Presidential Appointments to Full-Time Positions in Independent and Other Agencies During the 106th Congress, 1999–2000

Summary

This report provides information on 120 full-time positions requiring Senate confirmation in 25 independent executive agencies, six units in the Executive Office of the President, six multilateral banking agencies, and four legislative branch agencies. It does not cover appointments to cabinet departments or independent regulatory and other collegial boards and commissions.

During the 106th Congress, President Clinton submitted 37 nominations to full-time positions requiring Senate confirmation. The Senate confirmed 28 of the nominations and returned seven at the end of the Congress. The President withdrew two of his nominations and made eight recess appointments. On average, the Senate took 121 days to confirm a nomination from the time it was received.¹ Overall, 16 nominations were confirmed under the 121 day average and 12 were confirmed over the 121 day average. The length of time for confirmation of individual nominations varied considerably, with eight taking under 60 days and seven taking over 150 days. The shortest confirmation took eight days, while the longest took 288 days.

Information provided in this report was compiled from the LEGIS nominations database in the Senate Computer Center, the Weekly Compilation of Presidential Documents, telephone discussions with agency officials, and two federal agency directories.²

¹Senate August recesses and the recess between sessions were not included in this calculation. The Senate was in recess from Aug. 6 through Sept. 7, 1999 (33 days), from Nov. 20, 1999 through Jan. 23, 2000 (65 days), and from July 28 through Sept. 4, 2000 (39 days).

Presidential Appointments to Full-Time Positions in Independent and Other Agencies During the 106th Congress, 1999-2000

Introduction

This report lists 120 full-time positions requiring Senate confirmation in 37 organizations in the executive branch (25 independent agencies, six agencies in the Executive Office of the President (EOP), and six multilateral banking organizations), and four agencies in the legislative branch.³ The report also covers all nominations submitted by the President to the Senate for confirmation to positions in these agencies, and the action taken on the nominations. During the 106th Congress, President Clinton submitted 37 nominations. Of these nominations, the Senate confirmed 28 (75.7%) and returned seven (18.9%). The President withdrew two nominations and made eight recess appointments.

On average, the Senate took 121 days to confirm a nomination from the time it was received.⁴ Overall, 16 nominations were confirmed under and 12 over the 121 day average. The length of time for confirmation of individual nominations varied considerably, with eight taking under 60 days, and seven taking over 150 days. The shortest confirmation took eight days, while the longest took 288 days.

The Appointments Process

The President and the Senate share the power to appoint the principal officers of the United States.⁵ The Constitution (Article II, Section 2) empowers the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint the principal officers of the United States. Three distinct stages mark the appointments process – nomination, confirmation, and appointment.

In the nomination or first stage, the President selects the nominee and sends the nomination to the Senate. For positions located within a state (U.S. attorney, U.S. marshal, and U.S. district judge), the President, by custom, normally nominates an individual recommended by the Senator or Senators from that state, if they are from the same party as the President. If neither Senator is from the same party, the President normally defers to the recommendations of party leaders from the state. Occasionally, the President solicits recommendations from Senators from the opposition party when they hold key Senate positions. Before making a nomination, whether at the state or national level, the President must consider how it will fare in the confirmation process.

⁴Senate August recesses and the recess between sessions were not included in this calculation. The Senate was in recess from Aug. 6 through Sept. 7, 1999 (33 days), from Nov. 20, 1999 through Jan. 23, 2000 (65 days), and from July 28 through Sept. 4, 2000 (39 days).

⁵A succinct historical and contemporary overview of the appointment power is found in Louis Fisher, "Appointment Powers," in his Constitutional Conflicts between Congress and the President, 4th ed. (Lawrence, KS: University of Kansas Press, 1997), pp. 22-48.

A nomination to a position does not give the nominee legal authority to assume the duties and responsibilities of the position. That authority comes only after the nominee is confirmed and appointed. While awaiting confirmation, a nominee often is hired as a consultant and may act only in an advisory capacity.

In the confirmation or second stage, the Senate alone determines whether to approve or disapprove a nomination. How the Senate acts on a nomination depends largely on the importance of the position involved, the nominee's views, and existing political circumstances. Generally, the Senate is particularly concerned with the nominee's views and how he or she is likely to affect public policy.⁶ How closely the nominee's personal and professional qualities are examined will normally depend on the importance of the position, the nominee's possible or likely influence on public policy, and the possible or likely effect on constituent interests.

Although the Senate confirms most nominations, no President can safely assume that all of his nominees will be approved routinely. Rarely, however, does a rejection occur on the Senate floor. Nearly all rejections occur in committee, either by committee vote or committee inaction. Rejections in committee occur for a variety of reasons, including: opposition to the nomination; an inadequate amount of time for consideration of the nomination; or factors that may have nothing to do with the merits of the nomination.

The first two stages of the appointment process may be summarized by the observation that, while the President proposes, the Senate disposes. In the third or final stage, the confirmed nominee is given a commission signed by the President, with the seal of the United States affixed thereto, and is sworn into office. At that point, he or she has full authority to carry out the responsibilities of the office.

Recess Appointments

The appointment process also enables the President to make an appointment without the need for it to be confirmed by the Senate when that body is in recess, either during a session (intrasession recess appointment) or between sessions (intersession recess appointment). Recess appointments expire at the end of the next session of Congress.⁷ The President generally submits a nomination for a regular appointment following a recess appointment.

Presidents have occasionally used the recess appointment power to circumvent the confirmation process. In response, Congress has placed certain restrictions on the President's authority to make a recess appointment. Under 5 U.S.C. 5503(a), if the position to which the President makes a recess appointment fell vacant while the Senate was in session, the appointee may not be paid from the Treasury until he or she is confirmed by the Senate. The salary prohibition does not apply: (1) if the vacancy arose within 30 days before the end of the session; (2) if a nomination for the office (other than the nomination of someone given a recess appointment during the preceding recess) was pending when the Senate recessed; or (3) if a nomination was rejected within 30 days before the end of the session and another individual is given the recess appointment. A recess appointee falling under any one of these three exceptions must be nominated not later than 40 days after the beginning of the next session of the Senate. For this reason, when a recess appointment is made, the President generally submits a new nomination for the nominee even when an old nomination is pending.

Temporary Appointments

Congress has also provided limited statutory authority for the temporary filling of vacant positions requiring Senate confirmation. Under the Federal Vacancies Reform Act of 1998,⁸ an advice and consent position in an executive agency that becomes vacant may be filled temporarily in one of three ways: (1) the first assistant to such a position automatically assumes the functions and duties of the office; (2) the President directs an officer in any agency who has been confirmed by the Senate to perform those tasks; or (3) the President selects any officer or employee of the subject agency who is at least at the GS-15 level and who has been with the agency for at least 90 of the preceding 365 days. The temporary appointment is for 210 days, but the time restriction is suspended if a first or second nomination for the position is pending. In addition, during a presidential transition, the 210-day restriction period does not begin to run until either 90 days after the President assumes office, or 90 days after the vacancy occurs, whichever is later. The act does not apply to positions on multi-headed regulatory boards and commissions and to certain other specific positions which may be filled temporarily under other statutory provisions.

Alphabetical Listing of Nominees and Appointees

Table 3 lists, in alphabetical order, all nominees/appointees to positions in the 25 independent executive agencies, six units in the Executive Office of the President, six multilateral banking organizations, and four agencies in the legislative branch, with nomination and confirmation information. The “confirmed” column notes whether the nomination was confirmed, withdrawn, returned, or rejected.

The “Days to confirm” column indicates the number of days the Senate took to confirm the nominee from the time the nomination was received in the Senate. On average, the Senate took 121 days to confirm a nomination after receiving it. Senate August recesses and the recess between sessions were not included in this calculation. The Senate was in recess from August 6 through September 7, 1999 (33 days), from November 20, 1999 through January 23, 2000 (65 days), and from July 28 through September 4, 2000 (39 days).

Table 4 summarizes, by agency grouping, the number of positions, the number of nominations submitted by the President, and the disposition of those nominations during the 106th Congress.

Nominees and Appointees to Individual Agencies

The following pages present data on the full-time positions requiring Senate confirmation in each of the 25 independent executive agencies, six units within the Executive Office of the President, six multilateral banking organizations, and four legislative branch agencies. The data include the names of incumbents in those positions as of the end of 2000, as well as the nominees and appointees to those positions for the years 1999-2000. The tables also include the level of the executive schedule at which the position holder is compensated.⁹

This report focuses on the nomination and confirmation process. Information concerning position incumbents, which is also included, is drawn from nomination and confirmation data supplemented by information from two federal agency directories.¹⁰ Where information from the two directories was in conflict, the information from Carroll's Federal Directory, which was more consistent with data from the Senate nominations database, was used. Under the Vacancies Act, vacant positions can be filled either by the first assistant of the previous occupant of the office or through appointment by the President. Tables 5 - 8 present the best information available about the final incumbent for each of these positions at the close of the 106th Congress.

⁹As of December, 2000, executive schedule positions were compensated as follows: level I, $157,000; level II, $141,300; level III, $130,200; level IV, $122,400; level V $114,500. For salaries as of January, 2001, please see U.S. Library of Congress, Congressional Research Service, Salaries of Federal Officials: A Fact Sheet, by Sharon S. Gressle, CRS Report 98-53 GOV (Washington: Jan. 18, 2001).
