which the woman alone with her two children would receive. Rather, now that they are married, the combined EITC benefit would be lower, in the neighborhood of $1,506, a clear penalty for getting married. It is something we want to fix.

It has been stated several times that the proposal, the Finance Committee proposal helps low-income people by addressing the marriage tax penalty under the EITC. It does, but not very much. The maximum amount of relief that can be received under the Finance Committee bill in addressing a potential $2,382 penalty is $500. That is the maximum amount of benefit under the marriage tax penalty that is addressed in the Finance Committee bill.

Contrast that with the Democratic alternative. Under the Democratic alternative, there would be total relief; that is, a single mom with two children and a single father with no children, when they get married, would receive no penalty. Why is that? Because of the simplicity of the Democratic alternative. The simplicity is, if you are married, you just choose. You file jointly or you file separately. You choose the one which results in lower tax. As a consequence, all of the 65 provisions in the Tax Code which sometimes cause a marriage penalty are addressed. They are all solved.

The minority bill solves completely the marriage tax penalty problems facing some Americans. Contrast that with the Finance Committee bill, which does not solve completely the marriage tax penalty problems facing some married taxpayers because the Finance Committee bill deals with only three of the inequities, not all 65.

This is just one of the inequities the Finance Committee bill does not address very much. There is kind of a little tack-on provision which addresses it. But as a consequence, the Democratic alternative completely solves the EITC problem.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, we did spend some time today debating the elimination of the marriage penalty tax. This is something I have been working on for all the years I have been in Congress in the Senate. I look forward to the day we can repeal it. I was hoping we would have this vote in the near future. I very much regret the delay that was imposed upon us by the minority because by putting nongermane amendments on this, we slow down what we could accomplish here in the very near future, which is finally to eliminate the marriage tax penalty.

I have an amendment prepared to implement elimination of the marriage tax penalty a lot sooner. I am contemplating offering that. I will see how much support there is for it. Before I do that, however, instead of the proposed phase-in period of 6 years, which is the underlying proposal, my amendment would eliminate the marriage penalty tax immediately, bringing working parents tax relief right away.

According to the Congressional Research Service, as this graph shows, the additional savings my plan would bring married couples over the Roth plan would be almost $3,000. If you look at the years, we go from $69 versus $879 in 2002, all the way over to 2008, where it evens out. The point is, these are savings for a married couple—about $810 in the first year, 2002—if we put it into effect immediately.

With today's cost of living exploding, education, tuition, high prices at the pump, that is a substantial savings for an ordinary working family. I think we ought to make this effective today, as soon as it passes, and not implement it over a 6- or 7-year period. Married couples have been waiting for a large number of years, since this ridiculous provision was put in the IRS Code.

It is not often we have the opportunity to right a wrong around this place, but this is an opportunity. I sincerely hope we take advantage of it.

Today, however, not only do we have the opportunity to turn back a tax, we also have an opportunity to turn back an unjust tax that punishes an institution that is the very backbone of society, at least in most of our minds.

You hear some people say that it isn't. But marriage is the backbone of our society, the essence of our families. One of the reasons why we are having a lot of cultural problems today is a lack of emphasis on the family and marriage. Twenty-five million couples are subject to the marriage tax penalty in America and, frankly, those of us who have not had the courage to overturn that tax over the past several years deserve some of the blame because it punishes married people. In New Hampshire alone, almost 140,000 couples will be hit with a marriage tax penalty. In a small State such as New Hampshire, which only has a little over a million people, this tax is antimarriage, antifamily, and antichild. Children reared in two-parent homes are more likely to succeed in school, stay away from drugs, and not become involved in crime. We should not penalize married couples. It doesn't make sense.

A way for couples to avoid the marriage tax penalty is they could file for divorce and save money or they could not get married and save money and just live together. That kind of tax policy doesn't make sense. The average marriage penalty is $1,400, or more, in additional Federal income taxes, which is more than $100 a month. That is an extra $1,400 that could be used to buy school clothes for kids, pay for a home computer, perhaps, or a little health insurance, or maybe take a family vacation. The point is, you would have control over an additional $1,400 to do with what you want, and not have the Government taking your money whenever it wants.

I have received a lot of mail on this issue over the years asking for relief—I might say, begging for relief, for the Congress to do something. Just one example. A gentleman by the name of Roy Riegle from Derry, NH, wrote this:

> I am a software engineer working in Merrimack and living in Derry. Via the Web, I just learned of the House Passage of the ''Marriage Tax Cut'' bill. (I think it is H.R. 6). I want to heartily encourage you to vote for this bill when it reaches the Senate. We are one of the classic middle class families (I'm an engineer and my wife teaches in Chester) who are trying to pay for our kid's college education. Our cost to send our second daughter to Trinity College in Hartford, Connecticut, next year is expected to be $20,000. We need assistance of some sort, and this will help. Thank you for your consideration.
> ROY RIEGLE.

That is so true of many families trying to meet expenses and pay education costs. For all these millionaires and billionaires you read about and hear about all over the country making all this money, maybe $100 a month isn't important. But it is real important to people such as the Riegles and so many others who have written me on this issue over the years.

Since 1970, the number of dual-income couples has risen dramatically and continues to rise. It is these families who will benefit from the repeal of this tax. What an outrageous tax this is, to discriminate against people who are married. It is just un-American, and how it ever got in the code is beyond me. Why it hasn't gotten out in all these years is beyond me.

I think we should understand that the reason why, as we stand here now, we have not been able to pass this on the floor of the Senate today is because of delays, because the other side wants to offer nongermane amendments to slow it down, to say we have to pick and choose which family gets a break. You have to be in a certain income tax bracket, or you have to be a certain type of person to get a break, and all this nonsense. Everybody should get the break. The marriage tax penalty itself is unfair. It is not more or less fair for one family or another, depending on the income. It is an unfair tax. Let's get rid of it, period. There is nothing complicated about that. This year, Americans will give 39 percent of their income to the Federal Government. As tax levels rise, women who might otherwise stay at home are forced to enter the job market. The percentage of single-worker households in the U.S. has plunged to 28.2 percent, compared with 51 percent in 1969. However, the harder parents work to keep pace, the greater their chances of moving into a higher tax bracket and winding up giving more to the Government.

Mr. President, in conclusion, these families are right. These taxes do penalize. If we are going to penalize the sacred institution of marriage and offend our sense of decency and morality, if that is what is going on in the Tax Code, we need to correct it.

We should be encouraging the makeup of the family, not the breakup of the family. We should bring tax relief to married couples today—not tomorrow, not next year, not 6 years down the road, but today. They have waited all these years with this discriminatory tax. We can never make it up to them, so let's start today and make it effective today. We can bring tax relief to these couples by passing my amendment and, if not mine, at least we should get started with the underlying bill. It is better to do it down the road, over the course of 6 years, than not at all. With my amendment, we can do it immediately and save all of this money each year for each of these families.

ELIAN GONZALEZ

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I want to talk on a subject that has been in the news a lot. I will take a few minutes of the Senate's time. I have been involved in a lot of issues. I have debated just about everything known to mankind on the floor of the Senate, as have most of us. I am in my tenth year in the Senate, and I have never been involved in an issue that has gotten to my heart more than the Elian Gonzalez case—never. Last night, on the Geraldo Rivera show, a poll was shown saying 61 percent of the American people said Elian Gonzalez should go back to his father, and 28 percent of them said he should stay here in America.

Here is this little boy who floated in the ocean on an innertube after his mother died trying to bring him to America. So we are now going to conduct policy about what to do about Elian by reading polls. Where is the leadership in this country when we need it? This is not about polls. I don't care what the polls are. I could care less what the polls are. If Lincoln had taken a poll on slavery, we would probably still have slavery because the majority of the people in America at that time supported slavery. But he didn't take a poll or put his finger to the wind. He did what was right.

Again, I plead with my colleagues in the Senate to grant Elian Gonzalez and his family permanent residency status so this issue can be handled by a Florida custody court. This should not be an immigration matter. Elian Gonzalez did not get on a yacht and cruise into Miami Harbor. He and two other people almost drowned while everybody else on the boat—10 or 12 other people —lost their lives. And his mother's dying wish was to ''please get my son to American soil.''

I have heard a lot about the father's rights. I have nothing against him. He could be the nicest guy in the world. I have met Elian. I didn't get a chance to meet Elian's mother because she didn't make it. If she had made it, we would not be here talking about this because, under the law, she and Elian would be allowed to stay here. So because she died, Elian has no rights.

Those of you listening to me now who think this is a father-son issue, I want you to listen carefully to what I have to say because it is not a father-son issue. That is a totally bogus argument. There are reports in Miami that Elian is reluctant to travel to Washington to see his father. He is a frightened little boy. Wouldn't you be after you survived that? Has anybody listening to me now ever gone through an experience like that—floating on an innertube on the high seas for 3 days, after you watched your mother die, and everybody else on the boat is gone except two others he didn't know were alive because they were drifting off somewhere else. And then to be sitting in a home in Miami, with people who love him, who have taken care of him, and to wonder if today, right now, tonight, tomorrow morning—he doesn't know when—maybe noon tomorrow, in comes the large, sweeping hand of the Justice Department and Janet Reno, and they yank him from the arms of these people who love him and drag him back to Cuba. That is what he is sitting through now and worrying about now. He is a frightened little boy. When are we going to be concerned about this frightened little boy?

I am tired of hearing about everyone else's rights in this debate. I am sick of it. I am sick of the fact that I can't get a vote on the floor of this Senate because the people do not have the guts to vote. They do not want to be recorded. I am sick of it because this little boy is going to be dragged back to Cuba, and he is going to be used as a pawn in Castro's—God knows what—forsaken land over there. And we have to live with it. We ought to be recorded, and we ought to be on record. We ought to stand up and be counted. I am sick of it. I have been quiet too long. I am not going to be quiet anymore.

He is fearful of returning to that country. I talked to him. He said: Senator SMITH, please help me. Don't send me back to Cuba. I said: Elian, do you love your father? Do you want to go back with your father? He says: Yes. I want to be with my father. I don't want to go back to Cuba.

Mr. Gonzalez, if you are listening to me, why don't you defect? It is a heck of a lot better here.

I am going to tell you that there is one shining example of why it is not about father and son. It is not about father and son. I am sick of it. Listen to me—one shining example of the human rights violation of Fidel Castro.

Where are all the human rights people who care about this? Where is the Catholic Church that sheltered all of these Communists during the Nicaraguan and El Salvador issue? Where are they? Silent.

Let me tell you about Fidel Castro and what little boys such as Elian look forward to, and what Elian will have to look forward to when he is dragged back to Cuba—for his father. Give me a break, Ms. Reno.

On July 13, 1994, 72 Cuban men, women, and children boarded the 13 de Marzo, a tugboat, trying to sail for freedom to the United States, just like Elian did. Less than 3 hours later—3 hours later—32 of them would be forced to return to Cuba—they were the lucky ones—while the other 40, 23 children among them, were left by the Cuban authorities, their bodies scattered at sea.

At 3 o'clock in the morning, 22 men and 30 women boarded a recently renovated World War II tugboat in the Bay of Havana. With them were over two dozen children, one an infant, and several others between 5 and 10 years old.

I am going to show you some pictures of the children who boarded that boat who never returned. I want to show you pictures of children who died such as these children right here:

Caridad Leyva Tacoronte, dead, 4 years old;

Angel Rene Abreu Ruiz, dead, 3 years old;

Yousel Eugenio Perez Tacoronte, dead, 11 years old.

Let me tell you how they died with this dictator who tells you that he wants to welcome this little boy back to Cuba so he can be with his father. If Castro had caught him, he would be dead. All of them would have been. He would have killed them. But he didn't catch them. They drowned.

Now Elian has to be told that he has to go back. His father said the other day, ''Four months I have been waiting for my son.''

Where have you been, Mr. Gonzalez? Nobody is stopping you from coming here, except Castro. We don't have any policy that says you can't come here.

Let me tell you what happened to these kids. This little tugboat was detected, and it was approached by the Cuban coast guard. The government boat did not attempt to stop the 13 de Marzo, the boat. It didn't try to stop it. Instead, it stalked it for 45 minutes along the coast of Cuba, 7 miles out at sea—stalked it, intimidating it.

The U.S. Coast Guard protects life. The Cuban coast guard exterminates life.

It was then that the government vessel, beyond the sight of any witnesses on land, rammed this defenseless boat. This is 1994. This isn't 1959. This is 1994, 6 years ago. Defenseless people were in a little tugboat which was rammed by the Cuban coast guard.

According to the testimony of several of the survivors, two Cuban government firefighting boats appeared and began to pummel the passengers with high pressure firehoses.

You can imagine how horrible that was.

Although the passengers repeatedly attempted to surrender to the government officials—even women holding their children up on deck, saying, please, my children; it is my child; don't kill my child. They were begging for their lives, but they were relentless, this wonderful Castro who is so concerned about getting this little boy back to his father in Cuba.

The force from the firehoses you can imagine. One survivor, Mayda Tacoronte Vega, told her sister that she witnessed children sprayed from the arms of their mothers into the ocean waters. Other children were swept over the deck by the firehoses into the sea and drowned. Desperate to protect their own children, the women carried the remaining children down into the boat's hold.

Gerado Perez Vasconcelos, whose ex-wife and son perished that day, told of how the firehoses were filling the hold with water. The boat sank, and she didn't see anybody coming out of the hold.

With most of its weaker passengers already drowned inside the hold, or in the sea, the tugboat filled with water, cracked in two, and was rammed again just to be sure, and it sank.

Over the course of a few minutes that day, Maria Victoria Garcia lost her husband, her 10-year-old boy, her brother, three uncles, and two cousins. For what? For trying to get out of Cuba, this place that we are going to send Elian back to, maybe tomorrow.

Her poignant testimony revealed what happened to her and her son once they were in the water. ''We struggled to stay above water by clinging to a floating body.''

I wonder what Fidel would have done if Fidel had found Elian floating in the tube rather than these two fishermen.

''We struggled to stay above the water by clinging to a floating body,'' this woman said. ''I held onto this body because I just didn't have the strength to go on. But people fell on me, and my son slipped from my grasp,'' just as Elian's mother slipped from his grasp.

The young boy could fight the huge waves created by the Government vessels, and his mother was forced to watch helplessly as her baby drowned only 5 feet away.

Angel Ruiz, 3 years old, Fidel Castro, that wonderful, little child-loving dictator over there, took care of her.

There is Yousel, he is 11.

Nineteen-year-old Janette Hernandez Gutierrez also courageously attempted to save the life of a child just before the boat was fully submerged. ''We went to look for the other child. Just as I was about to get off the boat, I felt the child * * * had caught my foot. And when I was about to grab him, my shoe slipped off and down he went. I couldn't reach him. That was horrible * * *.''

Hernandez went on to describe the scene of the massacre: ''There was a child who was inflated like a toad, inflated with so much water.''

The merciless attack left 23 children and 17 adults dead in the Florida Straits.

You say: Oh, well. That was just a bunch of Castro's goons who got a little excited; no big deal. This is not about that. Elian's father loves him. He should go back.

Here is what Castro says about Elian, in case you want to know:

''The team is ready,'' Castro said, referring to when Elian comes back, ''to proceed without losing 1 minute with the rehabilitation and readaptation of Elian to his family.''

Yes. Absolutely. You talk about psychological trauma. You don't know what psychological trauma is until you deal with what this little boy has to deal. Not one person in the Justice Department has asked Elian one question about what he wants.

I have been there. I have talked to him.

The 32 survivors—maybe they were lucky. Maybe they weren't. They were taken to a prison where they have to endure life separated from their surviving relatives.

Not only did the agents refuse to search for the dead, they mocked the survivors and the relatives of the deceased and laughed at those who asked the state security to reclaim the bodies, said Geraldo Perez in a tearful press conference.

The officials said the drowned were nothing other than counterrevolutionary dogs. Will we send this ''counterrevolutionary dog'' back to Castro? Is Elian a counter-revolutionary dog? Elian had a taste of freedom. What if he resists the lack of human rights in Cuba? Will we hear about it? I don't think so. We will not hear about it, but Elian will hear about it. What do you think his father will be able to do about it?

I ask some of my critics on the 61 percent, pick up a book about Fidel Castro's Cuba and look up the word ''pioneers.'' Let me tell you about the Pioneers. Elian was a Pioneer before he escaped. What do Pioneers do? They have a little indoctrination school. Here is one of the little drills they do for the children at the age of 3: Hold your hands out—put on a blindfold. Hold your hands out, ask God for some candy, and wait. No candy comes. Close your hands, put them down. Put your hands back up again, ask Fidel Castro for some candy, and watch it pour into your hands.

That is what Elian has to look forward to. It is called brainwashing—nothing complicated about it.

The Union of Communist Pioneers is a compulsory political organization for children and adolescents created by the government for youngsters in kindergarten to 12th grade. It functions as the first step toward joining the Union of Communist Youth. Approximately 98 percent of the children in elementary school are enrolled. It is not presided over by a child or adolescent, as one would expect, but by a high-ranking adult member of the Union of Communist Youth.

Don't give me this stuff about him going back to his father. He is not going back to his father.

What about his mother? Why does she not have rights, too? She had custody. She was taking care of him. The dirty little secret which Mr. Gonzalez will not talk about, because he can't, because of the long arm of Castro—where is he? He is in Bethesda, in a Cuban diplomat's house. He has a lot of free time to talk there. He can speak freely there, can't he? Reno has the nerve to say: We talked out there, we talked alone, and he didn't say anything about defecting.

Come on, give me a break. Attorney General Reno, you could have stopped it 4 months ago, and you can still stop it today. Let it go to a custody court. Get out of it. It is not an immigration matter. He didn't immigrate here in the way we define immigration. Let it go to the custody court in Florida, and let them decide, if they need to. Let the family sit down alone without Fidel Castro, without any government officials, and let them talk about it. If they can't work it as a husband and wife can't work out custody of their children, go to court, and let the court make the determination based on all of the facts.

There is a dirty little secret about Mr. Gonzalez. Yes, there is. Did he know Elian was coming? Sure, he knew. He knew they were leaving. He was called when the child was picked up and went to the hospital. The doctors wanted to know whether he had medical problems or history they needed to know about, so they called him in Cuba while the family was there. He said: Take care of my son; I will be there soon.

We are not hearing about that, are we? We will not hear about that because we don't want to do anything to make Fidel Castro angry at the United States. After all, Bill Clinton wants a legacy of breaking down the barriers between Cuba and the United States. That is what this is about. Let's get real. God knows, he needs something to save his legacy, so we will take it out on Elian Gonzalez. After all, he is an expendable little kid. We don't care about him. That is just one kid. Let him go back to his father.

If your son was lost at sea for 3 days and everybody on the boat drowned and somebody found him, I don't care who it was—it could be a convicted murderer who found him, who cares—if he found him and brought him home, wouldn't you ''thank him?'' Wouldn't you say ''thank you''? Wouldn't you thank those who took care of him, if you loved your son?

Let me state what happened. There was no thank you. When he got off the plane, he said: They were a bunch of kidnappers. I want my kid back. They kidnapped my kid.

Kidnapped my kid? I am not passing judgment on this guy. He could be the greatest father in the world for all I know, but he will not get a chance to be a father because the Cubans have already said this boy is the property of Cuba, not Mr. Gonzalez. Mr. Gonzalez will do what he is told.

I want your kid.

OK; when do you want him? Where do I take him? Where do I drop him off?

As recently as April 2, Fidel Castro called the Miami relatives of Elian Gonzalez, Elian's unpunished kidnappers. Do you think little Elian will go back and tell his classmates and his father and those people in Cuba that these people were kidnappers who took care of him, who saved his life, the fishermen and the family who took care of him? I don't think so. What will happen? We can't afford to have little Elian running around saying bad things about Cuba or good things about America. No. Elian will pay the price.

We don't have the guts to stand on the floor of the Senate as a Senate, all 100 Members, take a vote and say he should go back to Cuba or the case should go to court.

Some say we might lose. Yes, we might. I think the vote count is probably 45—maybe. So what? We could take a walk on a number of issues before this body such as whether or not we should go to war in the Persian Gulf. We could have taken a walk on that and let the President go ahead and do it, but we took a vote. It was a tough vote. We take a lot of tough votes around here, and a lot of people die as a result of votes, especially when we vote to go to war.

The headline in ''Granma,'' the Communist Party newspaper, after the incident was: ''Tugboat Stolen by Antisocial Elements Loses Stability and Sinks.''

On August 5, 1994, Fidel Castro declared that the roots of the accident were manifested in the conduct of the United States; it was the United States' fault that these kids drowned.

Dr. Marta Milina, a Cuban psychiatrist who escaped Cuba in August of 1999, stated: If Elian Gonzalez is returned to Cuba, he would have severe psychological trauma.

Is that in the best interest of Elian? Is it about Elian? Or is it about his father? The answer is, a custody court would know that because a custody court, if the family could not agree, would listen to the facts. They would make that determination. But they have never spoken, and the Justice Department has never spoken to Elian.

This is one smart little boy. Meet him. And I am sorry the Attorney General does not believe it is important enough to meet him, but I will never forget him. He carried around a little statue of the Virgin Mary in the home where we were. I said: Who is that? He said: Virgin Mary. He said: I saw her while I was on the raft.

Another story that is not recorded, and the fishermen will tell you, when they found him, he was floating in that little tube, asleep. You can substantiate this by talking to the family if you don't believe me. He was in the ocean for 3 days in the bright sunshine, didn't have a sunburn, and he was surrounded by dolphins, and dolphins will ward off sharks.

This little boy is a very special little boy in more ways than one. The fact that we allow him to go back to Cuba under the auspices of uniting a father and a son is the most outrageous decision this country will ever make. Frankly, I do not want that blood on my hands. I know that is tough talk, and I mean every word of it. I don't want it on my hands. I have seen too much of it.

I am not going to read all the names, but they will be printed in the RECORD. The children in that incident, 4 years old, 11 years old, 11 years old, 6 months old fire-hosed out of the arms of her mother, 2 years old, 3 years old, 10 years old, 4 years old, 3 years old, 11 years old, 2 years old—that is the age of the children.

Let me close on a couple of points. Edmund Burke once said:

All that is required for evil to succeed is for good men [and women] to do nothing.

Today we can do something. We can grant Elian Gonzalez and his family permanent residency status, which will send this case to the family court where Mr. Gonzalez can make his case without any Castro influence. We should have done it the day Elian got back, but we did not. We decided to make this a big political issue between the administration and Castro. So Castro starts whining, and suddenly this administration thinks the case has to be in INS's jurisdiction. We could not kowtow to a Communist dictator. What does Castro care about the interests of this little boy? I told you what he thinks of this little boy.

There are no parental rights in Cuba. The children are taken away into these training camps. They are taught all kinds of drills. They are taught how to take an AK–47 apart, blindfolded, at the age of 6.

Luis Fernandez, a Cuban diplomat, said as recently as yesterday:

The boy [Elian] is a possession of the Cuban government.

Cuban children, my colleagues, do not belong to their parents, they belong to Fidel Castro.

Article 39 of the Cuban constitution—it would be nice if some of the 61 percent of the people who say this had the facts. It would be nice if the pollster gave them the facts before they answered the question. Article 39 of the Cuban constitution, adopted in 1976 and revised in 1992, declares:

. . . the education of children and young people in the spirit of communism is the duty of all society.

Law No. 16 of the ''Children and Youth Code,'' adopted in 1978, says the state's goal is the creation of ''Communism's new generation'' and requires all adults to help mold a child's ''Communist personality.'' If the parents do not bring up the children to be good Communists, then the neighborhood spy will report them to the authorities and they will be taken away and ''reeducated.''

Talk to some of the Vietnamese who escaped Vietnam and ask them what a reeducation camp is. If anybody thinks little Elian Gonzalez will not be put under a severe and thorough Communist indoctrination when he goes back, then they are blind. He is going to suffer. He is going to pay—big time. For what? Surviving a near drowning, surviving a wreck on the open sea. That is why he is being punished, because his mother did not live.

She has rights, too, but we don't know about them. But somebody could represent her in a custody court and put her rights on the record. But not Janet Reno.

Let me give a little idea of what he is going to do some summer when he gets back. He is going to be in a ''voluntary'' labor or military drill camp. He will learn there is no religion but communism. He was put in a church a few days after he arrived. He had never been in a church before in his life. He didn't know what the inside of a church was.

He will learn that Fidel is God. He will learn the Communist Party is of more value than his father or anybody else in his family. He will be told his Miami relatives who cared for him and loved him, including his surrogate mother, Marielysis, are nothing more than traitors and worms and kidnappers. That is the language they use.

Marielysis Gonzalez, 21 years old, has been hospitalized off and on for the past 2 weeks because this little boy clings to her every day. He will not leave her alone. Every time somebody knocks on the door, every time somebody comes in the yard, every time the phone rings, he wonders if somebody is going to take him away. And he asks her: Marielysis, are they going to take me today?

How would you like to live like that? That is what Janet Reno has put this boy through for 4 months, and I am sick of it. I am not going to defend it. She has put him through it. It is her responsibility and the President's. These people have been vilified, these good people, these decent people in the Cuban-American community in Miami—good, decent people who have shown a lot of self-restraint, frankly, under the circumstances, but especially Lazaro and Marielysis and other members of that family who have taken such good care of this boy. All they care about is the best interests of the boy.

It is funny, I did not hear some of those people saying anything about the rule of law—these same people today who are saying, the rule of law says he must go back with his father. It is funny, though, those same people when their President, the Chief Executive of our country, was impeached for repeatedly breaking our law, not one of them had the courage to step out and say: He broke the law; he lied to me.

It just depends on whose law it is, doesn't it, and whose law you break. That is what matters.

I believe in the rule of law, but can you understand why they do not want to send Elian back to a totalitarian state? I have talked to the family about this. They love Juan Gonzalez. He is a family member. There is no difficulty between these family members.

The reason Mr. Gonzalez did not come here is that he could not come here. The reason Mr. Gonzalez can't defect is that he is afraid to defect because he knows what is going to happen to some of his family who are still back in Cuba. We are playing the game. We are just giving them all the cover.

''I spoke to Mr. Gonzalez, and he didn't indicate to me he wanted to defect.''

Do you remember learning about the Fugitive Slave Law of the 1840s and 1850s? It made northerners return escaped slaves back to their masters. Would anyone begrudge abolitionists who opposed that law?

Picture this: A little black child in 1840, Anywhere, U.S.A., in the South, picked up by his mother. His father says, ''No, get away, I'll cover for you.'' She takes the Underground Railroad and makes it to the North and is caught. She dies. Same logic—send him back to the father. Send him back to slavery.

This kid is going back to slavery. He is not going back to his father; he is going back to slavery. So all of you out there, all 61 percent, including many of my colleagues, when you watch him paraded around the streets of Havana as they teach him to become a pretty good little Communist, think about it. Think about how you might have stood up and prevented it.

In 1939, the U.S.S. St. Louis arrived from Germany with 937 refugees aboard. Do you know who they were? Jews fleeing from Hitler. The ship was denied entry because the law did not allow it. The refugees went back to Europe and Hitler and to their deaths. Was it right to uphold the law in that case?

The fact is, no law governs this case. Janet Reno is not telling you the truth. She has total discretion. There is no law that is dictating to her that she has to send this boy back. No law. Show it to me. Somebody come to the floor and read to me the law that says the Attorney General must return this boy. There is no such law. There is nothing in the law that says it. There is no age restriction. There is nothing. What it says is that she has discretion. So her discretion is to send him back, but do not tell me it is the law because it is not.

She made the wrong decision. With this simple bill, on which I have been trying to get a vote for a month, Senators can be on record as saying it is wrong to make this an immigration case. He has rights. He is only a 6-year-old boy, but he has rights. His mother had rights. Let's let the family sit down and talk about it without the Justice Department. Let them meet alone. If they cannot work it out, they can go to the Florida custody court and decide what is in the best interest of Elian. That is the way it should be.

Will evil succeed, as Mr. Burke said? That could be Elian. That could have been Elian and might still be Elian. My conscience is clear.

GAS TAXES

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, yesterday, the Senate voted on a cloture motion to end debate on Senator LOTT's proposal to roll back the gasoline excise tax. Senator LOTT's bill is a sincere effort to address the hardships many Americans have been facing given the rising price of gasoline at the pump.

I commend the majority leader for this legislation. But, I do want to clarify my vote on the cloture motion.

I voted for cloture because I believe the majority leader, of all people, deserved an up-or-down vote on the proposal. I also believed that, if we were going to vote to cut or maintain the current gasoline tax, we ought not to confuse the American people about where we stood by deciding this issue on a procedural vote.

Unfortunately, because cloture was not invoked, and there may not be a vote up-or-down on the proposal itself, it seems that Utahns are indeed confused about where I stand on this issue. As it frequently happens, the vote on the procedural motion becomes a proxy for how a senator would have voted on the bill. However, that assumption does not hold true for me in the case of this gas tax proposal. I would have reluctantly voted against it.

While I respect Senator LOTT for his effort at providing relief for truckers, farmers, landscapers, salesmen, and everyone else who depends on his or her vehicle, I have an equal concern for the quality of the highways they drive on.

It is unclear to me that the loss of revenue that would have resulted from passing this legislation could have been immediately made up from other programs, thus necessary highway construction and repair projects in Utah and around the nation could have been delayed.

Moreover, I believe that there are other measures we can find should take to address the issue of high gas prices. In the long-term, we should encourage development of alternative fuels vehicles. Toward this end, Senator JEFFORDS and I will be introducing legislation later this month that will provide strong tax incentives for the development and purchase of such vehicles, along with the alternative fuel they use.

I also believe that there are other tax relief initiatives that will have greater positive impact for American families, and I will continue to press hard for these proposals.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, American consumers are feeling the impact of high oil prices. Obviously, the increase is noticeable at the gas pump, but it also is being felt in less visible ways through increases in the cost of goods and services as airline prices and shipping costs escalate. I have stated, in no uncertain terms, that I consider responsibility for the current situation largely to lie at the feet of the Clinton-Gore Administration. Thanks to nearly eight years of their short-sighted policies, we are increasingly dependent on foreign oil. To make matters worse, not only does the Clinton-Gore Administration not have any clear plan to reduce our dependence on foreign oil, they actually appear to be moving in the opposite direction, seeming at every turn making it more difficult to develop domestic energy sources, whether it be gasoline, petroleum products, coal, oil, or hydropower.

As it is largely through the bungling efforts of the current Administration that we are in this situation, I believe it is appropriate that the U.S. Senate counterbalance their efforts with some modest relief. A suspension of the 4.3-cent federal fuel excise tax, imposed in the early days of the Clinton Gore administration, should provide the short term relief consumers deserve.

As Congress addresses these issues, however, we must seek a solution that not only attacks this problem from the perspective of energy supply, but also energy use. A key aspect of any debate on this subject must focus on motor vehicle fuel consumption. The United States currently uses about 17 million barrels of oil per day to run cars and trucks. Thanks to the existence of Corporate Average Fuel Economy, or CAFE, standards, three million barrels of oil are conserved each day. Despite the clear success of CAFE standards, however, Congress has prevented the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA) from even considering whether we can do better, particularly in relation to the fuel efficiency standards of lights trucks, which haven't been significantly increased in ten years.

Many constituents and colleagues are often surprised to learn of my advocacy for CAFE standards. My motivation is simple, and is based on the success of the original CAFE statute. I feel that NHTSA should at least be allowed to study whether an additional increasing CAFE standards is an appropriate action. As you may know, light truck standards have not had a significant increase in the last ten years. Light trucks are regulated separately from cars and are only required to get 20.7 mpg on fleet average as opposed to 27.5 for cars. In 1983, the average fuel economy of light trucks was already 20.7 mpg. Since 1983 it has dropped .3 mpg to 20.4. This is hardly a technological breakthrough.

I am not swayed by doomsday predictions from automakers who claim they will be forced to manufacture fleets of subcompact cars. These are the same arguments that were used during the original debate in 1974. One only needs to examine the possible options available to consumers today to disprove this theory. When consumers can purchase SUVs as large as the Chevy Suburban or Ford Excursion, it is hard to argue that consumer choice has been compromised. I have complete faith in American automobile manufacturers that they can continue to produce fuel efficient vehicles that are the envy of the world.

Therefore, it was with great interest that I listened to Energy Secretary Bill Richardson testify before the Interior Subcommittee this morning on the Clinton Administration's multi-faceted plan to address high gasoline prices. This testimony focused on a lengthy discussion of the results of last month's diplomatic efforts. When pressed on the Administration's plan to decrease this country's dependence on foreign oil sources, Secretary Richardson went on to tout his proposals to improve alternative fuel options and fuel efficiency. He suggested tax incentives and credits for U.S. oil producers, fuel efficient vehicle production, and alternative fuel development. Unfortunately, there was no mention of CAFE standards.

In response to this omission, I had to ask why this Administration has failed to actively support new fuel efficiency standards. When I pressed Secretary Richardson to commit to making CAFE standards a centerpiece of the Clinton-Gore Administration's effort to address the current fuel shortage and long-term foreign oil dependency of this country, he ducked the question and told me he wished the EPA Administrator was available to answer.

I am perplexed by this response. Obviously, U.S. auto manufacturers have demonstrated they are more than up to the challenge of producing more fuel efficient light trucks and SUVs. In fact, Ford Motor Company just announced plans to start selling within three years a hybrid gas-and-electric-powered SUV that gets about 40 miles per gallon.

Therefore, I fail to understand why the Clinton-Gore Administration can't make simply studying a possible increase in CAFE standards a top priority in this debate. I challenge the White House to embrace this common sense approach, which is certainly preferable to the groveling diplomacy it engaged in just weeks ago.

ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES ACT

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about the Adoption Opportunities Act which would amend the current adoption tax credit so it does what it was originally intended to do, and that is to help all kinds of families in their efforts to adopt all kinds of wonderful children.

I would like to begin my remarks this morning by introducing you and my colleagues to someone very special. This beautiful little girl's name is Serina Anglin. Serina was born, as you can see here, prematurely and severely addicted to drugs. Her mother was a 15-year-old girl who herself had been abandoned in a crack house by her drug-addicted mother.

At birth, doctors were all but certain Serena would not survive. When she was just a few months old, a neurologist described her in the following way:

> In summary, Serina is a severely manifold handicapped child whose significant defects are in social, adaptive, affective, and cognitive development.
> Serina has cerebral palsy as well as other multiple problems including crack cocaine prenatal addiction, history of herpes and encephalitis, and seizure disorders including epilepsy. . . . Her ability to walk is very uncertain. I think she will fall into the moderate to severe range of retardation.

However, through the grace of God, Serina came into the home of a wonderful couple, Hal and Patty Anglin, of Wisconsin, who are now her adoptive parents. I want to show you a current picture of Serina. Through their love and determination, Serina has not only survived but her progress has simply amazed medical experts.

Today, Serina is a remarkable child. She still has some small seizures, but her larger seizures are all but gone. She not only can walk, she recently learned to ride a bike. Each day she is becoming more and more active. She is true and living proof that the love of a family, growing up in a nurturing environment, can make what was deemed impossible possible.

This is not to say this miracle came easily. In the beginning, Serina's care required that she go to the doctor over 16 times a month. For the first year of her life, her adoptive mother, Patty, carried her in a tummy sack to simulate the safety and warmth she had been deprived in the womb. She had to be taught how to breathe and swallow. She has had several surgeries on her leg which was damaged as a result of prenatal drug exposure.

I tell this story today because I cannot think of a better way to show my colleagues why the current tax credit needs to be changed. Serina was born to a mother who was a ward of the State. So upon her birth, she was immediately placed in foster care, as I explained. As such, when the Anglins, who were her foster care parents, went through the formal adoption process, the process of adoption cost them almost nothing.

Therefore, under our current definition of qualified adoption expenses, they were not eligible to receive one single dime of the $5,000 tax credit that is supposedly available under current law. Had Serina, this beautiful little girl, been a healthy infant voluntarily given up and adopted privately or through one of our many able agencies, the Anglins would have been eligible to claim the $5,000 tax credit. I am sure my colleagues will agree this was not our intention when we passed the adoption tax credit.

In the case of children in foster care with special needs, what gives many parents pause is that everyday care of these children can be both physically and financially draining. I cannot tell you how many foster parents tell me the only thing standing in the way of their formally adopting foster care children is the worry that their personal resources will be inadequate to properly care for them. Through a properly drafted and funded adoption tax credit, we can be the partners with these prospective parents whose hearts are ready to take on this responsibility.

It is a small step in the right direction but a very important step. A tax credit for special needs children logically should assist parents, such as the Anglins, with the everyday long-term costs of raising a child with special needs and should not be limited to the expenses of the ''act of adoption'' itself. The current definition is limited to ''qualified adoption expenses.'' That is too narrow to reach children such as Serina who need our help the most.

The Adoption Opportunities Act, which we introduce today, proposes to fix this dilemma. It allows a straightforward $10,000 tax credit for families who adopt a child with special needs. The new tax credit for special needs children will not require the parents to submit verification of their expenses, nor will the amount be dependent upon the cost of adoption itself.

I know many of us have argued for years about simplifying the Tax Code. I am hard pressed to imagine a way that would be more simple than the one Senator CRAIG and I are proposing, for all a parent has to do is simply attach a certificate of adoption for any special needs child to their tax return and they will get, under this bill, a $10,000 credit that can be carried forward for 5 years. It is that simple.

Another problem lies in the fact that the current tax credit for nonspecial needs children is due to sunset in December of 2001. Hoping to ensure the credit was well designed and necessary, the drafters of the original bill agreed to reevaluate it after 5 years. We have done that and have included that in our bill. It permanently extends the $5,000 tax credit for adoption and almost doubles the adoption tax credit for special needs.

Because of this assistance, many families, who might not otherwise have been financially able to do so, have been able to build a family through adoption. Last week, in fact, I had the great honor of attending a ceremony when 17 children from 14 different countries became citizens of the United States. All of these children were brought here to be adopted into loving and wonderful homes of Americans from all parts of our country.

At that gathering, one of the mothers who had adopted two children came up to me and said: Senator, please let them know in Congress how much we appreciate the adoption tax credit. It made all the difference to me and my husband as we decided to adopt our second child.

So we know that tax credit works. We know it has a positive impact, and part of our bill today extends that permanently so families can count on it.

With the cost of adoption still on the rise, this tax credit is an important factor, as I have mentioned. It has been estimated that adoptions can range anywhere from $10,000 to $20,000, whether done privately or through an agency domestically or internationally.

Another figure to keep in mind is one that was released recently by a national adoptive parent organization. They estimate that using specialized foster or adoptive parents instead of what we do now, which is congregate care facilities for drug-exposed children, could save—and I believe the Senator from Texas, Mr. GRAMM, will be interested in this as he continues to fight for ways the Federal Government can save our money—they estimate we can save as much as $550 million a year by relying on adoptive parents instead of keeping many of these children in the ''system,'' for which the taxpayers pay. Anything we can do to encourage adoption will not only be the right thing, the moral thing, the wonderful thing, and the family values thing to do, but it is smart for the taxpayers of the United States.

In addition, in case people are interested, there are more than 100,000 children in this country today waiting to be adopted—children who have had termination with their biological parents. They are waiting for someone to claim them as their own and to be adopted. There are 550,000 children in foster care. About 450,000 of those are in the process of either being returned to their families or they, too, can be eligible for adoption. Clearly, there is a need to promote adoption in this country that works for the benefit of birth parents, adoptive parents, and the children.

Finally, for parents to raise a child in their home, the estimates for a middle-class family are about $140,000. That is not including college tuition or vocational education. That is just an estimate. The least we can do is help in a small way with a $5,000 or $10,000 tax credit to encourage families to be their partner in this adoption effort.

I believe not only does it simplify the Tax Code, but there is a great need, and the need has been demonstrated. The results have been terrific. We have had testimony after testimony about how important the current system has been, so anything we can do to improve it I am sure will be welcomed by so many. It is a step in the right direction.

I close by saying, as we debate which tax credits to pursue, which are worthy, this adoption tax credit should be on the top of every list. We need to continue to be bold enough to take these steps because every time we do, children such as Serina, for whom people have given up hope, have found families on which to rely and with whom to grow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. I commend our colleague from Louisiana. Today we have 130 million people who work outside the home and earn income. We have some 260 million Americans. About 30 million of them get some form of public assistance. You might ask yourself: Who takes care of the other 100 million Americans? They are taken care of by families. And the driving force is love.

So not only is the distinguished Senator from Louisiana talking about saving money, but what adoptive parents will add to the equation is love and care. The whole world benefits from it. So I commend her.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. I, too, thank the Senator from Louisiana for her leadership on this issue. We are fortunate enough to work together on this marvelous issue of adoption, chairing the adoption coalition here on the Senate side.

Both Senator LANDRIEU and I this week have helped host two delightful young ladies who are on the hill, Miss USA and Miss Teen USA, both adopted, both coming from adoptive families. They were in my office this morning speaking about the wonderful families they were allowed to be a part of who have granted them all of this charm and talent that can only come from a loving environment, that has allowed them to become national leaders, as they now are, as Miss USA and Miss Teen USA.

I say thank you to the Senator for her leadership on this issue. It is critically important to America and America's families.

PROJECT EXILE: THE SAFE STREETS AND NEIGHBORHOODS ACT OF 2000

Mr. SANTORUM. Mr. President, today, I rise in support of S. 2390, ''Project Exile: The Safe Streets and Neighborhoods Act of 2000'', which establishes a grant program to provide incentives for states to enact mandatory minimum sentences for certain firearms offenses. I commend Senator DEWINE for his leadership and appreciate the opportunity to join with him and other colleagues working together on this important legislation. The time has come to restore our commitment to aggressively prosecuting gun crimes around this country. In states and cities around the country where aggressive prosecution of gun crimes is coupled with tough prison sentences, violent crime has gone down. Tough law enforcement saves lives.

This legislation provides $100 million of additional resources over five years as incentives for efforts like Project Exile. To qualify for the grant program, states must have a mandatory minimum of 5 years without parole for convictions of violent crimes and serious drug trafficking offenses where a firearm is used during or in relation to the crime. In the alternative, the state can have a federal prosecution agreement which would refer those arrested for federal prosecution of the alleged gun crime in a collaborative effort between law enforcement.

Project Exile started in Richmond, Virginia as an attempt to reduce violent crime by aggressive enforcement of gun laws and improved law enforcement coordination. Since the program began in 1997, violent crimes involving handguns have decreased 65 percent and overall crime has been reduced by 35 percent. 385 guns were taken off of the street. In 1999, Project Exile was adopted statewide in Virginia. It has given prosecutors the ability to choose within which courts they will try offenders and created tougher penalties for people committing crimes with guns.

I have also worked to help expand this approach to Philadelphia in 1999, where ''Operation Cease Fire'' also adopts a zero tolerance policy for federal gun crimes. Project Exile has already proven that present laws can work if enforced properly. Federal, state, and local law enforcement and prosecutors work side by side to expedite prosecution of every federal firearms violation. In 1999, over 200 federal gun-related indictments were issued in Philadelphia and the surrounding counties. This is a 70 percent increase in indictments in only one year.

The bill authorizes $10 million in Fiscal Year (FY) 2001, $15 million in FY02, $20 million in FY03, $25 million in FY04, and $30 million in FY05. States must provide at least a 10 percent match and must also at least maintain current funding levels to qualify. Funds can be used for public awareness campaigns, law enforcement agencies, prosecutors, courts, probation and correctional officers, case management, coordination of criminal history records, and the juvenile justice system. Representative BILL MCCOLLUM introduced similar legislation in the House of Representatives as H.R. 4051. This legislation passed the House yesterday by a 358–60 vote margin.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this important initiative to collaborate with local efforts to prosecute and prevent the criminal use of guns in our schools and neighborhoods.

RAPE AND SEXUAL TORTURE IN SIERRA LEONE

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, in all too many places and in all too many conflicts in recent years we have witnessed the use of rape and sexual torture as instruments of war. I am sad to say, some incidence of rape has always accompanied war and turmoil in human history, but the record of the past few years, with the use of organized, systematic campaigns of rape to terrorize civilian populations, suggests a new chapter in the barbarity of human history has been opened.

It was disturbing to learn there are serious and credible allegations that rebel forces used systematic rape as an instrument of terror in the eight-year civil war in Sierra Leone.

While statistics are not yet available, there is clear and credible evidence that thousands of girls and women, ranging from ages 5 to 75, were abducted during the civil war and gang raped. Many were used as sex slaves and forced labor. And it is possible many are still being held captive, subject to the depravations of their inhuman captors.

This horrific story was detailed in an article in yesterday's Washington Post. I ask unanimous consent to have the article, entitled ''A War Against Women'' from the April 11, 2000, Washington Post printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following my remarks.

The civilized world must send a strong, unambiguous message that rape and sexual torture are not acceptable under any circumstances and will not be tolerated. The United States must be at the forefront of efforts to help the Government of Sierra Leone bring to justice those responsible for the systematic rape and sexual torture that took place during the civil war.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 11, 2000]

A WAR AGAINST WOMEN—SIERRA LEONE REBELS PRACTICED SYSTEMATIC SEXUAL TERROR

(By Douglas Farah)

BLAMA CAMP, SIERRA LEONE—The women slip one at a time into a bamboo hut in this displaced persons camp, and most begin to cry quietly as they tell of being gang-raped and held as sex slaves by rebels who had sought to overthrow the government of Sierra Leone.

One 25-year-old woman said she had delivered a still-born baby the day before rebels of the Revolutionary United Front attacked her village in 1998. She was unable to flee with most of the other villagers, and five rebels took turns raping her, she said. When her husband tried to intervene, they killed him.

''I thought at first I was dealing with human beings, so I said I was sad and confused because I had just delivered a dead baby, I was bloody and weak,'' she said between sobs. ''But they were not human beings. After they left I gave up, and I wanted to die. I had no reason to live anymore.''

Human rights workers says the woman, who was rescued by a patrol of government troops, is one of thousands who were raped by insurgent forces and other armed gangs during the nation's eight-year civil war. While statistics are not yet available, rights workers said the rebels' rape campaign was as widespread and systematic as similar assaults in the 1992–1995 Bosnian war but has received far less attention.

Unlike at least some of the perpetrators in Bosnia, those responsible here likely will never be tried because of a blanket amnesty that was part of the accord that ended the conflict last July. Even more worrisome, U.N. officials and government officials say, is that the rebels may still hold thousands of women in remote strongholds despite the fact that the peace accord required them to free all captive civilians.

''The [rebels] perpetrated systematic, organized and widespread sexual violence against girls and women,'' the New York-based group Human Rights Watch said in a recent report. ''The rebels planned and launched operations in which they rounded up girls and women, brought them to rebel command centers and then subjected them to individual and gang rape. Young girls under 17, and particularly those deemed to be virgins were specifically targeted. While some were released or managed to escape, hundreds continue to be held in sexual slavery after being 'married' to rebel combatants.''

Rose Luz, a physician with the International Rescue Committee, said that what is most shocking about the hundreds of rape cases she is documenting is the ages of the victims. Most were under 14 or over 45—many of whom were too slow or too infirm to flee. Luz said the youngest victim documented so far was 5; the oldest was 75.

''It is the ones who could not get away,'' Luz said. ''They raped whomever they stumbled across.''

With the consent of the women involved, Rescue Committee officials arranged for a reporter to be present during some interviews. It was agreed that no names would be used or photographs taken. The interviews were conducted at this camp—about 160 miles southeast of the capital, Freetown—which shelters 22,500 people who were driven from their homes in eastern Sierra Leone by insurgent forces.

If the rebels considered a woman attractive or physically fit enough to work, she would likely be taken along with them—not just to be a sex slave, but a domestic servant as well, Luz and other aid workers said. Often, they said, a captive woman would try to attach herself to one leader to avoid repeated gang rape. In a culture in which rape victims are often ostracized, such wholesale assaults were effective not only in spreading terror, but in breaking apart communities, social workers said.

The first victims began telling their stories to the Rescue Committee when the aid group started reproductive health classes here several months ago, said counselor Dolly Williams. Last month, in an effort to refer the women for urgently needed medical attention and help them cope with their shame and humiliation, the Rescue Committee began documenting their stories. As word of the program spread, hundreds of women have come forward, waiting their turn patiently while Williams and Luz record the accounts of other victims.

''Child and women abductees and victims of gender violence are far too numerous, and we do not yet even have a clear picture as to how many there really are,'' said U.S. Ambassador Joseph H. Melrose Jr., who is trying to arrange for U.S. funds to help the victims. ''What is clear is that these victims and their injuries, both physical and psychological, must not be ignored. If these injuries do not heal, they will have implications for future generations of Sierra Leoneans and the success of the peace process.''

Williams said the rate of sexually transmitted diseases such as syphilis and gonorrhea among the women is extremely high, a reflection of the 92 percent infection rate found among demobilized rebels. Neither the combatants nor the women are tested for AIDS or HIV infection because the cost is too great and there are no resources to treat anyone who tests positive.

The first woman to arrive at the palm-thatched interview room one day last week was a 60-year-old who came to tell how she was grabbed in her village by a group of raiders because she was unable to outrun them. When they could not find any other women, she said, they raped her.

''I begged them not to,'' she said. I told them I was old. I could be their grandmother,'' but they did not listen; they just laughed at me. Afterward they let me go because I was old and useless. Now I have pain when I urinate. I have sores; I can't sleep.''

A 35-year-old woman said she had been abducted and raped by four rebels in 1997. When they had finished, she said, they took her to their commander, who decided to keep her. She finally escaped three years later, during a firefight between the rebel unit and government troops.

''I can't have a man again,'' she told the interviewer. ''I have lost my life.''

GUN VIOLENCE

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 2390 which Senator DEWINE introduced yesterday. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation. I know that, unlike additional infringements on the constitutional rights of law-abiding Americans, this bill will effectively reduce gun violence and save lives.

Like many of my colleagues, I am extremely concerned about gun violence. In my home state of Arkansas, there are several cities which have long been plagued by extraordinarily high levels of violence and murder, largely fueled by illegal guns, gangs, and drug trafficking. According to the 1998 Uniform Crime Reports, Little Rock, with a population of 176,377, North Little Rock with a population of 60,619, and Pine Bluff, with a population of 54,062, had 25, 8, and 17 murders respectively. The rate of murder per 100,000 inhabitants in North Little Rock-Little Rock was 10.3 and it was 33.8 in Pine Bluff and significantly exceeded the national rate of 6.3 murders per 100,000 inhabitants. Nonetheless, I have received literally thousands of letters from Arkansas asking me not to support additional gun control measures, but rather to simply enforce the laws already in effect.

My constituents are right. We do not need more gun laws. We just need to enforce those already on the books. The facts show that the Clinton Administration has not done this; from 1992 to 1998 prosecutions of defendants who use a firearm in connection with a felony have decreased nearly 50 percent, from 7,045 to approximately 3,800. In addition, while more than 500,000 convicted felons and other prohibited purchasers have been prevented from purchasing firearms from federally, licensed firearms dealers under the Brady Handgun Violence Prevent Act, only 200 of these persons have been referred to the United States Department of Justice for prosecution. I have carefully studied the Project Exile program in Richmond, Virginia and am convinced that it saves lives. Before Project Exile was implemented, Richmond was one of the nation's murder capitals, and Project Exile resulted in a 40 percent reduction in the number of murders committed with firearms. That is why for the past several months, I have been working to implement Arkansas Exile. By supporting S. 2390, I hope to obtain the additional funding necessary to allow Arkansas and other states to implement a program proven to reduce gun violence.

Finally, I support S. 2390 because it is the right approach. The President and many of my Senate colleagues condemn firearms, which are inanimate objects, and the gun industry while ignoring and working to overturn the well-established legal principle and a third-party's criminal act is an unforeseeable event for which a merchant may not be held liable. I am saddened and alarmed that the President and cities throughout the nation are using the vast resources for their governments to force the gun industry to take responsibility for the acts of criminals, and I am determined to do all I can do that the criminals, not the gun industry and law-abiding Americans, are held responsible for gun violence.

WRONGFUL IMPRISONMENT OF 13 IRANIAN JEWS

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I rise today to speak on behalf of the thirteen Iranian Jews wrongfully imprisoned and facing trial in Iran. I join with concerned people of all faiths around the nation, and the world, in calling for the observation of fundamental human rights and the ultimate goal of freedom for these innocent people.

Iran has recently taken some positive steps away from political and religious repression toward the acceptance of freedom, justice, and democracy. Reforms, however, have been marred by a disheartening lack of concern for the human rights of religious minorities in Iran. Throughout my life, I have been committed to furthering fundamental human rights, especially religious freedom, for both Americans and people throughout the world. Therefore, I was deeply concerned by the February 1999 arrest of thirteen Iranian Jews informally accused of spying for Israel and the United States. Today, ten of the thirteen are still in jail awaiting trial, while the other three have been released on bail. This situation is especially troubling because these innocent community and religious leaders could face the death penalty if convicted.

Mr. President, this entire legal ordeal has been filled with Iranian Constitutional violations and shrouded in secrecy. For instance, the thirteen have never been formally charged or indicted. This should be the first step in any legal proceeding, but it now appears almost certain the defendants will not know the charges they face until the trial begins. As a former Attorney General of Missouri, I fully appreciate what a daunting, if not impossible, task it would be to build a credible defense without knowing the charges.

Additionally, although it appears the Iranian government might have recently reversed its previous position and agreed to allow the thirteen to choose their own legal counsel, the judge in the case has refused access to the defendants by their chosen attorneys. Beyond the seriously limiting results of this decision, the chosen attorneys cannot officially become the defendant's counsel until the necessary legal documents are signed, which will not occur until the attorneys and defendants meet. The courts have created one of the worst "Catch-22s" I have seen.

It also troubles me that the trial will be conducted in secrecy. After repeated requests by international observers and the press, the decision to keep the trial secret has been affirmed by the courts. For these obvious reasons, I believe it likely that the thirteen will not receive a fair and impartial trial.

The members of the Jewish Iranian community, who out of respect and fear of the Islamic majority rarely speak out in public, have even made an uncharacteristic plea to the Iranian government. I join with this community in asking for all defendants in Iran, regardless of religion or standing, to have access to legal counsel of their own choosing, and to be afforded the requirements of Iranian law for fair and open trials. In addition, I urge the Iranian government to grant permission for the ten jailed Iranian Jewish defendants to go home on furlough for Passover, which begins on the evening of April 19th, if the proceedings have not yet been completed.

Mr. President, I rise today in support of the basic principles of human rights and religious freedom. The Iranian government must do the right thing and provide these defendants their fundamental rights, and the International Community must use all available pressure and diplomatic avenues to influence them to do so. And the United States Government should demonstrate real leadership by diligently working to see the ultimate release of these thirteen Jewish Iranian defendants.

THE VERY BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, at the close of business yesterday, Tuesday, April 11, 2000, the Federal debt stood at $5,763,650,722,859.87 (Five trillion, seven hundred sixty-three billion, six hundred fifty million, seven hundred twenty-two thousand, eight hundred fifty-nine dollars and eighty-seven cents).

Five years ago, April 11, 1995, the Federal debt stood at $4,871,386,000,000 (Four trillion, eight hundred seventy-one billion, three hundred eighty-six million).

Ten years ago, April 11, 1990, the Federal debt stood at $3,084,969,000,000 (Three trillion, eighty-four billion, nine hundred sixty-nine million).

Fifteen years ago, April 11, 1985, the Federal debt stood at $1,730,073,000,000 (One trillion, seven hundred thirty billion, seventy-three million).

Twenty-five years ago, April 11, 1975, the Federal debt stood at $511,156,000,000 (Five hundred eleven billion, one hundred fifty-six million) which reflects a debt increase of more than $5 trillion—$5,252,494,722,859.87 (Five trillion, two hundred fifty-two billion, four hundred ninety-four million, seven hundred twenty-two thousand, eight hundred fifty-nine dollars and eighty-seven cents) during the past 25 years.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

COMMEMORATION OF 30TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE COUNSELING CENTER OF MILWAUKEE, INC.

• Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, I rise today to commend an organization that has provided high quality mental health, residential, case management, prevention, treatment and outreach services to adults, youth and families in the Greater Milwaukee area for thirty years. This organization is the Counseling Center of Milwaukee, Inc.

The Counseling Center of Milwaukee came from humble beginnings. Established in 1970 in the basement of Milwaukee's St. Mary's Hospital, it merged with the organization Pathfinders for Runaways in 1971. The Center has since grown into a $2.3 million agency with 100 paid and volunteer staff.

In working to fulfill its vision statement of putting more people in charge of their lives, connecting to others and contributing to their communities, the Counseling Center of Milwaukee provides both individual and family services including education, counseling, providing emergency shelter and mentoring.

The Counseling Center serves a variety of clients, most of whom are low income and most from the city of Milwaukee. The Counseling Center has always been a place where clients could turn when they had nowhere else to go. Through public and private funding, the Counseling Center provides service to anyone in need, regardless of their ability to pay. This includes more than 7,000 citizens in the Greater Milwaukee area served in 1999.

I am proud to join in celebrating the 30th anniversary of the Counseling Center of Milwaukee. I thank the dedicated employees and volunteers of the Center for their significant contributions to the mental health of the citizens of my state, and wish them a prosperous future.●

NATIONAL LIBRARY WEEK

● Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize National Library Week and pay tribute to those dedicated individuals who, through their passion for books and learning, make our libraries places of great discovery.

If a child wants to know everything there is to know about space, you could send them up there in a rocket ship. If they're interested in tornadoes, you could send them out after one with a crew of storm chasers. If they'd like to meet George Washington, you could even send them back in time. You could—if you just knew how.

Or, you could send them to the library instead.

National Library Week is April 9–15, and there's no better place than our libraries for bringing the world and the events that shape it—past and present—to life. Fortunately, a child doesn't need any special gadgets to experience all the library has to offer; they just need a library card.

As Congress debates important issues like the federal budget and how to save Social Security, the library is also an excellent place for young people to learn more about government and what's happening in Washington. And of course, the librarians are always there to help.

On the occasion of National Library Week, I urge all Americans to check out a book—and ''check out'' all the riches their local library has to offer.●

NATIONAL VOLUNTEER WEEK

● Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, boxer Muhammad Ali once said, ''Service to others is the rent you pay for your room here on earth.'' Minnesota's volunteers exemplify that philosophy, and during National Volunteer Week, April 9–15, we celebrate their passion for their communities.

National Volunteer Week offers an opportunity to salute the millions of dedicated men, women, and young people for their efforts and their commitment to serve. Volunteers are one of this nation's most valuable resources, making this year's Volunteer Week theme—''Celebrate Volunteers!''—very appropriate.

Minnesotans can be proud that our state has one of the highest rates of volunteerism in the nation. While 56 percent of Americans volunteer nationally, two-thirds of all Minnesotans give back to their communities through volunteering. According to state officials, this show of strength returns $6.5 billion a year in donated hours to Minnesota communities.

Thanks to the many Minnesota volunteers who help make our communities better, more compassionate places to live. For those who have yet to discover the joy that comes from serving others, I invite them to get involved—and remember the words of Henry David Thoreau: ''One is not born into the world to do everything but to do something.'' Volunteering is truly your opportunity to do something.●

IN MEMORY OF LEE PETTY

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I rise today to remember auto racing's Lee Petty, who died last week at the age of 86. A pioneer of the sport, he claimed 55 titles, including the inaugural Daytona 500 in 1959, before a 1961 collision ended his competitive career. His son Richard carried the torch with style, collecting seven Winston Cup trophies and establishing a fan base Lee Petty could have only dreamed of back in the late 1940s when he was scorching North Carolina dirt tracks. But it doesn't end there. Lee's grandson, Kyle, a good friend of mine, continues to find success on the NASCAR circuit and Lee's 17-year-old great-grandson, Adam, recently made his NASCAR debut.

The name Petty has become synonymous with racing, and for good reason. Lee Petty had the foresight to invest in a sport with little pedigree but a heaping portion of American guts and glory. He understood that a driver's personality was often as powerful as the car he drove, and spectators would pay good money to go along for the ride. His empire, Petty Enterprises, bears witness to the clarity of that vision, having produced 271 race winners and 10 NASCAR champions.

Despite great success, Lee Petty never acted like a superstar. He lived with his wife, Elizabeth, in the same modest house where they had raised their children. Perhaps humbleness, and a willingness to brave the hot sun for hours to sign autographs, will prove to be Lee Petty's greatest contribution to American sports. An editorial in Charleston, SC's daily newspaper, the Post and Courier, concludes: ''In a day where money seems to be the overriding concern of so many athletes, Lee Petty was a reminder of what is important in the sporting world—and why folks gravitate toward the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing. Lee Petty's grown-up NASCAR has never forgotten that a professional sport should be family- and fan-oriented.'' The patriarch of one of professional sports' most celebrated families, Lee Petty has left a legacy that will linger over American racetracks for generations to come.●

COMMENTS ON VIETNAM

● Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, we have all read a lot on Vietnam, but nothing more thoughtful than the brief comments by Charleston, S.C.'s Charles T. ''Bud'' Ferillo, Jr. in the College of Charleston magazine, ''The Cistern.'' Mr. Ferillo, a 1972 graduate of the college, served in Vietnam. I ask that his comments be printed in the RECORD.

The comments follow:

PERSPECTIVES

(By Charles T. (Bud) Ferillo, Jr.)

Well before I was drafted, I viewed America's involvement in Vietnam a political mistake at home, a foreign policy of misjudgment in Southeast Asia and a personal tragedy for the tens of thousands of Vietnamese and Americans who paid the price for the misadventure.

I had lost my college deferment in 1966 and received my ''Greetings from the President of the United States'' draft letter in early 1967. I decided to do my best and serve even though I thought our policies in Vietnam were wrong. A lot of awful experiences in the war would follow that decision but not one day of regret.

In Vietnam you joined your unit one soldier at a time, not in groups that trained together back home or from old time group enlistments. My unit was Company C, 1st Battalion, 22nd Infantry, 4th Infantry Division. That night in July 1968 when I joined Charlie Company as an incoming sergeant E–5, I was ordered to take out a night patrol. I was exhausted from days of travel and processing but I didn't sleep a wink all night, and never solidly for the rest of the year I was there.

Three days later, on patrol in a cornfield, my radio operator who was walking just behind me was shot through the neck by a sniper. I later lost another radio operator who was shot while clinging perilously to rungs of a hastily departing helicopter. If he had been able to survive his wounds, he would never have survived the fall from the chopper into the trees below. We found his body three days later.

Discipline was strongly enforced in our division. No intentional killing of civilians or torture of POWs was tolerated. After several reprimands I had one soldier in my company court-martialed for cutting off the ears of dead North Vietnamese soldiers and mailing them home to his girlfriend.

The final tragedy for me was that the man I recommended to succeed me as squad leader in Charlie Company was killed as he walked in the squad leader position in the field the day after I left for home. It is his name I look for first on the wall in Washington when I visit it.

There were some light moments, too. I was able to keep a pet monkey in my bunker for several weeks until he learned to pull the pins on hand grenades and kick them off the mountainside to explode below.

My war experiences only served to support my initial doubts about our involvement.

Once when a convoy of U.S. Army and South Vietnamese Army units that I was traveling with on Highway 1 was ambushed by NVA regulars, we American soldiers jumped off our trucks facing the enemy and returned fire. The South Vietnamese soldiers jumped off the other side of the trucks and ate lunch. Whose war was it?

I recall numerous incidents when U.S. Army officers instructed us to count each body part from a NVA soldier as one casualty so as to swell the total body count reported. Similarly, we noted that some known U.S. casualties were listed long after the deaths in Stars and Stripes, the weekly military newspaper. These small deceits, multiplied across the country and if practiced widely, could have contributed to an inaccurate picture of battlefield situations. And it would have been done purposefully.

What would I want future generations to know about the nation's experience in Vietnam?

First, that governments of men can and do make huge mistakes. In understanding political situations in other cultures, in intelligence gathering and interpretation, and that an overzealous military can and will cover up their miscalculations of enemy strength, exaggerate U.S. military effectiveness and minimize cost projections and outcomes. Once committed, reversals of policy are slow in our system of government and often come too late for too many in harm's way.

Second, I would urge future generations to get informed and involved in public affairs as a matter of civic duty and personal interest to guard against poor political leadership that can get the country in deep trouble because of political ideology, showmanship or the pursuit of short-term partisan advantage over the national interest. Not only is eternal vigilance the price of liberty in Jefferson's phrase, but it is also the price of intelligent foreign policy and peace in the world.

Third, I would want those who look back at what happened in Vietnam to recall that it was not victories in combat by soldiers and airmen that got us out of there. No, it was not that at all. It was the courage and aggressiveness of people of all ages here at home who protested in the streets that finally turned the political tide in this country against the war. Their courage and tenacity forced a reversal of policy in Washington as time and events revealed military failures and unacceptable losses.

Finally, I would not want my children or anyone's children to ever know the details of what war looks like up close. It is very gruesome and terrifying for the safe and the wounded and all those who survive are burdened with the awfulness for their lifetimes. As time passes, the joy and fullness of life can repair the damage and soften its impact for those whose lives lead in healthy directions. For those who returned to dysfunctional families, lack of schooling, joblessness, illness, they are the walking wounded of Vietnam who cannot ever come home.

I would want my children to know that I tried to do my duty when my country called even when I disagreed deeply with the policies and conduct of the war in which we were engaged. I would want them to know I felt no regrets or ill feelings toward those who chose not to serve; those decisions of conscience required a certain kind of courage as well as any I saw in the war. Lastly, I would want my children to work for a country that is a more thoughtful, careful and respectful force in a world of divergent cultures, one that expends its resources in war only when our national security interests are genuinely at stake.●

MR. JACK WILCOX INDUCTED INTO PLYMOUTH HALL OF FAME

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on April 18, 2000, the Kiwanis Club of Plymouth, Michigan, with the assistance of the Plymouth Community Chamber of Commerce, the District Library, the Plymouth Historical Society, and the City of Plymouth, will honor three men whose commitment to the community has earned them a place in the Plymouth Hall of Fame. These men are being recognized because over the years their dedication and many efforts have played a large role in making Plymouth the wonderful town that it is today. With this having been said, I rise today in honor of Mr. James Jabara, Mr. James B. McKeon, and Mr. Jack Wilcox, who are rightfully taking their place among the ''Builders of Plymouth.''

A graduate of Plymouth High School and the University of Michigan, Mr. Wilcox is a retired U.S. Navy captain. He has served the community of Plymouth in many, and varied, ways. A semi-professional actor, he is a charter member of the Plymouth Theater Guild. He is a past president of the Plymouth Historical Society, as well as a lifetime member of this organization. He has served as City Commissioner, and helped to organize the Plymouth Council on Aging and the Plymouth Economic Development Corporation. Mr. Wilcox is a trustee of Riverside Cemetery, a member of the Munipal Tree Board, and a member of the Block Grant Citizen's Advisory Commission. In addition, Mr. Wilcox is the host of the local cable television show ''Profiles in Plymouth.''

Mr. President, I applaud Mr. Wilcox for his many efforts to better the quality of life for every resident of Plymouth, Michigan. His dedication to the town over the years is truly admirable, and I am glad that the Kiwanis Club has taken this opportunity to recognize his many contributions. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate Mr. Wilcox on his induction into the Plymouth Hall of Fame.●

MR. JAMES B. McKEON INDUCTED INTO PLYMOUTH HALL OF FAME

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on April 18, 2000, the Kiwanis Club of Plymouth, Michigan, with the assistance of the Plymouth Community Chamber of Commerce, the District Library, the Plymouth Historical Society, and the City of Plymouth, will honor three men whose commitment to that community has earned them a place in the Plymouth Hall of Fame. These men are being recognized because over the years their dedication and many efforts have played a large role in making Plymouth the wonderful town that it is today. With this having been said, I rise today in honor of Mr. James Jabara, Mr. James B. McKeon, and Mr. Jack Wilcox, who are rightfully taking their place among the ''Builders of Plymouth.''

Mr. McKeon came to Plymouth after graduating from a school that I myself am quite familiar with, Michigan State University. He has served Plymouth both as City Commissioner and as Mayor. He has been president of the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce, and was named Volunteer of the Year by that organization. Mr. McKeon is chairman of the Downtown Development Authority, and sits on the Board of Directors of Growth Works and the New Morning School. In addition, he is a member of the Schoolcraft College Development Authority Board and a benefactor of the Plymouth Community Arts Council.

Mr. President, I applaud Mr. McKeon for his many efforts to better the quality of life for every resident of Plymouth, Michigan. His dedication to the town over the years is truly admirable, and I am glad that the Kiwanis Club has taken this opportunity to recognize his many contributions. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate Mr. McKeon on his induction into the Plymouth Hall of Fame.●

MR. JAMES JABARA INDUCTED INTO PLYMOUTH HALL OF FAME

● Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on April 18, 2000, the Kiwanis Club of Plymouth, Michigan, with the assistance of the Plymouth Community Chamber of Commerce, the District Library, the Plymouth Historical Society, and the City of Plymouth, will honor three men whose commitment to that community has earned them a place in the Plymouth Hall of Fame. These men are being recognized because over the years their dedication and many efforts have played a large role in making Plymouth the wonderful town that it is today. With this having been said, I rise today in honor of Mr. James Jabara, Mr. James B. McKeon, and Mr. Jack Wilcox, who are rightfully taking their place among the ''Builders of Plymouth.''

Mr. Jabara has been an outstanding leader in the Plymouth community since arriving there after his graduation from Michigan Technological University. He has served Plymouth as City Commissioner, Mayor, and Chairman of the 35th District Court Building. He is a board member of the Plymouth Chamber of Commerce, the Fall Festival and the Ice Festival. He is Chairman of the Advisory Board, sits on the Board of Directors of the Salvation Army, and is a member of the Plymouth Library Board. He is a charter member of the Colonial Kiwanis Club, and its first president. In addition, his many successful business ventures have contributed greatly to the growth and development of the Plymouth community.

Mr. President, I applaud Mr. Jabara for his many efforts to better the quality of life for every resident of Plymouth, Michigan. His dedication to the town over the years is truly admirable, and I am glad that the Kiwanis Club has taken this opportunity to recognize his many contributions. On behalf of the entire United States Senate, I congratulate Mr. Jabara on his induction into the Plymouth Hall of Fame.●

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 11:21 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 3767. An act to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to make improvements to, and permanently authorize, the visa waiver pilot program under section 217 of such act.

H.R. 4051. An act to establish a grant program that provides incentives for States to enact mandatory minimum sentences for certain firearms offenses, and for other purposes.

H.R. 4163. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for increased fairness to taxpayers.

The message also announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, without amendment:

S. Con. Res. 71. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress that Miami, Florida, and not a competing foreign city, should serve as the permanent location for the Secretariat of the Free Trade Area of the Americas (FTAA) beginning in 2005.

The message further announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, without amendment:

S.J. Res. 43. Joint resolution expressing the sense of Congress that the President of the United States should encourage free and fair elections and respect for democracy in Peru.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 1658) to provide a more just and uniform procedure for Federal civil forfeitures, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that pursuant to section 503(b)(3) of the National Skill Standards Act of 1994 (20 U.S.C. 5933), and upon the recommendation of the majority leader, the Speaker appoints the following member on the part of the House to the National Skill Standards Board for a 4-year term to fill the existing vacancy thereon: Mr. William L. Lepley of Hershey, Pennsylvania.

At 5:08 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

H. Con. Res. 303. Concurrent resolution providing for a conditional adjournment of the House of Representatives and a conditional adjournment or recess of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The following petitions and memorials were laid before the Senate and were referred or ordered to lie on the table as indicated:

POM–454. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas relative to the shipment of state-inspected meat and meat products and the number of poultry to be slaughtered at home for sale to the consumer; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 5050

Whereas, All regulations for state inspected commercial meat plants must be equal to or more strict than the federal regulations; and

Whereas, Since state inspected meat and meat products must be equal to the federal regulations, meat and meat products should be allowed to be shipped across state lines; and

Whereas, Currently, annually, only 1,000 poultry may be slaughtered at home and offered for sale to the consumer; and

Whereas, To meet current consumer demand, such number should be increased to 3,000 poultry: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas, the Senate concurring therein: That Congress pass legislation allowing state-inspected meat and meat products to be shipped interstate; and

Be it further resolved: That Congress pass legislation increasing the number of poultry to be slaughtered at home from 1,000 to 3,000; and

Be it further resolved: That the Secretary of the State be directed to send enrolled copies of this resolution to the President of the United States; the Vice-President of the United States; Majority Leader and Minority Leader of the United States Senate; the Speaker, Majority Leader and Minority Leader of the United States House of Representative; the Secretary of the United States Department of Agriculture; and to each member of the Kansas Congressional Delegation.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GRASSLEY:

S. 2404. A bill to amend chapter 75 of title 5, United States Code, to provide that any Federal law enforcement officer who is convicted of a felony shall be terminated from employment; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

LEGISLATION REGARDING THE REMOVAL OF LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS CONVICTED OF FELONIES

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill on removing federal law enforcement officers convicted of felonies.

Under my bill, any federal law enforcement officer, who is convicted of a felony, would have to be removed from his or her position immediately.

Mr. President, my colleagues must be wondering why the Senator from Iowa is offering this legislation. Law enforcement officers convicted of felonies are removed immediately. That's just common sense. Right?

Unfortunately, Mr. President, common sense does not always prevail in the federal bureaucracy.

Common sense is in short supply at one very important place in the Pentagon—the office of the Inspector General or DOD IG.

In October 1999, the Majority Staff on my Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Courts issued a report on the DOD IG.

I placed the Majority Staff Report in the RECORD on November 2, 1999.

The Majority Staff Report substantiated allegations of misconduct by senior officials at the Defense Criminal Investigative Service—or DCIS—between 1993 and 1996.

DCIS is the criminal investigative branch in the DOD IG's office.

I would like to remind my colleagues that Mr. Donald Mancuso was the Director of DCIS between 1988 and 1997. Today, Mr. Mancuso is the Deputy DOD IG. He may be a candidate for nomination as the next DOD IG.

Some of the allegations examined in the Majority Staff Report concerned one of Mr. Mancuso's top deputies—an agent by the name of Mr. Larry J. Hollingsworth.

The Hollingsworth case is the driving force behind my bill.

Mr. Hollingsworth was the Director of Internal Affairs at DCIS from April 1991 until his retirement in September 1996.

In July 1995, after a fellow agent recognized Mr. Hollingsworth's photo in a law enforcement crime bulletin, Mr. Hollingsworth was apprehended. His home was searched, and he confessed to filing a fraudulent passport application.

Mr. Hollingsworth was convicted of a felony in U.S. District Court in March 1996.

The authorities who investigated Mr. Hollingsworth's crimes believe that he committed about 12 overt acts of fraud between 1992 and 1994.

Mr. President, can you imagine that? While he was hammering rank and file agents for minor administrative offenses as head of the Internal Affairs unit, Mr. Hollingsworth was deeply involved in a criminal enterprise of his own.

The State Department agents who investigated the case were troubled by Mr. Hollingsworth's actions. From past experience, they know passport fraud is usually committed in furtherance of a more serious crime. But that crime was never discovered.

While the full extent of Mr. Hollingsworth's crimes remain a mystery, this case has helped to shed a whole lot of light on Deputy IG Mancuso.

Mr. Mancuso personally approved a series of administrative actions that kept a convicted felon in an employed status at DCIS for 6 months.

Mr. Hollingsworth confessed to passport fraud in July 1995. He was convicted in March 1996 and then confined in jail. All this time—for 14 months, Mr. Mancuso kept Mr. Hollingsworth in an employed status at DCIS until September 19,1996.

Mr. President, September 19, 1996 was the magic day. That was Mr. Hollingsworth's 50th birthday.

That was the very first day he was eligible to retire. On that day, he retired with full law enforcement benefits and Mr. Mancuso's blessing.

Mr. Mancuso's generosity will eventually cost the taxpayers a big chunk of money.

The Office of Personnel Management—OPM—estimated Mr. Hollingsworth's annuity will cost the taxpayers at least $750,000.00 through the year 2008.

This is money Mr. Hollingsworth should never collect had Mr. Mancuso exercised sound judgment under the law.

Mr. Mancuso could have removed Mr. Hollingsworth in March 1996 after conviction or maybe even sooner.

Instead, Mr. Mancuso chose to personally protect Mr. Hollingsworth until he reached his 50th birthday and could retire.

Mr Mancuso shielded Mr. Hollingsworth from the law for at least 6 months.

Under the law—5 U.S.C. 7513(b), Mr. Mancuso was authorized to remove Mr. Hollingsworth after conviction—if not sooner.

Mr. President, I underscore the words authorized. DCIS was authorized but not required to remove him.

Under the law, DCIS was granted discretionary authority to decide when—or if—to remove him.

Mr. President, too much discretionary authority in a place so short on common sense can lead to mistakes. The Hollingsworth case was a big mistake.

If my bill had been in effect in 1996, Mr. Hollingsworth would have been removed within 30 days of conviction.

My staff has consulted with OPM on this legislation.

OPM offered some constructive comments on how to strengthen it. Those ideas are now in the bill.

OPM was unaware of any other instance where a federal law enforcement agency had kept a convicted felon in an employed status for 6 months after conviction.

However, OPM could not guarantee that this would never happen again.

The intent of my legislation should be crystal clear: To ensure that personnel management decisions—like those taken by Mr. Mancuso in the Hollingsworth case—are never repeated again.

Over the past 10 months, my staff has spoken with many rank and file law enforcement officers about the special treatment given to Mr. Hollingsworth.

Rank and file agents are universally disgusted by what happened.

They feel—as I do—that law enforcement officers, who are convicted of felonies—should be removed from their posts immediately.

They don't want their badges tarnished by having one of their own, who committed a felony, remain on the job—as Mr. Hollingsworth was allowed to do.

That undermines morale in the ranks.

In closing, I would like to quote from a letter Mr. Mancuso wrote—on official DOD stationery—to Judge Ellis on April 29, 1996.

Judge Ellis was preparing to sentence the convicted felon, Mr. Hollingsworth.

Mr. Mancuso's statements to Judge Ellis were absurd. They were outrageous.

This letter shows that Mr. Mancuso was totally blind to the seriousness of Mr. Hollingsworth's crimes.

In the letter, Mr. Mancuso asked the judge to consider extenuating circumstances. He told the judge that Mr. Hollingsworth had taken a half day's leave to file the fraudulent passport application. Mr. Mancuso praised the convicted felon for this unselfish act. Can you believe that?

This is what Mr. Mancuso said to Judge Ellis, and I quote: ''Mr. Hollingsworth could have come and gone as he pleased,'' but he ''took leave to commit a felony.''

In Mr. Mancuso's mind, the use of personal leave to commit a felony was a sign of moral excellence.

Mr. Mancuso concluded with this telling remark:

> To this day, there is no evidence that Mr. Hollingsworth has ever done anything improper relating to his duties and responsibilities as a DCIS agent and manager.

Mr. Mancuso's statement to Judge Ellis was misguided for two reasons:

First, incredible as it may seem, Mr. Mancuso—a sworn law enforcement officer and current Deputy DOD IG—feels that it is OK for law enforcement officers to commit crimes so long as the agents are off duty.

Second, Mr. Mancuso's assertion about ''no evidence'' is flat wrong. It's inaccurate.

On February 1, 2000, my staff discovered a DCIS file containing information that refuted Mr. Mancuso's assertions to Judge Ellis about no evidence. It shows that in August 1995, both DCIS and the State Department did, in fact, have evidence that Mr. Hollingsworth had engaged in criminal activity at his desk in DCIS headquarters.

How could the Pentagon's top criminal investigator be so blind to evidence?

This file also contains other important revelations about Mr. Mancuso's misconduct in the Hollingsworth case.

It contains documents that indicate Mr. Mancuso was communicating with defense attorneys during the criminal court proceedings against Mr. Hollingsworth.

For example, it contains a FAX transmittal memo addressed personally to Mr. Mancuso from the defense attorney. Attached was a motion to dismiss charges against Mr. Hollingsworth. But there was no court date stamp or attorney signature on the document. And there were handwritten notes on it. This was a rough draft.

Mr. President, this really bothers me.

Mr. Mancuso—the director of a federal law enforcement agency—was furnished with a rough draft of a motion to dismiss felony charges that the U.S. Attorney was attempting to prosecute.

That is unethical conduct.

The file contains other damaging documents.

They suggest that the current Director of DCIS, Mr. John Keenan, returned 11 confiscated handguns to the convicted felon—Mr. Hollingsworth—in direct contravention of a federal court judgment and statutory law.

DCIS allegedly returned the guns to Mr. Hollingsworth on September 23, 1997, while he was still on supervised probation. This reckless act could have put a probation officer in harm's way.

We also learned that Mr. Hollingsworth was under investigation by the IRS in November 1983 for perjury. That very same month—November 1983, he was hired by DCIS to be the agent in charge of the Chicago Field Office.

The IRS concluded Mr. Hollingsworth had ''committed perjury during rebuttal testimony.'' On December 5, 1983, the IRS referred the matter to the U.S. Attorney in New Orleans for prosecution.

Mr. President, how could DCIS hire Mr. Hollingsworth under such questionable circumstances?

I don't understand it.

Mr. President, Mr. Mancuso went to extraordinary lengths to protect a convicted felon.

By doing what he did, Mr. Mancuso violated a trust that goes with the high office he occupies. He violated the trust that goes with the badge and gun he carries. In our democracy, when those sacred trusts are violated, our only protection is the law.

In this case, the law provides too much discretionary authority. It leaves the door wide open to abuse by irresponsible bureaucrats. We need to close that door.

My bill will close the loophole that Mr. Mancuso exploited in such a crafty way.

Mr. President, I would like to urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this important piece of legislation.

By Mr. ABRAHAM (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DEWINE, and Mr. LEAHY):

S. 2406. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act to provide permanent authority for entry into the United States of certain religious workers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MOTHER TERESA RELIGIOUS WORKERS ACT

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Mother Teresa Religious Workers Act. This legislation will make permanent provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act that set aside 10,000 visas per year for ''special immigrants.''

Up to 5,000 of these visas annually can be used for ministers of a religious denomination. In addition, a related provision of the law provides 5,000 visas per year to individuals working for religious organizations in ''a religious vocation or occupation'' or in a ''professional capacity in a religious vocation or occupation.'' This has allowed nuns, brothers, cantors, lay preachers, religious instructors, religious counselors, missionaries, and other persons to work at their vocations or occupations for religious organizations or their affiliates.

The key component of the law will expire on September 30 of this year unless Congress acts.

Under the law, a sponsoring organization must be a bona fide religious organization or an affiliate of one, and must be certified or eligible to be certified under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code. Religious workers must have two years work experience to qualify for an immigrant visa.

Prior to 1990, churches, synagogues, mosques, and their affiliated organizations experienced significant difficulties in trying to gain admission for a much needed minister or other individual necessary to provide religious services to their communities. However, this improvement in the law in 1990 was not made permanent and, as such, has required reauthorization every two or three years, which has created uncertainly among religious organizations.

Bishop John Cummins of Oakland has written:

> Religious workers provide a very important pastoral function to the American communities in which they work and live, performing activities in furtherance of a vocation or religious occupation often possessing characteristics unique from those found in the general labor market. Historically, religious workers have staffed hospitals, orphanages, senior care homes and other charitable institutions that provide benefits to society without public funding.

Bishop Cummins noted that,

> The steady decline in native-born Americans entering religious vocations and occupations, coupled with the dramatically increasing need for charitable services in impoverished communities makes the extension of this special immigrant provision a necessity for numerous religious denominations in the United States.

The sentiments expressed by Bishop Cummins are widely held. Indeed this program has won universal praise in religious communities across the nation. In the past, our office has received letters from religious orders and organizations throughout the nation.

As a nation founded by people who came to these shores so they and their children could worship freely, it is only appropriate that our country welcome those who wish to help our religious organizations provide pastoral and other relief to people around this nation.

That is why I have introduced the Mother Teresa Religious Workers Act. The bill will eliminate the sunset provisions in current law and extend permanently the religious workers provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act. It is clear that religious organizations' ability to sponsor individuals who provide service to their local communities should be a permanent fixture of our immigration law, just as it is for those petitioning for close family members and skilled workers. No longer should religious institutions have to worry about whether Congress will act in time to renew the religious workers provisions. I am pleased Senators KENNEDY, DEWINE, and LEAHY are cosponsoring this legislation.

Finally, I would like to close by reading a passage from a letter sent to me in 1997. It's a letter that at the time helped convince me of the need to move toward permanent extension of the religious workers provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act. The letter read as follows:

> DEAR SENATOR ABRAHAM: I am writing to ask you to help us in solving a very urgent problem. My Sisters in New York have told me that the law which allows the Sisters to apply for permanent residence in the United States expires on September 30, 1997. Please, will you do all that you can to have that law extended so that all Religious will continue to have the opportunity to be permanent residents and serve the people of your great country.
> It means so much to our poor people to have Sisters who understand them and their culture. It takes a long time for a Sister to understand the people and a culture, so now our Society wants to keep our Sisters in their mission countries on a more long term basis. Please help us and our poor by extending this law.

I am praying for you and the people of Michigan. My Sisters serve the poor in Detroit where we have a soup kitchen and night shelter for women. Let us all thank God for this chance to serve His poor.

Signed: MOTHER TERESA.

My office received this letter only a few weeks before her death. In honor of her great deeds for humanity I hope that this year we can finally extend the religious workers provisions of the INA permanently.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Mother Teresa Religious Workers Act''.

SEC. 2. PERMANENT AUTHORITY FOR ENTRY INTO UNITED STATES OF CERTAIN RELIGIOUS WORKERS.

Section 101(a)(27)(C)(ii) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(27)(C)(ii)) is amended by striking ''before October 1, 2000,'' each place it appears.

S. 2407. A bill to amend the Immigration and Nationality Act with respect to the record of admission for permanent residence in the case of certain aliens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DATE OF REGISTRY ACT OF 2000

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I rise today along with the Senior Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. KENNEDY, to introduce the Date of Registry Act of 2000.

The Date of Registry Act of 2000, complements similar legislation I introduced last year in an effort to fix a terrible mistake made by the Congress in 1996. Tucked into the massive piece of legislation known as IIRA IRA, the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, was an obscure, but lethal, provision which stripped the federal courts of jurisdiction to adjudicate legalization claims against the Immigration and Naturalization Service. Most troubling is the fact that this provision nullified legitimate claims based upon substantiated evidence that the Immigration and Nationalization Service had bypassed Congressional intent in denying benefits to certain undocumented persons who have come to be known as the ''late amnesty'' class of immigrants. Through this limitation, Section 377 of IIRA IRA has caused significant hardships, and denied due process and fundamental fairness, for hundreds of thousands of hard working immigrants, including several thousand in my home State of Nevada. These are good, hardworking people who have been in the United States and had been paying taxes for more than ten years, who suddenly lost their jobs and the ability to support their families.

In an effort to repeal the limitation on judicial jurisdiction imposed by Section 377 of the Illegal Immigration Reform and Immigrant Responsibility Act of 1996, I introduced S. 1552, the Legal Amnesty Restoration Act of 1999. In addition to repealing Section 377, S. 1552 would also change the date of registry for those immigrants seeking legalized, documented status in the United States from January 1, 1972, to January 1, 1984. The legislation I am introducing today focuses on this aspect of last year's legislation, and would change the date of registry from January 1, 1972, to January 1, 1986.

The date of registry exists as a matter of public policy, with the recognition that immigrants who have remained in the country continuously for an extended period of time—in some cases, up to thirty years—are highly unlikely to leave. Today, we must accept the reality that many of the people living in the United States are undocumented immigrants who have been here for quite a long time. Consequently, many people living in this country do not pay their fair share of taxes because they are unable to work legally. Furthermore, the businesses who employ these undocumented persons also do not pay their fair share of taxes. These are the facts, and coupled with the knowledge that we can't simply solve this problem by wishing that it will go away, is the reality we must face when considering our immigration policies.

We last changed the date of registry in 1986, with the passage of the Immigration Reform and Control Act, which changed the date to January 1, 1972. In doing so, the 99th Congress employed the same rationale I have outlined above in support of a registry date change. Furthermore, I have mirrored the 99th Congress in another, critical aspect, by establishing an approximate fifteen-year differential between the date of enactment and the updated date of registry.

Mr. President, I should note one more thing about the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986. That legislation which last changed the date of registry was passed by a Democratic House of Representatives and a Republican Senate, and was signed into law by President Reagan. I mention these facts to highlight my hope that support for this legislation will be bi-partisan and based upon our desire to ensure fundamental fairness as a matter of public policy in this country.

Finally, the legislation I am introducing today builds upon the fifteen year differential standard established in the 1986 reform legislation by implementing a ''rolling registry'' date which would sunset in five years without Congressional reauthorization. In other words, on January 2002, the date of registry would automatically change to January 1, 1987, thereby maintaining the fifteen year differential. The date of registry would continue to change on a rolling basis through January 1, 2006, when the date of registry would be January 1, 1991. Limiting this annual, automatic change to five years will allow the Congress to examine both the positive and negative effects of a rolling date of registry and make an informed decision on reauthorization.

Mr. President, as I stated when I introduced S. 1552 last year, I don't pretend that this legislation will solve all the problems of our immigration and legalization procedures. However, we have an obligation to face our problems, and the reality is that there are many, many undocumented immigrants who live in this country who would be much more productive contributors to American society if they were legal residents, workers and taxpayers. We know this to be true, as evidenced by the thousands of immigrants in Southern Nevada whose status had yet to be adjusted, but were working legally and paying taxes—in some instances for more than ten years—when their employment permits were revoked as a result of the 1996 IIRA IRA legislation. I have met with many of these people on several occasions and I have witnessed, firsthand, their pain and genuine suffering. Good people who have worked hard and paid their taxes in order to live the American dream only to see their efforts turn into a nightmare.

As I stated when I introduced S. 1552 last year, I don't pretend that my legislation will solve all the problems of immigration and legalization policies. However, we must face these problems head on, and that is precisely my intent in introducing this legislation today.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. INOUYE):

S. 2408. A bill to authorize the President to award a gold medal on behalf of the Congress to the Navajo Code Talkers in recognition of their contributions to the Nation; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

HONORING THE NAVAJO CODE TALKERS ACT

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce important legislation, recognizing the heroic contributions of a group of Native American soldiers who served in the Pacific theater during the second World War. This legislation will authorize the President of the United States to award a gold medal, on behalf of the Congress, to each of the original twenty-nine Navajo Code Talkers, as well as a silver medal to each man who later qualified as a Navajo Code Talker (MOS 642). These medals are to express recognition by the United States of America and its citizens of the Navajo Code Talkers who distinguished themselves in performing a unique, highly successful communications operation that greatly assisted in saving countless lives and in hastening the end of the war in the Pacific.

It has taken too long to properly recognize these soldiers, whose achievements have been obscured by twin veils of secrecy and time. As they approach the final chapter of their lives, it is only fitting that the nation pay them this honor. That's why I am introducing this legislation today—to salute these brave and innovative Native Americans, to acknowledge the great contribution they made to the Nation at a time of war, and to finally give them their rightful place in history.

With each new successive generation of Americans, blessed as we are in this time of relative peace and prosperity, it is easy to forget what the world was like in the early 1940's. The United States was at war in Europe, and on December 7, 1941, we were faced with a second front as the Japanese Empire attacked Pearl Harbor.

One of the intelligence weapons the Japanese possessed was an elite group of well-trained English speaking soldiers, used to intercept U.S. communications, then sabotage the message or issue false commands to ambush American troops. Military code became more and more complex—at Guadalcanal, military leaders complained that it took 2½ hours to send and decode a single message.

The idea to use Navajo for secure communications came from Philip Johnson. Johnson was the son of a missionary, raised on the Navajo reservation, and one of the few non-Navajos who spoke their language fluently. But he was also a World War I veteran, and knew of the military's search for a code that would withstand all attempts to decipher it. Johnson believed Navajo answered the military requirement for an undecipherable code because Navajo is an unwritten language of extreme complexity. In early 1942, he met with the Commanding General of Amphibious Corps, Pacific Fleet, and his staff to convince them of the value of the Navajo language as code. In one of his tests, he demonstrated that Navajos could encode, transmit, and decode a three-line English message in 20 seconds. Twenty-seconds!

Convinced, the Marine Corps called upon the Navajo Nation to support the military effort by recruiting and enlisting Navajo men to serve as Marine Corps Radio Operators. These Navajo Marines, who became known as the Navajo Code Talkers, used the Navajo language to develop a unique code to communicate military messages in the South Pacific. True to Phillip Johnson's prediction, and the enemy's frustration, the code developed by these Native Americans proved unbreakable and was used throughout the Pacific theater.

Their accomplishment was even more heroic given the cultural context in which they were operating:

The Navajos were second-class citizens and were discouraged from using their own language; and

They were living on reservations, as many still are today, yet they volunteered to serve, protect, and defend the very power that put them there.

But the Navajo, a people subjected to alienation in their own homeland, who had been discouraged from speaking their own language, stepped forward and developed the most significant and successful military code of the time:

This Code was so successful that military commanders credited the Code in saving the lives of countless American soldiers and the successful engagements of the U.S. in the battles of Guadalcanal, Tarawa, Saipan, Iwo Jima, and Okinawa. At Iwo Jima, Major Howard Connor, 5th Marine Division signal officer, declared, ''Were it not for the Navajos, the Marines would never have taken Iwo Jima.'' Major Connor had six Navajo code talkers working around the clock during the first 48-hours of the battle. Those six sent and received over 800 messages, all without error;

This Code was so successful that some Code Talkers were guarded by fellow marines whose role was to kill them in case of imminent capture by the enemy; and finally,

It was so successful that the Department of Defense kept the Code secret for 23 years after the end of World War II, when it was finally declassified.

And there, Mr. President, is the foundation of the problem.

If their achievements had been hailed at the conclusion of the war, proper honors would have been bestowed at that time. But the Code Talkers were sworn to secrecy, an oath they kept and honored, but at the same time, one that robbed them of the very accolades and place in history they so rightly deserved. Their ranks include veterans of Guadalcanal, Saipan, Iwo Jima, and Okinawa; they gave their lives at New Britain, Bougainville, Guam, and Peleliu. But, while the bodies of their fallen comrades came home, simple messages of comfort from those still fighting to relatives back home on the reservations were prohibited by the very secrecy of the code's origin. And at the end of the war, these unsung heroes returned to their homes on buses—no parades, no fanfare, no special recognition for what they had truly accomplished—because while the war was over, their duty—their oath of secrecy—continued. The secrecy surrounding the code was maintained until it was declassified in 1968—only then did a realization of the sacrifice and valor of these brave Native Americans emerge from history.

For the countless lives they helped save, for this contribution that helped speed the Allied victory in the Pacific, I believe they succeeded beyond all expectations.

Through the enactment of this bill, the recognition for the Navajo Code Talkers will be delayed no longer, and they will finally take their place in history they so rightly deserve.

To this end, I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. President, I ask for unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2408

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Honoring the Navajo Code Talkers Act''

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) On December 7, 1941, the Japanese Empire attacked Pearl Harbor and war was declared by the Congress the following day.

(2) The military code, developed by the United States for transmitting messages, had been deciphered by the Japanese and a search by U.S. Intelligence was made to develop new means to counter the enemy.

(3) The United States government called upon the Navajo Nation to support the military effort by recruiting and enlisting twenty-nine (29) Navajo men to serve as Marine Corps Radio Operators; the number of enlistees later increased to over three-hundred and fifty.

(4) At the time, the Navajos were second-class citizens, and they were a people who were discouraged from using their own language.

(5) The Navajo Marine Corps Radio Operators, who became known as the Navajo Code Talkers, were used to develop a code using their language to communicate military messages in the Pacific.

(6) To the enemy's frustration, the code developed by these Native Americans proved to be unbreakable and was used extensively throughout the Pacific theater.

(7) The Navajo language, discouraged in the past, was instrumental in developing the most significant and successful military code of the time. At Iwo Jima alone, they passed over 800 error-free messages in a 48-hour period;

(a) So successful, that military commanders credited the Code in saving the lives of countless American soldiers and the successful engagements of the U.S. in the battles of Guadalcanal, Tarawa, Saipan, Iwo Jima, and Okinawa;

(b) So successful, that some Code Talkers were guarded by fellow marines whose role was to kill them in case of imminent capture by the enemy;

(c) So successful, that the code was kept secret for 23 years after the end of World War II.

(8) Following the conclusion of World War II, the U.S. Department of Defense maintained the secrecy of the Navajo code until it was declassified in 1968; only then did a realization of the sacrifice and valor of these brave Native Americans emerge from history.

SEC. 3. CONGRESSIONAL GOLD MEDAL.

(a) PRESENTATION AUTHORIZED.—The President is authorized to award to each of the original twenty-nine Navajo Codes Talkers, or a surviving family member, on behalf of the Congress, a gold medal of appropriate design, honoring the Navajo Codes Talkers. The President is further authorized to award to each man who qualified as a Navajo Code Talker (MOS 642), or a surviving family member, a silver medal with suitable emblems and devices. These medals are to express recognition by the United States of America and its citizens in honoring the Navajo Code Talkers who distinguished themselves in performing a unique, highly successful communications operation that greatly assisted in saving countless lives and in hastening the end of the World War II in the Pacific.

(b) DESIGN AND STRIKING.—For the purposes of the award referred to in subsection (a), the Secretary of the Treasury (in this Act referred to as the 'Secetary') shall strike a gold medal with suitable emblems, devices, and inscriptions, to be determined by the Secretary.

SEC. 4. DUPLICATE MEDALS.

The Secretary may strike and sell duplicates in bronze of the gold medal struck pursuant to section 2 under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, and at a price sufficient to cover the costs thereof, including labor, materials, dies, use of machinery, and overhead expenses, and the cost of the gold medal.

SEC. 5. STATUS AS NATIONAL MEDALS.

The medals struck pursuant to this Act are national medals for purposes of chapter 51 of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 6. FUNDING.

(a) AUTHORITY TO USE FUND AMOUNTS.—There is authorized to be charged against the United States Mint Public Enterprise Fund an amount not to exceed $30,000 to pay for the cost of the medals authorized by this Act.

(b) PROCEEDS OF SALE.—Amounts received from the sale of duplicate bronze medals under section 3 shall be deposited in the United States Mint Public Enterprise Fund.

By Mr. HOLLINGS (for himself and Mr. SARBANES) (by request):

S. 2409. A bill to provide for enhanced safety and environmental protection in pipeline transportation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

PIPELINE SAFETY AND COMMUNITY PROTECTION ACT OF 2000

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I am pleased to introduce the Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000 on behalf of the administration. Yesterday, Vice President GORE transmitted this proposal to the Congress, and requested introduction and referral of the bill to the appropriate committee. The purpose of this legislation is to provide for enhanced safety and environmental protection in pipeline transportation.

The Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation held a field hearing in Bellingham, Washington, last month on pipeline safety. In addition, I expect the committee to hold another hearing on pipeline safety reauthorization within the next month. Senator MURRAY has introduced a pipeline safety bill and it is my understanding that an additional pipeline safety bill is to be introduced by Chairman MCCAIN today. I am interested in reviewing all of the bills and look forward to the committee's action on pipeline safety reauthorization in the coming months.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2409

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF TITLE 49, UNITED STATES CODE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000''.

(b) AMENDMENT OF TITLE 49, UNITED STATES CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or a repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 49, United States Code.

(c) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—

Sec. 1. Short title; amendment of title 49, United States Code; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Additional pipeline protections.
Sec. 3. Community right to know and emergency preparedness.
Sec. 4. Enforcement.
Sec. 5. Underground damage prevention.
Sec. 6. Enhanced ability of states to oversee operator activities.
Sec. 7. Improved data and data availability.
Sec. 8. Enhanced investigation authorities.
Sec. 9. International authority.
Sec. 10. Risk management demonstration program.
Sec. 11. Support for innovative technology development.
Sec. 12. Authorization of appropriations.

SEC. 2. ADDITIONAL PIPELINE PROTECTIONS.

(a) Section 60109 is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(c) OPERATOR'S RISK ANALYSIS AND PROGRAM FOR INTEGRITY MANAGEMENT.—

(1) GENERAL REQUIREMENT.—Within 1 year after the Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, establishes criteria under subsection (a)(1) of this section, an operator of a natural gas transmission pipeline facility or hazardous liquid pipeline facility shall evaluate the risks to the operator's pipeline facility in the areas identified by these criteria and shall adopt and implement a program for integrity management that reduces the risks in those areas.

''(2) STANDARDS FOR PROGRAM.—An operator shall include at least the following in the program for integrity management:

''(A) internal inspection or another equally protective method, such as pressure testing, that represents use of the best achievable technology and that directly assesses the integrity of the pipeline on a periodic basis that is commensurate to the risk to people and the environment of the pipeline being inspected;

''(B) clearly defined criteria for evaluating and acting on the results of the inspection or testing done under subparagraph (A);

''(C) an analysis on a continuing basis that integrates all available information about the integrity of the pipeline or the consequences of a release;

''(D) prompt actions to address integrity issues raised by the analysis required by subparagraph (C);

''(E) measures that prevent and mitigate the consequences of a release and, in the case of a release of a hazardous substance or discharge of oil, are consistent with the National Contingency Plan, including leak detection, integrity evaluation, emergency flow restricting devices, and other prevention, detection, and mitigation measures that are appropriate for the protection of human health and the environment; and

''(F) consideration of the consequences of hazardous liquid releases.

''(3) CRITERIA FOR PROGRAM STANDARDS.—

''(A) In deciding how frequently the inspection or testing under paragraph (2)(A) must be conducted, an operator shall take into account the potential for the development of new defects, the operational characteristics of the pipeline, including age, operating pressure, block valve location, and spill history, the location of areas identified under subsection (a)(1), any known deficiencies of the method of pipeline construction or installation, and the possible flaw growth of new and existing defects. In considering the potential for development of new defects from outside force damage, an operator shall consider information available about current or planned excavation activities and the effectiveness of damage prevention programs in the area.

''(B) An operator shall adopt standards under this section that provide an equivalent minimum level of protection as that provided by the applicable level established by national consensus standards organizations.

''(C) An operator shall implement pressure testing and other integrity management techniques in a manner that does not increase environmental or safety risks, such as by use of petroleum for pressure testing.

''(4) AUTHORITY FOR ADDITIONAL STANDARDS.—The Secretary shall prescribe additional standards to direct an operator's conduct of a risk analysis or adoption or implementation of a program for integrity management. These standards shall address the type or frequency of inspection or testing required, the manner in which it is conducted, the criteria used in analyzing results, the types of information sources that must be integrated as well as the manner of integration, the nature and timing of actions selected to address integrity issues, and such other factors as appropriate to assure that the integrity of the pipeline facility is addressed and that appropriate mitigative measures are adopted to protect areas identified under subsection (a)(1). The Secretary may also prescribe standards that require an owner or operator of a natural gas transmission or hazardous liquid pipeline facility to include in the program of integrity management changes to valves or the establishment or modification of systems that monitor pressure and detect leaks based on the risk analysis the operator conducts, and the use of emergency flow restricting devices.

''(5) MONITORING IMPLEMENTATION.—A risk analysis and program for integrity management required under this section shall be reviewed by the Secretary of Transportation as an element of Departmental inspections, and the analysis and program, as well as the records demonstrating implementation, shall be made available to the Secretary on request under section 60117.''.

(b) Section 60102 is amended—

(1) by striking ''facilities.'' in subsection (e)(2) and inserting ''facilities, not including tanks incidental to pipeline transportation.'';

(2) by striking paragraph (2) of subsection (f);

(3) by striking ''(1)'' in subsection (f);

(4) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) and (B) of subsection (f)(1) (as such subsection was in effect before its amendment by paragraph (3) of this subsection) as paragraphs (1) and (2), respectively;

(5) by striking paragraph (2) of subsection (j) and redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (2); and

(6) by adding at the end thereof the following:

''(m) INTEGRITY MANAGEMENT REGULATIONS.—

''(1) Not later than December 31, 2000, the Secretary shall issue final regulations authorized by this section and sections 60104, 60108, and 60109 for the implementation of an integrity management program by operators of more than 500 miles of hazardous liquid pipelines.

''(2) Not later than 2 years after the date of enactment of the Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000, the Secretary shall issue final regulations that extend the requirements imposed by the regulations described in paragraph (1) to every operator of a hazardous liquid pipeline or natural gas transmission pipeline subject to the jurisdiction of this chapter. In the event that the Secretary fails to fulfill this requirement within two years, all the requirements imposed by the regulations described in paragraph (1) shall, on the date that is two years after the enactment of this subsection, apply to every operator of a hazardous liquid pipeline or natural gas transmission pipeline subject to the jurisdiction of this chapter.

''(3) Not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of the Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000—

''(A) the Secretary shall complete an assessment and evaluation of the effects on safety and the environment of extending all of the requirements mandated by the regulations described in paragraph (1) to additional areas;

''(B) the Secretary shall promptly make a Secretarial determination as to the effect on safety and the environment of extending the requirements imposed by the regulations described in paragraph (1) to additional areas using the best achievable technology; and

''(C) based on the determination described in subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall promptly promulgate regulations that would provide measurable improvements to safety or the environment in these areas by extending regulatory requirements at least as protective to these areas.''.

(f) Section 60118(a) is amended—

(1) by striking ''and'' at the end of paragraph (2);

(2) striking ''title.'' in paragraph (3) and inserting ''title; and''; and

(3) adding at the end the following:

''(4) conduct a risk analysis and prepare and carry out a program for integrity management for pipeline facilities in certain areas as required under section 60109(c).''.

(g) Section 60104(b) is amended by striking ''adopted.'' and inserting ''adopted, unless the Secretary determines that application of the standard is necessary for safety or environmental protection.''.

SEC. 3. COMMUNITY RIGHT TO KNOW AND EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS.

(a) Section 60116 is amended to read as follows:

§ 60116. Community right to know

''(a) PUBLIC EDUCATION PROGRAMS.—

''(1) Each owner or operator of a gas or hazardous liquid pipeline facility shall carry out a continuing program to educate the public on the use of a one-call notification system prior to excavation and other damage prevention activities, the possible hazards associated with unintended releases from the pipeline facility, the physical indications that such a release may have occurred, what steps should be taken for public safety in the event of a pipeline release, and how to report such an event.

''(2) Within 1 year after the date of enactment of the Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000, each owner or operator of a gas or hazardous liquid pipeline facility shall review its existing public education program for effectiveness and modify the program as necessary. The completed plan shall be reviewed by the Secretary of Transportation as an element of Departmental inspections.

''(3) The Secretary may issue standards prescribing the details of a public education program and providing for periodic review of the effectiveness and modification as needed. The Secretary may also develop material for use in the program.

''(b) LIAISON WITH STATE AND LOCAL EMERGENCY RESPONSE ENTITIES.—Within 1 year after the date of enactment of the Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000, an operator of a gas transmission or hazardous liquid pipeline facility shall initiate and maintain liaison with the State emergency response commissions, and local emergency planning committees in the areas of pipeline right-of-way, established under section 301 of the Emergency Planning and Community Right-To-Know Act of 1986 (42 U.S.C. 11001) in each State in which it operates. An operator shall, when requested, make available to the State emergency response commissions and local emergency planning committees the information described in section 60102(d), any program for integrity management developed under section 60109(c), and information about implementation of that program and about the risks the program is designed to address. In a community without a local emergency planning committee, the operator shall maintain liaison with the local fire, police, and other emergency response agencies.

''(c) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY OF REPORTS.—The Secretary shall make available to the public a safety-related condition report filed by an operator under section 60102(h) and a report of a pipeline incident filed by an operator under this chapter.

''(d) ACCESS TO INTEGRITY MANAGEMENT PROGRAM INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall prescribe requirements for public access to integrity management program information prepared under this chapter.

''(e) AVAILABILITY OF MAPS.—

''(1) The owner or operator of each interstate gas pipeline facility shall provide, at least annually, to the governing body of each municipality in which the interstate gas pipeline facility is located, a map identifying the location of the facility.

''(2) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of the Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000, and annually thereafter, the owner or operator of each hazardous liquid pipeline facility shall provide to the governing body of each municipality in which the pipeline facility is located, a map identifying the location of such facility.

''(f) EFFECTIVENESS OF PUBLIC SAFETY AND PUBLIC EDUCATION PROGRAMS.—

''(1) The Secretary shall survey and assess the public education programs under this section and the public safety programs under section 60102(c) and determine their effectiveness and applicability as components of a model program. The survey shall include the methods by which operators notify residents of the location of the facility and its right of way, public information regarding existing One-Call programs, and appropriate procedures to be followed by residents of affected municipalities in the event of accidents involving interstate gas pipeline facilities.

''(2) In issuing standards for public safety programs under section 60102(a) or for public education programs under this section, the Secretary shall consider the results of the survey and assessment done under paragraph (1).

''(3) The Secretary may provide technical assistance to the pipeline industry on developing public safety and public education program content and best practices for program delivery, and on evaluating the effectiveness of the programs. The Secretary may also provide technical assistance to State and local officials in applying practices developed in these programs to their activities.''.

(d) Section 60102(c) is amended by striking paragraph (4).

(e) Section 60102(h)(2) is amended by striking ''authorities.'' and inserting ''officials, including the local emergency responders, and appropriate on-scene coordinators for the area contingency plan or sub-area contingency plan.''.

(f) Section 60120(c) is amended by adding at the end the following: ''Nothing in section 60116 shall be deemed to impose a new duty on State or local emergency responders or local emergency planning committees.''.

(g) The analysis for chapter 601 is amended by striking the item relating to section 60116 and inserting the following:

''60116. Community right to know''.

SEC. 4. ENFORCEMENT.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—Section 60112 is amended—

(1) by striking all after ''if the Secretary'' in subsection (a) and inserting ''decides that—

''(1) operation of the facility is or would be hazardous to life, property, or the environment; or

''(2) the facility is or would be constructed or operated, or a component of the facility is or would be constructed or operated, with equipment, material, or a technique that the Secretary decides is hazardous to life, property, or the environment.'';

(2) by striking ''is hazardous'' in subsection (d) and inserting ''is or would be hazardous''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(f) OPTIONAL WAIVER OF NOTICE AND HEARING REQUIREMENTS.—If the Secretary decides that a facility may present a hazard under subsection (a)(1) or (2), the Secretary may waive the notice and hearing requirements in subsection (a) and request the Attorney General to bring suit on behalf of the United States in an appropriate district court to obtain an order to restrain the operator of the facility from such operation, or to take such other action as may be necessary, or both.''.

(b) CIVIL PENALTIES.—Section 60122 is amended—

(1) by striking ''$25,000'' in subsection (a)(1) and ''$500,000'' and substituting ''$100,000'' and ''$1,000,000'', respectively; and

(2) by adding at the end of subsection (a)(1) ''The maximum civil penalty for a related series of violations does not apply to a judicial enforcement action under section 60120 or 60121.''; and

(3) by striking subsection (b) and inserting the following:

''(b) PENALTY CONSIDERATIONS.—In determining the amount of a civil penalty under this section—

''(1) the Secretary shall consider—

''(A) the nature, circumstances, and gravity of the violation, including adverse impact on the environment;

''(B) with respect to the violator, the degree of culpability, any history of prior violations, the ability to pay, any effect on ability to continue doing business; and

''(C) good faith in attempting to comply; and

''(2) the Secretary may consider—

''(A) the economic benefit gained from the violation without any discount because of subsequent damages; and

''(B) other matters that justice requires.''.

(c) EXCAVATOR DAMAGE.—Section 60123(d) is amended—

(1) by striking ''knowingly and willfully'';

(2) by inserting ''knowingly and willfully'' before ''engages'' in paragraph (1); and

(3) striking paragraph (2)(B) and inserting the following:

''(B) a pipeline facility, is aware of damage, and does not report the damage promptly to the operator of the pipeline facility and to other appropriate authorities; or''.

(d) CIVIL ACTIONS.—Section 60120(a)(1) is amended to read as follows:

''(1) On the request of the Secretary of Transportation, the Attorney General may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States to enforce this chapter, including section 60112 of this chapter, or a regulation prescribed or order issued under this chapter. The court may award appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction, punitive damages, and assessment of civil penalties considering the same factors as prescribed for the Secretary in an administrative case under section 60122.''.

(e) CITIZEN SUITS.—Section 60121(a)(1) is amended by striking the first sentence and ''However, the'' and inserting: ''A person may bring a civil action in an appropriate district court of the United States against a person owning or operating a pipeline facility to enforce compliance with this chapter or a standard prescribed or an order issued under this chapter. The district court may enjoin noncompliance and assess civil penalties considering the same factors as prescribed for the Secretary in an administrative case under section 60122. The''.

SEC. 5. UNDERGROUND DAMAGE PREVENTION.

(a) Section 60114 is amended by inserting after subsection (b) the following:

''(c) CONFORMITY WITH CHAPTER 61.—Regulations prescribed by the Secretary under subsection (a) do not apply to a State that has a One-Call notification program accepted by the Secretary as meeting the minimum standards of section 6103 of this title or approved by the Secretary as an alternative program under section 6104(c) of this title.''.

(b) Section 60102(c) is amended—

(1) by inserting ''or hazardous liquid pipeline facility'' before ''participate'' in paragraph (1); and

(2) striking paragraph (3).

(c) Section 60104 is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(f) STATE ONE-CALL NOTIFICATION LAWS.—Notwithstanding subsection (c) of this section, a State may enforce a requirement of a One-Call notification law that satisfies sections 6103 or 6104(c) of this title, or section 60114(a) of this chapter, against an operator of an interstate natural gas pipeline facility or an interstate hazardous liquid pipeline facility provided that the requirement sought to be enforced is compatible with the minimum standards prescribed under this chapter.''.

(d) Section 60123 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

''(e) MISDEMEANOR FOR NOT USING ONE-CALL.—A person shall be fined under title 18, imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both, if the person knowingly engages in an excavation activity without first using an available one-call notification system to establish the location of underground facilities in the excavation area.''.

SEC. 6. ENHANCED ABILITY OF STATES TO OVERSEE OPERATOR ACTIVITIES.

(a) Section 60106(a) is amended—

(1) by inserting ''(1)'' before ''If'';

(2) redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B); and

(3) adding at the end thereof the following:

''(2) If the Secretary accepts a certification under section 60105 of this title, the Secretary may make an agreement with a State authority authorizing it to participate in the oversight of interstate pipeline transportation. An agreement shall include a plan for the State authority to participate in special investigations involving new construction or incidents.

''(3) An agreement under paragraph (2) may also include a program allowing for participation by the State authority in other activities overseeing interstate pipeline transportation that supplement the Secretary's program and address issues of local concern, provided that the Secretary determines that—

''(A) there are no significant gaps in the regulatory jurisdiction of the State authority over intrastate pipeline transportation;

''(B) implementation of the agreement will not adversely affect the oversight of intrastate pipeline transportation by the State authority;

''(C) the program allowing participation of the State authority is consistent with the Secretary's program for inspection; and

''(D) the State promotes preparedness and prevention activities that enable communities to live safely with pipelines.''.

(b) Section 60106(d) is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following: ''In addition, the Secretary may end an agreement for the oversight of interstate pipeline transportation when the Secretary finds that there are significant gaps in the regulatory authority of the State authority over intrastate pipeline transportation, or that continued participation by the State authority in the oversight of interstate pipeline transportation is not consistent with the Secretary's program or would adversely affect oversight of intrastate pipeline transportation, or that the State is not promoting activities that enable communities to live safely with pipelines.''.

(c) STATE GRANTS.—Section 60107 is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(e) SPECIAL INVESTIGATION OF INTERSTATE PIPELINE FACILITIES.—

''(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary may pay up to 100 percent of the cost of the personnel, equipment, and activities of a State authority acting as an agent of the Secretary in conducting a special investigation involved in monitoring new construction or investigating an incident, on an interstate gas pipeline facility or an interstate hazardous liquid pipeline facility.

''(2) This subsection shall become effective on October 1, 2001.''.

SEC. 7. IMPROVED DATA AND DATA AVAILABILITY.

(a) REPORT OF RELEASES EXCEEDING 5 GALLONS.—Section 60117(b) is amended—

(1) by inserting ''(1)'' before ''To'';

(2) redesignating paragraphs (1) and (2) as subparagraphs (A) and (B);

(3) inserting before the last sentence the following:

''(2) A person owning or operating a hazardous liquid pipeline facility shall report to the Secretary each release to the environment greater than five gallons of the hazardous liquid or carbon dioxide transported. This section applies to releases from pipeline facilities regulated under this chapter and from rural gathering lines not regulated under this chapter. A report must include the location of the release, fatalities and personal injuries, type of product, amount of product release, causes of the release, extent of damage to property and the environment, and the response undertaken to clean up the release.

''(3) During the course of an incident investigation, a person owning or operating a pipeline facility shall make records, reports, and information required under subsection (a) of this section or other reasonably described records, reports, and information relevant to the incident investigation available to the Secretary within the time limits prescribed in a written request.''; and

(4) inserting ''(4)'' before ''The Secretary''.

(b) PENALTY AUTHORITIES.—

(1) Section 60122(a) is amended by striking ''60114(c)'' and substituting ''60117(b)(3)''.

(2) Section 60123(a) is amended by striking ''60114(c)'' and substituting ''60117(b)(3)''.

(c) Section 60117 is amended by adding at the end the following:

''(l) NATIONAL DEPOSITORY.—The Secretary shall establish a national depository of data on events and conditions, including spill histories and corrective actions for specific incidents, that can be used to evaluate the risk of, and to prevent, pipeline failures and releases. The Secretary may establish the depository through cooperative arrangements, and the Secretary shall make such information available for use by State and local planning and emergency response authorities and the public.''.

SEC. 8. ENHANCED INVESTIGATION AUTHORITIES.

(a) CLARIFICATION OF AUTHORITY.—Section 60117(c) is amended by striking ''decide whether a person is complying with this chapter and standards prescribed or orders issued under this chapter'' and inserting ''carry out the duties and responsibilities of this chapter. The Secretary may question an individual about matters relevant to an investigation, including such matters as the design, construction, operation, or maintenance of the system, the individual's qualifications, or the operator's response to an emergency''.

(b) EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATION.—Section 60117, as amended by section 7, is further amended by adding at the end the following:

''(m) EXTRAORDINARY EXPENSES OF INCIDENT INVESTIGATION.—The Secretary may, by regulation, establish procedures to recover the Secretary's costs incurred because of investigation of incidents from the operators of the pipeline facilities involved in the incidents. These costs may include travel costs and contract support for the investigation and monitoring of the corrective measures. All sums collected shall be deposited into the Pipeline Safety Fund and shall be available, to the extent and in the amount provided in advance in appropriations acts, to reimburse the Secretary for the costs of investigation and monitoring of the incidents. Such amounts are authorized to be appropriated to be available until expended.''.

SEC. 9. INTERNATIONAL AUTHORITY.

Section 60117, as amended by section 8, is further amended by adding at the end the following subsection:

''(n) GLOBAL SHARING OF ENVIRONMENTAL AND SAFETY INFORMATION.—Subject to guidance and direction of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Transportation is directed to support international efforts to share information about the risks to the public and the environment from pipelines and the means of protecting against those risks. The extent of support should include a consideration of the benefits to the public from an increased understanding by the Secretary of technical issues about pipeline safety and environmental protection and from possible improvement in environmental protection outside the United States.''.

SEC. 10. RISK MANAGEMENT DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.

Section 60126(a) is amended by adding at the end the following paragraph:

''(3) CONTINUATION OF INDIVIDUAL PROJECT.—Without regard to any recommendations made with respect to the risk management demonstration program under subsection (e) of this section, the Secretary may, by order, allow the continuation of an individual project begun under this program beyond the termination of the program, provided the Secretary finds that—

''(A) the pipeline operator has a clear and established record of compliance with respect to safety and environmental protection;

''(B) the project is achieving superior levels of public safety and environmental protection; and

''(C) the continuation would not extend the project more than four years from the date of the initial approval of the project.''.

SEC. 11. SUPPORT FOR INNOVATIVE TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT.

Section 60117, as amended by section 9, is further amended by adding at the end the following subsection:

''(o) SUPPORT FOR INNOVATIVE TECHNOLOGY DEVELOPMENT.—

''(1) To the extent and in the amount provided in advance in appropriations acts, the Secretary of Transportation shall participate in the development of alternative technologies—

''(A) in fiscal year 2001 and thereafter, to—

''(i) identify outside force damage using internal inspection devices; and

''(ii) monitor outside-force damage to pipelines; and

''(B) In fiscal year 2002 and thereafter, to inspect pipelines that cannot accommodate internal inspection devices available on the date of the enactment of the Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000.

''(2) The Secretary may support such technological development through cooperative agreements with trade associations, academic institutions, or other qualified organizations.''.

SEC. 12. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) Section 60125 is amended—

(1) by striking subsections (a), (b), (c)(1), and (d) and inserting the following:

''(a) GAS AND HAZARDOUS LIQUID.—To carry out this chapter and other pipeline-related damage prevention activities of this title (except for section 60107), there are authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Transportation—

''(1) $30,118,000 for fiscal year 2001; and

''(2) such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 2002, 2003, and 2004.

''(b) STATE GRANTS.—

''(1) Not more than the following amounts may be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out section 60107:

''(A) $17,019,000 for fiscal year 2001.

''(B) Such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 2002, 2003, and 2004.''; and

(2) redesignating subsections (e) and (f) as subsections (c) and (d), respectively.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague, Senator HOLLINGS, in introducing, by request, the Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act of 2000 proposed and announced yesterday by Vice President GORE. This legislation is an important step forward in improving safety and environmental protection in oil and gas pipelines.

Mr. President, last Friday night, the State of Maryland experienced a major oil spill—one its worst spills in many years. More than 110,000 gallons of No. 2 oil leaked from a pipe at Pepco's Chalk Point Generating Station into Swanson Creek in Prince Georges County. Bad weather and high winds exacerbated the problem and spread the spill into the Patuxent River. It has now affected some 8 miles of shoreline, acres of sensitive wetland habitat, and dozens of wildlife in three counties along the Patuxent.

Six federal agencies—EPA, the U.S. Coast Guard, Fish and Wildlife Service, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, U.S. Department of Transportation and the National Transportation Safety Board—are on site coordinating clean-up activities and investigations into the causes of the leak. The Maryland Departments of the Environment and Natural Resources have taken steps to protect and rehabilitate impacted wildlife and to restrict harvesting in clam and oyster beds in the area. Pepco crews and contractors have recovered more than 70,000 gallons of the spilled oil. But recovering or cleaning up the remaining oil will be much more difficult and its cumulative impact on the environment will not be known for months, if not years. The Federal and State agencies have an important responsibility to ensure that Pepco does everything possible to clean up the spill and remediate the environmental and economic damage. But an aggressive clean-up effort must be accompanied with a comprehensive program to prevent such spills from occurring in the first place. While the precise cause of this oil leak is not yet known and is still under investigation, steps can and must be taken to help detect problems before pipelines fail and to minimize the environmental and other consequences of a failure.

The Pipeline Safety and Community Protection Act being introduced today would reauthorize and enhance the U.S. Department of Transportation's pipeline safety program by increasing inspection and testing of pipeline integrity. It would require pipeline operators to take extra precautions in populated or environmentally sensitive areas, such as the area where the Pepco spill occurred. It would strengthen enforcement authorities by expanding penalties for violations and compliance monitoring by Federal and State investigators. It would expand research into new technologies for monitoring pipelines and detecting leaks. Finally, it would strengthen Community-Right-to-Know and reporting requirements on releases and authorize additional funding for the Department's and State pipeline safety activities.

Mr. President, this legislation is strongly supported by the State of Maryland and represents a constructive step forward in enhancing safety and environmental protection in pipeline transportation. I look forward to working with the members of the Commerce Committee as they consider this and other proposals to reauthorize the pipeline safety program.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI (by request):

S. 2410. A bill to increase the authorization of appropriations for the Reclamation Safety of Dams Act of 1978, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

AUTHORIZATION INCREASE FOR THE RECLAMATION SAFETY OF DAMS ACT

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I send to the desk, for appropriate reference, legislation submitted by the administration to increase the authorization of appropriations for the Bureau of Reclamation's Safety of Dams program. Let me emphasize that I am introducing this legislation at the request of the administration. Neither I nor any other member of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources has taken a position on the merits of the legislation at this time. I understand some water users have expressed concerns with this legislation, and I want to assure them that the Water and Power Subcommittee, to which this bill will be referred, will have a hearing on the legislation so that they can make their concerns a part of the record and address them in the legislative process. Ensuring the safety of dams under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Reclamation is very important but is must be done in a way that ensures safety at Reclamation facilities while not causing undue financial hardship for project beneficiaries. I ask unanimous consent that the letter of transmittal from the administration and a section-by-section of the legislation that the administration prepared be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF RECLAMATION,
Washington, DC, August 5, 1999.

Hon. ALBERT GORE,
President of the Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Enclosed is draft legislation to increase by $380,000,000 the authorized cost ceiling for the Bureau of Reclamation's dam safety program authorized program authorized in Public Law 95–578 and Public Law 98–404. I would appreciate your assistance in seeing that this legislation is introduced, referred to the appropriate Congressional Committee for consideration, and enacted.

The Bureau of Reclamation's dam safety program is designed to ensure that its facilities are operated in a safe and reliable condition. The purpose of the program is to protect the public, property and natural resources downstream of Reclamation structures.

The Bureau of Reclamation expends approximately $60 million per year for dam safety purposes and estimates that the existing $650,000,000 cost ceiling will be exceeded in Fiscal Year 2001. The enclosed legislation is necessary to continue funding this important program.

In addition to increasing the authorized cost ceiling, the legislation would make a few important changes to the dam safety program. Under existing law, irrigators are required to pay a portion of the dam safety costs within 50 years without interest. The draft bill would amend the statute to charge interest on the dam safety costs allocated for irrigation purposes, This makes irrigation repayment terms for dam safety activities consistent with municipal and industrial water supply.

Existing law also requires the Bureau of Reclamation to send a dam modifications report to Congress for dam safety work costing more than $750,000. The report must rest before Congress for 60 legislative days prior to Reclamation obligating funds for dam safety construction, The attached legislation would raise the threshold for a Congressional report to $1.2 million, reduce to 30 calendar days the time required for a dam safety modification report to rest in Congress prior to Reclamation commencing dam safety repair work.

A section-by-section analysis of the legislation also is attached. Thank you for your consideration of this request.

A similar package has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. If you have any questions concerning this legislation, please contact James Hess, Acting Chief, Congressional and Legislative Affairs Group for the Bureau of Reclamation, at 202–208–5840.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the presentation of this proposal from the standpoint of the administration's program.

Sincerely,

ELUID L. MARTINEZ,
Commissioner.

Enclosure

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section (A)(1). Makes Federal dam safety assistance unavailable for costs incurred because the operating entity does not adequately maintain the structure.

Section 1(A)(2)(a). Makes the additional $380 million authorized to be appropriated by Section 1(B)(1) subject to the 15 percent reimbursability requirement.

Section 1(A(2)(b). Strikes the existing provision that limits repayment of the costs allocated to irrigation to the irrigators' ability to pay.

Section 1(A)(2)(c)–(d). Renumbers the subsections of existing Section 4.

Section 1(A)(2)(e). Existing law requires that dam safety costs allocated to certain purposes, including municipal, industrial, and power, but not including irrigation, be repaid with interest. This provision includes irrigation costs among those to be repaid with interest. Furthermore, costs allocated to irrigation under this Act should be repaid by the irrigators without assistance from power revenues.

Section 1(A)(2)(f). Explicitly provides that costs allocated under this Act to project purposes will be repaid with interest and without regard to water users' ability to pay, thereby eliminating any assistance from power users to water users.

Section 1(A)(3). Authorizes the Secretary to use monies received pursuant to a repayment contract at any time prior to completion of the dam safety construction work.

Section 1(B)(1). Authorizes the appropriation of an additional $380 million (indexed for inflation) for dam safety.

Section 1(B)(2). Increases to $1,200,000 (indexed for inflation) the threshold amount of triggering when the Bureau of Reclamation must send a modification report to Congress prior to obligating funds for dam safety construction. Existing law requires a report for any obligation exceeding $750,000.

Section 1(B)(3). Reduces from 60 legislative days to 30 calendar days the time that a dam safety modification report must lie before Congress before the Bureau of Reclamation can obligate funds for dam safety construction.

By Mr. DASCHLE (for himself, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. JOHNSON, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. KOHL, Mr. KERREY, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mr. LEVIN, and Mr. JEFFORDS)

S. 2411. A bill to enhance competition in the agricultural sector and to protect family farms and ranches and rural communities from unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practices by agribusinesses, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

FARMERS AND RANCHERS FAIR COMPETITION ACT OF 2000

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2411

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Farmers and Ranchers Fair Competition Act of 2000''.

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents for this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Findings and purposes.
Sec. 3. Definitions.
Sec. 4. Prohibitions against unfair practices in transactions involving agricultural commodities.
Sec. 5. Reports of the Secretary on potential unfair practices.
Sec. 6. Plain language and disclosure requirements for contracts.
Sec. 7. Report on corporate structure.
Sec. 8. Mandatory funding for staff.
Sec. 9. General Accounting Office study.
Sec. 10. Authority to promulgate regulations.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Congressional Joint Economic Committee data suggests that over the last 15 years, agribusiness profits have come almost exclusively out of producer income, rather than from increased retail prices. Given the lack of market power of producers, this data raises the question of whether the trend has been a natural market development or is instead a sign of market failure.

(2) Most economists agree that in the last 15 years the real market price for a market basket of food has increased by approximately 3 percent, while the farm value of that food has fallen by approximately 38 percent. Over that period, marketing costs have decreased by 15 percent, which should have narrowed rather than widened the gap.

(3) There is significant concern that increasingly vertically integrated multinational corporations, especially those that own broad biotechnology patents, may be able to exert unreasonable and excessive market power in the future by acquiring companies that own other broad biotechnology patents.

(4) The National Association of Attorneys General is very concerned with the high degree of economic concentration in the agricultural sector and the great potential for anticompetitive practices and behavior. They estimate the top 4 meat packing firms control over 80 percent of steer and heifer slaughter, over 55 percent of hog slaughter, and over 65 percent of sheep slaughter. Increased concentration in the dairy procurement and processing sector is also raising significant concerns.

(5) In the grain industry, United States Department of Agriculture reports that the top 4 firms controlled 56 percent of flour milling, 73 percent of wet corn milling, 71 percent of soybean milling, and 62 percent of cotton seed oil milling.

(6) Moreover, the figures in paragraphs (4) and (5) underestimate true levels of concentration and potential market power because they fail to reflect the web of unreported and difficult to trace joint ventures, strategic alliances, interlocking directorates, and other partial ownership arrangements that link many large corporations.

(7) Concentration of market power also has the effect of increasing the transfer of investment, capital, jobs, and necessary social services out of rural areas to business centers throughout the world. Many individuals representing a wide range of expertise have expressed concern with the potential implications of this trend for the greater public good.

(8) The recent increase in contracting for the production or sale of agricultural commodities, such as livestock and poultry, is a cause for concern because of the significant bargaining power the buyers of these products or services wield over individual farmers and ranchers.

(9) Transparent, freely accessible, and competitive markets are being supplanted by transfer prices set within vertically integrated firms and by the increasing use of private contracts.

(10) Agribusiness firms are showing record profits at the same time that farmers and ranchers are struggling to survive an ongoing price collapse and erratic price trends.

(11) The efforts of farmers and ranchers to improve their market position is hampered by—

(A) extreme disparities in bargaining power between agribusiness firms and the hundreds of thousands of individual farmers and ranchers that sell products to them;

(B) the rapid increase in the use of private contracts that disrupt price discovery and can unfairly disadvantage producers;

(C) the extreme market power of agribusiness firms and alleged anticompetitive practices in the industry;

(D) shrinking opportunities for market access by producers; and

(E) the direct and indirect impact these factors have on the continuing viability of thousands of rural communities across the country.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) enhance fair and open competition in rural America, thereby fostering innovation and economic growth;

(2) permit the Secretary to take actions to enhance the bargaining position of family farmers and ranchers, and to promote the viability of rural communities nationwide;

(3) protect family farms and ranches from—

(A) unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practices or devices;

(B) false or misleading statements;

(C) retaliation related to statements lawfully provided; and

(D) other unfair trade practices employed by processors and other agribusinesses; and

(4) permit the Secretary to take actions to enhance the viability of rural communities nationwide.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) AGRICULTURAL COMMODITY.—The term ''agricultural commodity'' has the meaning given the term in section 102 of the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978 (7 U.S.C. 5602).

(2) AGRICULTURAL COOPERATIVE.—The term ''agricultural cooperative'' means an association of persons engaged in the production, marketing, or processing of an agricultural commodity that meets the requirements of the Act of February 18, 1922, ''An Act to authorize association of producers of agricultural products'' (7 U.S.C. 291 et seq.; 42 Stat. 388) (commonly known as the ''Capper-Volstead Act'').

(3) BROKER.—The term ''broker'' means any person engaged in the business of negotiating sales and purchases of any agricultural commodity in interstate or foreign commerce for or on behalf of the vendor or the purchaser, except that no person shall be considered a broker if the person's sales of such commodities are not in excess of $1,000,000 per year.

(4) COMMISSION MERCHANT.—The term ''commission merchant'' means any person engaged in the business of receiving in interstate or foreign commerce any agricultural commodity for sale, on commission, or for or on behalf of another, except that no person shall be considered a commission merchant if the person's sales of such commodities are not in excess of $1,000,000 per year.

(5) DEALER.—The term ''dealer'' means—

(A) any person (except an agricultural cooperative) engaged in the business of buying, selling, or marketing agricultural commodities in wholesale or jobbing quantities, as determined by the Secretary, in interstate or foreign commerce, except—

(i) no person shall be considered a dealer with respect to sales or marketing of any agricultural commodity of that person's own raising provided such sales or marketing of such agricultural commodities do not exceed $10,000,000 per year; and

(ii) no person shall be considered a dealer who buys, sells, or markets less than $1,000,000 per year of such commodities; and

(B) an agricultural cooperative which sells or markets agricultural commodities of its members' own production if such agricultural cooperative sells or markets more than $1,000,000 of its members' production per year of such commodities.

(6) PROCESSOR.—The term ''processor'' means—

(A) any person (except an agricultural cooperative) engaged in the business of handling, preparing, or manufacturing (including slaughtering) of an agricultural commodity or the products of such agricultural commodity for sale or marketing in interstate or foreign commerce for human consumption except—

(i) no person shall be considered a processor with respect to the handling, preparing, or manufacturing (including slaughtering) of an agricultural commodity of that person's own raising provided such sales or marketing of such agricultural commodities do not exceed $10,000,000 per year; and

(ii) no person who handles, prepares, or manufactures (including slaughtering) an agricultural commodity in an amount less than $1,000,000 per year shall be considered a processor; and

(B) an agricultural cooperative which processes agricultural commodities of its members' own production if such agricultural cooperative processes more than $1,000,000 of its members' production of such commodities per year.

(7) SECRETARY.—The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 4. PROHIBITIONS AGAINST UNFAIR PRACTICES IN TRANSACTIONS INVOLVING AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES.

(a) PROHIBITIONS.—It shall be unlawful in, or in connection with, any transaction in interstate or foreign commerce for any dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker—

(1) to engage in or use any unfair, unreasonable, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device in the marketing, receiving, purchasing, sale, or contracting for the production of any agricultural commodity;

(2) to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or locality or subject any particular person or locality to any undue or unreasonable disadvantage in connection with any transaction involving any agricultural commodity;

(3) to make any false or misleading statement in connection with any transaction involving any agricultural commodity that is purchased or received in interstate or foreign commerce, or involving any production contract, or to fail, without reasonable cause, to perform any specification or duty, express or implied, arising out of any undertaking in connection with any such transaction or production contract;

(4) to retaliate against or disadvantage, or to conspire to retaliate against or disadvantage, any person because of statements or information lawfully provided by such person to any person (including to the Secretary or to a law enforcement agency) regarding alleged improper actions or violations of law by such dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker (unless such statements or information are determined to be libelous or slanderous under applicable State law);

(5) to include as part of any new or renewed agreement or contract a right of first refusal, or to make any sale or transaction contingent upon the granting of a right of first refusal, until 180 days after the General Accounting Office study under section 8 is complete; or

(6) to offer different prices contemporaneously for agricultural commodities of like grade and quality (except commodities regulated by the Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act (7 U.S.C. 181 et seq.)) unless—

(A) the commodity is purchased in a public market through a competitive bidding process or under similar conditions which provide opportunities for multiple competitors to seek to acquire the commodity;

(B) the premium or discount reflects the actual cost of acquiring a commodity prior to processing; or

(C) the Secretary has determined that such types of offers do not have a discriminatory impact against small volume producers.

(b) VIOLATIONS.—

(1) COMPLAINTS.—Whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that any dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker has violated any provision of subsection (a), the Secretary shall cause a complaint in writing to be served on that person or persons, stating the charges in that respect, and requiring the dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker to attend and testify at a hearing to be held not sooner than 30 days after the service of such complaint.

(2) HEARING.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may hold hearings, sign and issue subpoenas, administer oaths, examine witnesses, receive evidence, and require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of such accounts, records, and memoranda, as the Secretary deems necessary, for the determination of the existence of any violation of this subsection.

(B) RIGHT TO HEARING.—A dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker may request a hearing if the dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker is subject to penalty for unfair conduct, under this subsection.

(C) RESPONDENTS RIGHTS.—During a hearing the dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker shall be given, pursuant to regulations issued by the Secretary, the opportunity—

(i) to be informed of the evidence against such person;

(ii) to cross-examine witnesses; and

(iii) to present evidence.

(D) HEARING LIMITATION.—The issues of any hearing held or requested under this section shall be limited in scope to matters directly related to the purpose for which such hearing was held or requested.

(3) REPORT OF FINDING AND PENALTIES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—If, after a hearing, the Secretary finds that the dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker has violated any provisions of subsection (a), the Secretary shall make a report in writing which states the findings of fact and includes an order requiring the dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker to cease and desist from continuing such violation.

(B) CIVIL PENALTY.—The Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $100,000 for each such violation of subsection (a).

(4) TEMPORARY INJUNCTION AND FINALITY AND APPEALABILITY OF AN ORDER.—

(A) TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.—At any time after a complaint is filed under paragraph (1), the court, on application of the Secretary, may issue a temporary injunction, restraining to the extent it deems proper, the dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker and such person's officers, directors, agents, and employees from violating any of the provisions of subsection (a).

(B) APPEALABILITY OF AN ORDER.—An order issued pursuant to this subsection shall be final and conclusive unless within 30 days after service of the order, the dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker petitions to appeal the order to the court of appeals for the circuit in which such person resides or has its principal place of business or the District of Columbia Circuit Court of Appeals.

(C) DELIVERY OF PETITION.—The clerk of the court shall immediately cause a copy of the petition filed under subparagraph (B) to be delivered to the Secretary and the Secretary shall thereupon file in the court the record of the proceedings under this subsection.

(D) PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO OBEY AN ORDER.—Any dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker which fails to obey any order of the Secretary issued under the provisions of this section after such order or such order as modified has been sustained by the court or has otherwise become final, shall be fined not less than $5,000 and not more than $100,000 for each offense. Each day during which such failure continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

(5) RECORDS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Every dealer, processor, commission merchant, and broker shall keep for a period of not less than 5 years such accounts, records, and memoranda (including marketing agreements, forward contracts, and formula pricing arrangements) and fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in the business of such person, including the true ownership of the business.

(B) FAILURE TO KEEP RECORDS OR ALLOW THE SECRETARY TO INSPECT RECORDS.—Failure to keep, or allow the Secretary to inspect records as required by this paragraph shall constitute an unfair practice in violation of subsection (a)(1).

(C) INSPECTION OF RECORDS.—The Secretary shall have the right to inspect such accounts, records, and memoranda (including marketing agreements, forward contracts, and formula pricing arrangements) of any dealer, processor, commission merchant, and broker as may be material to the investigation of any alleged violation of this section or for the purpose of investigating the business conduct or practices of an organization with respect to such dealer, processor, commission merchant or broker.

(c) COMPENSATION FOR INJURY.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF THE FAMILY FARMER AND RANCHER CLAIMS COMMISSION.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall appoint 3 individuals to a commission to be known as the ''Family Farmer and Rancher Claims Commission'' (in this subsection referred to as the ''Commission'') to review claims of family farmers and ranchers who have suffered financial damages as a result of any violation of this section as determined by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (b)(3).

(B) TERM OF SERVICE.—The member of the Commission shall serve 3-year terms which may be renewed. The initial members of the Commission may be appointed for a period of less than 3 years, as determined by the Secretary.

(2) REVIEW OF CLAIMS.—

(A) SUBMISSION OF CLAIMS.—Family farmers and ranchers damaged as a result of a violation of this section as determined by the Secretary, pursuant to subsection (c)(3) may preserve the right to claim financial damages under this section by filing a claim pursuant to regulations promulgated by the Secretary.

(B) DETERMINATION.—Based on a review of such claims, the Commission shall determine the amount of damages to be paid, if any, as a result of the violation.

(C) REVIEW.—The decisions of the Commission under this paragraph shall not be subject to judicial review except to determine that the amount of damages to be paid is consistent with the published regulations of the Secretary that establish the criteria for implementing this subsection.

(3) FUNDING.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Funds collected from civil penalties pursuant to this section shall be transferred to a special fund in the Treasury, shall be made available to the Secretary without further appropriation, and shall remain available until expended to pay the expenses of the Commission and the claims described in this subsection.

(B) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.—In addition to the funds described in subparagraph (A), there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this section.

(4) NO PRECLUSION OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.—By filing an action under this subsection, a family farmer or rancher is not precluded from bringing a cause of action against a dealer, processor, commission, merchant, or broker in any court of appropriate jurisdiction.

(d) AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY.—Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary and the Attorney General shall develop and implement a plan to enable, where appropriate, the Secretary to file civil actions, including temporary injunctions, to enforce orders issued by the Secretary under this Act.

SEC. 5. REPORTS OF THE SECRETARY ON POTENTIAL UNFAIR PRACTICES.

(a) FILING PREMERGER NOTICES WITH THE SECRETARY.—No dealer, processor, commission merchant, broker, operator of a warehouse of agricultural commodities, or other agricultural related business shall merge or acquire, directly or indirectly, any voting securities or assets of any other dealer, processor, commission merchant, broker, operator of a warehouse of agricultural commodities, or other agricultural related business unless both persons (or in the case of a tender offer, the acquiring person) file notification pursuant to rules promulgated by the Secretary if—

(1) any voting securities or assets of the dealer, processor, commission merchant, broker, operator of a warehouse of agricultural commodities or other agricultural related business with annual net sales or total assets of $10,000,000 or more are being acquired by a dealer, processor, commission merchant, broker, or operator of a warehouse of agricultural commodities, or other agricultural related business which has total assets or annual net sales of $100,000,000 or more; and

(2) any voting securities or assets of a dealer, processor, commission merchant, broker, operator of a warehouse of agricultural commodities, or other agricultural related business with annual net sales or total assets of $100,000,000 or more are being acquired by any dealer, processor, commission merchant, broker, operator of a warehouse of agricultural commodities, or agriculture related business with annual net sales or total assets of $10,000,000 or more and as a result of such acquisition, if the acquiring person would hold—

(A) 15 percent or more of the voting securities or assets of the acquired person; or

(B) an aggregate total amount of the voting securities and assets of the acquired person in excess of $15,000,000.

(b) REVIEW OF THE SECRETARY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the Secretary may conduct a review of any merger or acquisition described in subsection (a).

(2) EXCEPTION.—The Secretary shall conduct a review of any merger or acquisition described in subsection (a) upon a request from a member of Congress.

(c) ACCESS TO RECORDS.—The Secretary may request any information including any testimony, documentary material, or related information from a dealer, processor, commission merchant, broker, or operator of a warehouse of agricultural commodities, or other agricultural related business, pertaining to any merger or acquisition of any agriculture related business.

(d) PURPOSE OF REVIEW.—

(1) FINDINGS.—The review described in subsection (a) shall make findings whether the merger or acquisition could—

(A) be significantly detrimental to the present or future viability of family farms or ranches or rural communities in the areas affected by the merger or acquisition, pursuant to standards established by the Secretary; or

(B) lead to a violation of section 4(a) of this Act.

(2) REMEDIES.—The review may include a determination of possible remedies regarding how the parties of the merger or acquisition may take steps to modify their operations to address the findings described in paragraph (1).

(e) REPORT OF REVIEW.—

(1) PRELIMINARY REPORT.—After conducting the review described in this section, the Secretary shall issue a preliminary report to the parties of the merger or acquisition and the Attorney General or the Federal Trade Commission, as appropriate, which shall include findings and any remedies described in subsection (d)(2).

(2) FINAL REPORT.—After affording the parties described in paragraph (1) an opportunity for a hearing regarding the findings and any proposed remedies in the preliminary report, the Secretary shall issue a final report to the President and Attorney General or the Federal Trade Commission, as appropriate, with respect to the merger or acquisition.

(f) IMPLEMENTATION OF THE REPORT.—Not later than 120 days after the issuance of a final report described in subsection (e), the parties of the merger or acquisition affected by such report shall make changes to their operations or structure to comply with the findings and implement any suggested remedy or any agreed upon alternative remedy and shall file a response demonstrating such compliance or implementation.

(g) CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION.—Information used by the Secretary to conduct the review pursuant to this section provided by a party of the merger or acquisition under review or by a government agency shall be treated by the Secretary as confidential information pursuant to section 1770 of the Food Security Act of 1985 (7 U.S.C. 2276), except that the Secretary may share any information with the Attorney General, the Federal Trade Commission, and a party seeking a hearing pursuant to subsection (e)(2) with respect to information relating to such party. The report issued under subsection (e) shall be available to the public consistent with the confidentiality provisions of this subsection.

(h) PENALTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—After affording the parties an opportunity for a hearing, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $300,000 for the failure of a person to comply with the requirements of subsections (a) and (f). Such hearing shall be limited to the issue of the amount of the civil penalty.

(2) FAILURE TO FOLLOW AN ORDER.—If after being assessed a civil penalty in accordance with paragraph (1) a person continues to fail to meet the applicable requirements of subsections (a) and (f), the Secretary may, after affording the parties an opportunity for a hearing, assess a further civil penalty not to exceed $100,000 for each day such person continues such violation. Such hearing shall be limited to the issue of the additional civil penalty assessed under this paragraph.

SEC. 6. PLAIN LANGUAGE AND DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS FOR CONTRACTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any contract between a family farmer or rancher and a dealer, processor, commission merchant, broker, operator of a warehouse of agricultural commodities, or other agricultural related business shall—

(1) be written in a clear and coherent manner using words with common and everyday meanings and shall be appropriately divided and captioned by various sections;

(2) disclose in a manner consistent with paragraph (1)—

(A) contract duration;

(B) contract termination;

(C) renegotiation standards;

(D) responsibility for environmental damage;

(E) factors to be used in determining performance payments;

(F) which parties shall be responsible for obtaining and complying with necessary local, State, and Federal government permits; and

(G) any other contract terms the Secretary determines is appropriate for disclosure; and

(3) not contain a confidentiality requirement barring a party of a contract from sharing terms of such contract (excluding trade secrets as applied in the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. 552 et seq.)) for the purposes of obtaining legal or financial advice or for the purpose of responding to a request from Federal or State agencies.

(b) PENALTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—After affording the parties an opportunity for a hearing, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $100,000 for the failure of a person to comply with the requirements of this section. Such hearing shall be limited to the issue of the amount of the civil penalty.

(2) FAILURE TO FOLLOW AN ORDER.—If after being assessed a civil penalty in accordance with paragraph (1), a person continues to fail to meet the applicable requirements of this section, the Secretary may, after affording the parties an opportunity for a hearing, assess a further civil penalty not to exceed $100,000 for each day such person continues such violation. Such hearing shall be limited to the issue of the amount of the additional civil penalty assessed under this paragraph.

(c) IMPLEMENTATION.—The requirements imposed by this section shall be applicable to contracts entered into or renewed 60 days or subsequently after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 7. REPORT ON CORPORATE STRUCTURE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—A dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker with annual sales in excess of $100,000,000 shall annually file with the Secretary, a report which describes, with respect to both domestic and foreign activities; the strategic alliances; ownership in other agribusiness firms or agribusiness-related firms; joint ventures; subsidiaries; brand names; and interlocking boards of directors with other corporations, representatives, and agents that lobby Congress on behalf of such dealer, processor, commission merchant, or broker, as determined by the Secretary. This subsection shall not be construed to apply to contracts.

(b) PENALTIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—After affording the parties an opportunity for a hearing, the Secretary may assess a civil penalty not to exceed $100,000 for the failure of a person to comply with the requirements of this section. Such a hearing shall be limited to the issue of the amount of the civil penalty

(2) FAILURE TO FOLLOW AN ORDER.—If after being assessed a civil penalty in accordance with paragraph (1) a person continues to fail to meet the applicable requirements of this section, the Secretary may, after affording the parties an opportunity for a hearing, assess a further civil penalty not to exceed $100,000 for each day such person continues such violation. Such hearing shall be limited to the amount of the additional civil penalty assessed under this paragraph.

SEC. 8. MANDATORY FUNDING FOR STAFF.

Out of the funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the Secretary of Treasury shall provide to the Secretary of Agriculture $7,000,000 in each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006, to hire, train, and provide for additional staff to carry out additional responsibilities under this Act, including a Special Counsel on Fair Market and Rural Opportunity, additional attorneys for the Office of General Counsel, investigators, economists, and support staff. Such sums shall be made available to the Secretary without further appropriation and shall be in addition to funds already made available to the Secretary for the purposes of this section.

SEC. 9. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE STUDY.

The Comptroller General of the United States, in consultation with the Attorney General, the Secretary, the Federal Trade Commission, the National Association of Attorney's General, and others, shall—

(1) study competition in the domestic farm economy with a special focus on protecting family farms and ranches and rural communities and the potential for monopsonistic and oligopsonistic effects nationally and regionally; and

(2) provide a report to the appropriate committees of Congress not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act on—

(A) the correlation between increases in the gap between retail consumer food prices and the prices paid to farmers and ranchers and any increases in concentration among processors, manufacturers, or other firms that buy from farmers and ranchers;

(B) the extent to which the use of formula pricing, marketing agreements, forward contracting, and production contracts tend to give processors, agribusinesses, and other buyers of agricultural commodities unreasonable market power over their producer/suppliers in the local markets;

(C) whether the granting of process patents relating to biotechnology research affecting agriculture during the past 20 years has tended to overly restrict related biotechnology research or has tended to overly limit competition in the biotechnology industries that affect agriculture in a manner that is contrary to the public interest, or could do either in the future;

(D) whether acquisitions of companies that own biotechnology patents and seed patents by multinational companies have the potential for reducing competition in the United States and unduly increasing the market power of such multinational companies;

(E) whether existing processors or agribusiness have disproportionate market power and if competition could be increased if such processors or agribusiness were required to divest assets to assure that they do not exert this disproportionate market power over local markets;

(F) the extent of increase in concentration in milk processing, procurement and handling, and the potential risks to the economic well-being of dairy farmers, and to the National School Lunch program, and other Federal nutrition programs of that increase in concentration;

(G) the impact of mergers, acquisitions, and joint ventures among dairy cooperatives on dairy farmers, including impacts on both members and nonmembers of the merging cooperatives;

(H) the impact of the significant increase in the use of stock as the primary means of effectuating mergers and acquisitions by large companies;

(I) the increase in the number and size of mergers or acquisitions in the United States and whether some of such mergers or acquisitions would have taken place if the merger or acquisition had to be consummated primarily with cash, other assets, or borrowing; and

(J) whether agricultural producers typically appear to derive any benefits (such as higher prices for their products or any other advantages) from right-of-first-refusal provisions contained in purchase contracts or other deals with agribusiness purchasers of such products.

SEC. 10. AUTHORITY TO PROMULGATE REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of Agriculture shall have the authority to promulgate regulations to carry out the responsibilities of the Secretary under this Act.

By Mr. MCCAIN:

S. 2412. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, to authorize appropriations for the National Transportation Safety Board for fiscal years 2000, 2001, 2002, and 2003, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION SAFETY BOARD AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2000

• Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, today I am introducing the National Transportation Safety Board Amendments Act of 2000. This bill proposes to reauthorize the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) through fiscal year 2003.

The NTSB is an independent agency charged with determining the probable cause of transportation accidents and promoting transportation safety. Among its many duties, the Board investigates accidents, conducts safety studies, and evaluates the effectiveness of other government agencies' programs for preventing transportation accidents. In my view, the NTSB is one of our nation's most critical governmental agencies and I want to commend its excellent work.

Since its inception in 1967, the NTSB has investigated more than 110,000 aviation accidents, at least 10,000 other accidents in the surface modes and issued more than 11,000 safety recommendations. The Board's commitment to accident investigation and the development of safety recommendations to prevent accidents from recurring is indeed admirable. The NTSB staff works tirelessly, and in many cases, under the least desirable circumstances.

The NTSB's authorization expired last September. The Board has submitted a reauthorization proposal and the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation held a hearing last year to review the Board's request. The reauthorization legislation I am introducing is intended to provide the Board with the resources necessary to carry out its important safety investigatory duties and provide further assistance to the Board in its efforts to fulfill its mission.

The legislation would authorize the Board for Fiscal years 2000–2003. As the Board requested, the bill would provide significant funding increases over the level currently authorized. The Chairman of the Board has testified that these funds are necessary in order to insure that the NTSB continues to make timely and accurate determinations of the probable causes of accidents, formulate realistic and feasible safety recommendations, and respond to the families of victims of transportation disasters in a professional and compassionate manner following those tragedies. The legislation also would raise the Board's emergency fund to the level commensurate to that which has been appropriated in recent years.

The bill includes language requested by the Safety Board to require the withholding from public disclosure of voice and video recorder information for all modes of transportation comparable to the protections already statutorily provided for cockpit voice recorders (CVRs). This provision would be an important step in ensuring that railroad, maritime, and motor vehicle recorders are properly protected from unwarranted disclosure or alternative use.

The bill provides the Board with authority to establish reasonable rates of overtime pay for its employees directly involved in accident-related work both on-scene and investigative. This authority was requested in acknowledgment of the extensive time spent by NTSB staff in carrying out their duties and the Board's inability under current law to more fairly compensate these employees. I want to remind my colleagues that the Federal Aviation Administration and the Coast Guard already have been provided authority by Congress to administer similar personnel payment matters.

The Board's budget has dramatically increased over the years and this measure includes a number of financial accountability provisions. Currently, the NTSB is one of the few agencies of the Federal Government not required to have a Chief Financial Office (CFO). While the Board on its own initiative does have a CFO, this bill would make that position permanent. The legislation also statutorily authorizes the Chairman to establish annual travel budgets to govern Board Member non-accident travel. After concerns were raised last year over excessive Board Member travel by myself and others, the Chairman established annual budgets and procedures governing non-accident-related travel. His actions were an important step in addressing fiscal accountability at the Board and I believe they should be continued in the future. Further, the bill would give the Inspector General of the Department of Transportation the authority to review the financial management and business operations of the Board to determine compliance with applicable Federal laws, rules, and regulations.

I have only taken time today to highlight a few sections of the bill. But I assure my colleagues that there are other provisions in the legislation designed to give the Safety Board the necessary tools to continue to fulfill its critical safety mission.

Mr. President. I urge my colleagues' support of this measure and look forward to bringing it to the full Senate for consideration in the near future.●

By Mr. CAMPBELL (for himself, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. HATCH, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. COVERDELL, Mr. ROBB, Mr. SCHUMER, Mr. REED, and Mr. REID):

S. 2413. A bill to amend the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 to clarify the procedures and conditions for the award of matching grants for the purchase of armor vests; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

BULLETPROOF VEST PARTNERSHIP GRANT ACT OF 2000

● Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. President, today Senator LEAHY and I are introducing the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 2000, a bill to expand an existing matching grant program to help State, tribal, and local jurisdictions purchase armor vests for the use by law enforcement officers. This bill represents another in a series of law enforcement legislative initiatives on which I have had the privilege to work with my friend and colleague from Vermont, Senator LEAHY. The Senator brings to the table invaluable experience in this area, from his distinguished service as a State's attorney in Vermont, a nationally recognized prosecutor, and as the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee. We are pleased to be joined in this effort by the distinguished chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, Senator HATCH, and Senators THURMOND, BINGAMAN, JEFFORDS, SARBANES, COVERDELL, ROBB, SCHUMER, REED, and REID.

Two years ago, Congress passed and the President signed into law the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 1998 (P.L. 105–181), which we were privileged to introduce. This highly successful Department of Justice grant program has already funded 92,000 new bulletproof vests for police officers across the country.

There are far too many law enforcement officers who patrol our streets and neighborhoods without the proper protective gear against violent criminals. As a former deputy sheriff, I know first-hand the risks which law enforcement officers face every day on the front lines protecting our communities.

Today, more than ever, violent criminals have bulletproof vests and deadly weapons at their disposal. In fact, figures from the U.S. Department of Justice indicate that approximately 150,000 law enforcement officers—or 25 percent of the nation's 600,000 state and local officers—do not have access to bulletproof vests.

The evidence is clear that a bulletproof vest is one of the most important pieces of equipment that any law enforcement officer can have. Since the introduction of modern bulletproof material, the lives of more than 1,500 officers have been saved by bulletproof vests. In fact, the Federal Bureau of Investigation has concluded that officers who do not wear bulletproof vests are 14 times more likely to be killed by a firearm than those officers who do wear vests. Simply put, bulletproof vests save lives.

Unfortunately, many police departments do not have the resources to purchase vests on their own. The Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 2000 would continue the partnership with state and local law enforcement agencies to make sure that every police officer who needs a bulletproof vest gets one. It would do so by authorizing up to $50 million per year for the grant program within the U.S. Department of Justice. In addition, the program would provide 50–50 matching grants to state and local law enforcement agencies and Indian tribes with under 100,000 residents to assist in purchasing bulletproof vests and body armor. Finally, this bill will make the purchase of stabproof vests eligible for grant awards.

While we know that there is no way to end the risks inherent to a career in law enforcement, we must do everything possible to ensure that officers who put their lives on the line every day also put on a vest. Body armor is one of the most important pieces of equipment an officer can have and often means the difference between life and death. The United States Senate can help, and I urge our colleagues to support prompt passage of this legislation.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2413

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the number of law enforcement officers who are killed in the line of duty would significantly decrease if every law enforcement officer in the United States had the protection of an armor vest;

(2) according to studies, between 1985 and 1994, 709 law enforcement officers in the United States were killed in the line of duty;

(3) the Federal Bureau of Investigation estimates that the risk of fatality to law enforcement officers while not wearing an armor vest is 14 times higher than for officers wearing an armor vest;

(4) according to studies, between 1985 and 1994, bullet-resistant materials helped save the lives of more than 2,000 law enforcement officers in the United States; and

(5) the Executive Committee for Indian Country Law Enforcement Improvements reports that violent crime in Indian country has risen sharply, despite a decrease in the national crime rate, and has concluded that there is a ''public safety crisis in Indian country''.

SEC. 3. MATCHING GRANT PROGRAM FOR LAW ENFORCEMENT ARMOR VESTS.

(a) MATCHING FUNDS.—Section 2501(f) of part Y of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3796ll(f) is amended—

(1) by striking ''The portion'' and inserting the following:

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The portion'';

(2) by striking ''subsection (a)'' and all that follows through the period at the end of the first sentence and inserting ''subsection (a)—

''(A) may not exceed 50 percent; and

''(B) shall equal 50 percent, if—

''(i) such grant is to a unit of local government with fewer than 100,000 residents;

''(ii) the Director of the Bureau of Justice Assistance determines that the quantity of vests to be purchased with such grant is reasonable; and

''(A) body armor'';

(2) by adding ''or'' at the end; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(B) body armor that has been tested through the voluntary compliance testing program, and found to meet or exceed the requirements of NIJ Standard 0115.00, or any revision of such standard;''.

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 1001(a)(23) of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3793(a)(23)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: '', and $50,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2004''.●

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I am proud to join the Senior Senator from Colorado in introducing the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 2000. We worked together closely and successfully with the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee in the last Congress to pass the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 1998 into law. I am pleased that Senator HATCH is again an original cosponsor of this bill. I am also pleased that Senators SCHUMER, REID of Nevada, SARBANES, ROBB, BINGAMAN, THURMOND, COVERDELL, and REED of Rhode Island are joining us as original cosponsors.

According to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, more than 40 percent of the 1,182 officers killed by a firearm in the line of duty since 1980 could have been saved if they had been wearing body armor. Indeed, the FBI estimates that the risk of fatality to officers while not wearing body armor is 14 times higher than for officers wearing it.

To better protect our Nation's law enforcement officers, Senator CAMPBELL and I introduced the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 1998. President Clinton signed our legislation into law on June 16, 1998 (public law 105–181). The law created a $25 million, 50 percent matching grant program within the Department of Justice to help state and local law enforcement agencies purchase body armor for fiscal years 1999–2001.

In its first year of operation, the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Program funded 92,000 new bulletproof vests for our Nation's police officers, including 361 vests for Vermont police officers. Applications are now available at the program's web site at http://vests.ojp.gov/ for this year's funds. The entire process of submitting applications and obtaining federal funds is completed through this web site.

The Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 2000 builds on the success of this program by doubling its annual funding to $50 million for fiscal years 2002–2004. It also improves the program by guaranteeing jurisdictions with fewer than 100,000 residents receive the full 50–50 matching funds because of the tight budgets of these smaller communities and by making the purchase of stab-proof vests eligible for grant awards to protect corrections officers and sheriffs who face violent criminals in close quarters in local and county jails.

More than ever before, police officers in Vermont and around the country face deadly threats that can strike at any time, even during routine traffic stops. Bulletproof vests save lives. It is essential that we update this law so that many more of our officers who are risking their lives everyday are able to protect themselves.

In the last Congress, we created the Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Program in part in response to the tragic Drega incident along the Vermont and New Hampshire border. On August 19, 1997, Federal, State and local law enforcement authorities in Vermont and New Hampshire had cornered Carl Drega, after hours of hot pursuit. This madman had just shot to death two New Hampshire state troopers and two other victims earlier in the day. In a massive exchange of gunfire with the authorities, Drega lost his life.

During that shootout, all federal law enforcement officers wore bulletproof vests, while some state and local officers did not. For example, Federal Border Patrol Officer John Pfeifer, a Vermonter, who was seriously wounded in the incident. If it was not for his bulletproof vest, I would have been attending Officer Pfeifer's wake instead of visiting him, and meeting his wife and young daughter in the hospital a few days later. I am relieved that Officer John Pfeifer is doing well and is back on duty today.

The two New Hampshire state troopers who were killed by Carl Drega were not so lucky. They were not wearing bulletproof vests. Protective vests might not have been able to save the lives of those courageous officers because of the high-powered assault weapons used by this madman. We all grieve for the two New Hampshire officers who were killed. Their tragedy underscore the point that all of our law enforcement officers, whether federal, state or local, deserve the protection of a bulletproof vest. With that and lesser-known incidents as constant reminders, I will continue to do all I can to help prevent loss of life among our law enforcement officers.

The Bulletproof Vest Partnership Grant Act of 2000 will provide state and local law enforcement agencies with more of the assistance they need to protect their officers. Our bipartisan legislation enjoys the endorsement of many law enforcement organizations, including the Fraternal Order of Police and the National Sheriffs' Association. In my home State of Vermont, the bill enjoys the strong support of the Vermont State Police, the Vermont Police Chiefs Association and many Vermont sheriffs, troopers, game wardens and other local and state law enforcement officials.

Since my time as a State prosecutor, I have always taken a keen interest in law enforcement in Vermont and around the country. Vermont has the reputation of being one of the safest states in which to live, work and visit, and rightly so. In no small part, this is due to the hard work of those who have sworn to serve and protect us. And we should do what we can to protect them, when a need like this one comes to our attention.

Our Nation's law enforcement officers put their lives at risk in the line of duty everyday. No one knows when danger will appear. Unfortunately, in today's violent world, even a traffic stop may not necessarily be "routine." Each and every law enforcement officer across the Nation deserves the protection of a bulletproof vest.

I look forward to working with my colleagues to ensure that each and every law enforcement agency in Vermont and across the Nation can afford basic protection for their officers.

By Mr. WELLSTONE:

S. 2414. A bill to combat trafficking of persons, especially into the sex trade, slavery, and slavery-like conditions, in the United States and countries around the world through prevention, through prosecution and enforcement against traffickers, and through protection and assistance to victims of trafficking; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

TRAFFICKING VICTIMS PROTECTION ACT OF 2000

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a bill today. I would like to thank my colleague, Senator BROWNBACK, for his superb work. It is called the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000. Basically, this is legislation I am doing together with Senator BROWNBACK. We are very hopeful we will have strong support in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, starting with the chairman.

The long and the short of it, colleagues, is, though, it is hard to believe, in the year 2000, there are maybe 50,000 women and children trafficked to our country, maybe as many as 2 million worldwide.

It is a dark, dark feature of this new world economy, where women and children are basically responding to ads, going to other countries, believing they will find employment; and they are forced into prostitution, they are forced into labor, and the conditions are absolutely atrocious.

It is unbelievable what has happened to these women and children. Therefore, we put an emphasis on, No. 1, prevention, to make sure that through AID we get information out to people in other countries, so women and children are not entrapped in this way.

No. 2, we want to make sure there are alternatives, such as good microloan programs, like NGOs for women.

No. 3, we put an emphasis on how we can provide some protection, which has to do with making sure if women step forward they are not automatically deported. There would be an extension of their visa so they would be able to speak out without worrying about being deported from our country. We would make sure there is treatment for women who have gone through this living hell.

Finally, there would be prosecution. Making it crystal clear to those who are engaged in trafficking, you are going to be hit with stiff financial penalties.

Senator FEINSTEIN, who is on the floor, has been a strong supporter of trying to do something about this, and to make sure that if you are going to traffic a child under the age of 14 for forced prostitution, you are going to serve a life sentence in prison.

We are going to call on the international community to take this seriously. I believe there will be strong support in the Senate. It would be a powerful and important human rights piece of legislation.

I am proud to introduce this legislation today. I think we can move it in committee. I think we can have strong bipartisan support. I thank Senator BROWNBACK, Senator FEINSTEIN, Senator BOXER, and others for their interest.

Mr. President, I am here today to introduce legislation to help end the horrific crime of trafficking in persons, particularly women and children, for the purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labor. This egregious human rights violation—and we must acknowledge trafficking in persons as the gross human rights abuse that it is—is a worldwide problem that must be confronted in domestic legislation as we continue to fight it on the international front.

At this very moment the administration is involved in negotiations in Vienna to strengthen international efforts to combat trafficking. We too must do our part. We need to enact a comprehensive trafficking bill into law in this Congress. Senator BROWNBACK and I have worked together closely to develop the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000, and we agree on every provision of the bill except for one. We are here together today to introduce separate trafficking bills but to relay to you the truly bipartisan effort this has been. Senator BROWNBACK, I look forward to continuing this effort as our respective bills move through the committee and to the floor.

Despite increasing governmental and international interest, trafficking in persons continues to be one of the darkest aspects of globalization of the world economy, becoming more insidious and more widespread everyday. It is not just a problem that takes place on distant shores, as many of us have been led to believe. A recent CIA analysis of the international trafficking of women to the United States reports that as many as 50,000 women and children each year are brought into the United States and forced to work as prostitutes, forced laborers, and servants. Others credibly estimate that the number is probably much higher than that.

In a hearing last week, I heard the almost unbelievable testimony of several women who had been victims of trafficking. But, I say almost unbelievable because I heard the truth directly from the mouths of those who have been hurt the most. One victim trafficked for sex from Mexico to Florida at the age of 14 told,

> Because I was a virgin, the men decided to initiate me by raping me again and again, to teach me how to have sex * * * Because I was so young, I was always in demand with the customers. It was awful. Although the men were supposed to wear condoms, some didn't so I eventually became pregnant and was forced to have an abortion.

I am here today to say that one victim is one too many. We have a serious problem that must be addressed.

The Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 is a comprehensive bill that addresses the three P's of trafficking: it aims to prevent trafficking in persons, provides protection and assistance to those who have been trafficked, and provides for tough prosecution and punishment of those responsible for trafficking.

This bill addresses the underlying problems which fuel the trafficking industry by promoting public awareness campaigns, and initiatives to enhance economic opportunity, such as micro-credit lending programs and skills training, for those most susceptible to trafficking. It provides for the establishment of programs designed to assist in the safe reintegration of victims into their community, and ensures that such programs address the physical and mental health needs of trafficking victims. In fact, the trauma that results from being trafficked is not unlike that of someone who has been tortured, and victims of trafficking deserve similar assistance.

This bill also provides immigration relief and allows victims of trafficking the time necessary to bring charges against those responsible for their condition. In the United States, many trafficking victims are deported for not having the appropriate legal documents when, in fact, it is often the trafficker who has given the victim false documents, or held the victim's identifying documents so that he or she could not move freely. This bill addresses this unintended result of the law. This measure enhances our existing legal structures, criminalizing all forms of trafficking in persons and establishing punishment which is commensurate with the heinous nature of this crime. It provides for sentences of up to life in prison for those criminals involved in trafficking children.

Those criminals who are involved in trafficking, from the lowest to the highest levels, should not expect to go unpunished in the United States or abroad, and neither should governments whose governments might be complicit in trafficking. This bill requires an expansion of reporting on trafficking in the annual Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, including a separate list of countries of origin, transit or destination for a significant number of trafficking victims which are not meeting minimum standards for the elimination of trafficking. This bill provides for sanctions against counties which do not meet these minimum standards. It also authorizes the Secretary of State to publish a list of foreign persons involved in trafficking, and authorizes the President to take tough action against any person on that list.

A similar bill to our bills is moving through the House. Both that bill, H.R. 3244, and the bills that we are introducing today, are bipartisan efforts that deserve our full consideration. Senator BROWNBACK and I have worked hard to create a bill that is comprehensive and addresses both of our concerns, and both of us are equally committed to the fight against trafficking. We disagree, however, on a small but significant part of the strategy in this fight: the use of mandatory versus discretionary sanctions against countries which do not meet the minimum standards for elimination of trafficking.

While Senator BROWNBACK believes a system of mandatory sanctions will better facilitate our goal to eliminate trafficking, after much research into the effect of a mandatory sanctions requirement, I believe a discretionary sanctions approach, allowing for a more targeted use of sanctions, together with a requirement for the delivery to Congress of a separate list of countries involved in trafficking, is the better approach.

Trafficking exploits poor women and booms in societies undergoing severe economic distress. To impose economic sanctions in trafficking legislation that cuts off a broad range of bilateral and multilateral assistance programs designed to improve the economy of specific nations is to cause harm to the very people who might be helped by the legislation.

For example, I don't believe we can justify cutting off funding designed to foster economic reform so that those most susceptible to trafficking such as women and children, can find work; or cutting off funding for programs that increase professionalism and independence in the judicial system so that traffickers can be held accountable; or even cutting off programs designed to provide training and technical assistance to countries which are generally making an effort to combat trafficking. This is what could happen to certain countries which are known to have a severe trafficking problem, under a mandatory sanctions regime. I don't believe we justify cutting off child survival and disease programs which counter the spread of HIV and AIDS, a significant problem among women trafficked into the sex industry, to countries in which sex trafficking is a large problem such as the Philippines and Bangladesh. These are just a couple of examples of the problems created by a sanctions regime that is too broad. A more targeted, discretionary sanctions approach to sanctions is, I think, clearly the way to go.

By requiring a list of countries involved in trafficking who do not meet minimum standards for the elimination of it, we can closely monitor the progress of countries in their fight against trafficking. Trafficking in persons is a complicated issue that almost always involves larger criminal elements. Those countries which are truly committed to ending this gross human rights abuse, and are cooperating in the global battle against it, should not fear the list since they will not be put on it. Those countries which are not doing their share should expect that the President of the United States will use his discretion to impose targeted sanctions, and I for one will do all I can to see that our government imposes appropriate sanctions against those governments whose officials are complicit in this terrible crime.

Sanctions can be an important deterrent. However, in my opinion broad mandatory sanctions within the context of trafficking are not useful. A discretionary sanctions regime that allows the President—who is, in fact, better positioned to understand the varying dynamics and extent of the trafficking problem from country to country—to impose specific, targeted, and workable sanctions against trafficking countries is a more sound approach.

I hope my colleagues will take a look at both of these trafficking bills and cosponsor one or the other as they move forward. These bills are identical except for the sanctions provision, and both provide the same broad and comprehensive assistance to trafficking victims and to countries working to combat trafficking.

Since my wife and I began working on this issue several years ago, I have met with trafficking victims, aftercare providers, and human rights advocates from around the world who have reminded me again and again of the horrible nature of this crime. We must intensify our work to eliminate trafficking in persons. We must focus our energy on this bipartisan effort to see the Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000 move quickly through the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and get passed into law this year. The many victims of trafficking deserve no less.

By Mr. SARBANES (for himself, Mr. DODD, Mr. SCHUMER, and Mr. KERRY):

S. 2415. A bill to amend the Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act of 1994 and other sections of the Truth in Lending Act to protect consumers against predatory practices in connection with high cost mortgage transactions, to strengthen the civil remedies available to consumers under existing law, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

PREDATORY LENDING CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2000

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, today I am introducing the Predatory Lending Consumer Protection Act with Senators DODD, KERRY, and SCHUMER. This legislation is a companion to an identical bill being introduced by Representative LAFALCE in the House of Representatives, along with a number of his colleagues.

Representative LAFALCE has demonstrated his strong commitment to a banking system that takes into consideration the credit needs of all Americans, including those that have been traditionally locked out of the market or are less sophisticated. I thank him for his leadership.

Homeownership is the American Dream. It is the opportunity for all Americans to put down roots and start creating equity for themselves and their families. Homeownership has been the path to building wealth for generations of Americans; it has been the key to ensuring stable communities, good schools, and safe streets.

The predatory lending industry plays on these hopes and dreams to cheat people of their hard-earned wealth. These lenders target working and lower income families, the elderly, and, often, uneducated homeowners for their abusive practices. To my mind, nothing can be more cynical.

Let me briefly describe how predatory lenders operate. They target people with a lot of equity in their homes; they underwrite the property without regard to the ability of the borrower to pay the loan back. They make their money by charging extremely high origination fees, and by ''packing'' other products into the loan, including upfront premiums for credit life insurance, or credit unemployment insurance, and others, for which they get significant commissions but are of no value to the homeowner.

The premiums for these products get financed into the loan, greatly increasing the loan's total balance amount, sometimes by as much as 50 percent. As a result, the borrower is likely to find himself in extreme financial distress.

Then, when the trouble hits, the predatory lender will offer to refinance the loan. Unfortunately, another characteristic of these loans is that they have prepayment penalties. So, by the time the refinancing occurs, with all the fees repeated and the prepayment penalty included, the lender/broker makes a lot of money from the transaction, and the owner has been stripped of his or her equity and, oftentimes, his or her home.

The problem is, most of these practices, while unethical and clearly abusive, are legal. There is a widening sense that this is a serious problem. Alan Greenspan at the Federal Reserve Board has recognized this as an increasing problem, as have the other banking regulators. For example, the FDIC is considering raising capital standards for all subprime lending; the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS) has published an Advanced Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (ANPR) asking for information and views on these very practices; HUD Secretary Cuomo and Treasury Secretary Summers have convened a Task Force on this issue. Both Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac have developed a number of products that are intended to reach out to homeowners with somewhat impaired credit in order to bring them into the financial mainstream. These companies have also announced that they will not buy loans with single premium credit insurance financed into the loan, one of the problems highlighted by this legislation.

Clearly, there is already some action to address the problem of predatory lending. But we need to do more. This legislation will outlaw the most abusive practices, and enable the marketplace to eliminate the others. This is a very important point. Let me give you an example. The bill prohibits the financing of more than 3% of a loan in fees for high cost loans, because it is the financing of fees and premiums on extraneous products that literally strip the equity out of a person's home. However, the bill would not prohibit additional fees from being charged, so we are not regulating profit.

We want to make sure that the loan is affordable to the borrower. Tying the lender's return to the loan's successful repayment is the best way to assure this. Now, some people have raised concerns that limiting the financing of fees will push up interest rates. This may be true, but it is also better to see the return to the lender reflected in the interest rate because it is much easier for people to shop on the basis of the interest rate. As a result, the market will help to keep rates down. Moreover, higher rate mortgages can always be refinanced as borrower's credit standing improves.

Mr. President, this legislation has the support of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the American Association of Retired People, the National Consumer Law Center, the Self-Help Credit Union of North Carolina, Consumers Union, Consumers Federation, ACORN, the National Association of Consumer Advocates, U.S. PIRG and others.

I want to make clear that this bill is aimed at predatory practices. There are many people who may have had some credit problems who still need access to affordable credit. They may only be able to get subprime loans, which charge higher interest rates. Clearly, to get the credit, they will have to pay somewhat higher rates because of the greater risk they represent. We want them to be able to get these loans.

But these families should not be stripped of their home equity through financing of extremely high fees, credit insurance, or prepayment penalties. They should not be forced into constant refinancing, losing more and more of the wealth they've taken a lifetime to build to a new set of fees each and every time.

This legislation will keep credit available, while discouraging or prohibiting these worst practices. The bill allows lenders to recover the costs of making their loans, while always leaving the door open to borrowers to repair their credit and move to lower cost loans.

Taken as a whole, predatory lending practices represent a frontal assault on homeowners all over America. Today, we are coming to their defense. We must stop the American dream of homeownership from being distorted into a nightmare by these unscrupulous practices. We want to ensure that all borrowers, whether in the prime or subprime market, are treated fairly and responsibly. That is what this legislation is intended to do, and I urge my colleagues' consideration and support.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill and a summary of the legislation be printed in the RECORD.

S. 2415

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Predatory Lending Consumer Protection Act of 2000''.

SEC. 2. AMENDMENTS TO DEFINITIONS IN TRUTH IN LENDING ACT.

(a) HIGH COST MORTGAGES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The portion of section 103(aa) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602(aa)) that precedes paragraph (2) of such section is amended to read as follows:

''(aa) MORTGAGE REFERRED TO IN THIS SUBSECTION.—

''(1) DEFINITION.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—A mortgage referred to in this subsection means a consumer credit transaction—

''(i) that is secured by the consumer's principal dwelling, other than a reverse mortgage transaction; and

''(ii) the terms of which are described in at least 1 of the following subclauses:

''(I) The transaction is secured by a first mortgage on the consumer's principal dwelling and the annual percentage rate on the credit, at the consummation of the transaction, will exceed by more than 6 percentage points the yield on Treasury securities having comparable periods of maturity on the 15th day of the month immediately preceding the month in which the application for the extension of credit is received by the creditor;

''(II) The transaction is secured by a junior or subordinate mortgage on the consumer's principal dwelling and the annual percentage rate on the credit, at the consummation of the transaction, will exceed by more than 8 percentage points the yield on Treasury securities having comparable periods of maturity on the 15th day of the month immediately preceding the month in which the application for the extension of credit is received by the creditor.

''(III) The total points and fees payable on the transaction will exceed the greater of 5 percent of the total loan amount or $1,000.

''(B) INTRODUCTORY RATES NOT TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—If the terms of any consumer credit transaction that is secured by the consumer's principal dwelling offer, for any initial or introductory period, an annual percentage rate of interest which—

''(i) is less than the annual percentage rate of interest which will apply after the end of such initial or introductory period; or

''(ii) in the case of an annual percentage rate which varies in accordance with an index, which is less than the current annual percentage rate under the index which will apply after the end of such period, the annual percentage rate of interest that shall be taken into account for purposes of subclauses (I) and (II) of subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be the rate described in clause (i) or (ii) of this subparagraph rather than any rate in effect during the initial or introductory period.''.

(2) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 103(aa)(2) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602(aa)(2)) is amended—

(A) by striking subparagraph (B); and

(B) by redesignating subparagraph (C) as subparagraph (B).

(b) POINTS AND FEES.—Section 103(aa)(4) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602(aa)(4)) is amended—

(1) by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following new subparagraph:

''(B) all compensation paid directly or indirectly by a consumer or a creditor to a mortgage broker;'';

(2) by redesignating subparagraph (D) as subparagraph (F); and

(3) by striking subparagraph (C) and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

''(C) each of the charges listed in section 106(e) (except an escrow for future payment of taxes and insurance);

''(D) the cost of all premiums financed by the lender, directly or indirectly, for any credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment or credit property insurance, or any other life or health insurance, or any payments financed by the lender, directly or indirectly, for any debt cancellation or suspension agreement or contract, except that, for purposes of this subparagraph, insurance premiums or debt cancellation or suspension fees calculated and paid on a monthly basis shall not be considered financed by the lender;

''(E) any prepayment penalty (as defined in section 129(c)(5)) or other fee paid by the consumer in connection with an existing loan which is being refinanced with the proceeds of the consumer credit transaction; and''.

(c) HIGH COST MORTGAGE LENDER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 103(f) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602(f)) is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting ''Any person who originates 2 or more mortgages referred to in subsection (aa) in any 12-month period, any person who originates 1 or more such mortgages through a mortgage broker or acted as a mortgage broker between originators and consumers on more than 5 mortgages referred to in subsection (aa) within the preceding 12-month period, and any creditor-affiliated party shall be considered to be a creditor for purposes of this title.''.

(2) CREDITOR-AFFILIATED PARTY DEFINED.—Section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

''(cc) CREDITOR-AFFILIATED PARTY.—The term ''creditor-affiliated party'' means—

(1) any director, officer, employee, or controlling stockholder of, or agent for, a creditor;

(2) in the case of a creditor which is an insured depository institution, any other person who has filed or is required to file a change-in-control notice with the appropriate Federal banking agency under section 7(j) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act; and

(3) any shareholder, consultant, joint venture partner, and any other person, including any independent contractor (such as an attorney, appraiser, or accountant), who participates in the conduct of the affairs of, or controls the lending practices of, a creditor, as determined (by regulation or on a case-by-case) by the appropriate Federal agency under subsection (a) or (c) of section 108 with respect to the creditor.''.

SEC. 3. AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING REQUIREMENTS FOR HIGH COST CONSUMER MORTGAGES.

(a) ADDITIONAL DISCLOSURES.—Section 129(a)(1) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639(a)(1)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

''(D) 'The interest rate on this loan is much higher than most people pay. This means the chance that you will lose your home is much higher if you do not make all payments under the loan.'.

''(E) 'You may be able to get a loan with a much lower interest rate. Before you sign any papers, you have the right to go see a credit and debt counseling service and to consult other lenders to find ways to get a cheaper loan.'.

''(F) 'If you are taking out this loan to repay other loans, look to see how many months it will take to pay for this loan and what the total amount is that you will have to pay before this loan is repaid. Even though the total amount you will have to pay each month for this loan may be less than the total amount you are paying each month for those other loans, you may have to pay on this loan for many more months than those other loans which will cost you more money in the end.' ''.

(b) PREPAYMENT PENALTY PROVISIONS.—Section 129(c) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639(c)) is amended to read as follows:

''(c) PREPAYMENT PENALTY PROVISIONS.—

''(1) NO PREPAYMENT PENALTIES AFTER END OF 24-MONTH PERIOD.—A mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) may not contain terms under which a consumer must pay any prepayment penalty for any payment made after the end of the 24-month period beginning on the date the mortgage is consummated.

''(2) NO PREPAYMENT PENALTIES IF MORE THAN 3 PERCENT OF POINTS AND FEES WERE FINANCED.—Subject to subsection (1)(1), a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) may not contain terms under which a consumer must pay any prepayment penalty for any payment made at or before the end of the 24-month period referred to in paragraph (1) if the creditor financed points or fees in connection with the consumer credit transaction in an amount equal to or greater than 3 percent of the total amount of credit extended in the transaction.

''(3) LIMITED PREPAYMENT PENALTY FOR EARLY REPAYMENT UNDER CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES.—Subject to paragraph (2), the terms of a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) may contain terms under which a consumer must pay a prepayment penalty for any payment made at or before the end of the 24-month period referred to in paragraph (1) to the extent the sum of total amount of points or fees financed by the creditor, if any, in connection with the consumer credit transaction and the total amount payable as a prepayment penalty does not exceed the amount which is equal to 3 percent of the total amount of credit extended in the transaction.

''(4) CONSTRUCTION.—For purposes of this subsection, any method of computing a refund of unearned scheduled interest is a prepayment penalty if it is less favorable to the consumer than the actuarial method (as that term is defined in section 933(d) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1992).

''(5) PREPAYMENT PENALTY DEFINED.—The term 'prepayment penalty' means any monetary penalty imposed on a consumer for paying all or part of the principal with respect to a consumer credit transaction before the date on which the principal is due.''.

(c) ALL BALLOON PAYMENTS PROHIBITED.—Section 129(e) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639(e)) is amended by striking ''having a term of less than 5 years''.

(d) ASSESSMENT OF ABILITY TO REPAY.—Section 129(h) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639(h)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''CONSUMER.—A creditor'' and inserting ''CONSUMER.—

''(1) PROHIBITION ON PATTERNS AND PRACTICES.—A creditor''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

''(2) CASE-BY-CASE ASSESSMENTS OF CONSUMER ABILITY TO PAY REQUIRED.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—In addition to the prohibition in paragraph (1) on engaging in certain patterns and practices, a creditor may not extend any credit in connection with any mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) unless the creditor has determined, at the time such credit is extended, that 1 or more of the resident obligors, when considered individually and collectively, will be able to make the scheduled payments under the terms of the transaction based on a consideration of their current and expected income, current obligations, employment status, and other financial resources, without taking into account any equity of any such obligor in the dwelling which is the security for the credit.

''(B) REGULATIONS.—The Board shall prescribe, by regulation the appropriate format for determining a consumer's ability to pay and the criteria to be considered in making any such determination.

''(C) RESIDENT OBLIGOR.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'resident obligor' means an obligor for whom the dwelling securing the extension of credit is, or upon the consummation of the transaction will be, the principal residence.

''(3) VERIFICATION.—The requirements of paragraphs (1) and (2) shall not be deemed to have been met unless any information relied upon by the creditor for purposes of any such paragraph has been verified by the creditor independently of information provided by any resident obligor.''.

(e) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO HOME IMPROVEMENT CONTRACTS.—Section 129(i) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639(i)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''IMPROVEMENT CONTRACTS.—A creditor'' and inserting ''IMPROVEMENT CONTRACTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—A creditor''; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(2) AFFIRMATIVE CLAIMS AND DEFENSES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any assignee or holder, in any capacity, of a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) which was made, arranged, or assigned by a person financing home improvements to the dwelling of a consumer shall be subject to all affirmative claims and defenses which the consumer may have against the seller, home improvement contractor, broker, or creditor with respect to such mortgage or home improvements.''.

(f) CLARIFICATION OF RESCISSION RIGHTS.—Section 129(j) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639(j)) is amended to read as follows:

''(j) CONSEQUENCE OF FAILURE TO COMPLY.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—If, in the case of a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa)—

''(A) the mortgage contains a provision prohibited by this section or does not contain a provision required by this section; or

''(B) a creditor or other person fails to comply with the provisions of this section, whether by an act or omission, with regard to such mortgage at any time, the consummation of the consumer credit transaction resulting in such mortgage shall be treated as a failure to deliver the material disclosures required under this title for the purpose of section 125.

''(2) RULE OF APPLICATION.—In any application of section 125 to a mortgage described in section 103(aa) under circumstances described in paragraph (1), paragraphs (2) and (4) of section 125(e) shall not apply or be taken into account.''.

SEC. 4. ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS FOR HIGH COST CONSUMER MORTGAGES.

(a) SINGLE PREMIUM CREDIT INSURANCE.—Section 129 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (k) and (l) as subsections (s) and (t), respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (j), the following new subsection:

''(k) SINGLE PREMIUM CREDIT INSURANCE.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The terms of a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) may not require, and no creditor or other person may require or allow—

''(A) the advance collection of a premium, on a single premium basis, for any credit life, credit disability, credit unemployment, or credit property insurance, and any analogous product; or

''(B) the advance collection of a fee for any debt cancellation or suspension agreement or contract, in connection with any such mortgage, whether such premium or fee is paid directly by the consumer or is financed by the consumer through such mortgage.

''(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not be construed as affecting the right of a creditor to collect premium payments on insurance or debt cancellation or suspension fees referred to in paragraph (1) that are calculated and paid on a regular monthly basis, if the insurance transaction is conducted separately from the mortgage transaction, the insurance may be canceled by the consumer at any time, and the insurance policy is automatically canceled upon repayment or other termination of the mortgage referred to in paragraph (1).''.

(b) RESTRICTION ON FINANCING POINTS AND FEES.—Section 129 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639) is amended by inserting after subsection (k) (as added by subsection (a) of this section) the following new subsection:

''(l) RESTRICTION ON FINANCING POINTS AND FEES.—

''(1) LIMIT ON AMOUNT OF POINTS AND FEES THAT MAY BE FINANCED.—Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3) of subsection (c), no creditor may, in connection with the formation or consummation of a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa), finance, directly or indirectly, any portion of the points, fees, or other charges payable to the creditor or any third party in an amount in excess of the greater of 3 percent of the total loan amount or $600.

''(2) PROHIBITION ON FINANCING CERTAIN POINTS, FEES, OR CHARGES.—No creditor may, in connection with the formation or consummation of a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa), finance, directly or indirectly, any of the following fees or other charges payable to the creditor or any third party:

''(A) Any prepayment fee or penalty required to be paid by the consumer in connection with a loan or other extension of credit which is being refinanced by such mortgage if the creditor, with respect to such mortgage, or any affiliate of the creditor, is the creditor with respect to the loan or other extension of credit being refinanced.

''(B) Any points, fees, or other charges required to be paid by the consumer in connection with such mortgage if—

''(i) the mortgage is being entered into in order to refinance an existing mortgage of the consumer that is referred to in section 103(aa); and

''(ii) if the creditor, with respect to such new mortgage, or any affiliate of the creditor, is the creditor with respect to the existing mortgage which is being refinanced.''.

(c) CREDITOR CALL PROVISION.—Section 129 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639) is amended by inserting after subsection (l) (as added by subsection (b) of this section) the following new subsection:

''(m) CREDITOR CALL PROVISION.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—A mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) may not include terms under which the indebtedness may be accelerated by the creditor, in the creditor's sole discretion.

''(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply when repayment of the loan has been accelerated as a result of a bona fide default.''.

(d) PROHIBITION ON ACTIONS ENCOURAGING DEFAULT.—Section 129 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639) is amended by inserting after subsection (m) (as added by subsection (c) of this section) the following new subsection:

''(n) PROHIBITION ON ACTIONS ENCOURAGING DEFAULT.—No creditor may make any statement, take any action, or fail to take any action before or in connection with the formation or consummation of any mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) to refinance all or any portion of an existing loan or other extension of credit, if the statement, action, or failure to act has the effect of encouraging or recommending the consumer to default on the existing loan or other extension of credit at any time before, or in connection with, the closing or any scheduled closing on such mortgage.''.

(e) MODIFICATION OR DEFERRAL FEES.—Section 129 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639) is amended by inserting after subsection (n) (as added by subsection (d) of this section) the following new subsection:

''(o) MODIFICATION OR DEFERRAL FEES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), a creditor may not charge any consumer with respect to a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) any fee or other charge—

''(A) to modify, renew, extend, or amend such mortgage, or any provision of the terms of the mortgage; or

''(B) to defer any payment otherwise due under the terms of the mortgage.

''(2) EXCEPTION FOR MODIFICATIONS FOR THE BENEFIT OF THE CONSUMER.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply with respect to any fee imposed in connection with any action described in subparagraph (A) or (B) if—

''(A) the action provides a material benefit to the consumer; and

''(B) the amount of the fee or charge does not exceed—

''(i) an amount equal to 0.5 percent of the total loan amount; or

''(ii) in any case in which the total loan amount of the mortgage does not exceed $60,000, an amount in excess of $300.''.

(f) CONSUMER COUNSELING REQUIREMENTS.—Section 129 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639) is amended by inserting after subsection (o) (as added by subsection (e) of this section) the following new subsection:

''(p) CONSUMER COUNSELING REQUIREMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—A creditor may not extend any credit in the form of a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) to any consumer, unless the creditor has provided to the consumer, at such time before the consummation of the mortgage and in such manner as the Board shall provide by regulation, all of the following:

''(A) All warnings and disclosures regarding the risks of the mortgage to the consumer.

''(B) A separate written statement recommending that the consumer take advantage of available home ownership or credit counseling services before agreeing to the terms of any mortgage referred to in section 103(aa).

''(C) A written statement containing the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of counseling agencies or programs reasonably available to the consumer that have been certified or approved by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, a State housing finance authority (as defined in section 1301 of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989), or the agency referred to in subsection (a) or (c) of section 108 with jurisdiction over the creditor as qualified to provide counseling on—

''(i) the advisability of a high cost loan transaction; and

''(ii) the appropriateness of a high cost loan for the consumer.

''(B) COMPLETE AND UPDATED LISTS REQUIRED.—Any failure to provide as complete or updated a list under paragraph (1)(C) as is reasonably possible shall constitute a violation of this section.''.

(g) ARBITRATION.—Section 129 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639) is amended by inserting after subsection (p) (as added by subsection (f) of this section) the following new subsection:

''(q) ARBITRATION.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—A mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) may not include terms which require arbitration or any other nonjudicial procedure as the method for resolving any controversy or settling any claims arising out of the transaction.

''(2) POST-CONTROVERSY AGREEMENTS.—Subject to paragraph (3), paragraph (1) shall not be construed as limiting the right of the consumer and the creditor to agree to arbitration or any other nonjudicial procedure as the method for resolving any controversy at any time after a dispute or claim under the transaction arises.

''(3) NO WAIVER OF STATUTORY CAUSE OF ACTION.—No provision of any mortgage referred to in section 103(aa) or any agreement between the consumer and the creditor shall be applied or interpreted so as to bar a consumer from bringing an action in an appropriate district court of the United States, or any other court of competent jurisdiction, pursuant to section 130 or any other provision of law, for damages or other relief in connection with any alleged violation of this section, any other provision of this title, or any other Federal law.''.

(h) PROHIBITION ON EVASIONS.—Section 129 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1639) is amended by inserting after subsection (q) (as added by subsection (g) of this section) the following new subsection:

''(r) PROHIBITIONS ON EVASIONS, STRUCTURING OF TRANSACTIONS, AND RECIPROCAL ARRANGEMENTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—A creditor may not take any action—

''(A) for the purpose or with the intent to circumvent or evade any requirement of this title, including entering into a reciprocal arrangement with any other creditor or affiliate of another creditor or dividing a transaction into separate parts, for the purpose of evading or circumventing any such requirement; or

''(B) with regard to any other loan or extension of credit for the purpose or with the intent to evade the requirements of this title, including structuring or restructuring a consumer credit transaction as another form of loan, such as a business loan.

''(2) OTHER ACTIONS.—In addition to the actions prohibited under paragraph (1), a creditor may not take any action which the Board determines, by regulation, constitutes a bad faith effort to evade or circumvent any requirement of this section with regard to a consumer credit transaction.

"(3) REGULATIONS.—The Board shall prescribe such regulations as the Board determines to be appropriate to prevent circumvention or evasion of the requirements of this section or to facilitate compliance with the requirements of this section.".

SEC. 5. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO RIGHT OF RESCISSION.

(a) TIMING OF WAIVER BY CONSUMER.—Section 125(a) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1635(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "(a) Except as otherwise provided" and inserting "(a) RIGHT ESTABLISHED.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) TIMING OF ELECTION OF WAIVER BY CONSUMER.—No election by a consumer to waive the right established under paragraph (1) to rescind a transaction shall be effective if—

"(A) the waiver was required by the creditor as a condition for the transaction;

"(B) the creditor advised or encouraged the consumer to waive such right of the consumer; or

"(C) the creditor had any discussion with the consumer about a waiver of such right during the period beginning when the consumer provides written acknowledgement of the receipt of the disclosures and the delivery of forms and information required to be provided to the consumer under paragraph (1) and ending at such time as the Board determines, by regulation, to be appropriate.".

(b) NONCOMPLIANCE WITH REQUIREMENTS AS RECOUPMENT IN FORECLOSURE PROCEEDING.—Section 130(e) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1640(e)) is amended by inserting after the 2d sentence the following new sentence: "This subsection also does not bar a person from asserting a rescission under section 125, in an action to collect the debt as a defense to a judicial or nonjudicial foreclosure after the expiration of the time periods for affirmative actions set forth in this section and section 125.".

SEC. 6. AMENDMENTS TO CIVIL LIABILITY PROVISIONS.

(a) INCREASE IN AMOUNT OF CIVIL MONEY PENALTIES FOR CERTAIN VIOLATIONS.—Section 130(a) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1640) is amended—

(1) in (2)(A)(iii), by striking "$2,000" and inserting "$10,000"; and

(2) in paragraph (2)(B), by striking "lesser of $500,000 or 1 percentum of the net worth of the creditor" and inserting "the greater of—

"(i) the amount determined by multiplying the maximum amount of liability under subparagraph (A) for such failure to comply in an individual action by the number of members in the certified class; or

"(ii) the amount equal to 2 percent of the net worth of the creditor.".

(b) STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS EXTENDED FOR SECTION 129 VIOLATIONS.—Section 130(e) of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1640(e)) (as amended by section 5(b) of this Act) is amended—

(1) in the 1st sentence, by striking "Any action" and inserting "Except as provided in the subsequent sentence, any action"; and

(2) by inserting after the 1st sentence the following new sentence: "Any action under this section with respect to any violation of section 129 may be brought in any United States district court, or in any other court of competent jurisdiction, before the end of the 3-year period beginning on the date of the occurrence of the violation.".

SEC. 7. AMENDMENT TO FAIR CREDIT REPORTING ACT.

Section 623 of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. 1681s–2) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) DUTY OF CREDITORS WITH RESPECT TO HIGH COST MORTGAGES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Each creditor who enters into a consumer credit transaction which is a mortgage referred to in section 103(aa), and each successor to such creditor with respect to such transaction, shall report the complete payment history, favorable and unfavorable, of the obligor with respect to such transaction to a consumer reporting agency that compiles and maintains files on consumers on a nationwide basis at least quarterly, or more frequently as required by regulation or in guidelines established by participants in the secondary mortgage market, while such transaction is in effect.

"(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the terms 'credit' and 'creditor' have the same meanings as in section 103.".

SEC. 8. REGULATIONS.

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall publish regulations implementing this Act, and the amendments made by this Act, in final form before the end of the 6-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SUMMARY OF THE "PREDATORY LENDING CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2000"

Definition of "High Cost" Mortgage: the legislation tightens the definition of a "high cost mortgage," for which certain consumer protections are triggered. The new definition, which amends the "Home Ownership Equipment Protection Act," is as follows: First mortgages that exceed Treasury securities by six (6) percentage points; second mortgages that exceed Treasury securities by eight (8) percentage points; or mortgages where total points and fees payable by the borrower exceed the greater of five percent (5%) of the total loan amount, or $1,000. The bill revises the definition of points and fees to be more inclusive.

The following key protections are triggered for high cost mortgages only:

Restrictions on financing of points and fees. The bill restricts a creditor from directly or indirectly financing any portion of the points, fees or other charges greater than 3% of the total sum of the loan, or $600. The lender cannot finance prepayment penalties or points paid by the consumer if the originator of the loan is refinancing the loan. Moreover, the lender or any affiliated creditor cannot finance points and fees for the refinancing of a loan they originated.

Limitation on the payment of prepayment penalties. The bill prohibits the lender from imposing prepayment penalties after the initial 24 month period of the loan. During the first 24 months of a loan, prepayment penalties are limited to the difference in the amount of closing costs and fees financed and 3% of the total loan amount.

Prohibition on balloon payments. The bill prohibits the use of balloon payments.

Limitation on single premium credit insurance. The bill would prohibit upfront payment or financing of credit life, credit disability or credit unemployment insurance on a single premium basis. However, borrowers are free to purchase such insurance with the regular mortgage payment on a periodic basis, provided that it is a separate transaction that can be canceled at any time.

Extension of liability for home improvement contract loans. The bill would make parent companies and officers of lenders, or subsequent holders of loans by a contractor, liable for HOEPA violations if the contractor goes out of business to avoid liability.

Limitation on mandatory arbitration clauses. The bill prohibits mortgages from including terms which require arbitration or other non-judicial settlement as the sole method of settling claims or disputes arising under the loan agreement.

Prohibition on requiring rescission of rights. The bill prohibits a creditor from requiring or encouraging a borrower to sign an election not to exercise the three-day right to rescind or cancel a credit transaction at the same time that the borrowers receives notice of the right of rescission.

Other provisions in the bill:

Increase statutory damages in individual civil actions and class actions. The maximum amount that can be awarded in individual actions is increased to $100,000. The maximum amount that can be awarded in a class action is the greater of: (1) the maximum amount of the liability available for an individual action multiplied by the number of members or (ii) percent of the net worth of the creditor.

Require that as a condition for making a high cost loan, a creditor make a determination at the time the loan is consummated, that the borrower will be able to make the schedule payments to repay the loan obligation.

Prohibit a lender from making a high cost loan unless it certifies that it has provided the borrower with certain information regarding the risks associated with high cost loans and the availability of home ownership counseling.

Require additional disclosures related to the risks associated with high cost mortgages.

Prohibit a creditor/lender from: (i) recommending or encouraging default on an existing loan or other debt prior to, or in connection with, a closing on a high cost loan, (ii) including any provision which permits the creditor, in its sole discretion, to accelerate the indebtedness under the loan, or (iii) charging a borrower any fee to modify a high-cost loan or defer payment due under such high cost loan unless it provides a material benefit to the borrower.

Require that a creditor annually report both favorable and unfavorable payment history of borrowers to credit bureaus.

Res. 272, a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that the United States should remain actively engaged in southeastern Europe to promote long-term peace, stability, and prosperity; continue to vigorously oppose the brutal regime of Slobodan Milosevic while supporting the efforts of the democratic opposition; and fully implement the Stability Pact.

SENATE RESOLUTION 286—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT THE UNITED STATES SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS SHOULD HOLD HEARINGS AND THE SENATE SHOULD ACT ON THE CONVENTION OF THE ELIMINATION OF ALL FORMS OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN (CEDAW)

Mrs. BOXER (for herself, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. BINGAMAN, Ms. COLLINS, Mr. DASCHLE, Mr. DODD, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mrs. FEINSTEIN, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. KERRY, Mr. KENNEDY, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEVIN, Mrs. LINCOLN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. ROBB, Mr. REED, Mr. REID, Mr. SARBANES, Mr. SCHUMER, Ms. SNOWE, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. WELLSTONE, and Mr. WYDEN) submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie over, under the rule:

S. RES. 286

Whereas the United States has shown leadership in promoting human rights, including the rights of women and girls, and was instrumental in the development of international human rights treaties and norms, including the International Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW);

Whereas the Senate has already agreed to the ratification of several important human rights treaties, including the Genocide Convention, the Convention Against Torture, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination;

Whereas CEDAW establishes a worldwide commitment to combat discrimination against women and girls;

Whereas 165 countries of the world have ratified or acceded to CEDAW and the United States is among a small minority of countries, including Afghanistan, North Korea, Iran, and Sudan, which have not;

Whereas CEDAW is helping combat violence and discrimination against women and girls around the world;

Whereas CEDAW has had a significant and positive impact on legal developments in countries as diverse as Uganda, Colombia, Brazil, and South Africa, including, on citizenship rights in Botswana and Japan, inheritance rights in Tanzania, property rights and political participation in Costa Rica;

Whereas the Administration has proposed a small number of reservations, understandings, and declarations to ensure that U.S. ratification fully complies with all constitutional requirements, including states' and individuals' rights;

Whereas the legislatures of California, Iowa, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, South Dakota, and Vermont have endorsed U.S. ratification of CEDAW;

Whereas more than one hundred U.S.-based, civic, legal, religious, education, and environmental organizations, including many major national membership organizations, support U.S. ratification of CEDAW;

Whereas ratification of CEDAW would allow the United States to nominate a representative to the CEDAW oversight committee; and

Whereas 2000 is the 21st anniversary of the adoption of CEDAW by the United Nations General Assembly: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the Senate Foreign Relations Committee should hold hearings on the convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW); and

(2) the Senate should act on CEDAW by July 19, 2000, the 20th anniversary of the signing of the convention by the United States.

SENATE RESOLUTION 287—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING U.S. POLICY TOWARD LIBYA

Mr. HELMS (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. LAUTENBERG) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 287

Whereas 270 people, including 189 Americans, were killed in the terrorist bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland on December 21, 1988;

Whereas this bombing was one of the worst terrorist atrocities in American history;

Whereas 2 Libyan suspects in the attack are scheduled to go on trial in The Netherlands on May 3, 2000;

Whereas the United Nations Security Council has required Libya to cooperate throughout the trial, pay compensation to the families if the suspects are found guilty, and end support for international terrorism before multilateral sanctions can be permanently lifted;

Whereas Libya is accused in the 1986 La Belle discotheque bombing in Germany which resulted in the death of 2 United States servicemen;

Whereas in March 1999, 6 Libyan intelligence agents including Muammar Qadhafi's brother-in-law, were convicted in absentia by French courts for the bombing of UTA Flight 772 that resulted in the death of 171 people, including 7 Americans;

Whereas restrictions on United States citizens' travel to Libya, known informally as a travel ban, have been in effect since December 11, 1981, as a result of "threats of hostile acts against Americans" according to the Department of State;

Whereas on March 22, 4 United States State Department officials departed for Libya as part of a review of the travel ban; and

Whereas Libyan officials have interpreted the review as a positive signal from the United States, and according to a senior Libyan official "the international community was convinced that Libya's foreign policy position was not wrong and there is a noticeable improvement in Libya's relations with the world": Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) Libya's refusal to accept responsibility for its role in terrorist attacks against United States citizens suggests that the imminent danger to the physical safety of United States travelers continues;

(2) the Administration should consult fully with Congress in considering policy toward Libya, including disclosure of any assurances received by the Qadhafi regime relative to the judicial proceedings in The Hague; and

(3) the travel ban and all other United States restrictions on Libya should not be eased until all cases of American victims of Libyan terrorism have been resolved and the Government of Libya has cooperated fully in bringing the perpetrators to justice.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senators HELMS and LAUTENBERG in submitting this resolution on the travel ban and other U.S. restrictions on Libya.

At the end of March, a team of State Department officials visited Libya as part of a review of the ban that has been in effect since 1981 on U.S. travel to Libya. State Department officials were in Libya for 26 hours, visiting hotels and other sites. Based on the findings of this delegation, the State Department is preparing a recommendation for the Secretary of State to help her determine whether there is still "imminent danger to . . . the physical safety of United States travellers," as the law requires in order to maintain the ban.

Because of the travel ban, American citizens can travel to Libya only if they obtain a license from the Department of the Treasury. In addition, the State Department must first validate a passport for travel to Libya.

The travel ban was imposed originally for safety reasons and predates the terrorist bombing of Pan Am Flight 103. But lifting the ban now, just as the two Libyan suspects are about to go on trial in The Netherlands for their role in that atrocity, will undoubtedly be viewed as a gesture of good will to Colonel Qadhafi.

After State Department announced that it would send this consular team to Libya, a Saudi-owned daily paper quoted a senior Libyan official as saying the one-day visit by the U.S. team was a "step in the right direction." The official said the visit was a sign that "the international community was convinced that Libya's foreign policy position was not wrong and there is a noticeable improvement in Libya's relations with the world."

Libya's Deputy Minister for Foreign Affairs and International Cooperation said the visit demonstrated that the Administration "has realized the importance of Libya" and that Libya considers "that the negative chapter in our relations is over."

Libya's Secretary for African Unity told reporters that the visit to Libya by U.S. officials was a welcome step and that ''. . . we welcome the normalization between the two countries.''

The good will gesture was certainly not lost on Colonel Qadhafi, who said on April 4, when asked about a possible warming of relations with the United States: ''I think America has reviewed its policy toward Libya and discovered that it is wrong . . . it is a good time for America to change its policy toward Libya.''

I have been in contact with many of the families of the victims of Pan Am Flight 103, and they are extremely upset by the timing of this decision. They are united in their belief that the U.S. delegation should not have been sent to Libya and that it would be a serious mistake to lift the travel ban before justice is served. The families want to know why the Secretary of State made this friendly overture to Colonel Qadhafi now—just six weeks before the trial in the Netherlands begins. They question how much information the State Department was able to obtain by spending only 26 hours in Libya. They wonder why the State Department could not continue to use the same sources of information it has been using for many years to make a determination about the travel ban.

There is no reason to believe that the situation in Libya has changed since November 1999, when the travel ban was last extended on the basis of imminent danger to American citizens. Indeed, in January 2000 President Clinton cited Libya's support for terrorist activities and its non-compliance with UN Security Council Resolutions 731, 748, and 863 as actions and policies that ''pose a continuing unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security and vital foreign policy interest of the United States.''

These American families have waited for justice for eleven long years. They felt betrayed by the decision to send the consular delegation to Libya. They have watched with dismay as our close ally, Great Britain, has moved to reestablish diplomatic relations with Libya, before justice is served for the British citizens killed in the terrorist bombing. The State Department denies it, but the families are concerned that the visit signals a change in U.S. policy, undermines U.S. sanctions, and calls into question the Administration's commitment to vigorously enforce the Iran Libya Sanctions Act. That Act requires the United States to impose sanctions on foreign companies which invest more than $40 million in the Libyan petroleum industry, until Libya complies with the conditions specified by the U.N. Security Council in its resolutions.

The bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, in which 188 Americans were killed, was one of the worst terrorist atrocities in American history. Other American citizens are waiting for justice in other cases against Libya as well. Libya is also accused in the 1986 La Belle discotheque bombing in Germany, which resulted in the deaths of two United States servicemen. The trial against five individuals implicated began in December of 1997 and is ongoing. In March 1999, six Libyan intelligence agents, including Colonel Qadhafi's brother-in-law, were convicted in absentia by a French court for the bombing of UTA Flight 772, which resulted in the deaths of 171 people, including seven Americans. A civil suit against Colonel Qadhafi based on that bombing is pending in France.

The State Department should not have sent a delegation to Libya now and it should not lift the travel ban on Libya at this time. The State Department's long-standing case-by-case consideration of passport requests for visits to Libya by U.S. citizens has worked well. It can continue to do so for the foreseeable future.

The resolution we are submitting today states the sense of the Senate that Libya's refusal to accept responsibility for its role in terrorist attacks against United States citizens suggests that the imminent danger to the physical safety of United States travelers continues. It calls on the Administration to consult fully with the U.S. Congress in considering policy toward Libya. It states that the travel ban and all other U.S. restrictions on Libya should not be eased until all cases of American victims of Libyan terrorism have been resolved and the government of Libya has cooperated fully in bringing the perpetrators to justice.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution, and I ask unanimous consent that a Washington Post article and editorial on this subject be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STEALTHY SHIFT ON LIBYA

(By Jim Hoagland)

In the 11 years since her husband and 188 other Americans were murdered aboard Pan Am 103, Victoria Cummock has learned to listen carefully to the words State Department officials, say, and do not say, to her. So alarm bells went off for Cummock the third or fourth time her latest interlocutor from Foggy Bottom seemed to limit responsibility for the terror bombing to ''the two indicted Libyans.''

''Wait a minute,'' Cummock recalls telling Michael Sheehan, head of the State Department's counterterrorism office. ''Your department always spoke of Libya and state-sponsored terrorism being responsible. You are distancing your past position. You now present this as just two wild and crazy guys off on their own? What is going on?''

In the small space between two bureaucratic formulations Victoria Cummock heard the sound of her husband, and the other victims of a gigantic crime aimed at their nation, being consigned to official oblivion. Your cause is no longer our cause, she and others on the telephone conference call heard Sheehan not quite say. It is to move on.

Sheehan does not recall the exchange that way. He told me he never made the semantic distinction heard by Cummock, who lives in Coral Gables, Fla. But he also declined to respond directly when I asked if he thought Libya still practices or supports state-sponsored terrorism. ''They are still on our terrorism list,'' was as far as he would go.

Mere she-said, he-said in an emotion-charged conversation between still-grieving families and a government official given the thankless task of briefing them? Not quite. Whatever the exact words spoken, Cummock did hear the background music being played in a skillful operation to move policy one small step at a time, almost imperceptibly and always deniably.

The Clinton administration has for more than a year been slowly shifting from a policy of isolating and punishing Libya to a policy of exploring whether the North African state can be rehabilitated and its oil made available to U.S. markets once again.

In the most transparent move yet, the State Department dispatched four officials to Tripoli Wednesday to judge whether Americans can safely travel to a country that few realize has been off-limits to them since 1981. The diplomats' safe return this weekend will presumably be evidence in the affirmative. Then a recommendation will go to Secretary of State Madeleine Albright to remove or keep the official ban on U.S. travel to that inhospitable, barren land.

Sheehan insistently discounted the importance of this trip, and Albright may yet decide to keep the ban on. But this maneuvering must be viewed for what it is: a piece in a pattern of endgame diplomacy by the Clinton administration. Improving relations with states once known as rogues and lifting or easing sanctions where possible (with the exception of still politically useful Cuba) has become an undeclared but important objective for the Clintonites.

The push to close the books on the bombing of Pan Am 103 over Scotland, on Dec. 21, 1988, and other Libyan misdeeds is in part a response on the White House from Britain, Egypt and U.S. oil companies, all of which argue the case for rewarding Moammar Gadhafi's recent abstinence from terrorist exploits.

But it also reflects President Clinton's concern over the diplomatic and humanitarian effects of open-ended sanctions. ''The lack of international consensus on sanctions and the costs that brings has bothered him for some time,'' says one well-placed official.

There is a case to be made for reviewing and adjusting U.S. sanctions as conditions change: Clinton has in fact allowed Albright to make that case publicly and persuasively on Iran. She has skillfully mixed approval of a trend to internal democracy with strictures about Iran's continuing depredations abroad and let the public judge each step as it is taken.

But there is no similar intellectual honesty on Libya. There seems to be instead a stealth policy to bring change but not accept political responsibility for giving up on confronting the dictator who would have had to authorize Libyan participation in the bombing.

Last year the White House overrode skepticism from Justice Department officials and other opposition within the administration and agreed to Gadhafi's terms for a trial of two Libyan underling in The Hague, under Scottish law. Their trial begins in May.

"There was an unvoiced sense in these meetings that the Pan Am 103 families had to get over it and move on with their lives. The trial would help with that as well as with our diplomatic objectives," said one official who participated in the contentious high-level interagency sessions. "But if these two are acquitted, it is all over. There will be no more investigations, and no more international pressure on Gadhafi. It is a huge risk."

Worse: It is a huge risk that Bill Clinton is willing to take but not explain honestly to the American people. For shame, Mr. President.

[From the Washington Post, Apr. 3, 2000]

THE LIBYA THAW

Four American diplomats recently returned from Libya, where they were sent by Secretary of State Madeleine Albright to determine whether it is time for the United States to lift the ban on using U.S. passports to visit Moammar Gadhafi's realm. The trip follows other steps hinting at a Clinton administration intention to thaw relations with a regime that remains on the U.S. list of states that sponsor terrorism.

The most notorious terrorist act linked to Tripoli is the Dec. 21, 1988, bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland. The attack killed 270 people, including 189 Americans. After an investigation fingered two Libyan agents, the United States won U.S. Security Council approval for sanctions against Libya. Last year the Clinton administration agreed to "suspend" sanctions after Mr. Gadhafi consented to hand the two men over for a trial under Scottish law at a special court in Holland. The Libyan dictator did so only after being satisfied, via a U.S.-vetted letter from U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan, that the trial, which opens May 3, would focus on the two suspects and not on his regime.

In striking this compromise, the Clinton administration made clear that it would not approve permanent lifting of the U.N. sanctions or the lifting of unilateral U.S. sanctions until Mr. Gadhafi meets other demands, such as paying compensation, accepting Libyan responsibility for the crime and revealing all that his regime knows about it. But the administration has not pressed those issues at the U.N., and its diplomatic body language suggests it is trying to wrap up a long battle that has often placed the United States at odds with European allies who rely on Libyan oil.

Perhaps the administration believes the economic and diplomatic costs of a hard line on Libya now outweigh the benefits. Perhaps Mr. Gadhafi's recent expulsion from Libya of the Abu Nidal organization deserves to be rewarded. And perhaps it is futile to insist that Mr. Gadhafi tell everything he knows about the case, however contradictory it may be to prosecute the two bombers while settling, at most, for compensation from Mr. Gadhafi, who almost certainly would have ordered such an attack.

Whatever the rationale, the American public is entitled to a full explanation. But, with the exception of a speech by Assistant Secretary of State Ronald Neumann last November, the Clinton administration has kept its Libya decision-making in the shadows. Despite requests from the Pan Am 103 victims' families, it won't release the Annan letter, citing diplomatic privacy. A legitimate point—but it inevitably leaves many wondering whether the letter contains inappropriate promises to Mr. Gadhafi. If there's nothing untoward about the Clinton administration's overall Libya policy, why doesn't Secretary Albright, or, better, the president, do more to help the public understand it?

SENATE RESOLUTION 288—AUTHORIZING THE TAKING OF A PHOTOGRAPH IN THE CHAMBER OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE

Mr. LOTT (for himself and Mr. DASCHLE) submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to:

S. RES. 288

Resolved, That paragraph 1 of Rule IV of the Rules for the Regulation of the Senate Wing of the United States Capitol (prohibiting the taking of pictures in the Senate Chamber) be temporarily suspended for the sole and specific purpose of permitting the Senate Photographic Studio to photograph the United States Senate in actual session on Tuesday, June 6, 2000, at the hour of 2:15 p.m.

SEC. 2. The Sergeant at Arms of the Senate is authorized and directed to make the necessary arrangements therefor, which arrangements shall provide for a minimum of disruption to Senate proceedings.

SENATE RESOLUTION 289—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING THE HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION IN CUBA

Mr. TORRICELLI (for himself, Mr. HELMS, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. MACK, and Mr. REID) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 289

Whereas the annual meeting of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva, Switzerland, provides a forum for discussing human rights and expressing international support for improved human rights performance;

Whereas the United States Department of State 1999 Country Reports on Human Rights Practices, released on February 25, 2000, includes the following statements describing conditions in Cuba:

(1) "Cuba is a totalitarian state controlled by President Fidel Castro.... President Castro exercises control over all aspects of Cuban life.... The Communist Party is the only legal political entity.... There are no contested elections.... The judiciary is completely subordinate to the government and to the Communist Party....".

(2) "The Ministry of Interior... investigates and actively suppresses opposition and dissent. It maintains a pervasive system of vigilance through undercover agents, informers, the rapid response brigades, and the Committees for the Defense of the Revolution (CDR's)....".

(3) "[The government] continued systematically to violate fundamental civil and political rights of its citizens. Citizens do not have the right to change their government peacefully.... The authorities routinely continued to harass, threaten, arbitrarily arrest, detain, imprison, and defame human rights advocates and members of independent professional associations, including journalists, economists, doctors, and lawyers, often with the goal of coercing them into leaving the country....".

(4) "The government denied citizens the freedoms of speech, press, assembly, and association.... It limited the distribution of foreign publications and news to selected party faithful and maintained strict censorship of news and information to the public. The government kept tight restrictions on freedom of movement, including foreign travel....".

(5) "The government continued to subject those who disagreed with it to 'acts of repudiation'. At government instigation, members of state-controlled mass organizations, fellow workers, or neighbors of intended victims are obliged to stage public protests against those who dissent with the government's policies.... Those who refuse to participate in these actions face disciplinary action, including loss of employment....".

(6) "Detainees and prisoners often are subjected to repeated, vigorous interrogations designed to coerce them into signing incriminating statements.... The government does not permit independent monitoring of prison conditions....".

(7) "Arbitrary arrest and detention continued to be problems, and they remained the government's most effective weapons to harass opponents.... [T]he Constitution states that all legally recognized civil liberties can be denied to anyone who actively opposes the 'decision of the Cuban people to build socialism'. The authorities invoke this sweeping authority to deny due process to those detained on purported state security grounds....".

(8) "The Penal Code includes the concept of 'dangerousness', defined as the 'special proclivity of a person to commit crimes, demonstrated by his conduct in manifest contradiction of socialist norms'. If the police decide that a person exhibits signs of dangerousness, they may bring the offender before a court or subject him to 'therapy' or 'political reeducation....' Often the sole evidence provided, particularly in political cases, is the defendant's confession, usually obtained under duress....".

(9) "Human rights monitoring groups inside the country estimate the number of political prisoners at between 350 and 400 persons.... According to human rights monitoring groups inside the country, the number of political prisoners increased slightly during the year....".

(10) "The government does not allow criticism of the revolution or its leaders.... Charges of disseminating enemy propaganda (which includes merely expressing opinions at odds with those of the government) can bring sentences of up to 14 years.... Even the church-run publications are watched closely, denied access to mass printing equipment, and subject to governmental pressure.... All media must operate under party guidelines and reflect government views....".

(11) "The law punishes any unauthorized assembly of more than 3 persons, including those for private religious services in a private home.... The authorities have never approved a public meeting by a human rights group".

(12) "The government kept tight restrictions on freedom of movement.... [S]tate security officials have forbidden human rights advocates and independent journalists from traveling outside their home provinces, and the government also has sentenced others to internal exile".

(13) "Citizens do not have the legal right to change their government or to advocate change, and the government has retaliated systematically against those who sought peaceful political change. . . . An opposition or independent candidate has never been allowed to run for national office. . . .''.

(14) ''The government does not recognize any domestic human rights groups, or permit them to function legally . . . the government refuses to consider applications for legal recognition submitted by human rights monitoring groups. . . . The government steadfastly has rejected international human rights monitoring''.

(15) ''Workers can and have lost their jobs for their political beliefs, including their refusal to join the official union. . . . [T]he government requires foreign investors to contract workers through state employment agencies . . . workers . . . must meet certain political qualifications . . . to ensure that the workers chosen deserve to work in a joint enterprise. . . . [E]xploitative labor practices force foreign companies to pay the government as much as $500 to $600 per month for workers, while the workers in turn receive only a small peso wage from the government;''; and

Whereas the Czech Republic and Poland will again introduce a resolution condemning human rights practices of the Government of Cuba at the annual meeting of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights in Geneva, Switzerland: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,

SECTION 1. SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING THE HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION IN CUBA.

(a) SUPPORT FOR HUMAN RIGHTS RESOLUTION.—The Senate hereby expresses its support for the decision of member states meeting at the 56th Session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva, Switzerland, to consider a resolution introduced by the Czech Republic and Poland that, among other things, calls upon Cuba to respect ''human rights and fundamental freedoms and to provide the appropriate framework to guarantee the rule of law through democratic institutions and the independence of the judicial system''.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that the United States should make every effort necessary, including the engagement of high-level executive branch officials, to encourage cosponsorship of and support for this resolution on Cuba by other governments.

(c) TRANSMITTAL OF RESOLUTION.—The Secretary of the Senate shall transmit a copy of this resolution to the Secretary of State with the request that a copy be further transmitted to the chief of diplomatic mission in Washington, D.C., of each member state represented on the United Nations Human Rights Commission.

SENATE RESOLUTION 290—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE THAT COMPANIES LARGE AND SMALL IN EVERY PART OF THE WORLD SHOULD SUPPORT AND ADHERE TO THE GLOBAL SULLIVAN PRINCIPLES OF CORPORATE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY WHEREVER THEY HAVE OPERATIONS

Mr. SPECTER (for himself and Mr. FEINGOLD) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 290

Whereas Reverend Leon Sullivan, author of the Global Sullivan Principles, is known throughout the world for his bold and principled efforts to dismantle the system of apartheid in South Africa, for his work with Opportunities Industrialization Centers (OIC's) to create jobs for over 1,000,000 youth in 130 United States cities and 18 countries, and for his work in literacy training all over the world;

Whereas Reverend Sullivan initiated the original Sullivan Principles in 1977 as a code of conduct for companies operating in South Africa;

Whereas the Global Sullivan Principles promote equal opportunity for employees of all ages, races, ethnic backgrounds, and religions;

Whereas the Global Sullivan Principles stress the social responsibilities of corporations;

Whereas on June 7, 1999, President Clinton gave approval to the Principles; and

Whereas on November 2, 1999, Kofi Annan, Secretary General of the United Nations, urged corporate leaders to put the Global Sullivan Principles into practice: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved,

SECTION 1. CALLING FOR SUPPORT AND COMPLIANCE WITH THE GLOBAL SULLIVAN PRINCIPLES OF CORPORATE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY.

The Senate calls on companies large and small in every part of the world to support and adhere to the Global Sullivan Principles of Corporate Social Responsibility wherever they have operations.

SEC. 2. STATEMENT OF GLOBAL SULLIVAN PRINCIPLES OF CORPORATE SOCIAL RESPONSIBILITY.

In this resolution, the term ''Global Sullivan Principles of Corporate Social Responsibility'' means the principles stated as follows:

''As a company which endorses the Global Sullivan Principles we will respect the law, and as a responsible member of society we will apply these Principles with integrity consistent with the legitimate role of business. We will develop and implement company policies, procedures, training, and internal reporting structures to ensure commitment to these principles throughout our organization. We believe the application of these principles will achieve greater tolerance and better understanding among peoples, and advance the culture of peace.

''Accordingly, we will;

''Express our support for universal human rights and, particularly, those of our employees, the communities within which we operate, and parties with whom we do business.

''Promote equal opportunity for our employees at all levels of the company with respect to issues such as color, race, gender, age, ethnicity or religious beliefs, and operate without unacceptable worker treatment such as the exploitation of children, physical punishment, female abuse, involuntary servitude, or other forms of abuse.

''Respect our employees' voluntary freedom of association.

''Compensate our employees to enable them to meet at least their basic needs and provide the opportunity to improve their skill and capability in order to raise their social and economic opportunities.

''Provide a safe and healthy workplace; protect human health and the environment and promote sustainable development.

''Promote fair competition including respect for intellectual and other property rights, and not offer, pay or accept bribes.

''Work with governments and communities in which we do business to improve the quality of life in those communities, their educational, cultural, economic and social well-being and seek to provide training and opportunities for workers from disadvantaged backgrounds.

''Promote the application of these principles by those with whom we do business.

''We will be transparent in our implementation of these principles and provide information which demonstrates publicly our commitment to them.''.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

MARRIAGE TAX PENALTY RELIEF ACT OF 2000

DORGAN AMENDMENT NO. 3092

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. DORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 6) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to eliminate the marriage penalty by providing that the income tax rate bracket amounts, and the amount of the standard deduction, for joint returns shall be twice the amounts applicable to unmarried individuals; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . TREATMENT OF CONSERVATION RESERVE PROGRAM PAYMENTS AS RENTALS FROM REAL ESTATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1402(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (defining net earnings from self-employment) is amended by inserting ''and including payments under section 1233(2) of the Food Security Act of 1985 (16 U.S.C. 3833(2))'' after ''crop shares''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to payments made before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SMITH AMENDMENT NO. 3093

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill, H.R. 6, supra; as follows:

Strike section 3 and insert:

SEC. 3. ELIMINATION OF MARRIAGE PENALTY IN 15-PERCENT AND 28-PERCENT RATE BRACKETS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (f) of section 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to adjustments in tax tables so that inflation will not result in tax increases) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

''(8) ELIMINATION OF MARRIAGE PENALTY IN 15-PERCENT AND 28-PERCENT RATE BRACKETS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—With respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001, in prescribing the tables under paragraph (1)—

''(i) the maximum taxable income amount in the 15-percent rate bracket, the minimum and maximum taxable income amounts in the 28-percent rate bracket, and the minimum taxable income amount in the 31-percent rate bracket in the table contained in subsection (a) shall be 200 percent of the comparable taxable income amounts in the table contained in subsection (c) (after any other adjustment under this subsection), and

''(ii) the comparable taxable income amounts in the table contained in subsection (d) shall be ½ of the amounts determined under clause (i).

''(B) ROUNDING.—If any amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) is not a multiple of $50, such amount shall be rounded to the next lowest multiple of $50.''.

(b) TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Subparagraph (A) of section 1(f)(2) of such Code is amended by inserting ''except as provided in paragraph (8),'' before ''by increasing''.

(2) The heading for subsection (f) of section 1 of such Code is amended by inserting ''ELIMINATION OF MARRIAGE PENALTY IN 15-PERCENT AND 28-PERCENT RATE BRACKETS;'' before ''ADJUSTMENTS''.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

SCHUMER (AND BAYH) AMENDMENT NO. 3094

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. SCHUMER (for himself and Mr. BAYH) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill, H.R. 6, supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. ___. DEDUCTION FOR HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES AND CREDIT FOR INTEREST ON HIGHER EDUCATION LOANS.

(a) DEDUCTION ALLOWED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to additional itemized deductions for individuals) is amended by redesignating section 222 as section 223 and by inserting after section 221 the following:

''SEC. 222. HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.

''(a) ALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTION.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a deduction an amount equal to the applicable dollar amount of the qualified higher education expenses paid by the taxpayer during the taxable year.

''(2) APPLICABLE DOLLAR AMOUNT.—The applicable dollar amount for any taxable year shall be determined as follows:

''Taxable year:	Applicable dollar amount:
2002	$4,000
2003	$8,000
2004 and thereafter	$12,000.

''(b) LIMITATION BASED ON MODIFIED ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount which would (but for this subsection) be taken into account under subsection (a) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the amount determined under paragraph (2).

''(2) AMOUNT OF REDUCTION.—The amount determined under this paragraph equals the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount which would be so taken into account as—

''(A) the excess of—

''(i) the taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income for such taxable year, over

''(ii) $62,450 ($104,050 in the case of a joint return, $89,150 in the case of a return filed by a head of household, and $52,025 in the case of a return by a married individual filing separately), bears to

''(B) $15,000.

''(3) MODIFIED ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'modified adjusted gross income' means the adjusted gross income of the taxpayer for the taxable year determined—

''(A) without regard to this section and sections 911, 931, and 933, and

''(B) after the application of sections 86, 135, 219, 220, and 469.

For purposes of the sections referred to in subparagraph (B), adjusted gross income shall be determined without regard to the deduction allowed under this section.

''(c) QUALIFIED HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.—For purposes of this section—

''(1) QUALIFIED HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified higher education expenses' means tuition and fees charged by an educational institution and required for the enrollment or attendance of—

''(i) the taxpayer,

''(ii) the taxpayer's spouse,

''(iii) any dependent of the taxpayer with respect to whom the taxpayer is allowed a deduction under section 151, or

''(iv) any grandchild of the taxpayer, as an eligible student at an institution of higher education.

''(B) ELIGIBLE COURSES.—Amounts paid for qualified higher education expenses of any individual shall be taken into account under subsection (a) only to the extent such expenses—

''(i) are attributable to courses of instruction for which credit is allowed toward a baccalaureate degree by an institution of higher education or toward a certificate of required course work at a vocational school, and

''(ii) are not attributable to any graduate program of such individual.

''(C) EXCEPTION FOR NONACADEMIC FEES.—Such term does not include any student activity fees, athletic fees, insurance expenses, or other expenses unrelated to a student's academic course of instruction.

''(D) ELIGIBLE STUDENT.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'eligible student' means a student who—

''(i) meets the requirements of section 484(a)(1) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1091(a)(1)), as in effect on the date of the enactment of this section, and

''(ii) is carrying at least one-half the normal full-time work load for the course of study the student is pursuing, as determined by the institution of higher education.

''(E) IDENTIFICATION REQUIREMENT.—No deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) to a taxpayer with respect to an eligible student unless the taxpayer includes the name, age, and taxpayer identification number of such eligible student on the return of tax for the taxable year.

''(2) INSTITUTION OF HIGHER EDUCATION.—The term 'institution of higher education' means an institution which—

''(A) is described in section 481 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1088), as in effect on the date of the enactment of this section, and

''(B) is eligible to participate in programs under title IV of such Act.

''(d) SPECIAL RULES.—

''(1) NO DOUBLE BENEFIT.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—No deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any expense for which a deduction is allowable to the taxpayer under any other provision of this chapter unless the taxpayer irrevocably waives his right to the deduction of such expense under such other provision.

''(B) DENIAL OF DEDUCTION IF CREDIT ELECTED.—No deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for a taxable year with respect to the qualified higher education expenses of an individual if the taxpayer elects to have section 25A apply with respect to such individual for such year.

''(C) DEPENDENTS.—No deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) to any individual with respect to whom a deduction under section 151 is allowable to another taxpayer for a taxable year beginning in the calendar year in which such individual's taxable year begins.

''(D) COORDINATION WITH EXCLUSIONS.—A deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for qualified higher education expenses only to the extent the amount of such expenses exceeds the amount excludable under section 135 or 530(d)(2) for the taxable year.

''(2) LIMITATION ON TAXABLE YEAR OF DEDUCTION.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—A deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for qualified higher education expenses for any taxable year only to the extent such expenses are in connection with enrollment at an institution of higher education during the taxable year.

''(B) CERTAIN PREPAYMENTS ALLOWED.—Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to qualified higher education expenses paid during a taxable year if such expenses are in connection with an academic term beginning during such taxable year or during the first 3 months of the next taxable year.

''(3) ADJUSTMENT FOR CERTAIN SCHOLARSHIPS AND VETERANS BENEFITS.—The amount of qualified higher education expenses otherwise taken into account under subsection (a) with respect to the education of an individual shall be reduced (before the application of subsection (b)) by the sum of the amounts received with respect to such individual for the taxable year as—

''(A) a qualified scholarship which under section 117 is not includable in gross income,

''(B) an educational assistance allowance under chapter 30, 31, 32, 34, or 35 of title 38, United States Code, or

''(C) a payment (other than a gift, bequest, devise, or inheritance within the meaning of section 102(a)) for educational expenses, or attributable to enrollment at an eligible educational institution, which is exempt from income taxation by any law of the United States.

''(4) NO DEDUCTION FOR MARRIED INDIVIDUALS FILING SEPARATE RETURNS.—If the taxpayer is a married individual (within the meaning of section 7703), this section shall apply only if the taxpayer and the taxpayer's spouse file a joint return for the taxable year.

''(5) NONRESIDENT ALIENS.—If the taxpayer is a nonresident alien individual for any portion of the taxable year, this section shall apply only if such individual is treated as a resident alien of the United States for purposes of this chapter by reason of an election under subsection (g) or (h) of section 6013.

''(6) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary may prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this section, including regulations requiring recordkeeping and information reporting.''

(2) DEDUCTION ALLOWED IN COMPUTING ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—Section 62(a) of such Code is amended by inserting after paragraph (17) the following:

''(18) HIGHER EDUCATION EXPENSES.—The deduction allowed by section 222.''

(3) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 222 and inserting the following:

''Sec. 222. Higher education expenses.

''Sec. 223. Cross reference.''

(4) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to payments made in taxable years beginning after December 31, 2001.

(b) CREDIT FOR INTEREST ON HIGHER EDUCATION LOANS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25A the following new section:

"SEC. 25B. INTEREST ON HIGHER EDUCATION LOANS.

''(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—In the case of an individual, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the interest paid by the taxpayer during the taxable year on any qualified education loan.

''(b) MAXIMUM CREDIT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the credit allowed by subsection (a) for the taxable year shall not exceed $1,200.

''(2) LIMITATION BASED ON MODIFIED ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—If the modified adjusted gross income of the taxpayer for the taxable year exceeds $50,000 ($80,000 in the case of a joint return), the amount which would (but for this paragraph) be allowable as a credit under this section shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount which would be so allowable as such excess bears to $20,000.

''(B) MODIFIED ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME.—The term 'modified adjusted gross income' means adjusted gross income determined without regard to sections 911, 931, and 933.

''(C) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—In the case of any taxable year beginning after 2003, the $50,000 and $80,000 amounts referred to in subparagraph (A) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

''(i) such dollar amount, multiplied by

''(ii) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section (1)(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, by substituting '2002' for '1992'.

''(D) ROUNDING.—If any amount as adjusted under subparagraph (C) is not a multiple of $50, such amount shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $50.

''(c) DEPENDENTS NOT ELIGIBLE FOR CREDIT.—No credit shall be allowed by this section to an individual for the taxable year if a deduction under section 151 with respect to such individual is allowed to another taxpayer for the taxable year beginning in the calendar year in which such individual's taxable year begins.

''(d) LIMIT ON PERIOD CREDIT ALLOWED.—A credit shall be allowed under this section only with respect to interest paid on any qualified education loan during the first 60 months (whether or not consecutive) in which interest payments are required. For purposes of this paragraph, any loan and all refinancings of such loan shall be treated as 1 loan.

''(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

''(1) QUALIFIED EDUCATION LOAN.—The term 'qualified education loan' has the meaning given such term by section 221(e)(1).

''(2) DEPENDENT.—The term 'dependent' has the meaning given such term by section 152.

''(f) SPECIAL RULES.—

''(1) DENIAL OF DOUBLE BENEFIT.—No credit shall be allowed under this section for any amount taken into account for any deduction under any other provision of this chapter.

''(2) MARRIED COUPLES MUST FILE JOINT RETURN.—If the taxpayer is married at the close of the taxable year, the credit shall be allowed under subsection (a) only if the taxpayer and the taxpayer's spouse file a joint return for the taxable year.

''(3) MARITAL STATUS.—Marital status shall be determined in accordance with section 7703.''

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25A the following new item:

''Sec. 25B. Interest on higher education loans.''

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to any qualified education loan (as defined in section 25B(e)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as added by this subsection) incurred on, before, or after the date of the enactment of this Act, but only with respect to any loan interest payment due after December 31, 2002.

BAYH AMENDMENTS NOS. 3095–3096

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. BAYH submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill, H.R. 6, supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 3095

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Targeted Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act of 2000''.

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(c) SECTION 15 NOT TO APPLY.—No amendment made by section 2 shall be treated as a change in a rate of tax for purposes of section 15 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

SEC. 2. MARRIAGE CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25A the following new section:

"SEC. 25B. MARRIAGE CREDIT.

''(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—In the case of a joint return under section 6013, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the lesser of the amount determined under subsection (b) or (c) for the taxable year.

''(b) AMOUNT UNDER SUBSECTION (b).—For purposes of subsection (a), the amount under this subsection for any taxable year with respect to a taxpayer is determined in accordance with the following table:

''Taxable year:	Amount:
2001	$500
2002	$900
2003	$1,300
2004 and thereafter	$1,700.

''(c) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the amount determined under this subsection for any taxable year with respect to a taxpayer is equal to the excess (if any) of—

''(A) the joint tentative tax of such taxpayer for such year, over

''(B) the combined tentative tax of such taxpayer for such year.

''(2) JOINT TENTATIVE TAX.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(A)—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The joint tentative tax of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the tax determined in accordance with the table contained in section 1(a) on the joint tentative taxable income of the taxpayer for such year.

''(B) JOINT TENTATIVE TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the joint tentative taxable income of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the excess of—

''(i) the earned income (as defined in section 32(c)(2)), and any income received as a pension or annuity which arises from an employer-employee relationship (including any social security benefit (as defined in section 86(d)(1)), of such taxpayer for such year, over

''(ii) the sum of—

''(I) either—

''(aa) the standard deduction determined under section 63(c)(2)(A)(i) for such taxpayer for such year, or

''(bb) in the case of an election under section 63(e), the total itemized deductions determined under section 63(d) for such taxpayer for such year, and

''(II) the total exemption amount for such taxpayer for such year determined under section 151.

''(3) COMBINED TENTATIVE TAX.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(A)—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The combined tentative tax of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the sum of the taxes determined in accordance with the table contained in section 1(c) on the individual tentative taxable income of each spouse for such year.

''(B) INDIVIDUAL TENTATIVE TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the individual tentative taxable income of a spouse for any taxable year is equal to the excess of—

''(i) the earned income (as defined in section 32(c)(2)), and any income received as a pension or annuity which arises from an employer-employee relationship (including any social security benefit (as defined in section 86(d)(1)), of such spouse for such year, over

''(ii) the sum of—

''(I) either—

''(aa) the standard deduction determined under section 63(c)(2)(C) for such spouse for such year, or

''(bb) in the case of an election under section 63(e), one-half of the total itemized deductions determined under paragraph (2)(B)(ii)(I)(bb) for such spouse for such year, and

''(II) one-half of the total exemption amount determined under paragraph (2)(B)(ii)(II) for such year.

''(d) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount which would (but for this subsection) be taken into account under subsection (a) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the amount determined under paragraph (2).

''(2) AMOUNT OF REDUCTION.—The amount determined under this paragraph is the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount which would be so taken into account as—

''(A) the excess of—

''(i) the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for such taxable year, over

''(ii) $120,000, bears to

''(B) $20,000.

''(e) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxable year beginning after 2004, the $1,700 amount referred to in subsection (b) and the $120,000 amount referred to in subsection (d)((2)(A)(ii) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

''(A) such dollar amount, multiplied by

''(B) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section (1)(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, by substituting '2003' for '1992'.

''(2) ROUNDING.—If the $1,700 amount (as so referred) and the $120,000 amount (as so referred) as adjusted under paragraph (1) is not a multiple of $25 and $50, respectively, such amount shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $25 and $50, respectively.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25A the following new item:

''Sec. 25B. Marriage credit.''

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 3. MARRIAGE PENALTY RELIEF FOR EARNED INCOME CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 32(b) (relating to percentages and amounts) is amended—

(1) by striking ''PERCENTAGES.—The credit'' in paragraph (1) and inserting ''PERCENTAGES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the credit'',

(2) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following new subparagraph:

''(B) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, the phaseout percentage determined under subparagraph (A)—

''(i) in the case of an eligible individual with 1 qualifying child shall be decreased by 1.87 percentage points, and

''(ii) in the case of an eligible individual with 2 or more qualifying child shall be decreased by 2.01 percentage points.'',

(3) by striking ''AMOUNTS.—The earned'' in paragraph (2) and inserting ''AMOUNTS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the earned'', and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

''(B) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, the phaseout amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be increased by $2,000.''.

(b) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—Paragraph (1)(B) of section 32(j) (relating to inflation adjustments) is amended to read as follows:

''(B) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, determined—

''(i) in the case of amounts in subsections (b)(2)(A) and (i)(1), by substituting 'calendar year 1995' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) thereof, and

''(ii) in the case of the $2,000 amount in subsection (b)(2)(B), by substituting 'calendar year 2000' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) of such section 1.''.

(c) ROUNDING.—Section 32(j)(2)(A) (relating to rounding) is amended by striking ''subsection (b)(2)'' and inserting ''subsection (b)(2)(A) (after being increased under subparagraph (B) thereof)''.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

AMENDMENT NO. 3096

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the ''Targeted Marriage Tax Penalty Relief Act of 2000''.

(b) AMENDMENT OF 1986 CODE.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

(c) SECTION 15 NOT TO APPLY.—No amendment made by section 2 shall be treated as a change in a rate of tax for purposes of section 15 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

SEC. 2. MARRIAGE CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 (relating to nonrefundable personal credits) is amended by inserting after section 25A the following new section:

''SEC. 25B. MARRIAGE CREDIT.

''(a) ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT.—In the case of a joint return under section 6013, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to the lesser of the amount determined under subsection (b) or (c) for the taxable year.

''(b) AMOUNT UNDER SUBSECTION (b).—For purposes of subsection (a), the amount under this subsection for any taxable year with respect to a taxpayer is determined in accordance with the following table:

''Taxable year:	Amount:
2001	$500
2002	$900
2003	$1,300
2004 and thereafter	$1,700.

''(c) DETERMINATION OF AMOUNT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the amount determined under this subsection for any taxable year with respect to a taxpayer is equal to the excess (if any) of—

''(A) the joint tentative tax of such taxpayer for such year, over

''(B) the combined tentative tax of such taxpayer for such year.

''(2) JOINT TENTATIVE TAX.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(A)—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The joint tentative tax of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the tax determined in accordance with the table contained in section 1(a) on the joint tentative taxable income of the taxpayer for such year.

''(B) JOINT TENTATIVE TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the joint tentative taxable income of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the excess of—

''(i) the earned income (as defined in section 32(c)(2)), and any income received as a pension or annuity which arises from an employer-employee relationship (including any social security benefit (as defined in section 86(d)(1)), of such taxpayer for such year, over

''(ii) the sum of—

''(I) either—

''(aa) the standard deduction determined under section 63(c)(2)(A)(i) for such taxpayer for such year, or

''(bb) in the case of an election under section 63(e), the total itemized deductions determined under section 63(d) for such taxpayer for such year, and

''(II) the total exemption amount for such taxpayer for such year determined under section 151.

''(3) COMBINED TENTATIVE TAX.—For purposes of paragraph (1)(A)—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The combined tentative tax of a taxpayer for any taxable year is equal to the sum of the taxes determined in accordance with the table contained in section 1(c) on the individual tentative taxable income of each spouse for such year.

''(B) INDIVIDUAL TENTATIVE TAXABLE INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the individual tentative taxable income of a spouse for any taxable year is equal to the excess of—

''(i) the earned income (as defined in section 32(c)(2)), and any income received as a pension or annuity which arises from an employer-employee relationship (including any social security benefit (as defined in section 86(d)(1)), of such spouse for such year, over

''(ii) the sum of—

''(I) either—

''(aa) the standard deduction determined under section 63(c)(2)(C) for such spouse for such year, or

''(bb) in the case of an election under section 63(e), one-half of the total itemized deductions determined under paragraph (2)(B)(ii)(I)(bb) for such spouse for such year, and

''(II) one-half of the total exemption amount determined under paragraph (2)(B)(ii)(II) for such year.

''(d) PHASEOUT OF CREDIT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount which would (but for this subsection) be taken into account under subsection (a) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by the amount determined under paragraph (2).

''(2) AMOUNT OF REDUCTION.—The amount determined under this paragraph is the amount which bears the same ratio to the amount which would be so taken into account as—

''(A) the excess of—

''(i) the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for such taxable year, over

''(ii) $120,000, bears to

''(B) $20,000.

''(e) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any taxable year beginning after 2004, the $1,700 amount referred to in subsection (b) and the $120,000 amount referred to in subsection (d)((2)(A)(ii) shall be increased by an amount equal to—

''(A) such dollar amount, multiplied by

''(B) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section (1)(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, by substituting '2003' for '1992'.

''(2) ROUNDING.—If the $1,700 amount (as so referred) and the $120,000 amount (as so referred) as adjusted under paragraph (1) is not a multiple of $25 and $50, respectively, such amount shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of $25 and $50, respectively.''.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 25A the following new item:

''Sec. 25B. Marriage credit.''

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

SEC. 3. MARRIAGE PENALTY RELIEF FOR EARNED INCOME CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 32(b) (relating to percentages and amounts) is amended—

(1) by striking ''PERCENTAGES.—The credit'' in paragraph (1) and inserting ''PERCENTAGES.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the credit'',

(2) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following new subparagraph:

''(B) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, the phaseout percentage determined under subparagraph (A)—

''(i) in the case of an eligible individual with 1 qualifying child shall be decreased by 1.87 percentage points, and

''(ii) in the case of an eligible individual with 2 or more qualifying child shall be decreased by 2.01 percentage points.'',

(3) by striking ''AMOUNTS.—The earned'' in paragraph (2) and inserting ''AMOUNTS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subparagraph (B), the earned'', and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

''(B) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, the phaseout amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be increased by $2,000.''.

(b) INFLATION ADJUSTMENT.—Paragraph (1)(B) of section 32(j) (relating to inflation adjustments) is amended to read as follows:

''(B) the cost-of-living adjustment determined under section 1(f)(3) for the calendar year in which the taxable year begins, determined—

''(i) in the case of amounts in subsections (b)(2)(A) and (i)(1), by substituting 'calendar year 1995' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) thereof, and

''(ii) in the case of the $2,000 amount in subsection (b)(2)(B), by substituting 'calendar year 2000' for 'calendar year 1992' in subparagraph (B) of such section 1.''.

(c) ROUNDING.—Section 32(j)(2)(A) (relating to rounding) is amended by striking ''subsection (b)(2)'' and inserting ''subsection (b)(2)(A) (after being increased under subparagraph (B) thereof)''.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 2000.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Administrative Oversight and the Courts be authorized to meet to conduct a hearing on Wednesday, April 12, 2000, at 9:30 a.m., in Hart 216.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules and Administration be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, April 2, 2000, at 9:30 a.m., to receive testimony on compelled political speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON EUROPEAN AFFAIRS

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on European Affairs of the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, April 12, 2000 at 10:00 a.m. to hold a hearing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC POLICY, EXPORT AND TRADE PROMOTION

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy, Export and Trade Promotion of the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, April 12, 2000 at 2:00 p.m. to hold a hearing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SECURITIES

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Securities of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, April 12, 2000, to conduct a hearing on ''Multi-State Insurance Agent Licensing Reforms and the Creation of the National Association of Registered Agents and Brokers.''

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON WATER AND POWER

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Water and Power of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, April 12 at 2:30 p.m. to conduct an oversight hearing. The subcommittee will receive testimony on federal actions affecting hydropower operations on the Columbia River system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRIVILEGES OF THE FLOOR

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a congressional fellow, an outstanding pilot in the U.S. Air Force, Maj. Scott Kindsvater, be allowed privileges of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ENZI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent Elizabeth Smith, the legal counsel for the Employment, Safety and Training Subcommittee be granted the privilege of the floor during further debate on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DISCHARGE AND REFERRAL OF S. 2163

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Indian Affairs be discharged from further consideration of S. 2163, a bill to provide for a study of the engineering feasibility of a water exchange in lieu of electrification of the Chandler Pumping Plant at Prosser Diversion Dam, Washington, and that the measure be referred to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AUTHORIZING TAKING OF PHOTOGRAPH

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of S. Res. 288, submitted earlier by Senator LOTT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 288) authorizing the taking of a photograph in the Chamber of the United States Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be agreed to and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 288) was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 288

Resolved, That paragraph 1 of Rule IV of the Rules for the Regulation of the Senate Wing of the United States Capitol (prohibiting the taking of pictures in the Senate Chamber) be temporarily suspended for the sole and specific purpose of permitting the Senate Photographic Studio to photograph the United States Senate in actual session on Tuesday, June 6, 2000, at the hour of 2:15 p.m.

SEC. 2. The Sergeant at Arms of the Senate is authorized and directed to make the necessary arrangements therefor, which arrangements shall provide for a minimum of disruption to Senate proceedings.

AUTHORIZING USE OF CAPITOL GROUNDS FOR 19TH ANNUAL NATIONAL PEACE OFFICERS' MEMORIAL SERVICE

AUTHORIZING USE OF CAPITOL GROUNDS FOR 200TH BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION OF THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

AUTHORIZING USE OF THE EAST FRONT OF THE CAPITOL GROUNDS FOR CERTAIN PERFORMANCES

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Rules Committee be discharged from further consideration of the following concurrent resolutions and, further, that the Senate proceed to their consideration en bloc: H. Con. Res. 278, H. Con. Res. 279, and H. Con. Res. 281.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the concurrent resolutions by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 278) authorizing the use of the Capitol Grounds for the 19th annual National Peace Officers' Memorial Service.

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 279) authorizing the use of the Capitol Grounds for the 200th birthday celebration of the Library of Congress.

A concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 281) authorizing the use of the East Front of the Capitol Grounds for performances sponsored by the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolutions.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be agreed to and the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, with the above occurring en bloc.

The concurrent resolutions (H. Con. Res. 278, H. Con. Res. 279, and H. Con. Res. 281) were agreed to.

PROVIDING FOR CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS TO THE BOARD OF REGENTS OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Rules Committee be discharged from further consideration of the following Senate joint resolutions: S.J. Res. 40, S.J. Res. 41, and S.J. Res. 42, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to these resolutions en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the joint resolutions by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 40) providing for the appointment of Alan G. Spoon as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 41) providing for the appointment of Sheila E. Widnall as citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 42) providing for the reappointment of Manuel L. Ibanez as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolutions.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be read a third time and passed, en bloc, the motions to reconsider be laid upon the table, and any statements relating to these resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The joint resolutions (S.J. Res. 40, S.J. Res. 41, and S.J. Res. 42) were read the third time and passed, as follows:

S.J. RES. 40

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in accordance with section 5581 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (20 U.S.C. 43), the vacancy on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, occurring by reason of resignation of Louis Gerstner of New York, is filled by the appointment of Alan G. Spoon of Maryland. The appointment is for a term of 6 years and shall take effect on the date of enactment of this joint resolution.

S.J. RES. 41

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in accordance with section 5581 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (20 U.S.C. 43), the vacancy on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, occurring by reason of the expiration of the term of Frank A. Shrontz of Washington on May 4, 2000, is filled by the appointment of Sheila E. Widnall of Massachusetts. The appointment is for a term of 6 years and shall take effect on May 5, 2000.

S.J. RES. 42

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, in accordance with section 5581 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (20 U.S.C. 43), the vacancy on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, occurring by reason of the expiration of the term of Manuel L. Ibáñez of Texas on May 4, 2000, is filled by the reappointment of the incumbent for a term of 6 years. The reappointment shall take effect on May 5, 2000.

STAR PRINT—S. 2343

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 2343, the National Historic Lighthouse Preservation Act of 2000, as introduced on April 4, 2000, be star printed to add text that was inadvertently omitted in the original bill. That is a request of Senator MURKOWSKI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 2000

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until the hour of 10:30 a.m. on Thursday, April 13. I further ask consent that on Thursday, immediately following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and the Senate then begin a period of morning business until 12:30 p.m., with Senators speaking up to 5 minutes each, with the following exceptions: Senator CRAPO, or his designee, 10:30 a.m. to 10:45 a.m.; Senator TIM HUTCHINSON, 10:45 a.m. to 11 a.m.; Senator BOB SMITH, or his designee, 11 a.m. to 11:30 a.m.; Senator HARRY REID, 20 minutes; Senator DODD, or his designee, 30 minutes; and Senator CONRAD, 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. I further ask unanimous consent that at 12:30 p.m. the Senate remain in morning business with regard to the marriage tax penalty until 2 p.m., with the time equally divided between the two leaders, or their designees, and the Senate then proceed to the cloture vote with regard to the amendment to H.R. 6 at 2 p.m., with the mandatory quorum waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. On behalf of the leader, I further announce, tomorrow morning there will be an opportunity in morning business for Senators to make general statements and for bill introductions until 12:30 p.m.

Following general morning business, Senators will begin statements with regard to the marriage tax penalty issue during a morning business period. By previous consent, at 2 p.m. there will be a cloture vote on the pending amendment to that important legislation.

It was hoped that an agreement would be reached to complete this measure after the Senate considered relevant amendments. Unfortunately, a consent could not be granted and, therefore, the 2 p.m. cloture vote is necessary. If cloture is not invoked on the substitute, there will be a second cloture vote on the underlying measure. Therefore, a second cloture vote may occur.

With April 15 fast approaching, this issue is of the utmost importance to many married couples and, therefore, it is essential that we vote tomorrow on moving forward with the bill.

Following the cloture votes, the Senate is expected to consider the budget resolution conference report. Therefore, additional votes will occur tomorrow afternoon.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 10:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. If there is no further business to come before the Senate, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 6:48 p.m., adjourned until Thursday, April 13, 2000, at 10:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, April 12, 2000

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
April 12, 2000.

I hereby appoint the Honorable STEVEN C. LATOURETTE to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Reverend Chip Lingle, Faith Lutheran Church, Savannah, Georgia, offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, from the endless bounty of Your love for Your creation, You provide all that we need. As Your people, we confess our trust in You, believing that You care for our welfare.

''In God we trust'' we proclaim on our currency. Yet the people of this Nation also put their trust in these elected representatives. We trust that they will do Your will and provide justice to ensure a quality of life that You provide.

Protect these honorable representatives, give them Your wisdom so that their decisions may reflect Your desire for Your people. Give them a quiet assurance and guide them in the difficult times. May Your will be reflected through them and may Your people be blessed by their leadership. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCNULTY) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. MCNULTY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

WELCOMING REVEREND CHIP LINGLE TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I introduce the chaplain of today, the Reverend Chip Lingle.

Chip comes to us from Faith Lutheran Church in Savannah, the mother city of Georgia, founded in 1733. He has been there with his wife, Ruth, for 5 years.

Reverend Lingle grew up in North Carolina and did his undergraduate studies at the University of North Carolina in Raleigh. He received his master's from the Lutheran Theological Seminary of the South in Columbia, South Carolina and has served in churches in North Carolina, South Carolina, and in Georgia.

I have gotten to know the Lingle family over the past years and have become great friends with his son Ben, who also served as a page here. Ben goes to Jenkins High School and is a member of the National Honor Society. He is a member of the marching band and concert band. He is on the Mock Trial team and has been very active in Boy Scouts and church activities and plays in a rock and roll band called Sweet Pig.

Ben is also here with us today; and so is Reverend Lingle's mother, Isetta Lingle, who is with us in the gallery.

So please join me in welcoming Reverend Chip Lingle.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain 10 one-minute requests from each side of the aisle.

Members are reminded to refrain from references to those spectators in the gallery.

WAR AGAINST METHAMPHETAMINE ACT OF 2000

(Mr. CALVERT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CALVERT. Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that methamphetamine has reached epidemic proportions in our Nation. Last year alone, we saw almost 6,000 lab seizures affecting nearly every State in the Nation.

It is time we declare war against meth. This deadly drug has thousands of innocent victims. Ordinary families find their property ruined or health at risk by the deadly chemicals used to make meth. These chemicals destroy soil and plants, contaminate drinking water, and poison the air we breathe.

We know we have reached a crisis situation with meth. The statistics are there. Forty-four States reported nearly 6,000 meth lab seizures in 1999 alone. And most disturbing, over 1,200 children were found during these lab seizures.

We must face the problem head on. My legislation does just that. The War Against Meth Act ensures that we stop meth production but punish those who would put innocent victims and the environment in danger. Today we introduce this bipartisan legislation with over 60 cosponsors.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to finally thank all the law enforcement men and women that are fighting this battle on a daily basis as we declare, once again, war on meth.

TAX CODE IS UNAMERICAN

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, the Tax Code is unAmerican. It is also so big it would give King Kong a hernia.

But the bad stuff is evident. The Tax Code rewards dependency, subsidizes illegitimacy, kills jobs, and chases companies overseas.

Now, if that is not enough to overload your hard drives, check this out: Experts say that the Tax Code is needed because it modifies economic behavior.

Beam me up.

If the Founders wanted to modify economic behavior, they would have contracted with Sigmund Freud to write the Tax Code.

I yield back the ego, the id, and the super ego of our kinky Tax Code.

WE NEED TO WAGE WAR AGAINST METH

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, earlier this year an illegal meth amphetamine lab exploded on the 12th floor in a hotel in downtown Reno.

So today, Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my strong support for a bill which my colleague the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT) just spoke about and will be introducing today. His Working and Reacting Against Methamphetamine Act will wage a full scale and meaningful war against the methamphetamine epidemic that has spread throughout America.

Mr. Speaker, last year, 1999, 44 States reported close to 6,000 meth lab seizures. Obviously, this is a growing problem that we must address.

The War Against Methamphetamine Act will increase the penalties for producing both amphetamine and methamphetamine. The bill will also provide law enforcement officials with the necessary tools and resources to effectively combat the meth epidemic.

We need to protect our children from the latest drug epidemic located in our open backyards. I encourage our colleagues to support the War Against Meth Act and its multifaceted approach to closing down meth labs nationwide.

WAR AGAINST METHAMPHETAMINE ACT

(Mr. REYES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. REYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the War Against Methamphetamine Act introduced by my colleague the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT).

We have all heard the staggering numbers related to meth labs across the country. The most troubling figure, in my mind, is the number of children that have been found at the lab seizure sites, 1,252 children at the sites.

This legislation increases penalties related to amphetamine and creates new and additional penalties for the production of these dangerous drugs. This bill also establishes a national center that would be created in conjunction and coordination with the Drug Enforcement Agency, the L.A. Clearinghouse, and the El Paso Intelligence Center, which is, by the way, located in my district.

The National Center will collect, analyze, and distribute all seizure information sent in by law enforcement officials across the country. This National Center will allow law enforcement officials across the country to instantly access vital information on these kinds of seizures.

I urge all my colleagues to cosponsor this bill and support our local law enforcement.

WILL PRESIDENT AL GORE PARDON PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON?

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, in an editorial in today's Washington Post, we hear once again that the new Independent Counsel Robert Ray is serious about indicting the President after he leaves office.

The Post says that, ''A plausible indictment of Mr. Clinton, who has never publicly acknowledged the extent of his wrongdoing, could surely be drawn.''

It goes on to say, ''Some opponents of impeachment argued during the congressional proceedings that Mr. Clinton's susceptibility to criminal prosecution after his term in office was a powerful reason not to remove him.''

And the Post editorial continues in talking about disbarment and a $90,000 fine, arguing in the end that Mr. Ray should exercise restraint.

Mr. Speaker, to me there is a more important question. The Associated Press reported yesterday the administration announced that the President will not pardon himself. But if the Vice President is successful in his bid to succeed his boss, would he then turn around and pardon him?

The real question is, will President AL GORE pardon President Bill Clinton? I think he owes it to the American people to explain.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind all Members that it is not in order to address the personality of the President or the Vice President of the United States.

FREE AND FAIR ELECTIONS PARAMOUNT TO OUR SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT AND THOSE OF CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA

(Mr. MCNULTY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield to my friend, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SANFORD).

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just make the point that, whether Republican or Democrat, a theme that our country is built on is the idea of free and fair elections. And if what is going on in Peru right now is able to stand, then the Fujijmori government in Peru will be built on unfree and unfair elections.

Indeed, a lot of controversy is going on right now about a young boy and whether he should or should not go back to Castro because of freedom. If we look at what is going on, again, in Peru, a cancer will start to grow that America should be no part of.

So I would say that, if what stands, we need to look at stripping aid from the supplemental, we need to look at blocking aid with the drug war, we need to look at blocking access to international financial institutions. Because free and fair elections are paramount to our system of government and to governments throughout Central and South America.

PASS H.R. 1070 BY THIS MOTHER'S DAY

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, despite education on preventive measures and early detection, the rate of cancer among women has continued to increase at an alarming rate. Every 64 minutes a woman is diagnosed with reproductive tract cancer. And just today, one in eight women will be diagnosed with breast cancer.

Our colleague, the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK), shared with us how she is among the fortunate who can afford life-saving treatment after her diagnosis.

We have encouraged low-income mothers and daughters to have mammogram screenings and early detection measures. But when these medical tests show an unfavorable diagnosis, who is there to ensure that they receive the life-saving treatment they so desperately need?

Mr. Speaker, our Nation's low-income women living with breast cancer cannot wait any longer. H.R. 1070 gives the States an optional Medicaid benefit to provide treatment to low-income women screened and diagnosed with breast or cervical cancer through the CDC early detection program.

Mother's Day is May 14, and the most valuable gift that Congress can give American women is a fighting chance at beating cancer. I hope that my colleagues will work for passage of H.R. 1070 by this Mother's Day.

REUNIFICATION OF FATHER AND SON

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, what I believe the American people would like to see as we move through this week is a simple reunification of a father and a son, Elian Gonzalez and Juan Miguel Gonzalez, without force, without violence, bringing the two families together, emphasizing the importance of family, helping us as the American people reaffirm our values that father and son belong together.

I hope we, as Members of the United States Congress, whose jurisdiction is not in play at this time, and appropriately so, will encourage the reunification of father and son, something that Americans have believed throughout the centuries.

WAR AGAINST METHAMPHETAMINE ACT

(Mr. LATHAM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the War Against Methamphetamine Act introduced today by our colleague from California (Mr. CALVERT).

In the upper Midwest in Iowa, there has simply been an explosion of methamphetamines that is affecting our young people, our families, our communities, and being the most destructive element that we have seen in many, many years.

There are four legs to fighting this problem. One is for interdiction, another enforcement, education, and then treatment. What this bill does is gives us the tools to help with enforcement by increasing penalties for those selling, by making sure that we are able to track people who are making the drugs, and by increasing penalties to those who are causing tremendous environmental damage with the labs that are being put in place to make this horrible drug.

This is a great measure to move us forward in this great battle, and I would hope the entire House will join in supporting this measure.

□ 1015

TAX CODE

(Mr. SHERMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, our economy is important, and we need sound policy, not soundbites. As the tax due date approaches, what we are getting is soundbites, and perhaps the worst is what is going on in the Committee on Ways and Means this week where they are considering a proposal to delegate rewriting the Tax Code to a commission, not to Members of Congress, who are supposed to report that code out on July 4, 2004, and then our Internal Revenue Code would, by the terms of this bill, expire by the end of 2004. This means our economy will be in total disarray. Who would invest in municipal bonds if they do not know if the advantages of investing in them will be swept away? Who will start an R&D tax project if the credit is going to be swept away or might be? And who would count on fiscal responsibility in a society that is going to give its Congress just a few months to rewrite the entire Tax Code after it hears from a commission?

What we see instead is an elaborate ruse that prevents us from reforming the Tax Code one section at a time.

ALZHEIMER'S/OKLAHOMA MEDICAL RESEARCH FOUNDATION

(Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce remarkable news from the great State of Oklahoma. Today, the Oklahoma Medical Research Foundation will announce a breakthrough discovery in the fight against Alzheimer's disease. Researchers at OMRF discovered the enzyme which is found in our brains and which scientists believe is directly responsible for the Alzheimer's disease.

Not only did Oklahoma researchers pinpoint the cause of Alzheimer's disease, they have also designed a way to stop it. If this breakthrough can successfully be transformed into a drug, Alzheimer's could become a manageable disease, like high blood pressure, diabetes, not the terminal disease we know now. This discovery will have a profound impact, since 4 million Americans suffer from Alzheimer's and another 19 million members of their families suffer along with them.

I hope one day my kids can view Alzheimer's the same way my generation views polio, a terrible disease that was conquered with scientific advances. Basic research forms the building blocks of science and medicine and this type of breakthrough clearly illustrates why the Federal Government's investment in basic research is invaluable. Again, I am excited to report this and the many coming announcements of good news from the Oklahoma Medical Research Foundation.

METHAMPHETAMINES

(Mr. BACA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BACA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of legislation introduced by the gentleman from California (Mr. CALVERT), my colleague from the Inland Empire. As a cosponsor of the bill, I join him in the war against meth labs. This bill increases penalties for drug criminals and puts them out of business. Meth labs create harm to a lot of our children and our communities. It contaminates drinking water. It contaminates the soil in our area.

There are more than 2,500 meth labs in the Inland Empire. That means children living at home exposed to chemicals with drug dealers, your children playing next to meth labs. Your spouses or your loved ones are at risk. That means 13 lab fires and explosions in San Bernardino County last year. That means homes blowing up and police being placed at risk. This is why the San Bernardino Sheriff's Department supports this bill. It is time to say no to drugs. Support this bill.

BREAST AND CERVICAL CANCER TREATMENT ACT

(Ms. DUNN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1070, the Breast and Cervical Cancer Treatment Act. This legislation provides States the option of providing Medicaid coverage to uninsured, low-income women who are diagnosed with breast or cervical cancer as part of a screening process by the Centers for Disease Control.

While the CDC's National Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection program helps identify women with breast or cervical cancer, it does not provide any coverage or any treatment. These women patients not only face a terrifying battle with cancer but they also must find ways to pay for the care they need. H.R. 1070 rectifies this problem by helping low-income women get the medical treatment they need. The bill is vital to help save the lives of women throughout our Nation. It would make the best gift Congress could offer if we were to pass H.R. 1070 by Mother's Day. I am pleased that this legislation soon will be considered on the floor of the House. It is a good bill and will do the job. I ask my colleagues to support this legislation.

TAX RELIEF

(Mr. KNOLLENBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, with a determination to save the American dream for the next generation, the Republican Congress has turned the tax-and-spend culture of Washington upside down and produced a balanced budget with tax cuts for the American people. Now that the Federal Government's financial house is finally in order, the big question facing Congress and the President is, what is next? With the average family still paying taxes, more in taxes than it spends on basic necessities, the obvious answer is tax relief for the American worker.

As we move from the era of budget deficits to budget surpluses, some people in this town will argue that we can afford to spend this money on new programs. However, that is the mindset that got us in trouble in the first place. For our children's sake, for common sense sake, it must be rejected once and for all. I urge, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues to continue fighting for the additional tax relief that the American people need and deserve.

A SIMPLER, FAIRER AND FLATTER TAX CODE

(Mr. CHABOT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. CHABOT. Mr. Speaker, our current tax code is unfair. It taxes savings. It taxes marriage. It even taxes death. It is virtually incomprehensible, even to tax lawyers and to accountants. In fact it is even four times the length of the Bible. This week we have an opportunity to take a major step towards reforming our tax system. The House will consider H.R. 1041, legislation to sunset the Tax Code.

This legislation will encourage Congress to create a simpler and fairer and more reasonable tax system for Americans. It gives us a deadline to do it. Once this bill becomes law, the current Tax Code would sunset on December 31, 2004, and Congress must then implement a new Tax Code or reauthorize the current one we have by July 4, 2005. Our tax laws are complicated, unfair, and unreasonable. Let us work together to sunset our abominable Tax Code and replace it with something simpler and fairer and flatter.

COMMEMORATING 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF HAMPSTEAD VOLUNTEER FIRE DEPARTMENT

(Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the men and women of the Hampstead Volunteer Fire Engine and Hose Company No. 1 of Carroll County, Maryland. The fire company was founded on February 13, 1900, and will celebrate its 100th anniversary on April 15 of this year. The founders' goal was to establish fire protection for their little town. One hundred years later, the town has grown and the company has grown from just a few men to more than 100 active and associate members whose goal today is the same, to provide the highest level of fire and emergency medical service to their community.

From the daunting task of fighting fires to responding to accidents and emergency medical situations, the Hampstead volunteers have remained stalwart members of the Hampstead community. Keep in mind, these are volunteers who come to the aid of their neighbors day and night, without pay and oftentimes with complete disregard for their own well-being. I am certain the citizens of Hampstead join me in congratulating the Hampstead fire fighters and look forward to another 100 years of exemplary service.

TAX LIMITATION CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 471 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 471

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 94) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to tax limitations. The joint resolution shall be considered as read for amendment. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and any amendment thereto to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) two hours of debate equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary; (2) an amendment printed in the Congressional Record pursuant to clause 8 of rule XVIII, if offered by the Minority Leader or his designee, which shall be considered as read, and shall be separately debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent; and (3) one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MOAKLEY), the distinguished ranking member of the Committee on Rules, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 471 is a structured rule providing for the consideration of H.J. Res. 94, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to tax limitations. The rule provides for 2 hours of debate in the House equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. The rule provides for one amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD if offered by the minority leader or his designee which shall be considered as read and shall be separately debatable for 1 hour equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent. Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, with tax day arriving at the end of this week, there is certainly no better time for the House to consider this important constitutional amendment. The tax limitation amendment starts from this very simple premise that it should be harder, not easier, for government to raise taxes. The average American pays more in taxes than it does in food, clothing, shelter, and transportation combined. For too long, the tax burden imposed by the Government has been going up, not going down. I am very, very proud to sponsor this constitutional amendment.

Mr. Speaker, passage of this rule will allow the House to begin debate on one of the most serious matters to be considered by this House, an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. When our Founding Fathers met more than 200 years ago to draft what became the Constitution of the United States, there was agreement on what problems our Nation faced and our Constitution was drafted to address these problems.

In many instances, they wrote specific language protecting people from what at times could be an oppressive, intrusive, or overbearing Federal Government. They protected bedrock foundations to our liberty and freedom, such as life, the pursuit of happiness, freedom of speech and freedom of religion. Just as importantly, the Founding Fathers required certain actions and laws passed by Congress to obtain a supermajority vote, not just a simple majority because they foresaw that the people must overwhelmingly support some action.

Our Founding Fathers were so insightful and ingenious in their preparation of the Constitution that they enlisted within our system of checks and balances a Constitution which would clearly enumerate occasions where a supermajority would be appropriate as a guardian of the people. A vote of two-thirds of both houses, for example, is required to override a presidential veto. A two-thirds vote of the Senate is required to approve treaties or to convict an impeached Federal official.

But a two-thirds vote in Congress is not yet required for raising taxes. In my view, our Founding Fathers would recognize that under the current system there is an inherent bias towards raising taxes and might have supported this constitutional amendment.

There has long been a bias towards raising taxes under the current system. Spending benefits are targeted at specific groups. These special interests successfully lobby Congress and the President for more and more spending. Taxes, on the other hand, are spread among millions of people. Taxpayers usually cannot come together as efficiently as a special interest group with a specific appropriation in mind.

As Congress seeks to keep the budget in balance, yet spending has still remained high, the easiest answer always for Congress is simply to raise taxes.

The Federal budget is currently in balance, in part due to spending constraints by Congress, as well as hard work and global-leading productivity of American workers, but short economic downturns can be expected. Future Congresses may not be as fiscally responsible and return to the ways of deficit spending.

The easy answer then is to raise taxes.

Making it more difficult to raise taxes balances the options available to Congress and makes decisions on the size of government. It is critical that this balance be achieved. By requiring a supermajority to raise taxes, an incentive for government agencies would be created to eliminate waste, fraud and abuse and to create efficiency rather than simply turning to more deficit spending or to increase taxes.

It is important to remember that there was no Federal income tax when our Founding Fathers drafted the Constitution. Not until 1913 was the 16th amendment of the Constitution passed to allow Congress to tax the American people. The first tax ranged from 1 to 7 percent and only applied to the wealthiest Americans. Today, some taxes are collected by the Federal Government at a 50 percent rate.

Medieval serfs gave 30 percent of their output to the lord of the manor. Egyptian peasants gave 20 percent of their toils in their fields to the Pharaoh. God only required 10 percent from the people of Israel. Yet in America, Federal, State and local taxes eat up many times in excess of 40 percent of the average American's income.

The burden of tax rates is not only too high, but that is only half the story. As tax rates have increased, the heavy hand of the tax collecting branch of our government has been strengthened. It has been determined by our majority leader, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY), that our Federal income tax collection agency, the Internal Revenue Service, sends out more than 8 billion pages of forms and instructions each year. Our Federal income tax collection agency is twice as big as the CIA and five times bigger than the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

No other institution poses such a threat to liberty than the Internal Revenue Service and our Tax Code, and this is all as a consequence that tax rates are too high and the Tax Code is too complex.

A constitutional amendment requiring a two-thirds vote to raise taxes would help alleviate some of this misfortune. Thomas Jefferson once wrote, ''The God who gave us life gave us liberty.''

I imagine that Thomas Jefferson never envisioned such an intrusive agency as the IRS. Today, unfortunately, the reality is the IRS is a prevalent part of our daily lives, particularly this week with the April 15 tax deadline fast approaching.

Every year, Americans are taxed for billions and billions of dollars. Sometimes these taxes that are passed are retroactively done so. Sometimes they are passed from generation to generation and sometimes they are forced upon us even after death by the Federal Government.

So today, Mr. Speaker, I stand before my colleagues with a bipartisan coalition to put forth to the States a question of liberty. Will we make it harder for Congress to raise taxes on its citizens? Will we require a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress to pass a tax increase on to working Americans and children? Will we pass this amendment to the Constitution and require a supermajority, not just a simple majority to raise taxes?

This amendment will apply to all tax increases from the Federal Government, not just tax hikes. A two-thirds vote requirement would allow Congress to raise taxes in time of war or national emergency, but would simultaneously prevent the intrusive and penalizing tax increases that have been enacted with recklessness to fund government expansion over the last decades.

As we speak, several States of this great Union, including Arizona, California, Florida and Missouri, have adopted measures requiring that any tax increase by their legislature pass by a two-thirds majority. It is time that the Federal Government joins these States in listening to the voice of the American people. It should be harder to raise taxes. Had this amendment been adopted sooner, the four largest tax increases since 1980, in 1982, 1983, 1990 and 1993 all would have failed. That tax increase in 1993 was the largest tax increase in American history and it passed just by one vote. These tax increases totaled $666 billion to the American taxpayer.

The bottom line of this debate, Mr. Speaker, is that we should make it more difficult to raise taxes on the American people. Those that oppose it will do so because they want to make it easier to raise taxes on the American people.

Mr. Speaker, this is the defining issue. Those Members who support this amendment are here to support the taxpayers of America. Those Members who oppose it today are here to defend the tax collectors of America. It is really that simple.

We hear rhetoric from opponents of this legislation citing jurisdiction, procedure, and a slew of other glossary terms but nothing can hide the reality that America and all taxpayers support a two-thirds tax limitation because they want to make it more difficult to raise taxes.

Mr. Speaker, like many Members of this body I not only oppose raising taxes, I support making our Tax Code fairer, simpler, and flatter. The tax limitation amendment allows for tax reform and it provides that any tax reform is revenue neutral or provides a net tax cut. Also, any fundamental tax reform which would have the overall effect of lowering taxes could also still pass with a simple majority.

The tax limitation amendment also allows for a simple majority vote to eliminate tax loopholes. The de minimis exemption would allow nearly all loopholes to be closed without the supermajority requirement.

We may hear from opponents today, those who will be saying to make it more difficult to raise taxes that the Government would be unable to function if a supermajority is required. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would encourage Members to look back at their States. Fourteen States require a supermajority to raise taxes. Millions of Americans living in these States have enjoyed slower growth in taxes, slower growth in government spending, faster growing economies, and lower unemployment rates. Tax limitation can bring to all Americans those things that are benefits that are enjoyed by those living in tax limitation States.

This amendment protects the American people. It makes it harder for the Federal Government to raise taxes on its citizens and that is why I am here today.

Today we can take one step closer to regaining liberty and ensuring future generations the freedom of our Founding Fathers intended for all Americans to enjoy. This debate is about liberty. This debate is about requiring a two-thirds vote to raise taxes on America.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would remind my colleagues that this is a fair rule adopted by a voice vote yesterday in the Committee on Rules. It is the standard rule under which this proposal has been considered for years in the past. I urge my colleagues to support this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague, my friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), for yielding me the customary half hour, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today marks the fifth year in a row that my Republican colleagues have dusted off this old same constitutional amendment just in time for tax day. At the end of the day, Mr. Speaker, we will probably mark the fifth year in a row that this amendment fails to garner the required two-thirds vote.

So why do my Republican colleagues continue to bring up this resolution year after year after year? They do not even bother to bring it to their own Committee on the Judiciary. I am glad that my friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), spoke so long and explained it because this is the only debate we are going to have on the bill. It did not go before the Committee on the Judiciary.

Imagine amending the Constitution of the United States of America without one hearing before the basic committee in the Congress that would deal with that, the Committee on the Judiciary?

Well, here we go again. Mr. Speaker, if my Republican colleagues were serious they would fine-tune this amendment in a congressional committee.

They would have hearings. They would mark it up, but this resolution has not been to the Committee on the Judiciary. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I will let my colleagues in on a little secret. This bill was just introduced last Thursday. The ink is still wet.

Given that the amendment is destined to fail again this year, as it does every year, it would seem that it is being offered not to effect change but really to affect the evening news, because even when my Republican colleagues had a chance to practice the preachings of this amendment, they did not.

We may recall at the beginning of the 104th Congress, my Republican colleagues changed the House rules to require a two-thirds majority for every tax increase. Mr. Speaker, guess what? Every time it came up, every time they have this tax increase, they waive the rule. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that if a rule is not to be obeyed in the House of Representatives that surely it is not worthy of being an amendment to the United States Constitution.

Back in the 1780s under the Articles of Confederation, the United States tried a supermajority. It did not work then. It will not work now.

The foundation of a supermajority is a mistrust, a mistrust of the ability of the majority of American people to govern; and I for one think that that mistrust is misplaced. Because of that mistrust, Mr. Speaker, a supermajority changes the very foundations of our government from a majority-run institution to a minority-run institution, and that is not what our Founding Fathers had in mind.

In the Federalist Papers No. 58, James Madison argued against supermajorities. Under a supermajority, he said, the fundamental principle of free government would be reversed. It would be no longer the majority that would rule. The power would be transferred to the minority.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, if this tax amendment were to pass, it would help the rich and hurt the middle- and lower-income people. Rich Americans get most of their government benefits in the form of tax breaks. The rest of the country gets their government benefits in the form of Social Security, Medicare, student loans, and unemployment insurance. This amendment would make it much harder to close those tax loopholes for the very rich, and make it necessary to cut the benefits for everyone else.

Mr. Speaker, it would also make it much harder to strengthen Social Security, make it much harder to strengthen Medicare. In fact, it could even have the effect of reducing Social Security benefits.

In short, Mr. Speaker, it would shackle our government to the tax laws in effect today, with very little hope of changing them in the future. Whether for better or for worse and like so many of my Republican colleagues' proposals, the rich come out way ahead and everybody else pays the price.

Mr. Speaker, this amendment was a bad idea 5 years ago. This was a bad idea 4 years ago. This was a bad idea 3 years ago. This was a bad idea 2 years ago; and, Mr. Speaker, it is a bad idea today.

□ 1045

So I urge my colleagues to oppose this annual tax day Valentine, this sloppy assault on our Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am really not surprised for us to be debating in this manner that what we are doing does not make sense, it is unnecessary, it is unwise, no one would be in favor of making it harder to raise taxes. It is bad for America, it is all for the rich. Well, in fact, the reason why we are standing up today is for the exact people that we have talked about that the minority says is bad for them.

There is a power model in this same vein that was followed and begun some 30 years ago. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER) from the Seventh District of Texas, now the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, when he came to Congress 30 years ago, the first bill that he dropped as a Member of Congress said that he would like to raise the earnings limit that was placed on senior citizens. For 25 years, he was not only called names and made fun of, but Members of the other side made sure that they said that is not necessary, it is for rich people. In fact, it was for the senior citizens of this country.

The gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER) became the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. The gentleman from Texas then held the first hearings that were necessary to begin the dialogue and the debate. Then this senior earnings limit began appearing on the floor of the House of Representatives because Republicans knew that it was important to senior citizens; and beyond that, it was simply fair and the right thing to do.

Several times, it was voted on on the floor of the House of Representatives. Our friends on the other side had an opportunity every time to vote against senior citizens in lifting this earnings limit.

Well, Mr. Speaker, what happened then is, because of efforts by the Republican Party where we quit spending every single penny of Social Security, the surplus, and we started putting it back into Social Security, my friends on the other side of the aisle began feeling a little bit queasy about who was making progress with the American taxpayer; in this case, it was the senior citizen of America.

Just 3 weeks ago, this House of Representatives passed 422 to nothing, unanimously in the Senate, that we would lift the earnings limit. The President of the United States signed this into law after vetoing this several times. The President said, boy, he wished we could have done more, could have done more for senior citizens, but not everybody is for making the same kind of progress. He recognized that there are honest differences on both sides of the aisle. Yes, we understand that honesty. We understand those honest differences today.

Today we are now in our 10th year of what may be a 30-year effort to make it harder to raise taxes. As usual, one side is going to be supportive of this, by and large, and the other side is going to drag their heels. But we are not going to be frustrated. We are not going to worry about what the rhetoric is. We are going to continue to stand up on the side of the taxpayer.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Stratford, Missouri (Mr. BLUNT), my colleague and assistant Majority Whip.

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) for the time to speak in favor of this rule and for bringing this, and I also want to thank him for bringing this important issue to the floor of the House.

We have a chance today to cast a vote for the future. Two-thirds simple majority is, in fact, reserved for the most important of issues, including amending the Constitution, ratifying treaties in the Senate. The founders understood that the two-thirds majority was appropriate majority on those kinds of issues.

I am confident that this standard of importance would have been used to decide other things if there had been any perception of what those other things might have been.

There were issues that James Madison and others thought were important enough for a supermajority. If they had any idea of what the tax burden on American families would be today, this would have been one of those issues in that Philadelphia summer of 1787.

A two-thirds simple majority standard would guarantee that there was a consensus among Members of both parties that increasing taxes was a necessity. This bill has gone through the committee process over and over again. It was just pointed out by the other side that this same legislation has been rejected by the House a number of times. Well, to be rejected by the House a number of times, it had to get to the House floor a number of times. It is the same bill that went through that committee process in the last Congress.

Today is the time to cast this vote. Today is the time to vote on this issue.

I am grateful that the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) in the Committee on Rules and the other committees have brought it to the floor today as they have.

By making it more difficult for Congress to endlessly reach into the pockets of working Americans, a two-thirds simple majority would require Members to be more careful in the dollars they spend. We should spend every dollar taken from American families with the utmost care, making it harder for this Congress and more likely for future Congresses to take that money, makes it more likely it will be spent with greater care, be more treasured as it comes here because it is coming right from working families.

In the 14 States which have implemented tax limitation standards, taxes and spending grew at a slower rate, while the economy and jobs grew at a faster rate than in the other States. That, Mr. Speaker, is not by accident.

Although the economy is presently strong, Federal taxes are still the highest they have been since World War II. The entire tax burden is the highest it has been in the history of the country. It is important to compliment this strong economic standard today by dealing with the future of taxes in America as this bill does.

The most recent States to pass tax limitation measures have done so with overwhelming voter approval. They would have met the two-thirds requirement because they met requirements of over 70 percent of their voters saying we want to see tax limits in our State.

Again, States with tax limitation supermajorities are adding economic opportunity at a rate faster than the other States. Job creators understand the stability that tax limitation brings to the economy. Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House today have an opportunity to show that we understand the importance of tax limitation for America's economy and the importance of tax limitation for America's families.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the rule, to support the bill, to make a stand for American families today and to make a stand for the future of America by putting this new supermajority requirement on the books and in the Constitution.

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MOAKLEY) for his engagement in this issue on the rule. I urge my colleagues to support this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 471, I call up the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 94) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with respect to tax limitation, and for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). Pursuant to House Resolution 471, the joint resolution is considered read for amendment.

The text of House Joint Resolution 471 is as follows:

H.J. RES. 94

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within seven years after the date of its submission for ratification:

''ARTICLE—

''SECTION 1. Any bill, resolution, or other legislative measure changing the internal revenue laws shall require for final adoption in each House the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members of that House voting and present, unless that bill, resolution, or other legislative measure is determined at the time of adoption, in a reasonable manner prescribed by law, not to increase the internal revenue by more than a de minimis amount. For the purposes of determining any increase in the internal revenue under this section, there shall be excluded any increase resulting from the lowering of an effective rate of any tax. On any vote for which the concurrence of two-thirds is required under this article, the yeas and nays of the Members of either House shall be entered on the Journal of that House.

''SECTION 2. The Congress may waive the requirements of this article when a declaration of war is in effect. The Congress may also waive this article when the United States is engaged in military conflict which causes an imminent and serious threat to national security and is so declared by a joint resolution, adopted by a majority of the whole number of each House, which becomes law. Any increase in the internal revenue enacted under such a waiver shall be effective for not longer than two years.''.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. After 2 hours of debate on the joint resolution, it shall be in order to consider an amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if offered by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), or his designee, which shall be considered read and debatable for 1 hour, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent.

The gentleman from Florida (Mr. SCARBOROUGH) and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK) each will control 1 hour of debate on the joint resolution.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SCARBOROUGH).

Mr. SCARBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) and ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to control the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SCARBOROUGH) from the Committee on the Judiciary for yielding me the time, and I would like to move into general debate.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Nevada (Mr. GIBBONS).

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, today I stand before my colleagues to support this bill. I want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) for allowing me to speak on this measure and for introducing this piece of critical legislation and bringing it before this body today.

Mr. Speaker, America needs this tax limitation amendment. Why? Well, this year, millions of Americans, hardworking, tax-paying Americans will be plagued by ''intaxication.'' What is intaxication? Well, if it were in the dictionary, intaxication would be defined by a euphoria experienced by getting a tax refund, well, a euphoria which lasts only until one realizes that it was one's money to start with.

This Congress has a duty to make it harder to raise taxes while ensuring a more responsible Federal budget. Why? Because we owe that type of accountability, we owe that responsibility to the hardworking American taxpayer when we take their money.

Let me give my colleagues a little history in my own State of Nevada. In 1994, I helped bring Nevada into the 21st Century with its own tax limitation amendment requiring a two-thirds supermajority vote. Why was that necessary? Because the left-wing liberal Democrats in the House in Nevada would not allow for an amendment to be passed, like they are doing here in this body. As a result, true democracy had to take its course.

I was required to go out and get 85,000 signatures from the people and citizens of the State of Nevada to bring that measure to a ballot where the citizens of Nevada could vote on it. The real democracy, Mr. Speaker, that bill, that legislation passed in Nevada by an overwhelming majority of the voters. In 1994, it received 78 percent of the vote. In 1996, it received 71 percent of the vote as an amendment to the Nevada Constitution, requiring a two-thirds supermajority to increase any State tax or fees.

The Federal Government needs to be put on the same fat-free diet that my home State of Nevada has been on since 1996. We need to make it more difficult to raise taxes on hardworking American men and women, and we need to shift congressional focus to the bloated spending programs of the Federal bureaucracy rather than paying attention to the pockets of the American taxpayers.

Passage of this legislation would ensure that Congress focuses its efforts to balance the budget, cut wasteful spending, and not raise taxes to create unneeded Federal revenue.

Anyone who takes a close look at those States that have this same type of supermajority restriction on raising taxes will find that those States have experienced faster growing economies, a more rapid increase in employment, lower taxes, and reduced growth in government spending.

No additional financial burdens should be placed on America's working family without an overwhelming demonstration of need and support of their elected officials before they raise taxes.

Let us stop the intoxication of intaxication plaguing America today. I urge my colleagues to support this tax limitation amendment.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of anything constructive for the House to do, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

To begin, Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate the overwhelming majority of our colleagues, approximately 432 of them, for ignoring this exercise in partisan silliness.

No one believes that this is anything more than a very feeble effort from a party that is having difficulty in presenting a program to try and look like it is doing something. No one thinks this is going anywhere.

We are about to debate an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Look who is here? At this point, it is now myself and the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS). We are here because we have to be here. If one of us was not here, we would have to stop. So the barest minimum number of people possible to keep this farce going are impressed into it.

Frankly, I am a little resentful because we are having a serious hearing in judiciary on the antitrust measure that I cannot be at.

I notice my Republican colleagues in the Judiciary, understanding this was coming, scripted it better; and they managed to get a Committee on Rules member to sit in so they could all be present at the hearing. The Committee on Rules presumably has nothing else to do at this time.

But now let us get to the proposal. I did hear one Member as I was coming in announced that what we are doing now is what James Madison would have done if he only were as smart as we are. It is true, and it is an inconvenient fact, because we do, as a body, like to pay tribute to the wisdom of the Founding Fathers; and what we are saying here is, boy, the Founding Fathers really blew one. Because this is not some obscure issue. They knew about taxation. They knew about two-thirds.

People make one of the least logical arguments I have ever heard, even in this sort of partisan silliness, when they say, well, the fact that the Constitution calls for two-thirds in some cases shows that it really should have called for two-thirds in this case. What that does is establish that the people who wrote the Constitution knew how to call for two-thirds when they thought the subject required it. They said, in certain cases, it takes two-thirds. They then, obviously, made a deliberate and conscious decision not to require two-thirds for taxation.

Now, to get around that, I did hear one of my colleagues say, well, if James Madison knew what we knew, he would have done what we have done. I doubt it. The evidence that James Madison would have thought exactly as he would have thought seems to me quite thin. What we have, of course, is the inconvenient fact that James Madison, quite clearly, thought the opposite. The people who wrote the Constitution decided that it would be a majority.

And that is, of course, a perfectly sensible thing. We happen to believe fundamentally that a majority of the people, as constituted, and remember the Senate is not that majoritarian, but a majority of those elected from the House on a popular basis and in the Senate on a State basis, make the important decisions. And all of the important ongoing governmental decisions are made by majorities.

Now, what has happened is this. The Republican Party used to be a very majoritarian party in its rhetoric. But they have now discovered, to their dismay, that the majority no longer loves them as much as they thought. This really goes back to 1995 when they shut down the Government and were jeered instead of cheered. So what we now have is an announcement by the Republican party that we cannot trust the majority of the American people, as the Constitution says they should be represented; and for measures they do not like, they need two-thirds.

Now, it is also the case that the Republican Party is offering a procedural objection to taxes instead of a substantive one. For example, the last time we raised taxes, as I recall, was 1993. We did do some tax increases before that under Ronald Reagan and George Bush, but the last time we raised them was in 1993, in the first year of the Clinton administration. And I remember my Republican colleagues objecting because we were raising taxes on middle-income people.

Now, most of the tax increases went there on people making well upwards of $100,000 in 1993, not middle income even by Republican standards; but there was an increase in the gasoline tax and they pointed that out. Well, we recently had a spike in gasoline prices because of OPEC, and I think a failure on the part of the administration to act initially as promptly as they should have, although I think they since have taken some effective action, so one suggestion was let us now deal with that 4.3 cent increase in the gas tax.

The Republican Party had a chance to do that. Where is the bill? The Republican Party, having fulminated against the gasoline tax increase of 1993 had the ideal opportunity to come forward with a reduction in the gasoline tax, and a few of them talked about it. Where is the bill? We did get a resolution threatening OPEC that we might call them names if they did not do some things. I have not seen a bill to reduce that gasoline tax.

The last time we raised taxes was in 1993. They will talk about how terrible it was, but they will not do anything about it. And the reason is that reality has had a very severe impact on the Republican Party and on their ideology. On the one hand, they denounce government; on the other hand, they seek opportunities to increase it.

Now, of course, we have the military budget, the single largest part of the discretionary budget; and it is faith among the Republicans that that is too small. We need vast increases, billions and billions of dollars to increase the military budget. But that is not all. The Republican Party has gone from denouncing the notion of helping older people buy prescription drugs to embracing it. They say there are differences in how much, but they want a new program. The Republican Party is for a new program, which will cost government money.

A couple of weeks ago we took a step that I approved of and that many Republicans approved of, and we put the Federal Government for the first time into the business of helping local fire departments in a systematic way. I am glad to do that, but it costs government money.

My Republican governor was just down here yesterday acknowledging the fact that a major highway project that he and his Republican predecessor thought were very important to Massachusetts would cost a couple of billion dollars more than they thought. That will cost government money.

For much of the time, my Republican colleagues join many Democratic colleagues in talking about increasing the budget of the National Institute of Health, increasing money for transportation, increasing money for the military, buying prescription drugs. We passed a housing bill last week overwhelmingly which talked about how important various Federal housing programs are to help people get homeownership. These cost money.

So in the abstract the Republican Party wants to look like the antitax party. But in particular they want to spend government money, just as many of the rest of us do, for good purposes. So what we get, to resolve that contradiction, is an entirely silly effort. I should not say it is an effort, because no one takes it seriously. We get this gesture to amend the Constitution of the United States and to wrench it away from democracy.

Now, this is not the first time the Republican Party has shown its lack of faith in the voters. We had that previously with term limits. What they said was, those voters, they do not understand. They cannot deal with elections. We have to put term limits on because they cannot understand it. Of course, for many Republicans the idea of term limits in the abstract was far more attractive than the idea of term limits in the particular, because among the people who will be voting for this constitutional amendment today to limit the electorate's ability to call for a tax increase will be people who will be defying their own pledge to limit the electorate's ability to reelect them. They have decided that does not work.

So we have what is, finally, fundamentally, a notion that democracy is flawed; that in this country the compromises they made about majority rule for the Senate, for instance two Senators per State, that was not enough; that we have to go further and make a very drastic change in the basic structure of government and say that when it comes to deciding how much money should be spent for public purposes and how much for private purposes, majority rule does not work.

Now, one last point. We hear this remarkably foolish notion that there is a dispute between the money that goes to the Government and the money that goes to the people. But all the money belongs to the people. The people understand, and the Republican Party has been forced to acknowledge it, that there are some purposes very important to the people that they cannot accomplish unless they do them jointly.

A tax cut putting money in individuals' pockets does not expand airports. A tax cut putting money in individuals' pockets will not solve the problem of putting more police on the streets or aiding local fire departments or increasing medical research through NIH. That is, there are, in a civilized society, some very important purposes that can best be accomplished by individuals spending their own money personally, and that is what the market generates, and that is a good thing; but there are also important purposes, particularly in a complex urban society, that can only be done jointly. And that is why we come together through government to deal with the environment, to deal with public safety, to deal with elderly people and other people's children who will not themselves be able to make it.

What this is is an announcement that democracy does not work; that the fundamental scheme of government adopted in 1787 in the Constitution is flawed; and, therefore, it has to be changed.

Fortunately, as the dearth of Members in this Chamber shows, no one takes it seriously. It is a political gesture put forward by a party that has no substantive legislative agenda. And I guess, given that, this is as good a way to kill time as any.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I do appreciate, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts pointing out, in his view, how this is just wasting time and it is the majority party that has nothing better to do. I want the gentleman to know that that is an argument that we hear over and over and over and have heard this over and over and over. This is what we would be led to believe about a balanced budget; whether we would have a balanced budget or not. The other side simply said there is no need for a balanced budget. America is great. Things are headed in the right direction.

Well, it was the Republican Party that brought forth not only the ideas but had the conviction to make sure that we would continue to talk about a balanced budget, even when there were people who believed it would never, ever happen.

I recall Senator FRITZ HOLLINGS, who is a marvelous Senator in the other body, stated that if we ever had a balanced budget by the year 2002, he would take a high dive off the top of the capitol. A high dive. It will never happen. There will never, ever be a balanced budget. That is what we were told on the other side.

We were told about welfare reform that welfare reform should never happen because welfare reform would put millions of people out in the streets and babies and families sleeping on sidewalks. Well, lo and behold, we had welfare reform, and we had welfare reform Republican-style that is so successful that even President Clinton calls it his own package today. Welfare reform that has led to not only changing behavior of people who had been on welfare for generation after generation, but welfare reform that has led to a 47 percent reduction in the amount of people who have had their hands out.

Instead, we have found jobs available because the Republican Party had the presence of mind to fight those who said we would never have a balanced budget; we would never have an economy where we could employ all the people who were on welfare.

And about IRS reform, they said, oh, there is nothing wrong with the IRS. The Tax Code is great. We love that. That is the Democrat Party mantra: no problem with America. We need to keep it the exact same way that we have got it today.

Well, it was a few voices in the Republican Party, who are still alive and well today, and with more than enough votes to pass these bills, with more than enough votes to talk about our vision for America, that want to make it more difficult to raise taxes in America.

Oh, my colleagues may say, the Constitution should address this. Well, we did not even have any tax bills; we could not even tax until the 16th amendment, until 1913. What happened in 1913, when we began taxing in America? The IRS looks entirely different than it does today.

Why today do we need this? We need this two-thirds tax limitation because we need to make it more difficult to raise taxes. We, today in America, are at a precious time in our history. The precious time is that the Republican Party has made it possible as a result of the balanced budget, when the other side said no and it was a silly idea, the other side said welfare reform is a silly idea and we should never have it, the IRS Tax Code reform the other side said was a silly idea and that we should not do it. That is what has unleashed the power of the American energy.

And it is called the free market system; men and women who go to work every day, who are making America work; and yet even today, when we have a surplus, our President has proposed a $96 billion tax increase in the year 2000. That is why we need to make sure that it requires two-thirds of this body and two-thirds of the Senate to say, yes, President Clinton and Vice President GORE, we want your ideas, we want to raise taxes by $96 billion.

Well, I am sure we will hear it said over and over about what a great plan the President's budget is; that President Clinton has the best budget, great for everybody; yet not one Member of this body would even sponsor the President's plan. Not one person would sponsor the President's budget. There is a reason why. There is a reason why today we are on the floor of the House of Representatives to say that we need to make it harder to raise taxes in America.

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA) be allowed to control the time on this side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The balance of the time on the minority side will be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA).

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I support the bill, and thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I associate myself with his remarks because he is right on target.

I want to put a few things down on the RECORD. In 1899, the Director of the Patent Office said ''Everything that can be invented has been invented.''

□ 1115

In 1905, President Cleveland said, ''Sensible and responsible women do not want to vote in America.''

Lord Kelvin, President of the Royal Society of England, said, ''Heavier than air flying machines are impossible.''

In 1927, Harry M. Warner, Chief of Warner Brothers Studios, said, ''Who the hell wants to hear actors talk?''

In 1968, an engineer at IBM said, ''As far as computer systems are concerned, what practical use will they really have?''

In 1977, the chairman of Digital Equipment Corporation said, ''There's no reason for anyone to ever want to have a computer in their home.''

In 1987, the Western Union internal memo said, ''The telephone has just too many shortcomings. Don't give up on our system.''

Edwin Drake said, ''People are literally going to drill in the earth to try and find oil?''

The big one was Dr. Lee DeForest. He said, ''Man will never reach the moon. Never.''

My colleagues, about the only thing I can say in my short speech is this: I tried to change the burden of proof in a civil tax case and required judicial consent before seizure; and I could not get it done for 10 years, the Democrats would not hold a hearing.

I want to thank the Republicans for not only holding the hearings, I want to give my colleagues the facts. In 1998 was the IRS reform law. In 1997, the last year, the old law. In 1999, the first year, the new law.

Now we compare them. In 1997, there were 3.1 million attachment of wages and bank accounts. In 1999, 540,000. Property liens in 1997, 680,000. The new law, 1999, 168,000.

But listen to this. The American people should be listening carefully. Requiring judicial consent before the IRS could take their home or their farm or their business, that the Republicans put my language in, in 1997, 10,037 Americans lost their homes, farms, and businesses. In 1999, 161. From 10,000 from the back room to 161 when the burden of proof was on the Government and had to have judicial consent.

Do I support this bill? Does a bear sleep in the woods?

I think we should mandate a two-thirds requirement before we continue to gouge and raise the American people's taxes, to boot, let an agency become so powerful an IRS employee would not testify unless she was behind a screen so we could not see her, with a voice scrambler so we could not identify her voice, and a guarantee her family would not be hurt.

God almighty.

Finally, let me say this: I think our Tax Code should be thrown out with a flat 15 percent, true 15 percent national retail sales tax. I will be testifying on the Tauzin/Traficant bill at 1 o'clock myself. It will ultimately be the tax scheme in America.

I think the Democrats, although they do not want to hear this, should get on board because they are getting moved further and further out of the picture, they are not being very progressive.

So I want to thank the chairman for the time. I believe his comments are right on target. I want to thank the Republican party for putting the Traficant burden of proof language in the reform bill and the judicial consent language in the reform bill, and I want to thank him on behalf of all Americans whose homes, farms, and businesses were not stolen.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to Joint Resolution 94. I will attempt to make my points with logic rather than volume.

This is the fifth time the House has taken up this particular constitutional amendment. It seems that since the Republicans have taken over control of the House, we have had over 100 constitutional amendments introduced.

When we are sworn in every 2 years in January, we swear to uphold the Constitution and nowhere do we say we come here to rewrite the Constitution.

Let us look back and see why the Framing Fathers put into the Constitution only three instances where a two-thirds vote would be necessary to take any action in the Government.

One was to change the Constitution. They thought it was a very, very important, sacred document and much thought should go into changing the various articles of the Constitution and, if we intend to do that, let us do it by a two-thirds vote.

They also provided that, if we were going to expel a Member from the House, one who was elected by a majority, I should add, of the people from his or her district, that should be done by a two-thirds vote.

The last and only other instance where they provided for a two-thirds vote was overriding a presidential veto. And here again, the bill that got to the President got there by a majority vote of both houses; and if, in fact, we are going to disagree with the President's objections, that we should do it by more than a majority. And so the Framers indicated at that point, let us call for a two-thirds vote. Only those three instances.

James Madison wisely observed in the Federalist Papers, supermajorities would reverse the fundamental principle of a free government. And he said, ''It would no longer be the majority that would rule. The power would be transferred to the minority.'' Let me repeat that. ''It would no longer be the majority that would rule. The power would be transferred to the minority.'' And how correct he is.

For almost all actions in this House a majority vote is required. A majority vote is required to give tax breaks at times to those large and very vocal corporate citizens who do not deserve them. Those tax breaks, my colleagues, if this were to pass and become part of the Constitution, would only require that a minority could stop closing that loophole. And the reason why is because, under that situation, to close a tax loophole of, let us say, a foreign corporation operating here but transferring the profits to a foreign land to avoid taxation, if we were to close that loophole, it would take two-thirds. More importantly, it would take a minority to stop it.

That is what this is all about, my colleagues. This is not to prevent willy-nilly tax increases to be placed upon the American people. Know full well that all of us in this Chamber and the Senate take that very seriously and it is done at times when it needs to be done. And if it is done without need and necessity, every 2 years we face the electorate and they will let their views be known.

But for the Republicans to once again try to tamper with the Constitution to provide a two-thirds vote for changing the tax laws in this country and not to provide that same two-thirds vote to close loopholes, which has the effect of bringing in more revenue, loopholes which are unwarranted, which happen all too often in this House, for that they could stop it with a small minority.

This constitutional amendment is not wise. It should not be supported by the House. If the taxpayers object to any tax action by the Committee on Ways and Means that I serve on or action by the full House, they will let their views be known. Let no one be kidded about that.

The gentleman who is controlling time on the other side indicated the great things we did with the welfare reform. But I should point out to him and to the other Members in the Chamber, if there are any, which there are not, that that was done with a majority vote. And if, in fact, that was so important, why do they not provide for a two-thirds vote for actions of the House dealing with issues like welfare reform? I would say that would be ridiculous. Because the stated principle of this country is majority rules.

In the House Rules, when the Republicans took over in 1994, they provided a supermajority, 60 percent, to pass any tax increases. That is in the House

Rules today, the rules that govern our activity in this Chamber. And every time that has come before the House, every time legislation has come before the House to raise taxes, and we have had it in H.R. 2491 in 1996, in H.R. 2425 that same year, we have had it again in 1996 in H.R. 3103, every time those increases came before us, the Republicans waived the House Rules.

By waiving the House Rules, they cast them aside. We do not look at them for that action. So consistency is not one of the Republican virtues evidently. But, nevertheless, this constitutional amendment is ill advised and it should not be supported by the Members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I really do appreciate the minority pointing out all the wonderful things that my party has done: a balanced budget, welfare reform, IRS Tax Code reform. These were not tax increases that required a supermajority. They were tax decreases and things that would increase not only the efficiency of America but bring more freedom for people.

I also would like to thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT), a Democrat, for his bipartisan effort to ensure that not only the people of Ohio but the people of this country understand that this is not a Republican or Democrat issue, this is a simple matter: Do we want to make it more difficult to raise taxes on American citizens? Do we want to make it more difficult for America to have to pay more taxes? Do we want to raise the bar to a level that would say this is not about willy-nilly tax increases, this is about something serious because it comes right out of their pocket?

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the honorable gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. VITTER).

Mr. VITTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise before the House today to urge my colleagues to support this tax limitation amendment, an important joint resolution that will help rein in creeping big government.

To listen to the minority, we would think this is some radical idea that is just from outer space. The fact of the matter is, this is a good idea that has come to us from States around the country, as so many of our good ideas and reforms that we have been trying to implement at the Federal level do. It is not a radical idea. It is an idea in practice in many States across the country, including my State of Louisiana.

States, particularly in recent years, have approved all sorts of restrictions on the ability of their legislatures to raise taxes. Voters in these States have agreed with this overwhelmingly. They have responded with overwhelming margins in terms of passing constitutional amendments to heighten the bar, to raise the bar, to limit State legislatures in terms of their ability to raise taxes, make it harder for State legislatures and local governments to increase taxes.

The tax limitation amendment on the floor today embodies these principles and this common practice in many States. I said it is in practice in Louisiana. It has been for some time. We require a two-thirds vote of the legislature to raise taxes. That is not a new idea. It has been in practice for many years.

When I was in the State legislature over the past 7 years, we went a step further and we adopted the same rule to even raise what can fairly be categorized as fees. So we put the same two-thirds vote burden even in terms of raising what could be fairly called a fee versus a tax. And again, this is not a radical idea. It has been in practice, and it has worked.

Now, some on the minority side would say, well, this is unfair because it tilts the playing field, it favors tax decreases, which would require a simple majority, and disfavors tax increases, which would now require two-thirds majority.

Let me be very direct about that point. You bet it does. That is why I am for the proposal. This is a good, solid reason behind the proposal, in fact, to tilt the playing field because we have an unacceptably high level of taxation in this country. What this vote will largely be about is our level of taxation, the highest in peacetime ever. Is that reasonable? Should we rush to increase it? Or is it reasonable to say that should be the limit, and we should try to go down from here?

So when Democrats take to the floor and say we are creating a bias against new taxes, we are creating a bias for tax cuts, I say amen, yes, we are. That is a large reason I am for this proposal, and I think it is very interesting and instructive that that is the reason many Democrats will oppose it, and that is the reason many Republicans, certainly including me, will speak for and vote for the proposal.

We also have to recognize that this is not being done in a vacuum. This is not being done in some era of historically low taxes. It is being done in a very specific context, an era of the highest peacetime tax burden on American working families in history. That is something we need to face and work toward reversing, the highest tax burden peacetime on American working families. In that context, is it not fair to say we are going to put this two-thirds vote into effect to not raise taxes?

Finally, one of the most important things this tax limitation amendment will do is to help bring this body together, to help bring the American people together and achieve solid consensus on a very important question of raising taxes. All too often very important measures like tax increases are passed by the slimmest of majorities. That really fractionalizes our House and the American people in the national debate over these questions. Should something as significant as increasing a historically high tax burden even further not require a solid consensus? Should that not require a supermajority? Will that not be good for our national debate and our body politic? I think a two-thirds majority should be required, I think that would be good for this institution and for the body politic and for the debate around the country so that we only do that when we have a solid consensus in favor of it.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The real reason we are here today debating this issue is that this is an election year and we need a rollcall. We need a rollcall on who supports increasing taxes with a two-thirds vote. To prove my point, I ask the Speaker to look around the Chamber. Here the House is involved in doing one of the more important, if not the most important, functions that we were elected to do; and the interest level is so high, no one bothered to come. Of the hundred or so authors of this amendment, they are not lined up to come and defend it. They know as well as you know, as well as I know, this is for show.

Like the swallows coming back to Capistrano, this constitutional amendment is here because it is an election year. I ask my friends, where is the constitutional amendment to provide a two-thirds vote to decrease Social Security benefits that millions of Americans depend on? Where is the constitutional amendment to require a two-thirds vote to cut Medicare? Where is your constitutional amendment to provide a two-thirds vote to cut education funding for our kids? That is not here, and it ain't coming here because that we can do by a majority vote. But we need two-thirds to lock in tax loopholes for some people's corporate friends. That is what this is all about.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I listened to my good friend from Wisconsin, and he is wrong. They have not just done it in election years. They have brought this thing out here every year at this time. This is an annual event. It really is like the sparrows, or swallows. Is it swallows or sparrows?

Mr. KLECZKA. Swallows.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. We have got to take this seriously, do we not? These guys really worry about somehow the money getting away from us, that it is somehow flowing out. They have been in control for 5 years. When they came in, they passed a House rule that said that if you are going to do anything with taxes, it took a two-thirds vote, a three-fifths vote or whatever it was.

It did not make any difference, because every time it came up, they waived the rule. They waived their own rule. They said it is going to take this much to pass any tax increase. But whenever they wanted to do it, they waived the rule and said we will do it with a majority. They did it so many times in the first session, the first 2 years they were in power, that the next time they came in, they said, well, let us revise the rule and make it really meaningless so that it only affects two or three little parts of the code. That way we can put any tax increase we want over here by a majority rule and in all the rest of the Tax Code. We protected these couple over here.

They could not even comply with that in a bill that the President vetoed last year. This is not a serious event. As I said yesterday, what you really need to do is figure out looking at the calendar what holy day is it or what saint's day is it or what holiday is it or what important day is it for Americans and you will figure out what the Republicans are going to bring out on the floor.

When it was St. Valentine's Day, we brought out the valentine for everybody, the marriage tax penalty bill passed here; and everybody got a valentine from the House of Representatives. It has not passed the Senate. It is probably going to pass maybe sometime in the future, but nothing has happened to it since. We have not heard a word about it.

Now we are down to tax day. We get a rash of bills yesterday, the taxpayers' bill of rights, and now we have got this thing out here for a supermajority on raising taxes, because they know people are thinking about filling out their income tax, all of us are doing it; and they know that people are worried or think they are paying too much or whatever, so let us go out there with something that will stir the people up, and we will show them we really care about taxes. But when it gets dark around here and they have to do something, they immediately waive all the rules and slide through stuff all the time.

Now, the thing that I keep wondering about, I was looking at my calendar last night trying to figure out what day are they going to bring the Patients' Bill of Rights out here. You have got all the people in this country, all the polls show they want something that passed the House, passed the Senate, been sitting in a conference committee, they want something that puts the control of their health care back in their doctors' and their own hands, not the insurance companies.

Any poll you run out there will be 80 percent for doing something about the Patients' Bill of Rights bill. But I cannot figure out what day it is going to be. I thought maybe Fourth of July; that would be freedom from insurance companies. I do not know how they are going to construct this, but they will find a day that that fits. The next question I have is what day are they going to bring out the prescription drug bill for seniors? There must be some day. It would not be Labor Day, I guess. Memorial Day maybe. That is it, Memorial Day. They will come out with it because they will think people want to memorialize old people. I do not know how they are going to do it.

If you would not waste so much time on this kind of nonsense and would come out here and deal with the issues that really affect American people, you would be able to get somewhere. But this kind of thing, we will take the vote. As I look around the floor, there are four of us on the floor right now, out of 435. It is a big issue, folks. You can tell how much people really care about this. One hundred of them sign it and they will not even come over and talk about it. I guess they are kind of ashamed of the foolishness of it.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, we have a sad situation in this country where American citizens are renouncing their citizenship, taking their wealth to foreign countries in a very, very obvious attempt to avoid any taxation. If, in fact, this constitutional amendment would prevail and be ratified by the States, what would the effect be on American citizens renouncing their citizenship and us trying to stop that outflow for tax avoidance?

Mr. MCDERMOTT. We would have to have a two-thirds vote in here to get anything done. We could not do it by the majority vote. A minority of people, 33 percent of the people in this House could stop that from happening. We could never correct that. The gentleman just points out one of a million problems with this. But it is obviously not a serious effort. It is going to go down here very shortly because most people realize that it is just for show. And when the day comes, I believe it will be about the 7th of November, you will wish you spent your time on the floor working on the Patients' Bill of Rights and prescription drugs and financing for schools and a whole raft of other real issues.

This is not a real issue. If it were, you would not waive your own rule every time you bring an appropriations act out here. You have broken every single point of order on putting caps on expenditures. Every single one has waived the caps. The ability to constrain spending is in your own hearts; and now you want to come out here and say, well, this is what we do. The Bible says, by your deeds you shall know them. And, in fact, your deeds say this is nonsense. Everyone ought to vote against this.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Never has there been a more logical explanation to understand the differences between the two parties. The Democrats today in the minority stand up and say things that take time, ideas that take time to mature are bad ideas, like raising the earning limits for seniors that took 30 years before we could get that done. A balanced budget, 30 years of Democrat control to where we had $5.5 trillion worth of debt in this country. Welfare reform. Bad ideas. These are the same words we hear over and over and over again. IRS Tax Code reform. Silly. Who would want that? I am pleased to say that the Republican Party wants it. I am pleased to say that people back home want it. I am pleased to say that today what we are doing is very important for people who understand that it is too easy for Congress to raise taxes. I am proud of what we are doing. It may take us 20 more years; it may take us 5 more years. But I will tell you that it is the right thing to do.

The speaker before talked about people leaving this country, leaving this country because they do not want to pay taxes. That could be true. I think it is that they realize they have got to pay too much in taxes. The things that they had worked hard for all their life, that they then could sit back and enjoy life is being taken from them by a tax code, an unfair tax code, the threat of a Congress raising taxes to take more and more from people who had earned the money.

That is why people are leaving. They are not leaving because it would be more difficult to raise taxes. They are not leaving because they are concerned about somebody taking less of their money. They are concerned about someone coming and taking from them what they have worked hard for.

This is an important issue. This is a defining issue in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Speaker, I am very, very proud and pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Farmsville, North Carolina (Mr. JONES), a member of the Committee on Banking and Financial Services.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas, and also I rise in strong support of this tax limitation amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am like most of my colleagues, both Republican and Democrat; when I go back to my district, I do a lot of speaking at civic clubs, I hold town meetings, and probably the most important thing that I can say is that, like all of my colleagues on both sides of the fence, I listen to the people I have the privilege to serve.

I can tell you that in the Third District of North Carolina, and I believe throughout this country, the majority of the people that pay taxes believe that they are overburdened with a tax system and with taxes coming from Washington, D.C.; and many of these people throughout this country and throughout my district feel that too many times those in Washington, D.C. on both sides of the aisle really are not listening to them.

I think that when we are today debating this issue, I am like the gentleman from the other side, I wish there were more people on the floor, and maybe during the day there will be others on both sides of this issue coming to the floor, but I think today what we are saying to the American people is that we are listening to you.

As the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) said, yes, maybe it will take 2 or 3 more years, but the point is, yes, you are right to talk about Social Security and these other issues, we do need to be debating these issues and need to try to find solutions to problems. But I will tell you that one of the problems is that the American people are overburdened with taxation.

I have to say, being a former Democrat who became a Republican, that I believe sincerely that it has been my party that has started these debates on the floor. It has been my party that has introduced legislation, and sometimes in a bipartisan way that we have passed legislation, to bring tax relief to the American people.

I think today this is a unique opportunity to talk about this tax limitation act because, Mr. Speaker, when we talk about amending the Constitution and creating a two-thirds majority to pass tax increases on the American people, we are basically giving it back to the American people through their legislative process to say yes, we want an amendment that will protect us and protect our families.

Mr. Speaker, the four largest Federal tax increases in the last 20 years would have failed had this amendment been in place. I think that is worthy to be repeated.

The four largest Federal tax increases in the last 20 years would have failed had this amendment been in place.

Mr. Speaker, most recently, in 1993, President Clinton and a Democratic Congress passed the largest tax increase in America's history. Now, I do not know if that would have passed or not, I doubt if it would have, if this had been in place.

Mr. Speaker, we always are saying, both sides of the aisle, that this is the people's House, that we are the people's representatives. Well, I think we need to listen to the people, and the people in this country are crying out for relief. They do feel and I feel also that they are overburdened.

I think the citizens of this country have a right to know when the House is debating a tax increase and that we need to debate it on the floor of the House, and I think a two-thirds majority of both sides voting to bring relief for passing a tax increase on the American people is extremely important.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, Congress should never seek to raise taxes on the American people without a two-thirds majority. That, again, is my philosophy. Some will agree, some will disagree.

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I want to read a quote from former President Ronald Reagan from his 1985, I believe, State of the Union address. I am going to repeat it after I read it one time.

Mr. Reagan said, ''Every dollar the Federal Government does not take from us,'' meaning the American people, ''every decision it does not make for us,'' meaning the American people, ''will make our economy stronger, our lives more abundant, our future more free.''

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that those words by Mr. Reagan fully explain why and how so many people throughout this country feel that too many times the United States Congress is not listening to them, no matter what the issue might be, whether it is taxes or another issue. But when it comes to taxes, Mr. Speaker, I can honestly say it is the Republican Party that has brought these debates on the floor to bring relief to the American people.

Mr. Speaker, I want to quote Mr. Reagan again. I am going to quote Mr. Reagan when he said, ''Every dollar the Federal Government does not take from us,'' us, the American people, ''every decision it does not make for us,'' the American people, ''will make our economy stronger, our lives more abundant, our future more free.''

Mr. Speaker, if we are truly the people's House and the people's representatives, then we need to pass this amendment.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK).

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of historical accuracy, I was going to ask if President Reagan said that when he signed a big tax increase in 1982, which he deemed necessary for economic purposes, or when a couple of years later he signed another significant tax increase which raised Social Security taxes? Those were two tax increases President Reagan signed. I do not think either one of them got two-thirds, so they might not have been passed under this. I wonder whether Mr. Reagan said that when he was signing those two very significant tax increases. I voted against both of them, by the way.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the framers of the Constitution provided that Congress shall have the sole power to declare war, and under that constitutional provision a majority, a majority, of both Houses is required. If, in fact, there was a need to amend the Constitution to provide for a two-thirds vote, surely do not you think a declaration of war, and not taxes, should be the item that we would be debating today? Do you think a declaration of war is less important than the tax issue of this country? I think not.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DOGGETT).

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the American people have come to realize that every spring about this time, as sure as daylight savings time going into effect and Easter and Passover coming along and kids anticipating their graduation from school, that it is tax time on April 15, and what they can expect is the same old complicated Tax Code. But they can be reassured that Republicans will be out here talking about it.

All those American citizens that are out there now working on their tax returns may not find a great deal of reassurance that after 6 years in office, all that our Republican colleagues, after 6 years of holding control in this House, all that our Republican colleagues have to offer this morning is the same old recycled speeches they have been giving and the same approach for the last 6 years.

I remember in one of the earlier sessions, I think it was back around 1995 or 1996, some fellow came out here and brought the whole Tax Code. I think if he had piled that thing end to end it would have reached up there to the clock.

Well, what have the Republicans done for the ordinary taxpayer that is out there struggling through their returns to simplify that code? Well, today, after 6 years of Republican leadership in this House, it probably now stretches above the clock, because they have added an additional 100 sections more or less to the Tax Code. Instead of dealing with issues like simplifying our Tax Code and making it fairer and more equitable to the ordinary middle-class taxpayer, they have recycled whatever speech and proposal they considered at their last political convention. So this is the second, third, maybe more years in Congress that we have had this same sorry proposal out here to consider.

Now, if you are out there working on your return and you are happy, and you think that a Tax Code that stretches up to the clock and beyond under Republican leadership is great, that it is fair, that it is equitable, that everyone in our country, from the very largest corporations to the person who is down at the lower end of the wage scale that is figuring out a fairly simple tax return, if you think they are all being treated fairly; if you think there are no special interests that come to Washington and get special loopholes written into the Tax Code so that they can dodge taxes, so that they can come close to cheating on their taxes under the system; if you like every aspect of the system that we have now, plus the additional 100 sections that the Republicans have added to the Tax Code, today's proposal is a perfect proposal for you. Because what they are seeking to do with this old recycled, retread proposal that they drag out on the eve of tax-paying day every season, what they are seeking to do is to freeze into place the code that we have today. So if some lobbyist has come to Washington and they have written themselves in a special loophole for their special interests because they had the longest limousine and the biggest political action committee and the most effective lobbyist, well, their provision will be frozen in unless we can get not only a majority of this Congress, but two-thirds of this Congress to come forward and stand up to the special interest group, which we could not get a majority to do in the past, but we have now got to have two-thirds.

So if you like the system we have now, if you like all the loopholes and the special interest provisions, you ought to be supporting this proposal. It will freeze them in forever if this retread proposal were actually designed and put into place in our Constitution.

If you think we need significant change in the way our system works, well, then I would think you would be strongly opposed to this kind of approach.

Now, over the course of the last 6 years we have often heard the same people who came out and piled up the Tax Code tell us that they disliked it so much that they were going to just grab down there and pull it out by the roots. That is a good applause line at the kind of convention that considers these old retread proposals like we have up here this morning.

Well, they have been in office 6 years, and they had a hearing on pulling the code out by the roots back in 1995. As I speak, there is another hearing going on. There has been no proposal advanced for a vote over that 6 years in the Committee on Ways and Means to pull it out by the roots. There has been no proposal presented even this week after 6 years of the Republicans being in charge here in the House. I think they cannot figure out which root to pull out, where and what new roots to put down to replace it.

So, instead, they keep coming up with the same old retread proposals, that if we ever made the mistake of actually adopting them, would only make the system worse than it is today and would assure that we could not get change in the system.

Mr. Speaker, there are some specific proposals that some of us have been advancing to try to address inequities in this Tax Code. What has been most I think indicative of the kind of problem we have today is that Republican leadership would rather focus on these meaningless retreads, instead of focusing on real issues, such as the way that corporate tax shelters manage to avoid what many have estimated is $10 billion a year in taxes and closing that up and seeing that they get treated the way that middle-class taxpayers get treated. The Republican leadership has said there is no need to address corporate tax shelters.

The situation is so bad that it has made the front page of Forbes magazine. This is not some strange off-beat journal. This is the magazine that calls itself ''the capitalist's tool.'' They wrote about the problem of tax shelter hustlers, describing on the magazine cover this fellow in the fedora, ''respectable accountants are peddling dicey corporate tax loopholes.'' Ten billion dollars a year is the estimate of lost tax revenues from tax shelters.

And the response of the Republican leadership, when they could be out here today doing something about that, is to squelch any real reform. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the Republican majority leader are saying that tax avoidance is about as American as apple pie, and encourage the continuation of this kind of misconduct.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Lawrence Summers, has suggested that this is the most serious compliance problem that we have in America today, this problem of tax hustlers. It is usually some former employee here on Capitol Hill that goes out to work for some big accounting firm, and they make a fortune selling and teaching people how to dodge, cheat, join in on tax scams.

And I think it is an outrage. I think it is the kind of outrage that has grown to such a substantial extent that we now even have the lawyers that represent some of the corporations that are dodging their taxes coming before the Congress in the form of the American Bar Association tax section, the tax section of the New York State bar, and urging us to do something. They recognize what a do-nothing Congress this is and how it will not respond, and they come forward and say ''please address this problem.'' But this Republican leadership has retreads like this instead.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOGGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have a question. I am on the Committee on Ways and Means with the gentleman, and I do not remember us ever having a hearing on this.

□ 1200

I do not remember us ever having a hearing, have us ever come and testify about this. To the best of my knowledge, there has never been a hearing in the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DOGGETT. On this particular amendment?

Mr. McDERMOTT. Yes, on this particular amendment.

Mr. DOGGETT. They had a hearing at their political convention on it, so they really do not need to have substantive hearings on it, because this is a political gimmick. It is a gimmick, not really a serious proposal about how to resolve the concerns American taxpayers have.

Mr. McDERMOTT. So when they put the sham together, they do not even bother putting the dressing around it and having a hearing?

Mr. DOGGETT. I think that is right. In other words, most proposals dealing with the Tax Code would bring in the experts; would do the kind of thing that I sought to do with these tax shelter hustlers, bring in the academic experts, the people out in the field, as well as just some ordinary citizens from across the country, to point out what an outrage this is.

But on this proposal, this has been more of a political gamesmanship kind of thing. They have not had a hearing because I guess other than recycling this old political rhetoric, there really would not be much to hear.

Mr. McDERMOTT. That is why we call it a retread. It has been through here, and they are trying to do it again. I think we will see it next year.

Mr. DOGGETT. Next year we will have substantial change. I believe that next year, since this particular Congress once again will not even honor the recommendations of its Joint Tax Committee to address corporate tax shelters, ignores the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury that this is the biggest tax compliance problem we have in America today, ignores the estimates that $10 billion a year is being lost in these cheating tax dodge schemes, I believe the next Congress is going to have enough new Members that people will say, enough is enough. We have had 6 years of do nothing, do little, avoidance of these problems.

Just as these kinds of folks encourage tax avoidance, we have had a leadership that has problem avoidance. They want to avoid the problems. I know it appeals to the same special interests that get these tax shelter hustler proposals.

But I believe the American people that are out there working on their taxes, certainly everybody would like to pay less, but they would like to at least be sure that other people are being dealt with fairly. Clearly these people are not dealing fairly.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, here we continue with the wonderful debate, which is what this amendment is all about, an opportunity for us to debate in the open, on the floor of the House of Representatives, the question of whether we are going to make it more difficult for Congress to raise taxes, raise taxes on the American taxpayer or not. It is a question of whether Washington, D.C. is going to make it more difficult to raise taxes or whether we are going to keep the status quo.

My colleagues on the other side of the aisle once again talk about all the things that this Republican Congress has not done, all the things that we have had an opportunity to do. I would remind my colleagues that, in fact, these same words were said about a balanced budget.

I remember running for Congress back in 1994, and people were saying to me over and over and over again, We will never have a balanced budget. It will never happen in my lifetime.

Well, there were people who did believe it. The naysayers who were there today are people who understand that this economy that we have in America, the opportunity, the growing economic development that we have, jobs in communities, schools that are producing not only brighter and better students but students who have technology at their fingertips, this is a part of what happens when we have a grand and bold idea, an idea that has always on the other side been talked about in negative ways: It would never happen. A balanced budget is silly. No need to do that.

Welfare reform, the same way. We talked about welfare reform on the floor of this House of Representatives, and day after day after day it was the other side, it was the minority party, who said, we do not need welfare reform. It will not amount to anything. As a matter of fact, it will harm the children of America.

IRS Tax Code reform. We hear the gentleman from Texas say that the Republicans have done nothing with what they had. In fact, what we have done is done things that are for the taxpayer: A $500 per child tax credit, a $500 per child tax credit that matters. Every single time an American who has a child goes to fill out their tax form, they get a $500 per child tax credit. It is going to happen again this Saturday as Americans are filling out their forms, they will get that.

Cutting capital gains. We heard, Cutting capital gains? A dangerous, risky proposition. We should not do that. Mr. Speaker, I would submit that the 1997 capital gains tax cut that Republicans voted on and supported that was signed by the President has meant that America has a booming economy.

Oh, the minority said, do Members realize that the tax collector, the United States government, will have $9 billion less in their coffers? Well, once again the minority party is concerned about the tax collector. It was the Republican party who was concerned about the taxpayer.

What happened? What happened was that the tax collector got $90 billion additional dollars in the Treasury, just like Republicans, through the leadership of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARCHER), chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, said that we will make a substantial investment in America because we are going to lower the risk. We are going to encourage people to participate in that which we are doing. We are going to take people and move them from welfare to work. We are going to enrich communities because we are going to allow dollars to be invested in America.

Oh, but there is more. This Republican do-nothing Congress raised the exemption for death taxes. That is not do-nothing, that is a realistic opportunity for people upon their death to know that their estate, instead of being broken up and splintered to the wind, thrown to the wind, and family businesses, small businesses and land, agricultural producers of food for not only this country but the world being broken up just because of a Tax Code, we heard, Oh, no, cannot do that. Bad idea. That is for rich people.

The education savings accounts, it was the Republican party who stood up against the naysayers of the Democrat party saying, This is bad for America, it is bad for public education to have education savings accounts.

Mr. Speaker, I will tell the Members that as the father of two little boys, one who is a 10-year-old who is a straight A student, who has taken advantage of books and education and computers and technology, the opportunity for him to be no different than other children who want to learn and read, for parents who get up and go to work every day and work hard to save money for that education for that child is important; also the parent of a 6-year-old Downs syndrome little boy, which my wife and I are, I know that our son needs more investment in not only his education but his development, just to make sure that he can stand on his own two feet and have an opportunity to make a go of it by himself.

That is why we offer the education savings account. That is why we cut capital gains. That is why we had a $500 per child tax credit. That is why we raised the exemption for death taxes. That is why just 2 weeks ago this House voted 422 to nothing on what had been controversial years before, to say we should raise the earning limits for seniors. We should not deny senior citizens who choose to work, which allows them not only to be in business but also to be healthier and happier, not to lose their social security because the Tax Code said that was the right way.

I am proud of my party. I am proud of my party and people back home and groups that will work to say, We need to make it more difficult to raise taxes. We need to make it more difficult, and it is a simple matter. That is what this amendment is all about.

I will confess, we may not get the amount of votes that we need today. We will get a majority of the votes, but we will not get enough. But the dream lives on forever. We intend to continue with this. Yes, it is done at tax time. It is done at a time when people understand that there is a voice, not a voice in the wilderness but a voice on the floor of the House of Representatives, the people's body.

We are going to get 240 votes on this today. We are going to stand up and talk about how it should be more difficult to raise taxes. I am proud of what my party stands for. I know what the other side stands for.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I find it kind of intriguing that the Republicans are trying to rewrite history, for if we go back to when this administration took over, they inherited a debt approaching $280 billion a year from the Bush administration. It was in 1993 that this Congress bit the bullet and passed a deficit reduction bill which massively cut spending, and it did adjust some taxes, but the effect of that legislation was to bring this country where we are today, enjoying the greatest economic growth in its history.

If it makes Republicans feel good and they want to take credit for it, let them do it. But let us not rewrite history, because this administration, when it took over, inherited an annual debt approaching if not exceeding some $280 billion a year in red ink.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY).

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the kindest characterization of this proposal would be to say that it is disingenuous. It is obviously disingenuous, because the party that is offering it here, the majority party in this House, several years ago adopted an internal resolution that required a two-thirds majority to raise revenues by any vote taken by the House of Representatives.

What have we seen in the carrying out of the adoption of that change in the rules here? What we have seen is that virtually every time the issue has come up, the leadership of the House has waived the requirement. So one can only conclude that this proposal for a super majority, anti-democratic super majority to raise revenues, is one that is not really believed in by those people who are offering it, because every time they have had an opportunity to put it into place they have abandoned it. They have walked away from it. It seems quite clear that they do not even believe in it themselves.

Why would we want to do this? Why would we put fiscal policy in a Constitution when every sound economic principle everywhere says that that would be a foolish thing to do? Why would we want to do it? How would we react to emergencies? How would we respond to a crisis in agriculture? How would we respond to national emergencies of various kinds? How would we respond to natural calamities when we needed to respond aggressively and forthrightly and attentively to those problems when people were in serious trouble?

Look what is happening in the farm belt all across America. Look what is happening to agriculture as a result of the 1996 farm bill and the destructive impact that that has had upon ranchers and farmers all across the country. We are not even responding to that adequately now under the leadership of the Republican party in this House. Imagine how much more difficult it would be if we required a two-thirds majority.

They have turned their backs on ranchers and farmers. Now they want to get even further away from them and other people who would face difficult circumstances in our country by implanting this super majority, this anti-democratic super majority provision in the Constitution as an amendment to the United States Constitution. It is an absurd proposal.

Why are they advancing the proposal? Ostensibly they are advancing the proposal because they would like everyone to think that taxes are too high, that Federal taxes are too high. Of course, everyone who is struggling with their income tax form these days is prepared to believe that, or many people are prepared to believe it, I assume.

But the fact of the matter is that the situation is quite different from that. Let us just take a look at certain people in our economy and how the income tax code relates to them.

The median income in America today is about $46,700. That is the median income; half below, half above. The average Federal income tax rate for a family of four at the median income in 1999, last year, is 7.5 percent. In 1981, it was 11.8 percent. The fact of the matter is that the tax rate for people at the median income is lower now than it was in 1981, and in fact, is the lowest it has been since 1966.

If one is making half of the median income, he is in effect at a negative income tax as a result of the changes in the earned income tax credit that were put into place by the Clinton administration as a result of the 1993 budget proposal. As a matter of fact, that budget proposal also made some adjustments downward for people at the lower-income ranges, as well. So the situation for people at the median income is better today than it was in 1981. People making half of the median income are not paying any income taxes whatsoever.

What about people making a little bit more money? Suppose someone is making twice the median income. Suppose they are making somewhere in excess of $90,000 a year for a family of four. The fact of the matter is that the median income for them is now 14.1 percent. What was it in 1981? It was 19.1 percent.

The median income for a family of four and the tax rate for the median income, people making twice the median income is lower than it was in 1981. Even after tax income, the after-tax rate for people at the top 1 percent is even lower than it was in 1987. The fact of the matter is that taxes are taking less of a bite of the income, Federal taxes, Federal income taxes, taking less of a bite out of the income of Americans than they were back in 1981.

This proposal is not just disingenuous. It is not just a proposal in which the proponents of it do not really believe themselves. They have abandoned it every time it is come up. They know very well it is not going to pass. It is not going to get two-thirds of the majority of this House voting for it.

It is simply put up here for partisan political reasons in the hope that they can deceive a few people here and there around the country, that the Republican Party really wants to see taxes cut, that they really believe in lower taxes.

When it was pointed out here just a few moments ago with the tax shelter hustlers, the front page of Forbes magazine what they really want to do, what they really want to do is protect the privileges of the very, very wealthy.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. HINCHEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, certainly it is important to point out they will freeze into place all of these special interests provisions, all of these loopholes. The gentleman focused, I think, very eloquently on the effects of their proposal and has also noted that what we mainly have been dealing with here, as is the case around every tax filing day, is hot air from the Republicans.

I would like to redirect the gentleman's attention from hot air to dirty air and another section that would be frozen into place, and that is section 527, which the gentleman joined with me last week in sponsoring legislation to address. Being from New York State, did the gentleman have occasion to see the ads that some Texans ran against Senator MCCAIN there in New York State?

Mr. HINCHEY. Yes, I believe I did.

Mr. DOGGETT. Even though Texas has some problems, having outdistanced Los Angeles, which is one of the cities that has the dirtiest air in the country in many areas, the claim was that one candidate was not enough of an environmentalist, but instead of doing that as a direct campaign, they used a 527 organization where the gentleman could not even find out who put the ad on television.

Mr. HINCHEY. Yes.

Mr. DOGGETT. Instead of doing the kind of hot air measure that we have here today, I believe the gentleman joined with me in saying that that was wrong and that taxpayers ought to have a right to be able to find out whether it is some Texas friend of one of the other presidential candidates or whether it is Chinese money or Iraqi money or Cuban money or just some homegrown special interests that wants to pour money into these kind of Swiss bank accounts of the political season this year to make unlimited expenditures, but never tell the taxpayers who is funding these kinds of hate campaigns that the gentleman must have seen in New York State.

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, we did see them in New York State, and there were advertisements that were put forth principally on Long Island; and they, of course, were deceitful. They were deceitful in a variety of ways. First of all, they pretended that the proponent of those ads, the beneficiary of those ads, was one who had a sound record in environmental protection when we know that the environmental record of Governor George W. Bush in Texas is an abysmal record.

In the air quality arena alone, for example, the city of Houston now has surpassed Los Angeles with the worst air quality in the country, as a result of the fact that Governor Bush has vetoed every attempt to pass sound environmental control legislation in the State and turned his back on environmental quality in the State generally.

Furthermore, the ads that the gentleman is talking about now, which were allowed as part of the Tax Code, those ads that the gentleman very appropriately brought to our attention today and which are allowed in a section of the Tax Code are totally deceitful and point out the reason why we need campaign finance reform and point out the illegitimacy of this proposal.

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, we said, look, whether those ads are put on by a Democrat, a pro-environmental group or an anti-environmental group, let us at least tell the taxpayers who is financing them. And this Republican leadership, the same Republican leadership that could have just sent all of us and the American people a cassette with the speeches that they gave last session or the session before that or the session before that or the session before that on this same sorry proposal.

They said they did not have time to consider that. They basically said that the only way they can get through this election was to continue taking unlimited amounts of secret money, including foreign money, that can be dumped into these political Swiss bank accounts called 527's and continue to stuff misinformation into our mailboxes and run hate on to the airwaves. They refused to consider the proposal that the gentleman personally has sponsored, did they not?

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from New York (Mr. HINCHEY), who is my good friend, during the time on the floor the gentleman wanted us to question why we are advancing this idea, what possibly could Republicans be for. Why are we advancing this idea? It is quite simple. We would like to make it more difficult to raise taxes on the American taxpayer.

Secondly, the gentleman asked, oh, my gosh if we had this, how would we respond to emergencies? The obvious implication is, could not raise taxes, could not raise taxes in the event of an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is very interesting that if we follow this, then we would have to respond to a crisis or any crisis in the following manner: number one, we would have to raise taxes; that is the first thing the Democrat Party wants to do. Number two, raise spending. Go spend it, go spend all of the taxpayers money, spend more and more and more. Number three, increase inefficiency, bigger government. Give it to the government, bring it to Washington, D.C.

My proposition is quite the opposite. My proposition is that it should be more about efficiency. Under a post-tax limitation amendment, the first thing that would happen is, government would have to increase efficiency. Government would have to look inward to itself.

It would have to do the same thing that I do at home with my wife and my family. We would have to live within a budget; could not raise taxes as easily; have to work within what we have; have to make some hard decisions; have to prioritize. It would increase efficiency because it would require the Government and the Congress to make tough decisions. Today, the path of least resistance, let us raise taxes, let us raise spending, let us just go do the same old Washington dance.

Secondly, under a post-tax limitation amendment, it would mean that we would have to then look at raising spending. How are we going to do that? Well, we would do that if there is an emergency because we had already squeezed the lemon dry. We could already prove to people back home we have looked inward, we have been efficient. Now what we have to do is to raise spending.

Remember, we are in a surplus condition. We do need to use more efficiently the money that has been given to us. Lastly, the thing that would be required, which is what the taxpayers, I believe, sent all of us to Congress to do, and that is lastly then to consider the last option or the least easy option, raise taxes.

This, to me, is what it is all about, that the Congress of the United States should have to come on the floor of the House of Representatives to debate the issues, to talk about efficiency, to do the right thing for the taxpayer back home; but the easiest thing should not be to raise taxes. That is where the minority party, that is where they fall virtually every time. That is where they are falling today. That is the difference between these two parties in Washington, D.C. Somebody that says let us just raise taxes, let us go raise taxes on the people who have the money, let us go raise taxes on people who have been successful, people who create our economy, people who provide jobs, we are going to make it more difficult. That is what this argument is about.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to my good friend, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. STEARNS).

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to come down here and speak on behalf of this amendment. I say with tongue in cheek that the Republicans celebrate July 4 and the Democrat Party celebrates April 15.

For most Americans, April 15 is a dreaded day. It is a feared day, a day in which taxpayers across the country are concentrating and reflecting on America's most frustrating and complex tax system. I do not know how many millions of pages there are, but it is enough.

So it is altogether appropriate, just before the April 15, we should reflect on our Nation's Tax Code and the problems it imposes upon taxpayers in America. So today we will be considering a most meaningful piece of legislation addressing the shortcoming of the system, the tax limitation amendment which will force Congress to garner a supermajority before approving any tax increase.

Later we will have this opportunity to vote for the bill, to scrap the Tax Code so we can replace this burdensome tax system with something far more fair and equitable.

Tax limitation would require in this House and in the Senate, if adopted, that there be a real consensus to raise taxes. It would take a two-thirds vote, which means we will not have a recurrence of one of the largest tax increases in American history in 1993 with President Clinton and Vice President Gore's proposal.

When I look at this, I go back and think about our Founding Fathers. These honorable leaders had the foresight to mandate a two-thirds majority vote on certain priority issues in this country. James Madison, a vocal supporter of majority rule, argued that the greatest threat to liberty in a republic came from unrestrained majority rule, and that is why they proposed two-thirds majority for conviction in impeachment trials, expulsion of a Member of Congress, override of a presidential veto, a quorum of two-thirds of the Senate to elect a President, to consent to a treaty and proposing constitutional amendments.

So if it is good enough for those, I think certainly it would be good enough for deciding whether we are having taxes here.

There were seven of these that were already in the Constitution when they wrote the document and since then they have added three more.

My colleague, Daniel Webster, obviously a great renowned legend of this great body, said, quote, ''the power to tax is the power to destroy.''

We voted yesterday against $116 billion in higher taxes and user fees as proposed in the administration's budget. Americans are simply taxed too much. It is both the Federal, State, and local level where it adds up to almost 40 percent; and, of course, there are many areas that we are taxed and we do not even know it.

Gasoline tax is one of them, corporate income tax, excise tax, State and local, as I mentioned. Though the average American family is paying somewhat less in Federal income tax, as I pointed out, the overall tax burden is approaching 40 percent. So this amendment is needed, something that many States are already doing.

I am glad the Federal Government is stepping up to the plate, and I urge strong support on both sides of the aisle to align yourself with what the States are doing, align yourself with the people and move forward to pass this amendment.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Goddard, Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT).

□ 1230

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), the member of the powerful Committee on Rules.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the constitutional amendment requiring a two-thirds majority to raise taxes on hardworking American families. The tax limitation amendment is powerful, yet responsible. By requiring two-thirds majority approval for any tax increase, this Congress is showing its deep concern for the constant imbalance of raising taxes in order to increase spending. We are attempting to ensure that the American people will not be subject to the whimsical and shortsighted notions of Congress to raise taxes at the drop of a hat.

Presently 14 States across this country require a supermajority in their legislatures to raise taxes. What has been the result? Their State taxes grow much slower and State spending is reduced. Additionally, these States have seen their economies grow at a rate of almost one-third faster than the 36 States that have not adopted supermajority requirements for tax increases. One-third faster than the States that have not adopted supermajority requirements.

A strong majority of American taxpaying families support this effort, which will assure that future Congresses have support of the American public before they attempt to raise taxes.

Mr. Speaker, the bottom line is that today's taxes are too high. Americans pay more in taxes than they do for food, clothing, and shelter. Efforts to reduce these burdens on Americans is much too little. It is an economic fact that the Big-Government crowd would like to ignore.

It frustrates me to witness some of the largest tax increases this Nation has ever seen to pass with only one or two votes, and it frustrates me further to know that this body can vote to increase taxes on all Americans when all of America does not support such action.

So today I am asking my colleagues to take a long, hard look at the remarkable possibilities this legislation offers and offer their support for this amendment. Members who oppose this legislation are telling the American public that it does not bother this Congress to saddle our Nation, our Nation's taxpayers with economic policies that penalize rather than reward. Our action today will show a great deal about the direction of this Congress and this country and, most importantly, about the future of our children.

I want to leave behind a legacy of a strong economy, a strong future for our children, and not one burdened heavily with taxes, stifling growth, limiting opportunity. By requiring a supermajority to raise taxes, we will prevent further knee-jerk reactions by big government supporters who care more about the outcome of arcane Federal programs than the hard work of everyday people that I and this amendment support.

So ask my fellow Members to support the legislation today.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. TIAHRT) just stated that all of America does not support tax increases, and that is clearly true.

Last year, the Republicans in the House produced a massive tax cut bill. They passed it. They went home for the August break, came back, and that was the last we heard about of it because all of the American public did not support the direction of that tax cut bill because they felt that reducing the Federal debt was more important. Saving Social Security, and modernizing Medicare was more important.

I should also point out to the gentleman from Kansas that all of his district did not support his coming here. Who did? A majority did. So if a majority is good enough to get him here to Congress, if a majority is good enough to have this Congress declare war, I would think tax policy in this country should be made by that same majority.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. WATT).

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I really had about made up my mind not to come over and even debate this amendment today. It is quite obvious that this is not a serious effort to amend the Constitution. What it is, instead, is a serious effort to make a political statement about taxation.

We have, every year now for the last 3 or 4 years, had this same proposal on the floor. There are not even any pretenses this year, because I am the ranking member of the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Committee on the Judiciary. This amendment did not even come through the Subcommittee on the Constitution of the Committee on the Judiciary this year to be considered.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, what was the committee vote on the Committee on the Judiciary to recommend this resolution to passage?

Mr. WATT of North Carolina. Well, beyond the Subcommittee on the Constitution, the bill did not even go through the full Committee on the Judiciary this year. It has in prior years. But if my colleagues are seriously saying that they are serious legislators and Members of Congress, and they take their job seriously, and they are going to amend the most sacred and profound document of our country, the United States Constitution, do they bring a proposed constitutional amendment to the floor of the United States House of Representatives without even going through the Subcommittee on the Constitution whose job it is to deliberate and decide on the merits of constitutional amendments? Do they circumvent the entire Committee on the Judiciary and go around that committee and bring it to the floor? Or do they go through the regular process?

So that in and of itself is an indication that this is a political exercise designed to score political points and having nothing to do with the merits of whether there should be a constitutional amendment.

Now, we have gone through this time after time after time. In the past, I have tried to bring constructive amendments to the legislation. It was not a constitutional amendment when it was done before. It was legislation that one could try to amend and try to bring some rationale to.

But this year, it is a whole new proposal. It is a constitutional proposal. But it went around all of the processes. It is hard for any of us to take this seriously other than we must be getting close to April 15, tax day in this country, and the Republicans must be very interested in making political points about the level of taxation in this country, which is fine. I mean, they can make those political points. Nobody likes taxes. But we have to have some priorities in this country.

If my colleagues are going to be serious about a constitutional amendment that raises taxes, what about a constitutional amendment that deals with cutting taxes? Why should there be a different standard when we are talking about doing away with loopholes in a Tax Code then we would if we were raising taxes.

But this constitutional amendment would not give us any authority to have a supermajority. So this is not serious. It undermines the basic principle that our country is founded on, which is one person, one vote. It undermines my representational authority for the 1/435th of the people of this country that I represent, because, all of a sudden, to get something done, we would require a two-thirds majority vote rather than a simple majority.

If this were being taken seriously, it would have gone through the regular process. So I do not even know why I came to debate this. We are not engaging in any serious congressional activity. It is obvious from that, from the number of people on the floor. So I will yield back the balance of my time so that my colleagues on the Republican side can go ahead and make their political point.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SHADEGG), a friend of the taxpayer, a gentleman who is a staunch supporter, a good conservative, chairman of the CATs, Conservative Action Team here.

Mr. SHADEGG. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the tax limitation amendment. I want to commend the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) for bringing this amendment forward. I want to commend the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), his cosponsor. I want to commend the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON) who has led this fight year in and year out.

1993 was not that long ago. Indeed, it seems to me like 1993 was just the snap of a fingers or a blink of an eye ago. It was just a few short years ago that we were standing here in 1993. Yet, why is that year significant to this debate? Because if we were to return the tax burden on the average American family to the level of that tax burden just 7 years ago, in 1993, as a percentage of our economy, every American family would get a tax break, would get tax relief of $2,500 a year. That is how much taxes have gone up as a proportion of our economy in just 7 short years, $2,500 for the average family across America of four people.

Now, what does $2,500 mean? It means an extra $200 a month in their budget. The reality is, in this city, in this Congress, government has grown year in and year out, in good times and in bad times, the last 40 years straight. I believe the American people deserve a break.

Let me talk to that point. What would $2,500 a year for the average family of four or $200 a month for the average family of four mean? Well, in 1996, we were engaged in a debate about tax relief on the floor of this House.

Many of my colleagues said, well, the American people do not really want tax relief. So I went home, and I said to my scheduler, I want to spend an hour in front of a grocery store or drug store on one side of my district talking to people, and I want to spend an hour in front of a grocery store or drug store on the other side of my district talking to people.

I went first to the east side of my district. The east side of my district is middle- to upper middle-income Americans. I stood there on the corner, and I talked to them about this issue. The first problem I had was to convince them that I really was the Congressman in that area.

But once I got beyond that, their second concern was, look, politicians will never cut taxes. You do not believe in cutting taxes. You will never give this. This is just political talk.

When I explained to them, no, we were really serious about this. On the east side of my district, they said, Congressman, sure we could use some tax relief. It is important to us. Almost 70 percent of them said to me, Absolutely. Give me some tax relief.

But the important part of this discussion was what occurred on the west side of my district. On the west side of my district, we are talking middle- to lower middle-income and below. I stood in front of a drug store on the west side of my District, and voter after voter after voter after voter, citizen after citizen that I got to engage in this discussion, once I get beyond the, no, you will never really give us any tax relief, and got into the substance, they said, Congressman, if you could give us any break at all, it would make a huge difference in our lives.

The people who are struggling to get by, those Americans who can barely pay their bills, who wake up each morning and struggle to get their kids fed and get them off to school, and the husband goes off to work and the wife also has to go back off to work, and they go through their day, and they come home, and they get their kids, and they struggle to get them to Little League or piano practice and get the homework done and get them back in bed, those Americans just barely getting by said to me, Congressman, if you could just give me a little bit of a break.

What have we done to those Americans in the last 7 years? We have added $2,500 to their tax burden. We have increased their tax burden on those poor, working, struggling-to-get-by families by $200 a month.

Now, what does this amendment say? Does this amendment say, let us give them a break and give them that $200 back, let us work, give them a chance? It simply says let us make it a little harder to raise taxes again. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SHADEGG) would have gone to that same town and asked the people on the west side of town what the major priorities in Congress are, they would have probably told him, Mr. Congressman, we need more money for defense. We have to increase the readiness of our armed services. And, by the way, Mr. Congressman, the bridge on Main Street is in need of repair. And we sure could use that 90 percent Federal funding for that new bridge.

Then as my colleague went to the east side of town and talked to the poor individuals, they would have probably said, Yes, we could use some relief. But, Mr. Congressman, my son or my daughter wants to go to college, and, boy, if you could increase the Pell Grants for that child of mine, that would sure be neat. The earned-income tax credit, that could use a look-see again by the Congress. Yes, that will cost some money.

And the point I am trying to make, my colleagues, is that all these needs and desires of the American public cost money.

My Republican colleagues seem to think that defense money comes from heaven and not from taxpayers and any other social program, like Medicare and drug benefits and other things that we fight for on this floor, that comes from the taxpayer. And the truth of the matter is that all those expenditures are funded by the taxpayers.

So, sure, we would all like to decrease taxes; but when we ask our constituents what program will they forego, we will find out that budget cutting is not the easiest in the world. We are going to put in big money for the National Institutes of Health, which we should do, to study children's diabetes and cancer and all sorts of other diseases. But those programs are funded off these nasty things we are talking about called taxes.

There is an old saying, ''Don't cut you, don't cut me, cut the man behind the tree.'' We cannot find the man behind the tree nor the tree. So my colleagues should not come before the body and say, boy, we need two-thirds to have any tax increase. If that is so, then we should have two-thirds to have any spending increases too for their favorite programs and my favorite programs. That would be fair. But that is not what the Founding Fathers envisioned.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL).

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, Mr. Speaker.

We went through this exercise on the balanced budget amendment for many years. The other side failed to understand the difference between promising to balance the budget and actually doing it. As it turned out, all they had to do to balance the budget was to support President Bush in 1990 and President Clinton in 1993. For the most part, they did not; but we balanced the budget over their objections.

The other side continues to misplace the distinction between promise and reality. They argue they need a constitutional amendment not to raise taxes, when all they simply need to do is not to raise taxes. In fact, the House voted yesterday 420 to 1 not to raise taxes. But I guess for the authors of this amendment that vote was too close.

This is tax frolic week, or tax press release week. To give another example of the deep thought that has gone into this week, tomorrow we take up a bill to repeal the Federal income tax with a promise to replace it in the future. We have to promise at that point, not knowing where we are going, that we are going to come up with a substitute, perhaps a flat tax to benefit the wealthy, or a 60 percent retail sales tax. But if both this bill and tomorrow's bill were to pass, it would require a two-thirds vote of Congress to replace the repealed Federal income tax.

Twenty years ago, I was standing in a classroom telling students of my reverence for the Constitution. What would I say to them about the shenanigans occurring here today? I would not even want to face them.

The Constitution requires a two-thirds majority vote in the House in only three instances: overriding a President's veto, submission of a constitutional amendment to the States, and expelling a Member from this House. Those are matters that are much more weighty than the one that faces us today.

Mr. Speaker, the Founding Fathers examined majority rule and what it meant. They rejected the notion that one-third of the Members of this institution should be in a position to determine the fate of legislation. They, led by Mr. Madison, reviewed the question of what constituted a majority in a legislative body. They concluded, based upon the bad experience of the Nation under the Articles of the Confederation, where nine of 13 States were positioned to raise eventual revenue, that it was simply a bad idea.

Upholding the current Constitution is truly, truly the conservative position in this debate. Holding the country hostage to the tyranny of the minority of one-third is, indeed, the radical position. But, apparently, Mr. Speaker, it makes better sense for a good press release than to stand with the Constitution.

So let us proceed. Crank out the press releases, go home for a 2-week break, and then, when we come back, let us do something real and substantive for a change.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair advise each side how much time is remaining on this issue.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA) has 3 minutes remaining; the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) has 9 minutes remaining.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Bloomfield Hills, Michigan (Mr. KNOLLENBERG).

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I also want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), and it would not be right if I did not thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), who has really been the crusader on this issue for a long, long time, and one I think that we ought to get straight and pass.

Since the beginning of the year, this Republican majority has succeeded in passing several tax cuts for the American people. We believe that couples should no longer be punished by the Tax Code because they are simply married.

We enacted legislation that prevents senior citizens from being taxed excessively, and particularly when they continue to be positive contributors to society. And we had bipartisan support for that.

We passed tax reduction legislation to help ensure that small businesses and family farms remain in the family.

But while we shall continue to offer tax cuts every year, today we have a historic opportunity to take a great leap forward by limiting tax increases forever. Passage of this act would require two-thirds of Congress to raise taxes. It is too easy, too easy, for this government to pass unnecessary tax increases on the hardworking people of this country. I repeat that: it is too easy.

If President Clinton, for example, had got his way this year in his budget, he would have increased taxes by $237 billion over the next 10 years. Why, Mr. Speaker, is the President trying to raise taxes in an era of budget surpluses? Why? Instead of raising taxes, should we not find ways to give the surplus, part of it at least, back to the people who have overpaid?

With a surplus on hand, and CBO projecting future surpluses, there is no need for any new tax increases. Congress should be focusing on forcing Federal bureaucrats to cut waste, fraud and abuse and spend their budgets wisely. For too long the Federal Government has raised taxes on a whim. This bill is the best way to ensure that taxes are increased only when it is absolutely necessary.

Currently, 14 States, as has been previously mentioned, have tax limitation provisions, and it has been demonstrated that States with limitation provisions have seen a reduction in the growth of spending. For a needed tax increase, a two-thirds majority would not be that difficult to obtain. We simply want to give the public the security that the Federal Government will not raise unnecessary and hasty tax increases.

I think it is about time that we restore the public's faith in government. Instead of only saying we are against new taxes, let us actually show them. I urge my colleagues to pass this legislation and protect Americans from the Washington big spenders.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON), representing the Sixth District of Texas, who brought this effort to the floor of the House of Representatives, and who is one of the most articulate spokesmen for the Tax Limitation Amendment.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this tax limitation constitutional amendment. I want to commend the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), representing the Fifth District of Texas, for his excellent leadership this year.

I have been able to listen to some of the debate this year. Certainly I have led the debate in prior years for the proponents of it. I have a few simple things to say in the 2½ minutes that I have remaining.

First of all, my constituents want tax limitation. I have never attended a town meeting, a public forum of any sort where this issue came up that less than 90 percent of the people there did not say they wanted this in the strongest possible terms.

I just did my taxes. I sent a check in to the Internal Revenue Service early this week. I know for a fact that our taxes are too high. In spite of the robust economy that we have, taxation of the American people is at an all-time high. If we include State and local taxes, there are people in our country today that are in a tax bracket approaching 60 percent of their income. At the Federal level, taxation is well over 20 percent. And that is just on income taxes and does not include Social Security taxes and Medicare taxes.

The Tax Limitation Amendment is fairly straightforward. It would take a two-thirds vote to pass a tax increase. Two-thirds is a larger fraction than one-half. It does not say we cannot have tax increases, it does not say tax increases will never be necessary; but it says there should be a national consensus of a supermajority that a tax increase is definitely needed. We should look at spending decreases; we should look at efficiency before we look at increasing taxes.

I would remind Members in this body that the original Constitution had 100 percent, a 100 percent prohibition against income tax increases, because income taxes were unconstitutional until early in this century when the 19th amendment made it constitutional to pass an income tax. Since that time, the marginal tax rate on the American public has gone from 1 percent to 38 percent. That is a 3,800 percent increase.

So to put it simply, a tax limitation works. There is no better time to pass a constitutional amendment making it harder to raise taxes than right now when we are in a budget surplus. The opponents of the amendment do not say that it would not work. They are opposed to it precisely for the reason that it would work.

I hope we can get a two-thirds vote necessary to pass this to the Senate today. If for some reason we are not successful, this amendment will come back. The more the American people know about it, the more it becomes a part of the lexicon of the political process, and the greater the likelihood that we will pass this.

Again, I want to commend the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS), the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL), the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SHADEGG), and others for their strong leadership on this. I will vote for it and encourage every Member of this body to vote for it.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA) has 3 minutes.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I think we have had what I would call a spirited debate today, but one has to wonder why this proposal comes up every April. Congress comes in session in January. We stay around until October. Why do we not have a vote on this particular issue in July or February? For the last 5 years it has always come up in April.

But when in April? Well, they try to schedule it April 15. Well, my gosh, why April 15? Well, that is the day that we have to file our taxes, the last day we have to file our taxes. Why did they do it this date this year? They got snookered. April 15 is on a Saturday, and they cannot keep Members of Congress here on a Saturday.

So this is more for show, my friends, than for goal, as evidenced by the vote we are going to have very shortly, which will provide that this constitutional amendment will not pass, nor should it. Nor should it. If, in fact, a majority in Congress can send our young men and women to war; if a majority in Congress can cut benefits for education, Social Security, Medicare; if a majority can do all these things, then why not also deal with tax policy in the same manner?

My colleagues on the other side know that is correct. And if this were a secret ballot, this thing would go down to the person, it would fail 435–0. But that is not the case. It is April 15. We have to make a statement about taxes.

And tomorrow we have a better one for my colleagues. Tomorrow we are going to repeal the entire Tax Code. We are going to repeal the Tax Code tomorrow. And what are we going to replace it with? I do not know. We do not have a plan for that yet. That is how phoney this business is.

We had a hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means on a bill sponsored by one of their Members and one on our side. It provided for a national sales tax. The thing got worse as we questioned the witnesses. It started out with a 30-percent sales tax on every good and service, including clothes, prescription drugs. And by the time we got done talking to the Joint Committee on Taxation, to be revenue neutral, that national sales tax would be 60 percent.

So we are going to trust them with tax policy around here to tax my constituents 60 percent on their drug costs, when now they are going to Canada to get a break?

This constitutional amendment, Mr. Speaker, is not necessary, and I urge my colleagues to not support it.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, before I pass to the remaining and closing speaker that we have, I would like to thank three people: Marty McGuinness from my staff; Steve Waguespack, who is from the staff of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTON); and Elizabeth Kowal from the staff of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL).

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from the Fourth District of Texas (Mr. HALL), a gentleman who is a close friend of mine and the cosponsor and co-lead of this joint resolution.

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I do think it has been a spirited debate. I have not heard all of it. If I repeat some of the things of those who propose this, forgive me for it. But I would like to answer some of the questions that have been asked.

The gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KLECZKA) made a very good speech and asked why are we having it at this particular time. Well, that answer is pretty simple. We asked for it at this time because this is the time when most of the people of the United States are thinking about how high their taxes are. I think it is good to try to get their attention.

I believe, though, that we may be starting at the wrong level, we may be starting up here, when we really ought to be starting in our precincts and in our counties in our States at home. If we only close the gap today, or if we come close to closing the gap, or whatever votes we get today, we are going to count them for next year; and we are going to be in there trying to get it to emanate from the grassroots.

Because I think if we get the grassroots people and ask them the question, do they think it ought to be a little bit tougher to vote taxes on hardworking Americans, I think about all of them would say, absolutely yes.

It has also been suggested that this was politics. Everything we do up here has some politics to it. I would always say to my colleagues that it is not bad politics to be telling hardworking Americans that we are going to make it a little tougher to tax them. I think that is good politics. If it is politics, it is doggone good politics where I come from.

I cannot go anywhere in my district and talk to anybody there that does not complain about the taxes. Now, ask them, go home, conservative, Democrat, liberal, whatever, ask them, would they like for it to be a little more difficult for the United States Congress to tax them and take money out of their left hip pocket? I guarantee my colleagues that nine out of nine and probably a hundred out of a hundred are going to tell us, absolutely yes.

So I am here to express my support for the tax limitation agreement. We would not have had the sad 1986 Tax Reform Act if it had taken two-thirds, a reform act that set this country back to where we are just now getting over it. A lot of things would not have happened if it would have taken two-thirds.

There is a lot of difference in asking two-thirds vote to tax people and asking two-thirds vote to support various programs. I agree with the gentleman on the fact that it should only take a majority on supporting some of these programs. But when we go to taxing the American people, a direct tax from us to them, from our mouth to their left hip pocket, I think it ought to take two-thirds of us. I believe most of the people in this country, all of the good-thinking people in this country, would say, yes, make it a little tougher up there in Washington, D.C., for them to take our money away from us.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the H.J. Res. 94 and commend my colleagues from Texas for advancing this important legislation. Requiring a two-thirds supermajority for tax increases is one of the most critical hurdles we can erect to check future growth in government.

This supermajority requirement for tax increases is a tested model that has proven effective. Fourteen states now have tax limitation amendments in place and have shown great progress in restraining taxes and spending. It is no accident that those states are among the most impressive economic growth states in the nation.

Alternatively, as a resident of upstate New York where we suffer one of the highest tax burdens in the nation, I have seen firsthand how big government and escalating tax rates stifle economic growth. For many decades, Democratic leadership in New York enacted tax increase after tax increase and government expanded practically unchecked.

Upstate New York is not sharing in the nation's economic prosperity and is in fact seeing its population leave for opportunities in other regions of the country. This is painful for me as a father of three who would like to see opportunities for my children to spend their lives in upstate New York. If upstate New York were a state by itself, it would rank near the bottom in terms of economic growth. I believe it is the tax climate that has driven job growth away from our region.

Therefore, this amendment before us today is extremely important effort to show that government can check itself. Mr. Speaker, this is important legislation. I thank my friend, Mr. SESSIONS, for his hard work on this issue and urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4163, the Taxpayer Bill of Rights. This legislation brings much-needed simplification to our tax code and ensures that a taxpayer's privacy will be protected.

Taxpayers should be assured that the information they provide to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) will be kept secure and confidential. Information on earnings, property and other income should be kept private, and this bill ensures that it will be. The Taxpayer Bill of Rights requires IRS supervisors, not rank-and-file workers, to determine if there are sufficient grounds to warrant an investigation into an individual's tax return.

The bill also requires states to conduct annual on-site investigations of contractors who receive federal tax information and process it for state agencies to ensure that this information is being safeguarded. Further, this legislation requires the IRS to notify taxpayers in all instances in which the IRS has unlawfully obtained a taxpayer's return or other information.

The legislation contains other important consumer protections, including a provision that tightens the requirements for banks to get access to a taxpayer's records. And, it requires that all third parties keep this information confidential.

H.R. 4163 helps taxpayers who are self-employed by simplifying the formula for estimated taxes. By allowing taxpayers to use one interest rate in calculating estimated tax, much time and effort will be saved. In addition, the bill's increase, from $1,000 to $2,000, in the threshold over which penalties must be paid for failure to pay estimated tax will help thousands of self-employed persons each year who miscalculate their taxes.

I urge my colleagues to support this important initiative. As tax day approaches, this is the least we can do to reduce the regulatory burden the IRS imposes on the American taxpayer.

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I fully support H.J. Res. 94, which calls for an amendment to the United States Constitution prohibiting passage of tax increases without a two-thirds majority in each house of Congress, except in emergency cases such as a military conflict. I am a cosponsor of this legislation, I have voted for similar legislation in the past, and I remain committed to passing the strongest tax limitation amendment possible.

Opponents claim, and will continue to claim, that constitutional amendments on taxing and spending make it harder to operate government as we know it. That is exactly the point—fiscal reality proves to us that we need an instrument, a tool, to control government spending and limit raising taxes.

The Federal Government has run deficits for 56 of the last 66 years leading to a $5.4 trillion national debt. This is not a short-termed trend. It points to a fundamental flaw in the political system that makes a constitutional solution both necessary and appropriate. We need to pass H.J. Res. 94 to renew our commitment to fiscal discipline. Otherwise, irresponsible spending and higher federal taxes will continue to own us, cripple our economy and mortgage our children's future. Congress needs the legal and moral authority of a Constitutional amendment making it more difficult to raise taxes.

This is not a radical idea as some have suggested. In fact, 14 states have enacted tax limitation measures. Since 1980, the state I represent, Delaware, has required a three-fifths vote to raise any tax. As a result, balanced budgets are the rule, not the exception, in Delaware.

Yesterday, the House rejected the $116 billion in new taxes and fees proposed in President Clinton's FY2001 budget by a vote of 420 to 1. I believe that vote represents an endorsement of the idea that higher taxes are not needed when the Federal Government is operating a budget surplus. Today, we need to go the next step and make it more difficult to raise taxes anytime other than during a military emergency. I urge those same 420 members to support this resolution today.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises in principled opposition to House Joint Resolution 94, the so-called tax limitation amendment. Certainly it would be more politically expedient to simply go along and vote in support of a constitutional amendment requiring two-thirds approval by Congress for any tax increases. However, as a matter of principle and conscience, this Member cannot do that.

As this Member stated when a similar amendment was considered by the House in the past, there is a great burden of proof to deviate from the basic principle of our democracy—the principle of majority rule. Unfortunately, this Member does not believe the proposed amendment to the U.S. Constitution is consistent or complementary to this important principle.

There should be no question of this Member's continued and enthusiastic support for a balanced budget and a constitutional amendment requiring such a balanced budget. In the judgment of this Member, tax increases should not be employed to achieve a balanced budget; balanced budgets should be achieved by economic growth and, as appropriate, tax cuts. This is why this Member in the past has supported the inclusion of a super majority requirement for tax increases in the rules of the House. However, to go beyond that and amend the Constitution is, in this Member's opinion, inappropriate and, therefore, the reason why this Member will vote against House Joint Resolution 94.

Mr. UDALL of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the House has considered proposals like this several times in recent years. So I can see why the debate about it sounds so rehearsed. I get the impression that many Members have heard all the arguments before, and I suspect that the debate will not change many minds about the proposal.

But as a new Member I must say this resolution strikes me as one of the oddest pieces of legislation that I've encountered yet—and I think it's one of the worst.

I'm not a lawyer, but it's clear that the language of the proposal is an invitation to litigation—in other words, to getting the courts involved even further in the law-making process. To say that Congress can define when a constitutional requirement would apply, provided that the Congressional decision is "reasonable," is to ask for lawsuits challenging whatever definition might be adopted. Aren't there enough lawsuits already over the tax laws? Do we need to invite more?

But more important than the technical aspects of this proposal, I think it is bad because it moves away from the basic principle of democracy—majority rule.

Under this proposal, there would be another category of bills that would require a two-thirds vote of both the House and the Senate. That's bad enough as it applies here in the House, but consider what that means in the Senate. There, if any 34 Senators are opposed to something that take a two-thirds vote, it cannot be passed. And, of course, each state has the same representation regardless of population.

Consider what that means if the Senators in opposition are those from the 17 States with the fewest residents.

We don't yet have this year's census numbers, of course, but the most recent estimates that I have seen show that the total population of the 17 least-populous states is somewhere in the neighborhood of 20 million people. That's a respectable number, but remember that the population of the country is 270 million or more.

So, what this resolution would do would be to give Senators representing about 7 percent of the American people more power to block something even if it has sweeping support in the rest of the country.

Right now, that kind of supermajority is needed under the constitution to ratify treaties, propose Constitutional amendments, and to do a few other things.

But this resolution does not deal with things of that kind. It deals only with certain tax bills—bills that under the constitution have to originate here, in the House. Those are the bills that would be covered by this increase in the power of Senators who could represent a small minority of the American people.

Why would we want to do that? Are the proponents of this constitutional amendment so afraid of majority rule on the subject of "internal revenue"? Why else would they be so eager to reduce the stature of this body, the House of Representatives, as compared with our colleagues in the Senate.

Remember, that's what this is all about—"internal revenue," however that term might be defined by Congress or by the courts. When Congress debates taxes, it is deciding what funds are to be raised under Congress's Constitutional authority to "pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." Those are serious and important decisions, to be sure, but what is wrong with continuing to have them made under the principle of majority rule—meaning by the members of Congress who represent the majority of the American people?

So, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support this proposed change in the Constitution. Our country has gotten along well without it for two centuries. It is not needed. It would not solve any problem—in fact, it probably would create new ones—and it would weaken the basic principle of democratic government, majority rule. It should not be approved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 471, the previous question is ordered on the joint resolution.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 234, nays 192, not voting 8, as follows:

Mr. OLVER changed his vote from ''yea'' to ''nay.''

Mr. MANZULLO changed his vote from ''nay'' to ''yea.''

So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the joint resolution was not passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 119, I was on the floor and pressed the "yea" button, but I was not recorded.

I would like to be recorded as a "yea."

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2328, THE CLEAN LAKES PROGRAM

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 468 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 468

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 2328) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to reauthorize the Clean Lakes Program. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure now printed in the bill. Each section of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. Points of order against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute for failure to comply with clause 7 of rule XVI are waived. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may: (1) postpone until a time during further consideration in the Committee of the Whole a request for a recorded vote on any amendment; and (2) reduce to five minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on any postponed question that follows another electronic vote without intervening business, provided that the minimum time for electronic voting on the first in any series of questions shall be 15 minutes. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

□ 1330

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) is recognized for 1 hour

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of the resolution, all time is yielded for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 468 is an open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 2328, a bill to reauthorize the Clean Lakes Program. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. The rule also makes in order the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of an amendment.

The rule waives clause 7 of rule XVI, prohibiting nongermane amendments against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute and provides that the amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be open for amendment by section. Additionally, the rule authorizes the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to accord priority in recognition to Members who have preprinted their amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and to postpone votes during consideration of the bill and to reduce voting time to 5 minutes on a postponed question if the vote follows a 15-minute vote.

Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, the Clean Lakes Program was included in the 1972 amendments to the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, commonly referred to as the Clean Water Act. This broad-based program helps communities to address a wide range of water quality issues and helps States through grants and technical assistance.

Reauthorization of the Clean Lakes Program is a necessary measure that will provide much-needed financial and technical assistance to states to restore publicly owned lakes. It is important to note that this is the primary Federal program that places the national focus and priority on lakes, their monitoring, protection, and management.

Mr. Speaker, the funding authorization for this program expired in fiscal year 1990. The program has not received funding since fiscal year 1995. Recently, the EPA has recognized the need to focus on clean lakes activities and has encouraged States to set aside monies from other programs to fund the Clean Lakes Program. In addition, various public and private organizations involved in lake water quality management have been seeking an increase in funding for this program.

Over the past two decades, lake restoration techniques have improved dramatically, and are viewed by many as an important component in meeting the Clean Water Act's objective of having all our Nation's waters fishable and swimmable, including the 41 million acres of fresh water lakes.

One of the most damaging contributing factors to the toxicity of these lakes in the Northeast is acid rain. Not only is it a costly problem to solve, but it can overwhelm State budgets. Funding the Clean Lakes Program is necessary to meet the States' needs in combatting the devastating effects of acid rain and other environmental pollutants.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, this legislation provides the opportunity for necessary partnerships among Federal, State, and local entities to focus both on the prevention and the remediation of pollution. Working together, Federal, State, and local governments can focus attention and resources on the special needs of our Nation's lakes.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY), the bill's sponsor, for his hard work on this measure. In addition, I would like to commend the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), the chairman of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure and the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR.)

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support both this rule and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from New York for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the open rule. I would note that the underlying bill is noncontroversial and reauthorizes the Clean Lakes Program established under the Clean Water Act.

This measure provides financial and technical assistance to States to restore publicly owned lakes. This is the primary Federal program that focuses national attention on lakes, their monitoring, protection, and management.

I was pleased that the committee selected two lakes in upstate New York, Otsego Lake and Lake Oneida, to receive priority consideration for demonstration projects in this bill.

Otsego Lake in New York is at the headwaters of the Susquehanna River, the largest single fresh water source for the Chesapeake bay. Otsego Lake is biologically unique in that deep water oxygen concentrations provide habitat for cold water fisheries, such as lake trout, Atlantic salmon, brown trout, whitefish, and cisco, which are now in jeopardy because of the sustained loss of bottom oxygen in the late summer and fall.

Oneida Lake in New York is the largest inland lake in the State and home to 74 species of fish. The lake watershed covers five counties and more than 800,000 acres. This lake is experiencing water quality problems and its use has been impaired. There are significant concerns regarding sediment and nutrient runoff to the lake from tributaries and agriculture and urban land use trends. In addition, algae, rooted vegetation, and invasive species are problems for this lake.

Again, Mr. Speaker, this is a completely noncontroversial measure; and I do not oppose this open rule.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this open and fair rule.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further request for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3039, CHESAPEAKE BAY RESTORATION ACT OF 1999

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 470 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 470

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3039) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to assist in the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. The bill shall be considered as read. During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may: (1) postpone until a time during further consideration in the Committee of the Whole a request for a recorded vote on any amendment; and (2) reduce to five minutes the minimum time for electronic voting on any postponed question that follows another electronic vote without intervening business, provided that the minimum time for electronic voting on the first in any series of questions shall be 15 minutes. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted.

The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York (Mr. REYNOLDS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. HALL), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 470 is an open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 3039, a bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to assist in the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking member of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

Mr. Speaker, the rule also provides that the bill shall be open for amendment at any point, and authorizes the Chair to accord priority in recognition to Members who have preprinted their amendments in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Additionally, the rule allows the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to postpone votes during consideration of the bill and to reduce voting time to 5 minutes on a postponed question if the rule follows a 15 minute vote.

Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, the Chesapeake Bay is the largest estuary in the United States and is an important commercial, recreational, and historical center for thousands of residents in Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia.

The Chesapeake Bay is protected and promoted under a unique voluntary partnership under the Chesapeake Bay Agreement, first adopted in 1983. The signatories to the agreement are the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, the Chesapeake Bay Commission, and the States of Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, along with the District of Columbia. The agreement directs and conducts the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay.

Over the past two decades, much progress has been made in restoring the Chesapeake Bay. Area wildlife is recovering, toxic pollutant releases are down, and bay grasses have increased. However, much more needs to be done, particularly regarding water clarity and restoring the oyster population.

This bill addresses the need for a cooperative Federal, State, and local effort in restoring the Chesapeake Bay by authorizing $180 million for the Chesapeake Bay Program for fiscal years 2000 through 2005. In addition, the bill requires Federal facilities to participate in watershed planning and restoration activities.

Finally, the bill requires a study of the state of the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem and a study of the Chesapeake Bay Program's effect on this ecosystem.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support both the rule and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule. The debate time will be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member on the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. The rule permits amendments under the 5-minute rule.

This is the normal amending process in the House. All Members on both sides of the aisle will have the opportunity to offer germane amendments.

Mr. Speaker, the Chesapeake Bay is one of the most important bodies of water within the United States. Activities in the Bay make significant contributions to our economy through commercial fishing and shipping. The Bay supports extensive wildlife and vegetation. It also provides Americans with numerous recreational opportunities.

Years of man-made pollution have threatened the Bay and the life within it. However, there has been progress, and it is being made under the Chesapeake Bay Agreement signed by the District of Columbia, the Chesapeake Bay Commission, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, and the States of Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3039 will authorize money over a 6-year period for the United States Federal Government to support the agreement. The Chesapeake Bay is a national treasure. The legislation is necessary to help protect the Bay and its resources for all Americans. This is an open rule, we support it, and we urge its adoption.

□ 1345

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GILLMOR). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the resolution.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THE CLEAN LAKES PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALDEN of Oregon). Pursuant to House Resolution 468 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 2328.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2328) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to reauthorize the Clean Lakes Program, with Mr. GILLMOR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER).

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, first of all, perhaps most importantly, I want to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) for his leadership in being the principal architect and author of this legislation to reauthorize and improve the Clean Lakes Program.

This bill will help restore and protect our Nation's 41 million acres of fresh water lakes by reauthorizing the EPA Clean Lakes Program. The bill authorizes $250 million of grants to help States clean up their lakes, and it increases to $25 million the amount to help States mitigate against the harmful effects of acid mine drainage and acid rain.

The EPA no longer requests funding under the Clean Lakes Program, and has forced the States to stretch their limited nonpoint source funds to clean up their lakes. This legislation restores this important program and places a national focus and a priority on our lakes. It allows funds to solve the wide range of problems impairing our many lakes. Very importantly, Mr. Chairman, it relies on locally-based solutions involving restoration, rather than new Federal regulations.

I certainly want to thank the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI), and the entire committee for their support in moving this environmental legislation forward. It passed the subcommittee and the full committee unanimously by voice vote. I know of no opposition to it.

I would certainly urge overwhelming support for this important environmental legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 2328, to reauthorize the Clean Lakes Program. I want to express my appreciation to our chairman for his support of this initiative and for launching the hearings directing the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), to move ahead with this legislation, which is a derivative of and an extension of the monumental Clean Water Act of 1972.

That legislation, which I had the privilege to participate in as a member or administrator of the staff of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation at the time, was then, as it still is, one of the most far-reaching and successful environmental laws Congress has ever enacted.

We have made a lot of progress over the years with the Clean Water Act. It is going on 30 years. One of the reasons is the collaborative partnerships that the act established between the States and the Federal Government to restore and maintain, as the opening directive of that act provides, restore and maintain the chemical, physical, and biological integrity of the Nation's waters.

We have not quite reached the objective of swimmable and fishable in all of the Nation's waters, but we are moving in the right direction.

Section 314 of that act established the Clean Lakes Program. That program directs EPA to work with the States to identify and implement programs to control, reduce, and mitigate levels of pollution in the Nation's lakes.

It has been a valuable resource to reduce pollution. We have funded approximately $145 million of grant activities since 1945 in 49 States and 18 Indian tribes, 700 individual site assessments, restoration, and implementation projects. But it is only a start.

The most recent national water quality inventory shows that States have reported that only 40 percent of lake acreage across this country has been assessed to determine whether the lakes meet the designated uses. Of that number, 40 percent are still impaired in some fashion. That means that 30 million acres of lakes across this country have a significant likelihood that the waters are not safe for fishing, swimming, or to support aquatic life in the lake and in the surrounding basin.

Body contact sports was one of the principal objectives of the Clean Water Act of 1972, so people could indeed use the lakes: swim, fish, walk through the lake waters on the edge, as we do with small children in Minnesota and elsewhere across this country. But we have not attained that objective.

This bill will help move us in that direction. It reauthorizes the Clean Lakes Program through 2005. It increases significantly the level of funding to $50 million a year. The funding would be directed to the States to diagnose the current condition of individual lakes and their watershed, to determine the extent and source of pollution, to develop lake restoration and protection plans that can actually be implemented, not just ideas and studies that remain on a shelf and gather dust, but plans that can actually be implemented.

Secondly, to address the concern of acidity in lake levels, in lakes across this country, we provide authorization for programs aimed at restoring lake water quality and mitigating the harmful effects of lake acidity. Canada actually was ahead of the United States in addressing the problem of acid rain.

Sweden was ahead of Canada. It was in the mid-1970s that Swedish scientists examined lakes that were in the early stages of death, death from acid rain coming from the Ruhr Valley in Germany, traveling over a thousand miles and being deposited on Swedish lakes that soon became clear, so clear you could see right to the bottom, no fish, no plant life. Dead lakes.

We were slow to assess that problem and appreciate the United States. Canada caught on first because the prevailing winds carry acid depositions from the United States north into Canada. Canada mounted a massive counterattack on acid rain problems, and that led to the U.S.-Canada Air Quality Agreement, in addition to the U.S-Canada Great Lakes Quality Agreement, that has resulted in restoration in lakes in Canada that were nearing the death levels of lakes in Sweden.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation will move us further along in the United States, in the direction of addressing the problems of the harmful effects of acid rain and high lake water acidity. This legislation also adds four lakes to the priority demonstration projects included in the Clean Lakes Program, one of which is Swan Lake, which is in my district, which is of tremendous regional significance for the people living in the iron ore mining country; a 100-square-mile lake in Itasca County that includes the City of Nashwauk, northeast of that lake, there are a wide range of recreational activities very popular there in the 5 months or 6 months that we can actually enjoy lake activities when they are not frozen over in Minnesota, boating, fishing; significant economic benefit to the entire region.

Mr. Chairman, the water quality has deteriorated over the years, poor soil surrounding the lake and poor lake edge protection and watershed protection, as well as sewage into that lake. We will be able to address this problem and learn from it and apply its lessons elsewhere across the country and across, of course, my own State of 10,000 lakes, which really is about 15,000, actually more than that. We do not really count lakes under 200 acres.

Mr. Chairman, I am really delighted; and I wanted to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman SHUSTER) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), our subcommittee chairman, for their support and also the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI), who does not have as many lakes in his district, but who has been very generous in giving his strong support for this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, H.R. 2328 reauthorizes the Clean Lakes Program, and we have one person in this Chamber to thank most for that action and that is our colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY). The gentleman deserves to be commended for the leadership he provided.

This is an example of how the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure serves this institution and this Nation so well. We worked out any differences we had in a bipartisan way and are marching forward together.

Mr. Chairman, let me point out that the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman SHUSTER) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking member, are responsible for more legislation, more successful legislation in this Congress than in the preceding Congress, of greater significance than any other committee of this institution. I am very proud to identify with the committee.

Let me say, unfortunately, that the Environmental Protection Agency has not requested funding for the Clean Lakes Program and the program has not received separate appropriations in recent years. Instead, States have been encouraged to fund clean lakes activities by using funds provided under section 319 of the Clean Water Act for already underfunded nonpoint source programs.

Mr. Chairman, acting to reauthorize this program will send a clear message that we care about restoring and protecting our Nation's 41 million acres of fresh-water lakes for our children and their children. Congress is not the only voice calling for this program. Various public and private organizations involved in lake water quality management had been seeking an increase in funding for the Clean Lakes Program.

This program is seen as an important component of meeting the Clean Water Act's objective of having all our Nation's waters fishable and swimmable.

In addition, there is growing concern about the damaging effects of acid rain and acid mine drainage on the Nation's lake. Separate, adequate and consistent funding for the Clean Lakes Program is necessary to meet the needs of the States' lake program.

The Clean Lake Program offers an excellent opportunity for watershed-based community-driven projects, as well as needed partnerships among Federal, State, and local entities. It is a good program. It deserves our enthusiastic support for all the right reasons.

Let me once again commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) for the leadership he has provided, and let me once again proudly associate with my colleagues on the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure for doing the deed today.

Let me leave with this thought from Henry David Thoreau who said in Walden back in 1854: ''A lake is the landscape's most beautiful and expressive feature. It is earth's eye: looking into which the beholder measures the depth of his own nature.''

□ 1400

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment.

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) for yielding me this time and also to thank him for his leadership on this issue and so many issues that come before the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure.

I also want to commend our subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), and our full committee chairman, my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), for working with us in a bipartisan manner which is, of course, the way this committee always works; and again I would add that is why we are so successful.

I also want to commend the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY), the author of this bill, for pushing and shoving and making sure this piece of legislation comes before us.

Mr. Chairman, I want to rise in strong support of H.R. 2328, a bill to reauthorize the Environmental Protection Agency's Clean Lakes program. The Clean Lakes program was enacted in 1972 with the passage of the Clean Water Act, to provide additional funding to assess and control pollution levels in our Nation's lakes.

This program has served as a valuable resource for States to identify the sources of pollution, as well as to develop and implement programs aimed at reducing pollution levels in and restoring the quality of lake systems.

The bill we are considering would reauthorize the Clean Lakes program, providing up to $50 million annually through 2005.

In addition, in order to address the persistent problems of high acidity in our Nation's lakes, this legislation would increase the authorization for programs aimed at reducing the levels of toxins present in these water bodies.

Funding under this program could be used in developing new and innovative methods of neutralizing and restoring the natural buffering capacity of lakes, as well as other methods for removing toxic metals and other substances mobilized by high acidity.

Finally, H.R. 2328 would add four additional lakes to the list of priority demonstration projects authorized under the Clean Lakes program.

These lakes have been identified by the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure as regionally significant and deserving of additional attention under this program.

Mr. Chairman, I urge an aye vote on this legislation. I again want to thank the distinguished ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), for yielding me this time.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY), the principal author of this legislation.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I first want to start by thanking my chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman SHUSTER), from the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure for providing the great leadership, the great management skills and guidance throughout all of the dealings in the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure; as well as the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR); the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI), the ranking member on the subcommittee.

When I came to Congress a year and a half ago, a lot of people said that Republicans and Democrats could not work together; we could not get the people's business done. I think if the American people were to look at the work being done by this Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure, they would be incredibly impressed. As a freshman Member of Congress, I know I am and I am thankful. I am thankful because this piece of legislation is being passed today at a very important time.

Recently, Mr. Chairman, the GAO released a study that I had requested on the problem of acid rain in the Adirondack Mountains, which is a region that is consumed by the 22nd Congressional District, which I represent. The results were striking. Many of our lakes in the Adirondacks are increasingly at risk from acid rain, much more than the EPA had originally forecast.

Despite power plant emissions reductions under the 1990 Clean Air Act amendments, nearly half of our lakes have shown an increase in nitrogen levels.

In fact, last year a similar EPA study showed an expansion of the effects of acid rain throughout. However, acid rain is not the only problem that our Nation's lakes are facing. They are facing problems such as invasive species, degraded shorelines, mercury contamination, wetland loss, lake-use conflicts, fisheries imbalances, and nonpoint source pollution, are all threatening our 41 million acres of freshwater lakes.

This is part of the reason why I introduced H.R. 2328, and the other is because my district, as in many parts of the Nation, the lakes are a way of life. They provide a quality of life for the citizens who live near them. Whether it is tourism, drinking water, the natural habitat for many species of birds, fish and other animals, or simply recreation, many communities derive their livelihood from freshwater sources.

Additionally, Mr. Chairman, I should point out that I have been disappointed in the EPA's attempt to shift funding requests under this program to section 319, which deals with nonpoint source pollution management. Our lakes are important enough to qualify and compete with other programs for Federal funding, and that is why we need this reauthorization program today.

I believe this program is something we can all agree on. During its heyday in the 1970s and the 1980s, this program was popular with grass-roots organizations and citizens because it offered them the opportunity to work with Federal, State, and local entities on both prevention and remediation of pollution.

Fundamentally, this program focuses on restoration, not regulation. Some of the past successes included what happened in the State of Florida, when they did an assessment of the 7,000 freshwater lakes to set up a lake management priority system. The grant helped the State prioritize its lakes and their watershed for remedial management programs.

In New York and Vermont they used a grant and teamed up to assess phosphorus pollution in Lake Champlain and set up a plan to monitor the phosphorous load in the lake.

North Dakota used a clean lakes grant to seek correlations between micro-invertebrate communities and the trophic status of lakes.

The results of these grants can help other States that might face similar problems, and without this program States and their communities will probably not have the resources or technical expertise to conduct studies for themselves.

Mr. Chairman, this is a positive environmental initiative that I think a broad group of philosophies in this House can agree upon. It will provide resources to the most local levels of government to address environmental challenges in our lakes.

Previously, the Clean Lakes program was a uniquely effective, cost-efficient environmental program that provided seed money to State lake programs to projects on public lakes.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all of my colleagues to support this important legislation, and again I want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman SHUSTER) for his leadership on this issue.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN).

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) for yielding me this time; and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) for his leadership; the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) for his leadership.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2328, a bill to reauthorize the Clean Lakes program. This program recognizes the beauty and value of our lakes and the need to protect and restore these wonderful resources. It is high time we reauthorize and fund the Clean Lakes program.

As we know, the Clean Lakes program was established in 1972 as part of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, commonly referred to as the Clean Water Act. The authorization expired in 1990, and the program has not been funded since 1995 when the EPA stopped requesting money to run it.

While the EPA may have stopped requesting money for clean lakes, I have not, since New Jersey has many lakes that need attention and immediate attention. As a member of the Subcommittee on VA, HUD and Independent Agencies, I have consistently supported a separate appropriation for the section 314 program. Perhaps with the passage of this bill, a clean lakes earmark will now be possible at the appropriations level.

As we know, section 319 deals with watershed restoration issues. Section 314 deals with lake monitoring and protection and management issues. Although related, these two issues are different and should not have to compete for limited dollars.

Mr. Chairman, we have had a sad experience in New Jersey where the lumping together of section 314 and section 319 simply has not worked. This bill would move us towards correcting that problem, and I strongly support it.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the very great significance of this legislation is underscored in many of the lakes and the communities throughout Minnesota. We are blessed, as other less fortunate communities across the country would like to be, in that many of our towns have a lake right in the town. Over the years, before the 1960s, before we had a clean water program, many towns just allowed their storm sewers to discharge into the lakes. Many even allowed their sanitary sewers, after primary treatment, to discharge into lakes. Then they began to realize what an important resource the lake is and diverted sewage away from it and diverted street runoff away from the lakes, although many in the northern tier continued to pile up snow from winter storms on the lake. Where else? It seemed sensible. Let it melt, add to the lake's waters. Now we know that there is pollution in winter as well as in summer. Cities now avoid that tragedy inflicted upon the Nation's lakes.

So what we have is many lakes that should be great resources for swimming, for tourism, for boating, for fishing, that have substantial amounts of pollution embedded in the lake bottom. In the sediment under those waters, plants grow up, transmit the pollutants to the fish who feed on the plant life, and then humans consume the fish and in turn find embedded in their body cells the pollutants that we all know are so harmful.

Why is this legislation so important? Because cities can have access to funds to develop plans to clean up those lakes, restore them perhaps not to their pristine original condition created by the glaciers when they retreated 10,000 years ago, but at least to be swimmable, to be fishable, to be usable, to be a community attraction rather than a point of shame for a community.

This legislation will provide States, through States to communities, the resources, financial resources, they need to make their lakes the great treasures that they should be. As the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) so poetically described in the closing words of his remarks on the House Floor, lakes should be the eye through which a community sees itself and sees its treasurers.

So I have great hopes for this legislation; and I want to take this opportunity to urge the administration to, in the future, include funding for the Clean Lakes program, which they have not done for several years, and to urge our colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations, it was very encouraging to have the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN) address the issue rather directly, that enactment of this legislation will give the Committee on Appropriations an opportunity to provide funding for the Clean Lakes program. That will be the ultimate success of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I urge an aye vote on H.R. 2328, the Clean Lakes program, because it helps restore and protect our Nation's 41 million acres of freshwater lakes. It helps States clean up their lakes, and it mitigates the harmful effects of high acidity like acid rain.

Now, one may ask why is this particular bill, H.R. 2328, needed? It is because of the pollution or habitat degradation that impairs 39 percent of the 17 million acres which have already been surveyed. EPA currently requires States to stretch their limited nonpoint source funds to clean up their lakes. H.R. 2328 restores a national focus and priority on our lakes.

I think it was very instructive, as the distinguished ranking member pointed out, the problem of such things as acid rain and how in Europe acid rain from the Ruhr Valley caused problems all the way up in Sweden.

Certainly here in the United States, acid rain knows no State boundaries. Indeed, that is one of the reasons why we need to have a national program, because certainly acid rain is something that crosses State lines, and the acid rain from one State can very seriously damage the lakes of another State, as has, in fact, been the case.

Now, the background to this program, which was established under section 314 of the Clean Water Act, provides for financial and technical assistance to States in restoring publicly owned lakes. In recognition of the unique water quality challenges, facing our Nation's lakes, Congress included the Clean Lakes Program as part of the original 1972 Clean Water Act.

Section 314 contains various State assessment and reporting requirements, a national demonstration program, and an EPA grant program for assistance to States in carrying out projects and program responsibilities.

On June 23, 1999, the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) introduced H.R. 2328. This was referred solely to the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. H.R. 2328 would reauthorize funding for the Clean Lakes Program for fiscal years 2000 through 2005, and would increase the authorized annual funding levels from $30 million to $100 million.

On October 18, 1999, the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment held a hearing on Clean Lakes and Water Quality Management and on H.R. 2328. On March 8, 2000, the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment marked up H.R. 2328.

The subcommittee adopted an amendment in the nature of a substitute. This amendment, A, reduced the funding authorization from $100 million annually to $50 million annually; and, B, added additional lakes to the list of lakes to receive priority consideration for demonstration projects; and, C, increased the special authorization of financial assistance to States to mitigate harmful effects of high acidity from acid deposition or acid mine drainage from $15 million to $25 million; and, D, prevented the report to Congress on the Clean Lakes Demonstration Program from expiring under the Federal Reports Elimination and Sunset Act of 1995.

The subcommittee reported H.R. 2328, as amended, favorably to the full committee. On March 16, 2000, the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure reported the bill as amended by the subcommittee by unanimous voice vote.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the Chair how much time remains on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) has 16½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) has 14½ minutes remaining.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN).

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in working with the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman SHUSTER) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking member, concerning Lake Apopka in Florida.

Florida, as my colleagues know, is one of the third largest States, and Lake Apopka is the second most polluted lake in the State of Florida.

We have been harmed by many years of agricultural storm water discharges, as well as historical discharges of both domestic and industrial waste water. Because of this, this particular lake has been in the news. Many Federal officials have come down, and there is a lot of concern as to how this relates to the community.

I am hoping that the committee will look into Lake Apopka as we move this bill through the process and consider adding this to the list.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, could the gentlewoman from Florida describe for us the size of the lake in acres. Does the gentlewoman from Florida have that information available?

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I do not have it, but I will have that information for the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentlewoman from Florida, are boating activities prevalent on the lake? I yield to the gentlewoman from Florida.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, in fact, I have been in touch with the Water Management District, and they will forward that information.

In reviewing the bill, I was very concerned that Florida was not represented in the bill. Of course this lake is crucial to the State of Florida.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentlewoman from Florida, is it a lake that is used considerably for fishing as well?

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN).

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Fishing, Mr. Chairman. But, as I said, there has been a shift in the usage because of the contamination of the lake.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, but because the lake waters are contaminated, the fish are probably not fit for sustainable human consumption.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will further yield, that is correct. Also, there has been a shift in the vegetation and wildlife in communities around the lake because of the polluted facility.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, this certainly is the type of lake and these are the conditions that this legislation seeks to address. The authority provided in the legislation for grants to States and through States to municipalities is the appropriate venue for the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) to pursue this matter.

We will certainly, on the committee, be very happy to support the gentlewoman's interest in seeing that there are adequate resources when appropriations are made. There are no appropriations available now. The point of this legislation is to authorize expanded funding through a program from EPA of grants to States and through States to municipalities or other lesser units of government that then will undertake cleanup plans.

It would be useful if the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) could provide us with any restoration plan that either the city or county or joint powers agreement authority may have developed for the cleanup of this lake and any other supporting information, as the gentlewoman has already indicated. I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman SHUSTER) will support us in the initiative of appealing to EPA at the appropriate time for consideration of this project.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I certainly concur with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) and will be very happy to work on this with them to find an adequate and acceptable solution.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY), the principal author of this legislation.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding me the time. I echo the thoughts of the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) and hope that we can work together in finding a solution.

The beauty of this legislation really is that it provides an opportunity for localities and people in communities to really interact and do some positive proactive work.

I have got a letter here from a Robert Mac Millan, who is the chairman of the Saratoga Lake Protection and Improvement District. I would like to read it because it will give people the sense of the kinds of things and kinds of people that are interested in this.

Dear Congressman SWEENEY:

I am writing to you in support of your Clean Lakes Bill which will be the subject of a legislative hearing.

I am the Chairman of the Saratoga Lake Protection and Improvement District (SLPID). The SLPID was created as political subdivision of New York State in 1986 to supervise, manage, and control Saratoga Lake. Our primary responsibilities are to enhance recreational use of Saratoga Lake, protect real property values, conserve fish and wildlife and enhance the scenic beauty of the Lake. We are funded primarily by a special tax assessment placed by lakefront property owners. This tax assessment was increased 65.9 percent for the tax year 2000 and will still fall short of funding necessary to control all of the actions we need on the Lake.

Saratoga Lake is experiencing a major increase in aquatic weed growth and zebra mussels which adversely affects all aspects of our Lake. One of the most invasive weeds is Eurasian Water Milfoil, a plant not native to North America. Our primary method of weed control has been mechanical harvesting, but we find that harvesting is not accomplishing control of the aquatic weed problem. We have applied for a permit from New York State Department of Environmental Conservation to treat two of the problem areas in the Lake with aquatic herbicide. This treatment will be closely monitored for effectiveness and incorporated in a lake watershed and management plan which is presently ongoing.

I am aware of the Federal Non-indigenous Aquatic Nuisance Prevention and Control Act of 1990 which was to mitigate the financial impact of non-indigenous aquatic species such as Eurasian Water Milfoil and zebra mussels on local governments. Our current effort to control the weed in Saratoga Lake through the use of an EPA and New York State approved herbicide may be an excellent demonstration project which could be useful to other lakes experiencing similar problems with non-native aquatic species. Providing our treatment efforts are successful this year we hope to obtain funding to accomplish a whole lake treatment during 2001.

Mr. Chairman, I read this letter and bring this letter to the floor to point out this will be the norm. This will be the norm that occurs throughout this Nation as we fight to preserve our clean water sources.

This bill being passed today is coming at a crucial time, as I stated before, especially since we have taken many significant steps in the last decade to reduce the effects of pollutants, especially nitrates and sulfur dioxide throughout. But in some respects, we are losing that battle.

This will provide us a ground-up approach to that effort. This will give us the opportunity for people in the local communities to fight for these valuable resources. I am very proud to be the sponsor of this bill, and I look forward to its implementation.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for a general debate has expired.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered by sections as an original bill for the purpose of amendment, and pursuant to the rule, each section is considered read.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may postpone a request for a recorded vote on any amendment and may reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the time for voting on any postponed question that immediately follows another vote, provided that the time for voting on the first question shall be a minimum of 15 minutes.

The Clerk will designate section 1.

The text of section 1 is as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. GRANTS TO STATES

Section 314(c)(2) of the Federal Water Pollution Control act (33 U.S.C. 1324(c)92)) is amended by striking "$50,000,000" the first place it appears and all that follows through "1990" and inserting "$50,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2001 through 2005".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 1?

There being no amendments to section 1, the Clerk will designate section 2.

The text of section 2 is as follows:

SEC. 2. DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.

Section 314(d) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1324(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2) by inserting "Otsego Lake, New York; Oneida Lake, New York; Raystown Lake, Pennsylvania; Swan Lake, Itasca County, Minnesota;" after Sauk Lake, Minnesota;";

(2) in paragraph (3) by striking "By" and inserting "Notwithstanding section 3003 of the Federal Reports Elimination and Sunset Act of 1995 (31 U.S.C. 1113 note; 109 Stat. 734–736), by"; and

(3) in paragraph (4)(B)(i) by striking "$15,000,000" and inserting "$25,000,000".

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section 2?

There being no amendments to section 2, are there further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STUPAK

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STUPAK:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. 3. PROHIBITION OF BULK FRESH WATER SALES FROM GREAT LAKES.

Section 314 of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (33 U.S.C. 1324) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(e) PROHIBITION OF BULK FRESH WATER SALES FROM GREAT LAKES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—As a condition of the receipt of grant assistance under this section in a fiscal year, the Administrator shall require a State to provide assurances satisfactory to the Administrator that the State will prohibit in such fiscal year the sale of bulk fresh water from any of the Great Lakes.

"(2) BULK FRESH WATER DEFINED.—The term 'bulk fresh water' means fresh water extracted from any of the Great Lakes in amounts intended for transportation by tanker or similar form of mass transportation, without further processing. The term does not include drinking water in containers intended for personal consumption.".

Mr. STUPAK (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to offer an amendment which is very important to the residents in my district and many congressional districts throughout the Great Lakes region.

My amendment would prevent the sale of fresh water from our Great Lakes. Our precious water resources should not be sold to the highest bidder, and we must ensure that this cannot happen.

Our Great Lakes are a tremendous recreational resource. They provide boating, water skiing, fishing, and swimming opportunities. Our lakes are also a tremendous source of drinking water. Most notably, of course, are the Great Lakes, which contain 20 percent of the world's fresh water supply.

The 35 million people residing near the Great Lakes have always appreciated the lakes' beauty, vastness, cleanliness, and now they must appreciate that it is also a targeted commodity.

□ 1430

In 1998, a Canadian company planned to ship 3 billion liters of water from Lake Superior over 5 years and sell it to Asia. I offered legislation that was passed by the House of Representatives that called on the United States Government to oppose this action. The permit was subsequently withdrawn. The demand for water continues, however, as freshwater supplies dwindle throughout the world.

In the United States, each person consumes 100 gallons of water each day. The global demand meanwhile doubles every 21 years. Think about it. The world water demand doubles every 21 years. The World Bank predicts that by 2025 more than 3 billion people in 52 countries will suffer water shortages for drinking or sanitation. Where, I ask, will countries find clean, fresh water? They will look to alternative sources, sources which are outside their area and, more likely, outside their borders.

It is understandable, therefore, that the pristine water of our Great Lakes will be targeted. The method is real. The threat is real. To those who say the bulk shift of fresh water is not economically feasible, I say, look around us. From Newfoundland in Canada, to Lake Superior in Michigan, to Alaska, several companies are competing to ship our precious freshwater resources overseas.

For those who take a short-term view of protecting this resource, bulk sales of fresh water must seem irresistible. Throw a hose in the water, hook up a pump, and fill an ocean tanker. Maximum profits with minimum overhead. A windfall if a State wanted to license this kind of operation.

Yes, our Great Lakes are renewable; but they are not replaceable. I am very concerned that shortsighted policies could allow for large-scale diversions of Great Lakes water, threatening the environment, the economy, and the welfare of the Great Lakes region.

We are not merely citizens of the Great Lakes. We are their guardians. We are their stewards. We are their protectors. We encourage conservation, and we return 95 percent of all the water taken from the Great Lakes.

Setting aside global water use and trade policies, I ask Members to consider how bulk diversion of Great Lakes water could jeopardize our efforts to be good stewards. In terms of water quality, if we permit bulk diversions to further lower water levels, we increase the concentration of runoff contaminants, of fuel pollution. As lake levels drop, which they are now, we increase the need for dredging to maintain our vital waterways, further compounding the problem with toxic sediments.

We must consider all threats posed to our Great Lakes. We must be conscious of the threat posed by the sale or diversion of Great Lakes water just as carefully as we weigh the impact of the invasive species or drilling for gas and oil in the Great Lakes. None of these concerns are truly independent of one another in terms of their potential impact on the 35 million people who depend on our most vital natural resource, the Great Lakes, our great treasures.

My amendment would withhold grant assistance from Great Lakes States which allow the sale of bulk fresh water from the Great Lakes. This restriction would apply to water extracted from a lake for mass transportation without further processing and does not apply to bottled water used for consumption.

The cleanup of our lakes will preserve their beauty for generations to come. The ban on water sales from our Great Lakes will also preserve their beauty and our greatest natural resource for generations to come.

I urge my colleagues to support my amendment.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I rise not so much in opposition to the concept. In fact, not at all in opposition to the concept. I support very vigorously the idea that the gentleman is trying to advance, but I do not support the vehicle that he has chosen to approach this subject.

The matter of diversion of water from the Great Lakes is an issue of very great concern to those of us who live in this heartland of the United States. The Great Lakes represent 20 percent of all the fresh water on the face of the Earth. Lake Superior represents half of that water. Lake Superior is equal to all the water of the other four Great Lakes. It is a vast resource. The only other lake in the world that approaches the volume and the enormity of Lake Superior is Lake Baikal in Russia.

We have been vigilant, on both the U.S. and the Canadian side, about the water quality, about the volume of water, through the international joint commission; about the rising or falling levels of water in the Great Lakes. We have also been concerned that there may be attempts by water-short areas of the North American continent and water-short areas of other places on the face of the Earth that may have their eyes fixed on the Great Lakes.

Beginning with the coal slurry pipeline in 1970, the eyes of the western States were fixed on the Great Lakes, admittedly under the guise of selling low sulfur coal in an economical transport means of pipeline to the lakehead in Duluth, where then it could be transferred to tankers for lower lake port power plants. But those of us who maintain vigil on the shores of Gitche Gumee said this also has the capacity of draining the water out of the lakes. They could reverse those pumps. Once they are that close to Lake Superior, they could just drop a pump in the lake and start shipping the water westward. We vigorously opposed and ultimately stopped the coal slurry pipeline.

In 1986, in furtherance of this concern, I offered an amendment in committee in the Water Resources Development Act, in cooperation with Democrats and Republicans throughout the Great Lakes States, to require, before any water could be diverted out of any of the Great Lakes, unanimous consent of the governors of the Great Lakes States and, though we could not bind, the province of Ontario. That province is so vast it covers all five of the Great Lakes. And we succeeded in getting that language enacted. It has been successful until very recently in scaring off potential diverters.

Then, in 1998, a Canadian company based in the Province of Ontario got up the idea of selling, in bulk means, water from Lake Ontario to overseas sources. An immediate outcry rose in the Province and, of course, on the U.S. side of the Great Lakes that resulted in the Province of Ontario denying a permit to withdraw water. But the potential remains for withdrawing water from one of the Great Lakes and bottling it in little containers. And if it can be bottled in pint and quart and gallon and 5 gallon sizes, then what is to prevent someone from shipping it in larger containers of 5,000 or 10,000 gallons or more?

So the concern of my good friend, who maintains a watchful eye from his northern peninsula, upper peninsula, a Michigan outpost, on the lake is well placed and fully founded and justified.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBERSTAR was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. OBERSTAR. So I compliment the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, on his vigilance on this matter, but I feel that the vehicle is not appropriate. It has, first of all, not had widespread scrutiny in our committee. We have not had an opportunity until just now to review the approach the gentleman takes.

It has been my intention that, in cooperation with the gentleman from Michigan and others of our colleagues in the Great Lakes States, to approach this subject in the forthcoming Water Resources Development Act of 2000.

I would like to ask my colleague if he would consider withdrawing the amendment, preserving the option and, of course, protecting his right to come forth in the WRDA bill and to cooperate with us in a similar venture.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding. If there is going to be a WRDA bill, that is the first if. Secondly, if we will be given an opportunity to offer the amendment.

We have a bill; it is 2595. As the gentleman knows, the International Joint Commission on February 22 put forth their recommendations on what should be done to not only stop vast transfers of water out of the Great Lakes region but also what should be in the meantime to make sure the States provide the necessary data and information so we can make intelligent decisions concerning our water resources. Not just for transfer or sale but also for the ecology of it, for the environment, and for the conservation.

So if we would have a WRDA bill, and if we were to be given the opportunity to appear before the committee to present H.R. 2595, my bill on the Great Lakes, or a modified version taking in the International Joint Commission's recommendations, I would be willing to entertain that.

I see we probably have a number of more speakers, so I would like to hear the other speakers before I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) has once again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBERSTAR was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, if I might inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) regarding the formulation. I think we may be at the end of hearings, or there may be an opportunity for further hearings on the WRDA bill, but it is my understanding that the chair of the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure intends to proceed with a WRDA bill for 2000.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, it is certainly our intention to move the WRDA bill this year, WRDA 2000. The administration just sent their bill up, so we will be dealing with it.

And I would say to my good friend from Michigan that we certainly want to work with him. I do not think this is the appropriate vehicle. The WRDA bill would seem to be more appropriate.

We just received this amendment, literally handed to us. So while we are aware of the basic issue the gentleman is attempting to address, which is complex and which is very important, we are quite happy to work with the gentleman to see if we cannot accommodate him on a more appropriate vehicle, such as the WRDA bill or another related piece of legislation.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that WRDA is the appropriate vehicle, and I further yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. STUPAK. The few times I have done bills on Great Lakes to preserve and protect the Great Lakes, they have been bipartisan bills. I would like to remain in that bipartisan atmosphere. At times, it gets a little difficult, when we have people outside the Great Lakes coming into our region and our districts and making wild statements about our lack of protection of the Great Lakes. So we are always vigilant to look for opportunities to protect our Great Lakes and our Great Lakes resources.

As long as I am a Member of Congress, I will continue to work day in and day out to protect the Great Lakes. Based upon the assurances from the chairman and the ranking member, however, I will look forward to working with both the chairman and the ranking member to work to protect the Great Lakes in the WRDA bill, WRDA 2000.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for his leadership on this issue, for his vigilance, his concern, and for his statesmanship in making this unanimous consent request. And I want to assure the gentleman that we will work very closely and very diligently toward his objective.

Mr. STUPAK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is withdrawn.

Are there further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. TRAFICANT

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TRAFICANT:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. —. SENSE OF CONGRESS; REQUIREMENT REGARDING NOTICE.

(a) PURCHASE OF AMERICAN-MADE EQUIPMENT AND PRODUCTS.—In the case of any equipment or products that may be authorized to be purchased with financial assistance provided under this Act, it is the sense of the Congress that entities receiving such assistance should, in expending the assistance, purchase only American-made equipment and products.

(b) NOTICE TO RECIPIENTS OF ASSISTANCE.—In providing financial assistance under this Act, the head of each Federal agency shall provide to each recipient of the assistance a notice describing the statement made in subsection (a) by the Congress.

(c) NOTICE OF REPORT.—Any entity which receives funds under this Act shall report any expenditures on foreign-made items to the Congress within 180 days of the expenditure.

Mr. TRAFICANT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, we do not know what this amendment is, have not seen it or heard about it, have not smelled it. This is a surprise.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, this is a standard Buy American amendment that has been added to every transportation bill that we have offered.

□ 1445

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) has an amendment to this bill at the desk.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object. May we have a copy of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will rereport the amendment.

The Clerk rereported the amendment.

Mr. TRAFICANT (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) has reserved a point of order.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to notify the committee that I did bring this to the floor earlier this morning but I have been testifying before the Committee on Ways and Means and would have apprised the leadership of it. But it is an amendment that has been passed to every probation bill and every authorizing bill that involves the expenditures of funds. It has not been a controversial bill in the past. I do not believe it should be at this point.

In any event, it encourages the purchases of American-made products. Anyone who gets assistance under the bill shall get a notice of Congress intention to urge them, wherever possible, to buy American-made products.

Finally, anyone who is getting these funds give us a report back when they spend the money how they spend that money.

Now, we are running about a $300 billion trade deficit. I think if we are going to go ahead and spend money for goods and services that those goods and services, wherever possible, should be American goods and services.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to withdraw my point of order. Having had the opportunity now to see the amendment, it is a buy-American amendment, which I have vigorously supported in the past and am happy to support today.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments of the gentleman, and I apologize to both gentleman from having not been here to explain it to them earlier.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT), of course we have had buy-American provisions in other legislation of this committee. But the Part B of the sense of Congress, does the notice to recipients in Part B flow from the sentence in the previous subsection (a), that is, the sense of Congress, so that Part B is also a sense of Congress and not a requirement in law that, in providing financial assistance, the head of each agency shall provide a notice?

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, section (b) states that, even though it is the sense of the Congress that they are not mandated to buy American, section (b) mandates that the agency shall at least make notice that the Congress encourages the purchase of American products.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, the sense of Congress language terminates with subsection (a) but subsection (b) is a requirement upon Federal agencies to provide notice.

Mr. Chairman, may I inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), is that the understanding of the chairman?

Part B of the Buy-American provision is a requirement upon Federal agencies providing assistance to provide a notice and to report.

Mr. Chairman, is that consistent with the understanding of the chairman? I just want to make this clear.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I guess that is what the language says. There might be a technical problem with some of the language which we would have to work out in conference here.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time to clarify the concern of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the Congress urges the recipients of this money to buy American, but the Congress also requires those agencies that give the money to give them a notice that Congress does encourage them to buy.

They are not compelled to buy, but what they are compelled to give is a notice and give us a report on the activity.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will continue to yield, is it his understanding that this applies only to the legislation before us today?

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, absolutely, to this specific bill and this bill alone. I will have another amendment for his next bill very similar.

Mr. Chairman, I urge an ''aye'' vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other amendments?

If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. CAMP) having assumed the chair, Mr. GILLMOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 2328) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to reauthorize the Clean Lakes Program, pursuant to House Resolution 468, reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

CHESAPEAKE BAY RESTORATION ACT OF 1999

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 470 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3039.

□ 1454

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3039) to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to assist in the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay, and for other purposes, with Mr. GILLMOR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER).

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly want to commend the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN) for his leadership on this legislation that is going to help protect one of our national treasures, the Chesapeake Bay.

The Bay has a 64,000 square mile watershed and is home to over 15 million people and more than 3,000 plant and animal species. Bay restoration efforts are working well. Striped bass, underwater grasses are back, toxic releases are down, more than 67 percent since 1988 in fact, and the nutrients have been reduced.

However, parts of the Bay remain impaired. This legislation will strengthen cooperative efforts to address the remaining work to be done to restore and to protect the Bay.

I would emphasize that this legislation passed the subcommittee and the full committee unanimously by a voice vote, and I know of no controversy.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support H.R. 3039, the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act. The Chesapeake Bay is one of the great estuaries of the world, perhaps the greatest, the meeting place of salt and fresh water where new forms of life are created.

Those forms of life, whether new forms or existing ones, are increasingly endangered in the world's estuaries by the pollution that we discharge into the waters and into the meeting places.

In 1983, the Federal Government and the States of Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, as well as the District of Columbia, signed the first Chesapeake Bay Agreement. Four years later, the Federal Government and the Bay States and the communities within them reached agreement on the problems facing the Bay, the shared responsibility for deteriorating conditions, and on the joint actions that were needed to slow and reverse the destruction of this resource.

In the past 17 years, the hard work of all those involved is beginning to bear fruit. The Bay is showing signs of improvement. But the work is never over.

This legislation will take a further step toward improvement of water quality and improvement of the overall health of the Bay ecosystem.

The legislation will reauthorize the Environmental Protection Agency's successful Chesapeake Bay Program for an additional 6 years, giving stability and strength to this very important initiative. It will increase the program funding level. The Program Office of EPA has been very successful in working collaboratively with the States and the communities adjacent to the Bay in identifying causes of pollution, building partnerships to restore the health of that enormous resource.

Under this legislation, EPA will continue the cooperative collaborative approach of developing interstate management plans, control harmful nutrients, control the addition of toxins to improve water quality, and restore habitats to the ecosystem.

In addition, the legislation will incorporate into the Chesapeake Bay Agreement those improvements jointly recommended by the participating States, including recommendations for the administrator and authority for the administrator to approve small watershed grants to fund local governments and nonprofit organizations for local protection and restoration programs.

If we do not address the health of the Bay by including the watersheds that drain into that Bay, we have not accomplished the purpose of preserving, restoring, and enhancing the quality of the waters of the Bay. That, I think, is the most important feature of this legislation, that it deals with the watershed and not just with the discharge points.

I strongly support the legislation and urge an ''aye'' vote.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Development.

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for once again providing, along with the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking member, leadership on the full committee. I want to express my deep appreciation to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI), the ranking member of our Subcommittee on Water Resources and Development.

Once again, this is time to highlight something that needs to be highlighted. We do not do it often enough. I know we do it in the Committee on Transportation and Infrastructure. We do a lot of things exceptionally well. But we have the best professional staff anywhere on the Hill or in any governmental unit and they deserve a lot of praise.

□ 1500

I will defer to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST), people who live in the zone who are just married to the Chesapeake Bay and who know so well the importance of that great resource and what we need to do to make certain we move forward to restore it.

With that, let me thank all who have been partners to this venture. We have come a long way. We have got further to go. We are going to get there together.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Water Resources and Environment, who has maintained a vigilant eye on the bay and on the water quality thereof.

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Chairman, let me first thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I rise in strong support of H.R. 3039, the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1999. This legislation would reauthorize the successful Chesapeake Bay program for an additional 6 years. This program, operating with the Environmental Protection Agency, has been very effective at protecting and restoring the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem through workable partnerships among the Federal Government, the District of Columbia, and the States surrounding the bay watershed. I also want to acknowledge, Mr. Chairman, the outstanding work of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN) in developing and pursuing this legislation.

H.R. 3039 builds upon the success of the Chesapeake Bay program by incorporating within it several improvements which have been recommended by the Federal Government and the other signers of the 1987 Chesapeake Bay agreement: Virginia, Maryland, the District of Columbia, and my home State of Pennsylvania. Included within this bill is authority for a new small watershed grants program. Funding for this new program would be available to local governmental and nonprofit organizations as well as individuals in the Chesapeake Bay region to implement local protection and restoration programs in the watershed to improve water quality and create, restore or enhance habitat within the ecosystem. Mr. Chairman, the Chesapeake Bay is a national treasure struggling toward restoration. This legislation will add greatly in that restoration. I urge an aye vote on this legislation.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN), the principal author of this legislation.

Mr. BATEMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding me this time. I would like to say to him and to the ranking member and to all those who have addressed this subject matter today that I am proud to have lived near the shores of the Chesapeake Bay all but 5 years of my life. It is a very dear part of the world. I am proud to have been associated with the creation of the original Chesapeake Bay program and its original authorization and my role in convincing the then Reagan administration that it should be the bellwether of their environmental program, which even deserved mention in the President's State of the Union address.

The Chesapeake Bay program is the unique regional partnership that has been coordinating the restoration of the Chesapeake Bay since the signing of the historic 1983 Chesapeake Bay agreement. As the largest estuary in the United States and one of the most productive in the world, the Chesapeake Bay was the Nation's first estuary targeted for restoration and protection. The Chesapeake Bay program evolved as the means to restore this exceptionally valuable resource. H.R. 3039 will continue the cooperative Federal, State, and local efforts that already have successfully achieved progress restoring the bay.

Since its inception in 1983, the bay program's highest priority has been restoration of the bay's living resources. Improvements include fisheries and habitat restoration, recovery of bay grasses, nutrient and toxic reductions, and significant advances in estuarine science. However, parts of the bay remain impaired. Nutrients are still too high, oyster populations have been in severe decline, and water clarity still has a great deal that needs to be done to improve it. By passing H.R. 3039, the House will declare its commitment to saving the bay.

The Chesapeake Bay program has not been reauthorized since the expiration of the Clean Water Act of which it was a component. Although the program has continued to receive funding annually since then, it is important that the Congress express its continued support for the cleanup and preservation of the Chesapeake Bay. The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act would do just that, reauthorizing the program from 2000 to 2005. In addition, the bill requires the submission of reports both to the Congress and the public describing the activities funded by the program and its accomplishments.

The Chesapeake Bay is one of the most vital natural resources in the United States. Please join me in supporting the enhancement of a program that has done so much to preserve this wonderful resource.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), who has been a vigilant participant in protecting the resources of the bay. I am grateful for his leadership.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, let me thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding me this time, but more importantly let me thank the leadership on both sides of the aisle for bringing forward this very, very important bill. I think we all can be very proud of what we have been able to do in the Chesapeake Bay, the Federal Government being one of the major partners. I particularly want to acknowledge the work that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN) has done over his entire congressional career on the Chesapeake Bay.

The constituents of my district and in Maryland, indeed the entire Nation, are very much gratified by what we have been able to accomplish through the leadership here in Congress. I see the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) who has been another one of the real leaders on the Chesapeake Bay issues. This has been one of the largest voluntary multijurisdictional water quality and living resource restoration programs in the history of our Nation, and it has been a model program that we can now use in many other multijurisdictional bodies of water.

I was Speaker of the House in Maryland in 1983 when Governor Hughes on behalf of the State of Maryland joined with the governors of Virginia and Pennsylvania and the mayor of Washington and the administrator of EPA and signed a one-page 1983 agreement that started the Chesapeake Bay Restoration program with a Federal partnership. It has been a partnership of government, the Federal, State and local; it has been a partnership between government and the private sector; and it has worked.

We set one of the most ambitious goals for reducing pollutants in nitrogen and in phosphorus by 40 percent by this year. Mr. Chairman, we have come very close to meeting those goals in a watershed the size of 64,000 square miles. We have never attempted such a broad program in the past. I think we all can be proud. This reauthorization bill not only reauthorizes but expands it, increases the Federal Government's partnership in this effort, which gives us great hope for the future.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer an amendment requiring the administrator to commence a 3-year study to develop model water quality and living resource improvement strategies for areas impacted by development using work currently under way in the Patapsco/Back River tributary in the Baltimore, Maryland, metropolitan area. My amendment would have specified that the administrator's study, conducted with the full participation of local governments, watershed organizations, and interested groups, develop a coordinated mechanism and make various determinations and recommendations to achieve water quality and living resource goals in areas impacted by development with particular reference to Gwynn Falls, Jones Falls, and Herring Run watersheds.

Am I correct that the gentleman's intent is to encourage EPA, the Chesapeake Executive Council, and interested governmental and nongovernmental entities to work together on studies and strategies relating to water quality and living resources in areas impacted by development?

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SHUSTER. The gentleman certainly is correct. We want to acknowledge his strong interest in this particular issue. We appreciate his cooperation. We look forward to working with him and other colleagues on cooperative, consensus-based approaches to protecting the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. CARDIN. I want to thank the gentleman for those kind words and also thank my friend again from Minnesota for yielding.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, we certainly share the view just expressed by the chairman on the gentleman's concerns and his intent, and we will look forward to working with the gentleman on a consensus-based, cooperative approach to protecting the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST), one of the champions of the Chesapeake Bay.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. This has been a bipartisan effort on both sides of the aisle, from the chairman of the committee to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR). Certainly I would like to honor on this day the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN), who has worked literally his entire career on these issues and his heart is in this greatest of estuaries, which the gentleman from Minnesota has so eloquently stated. I also want to thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) for his efforts and all of us that have worked together on this particular issue.

When John Smith came here well over 300 years ago, there were a few thousand people in the watershed. Now there are over 15 million people in the watershed. With this new census, there might be 16 or 17 million people in the watershed. So things are difficult. To manage this watershed, we need more than just one State doing their job. We need a multistate effort to ensure that human activity is in such a way that we certainly encourage economic development; but we encourage that economic development to be in harmony with the natural processes of nature so the bay can continue to be restored.

I do not think we can ever get the bay back to the way it was when John Smith was here. We will never restore the bay to its original grandeur, and we will never solve the problem. From now until the end of time, the end of human habitation, this Chesapeake Bay program is going to be vital, because we continue to have development, we continue to have agriculture, we continue to have a whole range of issues, including air deposition from as far away as the Midwest causes about a third of the nutrient overload in the Chesapeake Bay.

And so this multistate agreement is vitally important for us to learn how to reduce the nutrients, and we have found some key factors; and we are becoming successful in that. One of the other issues of the Chesapeake Bay program is to bring the bay grasses back that provides the necessary habitat for the resource, which is crabs and fish and a whole range of other things in this marine ecosystem. The bay was not intended to be a desert. Maybe the Sahara Desert has a good ecosystem, maybe the Antarctic has a good ecosystem; but the Chesapeake Bay was intended to have grass, subaquatic vegetation for the natural ecosystem to abound. The Chesapeake Bay program is figuring out, with our help, the relentless, sometimes tiring, effort to bring that resource back to the bay.

Toxic pollution. With the Clean Water Act back in 1972 when they began to think about point source pollution, we began to solve that problem. We still have toxic pollution in the Chesapeake Bay, whether it still comes from chemical factories that we are trying to resolve and doing a good job at or point source pollutions like sewage treatment plants that need upgrades. Those are the kinds of issues that the Chesapeake Bay program deals with. It is vital.

The Chesapeake Bay program also deals with the fisheries. The oyster population is down over 90 percent from what it was at the turn of the century. Now that we are in a new turn of the century, it is time to bring those oysters back and in a manner in which nature intended, by building oyster reefs, maybe 10 feet high, maybe 20 feet high, to perpetuate that particular species. Striped bass recovery we know is pretty successful. The fisheries is a part of the Chesapeake Bay program.

I have one quick comment about a particular species called menhaden which also filters out certain nutrients in the bay like the oysters. The Chesapeake Bay program has recommended an ecosystem approach to that particular fisheries management plan where the menhaden, you give a few to the commercial watermen that use it for a variety of reasons, you give a few to the recreational fishermen, whoever wants to eat menhaden, pretty oily. But you also make sure that you give a certain number of menhaden to the rock fish that need it to sustain themselves, and you give a certain quantity of menhaden to the Chesapeake Bay so that a filtering action can occur.

□ 1515

Mr. Chairman, the Chesapeake Bay program is vital.

I want to thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN) for his efforts, and I want to thank all the members of this committee that have moved this program forward. I urge an ''aye'' vote on this bill.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. TRAFICANT).

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), a fellow Pitt grad; the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), a Pitt grad; the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN); the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST), a leader on conservation issues; and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), I am proud to support this, but I have had some of my companies call me and want to know if there will be any of this debris in the form of truckloads of polluted material needing abatement that will become part of an RFP, because my companies would certainly want to bid on it.

I think that this legislation would require, if there is some polluted soil or some polluted sediment underneath the Bay, in the form of a colloquy, I will ask the chairman, would it require that perhaps some of this sediment be removed? Would this bill cover that?

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, the answer to the gentleman's question will be found in each of the remedial action plans developed by the communities and the States and EPA in conjunction with each other. And those plans, depending on the nature of the problem to be addressed, may require sediment removal. Some of them, in fact, will require sediment removal, but we are not in a position to say which ones or how much.

That information, by the way, would be available from each of the States and from the localities because it all has to be part of the public record, and the companies in the gentleman's district can certainly access that information through the appropriate State agency.

I am quite certain that the remedial action plans for each community or council of governments or State will undoubtedly require some sediment removal in order to remove the toxics from the ecosystem.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Chairman, there is annual dredging that takes place in the Chesapeake Bay, millions of cubic yards behind the three hydroelectric power dams in the Susquehanna River that have right now over 200 million cubic yards of sediment that eventually within the next 15 years has to be removed, otherwise the U.S. geological survey said it would smother the entire Chesapeake Bay floor if something is not done.

There are problems with the dredge material on an annual basis. There are problems with the dredge material behind the Susquehanna River damages. So if something could be worked out in the next few years to figure out where to put this stuff and if Ohio wants it, we would be more than glad to trade it out.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I know there has been some talk about possibilities of sediment, and when they start their remediation program, it will involve cleaning up those toxic polluted areas. The point I am making is exactly that, that there are some areas that do not have the capability of cleaning those soils, and I do have in my impoverished district companies that do, in fact, take soil and clean that soil and make it acceptable under EPA law.

Mr. Chairman, we would certainly want to have our companies on notice so if there is any RFP that have an opportunity to bid. That is why I made the mention, and I want to commend the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST) because I know he is probably the biggest fighter in the House for conservation purposes.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER) for his leadership in bringing this bill before us on the floor, and thank the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking member; obviously, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN) for initiating this; and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST), my colleague from Maryland, for his wonderful explication of some parts of it.

The Chesapeake Bay, our Nation's largest estuary, is an incredibly complex ecosytem. The Bay is one of our Nation's most valuable natural resources. Its rich ecosytem with rivers, wetlands, trees, and the Bay itself supports and provides a national habitat for over 3,600 species of plants, fish, and animals.

We know that over 15 million people now live in the Bay watershed, it includes parts of six States and the entire District of Columbia. These persons are, at all times, just a few steps from one of the more than 100,000 stream and river tributaries ultimately draining into the Bay. Every person, plant, and animal depend on each other to help the Chesapeake Bay system thrive and function properly. These complex relationships are countless. The Chesapeake Bay Program is a unique regional partnership of State and Federal Government agencies, and it has been encouraging and directing the restoration of the Bay since 1983.

I am pleased that important progress has been made in renewing the Bay since the Chesapeake Bay Agreement was signed in 1983. Restoration efforts, led by the Chesapeake Bay Program, have had a profound effect on the health of the Bay. In addition, scientific research has led to a better understanding of the Bay, including how it works and what must be done to address problems.

However, we still have a long way to go before we reach our goals for a restored Chesapeake Bay. Many questions about the future of the Bay remain unanswered. For example, blue crabs, perhaps the best known and most important resource of the Bay, have been below the long-term average level for several years. The oyster harvest has declined dramatically. Further efforts to reduce nutrient and sediment pollution are needed. I am pleased that this legislation today will help us address these concerns and allow us to move toward the goal of a restored Chesapeake Bay.

You know, Mr. Chairman, in only 10 days we recognize and celebrate the 30th anniversary of Earth Day. Every year on this day, the people of our Nation and across the globe focus their attention on the environment. Both Earth Day and the legislation before us today offer us the opportunity to applaud our progress, but, more importantly, they allow us to renew our commitment to the challenges facing our planet and the Chesapeake Bay. We must preserve and protect this treasure.

Mr. Chairman, I support the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act and urge its swift, unanimous passage.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin, (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend from Minnesota for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of H.R. 3039, the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act. I want to commend my colleagues for the leadership they provided, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BATEMAN); the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST); the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN); and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER); as well as the leadership on the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Chairman SHUSTER); and the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI).

Mr. Chairman, this bill seeks to reauthorize Federal participation in the Chesapeake Bay Program. It will provide the Environmental Protection Agency with $30 million over 6 years to fund program activities that will prevent harmful nutrients and toxins from flowing into the Chesapeake, where they will degrade water quality and damage valuable fish and wildlife resources. It also mandates other Federal agencies to assist in the development of watershed planning and restoration activities.

I strongly support the Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act and the Chesapeake Bay Program, because they embody an approach to water quality and watershed management that I believe is truly the wave of the future. This approach is, first of all, proactive, rather than reactive, seeking to stop harmful nutrients and toxins from making it into the Bay in the first place, rather than relying on expensive clean-up and mitigation efforts afterwards.

Secondly, this approach is basinwide, rather than piecemeal, seeking to look at the entire ecosystem and to development management plans appropriate to the large scale physical system that it is.

Finally, this approach relies on interagency and intergovernmental cooperation, attempting to coordinate the diverse, but sometimes fragmented, conservation efforts of Federal, State and local agencies, as well as non-governmental agencies.

I want to compliment the Members from the Chesapeake Bay Basin States who have fashioned the bill and supported the Chesapeake Bay Program since its inception some 15 years ago.

I also want to take this opportunity, Mr. Chairman, to urge my colleagues to take a close look at a bill that I recently introduce, H.R. 4013, the Upper Mississippi River Basin Conservation Act. Like H.R. 3039, my bill is comprehensive legislation to reduce nutrient and soil sediment losses in a large river basin. The Upper Mississippi River Basin, which encompasses much of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, and Missouri, is a tremendously valuable natural resource.

Forty percent of North America's waterfowl use the wetlands and backwaters of the river as a migratory flyway. In fact, it is North America's largest migratory route, with much of the waterfowl such as Tundra Swans ultimately going through the Mississippi corridor and ending up in the Chesapeake Bay area.

The Upper Mississippi River provides $1.2 billion annually in recreation income and $6.6 billion to the area's tourism industry. Unfortunately, increasing soil erosion threatens this region and these industries. For instance, soil erosion reduces the long-term sustainability and income of the family farms, with farmers losing more than $300 million annually in applied nitrogen. Additionally, sediment fills the main shipping channel of the Upper Mississippi River, costing roughly $100 million each year for dredging costs alone.

Relying on existing Federal, State, and local programs, H.R. 4013 establishes a water quality monitoring network and an integrated computer modeling program. These monitoring and modeling efforts will provide the baseline information needed to make scientifically sound and cost-effective conservation decisions.

The bill calls for an expansion of four U.S. Department of Agriculture land conservation programs. In addition, the bill includes language to protect personal data collected in connection with monitoring, modeling and technical and financial assessment activities.

In trying to achieve these goals, this bill relies entirely on voluntary participation and already existing conservation programs. The bill will not create any new Federal regulations.

The Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act and my bill, the Upper Mississippi River Basin Conservation Act, are basin-wide, comprehensive efforts to reduce harmful runoff and improve the overall health of these regionally and nationally significant ecosystems. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3039 today and to contact my staff and helping a sure passage of H.R. 3014.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), the ranking member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express some concerns about H.R. 3039. I do so reluctantly, but for several reasons. My first concern is the role of the Department of Agriculture in this effort. A great deal of the focus and efforts involved in getting to a cleaner and healthier Chesapeake Bay are on its upstream tributaries, and a great deal of farmland is included in these watersheds. I am particularly concerned that it appears neither the Committee on Agriculture nor the USDA were consulted in regard to this reauthorization.

We have heard how this bill simply puts into statute what is already taking place. I believe as it is part of a reauthorization, a thorough discussion should take place regarding the best ways to accomplish the goals of the program and whether the current structure is accomplishing that.

That leads to my questions about why current authorized programs are not being utilized or modified, if necessary, to accomplish the outlined goals, as opposed to putting forward a new program or authority. This has led to a number of programs out there, and in the case of conservation and environmental protection, a number of authorities that are not interconnected and do not have adequate resources to meet the demands for assistance.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STENHOLM. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. GILCHREST. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman's concern with Agriculture not being consulted, the perception that they were not consulted about this piece of legislation. But I can tell the gentleman that with regard to the Chesapeake Bay Program, the biggest industry in my business is agriculture, and USDA and the Departments of Agriculture in Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and Pennsylvania have all worked through a variety of existing programs to ensure the quality of water in the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries via many agricultural programs that exist, for example, the Buffer Program, the Waterway Program, the program that provides habitat for wildlife, the CRP Program.

□ 1530

So there is a whole range of programs that the Chesapeake Bay program, which is EPA, consults with these other agencies to ensure water quality, and also the biggest thing I would like to say, I say to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), is to ensure that agriculture remains not only a viable industry but a profitable industry.

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank the gentleman for those comments.

Just as I was about to say, I have no doubt that the USDA agencies and their partners, the conservation districts and resource conservation and development councils, are already taking an active role in many of the actions springing out of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

I concur. In fact, one of the major roles of USDA in the conservation district is to provide technical assistance to whoever might need it. Whether it is technical assistance or other types of assistance, the USDA agencies and their partners have and will find ways to provide that assistance to whoever might be asking, whether they be a private individual, a nonprofit group, or a local government.

I am also concerned about this legislation and similar bills that are targeted to specific geographic locations. I am certain they are all worthy pieces of legislation, and I support the gentleman and the others in the Chesapeake Bay's effort because they are right on target. My concern is the duplication.

I appreciate the watershed approach. That is the way to go. I am joining today with the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER) in introducing the Fishable Waters Act, which would provide much needed guidance and funding to any and all States to address water quality problems that have led to fisheries habitat problems.

My concern, though, is funding. When we continue to divide, issue after issue, when we continue to say USDA, that is doing a wonderful job, but not doing good enough, so therefore, we are going to take EPA and we are going to grant them money to provide technical assistance when we are already shortchanging, here.

We talk about the environmental quality incentive program. It is funded at $200 million a year, but we only spend $174 million. Appropriations cut us short. We look at the Wildlife Habitat Incentives Program. The small watershed program is the one, though. We have 1,630 projects right now approved, needing $1.5 billion in funding. We are funded at $91. I believe this bill further divides already scarce resources, and that is my concern.

Mr. Chairman, CRP—Authorized at 36.4 million acres—currently 31 million acres enrolled—up to 3.5 million acres in bids received in 20th sign-up; WRP—Authorized at 975,000 acres—estimated to have 935,000 acres enrolled by end of 2000; Wildlife Habitat Incentives Progam—Funded at $50 million in 1996 Farm Bill and funding already exhausted; PL–566 (Small Watershed Program)—1630 projects approved needing $1.5 billion in funding—funded at $91 million in FY00; and EQIP (Environmental Quality Incentives Program)—Funded at $200 million per year in 1996 Farm bill—appropriators have limited funding to $174 million in each of last three fiscal years—demand is three times greater than available funding.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER), a diligent member of the Committee.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, since being elected to Congress, I have been focusing attention on the issue of creating livable communities where families are safe, healthy, and economically secure. The quality and quantity of our water supply is going to be the primary shaper of our communities in the next century.

This is one of the reasons why I am here today, pleased to join in rising in support for the fine work that the committee has done, and thanking the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. GILCHREST), and others in focusing attention and making sure that we are able to continue the great work that has been done in the Chesapeake Bay area.

It has been documented already on the floor of the Chamber today the vast sweep of the Chesapeake Bay watershed, the 64,000 square miles covering parts of six States talking about the problems that are faced here that are serious but not unique to the Chesapeake Bay system, and how the Chesapeake Bay is a great example of watershed-wide management; how we are excited about the multijurisdictional involvement of many shareholders dealing with the EPA, dealing with State and local authorities, and other disciplines, and the legislative bodies of three States, bringing into involvement a vast coalition of people outside the government sweep, of agencies, nonprofits, and private citizens; the tributary teams in Maryland, divided into ten major tributaries and teams made up of citizens, farmers, business interests, environmentalists, and others, who determine the primary issues in their watersheds, and how to go about educating and involving citizens based on the idea that the problems are different depending on where you are.

The good news is that through all of this effort, the Bay is improving, albeit slowly. The Chesapeake Bay Foundation has put together a report card on the Bay. The score was up to 28 last year, up from the historic low of roughly 23 in 1983, on their way towards a goal or a rating of 70.

I appreciate the elements that are included in H.R. 3039 to support the EPA Bay program and its activity in the watershed, the pollution prevention, restoring activities, monitoring, grants to States, and other stakeholders and citizen involvement.

I am here, though, not just to commend my colleagues on the committee and the others who are involved. I do hope that we are able as a committee and as a Congress to incorporate the lessons that we have learned with the Chesapeake Bay clean-up, and perhaps even in this Congress have a comprehensive piece of legislation that we could advance to our colleagues to make sure that the important approach that has been taken with the Chesapeake Bay clean-up is not an exception, but in fact it is the rule governing how we will approach these important areas across the country.

Under the leadership of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. SHUSTER), the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. BORSKI), the gentleman from New York (Mr. BOEHLERT), with concerned members of the committee, with others in Congress, we can make sure that these lessons that have been learned, the dollars we are able to stretch, the engagement that we can have with our citizens, become an important part of Federal policy.

If we are able to do that, Mr. Speaker, we will have given an important gift to American citizens for Earth Day, not just one or two models of an exemplary clean-up that hold a lot of potential for the future, but a template that will guide the authorizing committee, a template that will guide the appropriating committee, a template that will guide across jurisdictions in the Federal government to show how we can achieve a more livable community, looking at the way we can manage our water resources.

Mr. Chairman, I look forward to greater progress in the future.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The text of H.R. 3039 is as follows:

H.R. 3039

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the ''Chesapeake Bay Restoration Act of 1999''.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(1) the Chesapeake Bay is a national treasure and a resource of worldwide significance;

(2) over many years, the productivity and water quality of the Chesapeake Bay and its watershed were diminished by pollution, excessive sedimentation, shoreline erosion, the impacts of population growth and development in the Chesapeake Bay watershed, and other factors;

(3) the Federal Government (acting through the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency), the Governor of the State of Maryland, the Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, the Governor of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, the Chairperson of the Chesapeake Bay Commission, and the Mayor of the District of Columbia, as Chesapeake Bay Agreement signatories, have committed to a comprehensive cooperative program to achieve improved water quality and improvements in the productivity of living resources of the Bay;

(4) the cooperative program described in paragraph (3) serves as a national and international model for the management of estuaries; and

(5) there is a need to expand Federal support for monitoring, management, and restoration activities in the Chesapeake Bay and the tributaries of the Bay in order to meet and further the original and subsequent goals and commitments of the Chesapeake Bay Program.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to expand and strengthen cooperative efforts to restore and protect the Chesapeake Bay; and

(2) to achieve the goals established in the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

SEC. 3. CHESAPEAKE BAY.

The Federal Water Pollution Control Act is amended by striking section 117 (33 U.S.C. 1267) and inserting the following:

''SEC. 117. CHESAPEAKE BAY.

''(a) DEFINITIONS.—In this section, the following definitions apply:

''(1) ADMINISTRATIVE COST.—The term 'administrative cost' means the cost of salaries and fringe benefits incurred in administering a grant under this section.

''(2) CHESAPEAKE BAY AGREEMENT.—The term 'Chesapeake Bay Agreement' means the formal, voluntary agreements executed to achieve the goal of restoring and protecting the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem and the living resources of the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem and signed by the Chesapeake Executive Council.

''(3) CHESAPEAKE BAY ECOSYSTEM.—The term 'Chesapeake Bay ecosystem' means the ecosystem of the Chesapeake Bay and its watershed.

''(4) CHESAPEAKE BAY PROGRAM.—The term 'Chesapeake Bay Program' means the program directed by the Chesapeake Executive Council in accordance with the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

''(5) CHESAPEAKE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.—The term 'Chesapeake Executive Council' means the signatories to the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

''(6) SIGNATORY JURISDICTION.—The term 'signatory jurisdiction' means a jurisdiction of a signatory to the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

''(b) CONTINUATION OF CHESAPEAKE BAY PROGRAM.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council (and as a member of the Council), the Administrator shall continue the Chesapeake Bay Program.

''(2) PROGRAM OFFICE.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—The Administrator shall maintain in the Environmental Protection Agency a Chesapeake Bay Program Office.

''(B) FUNCTION.—The Chesapeake Bay Program Office shall provide support to the Chesapeake Executive Council by—

''(i) implementing and coordinating science, research, modeling, support services, monitoring, data collection, and other activities that support the Chesapeake Bay Program;

''(ii) developing and making available, through publications, technical assistance, and other appropriate means, information pertaining to the environmental quality and living resources of the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem;

''(iii) in cooperation with appropriate Federal, State, and local authorities, assisting the signatories to the Chesapeake Bay Agreement in developing and implementing specific action plans to carry out the responsibilities of the signatories to the Chesapeake Bay Agreement;

''(iv) coordinating the actions of the Environmental Protection Agency with the actions of the appropriate officials of other Federal agencies and State and local authorities in developing strategies to—

''(I) improve the water quality and living resources in the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem; and

''(II) obtain the support of the appropriate officials of the agencies and authorities in achieving the objectives of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement; and

''(v) implementing outreach programs for public information, education, and participation to foster stewardship of the resources of the Chesapeake Bay.

''(c) INTERAGENCY AGREEMENTS.—The Administrator may enter into an interagency agreement with a Federal agency to carry out this section.

''(d) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE AND ASSISTANCE GRANTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—In cooperation with the Chesapeake Executive Council, the Administrator may provide technical assistance, and assistance grants, to nonprofit organizations, State and local governments, colleges, universities, and interstate agencies to achieve the goals and requirements contained in subsection (g)(1), subject to such terms and conditions as the Administrator considers appropriate.

''(2) FEDERAL SHARE.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Federal share of an assistance grant provided under paragraph (1) shall be determined by the Administrator in accordance with guidance issued by the Administrator.

''(B) SMALL WATERSHED GRANTS PROGRAM.—The Federal share of an assistance grant provided under paragraph (1) to carry out an implementing activity under subsection (g)(2) shall not exceed 75 percent of eligible project costs, as determined by the Administrator.

''(3) NON-FEDERAL SHARE.—An assistance grant under paragraph (1) shall be provided on the condition that non-Federal sources provide the remainder of eligible project costs, as determined by the Administrator.

''(4) ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—Administrative costs shall not exceed 10 percent of the annual grant award.

''(e) IMPLEMENTATION AND MONITORING GRANTS.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—If a signatory jurisdiction has approved and committed to implement all or substantially all aspects of the Chesapeake Bay Agreement, on the request of the chief executive of the jurisdiction, the Administrator—

''(A) shall make a grant to the jurisdiction for the purpose of implementing the management mechanisms established under the Chesapeake Bay Agreement, subject to such terms and conditions as the Administrator considers appropriate; and

''(B) may make a grant to a signatory jurisdiction for the purpose of monitoring the Chesapeake Bay ecosystem.

''(2) PROPOSALS.—

''(A) IN GENERAL.—A signatory jurisdiction described in paragraph (1) may apply for a grant under this subsection for a fiscal year by submitting to the Administrator a comprehensive proposal to implement management mechanisms established under the Chesapeake Bay Agreement.

''(B) CONTENTS.—A proposal under subparagraph (A) shall include—

''(i) a description of proposed management mechanisms that the jurisdiction commits to take within a specified time period, such as reducing or preventing pollution in the Chesapeake Bay and its watershed or meeting applicable water quality standards or established goals and objectives under the Chesapeake Bay Agreement; and

''(ii) the estimated cost of the actions proposed to be taken during the fiscal year.

''(3) APPROVAL.—If the Administrator finds that the proposal is consistent with the Chesapeake Bay Agreement and the national goals established under section 101(a), the Administrator may approve the proposal for an award.

''(4) FEDERAL SHARE.—The Federal share of an implementation grant under this subsection shall not exceed 50 percent of the cost of implementing the management mechanisms during the fiscal year.
